Once when within speaking distance, Gratalia said, "why so sad, Valiie, darling, you will soon see all; did it never cross your mind, my love, that you were to attend a wedding?"

"Bah!" said Valiska, "and you have deceived me, 'tod to me thus. Oh, Gratalia,

JOHN BULL'S MANNERS.

Queer English Opinions Criticised by an American.

Mr. W. T. Higgins, writing in the Pilot, continues that the English are such a mixed race that the Americans do not know "what they are about." Some years ago to find himself in the front seat of a dinner party of scientific men in London a dinner of the Royal Society, men's persons at the table was an exceedingly clever man, who sometimes were, however brusque and offensive, who interrupted everybody, gave rude and abrupt answers, and indeed himself generally disagreeable. Yet he seemed a great importance and was always heard with attention. He was evidently familiar with several branches of science, and I finally got the impression that he must be some leading London physicist, whose professorship perhaps was so great that his could be so rude to Almighty if he wished. At last I found an opportunity to ask my neighbor what was this curiously offensive personage, and was told that it was Lord Lyttleton the fourth Lord of that name, who died a few years ago. He then assured that he left on the memory of at least one stranger the picture of the most unmannered man he had ever encountered in what is called good society, at home or abroad.

"Not long after at a dinner party in London, England, I sat next to a man who was well known in literature, who, although also called himself a Liberal, strongly maintained that the Queen should be compelled to give a standard of manners, and I must say demonstrated, and cited Lord Lyttleton as an alarming example. She set it lightly by saying: "Oh, he is only a little peculiar." Then I mentioned another nobleman who I had lately met, but in a different creation. "Still another in my mind," said the last of personally-inspected nobles, "is a man who I think, is to be elevated to the House of Lords to do legal duty in that place. I was at a dinner at which there was always some noise, and the blows of knives and forks, and the clatter of the plates, I quoted a dear story, then recent, which amused some of the ladies of Queen's Princess, and here also she was rudely silent. Not an answer. They are not English, she said, 'they are Irish.' I am sure that no class in the world, probably, is judged so little on its merits as the English upper class. Nobody knows anything about England, and people who come to England would call high-bred, but it is certain, that no one may meet a dead man in any country and walk up through a considerable number of dinner parties without hearing the cold 'I do not remember a person.' Not that most of this class are actually cold-hearted, but it is rare, rarely, rarely, that, in a rare and truly good, family, one finds a person affectionate, and by no means what an American would call 'good.' Nobody knows what is good. The apparent rude action of the Lord Lyttleton, I think, is due to the consciousness of person which is not common in an American. No man can ever become rude, or, at least, seem rude, in a manner which anywhere else would lead lady will talk to him. Nobody knows what is good. It engages the complaint made by Jeremy Bentham, that people are so careless that they gave him too much of their time and attention. He did know any will that he could not do it. Nobody knows what is good. Nobody knows anything about Nobodies. Nobody knows what is good. Nobody knows anything about Nobodies. Nobody knows what is good. Nobody knows anything about Nobodies

THE MONITOR.

TWICE-YEAR TALE OF PERSECUTION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1888.

PASTORAL

—OF—

RT. REV. P. MANOGUE, D. D.

TO the Clergy of the

DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO.

REV. AND DEAR FATHERS.—

I need not recall to your memory the great solicitude of our Holy Father for the welfare of the faithful of this state. His admonitions, letters and encyclicals from the beginning amply show this solicitude. His great mind has grasped the whole earth. Not alone Europe, but Asia, Africa, Oceanica and America have profited by his timely counsels and salutary instructions. Peoples and nations, kings and leaders have laudably vied with each other in acknowledging his worth, his dignity, his charity and greatness of soul. Hence, in the present instance, we might apply the words of the royal Prophet: "The Kings of Tharsis and the islands shall offer presents; the Kings of the Arabians and of Saba shall bring gifts."

The great aim of our Venerable Pontiff has been and still is, the re-establishment of order, the reign of truth, justice and charity among the people of the world. He and the free action of the Church of God on earth.

The Church, though established on earth, is not earthly. Its glorious and illustrious Head, Christ Jesus, is in Heaven, and its whole and sole object aim at the regeneration of fallen man, the sanctification of souls, and keeping its members united with their Heavenly Head and Leader. Like a holy and blessed trinity, the Church has three remarkable component parts. These are the Church Militant on Earth, the Church Triumphant in Heaven, and the Suffering Church in Purgatory. We have already indicated the great and solicitude of the Holy Father for the Militant Church, and how his great mind grasps within its embrace the whole earth. We are also mindful that while the Supreme Pontiff was engaged in the Canonization and Beatification of the faithful servants of God who had fought the good fight, finished their course, kept the faith, and received their eternal reward, his sympathetic heart expanded to all the members of the Church. While contemplating the joys of the Heavenly Jerusalem, and communing with the spirits of the just made perfect, his charitable heart could not turn away from the wailings and lamentations of the gloomy prison. "Have pity on me, have pity on me, at least you my friends; because the hand of the Lord hath touched me."

The Holy Father, by yielding to this pathetic appeal: "In Profundis," has crowned all his good and great works and rendered his Jubilee particularly memorable. Its calls upon all the Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops and Priests of the world to unite with him on the last Sunday of this month, 30th day of September, in offering to the Throne of Mercy a Requiem Mass for the souls of the faithful departed, detained in the prison of Purgatory till they pay the last farthing. The Mass to be celebrated is that of All Souls' Day, or the first Receiven in the Missal.

On that day and for that Requiem Mass, the privileged altar is granted to every Priest, that is attached thereto is a Plenary Indulgence to be applied to the souls in Purgatory. A Plenary Indulgence is also granted to the faithful for the souls detained in prison, on condition of confessing their sins and fortifying themselves with the Angelic Bread at the Altar of God.

Hence, Rev. Fathers, you are hereby notified and enjoined to have the celebration on that day as solemn as possible, and to give due notice to your respective flocks to correspond according to instructions.

✠ P. MANOGUE,
Bishop of Sacramento.

Sacramento, Sept. 17, 1888.

That Pittsburg Perturbation.

PITTSBURG (Pa.), Sept. 16.—Bitter feeling has been manifested by the establishment of a parochial school by Catholics in the First Ward public school building. Seven Protestant ministers denounced Catholicism from the pulpits to-day, and arrangements have been made for mass meetings in this city and also in Allegheny next Tuesday evening to protest against the use of public school buildings for religious purposes.

The foregoing dispatch appeared as "one o' th' city dailies of Monday morning last. About the same news appeared in the Eastern papers of the 3rd inst., at the time the Pittsburg public schools opened. The facts in the case are these: Father Shealy, rector of the Church of St. Mary of Mercy, in that city, some time ago leased from the Board of Public School Directors, a portion of the school building in the First Ward, wherein he established a parochial school. He opened his school with 200 scholars under charge of four Sisters. The only "excitement" aroused about the matter is manufactured by certain malignant Methodist preachers, who are constantly creating disturbances by their officious impertinence and their sugar desire to destroy every Catholic school in the land.

—An Eastern contemporary makes the judicious suggestion: "Three things will insure temporal as well as spiritual success; the frequentation of the Sacraments, the daily Mass, and a Catholic paper. If pastors would encourage their flock, to take some Catholic paper their minds would not only receive good food, but the evil of the daily paper would be counteracted. In every city there is at least one Catholic paper which not only gives the Church news of the diocese, but matter that is interesting to each community. And what is of more importance, there will always be something instructive, and which will tend to lift them above this work-a-day world to thoughts of eternity. A Catholic paper is good for soul as well as mind, and those heads of families who do not take one are neglecting a good opportunity of good for their children.

A Tribute to Sheridan.

The prejudice which Protestant preachers manifest towards Catholic citizens prevents them from giving credit even to such men as Sheridan, Tarpy, and thousands of other brave and learned Catholics who have given additional glory to the American republic. It is all the more appreciable, therefore, to find the Protestant editor of the Christian Register possessing a sufficient amount of Christianity to pay this tribute to the brave and patriotic Catholic Sheridan:

AN IRISH CATHOLIC HERO.

That an Irishman and a Catholic may be a good citizen, worthy of the love, honor and reverence of his fellow-citizens, is shown in the great career of Philip H. Sheridan, and the universal respect of the nation manifested at his death and burial. Among all the notices of his career we have seen, not one hints at any prejudice against his because he was a member of the Catholic Church. His patriotism was so simple, so sincere, so enthusiastic; his services to the Republic were so great and so brilliant; the confidence in him shared by such leaders as Lincoln, Grant and Sherman, was so marked and explicit, that there was no room for adverse criticism. Philip Sheridan, Irishman and Catholic, is a typical American hero, and his example will lead many a young foreigner to emulate his record of patriotic service.

—The yellow fever is in Florida, and, as usual, all the Protestant preachers, their wives and their babies, have gone away, no one knowth or careth whither. Thus Protestantism makes perfect cowards of its preachers! In the meantime Catholic priests and Sisters are at their posts of danger, and hundreds of letters have been received from Northern cities wherein both priests and Sisters offer their services to assist the sick if their presence is needed. Such is the courage which comes from true Faith! Sectarian preachers skulk away from danger, while Catholic courage is willing to brave every epidemic in order to imitate that sublime charity which Almighty God has left to his true Church as the model for all ages.

—The worldish "American Party," which was fathered by Pixley, Barock & Co., has had its portrait taken. Here it is as we find it in the columns of a paper called America, and published in Chicago for the purpose of "beoming" the Pixley-Barock handling the muscular ladybird. "The editors of America who attended the Washington convention feel that their time was well spent, as they learned just what the American party is and just who are its leaders. They learned that a majority of the managers are a set of cast-off political tramps who are engineering the scheme at the instigation of greater powers, with a view to selling out the organization to the highest bidder." No reason to go to Washington City to learn that fact. If the editors of America had turned over the pages of last year's MONITOR they would never have associated themselves with the "cast-off political tramps" whom they now denounce.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BULLS.

Further Evidence in Proof of their Spurious Character.—O'Hallieran's History Dissected.—Extracts from the History and Writings of Rome, Lingard, Father Theiner, S. J., and others.

TESTIMONY FROM O'HALLORAN'S HISTORY.

The work we design pouring into at present is one of those so called Irish Histories which are bound in green cloth—so that those who buy them may actually judge the book by its cover.

The work is stamped the name O'Halloran, so as to lead Irish people into the false idea that some person with that Celtic patronymic was the author, while on the title-page appears the thoroughly English name of "Dolby." This work, therefore, in all intents and purposes, a spurious History of Ireland, only one-third of which was written by an Irishman, while the other two-thirds are the concoction of some literary Cockneys who were bitterly anti-Catholic as well as anti-Irish, as we intend to prove when we come to cite certain passages.

This O'Halloran-Dolby mixture is cited very frequently in Judge Maguire's bad book, for the reason that—as an English publication—it just suited his anti-Catholic views on the question of the Irish Bulls, hence he drew many of his worst falsehoods from the prejudiced pages of this translated volume.

In the so-called O'Halloran portion of this Irish English History,* we are told in the body of the work that King Henry "entered the harbor of Waterford, October 18th, 1172," but the modern Editor of "O'Halloran's" part, it appears knew more than the Irish historian did, and so he added that footnote

The reader will remember that Dr. Leland and others, have unfortunately followed the authority of Giraldus Cambrensis for the date 1171.† It has lately been ascertained that the right year is 1172. Dr. O'Connor is severely indignant at the mistake. When such learned Doctors disagree, surely my friend O'Halloran may be excused. T. Moore quitably observes that it is "a mark of carelessness, if not, possibly, but by an means meeting the grave severity with which Dr. O'Connor remarks upon it."

Here, then, we have the date of King Henry's arrival in Ireland decisively settled as having taken place on October 18th, 1171. Very well! Now let us glance at the text of the Alexander bull as it appears on another page of this Irish English "history," and we find to our great astonishment that it bears date 1172! And yet O'Halloran says that both the Adrian and Alexander Bulls were presented by the English monarch before the Synod of Cashel, held within a couple of weeks after King Henry's arrival in Ireland!

This Cashel Synod, O'Halloran says, "was the most numerous, but were it the splendid and most genuine assembly of nobles ever convened in the world, how, we ask, in the name of all the mathematicians of the world, could the Bulls ever be laid down to our own Dublin—could King Henry present to any body of men in the world, the Bulls, in the month of October, 1171, a document purporting to have been issued at Rome in the year following!

Thus, we can account for such a blunder in the date of the spurious Bull is that King Henry II., when he had that fictitious document drawn up, did not intend to invade Ireland until the year 1172, and he had that date inserted upon it, but the death of a Becket, and the news that two Papal Legates were coming over to England to lay his country under Interdict, forced the Monarch to postpone his intended invasion of Ireland, and so the Bull was left in the Chancery of the Vatican, and when it was at last sent for, the Chancery Bull in question was dated 1155, and so it was, in the hurry of the moment, that the Bull was dated 1155, and so it was, in the hurry of the moment, that the Bull was dated 1155, and so it was, in the hurry of the moment, that the Bull

Farm and Home.

California's Redwood Forests.

The magnificent redwoods which extend along the coast ranges, from Monterey Bay to Sinkiyou, constitute the chief industry in scenes of this State. It is from these forest that the major part of the lumber used in the State since the American occupation has been been obtained. The drain on these forests has recently been enormous. In those redwood forests adjacent to San Francisco Bay and lying in the counties of San Mateo, Santa Cruz, Marin, Sonoma, Napa and Alameda, most of the merchantable timber to the original growth has been removed long ago. Fortunately the destruction of those forests has not produced a sense of utter desolation such as it naturally pictured in the mind as following in the wake of the lumbermen's axe. In the greater portion of these worked over forests, where the stumps have not been removed to make room for fruit trees or vine, the great vitality of the redwood has asserted itself, and a dense growth of saplings has sprung from the mutilated butts, and are rapidly approaching a merchantable condition.

The same phenomenon of nature restoring the redwood forests is seen in such parts of Mendocino and Humboldt counties as the lumbermen have already cutted. An interesting illustration of the renewal of these magnificent forest trees is preserved in the means on the east side of the Contra Costa and Alameda county range, within a few miles of this city, and along the principal slopes of Mount Tamalpais, and the ranges of Sonoma and Napa counties. The redwood forests on the range east of St. Helena, in the Napa county, supplied all the ties used in the construction of the Napa Valley Railway, and the new growth has been drawn upon for years past for posts and stakes for the vineyards and orchards that are taking the place of the forest.

Useful and Unusual.

—In experimenting with seaweed for making gun cotton a beautiful dye has been discovered.

—Flour of sulphur has proved to be an efficient preventive against the ravages of carpet bugs or buffalo moths.

—The latest theory about the planet Mars is that it is largely covered with glaciers and will be generally.

—Professor Rogers has invented a solidified gas which can be immediately volatilized for the respectful use of ballooniets.

—Sweet oil and putty powder followed by soap and water, are efficient means for brightening brass and copper.

—The latest lace machines are 200 inches wide instead of 130. The output is 25 per cent. greater and the quality much better than with the old machines.

—The most wholesome way to drink milk is to sip it by mouthfuls at short intervals. It is necessary for easy digestion to present it slowly to the gastric mucous surfaces.

—Electrician Edison has scientifically shocked a dog to death. Three thousand volts alternating 500 times per second will kill a man. Still bandages on the doomed man's wrists will help.

—Take a small quantity of 2 per cent carbolic acid solution, and sprinkle sheets, counterpanes, pillows and bolsters, on both sides, the edges of bed curtains and the walls near the bed. The fate and neck may also be slightly wetted with the solution. Not a single gnat or mosquito will come near.

The Human Teeth.

"The poison carried by the human teeth is one of the most amazing that a physician has to deal with," writes Dr. C. A. Robinson. "A Vitten ear or nose is months in healing, when a more important wound inflicted by an instrument would readily yield to simple remedies. I have under my attention severe and complicated cases of blood poisoning in which the patient had but slightly abraided the back hand in the course of a fight by striving the knuckles against the teeth of his opponent. I have those hands thus poisoned only saved from amputation by the replication of all the resources of science. Tobacco or whiskey, or disarrangement of the stomach from many other causes, may be responsible for this poisonous condition of the teeth, and I am not prepared to say that a man with good health and a clean, sweet mouth would scarcely the poison. But I can only speak of the frequency of this class of cases and the difficulty of attending them successfully."

Household Hints.

—A CHAMOIS HELPER.—Take the stalks of a cabbage, strip them, leave them in water all night, and on the next day soak them like vegetable marrow, and they will be found very good.

—Green corn and lima beans deteriorate more quickly than any other vegetable; they should be spread out singly on the cool pallets for as soon as they come from the market.

—Stains of fruit on good table linen can be removed without any injury by using the following with care: Pour boiling water on chloride of lime, in the proportion of one gallon to a quarter of a pound, bottle it, cork it well, and in using be careful not to stir it. Lay the stain in this for a minute, then apply white vinegar and hold the table linen.

—To clean paint that is not varnished put a little some of the best whiting; have ready some clean, warm water, and a piece of flannel, which dip into the water and wipe so nearly dry; then take as much whiting as will adhere to it, apply it to the paint, when a little rubbing will remove any dirt or grease; wash well off and rub dry with a soft cloth. Paint thus cleaned looks equal to new.

Raisins as Good as the Best.

Fresno county will this year produce about one half of the entire raisin crop of the State, and what is better, all the vine yardists will turn out raisins this year and make the latter grapes into dried currants, as they are called.

The London layer raisins from Fresno county will this year lay the imported article in the shade, and will not only take their proper place in the markets of the United States, but will, in all probability be shipped abroad. Both the Fresno raisin and the manner in which it will be packed will be superior to anything sent from Spain therefore, or that will be sent, in all probability this season. The Eastern merchants have asked the California packers to send them raisins which were packed as showy as the foreign fruit, and state that if they do so the fruit itself will give entire satisfaction.

Etiquette of the Sofa.

The etiquette of sofas belongs to the study of manners. No man should take a seat on a sofa while the women occupy chairs, nor does any gentleman sit upon a sofa beside the lady unless asked to do so. The sofa is reserved for the ladies, and the men should take chairs near the sofa or stand before it if they wish to talk to the opposite.

Family Fun.

Outwitted by a Boy.

The following incident is related as a reduubtable fact. In Ireland potatoes go by a variety of names. When the writer was a boy over twenty summers ago, the name "Protestants" was given to tubers with a bluish tint, being shiny in shape. A had so used Johnny Downing owned a skin full of them on his back one day. The arrangement made of worker work, almost square in form, and used generally to carry turf or potatoes. Johnny, while carrying his load happened to meet a Protestant minister. It was among the mountains of the South of Ireland.

"Say, young lad, what's that you got on your back?" asked the minister.

"Potatoes, yer reverence," responded Johnny.

"What kind of potatoes are they that you have there?" continued the minister.

"Protestants, yer reverence.

"And are you a Protestant, Johnny?"

"No sir, I'm a Catholic."

"Then it's a great wonder that you would carry 'Protestants' on your back."

"Nothing wonderful at all about it, sir, because you see we like to return good for evil, and you know when I go home my mother will boil these Prots nuts that I've got on my back and give the biggest of them."

"The minister laughed in a very hearty laugh, and like the liberal gentleman he was, he generously threw Johnny a crown piece, Hibernian money, equivalent to half a dollar, and in an exclamation:

"Oh, sir, may the mother of that prey to the Divine Son to answer you and may you live as long as you live, and may the blessed crown piece you get me."

The minister thanked the boy for his prayer and did some thinking as he walked pensively along the road, musing on the intimate connection there does exist at times between a mother and a son, especially such a Mother and such a Son.

Where He was Struck.

Once night in the second act of "The Seaughrans," where a front scene should have been drawn to discover the ruined abbey by moonlight, with the river ripples made by the moon on the waters, there was a long wait. The show music was played again and again. I became decidedly impatient, when Tommy Hodson, the gentleman who managed all the limelight effects, including the moon, rushed towards me with despair convulsing his features.

"What's the matter?" I cried.

"Oh, sir, the moon has burned."

He meant that the lens which is focused on the circular crescent representing the moon had broken under heat.

"No matter," I cried, "draw the moon."

Tommy tore his hair when, on discovering that Mr. Morgan's lovely work, a round black hole in the sky, representing a total eclipse. Nevertheless the waiters below showed the rippling reflection of the satellite. Tommy had forgotten to "turn off the ripple." A year of laughter followed the blunder.

But that was nothing compared to what happened in the last scene of the play when Molineux had to search for the wound in Kinsella's body, inflicted by Cox's pistol shot. The text directs Molineux to feel the breast of Kinsella's coat accordingly. The ballet entered here, but something has turned its progress. All the people in black has saved his life."

Molineux, who played Montague, could find no pocketbook. I heard him whisper:

"Where's the pocketbook?"

"Oh, I did!" murmured Kinsella, I forgot—it's in my tail pocket."

Molineux rolled him over, and extracting the book from that spot, continued without thinking: "The bullet entered here, Ar."

The ill-omen roar of laughter, in which every one on the stage joined, shook the building. I tried to pick up the pieces of part, but how I got the few words out I cannot imagine.—Dion Boucicault.

A Cruel Exposure.

"Mr. Minnie Burrits Learned will now give us a very interesting experiment in chemistry, showing the carbonferous character of many ordinary substances, after which she will entertain us with a little treatise on astronomy, and an illustration of the geological formation of certain substances, closing with a brief essay entitled—'Philosophy vs. Rhinoceros.' Then spoke the president of a young ladies' seminary on the close of the entertainment.

A hard heads dull-fashioned farmer happened to be on the examining board and selected for the family and pearl of Miss Minnie by asking.

"Kin Miss Minnie tell me how much sixteen and three-fourths pounds of beef would come to at 12½ cents a pound?"

"Why, really, I—I" gasped Miss Minnie.

"Kin you tell me who is the President of the United States?"

"Why—I—Mr. Blaine, is it? Or is it—"

"Kin you tell me in what State Kalamazoo is, and where the Mississippi River rises and sets?"

"I—I—don't—just—know."

"I reckoned you did not. I wonder if yer teachers know. Blamed if I don't believe they don't. Gimme the good old days when gals a boys went to school to larn sense."

She Could n't be Bothered.

"How shall I cook the potatoes for dinner, ma'am?" asked Mrs. Hendpeck's domestic, appearing at the door of her mistress' room while that lady was writing.

"I'm sure I don't know. I never cooked a potato in my life."

"And what about the meat?"

"Oh, I don't know. Just anyway."

"And the seed, ma'am?"

"Any kind will do.

"And what about the dessert?"

"Jane," said Mrs. Hendpeck, sharply, "you tried me when I suggested you that you could cook anything, and if you cannot you'll have to go. I know nothing about cooking myself, as I told you. My time is wholly occupied in writing for household magazines. Now, go away and don't disturb me again; I must finish this article on 'The Ethics of the Home' and think up something on 'Higher Life of the Kitchen' before noon. Get anything you can for dinner and cook it your own way. I won't be bothered with domestic affairs of any sort."

An Item from Boston.

"Marian, I rejected Mr. Darringer last evening."

"Why, Kate?"

"He was entirely too profuse."

"Impossible! A lover could n't be."

"And he was so gushing as he was romantic. He praised my eye, hair and complexion. He—"

"Oh, Kate, that was just lovely."

"But his grammar, Marian. That was the hidden rock which wrecked him. He said: 'your eyes is,' and all that. Goodness! I expected to hear him say 'your nose are,' I love him, and it makes my heart ache to think about it—but I can not marry him—no—never."

—Subscribers will please look at the date printed on their paper or wrapper, and if they find that their subscription has not been paid, they will help the Monitor financially by remitting $1 00 promptly.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BENZIGER BROTHERS
NEW YORK, 36 & 38 Barclay Street.
CINCINNATI, O., 178 Main Street.
CHICAGO, Ill., 178 Monroe St.
Manufacturers and Importers of Banners and Flags
of all kinds.
Scarfs, Badges, Collars, Badges, Hats, Caps, Metal Badges, Emblems, etc., etc.
Banner Crosses, Knobs, Spears, Eagles, Poles, etc., etc.
Embroideries, Oil Paintings, Silks, Damasks, Galloons, Fringes, Rosettes, etc.
Send for our Illustrated Price-List.
It will prove to any one's advantage to inspect our stock before ordering elsewhere.
The leading House in Regalia.

McKENNA & PURCELL,
Hay, Grain and Commission MERCHANTS.
Consignments Solicited.
Shipping Orders a Specialty.
214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

ARMSTRONG & NIKLAUS,
GROCERS.
Butter, Eggs, Teas & Coffees
A SPECIALTY.
2952 and 2957 Mission St.
Cor. 33rd Ave. Tel. Valencia and Mission Sts.
All Country Orders Packed and Shipped. Goods Delivered in any part of the City, Free of Charge.

Marble! Granite! Statuary!
W. H. McCORMICK,
Importer and Manufacturer of
ITALIAN AND AMERICAN MARBLE, AMERICAN and SCOTCH GRANITE, Mantels and Grates, Tiles, Mosaics, Etc. Tiles and all kinds of Marble and Granite work. 1002 Market St., between City Hall Ave. and Larkin St., San Francisco.

B. BRADLEY,
Painting, Whitening,
AND PAPER HANGING,
923 Mission Street, 923
Telephone No. 3064.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD
"THE PICKWICK ROUTE."
COMMENCING SUNDAY, APRIL 8, 1883, and until further notice Passenger Trains will run on this road and connect with the Transcontinental Passenger Depot, Market Street Wharf, as follows:

Leave S. F.	Destination	Arrive S. F.
8:00 a. m.	Petaluma	10:50 a. m.
1:30 p. m.	and	6:20 p. m.
5:00 p. m.	Santa Rosa.	8:50 p. m.
7:00 a. m.	Fulton,	9:50 a. m.
3:30 p. m.	Windsor,	6:20 p. m.
	Healdsburg,
7:00 a. m.	Cloverdale.	9:50 a. m.
3:30 p. m.		6:20 p. m.

Stages connect at Santa Rosa for White Sulphur Springs, Mark West Springs, Glen Ellen, Kenwood, Oakmont, Skaggs Springs and at Cloverdale for Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Harbin Springs, Blue Lakes, Ukiah, Vichy Springs, Navarro Ridge, Mendocino City and the Geysers.
EXCURSION TICKETS from Saturdays to Mondays, or Fridays, S. F., to Santa Rosa, $2; to Healdsburg, $3; to Cloverdale, $4; to Ukiah or Geyserville, $5.
EXCURSION TICKETS good for Sundays only, to Petaluma $1; to Santa Rosa, $2; to Healdsburg, $3; to Cloverdale, $4; to Ukiah or Geyserville, $5.
From San Francisco to Point Tiburon and San Rafael, Week Days—7:00 a. m., 10:00 a. m., 3:30 p. m., 5:00 p. m. Sundays—8:00 a. m., 9:30 a. m., 11:00 a. m., 1:30 p. m., 3:30 p. m., 5:00 p. m.
To San Francisco from Point Tiburon, Week Days—7:50 a. m., 8:20 a. m., 9:30 a. m., 1:05 p. m., 4:10 p. m., 6:05 p. m. Sundays—8:45 a. m., 9:50 a. m., 11:15 a. m., 2:45 p. m., 4:45 p. m., 6:35 p. m.
To San Francisco from Point Tiburon, Week Days—7:50 a. m., 8:20 a. m., 9:30 a. m., 1:05 p. m., 4:10 p. m., 6:05 p. m. Sundays—8:45 a. m., 9:50 a. m., 11:15 a. m., 2:45 p. m., 4:45 p. m., 6:35 p. m.
Stages connect at Tiburon for Belvedere.
Tickets to Intermediate points on the above routes will be sold at the offices of the Company, and baggage will be checked to destination only on the tickets of the stage lines.
Tickets for sale and baggage checked at the Company's office, 1 Market Street, Ferry Building.
R. H. MCMULLIN, General Manager.
FRANK BOWNE, General Passenger Agent.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROAD
5.00 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) from Tiburon Ferry, for the towns of Sonoma, Glen Ellen and Kenwood. Returning leave Sonoma at 8 A. M.
SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.
8.00 A. M.—Tiburon and Sonoma, from Tiburon Ferry, for Sonoma, Glen Ellen and Kenwood. Returning leave Sonoma at 5:30 P. M.
Round Trip Tickets to Sonoma, $1.00; to Glen Ellen, $1.50.
H. C. WHITING, General Superintendent.
PETER J. MOLLYN, Gen'l Ticket and Pass. Agent.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMP'Y
SPECIAL NOTICE.
EXCURSION TICKETS TO
MT. SHASTA,
ASHBY, MONTAGUE, DUNSMUIR, SODA SPRINGS,
AND OTHER MOUNTAIN RESORTS.
A. N. TOWNE, General Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.
No. 1 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JOHN WIELAND BREWING CO.
Largest Brewery West of St. Louis.
BEST
LAGER BEER
On the Pacific Coast.
BREWERY—Second St., nr. Folsom
Amount of Beer sold in 1867, 37,167½ barrels.

McCORMICK BROS.,
Book and Job Printers,
410 Sansome St., 410

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Crescent Hotel.)

OPIUM HABIT Painlessly cured in 10 to 20 days. No publicity. No detention from business. Address DR. STEPHENS, 1170 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

DR. H. CRAIGIE,
DENTIST.
All Operations in Dentistry Performed.
TEETH EXTRACTED PAINLESSLY.
606 Market St., Phelan Building.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
—Importers and Dealers in—
BOOK, NEWS, WRITING AND WRAPPING PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTURERS OF—
Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.
512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

H. McCORMICK,
—DEALER IN—
Catholic Books, Stationery, Church Goods, Ornaments, Flowers, etc.
PICTURES AND PICTURE FRAMES MADE TO ORDER.
Fine Rosaries and all kinds of Church Goods at the lowest prices. Candles, Cigars, Pipes and Tobacco. Agent for the Monitor.
516 & 518 Montgomery Avenue, near St. Francis Church.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 747.
ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL & Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Second Hands, Gardeners, Coachmen, and Married Couples for the country. Also, Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, "The Ethics of the Home" and much up something on "Higher Life of the Kitchen" before noon. Get anything you can for dinner and cook it your own way. I won't be bothered with domestic affairs of any sort."

WEDDING PRESENTS.
A SET OF
PRICE'S Famous California-Made
CARVERS.
Elegantly Made and Design. Challenge the World. Beware of Imitations.
Sold by Prime Handles, per pair $7 50
Ivory Handles, Nickel Ferrules, per pair 10 00
Price's Cream Sauces, warranted, not to crack in hot foods while stirring 1 00
A well assorted stock of English and American Table Cutlery and Forks. Best C. O. D. in my mail. Grinding and repairing.
M. PRICE, Pioneer Cutlery,
415 Kearny St.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JAS. SCHEIBLI,
Having Enlarged His Store, has laid in an entire new stock of Foreign and Domestic Suitings.
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.
539 Clay Street, 539

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
648 MARKET STREET
BRANCH,
1286 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY.
12th St. bet. Folsom and Howard S. P. Co.

Adjustable and Common Dress Forms
and
Paper Mache Busts
MADE TO ORDER.
224 Stockton St
SAN FRANCISCO

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
PIANOS
GAINED THE PREMIUM at the recent Mechanics' Fair, over all competitors, the Pianos of Messrs. Knabe & Co., of Baltimore, which are now offered by the undersigned at his Warerooms, at the lowest prices for cash or easy payments. Second hand Pianos from $25 to $100. Pianos to Rent, $1 per week. Pianos tuned, $1 50. Pianos moved, $3 50. Pianos boxed, $1 50. Pianos stored, $1 50. Pianos packed for shipping, $1 50. Pianos for sale on Monthly Payments, $10 per month. Pianos for sale by Monthly Payments, $10 per month. Pianos for sale by Monthly Payments, $10 per month. Pianos for sale by that no adequate account can be given of this undeniable fact from natural causes; (2) that the history of the Catholic Church demands causes above nature, (3) that it has always claimed for itself a Divine origin and Divine authority.

CARDINAL MANNING.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

I. And, first, before we examine what it was and what it has done, we will recall to mind what was the world in the midst of which it arose.

The most comprehensive and complete description of the old world, before Christianity came to upon it, is given in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. St. Paul had once the knowledge of God that knowledge was obscured by the reasons of sense; in the darkness of the human intellect, with the light of nature still before them, the nations worshiped the creature—that is, by pantheism, polytheism, idolatry; and, having lost the knowledge of God and His perfections, they lost the knowledge of their own nature and of its laws, even of the natural and rational laws, which therefore ceased to guide, restrain or govern them. They became perverted and inverted with every possible abuse, defaming the and and destroying the powers of creation. The lights of nature were put out, and the world ruished headlong into an abyss, of which the lessons that prefaced were unknown. This is analyzed by the history of all nations but one. A line of light still shows from Adam to Noah, from Enoch to Abraham, to whom the command was given, "Walk before Me and be perfect." And it ran on from Abraham to Caiaphas, who rendered the founder of Christianity. Through all embracing emphasis of thought and language this line of light passed, unbroken and unchanged, in the world, on either side of that radiant stream, the whole earth was dark. The intellectual and moral state of the Greek world may be measured in its highest excellence in Athens and of the Roman world in Rome. The state of Athens—its private, domestic and public morality—may be seen in Aristophanes.

The state of Rome is visible in Juvenal, and in the fourth book of St. Augustine's "City of God." There was no moral sense wanting. The world was not Atheist. Its polytheism was a sensuous religion warmed of all forms of moral abominations. Instar omnis plunged the nations in crime. Their theology was their degradation; their test-book of an elaborate corruption of intellect and will.

CHRISTIANITY CAME IN "THE FULNESS OF TIME."

What that fullness may mean, is one of the mysteries of times and seasons which it is not for us to know. But, can we notice for the long delay of four thousand years is not for us to know. It gave time, full and ample, for the utmost development and consolidation of all the falsehood and evil of which the intellect and will of man are capable. The four great empires were each of them the concentration of a supreme effort of human power. The second inherited from the first, the third from both, the fourth from all three. It was, as was foretold, or depicted, as a beast, "exceedingly terrible, his feet and claws were of iron; he devoured and broke in pieces; and the rest he stamped upon with his feet." The empire of man was never so widespread, so absolute, so hardened into one organized mass, as in Imperial Rome. The world had never seen a military power so disciplined, irresistible, invincible; a legislation so just, so equitable, so strong in its execution; a government so universal, so bold, so matute. It seemed to be imperishable. Rome was called the eternal. The religion of all nations was enshrined in Dea Roma; adopted, practiced openly and all knight. Poetry were all religious letter, known to the law; not tolerated only, but recognized. The Deities of Egypt, Greece, and of the Latin world, met in an empyrean, consecrated and guarded by the Imperial law, and administered by the Pontifex Maximus. No fanaticism ever surpassed the religious zeal of Rome, and yet to all this the collective of false philosophies of every land drove over it like a flood. They blinded and hardened the intellect of public opinion and of private man against the sense of anything except contempt, and hatred of both the philosophy of the region and the religion of the people. Add to this the sensuality of the most refined and of the grossest luxury the world had ever seen, and a moral confusion and corruption which violated every law of nature.

THE GOD OF THIS WORLD

had both his city. From foundation to parapet, everything that the skill and power of man could do had been done without aim or reason or end of evil. The Divine hand was stayed, or rather, as St. Augustine says, an unemployed natural greatness was the reward of restraint. The world had ever been, and it was the universal abomination. Hence the dalmas of the power of man without God, the apotheosis of the human will, the direct and supreme antagonist of God in his own world. In this the fullness of time was Rome. Then both all this fortified. Certainly man could not build the City of God. They are not the work of one and the same architect, who anywhere shows to have first the city of confusion, suppending for a time his skill and power to build some day the City of God. Such a hypothesis is folly. Of two things, one. Therefore must chose one or the other. Both cannot be asserted, and the answer to the question—it is infinite itself. So much for the first point.

II. In the reign of Augustus, and in a remote and powerless Oriental town, Christ was born in a stable of a poor Mother. For thirty years He lived a hidden life; for three years He preached the Kingdom of God, and gave Divine lilibetic unknown to man. He died in ignominy upon the Cross; on the third day He rose again; and after forty days He was seen no more. This unknown man crossed the world with unity of intellect and will which is visible to the eye, and audible, in all languages, to the ear. It is in harmony with the moral and moral nature of all nations, in all ages, to this day. What proportion is there between the cause and the effect? What power was there in this hunted Man? What unseen virtues went out of Him to change the world? For things the world He did; and that not in the line or on the level of nature as man has corrupted it, but in direct contradiction to all that man has approved in the world. He taught the dependence of the intellect against its self-trust, the subjugation of the will against its license, the self-jugation of the passions by temperate control or by absolute subjection against their willful indulgence. Was this in accordance what man believed the laws of nature to make water climb upward and fire to plant downward. He inculcated meekness of the heart of the lust, contempt of the lusts of the eyes, and hatred of the pride of life. What kind of man was that such a teacher should convert imperial Rome, and in a generation should subdue the fullness of human pride and lust? Yet so it has come to pass; and how? Twelve men more obscure than Himself, absolutely without authority or influence of this world, preached throughout the empire and beyond it. They asserted two facts the one, that God had been made man; the other, that He died and rose again. What could be more incredible? To the Jew the idea and spirituality of God were axioms of reason. And, to the Gentile, however educated, the resurrection of the flesh was impossible. The Divine Person Who had died and risen could not be called in evidence as the chief witness. He could not be produced in court. Could anything be more suspicious if credible, or less credible even if He were there to say so? All that they could say was to say, "We know Him for three years, both before His death and after He rose from the dead. If you will believe us, you will believe whether say. If you will not believe us, we can do more. He is not here, but in heaven. We cannot call Him down. It is true, as we read, that Peter cured a lame man at the gate of the Temple. The Rabbi Jews could not deny it, but they would not believe what Peter said; they only told him to hold his tongue. And yet thousands in one day in Jerusalem believed in the Incarnation and the Resurrection; and when the Apostles were scattered by persecution, wherever they went men believed their word. The most intense persecution was from the Jews, the people of faith and of Divine traditions. In the name of God and of religion they stoned Stephen, and sent Saul to prison; and in Damascus they thought, they suffered up the Romans in worldly place. As they had forced Pilate to crucify Jesus of Nazareth, so they sought to slay Paul. And yet, in spite of all, the faith spread.

IT IS CRUE, INDEED, THAT THE EMPIRE of Alexander, the spread of the Hellenistic Greek, the prevalence of the Jews in themself, the Roman roads which made the Empire traversable, the Roman peace which sheltered the preachers of the faith in the cotest of their work, gave these facilities to travel and to be understood. But these were only external facilities, which on no way rendered more credible or more acceptable the voice of penance and mortification, or the message of the faith, which was mentually "to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness." It was in changeless opposition to not as man had carried it, but it was in absolute harmony with nature as God had made it to His own likeness. Its power was its persuasiveness; and its persuasiveness was its conformity to the highest and noblest aspirations and aims of the world as man, the master key to long lost was found at last, and the conformity to the needs of the world was its irrefragable witness to its own mission and message.

But if it is beyond belief that Christianity in its outset made good its foothold by usurpy human causes and powers, how more now does this become incredible in every age as we come down from the first century to the nineteenth, and from the Apostles mission to the wide Christian Empire and Hotman, at this day.

Not deep did the world in the fullness of its power give to the Christian faith no help to root or to spread itself, but it wrecked all the fullness of its power upon it to spread and destroy it. Of the first thirty Pontiffs in Rome, twenty were martyred. Ten successive persecutions, or rather one universal and continuous persecution of one hundred years, with ten more bitter crusses of cruelty in every province of the Empire, did all that man can do to extinguish the Christian name. The Christian name was be blotted out here and there in blood, but the Christian faith can nowhere be slain. It is ineractable, as "beyond the reach of man." In nothing is the blood of the martyrs more seen the seed of the faith. Every martyrdom was a witness to the faith and the testimony was seen to be sealed by the work of the twelve Apostles. The dare-you defeated himself. Christ crucified was visibly set forth before all the nations, the world was a Calvary, and the blood of the martyrs preached in every tongue the Passion of Jesus Christ. The world did its worst, and crossed only for weariness and concession defeat.

THEN CAME THE PEACE,

and with peace the peril of the Church. The world outside had failed; the world inside begins to be its ally. The Church was not in it perverted the intellect, and, through intellectual perversion, assailed the faith at its centre. The Angel of light preached heresy. The Spiritual Creed was assailed in every the line; Gnosticism assailed the Father and Creator of all things, Manichaeism the head of the Son; Nestorianism, the unity of His person, Monophysitism, the two natures; Monothelism, the divine and human will of Macedonians, the person of the Holy Ghost. So throughout the centuries, from the time of the Vatican, every article has been in succession perverted by heresy and assailed in the Church. But of this we shall speak in the Council of Constance, never to be broken again! The heresies in a Europe full measurably has been, indeed, often broken, and always restored, in those that would yield. But there is a humanity of eighteen hundred years, powerless in nothing by force or support, planning and receiving not only outward allegiance but even the unity of intellect and will. If any man tell us that these two phenomena are on the same level of merely human causes, it is because or tax open our natural faculties to believe it.

But the inadequacy of human causes to account for the universality, unity, and unchangeability of the Catholic Church, will stand out more visibly if we look at the intellectual and moral revolution which Christianity has wrought in the world and upon mankind.

THE FIRST EFFECT OF CHRISTIANITY

was to fill the world with the true knowledge of the true True God, and to destroy utterly all idols, not by fire but by light. Before the light of the world no false god and no polytheism could stand. The unity and spirituality of God swept away all heresies and theologies of the first four thousand years. The stream of light which descended from the beginning expanded into a volume, and the volume into a flood, which illumined all nations, as it had been foretold, "The earth is filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the covering waters of the sea." And idols shall be utterly destroyed. In the world of idols, all the Divine Nature was revealed to men their own relation to a Creator and a Son to a father. The Greeks called the chief of the gods Zeus Pater, and in recognition of this, not neither realized the dependence and love of sonship as revealed by the Founder of Christianity.

The moral state of the world comes down from a primeval and Divine source. Polytheism is the corruption of man and of nations. Yet in the multiplicity of all gods there is the witness of a Divine Unity was prefigured. The Divine unity was imperishable, was a witness to the human imagination, it is of man's manufacture. The definition of nature and passions and heroes had filled the world with an elaborate and complicated superstition, surrounded by reverence, fear, religion, and awe. Every perversion of what is good in man surrounded it with authority, everything that is evil in man was guarded with jealous care. Against this world which and supported it, Christianity the universe of one God, all holy and supreme, ad exacted with resistless force. Relentless is not the word to describe the hatred of the world against Christianity, and the answer hope was exposed that the temporal tribe might increase and multiply the world.

No. 102 has been organized under favorable auspices at Alameda, M. T., by Dispatch Deputy Grand Sir Jesse Falls, W. T. The following officers of the new lodge have been elected: President James McFayre; First Vice President, Mrs. M. Walker; Second Vice President, Mrs. Mebelle; Recording Secretary, F. M. Hatty; Financial Secretary, Mrs. Mebelle; Treasurer, Mrs. Mebelle; Conductor, Mrs. Mebelle; Sentinel, Mrs. McCarthy; Marshal, Edward Hartkins; Board of Trustees, Mrs. Mebelle, Henry Clemens, John Hayes, N. Falls-ville, Thomas Burke. Twenty members signed the charter roll.

The newly elected Grand President, M. W. Fleming, has been connected with the order since its inception and during the regime of the young temperance Grand President, J. J. McHale, was active Deputy Inspector. In Colusa, and in Sacramento, he has a reputation of such ability and energy, qualities quite essential to a head officer. His line of executive action will be in accordance with that laid down and successfully practiced by his predecessor, whose excellent example we have every reason to believe M. Fleming will carefully and conscientiously emulate.

A New Convent in San Gabriel.

The Sisters of the Holy Name, Oakland, have received of Je Bartlett Sunset Magazine a large tract of land near San Gabriel on which it is proposed to erect a convent school which will be a branch of the Sacred Heart Convent, Oakland. The introduction of this distinguished order in the west will be an important step in the history of Catholic progress in the west.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.

The shipbuilding works of Messrs. Harland & Wolff, Belfast, are still closed, and about two hundred are still unemployed. The lockout has been in progress for about the middle of the summer, and three hundred in number, who demanded an increase of wages, and refused to accept a regular decline, his day there with some famous letters to the Antrim on the deathbed of local landlords.

Kilkenny.

The priests and people of Kilkenny have issued a defense fund to pay off the expenses of an action against the proprietors of the Kilkenny Journal, incurred in the case of Mr. Smithwick v. Lord Ormonde, against that paper. The costs amount to £250.

Cardinal Moran visited Callan on Aug. 15th, and received a very warm welcome from the inhabitants. The Cardinal was detained for the night. An address was presented to his Grace, to which he replied in a speech in which the protection he had enjoyed was thanked for the kindness shown by the people of the district, and admonished the people to be kind to the poor and admonished the strangers.

Tipperary.

On Friday evening, August 24th, a meeting took place in the Town Hall, Tipperary, to form a National Industrial Fund. Mr. Peter Flood, T. C., in the chair, and Messrs. P. McGrory, T.C., J.C. Meldrew, T.C., P. L. J. K. Kendi, J. J. Farrell, A. Ryan, and others. A number of subscriptions were handed in, and it was resolved to collect subscriptions to make a house to house visit on behalf of the fund.

Limerick.

The Very Rev. Peter Gipps, O.S.A., the president of St. Patrick's church in Limerick, has arrived in Ireland after a long tour in Europe with the Prior and Fathers of the Augustinian Convent, Cowgr ridge, Surrey. On Friday last Mass was celebrated in the Augustinian Church.

Louth.

Mr. John Dillon's health is not at all as good as it should be, and it is feared that the confinement to his bed has not considerably in weight, and he is reported to be weaker than when Mr. Healy visited the sentence of the Remarkable. His ages approaching seventy, and he has been in a bad weather last, a very depressing, and he is not at all well. Mr. Healy's visit to Dublin on Friday and Saturday last, and his further participation in the Mitchelstown Inquiry, has left him in a very weak state. The Inquiry commenced on Tuesday last, and is presided over by Mr. Justice Andrews, Mr. Murphy, K.C., The charge against the Mitchelstown Inquiry, and

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE ROSE.

I love the rose, the blooming rose,
That seeks the summer moon;
I love its petals to repose,
When sunshine in the shore.

I love to wish beside the rill,
And catch its fragrance fair;
I love to climb the orchard hill,
And find its blossoms there.

I love the roses in the park,
On on the parlor stand;
I love their sweetness in the dark,
On in the sunlight hand.

I love the rose in sweet bouquets,
And bestow bale bonnet;
I love to feel their perfumed mass,
When wafted on the air.

I love the rose upon the bush,
On in a lady's hair;
I love to see, when dage the thresh,
The rose in beauty there.

I love to see those dark the breast
Of maiden bright and fair,
I love to see her cool exposed
In roseleafs opening rare.

I love the rose—sweet fairy queen
Of all the golden flowers,
Because its blossoms meet have been
The best in' Eden's bowers."
Establish the rose of rich perfume,
That waftn 'neath summer skies,
Be sought from the Hyrcan bloom,
Enchanted in Paradise.

JOHN F. MCDONNELL.
Virginia City, Nev., Sept. 15, 1888.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE HOLY SUNDAY HOUR.

It was a Sunday morn
In Autumn time, when earth in splendor decked,
Seemed radiant with joy. The sky was flecked
With slender lineblanks of gray and red,
Which faded intermittently—fair scenes
Shd o'er our hearts strange thrills of pleasure sheds,
And wonder sparkle from our stars set mines—
This glorious Sunday morn.

'Twas Harvn's own blessed day;
And from its birth 'twas heralded with songs
Celestial, hymned by glad seraphic throngs;
And when their voices died within the sky,
The soulful harmonies of bliss even vast
In joyful notes that pierced the dome on high,
And praised the Maker for bright gifts He sent—
The blessed perfect day.

Yet not the bliss alone
That voice their praise. Each thing of earth,
Hallowed with life, in tones of heartfelt mirth,
Its peans rendered that seemed to the throne
Of the Almighty wrapped in splendor fair;
The stream's soft song joins with the brook's mone,
Blending sweet hymns, rescounding to the air
In praise of Him alone.

And flowers of heavenly hue
Glance and sparkle 'mneath the golden glow
Of the sun's autumnal glance, and bending low
Their delicate heads in adoration, thank God
Their lovely beauty of mingled perfumed hues,
Their gladness borne by angels through the sky,
Shedding the joy of Him who dwells above—
This autumn Holy Day.

In unison with earth,
Mankind uplifts his soul. His grateful eyes, Reflecting thoughts of praise, pierce through the skies
And silently though sly-quietly speak
Truly thanks to Him, while with a settled mien,
With earnest strive and purpose true, men seek
To honor Him above, the great Creator—
This bright autumn day.

Continue thus to praise
With heart and soul and adoration strong,
Oh, man, your Maker! Make your hearts to sing
And thank Him. Supplicantly ask and pray
For future grace that will faithful come
Sun o'er, in truth, sincerity to obey
The beneficent tenets of you Saviour's laws,
And glorify His Day!

R. M. C.

THE ANGELUS BELL.

The Rev. S. C. L. Jenkins, a Protestant minister residing in Charleston, S. C., contributes the following poem to the "Home Journal" of that city. It is produced by this explanatory note: "For a long time I lived in close proximity to a Roman Catholic church and School, and the soft tones of that bell regulated my life. I grew to depend upon the regularity of its alternative voice. Its morning, noon and evening prayer was to me a sweet and hallowed influence. I give the language I have instinctively ascribed to the bell:

The Angelus is ringing!
Rise, heart, in grateful prayer—
Rise and salute the new day dawning!
Remember whom strong love
Commanded this day
Has held thee in its tender care,
And hope thee till the morning.
Oh! rise and pay the constant thought
And faithful alight,
In dark and light,
Have life to another blessing brought Thy tribute to His love,
The Angelus is ringing!

The Angelus is ringing!
As noon high noon with unwelding care,
Blur upon life's darkle hard around thee!
Let not the world with wiles has bound thee!
But that dear voice from upper air
Recalls thee from thy cells.
In fulness of the day
Lift up thy heart and pray,
O hyper, holier life,
The Angelus is ringing!

The Angelus is ringing!
Welcome the night with hush and rest.
Pause once more notice down
Upon the sun-lighted west,
Ere this ground finding eve
Result it to thy sore ones move,
And speak to them of love,
Ere deeper thoughts with deepening ray!
Day's restful thoses,
And all low dreams,
Or by this high suggestion sweet away!
The Angelus is ringing!

Silent, noon and night, O faithful bell!
Thy warnings to my conscience call,
Though on the one unmarked they fall.
Our all the clouds that close in round,
Thy musical monitions sound,
And of a worthier life they tell.
When, noon and night thy note shall stay
Thy strife shall cease—
And on thy wings I walk my prayer,
O, Angelus from upper air!

Sing through the world, great Angelus!
Sing on, and sing for ever!
Ring through the ages, Holy Church,
Thy tidings of joy and peace!
Joy and fall not, grief and not man
Shall give the ages as they time.
Ring on, ring on, Angelus!
Send for on the wings of thy sweet chime.
Thoses sore be dull, and cares be sorrow,
Yet hearts must feel the angels' song,
Sweet then still o'er all man's life abroad
Hence tender calling of a voice of God.

Literary Miscellany.

"VALISKA."

A Catholic Story of Temptation, and Triumph over Evil.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "BRESLIA."]

[CONCLUDED]

CHAPTER III.

Fortunately Gatalla carried a strong fan, and by the use of it and cool water from the eastern, she was restored. When she came to, she pleaded in broken, sorrowful tones, to be taken home.

"Gatalla, Gatalla, darling, come back; take me home; do not do this. Oh, it is terrible," and she tried to rise to her feet.

"It is too late now, dear," whispered Gatalla, as she leaned over her. "Sleep, pinning to the East, "we have traveled for and is is nearly dawn, we will soon be there it will do no good to go back now, it will only make things worse if you return alone with Roy; for come what will, I am going on. Come, get into the buggy; you are better now, and when I am married and we return together no one will think anything of it; you only went to be my bridesmaid and witness." With these words, Gatalla motioned to Roy, who came and placed her in the buggy once more.

Valiska said nothing; she was like one in a dream, and sat there white and still while Roy had died before it came to this.

The morning of the next day, Mike went as usual to make his morning call on Valiska, but soon returned with a sad and disappointed little face.

"Oh! mother, my heart's bestin' qneesy, I can't find Miss Valiska."

"What, darlin', do you mane to tell me she's not there; I wonder where can she be?" said his mother.

"I can't tell," was Mike's reply, as tears poured down his honest face.

"Dry your tears, my boy; cryin' won't bring her back. It's early yet, maybe she's safeep."

"Not a sign of her can I find anywhere; sure I looked in under the blinds, but not a sight of her could I get. Oh, it's meself that knows she's gone with Gatalla."

"Hush, child, you know nothin' of the sort, and you should not be speakin' so of the young lady at all; it's none of your business."

"Pardon me, mother, but didn't I hear my father speak, and say morvia, the pity that a girl like Miss Valiska, should travel round with the like of that Gatalla; so I just spoke out, an' told her to love off goin' with her, or she'd rue it, an' I think my words have some true."

"With your leave, mother, I'll take a walk an' see if I can find some trace of Valiska."

"Go, dear, my boy, mother, I'll take a walk an' see if I can find some trace of Valiska."

Fortunately Gatalla carried a strong fan, and by the use of it and cool water from the eastern, she was restored. When she came to, she pleaded in broken, sorrowful tones, to be taken home.

"Gatalla, Gatalla, darling, come back; take me home; do not do this. Oh, it is terrible," and she tried to rise to her feet.

"It is too late now, dear," whispered Gatalla, as she leaned over her. "Sleep, pinning to the East, "we have traveled for and is is nearly dawn, we will soon be there it will do no good to go back now, it will only make things worse if you return alone with Roy; for come what will, I am going on. Come, get into the buggy; you are better now, and when I am married and we return together no one will think anything of it; you only went to be my bridesmaid and witness." With these words, Gatalla motioned to Roy, who came and placed her in the buggy once more.

Valiska said nothing; she was like one in a dream, and sat there white and still while Roy had died before it came to this.

"Oh, why did I not listen to him; God sometimes speaks by the mouth of an innocent child. But I could not hear, and now, merciful Father, where will not Valiska merit's name be mentioned, as that of an accomplice to a vile deed against God, Oh, Father in Heaven, pity me," she moaned in her anguish, "I—" but before she could finish, Gatalla, who had been out to make some purchases, entered, saying:

"Come, dear, to the parlor; it is time."

Valiska rose and followed her in silence. There stood Maud Monroe, pale as the bride and shaking with fley in an under tone.

Valiska shuddered as she noted the sinister satin on his face, when Gatalla introduced them, and she wondered that Gatalla could go to such ends for such a villian as he seemed to be.

Just then a Justice entered and Gatalla took her place with Maud before him, Roy stepped to Valiska's side, and they witnessed a ceremony, which, according to the law of the land, made Gatalla Valiscia Maud's wife.

"Oh, God," thought Valiska, as she looked at her after it was over. "How can she stand there so calmly and smiling and lovely; has she no heart and no thought of her poor, old mother?"

"Mother of mercy," she continued, "take me out of this place or I shall go mad. Alas! poor Valiska, the worst was yet to come; for though she distracted Gatalla, she could not believe her to be so lost to shame, as to leave her alone to go home with Roy, or so bent she could, so when it a heartless creature came smilingly to her and told her that Maud had changed his mind and would not go back to V——, Valiska was so stunned that she could not reply.

"You know," continued Gatalla, "it will create a fuss, and my mother will come flying to me and then she will have the Judge continually nagging at me to marry in the Church."

"And will you not marry in the Church," asked Valiska.

"Not yet," said Gatalla, "there is time enough for that, but"

"You would not go away and leave me here alone," interrupted Valiska. "Oh, Gatalla, you could not be so cruel; you know you said you would take me home."

"Yes, but Maud has changed his mind; we start for Mexico to-morrow, and—"

"To-morrow, then all this story about the bell was an untruth!"

"Yes, I will know you would not come had I told you the truth, so I didn't think an innocent lie would do any harm; so I think so much of you my dear, I did not wish anyone else to witness my marriage, and—"

"You wretch," interrupted Valiska, "you base deceiver, you dare insult me thus and—"

"Don't rage, dear, it will do no good, I really like you; you are so truthful, so innocent. But time flies, I must prepare for my journey. Roy is here at your service and will take you back when you choose to go. I don't think I will see you again as we start early, so good-bye," and Gatalla, as she went to embrace Valiska.

"Don't dare to touch me," cried Valiska, springing away from her, "I would rather die in the streets than be seen with you, or your base, deceitful brother, again, for he aided you in committing this cruel fraud."

"But how will you get back to V——, unless you go with Roy?"

"Do not breathe his name to me again, I tell you. I would face death here alone in a strange place, rather than be seen in his company. Oh, God! why did You not strike me dead before it came to this," she moaned, as she left the room and went out into the hall of the hotel. She stood there alone for some moments trying to collect her thights and think of what she had done. She tried to pray to be directed, but she could not keep her mind on one thing long enough, so she went to her room, put on her hat and started out to walk—she did not know to where. On and on she went, her brain burning, a crimson flush suffusing her cheeks, when she thought of what was being said at home. Then she almost cried out in her misery

"Let me die, oh, God, let me die, I can't bear this humiliation. Oh, why do I live! Why does not the thought cut kill me!"

She wandered aimlessly until quite exhausted and blinded with tears she dropped down on the steps of an imposing stone edifice, and leaning her head on the top step above, burst into a fresh flood of tears.

"My God! angel must have brought me here, but I am not worthy to enter God's temple," she thought, "my brain is burning; I am going mad, sweet Mother, pity me," and from dire exhaustion she lost consciousness.

How long she lay on the church steps she did not know; but when she awoke she heard a familiar voice and opening her eyes saw an old Spaniard leaning over her, and exclaiming

"Madre santisima! es Valiska!"

In an instant she remembered her old friend.

"Oh, Don Francisco," she cried, "God has sent you to help me."

"But, Aqui mio, what has brought you here, and in such a plight?" and then with many tears she told him her story.

"Es muy malo," he whispered, "it is too bad, too bad! I did not stay in V——, Alma mia. If I had, this would not have happened."

"Oh, I know it; I would have been a better girl, for you and Dona Maria were always kind to me, and I should have listened to you and been saved from all this disgrace and misery. But tell me how it happened that I may pray to God for grace to repent and thank Him for sending me a deliverer, and then Don Francisco, you will take me home, will you not?"

"Patience, niea buena," said the old man, as he stroked her soft hair, "I will take you home, but come now, I will take you into the church."

She rose and followed him in. The holy calm about her, and the sweet face of the Madonna looking down at her, acted like a balm to her bruised spirit and spread the restfulness of her mind. So she knelt once more at the feet of her Lord and found peace and surcease from trouble.

Don Francisco seeing that it was nearly sunset, rose, and touching her on the shoulder, said: "Come, now, we will go to see my wife. You must take some rest and refreshment, and to-morrow, she and I will take you home."

"How can I thank you," said Valiska, as they walked along. "My more than friend, what would I have done without you?"

"Do not speak of it, querida dulce niea; I hope the will be a good lesson to you and that you will not be so careless again in choosing your company."

By this time they had arrived at his cottage. Senora Maria received Valiska with surprise and pleasure, but could not suppress her emotion when her husband told her story, for she knew the girl's proud nature, and feared that when she had to face gossiping comments, and perhaps, sneers of many at V——, it would be very hard for her to bear.

But Valiska was humbled very much and tears coursed slowly over the pale face, as she lay on the couch they had prepared for her and thought of her ruined reputation, for no persuasion could make her believe she had not lost her fair name for ever.

Next day, Don Francisco and his wife took her home, and after seeing her there safe once more, the good old couple made it their business to tell their friends the whole circumstance, so that Valiska's actions appeared not so black in the eyes of her former friends.

For days she stayed in the house and would see no one but her little friend Mike, who insisted on visiting her. She told him all her trouble with as much confidence as if he were older.

"I wish I'd my hands on the villians just now, I'd make them pay for ill treatin' you Oh, but if I ever meet that brother of hers, I'll dust his jacket for him, if I am able," said the pugnacious Mike.

"Mother would like to see you, I know, would you like to speak with her?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, child; I am lonely now. No one comes to see me though it seems I deserve to be shunned."

"Good-bye, then, I'll tell mother to come in the morning," said Mike, as he left her, for he was very quick-witted and thought his mother, with her kind, cheery way might be of some comfort to the girl.

The next day, Mrs. Malone went to see her, but the shock on Valiska's nervous system had been too much and she was so ill she could not rise. Mrs. Malone did all she could, but before night Valiska was raving in the delirium of fever, and for days knew nothing. Mrs Malone tended her with the kindness of a mother, and as soon as she grew strong again, Valiska told her all the story.

Mrs. Malone gradually drew her back into her old way of living, back to the God she had turned away from—and for what? For the smiles, the beautiful lips and the melting looks of a girl that had stooped her to deceration.

Many if her old friends passed her unnoticed, for they had heard that she was a close wing to her pride, for she, pretty Valiska had once been the pride of the town of V——. It was hard to be shunned by the only ones she had been treated with civility, and by those who had been proud to have her notice them at all. Many, when the death of the effair became known to all, they came to her with words of kindness and sympathy; but during this time it was a continual struggle to be what she should, in the sanctuary of her party, for she hated to be pitied almost as much as to be scorned, and she had hard battle to fight, but by perseverance and prayer she gained the victory at last and grew in goodness and strength.

And now would you know the heroine of my story? Should you choose to meet a pale, sweet-faced woman; living more out in the world than is its obtainable to the poor and sick, instructing the ignorant, and warning all of the dangers of bad company and of every uncontrolled passion, particularly pride, which so nearly caused her ruin, you may recognize the Valiska of this simple tale.

A Tragic Legend of the Giant's Causeway.

Hewing along from Dunfore Castle to the Giant's Causeway, we slowly sailed along with dykes, and pallors, and mossy banks. The ship's sides as we passed were lined perpendicular walls which sup rise the structions on either side, protrude to form the pillars of the Giant's Causeway, and the cost, and where they meet the sea, present a gigantic Gothic cathedral, with its lofty towers, there a stack of chimneys, and yonder a long roof, with a row of dormer, and a large hooked nose and a wide mouth, the whole forming a grotesque face, which, very like the latter basin of the moon. Thus, the ship sailed along, scarcely a sound to help from sides of the interest of the picture—the awake wrestling up from a hundred feet below, the cry of the sea bird beauty ordaining to rival the basalt columns, the sailors, who, above, were ascending the most perpendicular path, to the summit of the cliff, to lay down a rope help on their heads; they looked like ones ascending the stairs of a church, and the ascent must be enormous. Our guide told of a poor girl who was betrothed to one of the sailors, and how they were to be happy. In order to procure for themselves some little household stuff, and a few conveniences, wherewith to begin the world, they decided therefore, for a time to separate, here consecrated by love, so as to be in a short, very short time. Young William set out at sea in all weathers, and Peggy, though fair and delicate, carried, helped along her terrible path. One day, just as she had got to the steepest point of the peak, her strength failed her and down she came, the load to which she was tied hurrying her headlong down the steep, and the bottom poor Peggy was a mangled corpse.

The Nuptial Mass.

"Another Nuptial Mass! They must be coming into fashion," remarked Miss Mary Monroe to her Ma. "Ma, had always held in her secret soul that it was rather elegant to marry a Protestant, and I have no doubt but that the Pope, standing under a "wedding bell" of calla lilies, and the bridegroom and bride, kneel in quietly of a morning, at seven or eight o'clock, to a cold church, everybody in sober garments, the bride herself in a traveling dress, but she would appear in the morning with deacon and sub-deacon, the music of the choir, fresh-beauds and groomsmen, and the whole to go in a strange, yet very approved style, it was a different thing. It was a fashionable marriage, and Ma, for all, if the hinge turns the right way, we do not know what we may do. I am excited that our Miss —— And turned a little in her mind upon a very important subject.

"Sometimes our Catholics speak of a 'Nuptial Mass as a payment—a show. They know what great and holy ceremony is approved up in the Nuptial Mass, and when we come to a question of display, the evening memory, the crowded church, the crowded reception, the wedding supper, are merely on the side of display, far more than the solemnity of the Nuptial Mass and the wedding breakfast, while, when we look at the social bearings of such, we shall see how much is gained by the beautiful, impressive ceremonial of the Mass. In this time of diversion, when our Catholics are found to take advantage of the civil war, we cannot surround the marriage ceremony with too many holy and beautiful associations. This is no longer a "missionary country," and there are no excuses for depriving a holy rite of its attractive forms.

The Folly of Haste to be Rich.

Chancellor Howard Crosby, one of the best thinkers in New York, says of the Jews, that they are the number of the Person, which he says.

"The greatest need of our land to-day is an education away from the fearful danger of a hasty fortune, a hasty fortune, the quiet and improving arts, an encouragement of genial and honest lives, a preservation of home virtues, a teaching of the truth that moderation best serves the cause of happiness, and a demonstration that in helpfulness to others man best helps himself.

"While we have not the Jew to the support some of the worst features of the gold hunt, yet we have the jews, the school, and the church that we must look for the foundation of the power and influence which will meet and overcome the materialism which the prosaic conditions of our country have fostered, and which the thoughtless minds of our youths so readily accept. Contented minds are more conducive to happiness than riches, glory, or fame. In our Hitwork let us remember that it will profit us but little if we gain a world of wealth and lose contentment and happiness."

THE HORSE IN THE BIBLE.

No Description of his Color or Form.

Undoubted the first horse was brought by command into the Garden of Eden; unto my grandfather, that he might name him which I suppose he did at that time. This was done before Grandmother Eve had made her appearance in the garden, so we can say that the horse is older than one-half of us; or, he is younger than Grandfather Adam and older than Grandmother Eve. The first mention made of the horse is in the year 1491 B. C., and it was used in the year 1702 B. C., we find that the Egyptians had a considerable number of horses for hread. This is not only the first mention of a horse but it is as well the first record of a horse trade. Joseph gave bread in exchange for horses, as if in those days the Egyptians used meat for any now that it was also the first record of a raise made of a dear horse. Since that time there have been many raises made on horses with corresponding the same amount and number of depression. We again find that horses were getting too many, because Moses was commanded not to multiply horses unto himself, for it was spoken that the Lord had forbidden in his horsemen more than to God, and it would prevent the children of Israel from returning to Egypt. This is the interpretation given by Bishop Patrick and Kimhi in the sixteenth verse of the 17th chapter of Deuteronomy.

Solomon, as appears in the 26th verse, 4th chapter, first Kings, had 40,000 stalls of horses for his chariots, and 12,000 horsemen. I also find in the 2nd Chron., 9th chapter, 25th verse, that the number is stated at 4000. This is supposed to refer to the stalls for the horses, as the whole number Solomon violating the law of Deuteronomy, caused the Israelites to be sold into slavery for their sins, but merely as a necessary guard to his kingdom against the attacks of the Philistines. The 4000 horses brought out of Egypt, for which he paid 150 shekels of silver each, would amount to $35.75.

Into antiquity we see that we have no description of the form or color of horses, nor do we find any; but during the 1st Cor., given to color. "I saw by night and behold a man riding on a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees, where were the bottom, and behind him were there red horses speckled and white. Zech. 1st chap. 8th verse. And according to Rev., VI., 4, and behold a red horse, and power was given unto him to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another, and there was a white horse, and he that sat on it had a bow; and a crown was given unto him, and he went forth conquering and to conquer. Rev. 19th chap. 11 verse. And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse, and he that sat on him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. Verse 14th. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. Verse 19th. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. Verse 21st. And the rest were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh. Zech. 6th chap. 2 verse. In the first chariot were red horses, and in the second chariot were black horses. Verse 3rd. And the second chariot were black horses. Verse 6th. The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country; and the white go forth after them; and the grisled go forth toward the south country. Verse 7th. And the bay horses sought to go that they might walk to and fro through the earth. Verse 8th. Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold these that go forth into the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country. Verse 9th. The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Verse 10th. Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah, which are fallen unto them of Babylon. Verse 11th. Then take silver and gold, and make crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest. Verse 12th. And speak unto him, saying, Behold the man whose name is the Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord. Verse 13th. Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both. Verse 14th. And the crowns shall be unto Heldai, and unto Tobijah, and unto Jedaiah, and unto Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord. Verse 15th. And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord, and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. This shall come to pass, if ye diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God.

CONTEMPLATIVE ORDERS.

Their Value in the Church and the World.

It is an error, only too common amongst the Catholics of this country, to suppose that the contemplative and inactive orders have no place in the work and spirit of our holy Faith in this infidel land. They think because the holy women lead lives of prayer and penance, hidden from the eyes of the world, that they are to be adored by their own sanctification. Little do such know of the life of a Carmelite, a Franciscan, or a Dominican.

Abroad we see the Church carrying her mission of mercy, related by all, but all respect and love her. But higher reverence is still in for those consecrated souls, who in their convent chapels are heard but never seen. Their cloisters rise up about our cities as an impregnable barrier against Gods justice and sinful man. While legions of Christ's elect are at work and suffer in the plain below, these are on the Mount face to face with God, with pure hands uplifted in supplicant prayers and hearts burning before His tabernacle of love.

It is said of Saint Theresa, that she was made to suffer with every sinner's sin. As such is very nearly the end of those watching women, who bear up in their souls the burden of that cross though upon them lapses the sacrificial spirit of Christ's spouse. If God in His mercy would have spared the asked cup of old, if only one soul would be saved, how gladly we should all be willing to drink it.

Thousands of these cloistered nuns are found in the world—that all his relatives were dead, and that he was the last of his family, he, however, comes forward from dull obscurity and claims the estate. He does not out one has been able to find a reason, ship to the satisfaction of the Vice-Chancellor, who bear up in their souls the burden of the sins of the property by an official receiver in the Judgment in Chancery of the plaintiff—over £2000—there to await that doubtful relative who may never turn up.

Rome and Germany.

The Standard from Berlin says Italy has authorized to announce that the Emperor William will not visit Italy this year. He will remain in Germany the month of October, or to arrive in that sense to King Humbert's visit. The Emperor William visited the Vatican. Further, that the Emperor on receiving the Pope's letter, the Pope, the Prus ian Embassy to the Holy See, presented the Pope the Prussian Order of the Von Schlosser and Count Herbert Von Bismarck, and after the audience, the Pope, Count H. will remain some time in close private colloquy with his Holiness. The Emperor William's visit to Rome, the Pope the Imperial journey merely responsible to the Sovereign, and not to the Prussian Bismarck not deeming it advisable to deny the Italian Cabinet a satisfaction given to a nation which serves thus admirably the designs of the German policy, and they quietly state that the Count of Berlin expressly excludes from the visit of Emperor William any significance, which might in the slight degree be interpreted as offensive, not only to the Papal, but even to the sensibility of the Holy See. The visit has simply the character accruing to it from the usage and ceremonial of the Court of Germany, namely, a visit to allies, the country may be oriental at will to those Powers it desires filling, but it is never omitted in regard to Italy, Italy is an ally of both Austria and Germany, and as such has the right to all the consideration, which is due from the Emperor William, since the article proves that in the Eternal City the Pope is a thorn in the side of the Italian Government, and the apparent result of the African quarrel has been the re-opening of the Roman question in the columns of the French journals.

—Subscribers will please look at the date printed on their paper or wrapper, and if they find that their subscription has not been paid, will help the Monitor financially by remitting $1 00 promptly.

GILLIPPES ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
1020 POST ST.
PROF. De FILIPPE, graduate of the Academies of Paris and Madrid, continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by the easy, practical method, using months of study. "Conversation Spanish" and "Conversation French" are taught in a few lessons by the phenomenal success of the Professor. Free library and reading room for students. Apply from 10 to 11 a. m., 1 to 5 p. m.
Prof De Filippe's simplified new system of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the Spanish language, is the prescription for the sure mastery of all the Spanish verbs regular and irregular, conversations for every day use, pronunciation, idiomatic phrases, etc. Price $5 00. Sacramento Company, 121 Market St; price, $5 00.

CALIFORNIA'S CLARION CRY!
"Live and Let Live."
FRESH AND PALATABLE
GROCERIES
CONTRIBUTE MUCH TO THE HEALTH
AND HAPPINESS
Of Every Home.
Therefore Everybody Ought to know that
SBARBORO & CO.,
At their Old established place of Business,
531 Washington St.,
IS DECIDEDLY
THE CHEAPEST PLACE
IN SAN FRANCISCO
Where traders at the MONITOR sub-pen-chase the Best
FAMILY GROCERIES
AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES.
The Old House Still Stands
Where for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of Satisfied, Perfect and ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS
HAVE SAVED
Hundreds of Dollars Yearly
BY JUST KNOWING
Where to Buy their Groceries.
Remember—Therefore—that If you want
GENUINE COOD GROCERIES,
The proper place to purchase them is at
SBARBORO & CO'S.,
531 WASHINGTON STREET
[Between Montgomery and Sansome]
Compare these Prices
With any other House in the city, THEN CALL AND EXAMINE
OUR GOODS,
SUGARS
AND COFFEE
Greatly Reduced.
FRESH MEALS & MILL RATES.
16 pounds Tapioca, $1
16 pounds Sago, $1
20 pounds Codfish, $1
14 pounds German Prunes, $1
10 pounds Dried Pears, $1
Star Ground Coffee, 20-25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug) 50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea, 40 and 50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea, 25c per lb
5-gallon can Banner Coal Oil, $1.00
50 lb. sack Salt 35c
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs, $1.75
20 pounds Canary Seed, $1
Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.
And all other Goods Equal ly Cheap.
WINES AND LIQUORS
Claret, Zinfandel, 7 gallon, from.....50 to 75c
Claret, French, 7 gallon.....$1 00
Sherry, Old, 7 gallon.....$1 00
Port, Old, 7 gallon.....$1 00
Old Home Brandy, 7 gallon.....$4 00
Old Home Bourbon, 7 gallon.....$4 00
Jamaica Rum, 7 gallon.....$4 00
Jamaica Rum, 7 gallon.....$4 00
All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge
Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.
Country Produce Exchanged!
SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST
SBARBORO & CO.
R. SBARBORO, Manager

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1888.

THE TRUTH AT LAST.

Proof that Hefner Intended to Kill His Prisoners.

We duly the Government, and Mr. Hallour Bar of all Mr. Hefner's, Yiern Call, the latter, which Mr W. J. Lane, M. P., has addressed to the Press Parliamentarian explanation of Dr. Ridley's suicide. "I have not a doubt in my mind, my worthy friend, "that the unfortunate gentleman committed self-destruction rather than face the ordeal of admitting that he allowed himself to be bullied by Dr. Bar and the Prison Board into punishing John Mandeville so severely." And he gives reasons for his positive opinion. He was a Conservative politician of the most simple and simple-minded kind, and his experience in office was limited to no other than the Mount face to face with Hefner, with pure hands uplifted in supplicant prayers and hearts burning before His tabernacle of love.

It is said of Saint Theresa, that she was made to suffer with every sinner's sin. As such is very nearly the end of those watching women, who bear up in their souls the burden of that cross though upon them lapses the sacrificial spirit of Christ's spouse. If God in His mercy would have spared the asked cup of old, if only one soul would be saved, how gladly we should all be willing to drink it.

Thousands of these cloistered nuns are found in the world—that all his relatives were dead, and that he was the last of his family, he, however, comes forward from dull obscurity and claims the estate. He does not out one has been able to find a reason, ship to the satisfaction of the Vice-Chancellor, who bear up in their souls the burden of the sins of the property by an official receiver in the Judgment in Chancery of the plaintiff—over £2000—there to await that doubtful relative who may never turn up.

Rome and Germany.

The Standard from Berlin says Italy has authorized to announce that the Emperor William will not visit Italy this year. He will remain in Germany the month of October, or to arrive in that sense to King Humbert's visit. The Emperor William visited the Vatican. Further, that the Emperor on receiving the Pope's letter, the Pope, the Prus ian Embassy to the Holy See, presented the Pope the Prussian Order of the Von Schlosser and Count Herbert Von Bismarck, and after the audience, the Pope, Count H. will remain some time in close private colloquy with his Holiness. The Emperor William's visit to Rome, the Pope the Imperial journey merely responsible to the Sovereign, and not to the Prussian Bismarck not deeming it advisable to deny the Italian Cabinet a satisfaction given to a nation which serves thus admirably the designs of the German policy, and they quietly state that the Count of Berlin expressly excludes from the visit of Emperor William any significance, which might in the slight degree be interpreted as offensive, not only to the Papal, but even to the sensibility of the Holy See. The visit has simply the character accruing to it from the usage and ceremonial of the Court of Germany, namely, a visit to allies, the country may be oriental at will to those Powers it desires filling, but it is never omitted in regard to Italy, Italy is an ally of both Austria and Germany, and as such has the right to all the consideration, which is due from the Emperor William, since the article proves that in the Eternal City the Pope is a thorn in the side of the Italian Government, and the apparent result of the African quarrel has been the re-opening of the Roman question in the columns of the French journals.

—Subscribers will please look at the date printed on their paper or wrapper, and if they find that their subscription has not been paid, will help the Monitor financially by remitting $1 00 promptly.

GILLIPPES ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
1020 POST ST.
PROF. De FILIPPE, graduate of the Academies of Paris and Madrid, continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by the easy, practical method, using months of study. "Conversation Spanish" and "Conversation French" are taught in a few lessons by the phenomenal success of the Professor. Free library and reading room for students. Apply from 10 to 11 a. m., 1 to 5 p. m.
Prof De Filippe's simplified new system of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the Spanish language, is the prescription for the sure mastery of all the Spanish verbs regular and irregular, conversations for every day use, pronunciation, idiomatic phrases, etc. Price $5 00. Sacramento Company, 121 Market St; price, $5 00.

BLESSED DE LA SALLE.

Another Cure Through His Intercession.

Last month a boy named Joseph Capelle, aged ten years, of the Christian Brothers' School of Narbonne, France, was the object of a singular grace. He was playing in a house in a garden, when he was struck from a second floor window, leaving the wound of thirteen to the street, he rushed through the window to see what was going on below. In his hurry he lost his balance, and fell headlong into the street. The poor child was taken up quite unconscious, and in a dangerous condition. Dr. Bertrand was hurriedly called, but it seemed that he would be unable to do anything for the poor child. The doctor was immediately summoned, and declared the case hopeless. Violent hemorrhages took place through the ears, and fever set in with such intensity that there was little hope of the child's life. Until again the next morning, he replied that his case would be useless as the patient could not live through the night.

Two or three hours after the accident, the community of Christian Brothers were informed of the two Religious hastened to the house of the distressed family and gave them a picture of the Blessed de la Salle with a relic to be placed on the dying child's breast. The following day about noon they repeated their visit. This time they also had come that Mass might be said, and, through his servant, obtained the same relic. The Mass was said, the family and the parents weeping beside the bed, as their son had already departed, they were expecting his last sigh. The Religious then asked and obtained the permission of the sorrowing father and mother, and urged them to make a vow given to the Venerable Blessed de la Salle, if he would cure their child

THE MONITOR.
FORTY-FIRST YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1888.

PASTORAL

OF—

ST. REV. P. MANGUE, D. D.

To the Rev. Clergy and to the People of the

DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:—

A Decree "Indulentia Ecclesiæ Aerebitrisbus," issued by the Sacred Congregation of Rites on the 5th of last month, Feast of Sancta Maria ad Nives, and just received, prescribes the same devotions for this coming October as for that month in preceding years. The Feast on Rosary Sunday is to be celebrated with the usual solemnity. Though the instructions, prescriptions and indulgences are fresh in your memory, still I shall briefly mention them here:

1. Five decades at least of the Rosary and the Litany of Loretto to be recited every day from the 1st of October to the 2nd of November, in all parochial churches.

2. The same devotions to be carried out in other churches and in oratories dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, in accordance with such arrangements as the Ordinary may be pleased to arrange.

3. It is highly desirable that Mass should be said, or Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament given in connection with those devotional exercises.

4. A Plenary Indulgence is granted to all the faithful who confess and communicate on the Feast of the Holy Rosary, or (if hindered from doing so on the feast itself), within the octave, and visit a church, and there pray for the wants of the Church according to the intentions of the Pope.

5. Indulgences of seven years and seven quarantines for joining within this month in the public recitation of the Rosary in a church, praying, as above, for the intentions of the Pope.

6. Persons joining in the public recitation of the Rosary and Litany in a church on ten days of this month of October, as also persons, who being legitimately hindered from joining in the public recitation in church, perform the exercises in private at home, for ten days, and confess and communicate and pray, as above, for the intentions of the Pope, gain a Plenary Indulgence.

✠ P. MANGUE,
Bishop of Sacramento.

Sacramento, Sept. 25, 1888.

A Malignant Sneer from the "Morning Call."

There must be some elements of Puritanical prejudice as well as of Republican and Irish bigotry, ever present in the literary department of the Morning Call at least in greater frequency with which the readers of that otherwise readable daily are regaled with assaults on the Catholic Church and sneers at the Irish people, in the columns of our Montgomery street contemporary.

Judging from the number of letters received at this office, the Call of Monday has aroused the antagonism of many of its subscribers in consequence of a bitter and unmanly sneer at the Irish people which was printed in connection with the ordination of four Dominican Priests on last Sunday. Alluding to the fact that both the candidates for Holy Orders were natives of California, the Call added this grossly insulting addendum:

"Co-incident to the Priesthood of natives of the State are of rare occurrence, the raw material being furnished from abroad, namely from Ireland."

The Call, it is very evident, has no love for "the raw material," which comes "mainly from Ireland," and yet, were it not for "the small ads." and the subscription of that same "raw material" which came to this city "mainly from Ireland," this city would have no Morning Call within its boundaries to fling such an insult into the faces of the very people who have filled the coffers of the Call with their hard-earned coin.

Perhaps in these days of its prosperity and Puritanical hatred of all things Irish, the Call conveniently forgets that since its birth, a large proportion of its support has come from that very class who gave to the Church of God the best and bravest Catholic Priests that ever preached Christ crucified on the Pacific Coast.

What the Call spitefully styles "the raw material imported from Ireland" among the Priesthood of this whole coast, have left a noble record behind them for those "native born" neophytes who come after them. Nearly every Catholic church on this coast has been erected by the zeal, enterprise and self-sacrificing labor of that very "raw material" which (thank God!) came "mainly from Ireland." The people, too, who helped to build and support the grand churches erected for God's worship, belonged also to the same "raw material" which has aroused the malignant bigotry of the Call and caused it to give a snake-like sting to the very element in this community which it should be most careful not to needlessly offend.

A retraction of the vile insult, or the discharge of the anti-Irish writer who perpetrated it, if they are kept in order, and if neither event occurs, we will be unwillingly compelled to rank the Call among the other sheets "no Irish need apply" newspapers on this coast.

Solemn Commemoration of the Souls of the Faithful.

Notice was given in all the churches last Sunday that by extraordinary dispensation and by decree of our Holy Father, Leo XIII., Sunday next, September 30th, will be consecrated to the redemption of the Holy Souls. All the Masses celebrated on that day will be Requiem Masses. All altars will be privileged. All the faithful may gain a plenary indulgence on the usual conditions. It is always "a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead," but we believe this extraordinary commemoration will evoke an extraordinary manifestation of Catholic Faith.

"Remember Me, at least You My Friends."

Christian faith reaches us that there are three separate congregations of souls in the Catholic Church which are linked by the imperishable chain of holy prayer and good works. These are, the Church militant on earth, the Church Suffering in Purgatory and the Church Triumphant in Heaven. These three conditions are one in the Communion of Saints, and united they form one Church of Christ.

The Church Militant on earth comprises those happy mortals among the human family Christ who are fighting against Satan and all his wiles, and the world and all its vanities, in order to save their souls. The Church Suffering in Purgatory comprises those souls that are confined therein until they have paid the penalty of such sins as might have adhered their purity at death, and which have kept them from enjoying that happy heavenly home wherein nothing defiled can enter. The Church Triumphant comprises those happy souls that have fought the good fight, that have "kept the faith," and have thus been called to enter "into the joy of the Lord."

On next Sunday the whole universal Church of God will put on mourning and sing Requiem for the repose of her suffering children. What a sublime spectacle in the sight of angels and men! Nearly three hundred millions of people in every portion of the world, appealing to God for mercy in every tongue spoken upon the face of the globe! In Ireland and Ireland, in America and Arabia, in Great Britain and in Hungary, in the Holy Land and in Hindostan, in the islands of the Pacific, in Dark Africa and in Persia; along the banks of the Ganges and by the Gulf of Mexico, along the shores of the Mediterranean and on the banks of the Danube; throughout the vast expanse of Australia and among the tribes of Africa—wherever the Cross has been raised by the Catholic missionary—there upon the altar erected for the true worship of the God of Mercy, will be offered the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for the release from Purgatory of every soul confined therein! What a subject for Catholic contemplation, and what a celestial thought to emanate from the supernaturally-enlightened mind of our great, grand and glorious Pontiff, Leo XIII.

A Universal Mass of Requiem will be celebrated next Sunday, commencing as the sun rises above the horizon in the far East, kissing with its new born beams the snow-clad hills of Siberia, and ending only when the orb of day begins to sink to rest in the waters that lave the verdant banks of the beautiful isle of the Western world!

What Catholic so callous, so inhuman even, as to refuse to aid his prayers for the suffering souls of his departed friends with those of the whole Church of God on such a solemn occasion? The holy suffering souls cry out in these anguish to their living friends: "Pray for me, at least you my friends, because the hand of the Lord has touched me." And who is a hard-hearted parody when it comes from those whom we loved in life and whom we should never forget in death?

Let us most earnestly appeal, therefore, to every Catholic beneath whose vision these lines may fall, to make a special profession and then receive Holy Communion on next Sunday for the souls of their friends and relatives as well as for the souls of the faithful departed. "Ask and you shall receive," says our Blessed Redeemer, and what we ask for the poor suffering souls, we will receive back in spiritual and temporal blessings fully ten hundred thousand fold.

Dr. Dorchester's Denial.

We are glad to be able to announce that at least one Protestant preacher has published a denial of the falsehoods which he circulated against the Catholic Church. Our readers will remember that in our issue of August 23rd last, we carried down upon us a bad book recently issued by Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D. D., in which he calumniated Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia, by charging him with having given utterance to sentiments which that Prelate never entertained in his mind, much less gave expression to. Dr. Dorchester, it appears, however, has more Christian justice in his soul than most Protestant preachers, and when he read the foreign and irrelevant matter which was published on Archbishop Ryan's behalf, he very honorably published the following and in the Christian Advocate of New York City:

I desire to say, to whom it may concern, that the foot-note at the bottom of pp. 180, 181, my late book, "Christianity in the United States," should not have referred to Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia. The editor of the Critic Quarterly Review of that city says he has personally conferred with Archbishop Ryan in regard to it, and he denies ever having uttered or written what is there ascribed to him. I had seen the passage in quite a large number of periodicals of high standing, and in such connection as to leave no room for doubt, I supposed, I was in fact, I believe, entirely justified in so doing. After I had cautiously hesitated and left it out of the MS., I finally inserted it. I have written to Archbishop Ryan, assuring him of my regret at the mistake. The allusion to him has been cut out of the plates, and will not appear in future editions. I am always glad to make correction. DANIEL DORCHESTER.

Wilmington, Mass., September 7.

We hope this simple act of restitution will induce the many Methodist and other preachers whom the MONITOR has so often convicted of uttering anti-Catholic calumnies, to place themselves right before God and their fellow-men by denying over their own signatures the many false, foul and faith-destroying assertions which they have uttered in the past, and also induce them to refrain from such unchristian conduct in the future. We thank Dr. Dorchester for the good example he has thus given his brethren of the gospel sects.

—Several subscribers have sent us a fifty-account of the libertine life of a priest in Buenos Ayres shipped from a local daily paper that seems to delight in publishing such sensational scandals. We have read the horrible connection and pronounce it false from beginning to end. It will take several weeks to learn the truth concerning this story, but we are confident that its fact misrepresentation will soon in the course of time, and when it does the MONITOR will gladly print the refutation.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BILLS.

Instructive Evidence of their Fraudulent Character—An Analysis of the Text of Both—Revelations Proving their Fictitious Origin—New Light on the Great Forgery of the Twelfth Century.

Now that we have presented our readers with a case which we think proves good cheer, by and conclusively demonstrating the spurious character of the Adrian and Alexander Bills, let us ignore those documents themselves in evidence, carefully analyze their contents, and thereby add additional strength to the proof already adduced against the possibility of their ever having emanated from the Popes of Rome whose names they bear.

Before doing this, however, there are a few matters of general interest concerning those documents, the knowledge of which will give our readers a fuller insight into the fact that both the Adrian and Alexander Bills were forged by one and the same person. This assertion is borne out by the following somewhat singular coincidences when it is known that there are sixteen years between the dates of them.

Both Bills are similar in title, and both omit the name of the person to whom they were supposed to be addressed. Both Bills were issued at a period had neither place, date nor year to designate the city from which they were promulgated, the time of their publication, or the name of the person for whom they were intended.

Both Bills mention the "Peter-pence collection," although the Adrian Bill is supposed to be sixteen years older than the Alexander fabrication, and it would require very strong credulity to believe that Pope Alexander would reiterate the "Peter-pence collection" in a Bull issued 16 years after Pope Adrian had given out that no cent had ever been paid in response to a Bull supposed to have been issued some where about the years 1154, 1155 or 1156 by Pope Adrian the Fourth.

If th Bulls manifest a most malignant hatred towards the ever-faithful Catholic people of Ireland, a hatred which could never have lodged in the mind of any Prelate who ever held the supremacy of the Chair of Christ. These spurious documents, issued in the twelfth century, speak precisely in the same strain of slander concerning the "ignorance," "rudeness," "vicissitudes," and "disobedience to laws" of the Irish people, as the London Times and all the other Irish hating newspapers of England and elsewhere have constantly employed in portraying the "difficulty which they experienced in the way of "setting the Irish question" during the past eighty eight years.

The tone of both these Bulls is thoroughly anti-Catholic and British, and although Pope Adrian can be accused of being an Englishman, no such charge can be brought against Pope Alexander, yet the hatred of the Catholic people of Ireland which the Bulls evince, more resembles the venom of fiend than the denunciations fulminated in the fraudulent document attributed to Pope Adrian IV.

In addition to the anti-Papal tone of these documents, as well as the omission of any reference to Constance, without which, no papal diplomacy can be considered complete or possessed of official ecclesiastical authority, we also desire to call the attention of our readers to the fact that in the Ballinrobe Rosmovian the volume which contains the Bulls of Pope Adrian IV. is not only the volume issued by the different Popes—but also such as may have been attributed to them—where we speak of twenty documents which we will now proceed to classify in order to show that the spurious Bull by which King Henry and his successors on the English throne laid claim to Ireland, was fabricated deliberately for the purpose of making a false claim to that island.

From the volume of the Ballinrobe Rosmovian under examination we glean the following very important evidence.

If the genuine Bull attributed to Pope Adrian IV. give the years and the date of the month, in which they were issued.

[The spurious Bull is without both].

If the genuine Bull was addressed to any king been issued from some certain city or place, such as Rome, Castellum Civitas, Civita Vecchia, Benevento, Anterm, &c.

Is the doubtful "donation" Bull is entirely defective in this record?

All the genuine Bulls bear the proper official attestation of their ecclesiastical character thus:

Given at St. Peter's, Rome, by the hands of Roland, Cardinal Priest and Chancellor of the Holy Roman Church, on the 7th of the kalends of March, in the 3d indiction, 1153th year since the Incarnation of the Lord, and in the first year of the Pontificate of our Lord Pope Adrian IV.

Given at Civita Vecchia by the hands of Roland, Cardinal Priest and Chancellor of the Holy Roman Church, in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord 1155, 5th indiction, 3d of the month of October, and second year of our Lord Pope Adrian IV.

[The fictitious "donation" document, fraudulently connected and forged by order of King Henry II. of England, contains no name whatever of Cardinal or Chancellor, no date, no month, no place, and no allusion to the year of its issuance or the era of the Pontificate of any Pope that ever succeeded St. Peter!]

All the genuine Bulls have the names of the individuals to whom they are addressed set forth in full after those forms.

"Adrian, Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his venerable Brother Hugar, Patriarch of Grados, to his Canonical successors for ever."

"Adrian, Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to his beloved Son Aimar, Archpriest of the Church of Bellunes, and to his brothers, present and to come, to be substituted according to the Canons for ever."

[The bogus Bull connected by King Henry II. of England, omits entirely to name "the beloved son" to whom the spurious document was supposed to have been addressed.]

All the genuine Bulls, with the exception of four, are not only signed by Pope Adrian IV., but are also attested by several of the Cardinals as well. Some of the Consistorial Bulls have the names of 84 Cardinals attached and others are signed by fourteen Cardinals. The Bulls signed only by the Pope conclude thus:

"I, Adrian, Bishop of the Catholic Church, have subscribed." Then follows the Pope's seal, and on the back the seal reads: "Hon Ad. IV."

[The bogus Bull King Henry connected has neither the Pontifical signature nor the Cardinal's signatures, but does not fail to have ever attached huge and special names or from any particular place.]

Among the documents in the Ballinrobe Rosmovian, the editor of the edition of 1730 introduces a letter supposed to have emanated from Pope Adrian IV., to some English King, no name of and British monarch being given. The compiler of those extraordinary documents is careful, however, to cast off all responsibility for the genuineness of this document from his own shoulders, by prefacing a footnote to the page on which the spurious document is printed, in which he says that it is given only on the authority of the Salafeyg Gioffre Vossius, and the unreliable Matthew of Paris. The document in question is the bogus Bull whose defects and omissions we have already carefully defined and exposed.

Let us now turn to another volume, namely the Patrologia Cursus Completus, as may be constituted two hundred and forty-seven documents which are attributed to Pope Adrian IV., some of them are fragments, and all are papers of transcendent importance, the originals of which it was not necessary to preserve, whereas the so called "Bull," which we have now under consideration, was King Henry's title-deed to an estate in Ireland.

It is also to be remarked that in each and every one of those documents (with the exception of the unauthenticated document called "Donation" Bull), we find an intelligible, legal statement of the subject matter, with the proper names, titles and addresses of the persons referred.

The libraries and archives of Italy, Germany, France, Spain, England, Scotland, Poland and Greece, in fact of every the Christian country, except Ireland, have delivered up their evidence to the active and powerful administration of Pope Adrian IV. for insertion in this work, and each document, whether complete or mutilated bears the stamp of that jealous defender of the established rights of the Church which is seen in so marked a manner in all the writings of this Pontiff, and in all of which the Papal Bull fabricated by King Henry's order forms such a marked contrast.

Leaving aside and entirely out of consideration, however, any of the foregoing documents, we find in the volume of genuine character of the Adrian and Alexander Bulls, let us call the attention of our readers to the following facts:

Every one of those documents, which has ever been adduced that these Popes ever issued those documents! Never. What Cardinal or Roman Chancellor ever attested to those so called documents? Not one. What Irish Prelate have adduced these documents? Not one. What Irish Prelate have adduced these documents? Not one. What Irish Prelate have adduced these documents? Not one. No person could rely upon his word or place any confidence where in his promises. He justified his natural passion for duplicity by the maxim that in order to carry out his nefarious designs it was lawful to break his word and sully his honor than to fail in reaching the goal of his ambition.

This double-dealing and chicanery was so marked a trait in King Henry's character that Cardinal Vitalon—who knew him intimately and long—pays him this test very flattering compliment: "I have never met a man for so unfaithfully." "His anger was that of a mad man; his fury that of a wild beast." The other royal traits of Henry's character have already been well described in these columns, so now we will again turn to the forged document itself.

Having now given our readers a general insight into some of the fatal defects of the Adrian Bill, we shall now go right home and rest our case, as we have already adduced evidence sufficient to prove to every intelligent and impartial reader that Pope Adrian never saw or heard of such a document as that forged and fraudulently circulated by certain disreputable hirelings of the second King Henry of England. But in order that not a loop-hole may be left wherein any cautious anti-Catholic article of this forum can hang a doubt, we will now place this spurious document on the Monitor's dissecting table and dissect it for the edification of our readers.

THE MOUNTED ADRIAN BULL

as copied from Cambrensis by the historian Leland, then being the original copy of this document.

* Vol. 180 ff.f.-XXXVIII.
† Opp. V p. 304.
‡ Epist. St. Thomas, B.6. : Epist. 66, 175, Peter de Blois.

"Ireland's History of Ireland, Vol. I., p. 8.

"Adrian, Bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his dearest son in Christ, the illustrious King of England, greeting, and apostolic benediction.

It will be observed that this Bull is addressed to no person in particular. "The king of England" is an unreasoning title when the Pope calls his correspondent "his dearest Son in Christ," as, in the twelfth century, it took a couple of months to travel from Rome to the remotest Christian country for whom the Bull was intended, might die while the Bull was in course of preparation and transmission, and another king or queen even, might ascend the English throne in the interval.

It would be far too wise to risk the occurrence of any such misapprehension of so important a document as a genuine Bull, by omitting the name of the individual in whose interest or for whose information, guidance or instruction, it may have been promulgated. Hence, even in the very inauspicious passage of the spurious document under consideration, there occurs to more than one, of itself, furnishes sufficient evidence that the forged document which was first published by the untruthful Canbrensis, came from an evil source, was manufactured for a most sinister purpose, and was never suggested, accepted, signed, sealed or delivered by the Pope who resigned in the See of St. Peter under the pontifical name of Adrian IV.

THIRD PARAGRAPH IN THE ORIGINAL BULL

"Wherefore, dearest son in Christ, we have resolved the design of propagating your glorious renown on earth, and sculptures the kingdom of heaven, and we consider it, as also, a Catholic prince, you are intentioning the bridling of the Christ teachers and the reformation of the Christian faith to the Lord and rule, exterminating the rude and barbarous nations, and the plant of the virtuous reception of this purpose, requiring the counsel and favor of a pious prince, we have to answer your deliberation, and the course the direction of your procedure, by the pleasing hinder work, and to your prince, with the assistance of the Lord; as all things are most known to a prince, and to the Christian faith the beginning from the author of faith and the love of religion.

The document from which the foregoing extract is made was supposed to have been issued in the year 1154 A.D. or so. But we ask that it was written in 1156, long after the year after Henry became King, and during which time he did nothing of a beneficial nature that would entitle him to receive a Papal document of such a character. Later on in the reign of King Henry, when he had invaded Ireland and had defeated the Irish princes in Munster, he might have made bold in saying that King Henry had gained "glorious renown," but at the period when this document was said to have been issued by Pope Adrian in allusion to that English monarch even as long as two years after his conquest of the Island Divine.

THE MOUNTED ADRIAN BULL

as copied from Cambrensis by the historian Leland, then being the original copy of this document.

* Vol. 180 ff.f.-XXXVIII.
† Opp. V p. 304.
‡ Epist. St. Thomas, B.6. : Epist. 66, 175, Peter de Blois.

assume that any living man's salvation is in any way, even though that man be a King of England.

Had that alone been the fact, that Invading Ireland—even for the purpose of reforming the ignorance and rudeness of the Irish people—was a sin, yet towards completing King Henry's "reward" in Heaven, the Pope would, in his prayer, God never blessed impostor, nor does the Catholic Church canonize those who perpetrate it. Hence, we find that the Pope only asserted the sanity character of Henry, and claimed that his mission of Ireland would "enlarge the kingdom of heaven" of eternal happiness, he disclosed the design of King Henry's emancipation beneath the cloak of some pretended official of the Vatican.

King Henry, we are plainly told in the genuine document, intended to invade Irish land, was "intent on extending the borders of the Church" in Ireland, and that the Pope, "knowing you, the Adrian knew full well that the forger that only that the Catholic Church occupied all Ireland; but Hildebrand was still a Roman Pontiff and never raised its hideous head in that veritable holy island; and the Vicar of Christ had hundreds of papal emissaries in Ireland, who, if the Pope could tell him with truth that Ireland's heart beat constantly in unison with that of the Vicar of Christ and that the Irish people were "Catholic to the core," and that in the reign of Pope Adrian IV., Ireland was the daughter and Rome the Mother, just as that the lovely band of Catholic missionaries is today under the glorious Pontificate of Pope Leo XIII. No Adrian has ever separated Ireland from Rome. The golden chain of Catholic Faith whose first link was forged by St. Patrick, on Tara's historic hill, has been growing link by link, as centuries have rolled on, until, at the present day, the chain of filial love and Catholic faith not only binds Rome to Ireland, but binds also the children of millions of those Irish exiles, their children and their children's children, who dwell in every continent of the old and on every island throughout the universe.

There never has been a time, therefore, when any Pope could justly commission licentious layman with a wife and an illegitimate child, known as Fair Rosamond, to go over to Ireland to "enlarge the borders of the Church" that was already universal on the island, or to "exterminate the roots of vice from the field of the Lord" where no vice or weed existed, and of honey or Pentecostal ever prospered!

What "vices" did Henry discover in Ireland which he found it necessary to exterminate? In answering this question it is worth while to quote a few of the most vicious English historians and Irish writers under English pay, set forth as so many Popes speak of the character of Irish people. It was only in 1152—four years before the Adrian Bill—that Pope Eugenius III., had visited Ireland. Three thousand ecclesiastics assembled by his direction in the town of Drogheda. "Four Pallionus were conferred on the Archbishops of Armagh, Cashel, Dublin and Tuam; the celebration of Easter was settled in accordance with the Pontiff's desire, and all the affairs of the Church in Ireland were most amicably arranged to the entire satisfaction of both the Papal Legate and the three thousand Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and the great body of the Regular and Secular Clergy who met on that memorable occasion."

As we believe, therefore, that no four short years, the successor of Pope Eugenius III. could write to an English layman of licentious character and tell him that "the Church" in Ireland needed "enlarging," or that it was necessary for a layman to go over to Ireland in order to "teach the truth of the Catholic faith" in a land not one fifth of the size of California, in which there were three thousand Catholic ecclesiastics, and each of them complete religious harmony with the Vicar of Christ in Rome?

When our Blessed Redeemer selected his Apostles they were laymen, but before he set them to "teach all nations," He filled them with the graces of the Holy Ghost and consecrated them specially to His service. And again, when Pope Celestine selected St. Patrick to be the Apostle of Ireland he consecrated him a Bishop. Yet in the face of these prominent precedents, we are asked to believe that Pope Adrian selected a layman of loose morals and lax religious fervor, to "enlarge" the Catholic Church in a land where it was universally and "teach the true faith" to people whose fellow countrymen had helped to bear the Cross into the one true fold of Christ! These Bulls were issued by Popes in a superfluously ridiculous proposition as that Pope "convert" Ireland, are merely the dregs of an Irish slander, or their mission to Ireland and the Catholic Church combined.

So far from the Church in Ireland needing "reforming" in the year 1156, there was not a single Bishop in the island who was not a Roman in heart and in religious fervor organized. The Archbishop of Armagh had two Suffragan Bishops under him, the Archbishop of Dublin had five Bishops of Cashel had seven, and the Archbishopric of Tuam had seven Suffragan Christian dignitaries; Dudoral of Lismore was Papal Legate, and the saintly Gelasius, subsequently canonized, was Primate, and in every particular that Ireland of the time was the Ireland of today, the Ireland of Ireland, the Ireland of Ireland, the Ireland of Ireland

Farm and Home.

DON BOSCO'S ADVICE.

A Certain Way to Have Our's Requests Granted.

The following very remarkable advice is taken from a letter from Don Bosco to a religious of the Salesian Congregation. It is dated December 8th, 1887 (Feast of the Immaculate Conception) less than two months before his lamented death. This letter may be regarded as a sort of spiritual testament of the holy priest:

"When one earnestly wishes to obtain a grace from God through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin or some other saint, it is usual to say: 'If this favor be granted, I will make such and such an offering, or give such an alms.' Far preferable and more efficacious would it prove to give it forthwith what we intend to offer in thanksgiving, for thus by our confidence we oblige, as it were, Almighty God, our Blessed Lady, and the saints to listen favorably and to grant our petitions. We thus fulfil the precept of Christ: Date, et dabitur nobis—'Give, and it shall be given to you.' Our Divine Saviour does not say, 'Promise to give and you shall receive,' but 'give first, and then you shall receive.'"

Those who are acquainted with Don Bosco's life are aware of the many examples furnished of the efficacy of this beautiful exercise of confidence in almighty God.

Buy a Piece of Land.

Buy you a small piece of from five to forty acres, according to your means. Do not spend all the money you have for land and home and farm. Buy a couple of hundred Leghorn hens, treat them well and let them produce your living the first year. With eggs at never less than twenty cents a dozen, and at times forty five they will do that and a little over and over on the question. Take a set season set out an acre of strawberries and blackberries. The next spring they will bring you in a profit, if not a profit then a better living than your hens are giving you. Keep setting the balance of your land as your means will permit, with peaches, apples, pears, plums, apricots, nectarines, almonds, grapes, etc., according to your choice, and which at the third to the fifth year will begin to bring in a revenue. Do not let up on the scores that brings you in your living—the hens and the small fruits—but rather pay them more attention, and when you see large fruit comes in bearing it will be the source of one profit that enables you to beautify your home and add other material improvement that constitutes happiness in life. When your large fruit comes in bearing, if it is of the best quality, will net you no less than $50 per acre, and from that up to $250 and $300. In itself or little less acres one can get will be a bonanza and you will feel as independent as a railroad president.

Punctuality.

When eight Quaker ladies had an appointment and seven were punctual, and one eighth, being a quarter of an hour late, began apologizing for keeping the rest waiting! The reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thou should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour; but thou hadst no right to waste one hour and seven quarters more of our time, which is the joint property of us seven." And of Washington it is said that when his secretary, on some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying that his watch was slow, the reply was: "You will have to get another watch, or I another secretary." No person need to say to his matchless "Von may ask anything of me but time." And of John Quincy Adams it is said that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker: "It is time to call the House to order," the reply was, "Sir, Mr. Adams is not in his seat." And while they were yet speaking, Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

Letter-Writing.

Good letter writing is a gift which is very unequally divided. It is a pain and a penance to some, and a delight to others. Letter-writing is a valuable gift, and a great economizer. A detailed letter is priceless to the receiver, and such letters cannot be composed without approximately; not of writing model letters, but of frequent correspondence. There is no sickness as real as carelessness in neglecting letters. Letters are to the absent the great pleasures, and always there is at most pleasure and profit, so much of the real sentiment of friendship, in letter-writing that, it seems a pity, in these days of great progress, to throw aside these opportunities, and seem down to step dead notes and postal cards.

Wealth.

What is Wealth? Is it hordes of treasure or bales filled to overflowing with corn and good earth's increase? Is it great blocks of houses and stores crammed from cellar to roof with goodly merchandise? Is it land stretching away for as the eye can see, or sheep, or cattle, or ground nuts? Rather is it not the sweet home-life, a tranquil mind, good conscience, the ability to look over the past without remorse, to face the hour which is fast coming to us all without fear?

Knowledge Box.

—People rheumatically inclined should eat celery freely.

—To fumigate a house, burn in it sulphur of tar, then whitewash and paint.

—Put a little common salt into your lamps—the oil will burn more brightly and last longer.

—A spoonful of strong vinegar in a kettle of hot lard will prevent doughnuts from soaking fat. Do not have the kettle too full.

—To boil potatoes successfully, when the skin breaks pour off the water, and let them finish cooking in their own steam.

—When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk or water is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

—Some years ago, in Philadelphia, there was an old Irishman who made a great many cures of the rheumatism by the following process: "Make a poultice of strong mustard mixed with garlic, vinegar, and a few crumbs of bread or meat. Go to bed, have plenty of clothes over you to induce perspiration, and have this poultice placed, about a quarter of an inch thick, close to the bottom of your feet (on cloth be sure feet and poultice), keep it on for ten or fifteen hours, then take off the poultice and the cure is complete." Get one ounce of iodide of potassia, put it in a quart bottle of soft water, and take for a dose two thirds of a common size wine glass three times in a day, half an hour before meals. Avoid strong drink and gross diet. Should the glands of your neck get sore, you must reduce the dose. You must take regular rest, and take four bottles of the medicine before you stop, and then quit it for two weeks. Then take two bottles more, which will in all probability complete the cure. You must keep your bowels open. I advise all rheumatics to try the prolific first, and, if it fails to effect a cure, then to try the recipe which cured Mr. Howell of Louisville, Ky., a gentleman well known and highly respected in that city.

Family Fun.

She Wouldn't Open Her Mouth

Two distinguished citizens of Vermont engaged in a little fisticuffs the other day, and a reporter of one of the daily papers was sent to interview a lady who chanced to witness the affair from her porch. The reporter found her anxious to report about the affair. He led seven rotc at ladies before, however, and did not give up in despair, as some men might have done when the lady declared that she would "open her mouth about the matter."

"That is right," said the reporter, blandly. "Right by that. Mr. one has a perfect right to do what you don't want to."

"I know that," said the lady, "and I'm not going to mix myself up in a little disagreement between my neighbors. Both of the gentlemen are neighbors and friends of mine, and I would n't for the world say a word against either of them, for one was just as much to blame as the other, as far as I could see, and I was the whole affair from beginning to end, and could tell every word that was said if I wanted to. But I have nothing to say about it and that's the end of it.

"That is right," the wily reporter said, "I admire your discretion and your fidelity to your friends.

"Well, if I do say it myself, I'm a woman that can hold my tongue when I want to. No one has me saw the affay, and I don't ever to speak of it. I'd be ashamed to tell that two such prominent men as Major Dilley and Captain Barker fell out over a bet they made at the 4th of July races. The Major said that Westwood won the race fairly, and Captain Barker said the other horse won, and that was all there was to it. I did not hear that two friends of mine called each other all kinds of frightful names, and that the major hit the captain with his cane, and that they clinched then and rolled over and over on the ground and swore awfully. I've simply nothing to say about it. It would simply be wrong, I know, if I told that he fired 'nuff first, and Captain Barker's wife is too good a friend of mine for me to tell how she ran and hung onto her husband, and swore at him. No, sir! I don't want to tell it, I'm up on the scores that brings you in your living—the hens and the small fruits—but rather pay them more attention, and when the large fruit comes in bearing it will be the source of one profit that enables you to beautify your home and add other material improvement that constitutes happiness in life. When your large fruit comes in bearing, if it is of the best quality, will net you no less than $50 per acre, and from that up to $250 and $300. In itself or little less acres one can get will be a bonanza and you will feel as independent as a railroad president.

Punctuality.

When eight Quaker ladies had an appointment and seven were punctual, and one eighth, being a quarter of an hour late, began apologizing for keeping the rest waiting! The reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thou should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour; but thou hadst no right to waste one hour and seven quarters more of our time, which is the joint property of us seven." And of Washington it is said that when his secretary, on some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying that his watch was slow, the reply was: "You will have to get another watch, or I another secretary." No person need to say to his matchless "Von may ask anything of me but time." And of John Quincy Adams it is said that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker: "It is time to call the House to order," the reply was, "Sir, Mr. Adams is not in his seat." And while they were yet speaking, Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

Letter-Writing.

Good letter writing is a gift which is very unequally divided. It is a pain and a penance to some, and a delight to others. Letter-writing is a valuable gift, and a great economizer. A detailed letter is priceless to the receiver, and such letters cannot be composed without approximately; not of writing model letters, but of frequent correspondence. There is no sickness as real as carelessness in neglecting letters. Letters are to the absent the great pleasures, and always there is at most pleasure and profit, so much of the real sentiment of friendship, in letter-writing that, it seems a pity, in these days of great progress, to throw aside these opportunities, and seem down to step dead notes and postal cards.

Wealth.

What is Wealth? Is it hordes of treasure or bales filled to overflowing with corn and good earth's increase? Is it great blocks of houses and stores crammed from cellar to roof with goodly merchandise? Is it land stretching away for as the eye can see, or sheep, or cattle, or ground nuts? Rather is it not the sweet home-life, a tranquil mind, good conscience, the ability to look over the past without remorse, to face the hour which is fast coming to us all without fear?

Knowledge Box.

—Pe ople rheumatically inclined should eat celery freely.

—To fumigate a house, burn in it sulphur of tar, then whitewash and paint.

—Put a little common salt into your lamps—the oil will burn more brightly and last longer.

—A spoonful of strong vinegar in a kettle of hot lard will prevent doughnuts from soaking fat. Do not have the kettle too full.

—To boil potatoes successfully, when the skin breaks pour off the water, and let them finish cooking in their own steam.

—When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk or water is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

—Some years ago, in Philadelphia, there was an old Irishman who made a great many cures of the rheumatism by the following process: "Make a poultice of strong mustard mixed with garlic, vinegar, and a few crumbs of bread or meat. Go to bed, have plenty of clothes over you to induce perspiration, and have this poultice placed, about a quarter of an inch thick, close to the bottom of your feet (on cloth be sure feet and poultice), keep it on for ten or fifteen hours, then take off the poultice and the cure is complete." Get one ounce of iodide of potassia, put it in a quart bottle of soft water, and take for a dose two thirds of a common size wine glass three times in a day, half an hour before meals. Avoid strong drink and gross diet. Should the glands of your neck get sore, you must reduce the dose. You must take regular rest, and take four bottles of the medicine before you stop, and then quit it for two weeks. Then take two bottles more, which will in all probability complete the cure. You must keep your bowels open. I advise all rheumatics to try the prolific first, and, if it fails to effect a cure, then to try the recipe which cured Mr. Howell of Louisville, Ky., a gentleman well known and highly respected in that city.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW AND GOOD BOOKS.

Complete Ascetical Works of St. Alphonsus de Liguori Vols 10 each!
The True Spouse of Jesus Christ. The Fond Mother, Uncle Sam's Pet, The Last Rich Uncle, Aspirants and various Small Works. Spirit and Letters. Illus. cloth. $0.50 Elements of Ecclesiastical Law. By Rt. R. R. Smith, O. S. B. Ecclesiastical Tribunals. Just ready. 8vo, cloth, net $3.50
"That is right," said the reporter, blandly. "Right by that. No one has a perfect right to do what you don't want to."
"I know that," said the lady, "and I'm not going to mix myself up in a little disagreement between my neighbors. Both of the gentlemen are neighbors and friends of mine, and I would n't for the world say a word against either of them, for one was just as much to blame as the other, as far as I could see, and I was the whole affair from beginning to end, and could tell every word that was said if I wanted to. But I have nothing to say about it and that's the end of it.
"That is right," the wily reporter said, "I admire your discretion and your fidelity to your friends.
"Well, if I do say it myself, I'm a woman that can hold my tongue when I want to. No one has me saw the affay, and I don't ever to speak of it. I'd be ashamed to tell that two such prominent men as Major Dilley and Captain Barker fell out over a bet they made at the 4th of July races. The Major said that Westwood won the race fairly, and Captain Barker said the other horse won, and that was all there was to it. I did not hear that two friends of mine called each other all kinds of frightful names, and that the major hit the captain with his cane, and that they clinched then and rolled over and over on the ground and swore awfully. I've simply nothing to say about it. It would simply be wrong, I know, if I told that he fired 'nuff first, and Captain Barker's wife is too good a friend of mine for me to tell how she ran and hung onto her husband, and swore at him. No, sir! I don't want to tell it, I'm up on the scores that brings you in your living—the hens and the small fruits—but rather pay them more attention, and when the large fruit comes in bearing it will be the source of one profit that enables you to beautify your home and add other material improvement that constitutes happiness in life. When your large fruit comes in bearing, if it is of the best quality, will net you no less than $50 per acre, and from that up to $250 and $300. In itself or little less acres one can get will be a bonanza and you will feel as independent as a railroad president.

Punctuality.

When eight Quaker ladies had an appointment and seven were punctual, and one eighth, being a quarter of an hour late, began apologizing for keeping the rest waiting! The reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thou should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour; but thou hadst no right to waste one hour and seven quarters more of our time, which is the joint property of us seven." And of Washington it is said that when his secretary, on some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying that his watch was slow, the reply was: "You will have to get another watch, or I another secretary." No person need to say to his matchless "Von may ask anything of me but time." And of John Quincy Adams it is said that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker: "It is time to call the House to order," the reply was, "Sir, Mr. Adams is not in his seat." And while they were yet speaking, Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

Letter-Writing.

Good letter writing is a gift which is very unequally divided. It is a pain and a penance to some, and a delight to others. Letter-writing is a valuable gift, and a great economizer. A detailed letter is priceless to the receiver, and such letters cannot be composed without approximately; not of writing model letters, but of frequent correspondence. There is no sickness as real as carelessness in neglecting letters. Letters are to the absent the great pleasures, and always there is at most pleasure and profit, so much of the real sentiment of friendship, in letter-writing that, it seems a pity, in these days of great progress, to throw aside these opportunities, and seem down to step dead notes and postal cards.

Wealth.

What is Wealth? Is it hordes of treasure or bales filled to overflowing with corn and good earth's increase? Is it great blocks of houses and stores crammed from cellar to roof with goodly merchandise? Is it land stretching away for as the eye can see, or sheep, or cattle, or ground nuts? Rather is it not the sweet home-life, a tranquil mind, good conscience, the ability to look over the past without remorse, to face the hour which is fast coming to us all without fear?

Knowledge Box.

—Pe ople rheumatically inclined should eat celery freely.

—To fumigate a house, burn in it sulphur of tar, then whitewash and paint.

—Put a little common salt into your lamps—the oil will burn more brightly and last longer.

—A spoonful of strong vinegar in a kettle of hot lard will prevent doughnuts from soaking fat. Do not have the kettle too full.

—To boil potatoes successfully, when the skin breaks pour off the water, and let them finish cooking in their own steam.

—When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk or water is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

—Some years ago, in Philadelphia, there was an old Irishman who made a great many cures of the rheumatism by the following process: "Make a poultice of strong mustard mixed with garlic, vinegar, and a few crumbs of bread or meat. Go to bed, have plenty of clothes over you to induce perspiration, and have this poultice placed, about a quarter of an inch thick, close to the bottom of your feet (on cloth be sure feet and poultice), keep it on for ten or fifteen hours, then take off the poultice and the cure is complete." Get one ounce of iodide of potassia, put it in a quart bottle of soft water, and take for a dose two thirds of a common size wine glass three times in a day, half an hour before meals. Avoid strong drink and gross diet. Should the glands of your neck get sore, you must reduce the dose. You must take regular rest, and take four bottles of the medicine before you stop, and then quit it for two weeks. Then take two bottles more, which will in all probability complete the cure. You must keep your bowels open. I advise all rheumatics to try the prolific first, and, if it fails to effect a cure, then to try the recipe which cured Mr. Howell of Louisville, Ky., a gentleman well known and highly respected in that city.

Family Fun.

She Wouldn't Open Her Mouth

Two distinguished citizens of Vermont engaged in a little fisticuffs the other day, and a reporter of one of the daily papers was sent to interview a lady who chanced to witness the affair from her porch. The reporter found her anxious to report about the affair. He led seven rotc at ladies before, however, and did not give up in despair, as some men might have done when the lady declared that she would "open her mouth about the matter."

"That is right," said the reporter, blandly. "Right by that. No one has a perfect right to do what you don't want to."

"I know that," said the lady, "and I'm not going to mix myself up in a little disagreement between my neighbors. Both of the gentlemen are neighbors and friends of mine, and I would n't for the world say a word against either of them, for one was just as much to blame as the other, as far as I could see, and I was the whole affair from beginning to end, and could tell every word that was said if I wanted to. But I have nothing to say about it and that's the end of it.

"That is right," the wily reporter said, "I admire your discretion and your fidelity to your friends.

"Well, if I do say it myself, I'm a woman that can hold my tongue when I want to. No one has me saw the affay, and I don't ever to speak of it. I'd be ashamed to tell that two such prominent men as Major Dilley and Captain Barker fell out over a bet they made at the 4th of July races. The Major said that Westwood won the race fairly, and Captain Barker said the other horse won, and that was all there was to it. I did not hear that two friends of mine called each other all kinds of frightful names, and that the major hit the captain with his cane, and that they clinched then and rolled over and over on the ground and swore awfully. I've simply nothing to say about it. It would simply be wrong, I know, if I told that he fired 'nuff first, and Captain Barker's wife is too good a friend of mine for me to tell how she ran and hung onto her husband, and swore at him. No, sir! I don't want to tell it, I'm up on the scores that brings you in your living—the hens and the small fruits—but rather pay them more attention, and when the large fruit comes in bearing it will be the source of one profit that enables you to beautify your home and add other material improvement that constitutes happiness in life. When your large fruit comes in bearing, if it is of the best quality, will net you no less than $50 per acre, and from that up to $250 and $300. In itself or little less acres one can get will be a bonanza and you will feel as independent as a railroad president.

Punctuality.

When eight Quaker ladies had an appointment and seven were punctual, and one eighth, being a quarter of an hour late, began apologizing for keeping the rest waiting! The reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thou should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour; but thou hadst no right to waste one hour and seven quarters more of our time, which is the joint property of us seven." And of Washington it is said that when his secretary, on some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying that his watch was slow, the reply was: "You will have to get another watch, or I another secretary." No person need to say to his matchless "Von may ask anything of me but time." And of John Quincy Adams it is said that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker: "It is time to call the House to order," the reply was, "Sir, Mr. Adams is not in his seat." And while they were yet speaking, Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

Letter-Writing.

Good letter writing is a gift which is very unequally divided. It is a pain and a penance to some, and a delight to others. Letter-writing is a valuable gift, and a great economizer. A detailed letter is priceless to the receiver, and such letters cannot be composed without approximately; not of writing model letters, but of frequent correspondence. There is no sickness as real as carelessness in neglecting letters. Letters are to the absent the great pleasures, and always there is at most pleasure and profit, so much of the real sentiment of friendship, in letter-writing that, it seems a pity, in these days of great progress, to throw aside these opportunities, and seem down to step dead notes and postal cards.

Wealth.

What is Wealth? Is it hordes of treasure or bales filled to overflowing with corn and good earth's increase? Is it great blocks of houses and stores crammed from cellar to roof with goodly merchandise? Is it land stretching away for as the eye can see, or sheep, or cattle, or ground nuts? Rather is it not the sweet home-life, a tranquil mind, good conscience, the ability to look over the past without remorse, to face the hour which is fast coming to us all without fear?

Knowledge Box.

—Pe ople rheumatically inclined should eat celery freely.

—To fumigate a house, burn in it sulphur of tar, then whitewash and paint.

—Put a little common salt into your lamps—the oil will burn more brightly and last longer.

—A spoonful of strong vinegar in a kettle of hot lard will prevent doughnuts from soaking fat. Do not have the kettle too full.

—To boil potatoes successfully, when the skin breaks pour off the water, and let them finish cooking in their own steam.

—When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk or water is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

—Some years ago, in Philadelphia, there was an old Irishman who made a great many cures of the rheumatism by the following process: "Make a poultice of strong mustard mixed with garlic, vinegar, and a few crumbs of bread or meat. Go to bed, have plenty of clothes over you to induce perspiration, and have this poultice placed, about a quarter of an inch thick, close to the bottom of your feet (on cloth be sure feet and poultice), keep it on for ten or fifteen hours, then take off the poultice and the cure is complete." Get one ounce of iodide of potassia, put it in a quart bottle of soft water, and take for a dose two thirds of a common size wine glass three times in a day, half an hour before meals. Avoid strong drink and gross diet. Should the glands of your neck get sore, you must reduce the dose. You must take regular rest, and take four bottles of the medicine before you stop, and then quit it for two weeks. Then take two bottles more, which will in all probability complete the cure. You must keep your bowels open. I advise all rheumatics to try the prolific first, and, if it fails to effect a cure, then to try the recipe which cured Mr. Howell of Louisville, Ky., a gentleman well known and highly respected in that city.

Our Young Folks.

[NOTE—Short, original contributions of merit will be accepted for this department.

Young people are invited to contribute to this department. Write on one side of the paper only, write pen and ink, and in a legible manner.]

HESTER'S NEED.

An Interesting Story of Patience, Perseverance and Reward.

(Written for the Monitor by "Alicante.")

"The first thing I had better do is give my cooking when I am eating," thought Hester Harris as she laid down the paper with resolution and proceeded with a grave face to finish her breakfast. The children had at last all come to school, and there was enough to occupy the busy mind and fit the tired, dark eyes to the disorderly room in the daily surfeit of news.

Crinkly rippings on the table was a bad case of backsliding, and the brush, its trusty companion, was on the floor beside the grate, a table near the window was strewn with brushes, towels and soap. Hester Gray was responsible for the blocking, he never could be made to put his things away, and the girls had been lax and threw every thing their mother touched down in their way. Maggie had stirred too much bread for the sake of having the lunch basket, and had spilled it on the table, and Hester's spoil my work. They don't know how hard it is and they don't care." Tears thought almost a prayer, but she was never given to sentiment.

Hester Gray was different from her, and yet not all she was desired, and was growing nearly as exacting as her little sister. Hester had spent at neatness in a skirt that had the shapelessness appearance of once belonging to a man dress, and a jacket that was not great fit. Her hair, which was fairly lovely, its gleam of gold being careful brushing, and also gently supply tools with a bit of straying was the pale grey, for the sake of convenience was gathered in a knot.

Hester was early, but had formed a habit of not taking her breakfast until children had gone to school. Then she and pursue the morning paper and sip up coffee and have a quiet hour before she about her work, for my Hester is not an invalid, she has a vein of a certain sort of dainty indolence in her character, and once she is quiet and cramped in her seat find it out of in the sunshine of her life. She generally must be up at her meals alone, or with a book open on a convenient, and did her work in a hurried manner. This the principal point of life is necessary to the development of Hester, she has need of suffering and trouble, and the full force of her character is not yet shown, it is in the daring pride from her eyes and in them inward on herself in humility.

Hester was not pretty, but there was a lovely face and thinking. "I don't know this fancy I am about to say, but I feel and sure it is true, that I am trying to make the girls careful and to be their good and truthful."

"I suppose it's somebody wanting mending," exclaimed Mrs. Harris in an impatient, working voice from the table, as she was combing her hair, "and instead of you very fine the morning, pinning, trying just because I am a little cross, I am a little rest at my sister's. I have not time, my lady, I've seen how disorderly you can be.

Yes, I am not trying to keep you in line, Hester and diligently, "but I think you make the children mind better."

"Hester, I'm sick of this! Mend for me in the morning, and with a shudder of sing and disgust at having spoken, Hester rushed her cap down and began to wrap the things. Her hot step mother command and Hester knew one could keep on.

"Tell me how next you can make the when yours left alone. He's her you have to be well get along."

Hester looked at the sunny woman, whose look and rambling speech she was so fond of, but for whom her quiet scorn was really at the least intimation of either would have been surprised had you spoken of her to patience or respect for Mrs.

"If I could be alone—with the children I would not be afraid to try," said in a low tone.

And is it me, with my hands full of than I can attend to, that you are the fault with!" cried her step-mother fiery; "me that washed and mended and tried to keep you and I only had you a little high help that couldn't shake. All that you can do, Hester, is work! I keep you if we didn't."

"It is drink," she mused sadness, "it is bear the bill is for; and the children enjoyed and slowly, and me too shabby to be seen on the street.

When she got up stairs a new spirit had taken possession of Hester. She emptied the baby with a concentrated anger that baked ill for whoever crossin her way. She was too ill to work, why should she try? She got down for a while at the window, and from over the great hills, kissed by the pale, fitful sunlight and through the rain-sweet air, from the rich meadow and violet clouds, came to Hester Harris a message, and with a sincere purpose in her heart, and with innocent, pathetic ignorance she said aloud, evenly.

"All my life, this little I am, injudged to temperament. To the children who need me, to myself, to women."

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

A Smart Girl.

Vaccination days began morning along when one fine morning a spunky little ten-year-old came to her parents to inform, and the seventh time, her certificate showing that she was perfect in all her studies except the ability of the life they were living, the whole figured up to 99.7 10, and as she was considered perfect and received a very complimentary informement from her teacher. The little girl was proud, and her mother was proud, and her father said that she was a pretty good girl, and he hoped she would do better next time. As he was going out, the little girl said "I know of a little girl who got something because she passed." "Is that so?" said the father, "What did she get?" "She got some money." "How much did she get?" "Six cents." This was taken by the stern parent as a pretty strong hint, so he plucked down a bit dollar and called it square.

BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS.

(Contributed to the Monitor by a Catholic child eight years old.)

Flowers are the most beautiful things God made. Some are very big and some are very small. It is the emblem of purity, humility, and virtue. Its leaves are extended to greet the morning sun. The rose, on the contrary, is the emblem of beauty, pride, and pleasures. You see a full blown rose. It towers with majestic grace and loveliness above all the other flowers which surround it, so it is called the queen of flowers. Earth would be a dull place without flowers.

You enter into a room which has in it early lattery which money can procure, but which is entirely devoid of flowers. Even though it is adorned nearly only, it lacks that air and comfort which is seen in every happy household, thus evening it is assume an air of desolation. You enter another room which is nearly as lavishly furnished. Every nook in which the eye may lay upon to fall is occupied with some sort of article, thus giving it that appearance of a bazaar.

There was once a man who was an infidel, and who for some crime or another had been sent to prison. He had said that he never believed in God or the Bible. He was in his cell one day when a little boy came to him and wanted to hear the word of God, so all had been of no avail.

Monday while he was seated in his cell he heard a little boy sing a hymn. The boy did he heard that little plant with the most tender care, until, one morning, when happy household, thus tender care, he found He was transported with joy, for the fragile blossom had proved to be a modest little violet, suddenly the thought entered him where did the violet proceed from, that who planted it there? His heart answered, God. A terrible office was going on in his heart. Was there a God? An inward voice that came from his soul answered, yes. Suddenly he threw himself down on his knees, clasped his hands in prayer, and the words came as if by magic from his lips "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ."

He had not noticed that the door was opened from behind and that a priest had entered. The force that was turned to him was not the face he was wont to greet, a hard set face, the face that greeted him now was the face of one who had given up the world, it was a sad, contrite face, with some unknown joy stamped on it. The priest, who was a good man, in a moment's chance, took the opportunity and began talking about religion, but at that moment he was stunned to the man who had once been his friend, who had turned from all the churches which believe in God to choose the Roman Catholic Church. The priest sank on his knees and prayed in thanks and adoration to God. But it had proved too much for the prisoner, he had fainted from joy and fear.

A Priest was hastily summoned and the prisoner, after being been baptized and receiving the Holy Sacraments, died a good death.

And all this was the work of only one little flower.

Gentlemen—If you get my coat done by Saturday I shall be forever indebted to you. Tailor—Oh, if that's your game I won't be disappointed.

IRISH LANGUAGE DEPARTMENT.

(The subscribers, either expiring in this department are intended by the different members of the Irish Class, and are of whom know the original this years ago. They are in the early learner, especially by those who have been in Irish schools, the methods of difficulties, not engaged in the most multitude of the Irish language, and in a grammatical construction of it is fully equal to, but much simpler than, the Irish of Lady, being the Home as reflected language.)

Ar Fhoscadh Gaeilge d'ghnáthaigh, bunaidh ag an Ghaeilge, ní hiad Gaeilge ach do ní ná ní ná ní ná seek to know what was and is Christianity before and outside of the written books; and we have the—as it is evidence for the oral tradition of the Faith as we have for the New Testament itself. Both alike were in the custody of the Church; both are derived to us by the same witness and on the same evidence. To reject either, is logically to reject both. Happily men are not saved by logic, but by faith. The millions of souls in all ages have believed by inheritance of truth all ages have believed and delivered to them. Divinely guarded and delivered to them. They have no need of logical analysis. They have believed from their childhood. Neither children nor those who infantilise are particular are logicians. It is the penance of the drunkard and the unbeliever to regain by toil his lost inheritance. It is a hard penance, like the suffering of those who eternally debate on "predestination, free will, late."

CARDINAL MANNING.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

BETWEEN THE DEATH OF ST. JOHN and the martyr-bishop of St. Irenæus fifty years elapsed. St. Polycarp was disciple of St. John, St. Irenæus was a disciple of St. Polycarp. The mind of St. John and the mind of St. Irenæus had only one interpretation, one intelligence, in contact with each. It would be an affectation of minute criticism to treat the doctrine of St. Irenæus as a departure from the doctrine of St. Polycarp, or the doctrine of St. Polycarp as a departure from the doctrine of St. John. Moreover, St. Ignatius, the Church of Ephesus, and St. Irenæus was born in Asia Minor about the year 1 A. D. 120—that, twenty years after St. John's death, when the Church in Asia Minor was still full of the light of his teaching and spoke with his voice. Let have known the way of life myself, with those through whom the Gospel came to us which, indeed, they then preached, but, afterwards, by the will of God, delivered to us in Scriptures, the future foundation and pillar of our Faith. It is not lawful to say that they preached before they had perfect knowledge, as some dare to affirm, boasting themselves to be reformers of the Apostles For after our Lord rose from the dead, and when they had been clothed with the power of the Holy Ghost, Who came upon them from on high, they were filled with all truths, and had knowledge that was perfect. In chapter ii. he adds that, "When they are refuted out of Scriptures, they turn and accuse the Scriptures as erroneous, unauthentic, and of various readings, so that the truth cannot be known by those who do not know tradition"—that is, the tradition "that when we challenge them to come to the tradition of the Apostles, which is in custody of the succession of Presbyters in the Church, they turn against tradition, saying that they are not only wiser than the Presbyters, but even the Apostles, and have found the truth. It therefore comes to pass that they will not agree either with the Scriptures or with tradition" (Ibid. c. iii.) "Therefore, all who desire to know the truth should look to the tradition of the Apostles, which is manifest in all the world and in all the Church. We are able to enumerate the Bishops who were instituted in the Church by the Apostles and their successors down to our day. They never taught nor know such things as those men usually assert. "But as it would be too long to enumerate such a list in consecutive succession of all the Churches, we point to the tradition of the greatest, most ancient Church, known to all, founded and constituted in Rome by the two glorious Apostles Peter and Paul, and to the faith announced to all men, coming down to our day through succession of Bishops, thereby confounding all those who, in any way, by self pleasing, or vain glory, or blindness, or an evil mind, teach as they ought not. For with this Church, by reason of its greater principality, it is necessary that all churches should agree; that is, the faithful, wherever they be, for in that Church the tradition of the Apostles has been preserved."

NO COMMENT NEED BE MADE on the words the "greater principality," which have been perverted by every anti-Catholic writer from the time they were written to this day. But if anyone will turn there him with the words of St. Paul to the Colossians (chap. i. 18), describing the primacy of the Head of the Church in heaven it will appear also at certain that the original Greek of St. Irenæus, which unfortunately lost, contained some word which signifies primacy. However this may be, St. Irenæus goes on: "The blessed Apostles, having founded and instructed the Church, gave it charge the Episcopate, for the administration of the service. Of this office Linus, of Paul, in his Epistle to Timothy, makes mention. To him succeeded Anacletus, and after him, the third place from the Apostles Clement received the Episcopate, he who saw the Apostles themselves and conferred with them, while as yet he had the preaching of the Apostles in his ears and the tradition before his eyes; and not he only, but many who had been taught by the Apostles. He then traces the succession of the Bishops of Rome to his own day, and adds: "This demonstration is complete to show that it is one and the same life giving faith which has been preserved in the Church from the Apostles until now, and is handed down in truth." "Digity was not only taught by the Apostles, and conversed with many of those who had seen our Lord, but he was also constituted by the Apostles in Asia to be Bishop in the Church of Smyrna. We also saw him in our early youth, for he lived long, and when very old departed from this life as most gloriously and nobly by martyrdom. He ever taught that what he had learned from the Apostles, and what the Church had delivered, those things only are true." In the fourth chapter,

ST. IRENÆUS GOES ON TO SAY:

"Since, then, there are such proofs (of the faith), the truth is no longer to be sought for among others, which it is easy to receive from the Church, forasmuch as the Apostles laid up all truth in fullness in a rich depository, that all who will may receive from it the water of life." "Hist what if the Apostles had left us no writings, would it not be fallow the order of tradition, which they gave in charge to those to whom they intrusted the Churches? To which order (of tradition) many barbarous nations yield assent, who believe in Christ without paper or ink, having salvation written by the Spirit in their hearts, and diligently holding the ancient tradition." In the twenty sixth chapter of the same book he says: "Wherefore, it is our duty to obey the Presbyters who are in the Church, who have succession from the Apostles, as we have already shown, who also with the succession of the Episcopate have the certain grace of truth, according to the Spirit."

I have quoted these passages at length, not so much as proofs of the Catholic Faith as to show the identity of the Church at its outset with the Church before our eyes at it is now, proving that the seeds has grown into its rest, or, if will will, the identity of the Church at this hour with the Church of the Apostolic mission. These passages show the Episcopate, its central principality, its succession, its custody of the faith, its subsequent recreation and guardianship of the Scriptures, its Divine tradition, and the charisms of Divine assistance by which its perpetuity is secured in the succession of the Apostles. This is almost verbatim, after eighteen hundred years, the decree of the Vatican Council. Verbatim et fere semper, Ecclesia Catholica.

ST. IRENÆUS DRAWS OUT IN FULL the Church of this day. He shows the parallel of the Church of Christ with the Church of the first Adam and the second, and of the analogy between the incarnation or nativity of Christ and the Church or mystical body of Christ. He says:

"Our faith we received from the Church, and guard it ever as an excellent deposit in a noble vessel, always full of youth, and making youthful the vessel itself in which it is. For this gift of God is intrusted to the Church, as the breath of life was originally to the first man, so that all, that all the members partaking of it might be quickened with life. And thus the communion with Christ is imparted, that is, the Holy Ghost, the earnest of incorruption, the confirmation of the faith, the way of ascent to God. For in the Church (St. Paul says) God placed Apostles, Prophets, Doctors, and all other operations of the Spirit, of which all the partakers who do not come to the Church thereby depriving themselves of life by a perverse mind and evil desires. For where the Church is, there is also the Spirit of God; and where the Spirit of God is, there is the Church and all grace. But the Spirit is truth. Where fore, they who do not partake of Him (the Spirit) and are in heresy and into life at the breast of the mother (the Church), do not receive of the pure and fountain which proceeds from the Body of Christ, but dig for themselves broken cisterns from the trenches of the earth, and poole from the putrid water, forasmuch they fly from the faith of the Church lest they be found." Again he says

"For Christ, scattered throughout all the world, even unto the ends of the earth, received from the Apostles and their disciples the faith in one God the Father Almighty, that made the heaven and the earth, the seas, and all things that are in them; Ac.

AT THEN AND THE PRESENT TIME the power of the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Coming of Him to raise all men, to judge men and angels, and to give sentence of condemnation or of life everlasting. How much soever the language may vary from other tongues, such is the substance of the Baptismal Creed. He then adds.

"The Church having received this preaching and this faith, as we have said before, although she be scattered abroad through the whole world, carefully preserves it, dwelling as in one habitation, and believes alike as to these (doctrines) as though she had one soul and the same heart, and it preaches, as though she had one mouth, proclaims and teaches and delivers onward these things And although there be many diverse languages in the world, yet the power of the tradition is one and the same. And neither do the Churches planted in Germany believe otherwise, or other wise believe—the Churches those in Iberia, nor among the Celtic tribes, nor those in the East, nor in Egypt, nor in Lybia, nor those that are planted in the mainland. But as the sun, which is God's creature, in all the world is one and the same, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and lightens all men that are willing to come to the knowledge of the truth. And neither will any of the Chief Rulers, though he be mighty in the utterance of truth, teach doctrines other than these (for none is above the master), nor will he that is weak in the utterance diminish from the tradition, for the faith being one and the same, he that is able to say much of it hath nothing over, and he that is able to say least hath no lack.

TO ST. IRENÆUS, THEN, the Church was "the irreducible witness of its own begotten." When did it cease so to be? It would be easy to multiply quotations from Tertullian (a. c. 200), from St. Cyprian A. 250, from St. Augustine and St. Optatus in a. 350, from St. Leo in a. 440, all of which are on the same unbroken lines of faith in a divine mission to the world and of a divine assistance in its discharge. But I refrain from doing so because I shall have to write not an article but a folio. Any Catholic theology will give the passages which are to the point, and any book look at the Lost Theologoed of Melchior Cano will suffice to show the continuity and identity of the witness of St. Irenæus, and the tradition of the Vatican Council, at which the universal episcopate declared the immutable faith and its own legation to continued. The world wide witness of the Catholic Church is a sufficient witness to prove the coming of the Incarnate Son to redeem mankind, and to return to His Father, it is also sufficient to prove the mission of the Holy Ghost to abide with its forever. The work of the Son in this world was accomplished by the Divine mission of the Holy three and thirty years of life, death, resurrection, and Ascension. The work of the Holy Ghost is perpetual, not only as the illuminator and Sanctifier of all who the Church, but also as the Life and Guide of the Church. It may do none less than the Founder of the Church. "It is expedient to you that I go: for if I go not, the Paraclete will not come to you, but if I go, I will send Him to you." "I will ask the Father, and He shall give you another Paraclete, that He may abide with you forever." "The Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not nor knoweth Him, but you shall know Him, because He shall abide with you and shall be in you."

IT IS THE SPIRIT IN THE SPIRITUAL PERSONAL Church as a body of which the Head is in heaven, and the Author of its indefectible life abiding in it as His temple. Therefore the words, "Hitherto ye knowing heaven Me." This could not be if the work of the Apostles had been only human. A Divine guidance was attached to the office of the Church of Christ. Weak are the judges of right and wrong, and teachers by virtue of their office, but it is the presence and guidance of the Spirit of Truth is as full at this day as when St. Irenæus wrote. As the Churches then were witnesses, judges, and teachers, so is the Church at this hour a world-wide witness, an universal judge and teacher, divinely guided and guarded in the truth. It is therefore not only a human and historical, but a Divine witness. This is the chief Divine truth which the last three hundred years have observed. Modern Christianity believes in the one advent of the Redeemer, and in the full and personal advent of the Holy Ghost. And yet the same reference Scriptures, ought as Christianity of reformers always returns to Judaism, because they reject the full, or do not believe the personal, advent of the Holy Ghost. They deny that there is an infallible teacher among men; and therefore they return to the types and shadows of the Law before the Incarnation, which, in fact, they not yet incarnate, and the Holy of Christ did not as yet exist.

BUT PERHAPS SOME ONE WILL SAY, "I admit your description of the Church as it is now and as it was in the days of St. Irenæus; but the eighteen hundred years of which you have said were years of error, declension, disorder, superstition, demoralisation." I will answer by a question, was not this foretold? Was not the Church to be a field of wheat and tares growing together till the harvest at the end of the world? There were Cathari of old, and Puritans since, impatient at the presence of evil in bearing with the perversions and corruptions of the human intellect and will. The Church, like its Head in heaven, is both human and divine. "He was crucified in weakness," the Church was "the irreducible witness of its own begotten." When did it cease so to be? It would be easy to multiply quotations from Tertullian in a. 200, from St. Cyprian A. 250, from St. Augustine and St. Optatus in a. 350, from St. Leo in a. 440, all of which are on the same unbroken lines of faith in a divine mission to the world and of a divine assistance in its discharge. But I refrain from doing so because I shall have to write not an article but a folio. Any Catholic theology will give the passages which are to the point, and any book look at the Lost Theologoed Melchior Cano will suffice to show the continuity and identity of the witness of St. Irenæus, and the tradition of the Vatican Council, at which the universal episcopate declared the immutable faith and its own legation to continued. The world wide witness of the Catholic Church is a sufficient witness to prove the coming of the Incarnate Son to redeem mankind, and to return to His Father, it is also sufficient to prove the mission of the Holy Ghost to abide with its forever. The work of the Son in this world was accomplished by the Divine mission of the Holy three and thirty years of life, death, resurrection, and Ascension. The work of the Holy Ghost is perpetual, not only as the illuminator and Sanctifier of all who the Church, but also as the Life and Guide of the Church. It may do none less than the Founder of the Church. "It is expedient to you that I go: for if I go not, the Paraclete will not come to you, but if I go, I will send Him to you." "I will ask the Father, and He shall give you another Paraclete, that He may abide with you forever." "The Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not nor knoweth Him, but you shall know Him, because He shall abide with you and shall be in you."

IT IS THE SPIRIT IN THE SPIRITUAL PERSONAL Church as a body of which the Head is in heaven, and the Author of its indefectible life abiding in it as His temple. Therefore the words, "Hitherto ye knowing heaven Me." This could not be if the work of the Apostles had been only human. A Divine guidance was attached to the office of the Church of Christ. Weak are the judges of right and wrong, and teachers by virtue of their office, but it is the presence and guidance of the Spirit of Truth is as full at this day as when St. Irenæus wrote. As the Churches then were witnesses, judges, and teachers, so is the Church at this hour a world-wide witness, an universal judge and teacher, divinely guided and guarded in the truth. It is therefore not only a human and historical, but a Divine witness. This is the chief Divine truth which the last three hundred years have observed. Modern Christianity believes in the one advent of the Redeemer, and in the full and personal advent of the Holy Ghost. And yet the same reference Scriptures ought as Christianity of reformers always returns to Judaism, because they reject the full, or do not believe the personal, advent of the Holy Ghost. They deny that there is an infallible teacher among men; and therefore they return to the types and shadows of the Law before the Incarnation, which, in fact, they not yet incarnate, and the Holy of Christ did not as yet exist.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.

On the 25th ult., the Cushendall branch of the railway in West Clare was opened for passenger traffic—so far, at least, Antrim has derived no benefit from the railway mania, nothing but injurious competition, causing heavy losses to the shareholders, to the neighborhood of Ballycastle, and to the public, and yet, in the end, no more. The extension of the line will confer a great boon on the people of the district, which is a thickly populated part of the country, and will offer special advantages to tourists visiting the beautiful glens and waterfalls of Glenariff at the end leading to which the terminus is situated. The extension of the line has been long expected, and will meet with general appreciation.

Clare.

Such a destructive deluge of rain has not been witnessed in West Clare for a number of years. Bury as was experienced on the night of the 25th ult., and the morning following, throughout the country generally, and large quantities of hay in meadows and tillage crops were damaged. In keeping with the prevailing wet weather, and another distinctive feature, the harvest is still falling. The rate and wheat are in some parts fully a week to ten days behind time. The amount of damage caused by the continual downpours is incalculable in the country, as testified by the various reports.

Cork.

An eviction scene in very rural circumstances took place in Dublinstown, Jaddy. A woman, Mrs. Cleary, and family were evicted from a farm of Mr. Morrissey residing in the townland, under the Ballyhea Estate, belonging to the Earl of Mr. Hickey held a farm of 26 acres from Mr. Morrissey, at a rent of £30 per annum. The tenant was in arrears, and the bailiff came to take the farm, with the rent of £7 and with the intention of evicting the family. Mr. Morrissey, Ballyhea, and then demanded rent from Mrs. Hickey for the use of the land she held. She refused, and he brought an ejectment against her. The case came on for the 4th, at police and he bailiff came to take possession of the farm, but the tenant refused to let him in, and Mr. Morrissey then offered to give the tenant the farm if she would give him £7 in lieu of the rent. The offer was refused by Mrs. Hickey and her mother-in-law, a poor widow, who lives in the adjoining cottage, and who shared her bitter fate with her neighbors. Morrissey now had a number of men and bailiffs and proceeded to the farm, and, in the presence of the people, put the family out on the road. The scene was very pathetic, the poor old grandmother, who is bedridden, being carried out on a bed and placed in the road, and the furniture was then thrown out, and left in a state of confusion. The bailiffs and men then left, and the people then carried back the furniture into the house. The people are very much excited over the affair, and it is the talk of the country. They say that Mr. Hickey is a good tenant, and that the rent was paid to the last farthing. The sympathy of the people is with the family, and they are very bitter against Mr. Morrissey. The people regard the action of Mr. Morrissey as a most unnecessary one, and they say that if he had waited a little longer he would have had the rent paid, and the farm would be free from any claim

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

AN IRISH SHAMROCK.

By one on the Island of our Motherland.

When the golden light of the Hesperian star
O'er the rolse grey, and the mountains gray,
Whose shades the exiles' hearts still owe;
Then the tender stems of this shamrock pressed
The sacred soil where our dear sires rest.

It has basked in the mists of her exalted sky,
It has quaffed the tearlike drops of dew,
Where the martyred children of Erin lie—
Her exiled heroes, her lovers, her true,
Who fell when her valleys grew red with blood,
Where our hardy kin "planted the famous stock."

I lean on my shamrock—a token dear;
And, lo! how its mystical leaves unfold
Loved memories bright of the fair so dear,
Fond dreams of her vanished age of gold,
Blest with hope for a dawning yet to be
When the land of our sires will be great and free

O beautiful emblem of deathless love!
Then symbol fair of the Tritons God;
What magic is thine the heart to move,
Bursting forth from the desert rock could bring
Whose touch from the desert rock could bring
The gladdening waves of a hidden spring.

Shamrock of Erin, ah! green and fair
In the heart of the exile thy memory dwells!
And a thought akin to a murmured prayer,
At the sight of thy green leaves surging swells.
From heart to lip, for the Old Land lost
Breathed by thy touch to his spirit's core.
Then, surging sweet of the Irish earth,
"From" a band of exiles" sent unto me,
All the consolatory thoughts that best called to birth
Of the beautiful emerald of the sea,
Merge into blessings upon his name,
From whom kindly hand sent the shamrock came.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

A WOODLAND RETREAT.

A REMINISCENCE.

At sunset hour I trod the wood
With eyes, where rolled the dewy tears—
My boyhood seat of solitude—
Where rocked with swift-departing fears,
Where yet unconscious of the joy
And sorrows deep—oh, been alloy!
That mingled with man's life on earth,
With silver tissue of laughing mirth,
I roamed the wood with sinless feet
To plunk bright flowers I knew I should not meet.

When roused the scarce of the gale,
I seemed to launch a heavy tree;
And breathless heard the embers fall,
Its wind voice mourned over me;
A ghostly tale it heavily told—
A mystic tale of the giants of old—
When armed with lance from sovereign and might,
With mine implacable as night,
They sworn to hail with flaming war
The rightful Lord from Heaven star.

When Eve with her attendant train—
As slowly descend the eye of day—
Mounted upon the hills and plain,
And linked each moment with colors gay;
Then then, wildest dreams with pensive thought,
Blended with bright joy, I sought
Oh, sacred hour! the paradise of childhood days,
The paradise of boyhood days,
And when known, sweet hours devotion, ways,
Then I could wonder, wonder, wonder why
I could not worship in my face,
And serve revile in my brake;
Yet still I tread the soil once plane,
And hymn the old songs o'er again.
O sacred days of heavenly bliss!
Aglow with joys, with sorrows few;
Will yet return? will joy once more
Upon my soul be pleasure pure?
Oh, yes! the bliss in childhood gives,
Is only found again in Heaven.

Thus shall never gray:
In hours of pause and trouble
As filled my childhood's days,
The world for never knows—
Though view it has grown—
Such joys as were mine of yore.

J. T. COTTHOUSER.

ACROSTIC.

To Ella Orme, The Most Rev. P. W. Riordan, Archbishop of San Francisco.

M est reversed, honored prelate of our land,
O rnate of God's unerring great command,
P ower is given against opposite to man,
T o touch like Heaven's supreme and mighty plan.

R ejoicement here, thy mission from above
E ndeavor thy mission to realize of Jubilee love,
V ner from the great Apostle fire,
E ternal glory, wreath of fame,
R ewarded in all the love the same hand,
E dowed with golden tongue and rapid speech;
N ever vary, nor sign, word or deed
D ivinity's command—help souls in need.

F ame and fond will, thy mission is this West,
A nd like our Master, rules the flock entrust;
F ending to our wants and the Gospel Truth,
S erving souls of God and unshrinking youth;
I nculcating love of Holy Mother
C hurch within our hearts, and lovefor each other,
S hed as that of dame or of brother.

W e love as dear as life thy noble name,

R ecommend our shelter Elva, and point the way
O ur daughter's home, the golden ray
O f Paradise, that gives eternal years
R ewed to all beyond this life of tears,
D elighted are the thoughts, the Heavenly dreams,
A ne, that rise and flow thy crystal stream
N or the souls wherein thy teachin brightly gleam.

A h, noble prelate, young and gifted Sire,
E ndeared by the love of Mystic Fire,
C ommune with Heaven, our petitions hear
H ence to the throne, and ask of God to share
B lessings with souls and Indian man below,
I ngraft every truth and seeds of love still sow;
S ecure our Holy cause, beloved of God,
H elp to allay affliction's rattling rod;
O h, teach us with thy voice of Heavenly love,
P ous sap blossoms 'till life's brief day is over.

O hearts God's law, in still fervent theme,
F or Heaven alone should be our constant dream;
O ceeds, thou pulpit, from our sanctuary night,
A nd ever rise thy voice to God in prayer,
F ever again to leave the paths of light.

F or thou prepare to Heaven's bright Throne shall thee
R epresents from all ate to yonder skies,
A nd ask we that thou be preserved to live
N ever vanquished, God's words of truth to give,
C omparable Bishop, Ireland's gifted son,
I llume our paths 'ill all our days are done,
S ustained our lives with true Religion's sway,
E ndeavor our home and lead the joyful way
O 'or the vast spheres to "Heaven's Eternal Day."

JOHN F. MCDONNELL.
Victoria City, Nev., Sept. 20, 1888.

Literary Miscellany.

Three Mysteries of the Sea.

"God's ways are full of mystery," and no one realizes the truth of the question more than the man who go down to sea in ships. My fifteenth birthday found me an orphan and a waif in the streets of New Orleans. I had run away from a farmer in Illinois, to whom I was bound, and by hook and crook had reached the great town on the Father of Waters. I had been living a precarious life for a month when the proprietor of an oyster house gave me a job. It was part of my work to open the oysters consumed in the place, and this portion was done in a little room just in the rear of some private stalls or compartments. The stalls fronted the public room, of course, and were intended for parties who desired privacy while eating a stew or drinking a glass of wine. I could hear all that was said in two of them, as the partitions were only cloth, but I had been in the place two weeks before anything of particular interest was dropped from either. One evening, while I was at my work, two men entered one of the stalls, ordered a stew, and drank a wine glass, and after lighting cigars, entered upon a conversation which at once attracted my attention.

"Well, have you got it all fixed?" asked one.

"Everything ship-shape and understood," replied the other.

"Sh! is insured!"

"Way up."

"And no suspicions?"

"Not a one."

"We take machinery to Rio Janeiro!"

"Yes. That and other stuff."

"And being back sugar and coffee?"

"Yes, if we return."

"What do we get?"

"Three thousand a piece."

"Well, I don't like it, but I'm in with you. She's to go down off the Gulfstream, eh?"

"Yes, down that way."

"Spoke a leak and founder, and all hands take to the boats, I suppose?"

"That's the plan."

"Well, here's success to it. The Illinois is a good old craft, and I hate to see her go, but one must look out for himself."

"Aye, mate, that's Gospel truth. That's what you and me are going to do now. I'll come from the rich insurance companies, and so can will be the proper."

"And we can treat Williams to hard over our divvy!"

"He's square. He's got to be square. I was a green country boy, but I caught on to their tricks. They were sailors, and they were planning the job as well as I was the insurance. I rose up and found a hole in the cloth through which I could get a look at them. They talked a bit more of the job, and I found out how we hours one then, and, of course, I knew the rest."

"Now, my boy, I feel like a father to you, I do indeed. You have had a hard time, and you have been full of pluck. I'm interested in seeing you do well, and have got a nice place for you. My brother, who is the best man on land in the world, is a sea captain, and he wants a good boy to sail with him."

"But I was never on a ship," I protested.

"I tell you it's all right, but that makes no difference. You will have a nice little room to yourself, live like a prince, and as for work, all you will have to do will be hand the captain his spy glass when a ship comes in sight."

I had no desire to go to sea. Indeed, I had a dread of it; but in half an hour he had won me over, and that afternoon I was sent off to the ship in company with several sailors. In two hours after our coming aboard she started down the river on her trip, and it was only then that I got my eyes opened. There was such a hub bub aboard that I had not paid particular attention to officers or men, but all of a sudden I discovered that the captain and mate were the very two men I had seen and overheard in the oyster booth. Then I asked the name of the ship, and learned that it was the Ashdorne. I was greatly troubled, or would have been if left to myself. We were hardly in the sea of the top before the first mate, whose name was McCoy, came upon me with a rope's end and a terrible curse—almost.

"Now, then, stir your stumps or I'll break every bone in your body. I'd you come aboard to play young gentleman?"

That was the beginning. I had been shipped, not as a cabin boy, for there was no place for one, but as a ship's dog, a boy who must eager and go at everybody's call, and who could be kicked and cuffed by everybody. According to the novelist, I should have found a stanch friend in the first mate, a Jack Bilt or Ben Brace, who would take me under his wing and offer to fight the whole ship in my behalf, but nothing of the kind happened. Most of the crew were Dagoes, and to one about half me the slightest pity. When we had been out for days I began to feel very anxious about the safety of the ship. The plan was as I overheard it, to take to the boats, and I suddenly occurred to me that they would refuse to take me with them. I suppose I got this idea from the men telling me that I was no good, and that I ought to be flung overboard, and other expressions intended to upset me. You can judge how green I was by what followed. I was in McCoy's watch, and on the morn of the fourth day, as he seemed to soften up a bit when giving me an order, I made bold to say

"Mr. McCoy, when you get ready to have the ship go down, you won't leave me to drown, will you?"

"W—what?" he gasped as he staggered back like one shot.

In ten minutes he had it all out of me, and he stood before me pale-faced and trembling. Who in he had made sure that I had not said anything to any of the crew, he took me aft and locked up in the captain's room designed for the emperor. Next morning I was taken to the cabin and questioned by the captain and mate and then turned to my prison. They were not harsh with me, but, on the contrary, promised that I should go in the captain's own boat, and that I need not work any more. I was made cabin boy, and was warned that if I dropped one single word as to my potash I should be flung to the sharks at once. They could threaten me. Simple Simon that I was, I cared only to save myself when the hour came. I could not realize that the scuttling of a ship was anything more than a sharp trick. For all I knew, it was practiced every day in the year.

One day when we had been out about two weeks, as near as I can remember, I was sent to help the second mate look for something wanted from the lazarette. His name was Ellerson, and he was the only one aboard who had a friendly look. He had spoken to me kindly two or three times, and I felt that he was a friend. We were scarcely alone when he took from his pocket a box of sulphur matches, a tadpole, and a sea-shell book, and large pocket knife. He handed them to me and said:

"Blue, take these and stow them away in your pocket, and don't give life say nothing to you one! Be sure to keep them about you."

He turned from me as if he did not want to be questioned, and I pocketed the articles without a word. I was in a state of wonder, however, and nothing was made plain until we had been out about a week. At 20 o'clock in the forenoon the ship was blown to about a mile from a small island, a boat ordered lowered, and then all hands were called aft. When they had assembled the captain said:

"Men, I discovered two days ago that the boy was a leper. He has got in bad, and he is to be pitied. My duty in the case is plain. He must be manned."

"Aye, aye, sir!" chorused the crew.

"Men, I know that you said let him shove here," he continued, "and you are my witnesses that it is a step necessary for the safety of all."

There was a ready assent, and before I fully understood what was going on I was in the boat with McCoy and being pulled toward the island by two sailors. Even then I knew that I was to be left. I did not raise an objection. I supposed the island to be inhabited, perhaps there was a city there, and I was not sorry for the change. We ran in as close that I could wade ashore, and the mate hand me several bonds in which the mate supposed I contained food, clothing and convenience. As soon as I had everything out of the boat the three gave me a curt good-bye, and I sat down on the sand and watched them to their ship. The boat was hoisted up, the ship trim made sail, and I was marooned upon an uninhabited island. This fact was not fully realized until toward night, and I was frightened at my situation. I had been left with little curiosity as to the contents, and the idea that they contained treasure never entered my mind. I got out four before the tide turned, and there were several more in sight. After I had these altogether ashore, I began to wonder whether they contained nails or bullets, and set about breaking one open. My first one was full of silver coins greeted my eyes I came near losing what little sense I had. Two others contained silver, the fourth was gold. It was a golden money, strange coin of it, and I had never seen any like it. It was a loss to estimate the value.

Before the discovery of that money I wanted nothing but a pair of shoes, and the sight of a sail would not have all cried me. Now I was sold to get at the other boxes, and my eyes were constantly searching the sea for sight of relief. I dragged the boxes to my house, and most of each day for the next week was spent on the neck in hopes of getting at more treasure. The water continued high, however, and I got nothing more. On the eighth day after I got the treasure, and about thirty days after my landing, the third mystery was revealed. At about 9 o'clock in the morning, while the tide was setting in strong, I observed a big chest floating in from the southeast. It was not ten minutes after I saw it before she was cast on the beach, and as she rolled over two bolds were flung out. To my amazement and horror I recognized them as belonging to the captain and mate of the Albatross, although it was more by their clothing than by the face. It was plain to me a glance that they had died of exposure and want. There was neither food nor drink in the boat, and the bodies were those of men very lean and famished.

I was engaging out a grave for the bodies when a turtle crawled from the island and was in the cove before I saw her. She had a crew of three men and a boy, and they had come for a day of a week or two, to gather turtle eggs. They were not from the mainland, but from a larger island to the north, and were native West Indians. The captain spoke English fairly well, and I gave him a full explanation, and he then set about my release. The crew had left the island on the other side of the island, and he was in the cove before I saw her. Now he

THE MONITOR.

FIFTY-SEVENTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper Published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—Parochial schools are increasing rapidly in the Eastern States that several of the public school buildings have been closed up for want of scholars.

—Postmaster Gallagher, of Omaha, has taken the preliminary steps towards raising a national Irish-American fund for erecting a monument to General Sheridan.

—The Vice-Rector of the Catholic University has been chosen in the person of the Rev. Philip J. Garrigan, for thirteen years the beloved rector of St. Bernard's, Fitchburg, Mass. Rev. Thomas J. Shahan, S.T.L., Chancellor of the Diocese of Hartford, Conn., has been chosen for the Chair of Canon Law in the University.

—The champion bigamist has at length been discovered. His name is John W. Brown, and he was sentenced in Detroit last week to five years in the penitentiary. This successful combustible married no less than thirty-three women, seven of whom appeared against him! What is the world coming to, anyhow?

—Like Cardinal Manning, the Bishop of Madrid has publicly condemned the attitude of the Italian Government towards the Pope and the activity of the new Penal Law referring to the clergy. It is rumored that the Italian Minister at Madrid has been instructed to ask the Spanish Government for an explanation of the Pastoral which the Bishop has issued.

—The Rules of Mass promises to be what Brother McCrory would call "a hot land of Popery" in the near future. In 1800 such a human anomaly as "a Roman Catholic" was not known to exist within the bounds of Maine. But since then the mercy of God has reached that portion of America, and now the Catholics number 135,000 souls out of less than 700,000 population. Lewis Lake!

—Among the causes of Beatification proceeding at Rome, there is one which especially interests the Archdiocese of Paris. This is the process of the Venerable Peter Libermann, the founder of the Society of Missionaries of the Holy Heart of Mary, united in 1848 to that of the Holy Ghost, and especially devoted to the evangelization of the negroes. He was the son of a Jewish rabbi; he received baptism at the age of 22, and entered St. Sulpice. He died in Paris in 1852 in the odor of sanctity.

—The British Weekly states that the Prince of Wales has given the very handsome subscription of fifty guineas to the building of a new Catholic Church at Lyncombe, Prince's Park, Bournemouth, for the part of the heir-apparent; but the Prince has on several occasions shown a more than ordinary degree of sympathy for the side of right and wrong; and we are glad that in this instance he has had both the heart to give, and the courage to face the clamor which his gift is sure to bring upon him.

—Alluding to the self-sacrificing lives of the Sisters of Charity which abound in the Catholic Church, the New York Sun says that one of the Sisters in a Catholic hospital of that city remarked when she heard that several members of her Order had been massacred in China: "They are to be envied for having so great martyrdom in so good and great a cause as theirs." Such is the spirit that sustains and inspires many thousands of these humble women. The world sees and hears little of them as they go quietly about on their ministry of mercy. They have, however, the consolation of a supporting conscience and the gratitude here and hereafter of the myriads who are aided and cheered by their presence in the dark hours of suffering and death.

—We are always glad when we hear of some new Catholic institution building a fine, large, handsome College, as we have an inward feeling that the money such buildings will draw is turned into high-schools for Catholic children. The latest purchase made by the Catholics of Nebraska was a fine building in Nebraska City, for York, which is to be fitted to transform into a Christian institution by putting a few nice rooms on the roof, blanking the interior, and washing all the Wesleyan sin out of the woodwork! Yes, brethren of the sects, please put up nice buildings for academies, colleges and seminaries, for Christian Education will sanctify them all to her use in "the sweet bye-and-bye!"

—According to an Eastern exchange, a stranger in New York on a recent Sunday strolled into one of the fashionable mansions where millionaires mostly congregate, and within whose portals no poor man is permitted to enter. One of the stiff as to polite ostiens met the stranger near the door and looked at him superciliously. In order to avoid the contemptuous look of the saluted servant of the sectarian society, the stranger asked: "What church is this?" "This is Christ's Church, sir," replied the ostien. "Is He in?" enquired the stranger. "Not to such as you, sir," said the prince of pompacity, showing the stranger to the door! It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the poor have formsaken Protestantism, when there is no room for Dives and Lazarus in the same sectarian tabernacle.

Archbishop Feehan's Remains.

By the arrival of the United States revenue steamer Rush at this port yesterday we are in receipt of advices from the Arctic regions by which we learn that the remains of Archbishop Feehan were taken on board the United States steamer Thetis at St. Michael's, and were landed at Victoria, Vancouver Island, where they were received with every mark of respect.

Our Thirty-Second Volume.

With this issue the MONITOR enters on its thirty-second volume, and we take the present opportunity to thank the thousands of our steadfast friends among the Rev. Clergy and Catholic Laity of the Pacific Coast, who have manifested so much zeal in helping us to make the MONITOR the largest and best Catholic paper in the West.

In the past, and in the future will the MONITOR continue vigorously and persistently to battle fearlessly for the civil and religious rights of Catholic citizens, to combat the attacks of our enemies, to refute the falsehoods of our maligners, and thus contribute towards building up the true Faith in the hearts of our co-religionists, while instructing the ignorant outside the fold by confuting every calumny that falls beneath our ruleon.

In thanking our friends for what they have done to promote the interests of the MONITOR in the past, we ask a continuance of their influence in the future, so that, as the Church increases in numerical strength on this coast, the MONITOR may find a welcome in the homes of thousands of new subscribers. Thus its beneficent influence may increase, its zeal and courage in the great Faith for which it has already done battle throughout so many years.

Month of the Holy Rosary.

In order that every reader of the MONITOR may secure a share of the important spiritual benefits which accrue to all Catholics who properly join in the pious devotions which the Church ordains for the month of October, we re-print from last week's issue the rules contained in the Pastoral Letter of Bishop Mangarge of the Diocese of Portland, in which are plainly set forth the proper duties which must be performed in order to secure the mercy of God through the Indulgences attached thereto.

RULES FOR OCTOBER DEVOTIONS:

A Decree "Dimiserunt Redemptor Aeerbitrator," issued by the Sacred Congregation of Rites on the 5th of last month, Feast of Sancta Maria ad Nives, and just received, prescribes the same devotions for this month as during October so for that month in preceding years. The Feast of Rosary Sunday is to be celebrated with the usual solemnity. Though the instructions, prescriptions and indulgences are fresh in your memory, still I shall briefly mention them here:

1. Five decades in the Rosary and the Litany of Loretto to be recited every day from the 1st of October to the 2nd of November, in all parochial churches.

2. The same devotions to be carried out in other churches and in oratories dedicated to the Blessed Virgin in accordance with the Rubrics, or as the Ordinary may be pleased to prescribe.

3. It is highly desirable that Mass should be said, or Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament given in connection with those devotional exercises.

4. A Plenary Indulgence is granted to all the faithful who confess and communicate on the Feast of the Holy Rosary, or (if hindered from doing so on the feast itself), within the octave, and visit a church, and there pray for the wants of the Church according to the intentions of the Pope.

5. Indulgences of seven years and seven quarantines for pious visits to the public recitation of the Rosary in any church, chapel, or oratory, or in the intervals between the instructions of the Rosary.

6. Rosary and Litany in a church on ten days of this month of October, as also persons who being legitimately hindered from joining in the public recitation in church, repeat the rosary in private at least five times for ten days, and confess and communicate and pray, as above, for the intentions of the Pope, gain a Plenary Indulgence.

—When the organization known as the Native Sons of the Golden West was first inaugurated a few years ago, we cautioned Catholic young men not to join it, as we saw certain indications even in the infancy of the organization that would attract Catholics away from the Church. We very much regret to learn that our words of caution to Catholic young men have proved almost prophetic. During the recent re-union which the Native Sons held at Santa Cruz, religious services were held in the Pavilion, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, when several Protestant preachers made speeches, among the lot being a Mr. Willis of Marysville, who is reported by the daily press as having passed this opinion upon the young men comprising the Native Sons of the Golden West: "The trouble with our Native Sons is that there is not enough moral fair for their mind to save them. They have no taste for religious." This is just what the MONITOR and world happen, and we are happy to know that there are very few Catholics in that organization to come under the censure of Rev. Mr. Willis of Marysville.

—Great rejoicing was manifested in this city on last Monday night when the news was received that the President had signed the new Chinese Exclusion Bill. Artillery belched forth the "boom" of joy which arose in the hearts of the whole people of California; bonfires blazed as beacons of unanimous satisfaction, and the entire people felt that a remedy had at last been discovered for an evil that hitherto has been a curse in every community wherein Chinese labor has come in contact with the industrious pursuits of American laborers.

—A bill has been introduced in Congress authorizing the State of Wisconsin to place in Statuary Hall of the Capitol, at Washington, the statues of Père Marquette, the Jesuit missionary who visited the Lake Superior country more than two hundred years ago, and explored and preached and prayed in that wild region. Father Marquette died, and was buried at the old mission station of Port Mackinac. Although lately, this is a well deserved honor to one of the missionaries who spent their lives in toiling the command to preach the Gospel to all nations.

—The grandest outpouring of Catholic faith ever witnessed in this city, was manifested last Sunday by the crowds who attended at the confirmations and the Communion rails in all the churches. We most earnestly hope, for the sake of the poor suffering souls, that the whole Catholic Hierarchy will unite in a petition to our glorious Pontiff in order to thank his Holiness for the good already achieved through his pious suggestion, and to ask the Vicar of Christ to act again the last Sunday in September of each coming year for the same holy devotion.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BULLS.

Instructive Evidence of their Fraudulent Character—An Analysis of the Text of Rash Criticisms Praying their Fictitious Origin.—New Light on the Great Forgery of the Twelfth Century.

THIRD PARAGRAPH OF THE "ADRIAN" BULL.

You then, in not dear son in Christ, have sig-

THE ALEXANDER BULL.

Having throughly dissected and analyzed the spurious Adrian Bull, let us now turn to the contemplation of the Alexander forgery, which commences thus:

"ALEXANDER, bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his most dear Son in Christ, the illustrious King of England, health and apostolic benediction."

Like its predecessor in perfidy, this document is addressed to nobody in particular, so that any King of England might claim it as addressed to him. Then this royal concection continues:

"Forasmuch as these things, which have tended to good reason created for our present, deserve to be contained in the fullest manner, and considering the great of the dominion of the realm of Ireland by the venerable Pope Adrian, we, presuming his footsteps, do rally and confirm the same (reserving to St. Peter, and to the Holy Roman Church as well in England as in Ireland, the yearly pension of one penny for every house), provided that the abominations of the land being removed, that barbarous people, Christians may be taught, and that the Catholic faith, also our successors, purchased or sanctioned, so that their dissolved church being thus reduced to more decorous discipline, that nation, with the name of Christians, be in act and fact."

(No date, no seal, no witness, no signature.)

In the whole range of anti-Catholic and anti-Christian literature, we think of no document more diabolical in its hatred than the foregoing. It bears the birth marks of its British parentage upon its face. Its prominent principle against the faithful Catholic people of Ireland, proves at once that it must have emanated from some English hireling who hated that race.

Abbé Macliaughlan was most scarcely right in his conjecture when he said that the document, because those spurious bulls attributed to Popes Adrian and Alexander, with the treatise on "Ireland Conquered," issued about the same time by Geraldine Cambrensis, would indicate a great similarity of style between them; and if they were not issued by the same writer, it is very curious that they were concocted for the purpose of maintaining each other mutually, and thereby the more readily deceive unsuspecting public.

DID POPE ALEXANDER GRANT THIS BULL?

Let us see, and in order to answer this question let us take a brief retrospective glance at the relations which existed between Pope Alexander III and King Henry, whom that Pontiff must have looked upon as more than half a heretic.

In 1164, only eight years prior to the date when the bogus Bull is supposed to have been issued, Roger Hoveden says that "King Henry in Christmas time held a great lands and heretical relict against the very Pontiff from whom Henry afterwards declared he preserved the Bull."

In 1166, only six years prior to the date given to the spurious document, King Henry not only proclaimed his allegiance to the anti-pope Pascal, but he also had laws passed by which it was strictly forbidden, under heavy penalties, to obey the Pontiff Alexander Pope Alexander III, or to give allegiance to his commands! Such were the immediate antecedents of that King who received from the Pope the Bull of Conquest, a Rescript authorizing him to go over to Ireland and to "reform the barbarous people, in a land of abominations, where inhabitants were Christian only in name!" Men who believe in the genuineness of such a bull, given for such a purpose, and in such a man, must be either fools or knaves, or worse than fools or knaves that take the truth and desire to persevere in their error.

MacCloughgan quotes Baronius as alleging that King Henry "raised the waters to overwhelm not only the Church of Canterbury, together with the English Catholic Church, but the entire flock of the whole Catholic Church, together with its Chief Pastor Alexander III, against whom in particular, he directed his machinations." Is it likely, therefore, that Pope Alexander would place such a man over the holy Hierarchy of the Church in Ireland, or authorize such an Anglican anarchist to bring "a disordered church" into discipline? No sane person can believe in such improbabilities ever having come to pass.

In 1446, only four years anterior to the date of the fictitious Bull, Westmonasterienses says "King Henry, whose anger was changed into hatred of Blessed Thomas and of the Pope, in consequence of his having espoused the cause of the former, sent to the Emperor Frederick, proposing him to co-operate in removing Pope Alexander from the Papal Chair." Of course Pope Alexander III, was well aware of these different acts of schismatical insubordination on the part of Henry, and in order to properly shorten him therefor, he gave him an Apostolic admonition to go over Ireland in order to clean "the impurities" from that Church.

In 1169, just three years before Pope Alexander dubbed King Henry his "most dear son in Christ," that same monarch displeased at Pope Alexander, sent his court, the Cardinals whom Pope Alexander had sent over to hold a conference with him in regard to his anti-Catholic conduct towards his Holiness and the representative ecclesiastics of the Catholic Church in England! Assuredly Pope Alexander would have spurned himself a very weak and foolish Pontiff if ever he granted to King Henry any diploma authorizing him to regulate even an inch of space as a rood of Christendom, much less to "reform" the Catholic Church in Ireland—the most consistent and constant in fidelity to Rome!

WAS IRELAND EVER "CHRISTIAN ONLY IN NAME?"

It seems to us to be an act bordering on an insult to the intelligence of the age to

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1888.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday—Twentieth Sunday after Pentecost. Solemnity of the Most Holy Rosary.
Monday, St. Bavo, Bavolus, or Bavon, Abbot, of Ghent.
Tuesday, St. Michael Tintinnio, Martyr.
Wednesday, St. Francis Borgia, Confessor.
Thursday, St. Dionysius, Bishop, and Companions, Martyrs.
Friday, St. Francis of Assisi, Confessor.
Saturday, St. Edward the Confessor.

ARCHBISHOP HORDAN.

Telegram from Archbishop Riordan states that He was in Brussels, and is now on his way to Rome. He is enjoying excellent health, and the Rev. M. H. Connolly who accompanies Him is well.

FAIR IN ST. TERESA'S PARISH.

The ladies of St. Teresa's Church, Potrero, are making great preparations for the fair that will commence in the parish on Monday, 15th inst. The fair will be held in a grand hall on Bryant street, between Eighteenth and Kentucky, and will last two weeks.

CONVENT SCHOOL AT COLUSA.

Father Wallrath and the Catholics of Colusa are making great preparations for the coming Fair, in order to raise funds for the Convent School which they hope to have in full swing upon the reading of the 15th inst. Father Wallrath is a hard worker, and his parishioners are rallying to the support of the Right Rev. Bishop.

SACRED CONCERT AND LECTURE.

A grand sacred concert will be given on Friday evening, October 5, at St. Paul's church, corner of Sixteenth and Capp streets, in aid of the new Church of St. Paul. The following well-known gentlemen will take part: Professor Leo Cassidy, Professor Wolfsohn, Professor Jacobsen, Professor Ferrari, Professor Ferrari, Jr., Professor Cassidy, Jr., Professor Wolfsohn, Jr., Professor Jacobsen, Jr.,

Farm and Home.

Useful Recipes.

BEEF TEA.—This is made in several ways. One is to cut a pound of lean beef, free of fat, in small pieces, put it in a bottle or glass jar, cover tightly, put it in a pot of cold water with a plate at the bottom. Heat gradually, and simmer two or three hours. Pour off the juice, season with very little salt, and season all cold gravies from the surface. A slice of bread laid over the surface will absorb them. 2. Soak the bed in cold water for half an hour, squeezing it occasionally, then put it over the fire, stirred, and boil ten minutes. Remove the scum and fat, and serve hot. Beef juice is prepared by first boiling a juicy steak, and then squeezing it over a cup not in hot water. It moves any city particles, salt, and serve.

POUNDS CAKE—Ingredients, one pound butter, one pound sugar, one pound flour, sulfuous (or currants), nutmeg, one glass of brandy or wine.

METHOD: Heat the butter to a large to a white cream in a basin, break the eggs and add separately (will beat an all the time), wash, well dry, and roll the currants in flour, add with the sliced peel and nutmeg to the butter, etc., beat half an hour, add brandy or wine, put into a cake tin, with several layers of paper on the bottom and sides, the one near the cake being well greased. Bake in a quick oven as first to rise, then lessening the fast one or two sheets of paper should be laid over the top and more carefully in a slower part of the oven, or, better still, if the oven possesses a ventilator, it should be opened. Try by a long splinter of wood, and turn one over.

—Great mode after the following directions is most nutritious and palatable dish for the convalescent: Pour a quart of hot water into a clean earthenware or tin vessel over a brisk fire. When it is a little into it two tablespoonfuls of good oats or oat meal mixed smoothly in just water enough to make a thin paste; put in a lump of butter the size of a hickory nut, and, stir frequently for half an hour; then add a gill of sweet milk, and when it boils again throw in the upper crust of hard baked bread cut in small pieces; let it boil ten minutes, then add a shake of black pepper, a little salt, a pinch of grated nutmeg, and a little more butter. The pesh of an egg boiled hard and mashed makes an agreeable addition as the taste the inquiress. In cases of severe illness the butter and spice should be omitted, and as the taste requires, the ingredients may be varied to suit the demands.

To Make Some Happy.

Learn to govern yourselves and be gentle and patient.

Guard your tempers, especially in seasons of ill health, irritation and trouble, and shorten them by a sense of your own shortcomings and errors.

Remember that, valuable as is the gift of speech, silence is often more valuable.

Do not suppose too much from others, but remember that all have an evil nature, whose development we must expect, and that we must bear and forbear, as we often need forbearance and forgiveness ourselves.

Never retort with a sharp or angry word. It is the second word that makes the quarrel.

Beware of the first disagreement.

Learn to speak in a gentle tone of voice. Learn to say kind and pleasant things whenever opportunity offers.

Study the character of each, and sympathize with all in their troubles, however small.

The not evident frivolously in the smallest degree.

Avoid moods and pets and fits of sulkiness.

Learn to deny yourself and prefer others.

Beware of meddlers and tale-bearers.

Never charge a bad motive if a good one is conceivable.

Be gentle and firm with children.

Do not allow your children to be away from home at night without knowing where they are.

Do not allow them to go where they please on Sunday.

Do not furnish them with much spending money.

Why Red-Haired Girls Don't Tan.

Red haired girls, I believe, never turn brown. Then, I an heard of from a learned chemist, is because she has too much iron in her blood. In is the iron which gives the Sun Tribun his in her hair. If she has iron in her blood, her hair will be brown or chestnut, or perhaps blond.

The varying degrees of redness that we see in different red-headed girls is due to the different proportions of iron in their blood. A girl with pinky, brownish hair that shows red in a strong light has only a fair share of iron in her blood. Yet a brilliantly red hair is a sure sign of iron. The redness of her way of neutralizing the iron.

Perhaps they would n't resort to it, even if they knew it. For it is the iron in the blood that makes the red-haired girl so strong, and hardy and good natured. It is also that means of her fairness, which are very good for the health. And it is noted as a singular thing—probably also having some relation to the iron in the blood—that menstruation never kills red-headed girls. Be that as it may, according to the dictum of this learned physician, a red headed girl has many advantages over her dark haired sister.

Profits in Fruit-Growing.

The enormous profits that are possible in fruit-growing often sound like fables and romances, and yet the stories have been so often and unmistakably proven that, if facts have any weight, this has been amply and satisfactorily demonstrated. Of course not all can expect such fruit because rich in a year, but it is the incontrovertible fact that no branch of agriculture offers so great average profitableness. An exchange tells of a nectarine tree from which 1 600 pounds of fruit were taken this year. The fruit brought at the rate of $20 a ton or $16.50 to the tree. There are from 100 to 125 trees to an acre, which would make $1 650 to $2,000 an acre. Of course not all, if any, other trees in the lot yielded so much, but if we cut the figures in two the actual yield would probably be obtained. If anyone thinks that too much let us divide the figure by three and still we have the most marvelous results. We believe there never is any trouble getting $20 a ton for nectarines with other fruits being two and three times so much. Suppose a man had twenty acres of full-bearing nectarine trees anything should hang to a market in the Sacramento Valley. Will anyone be found to dispute that the small orchard is a paying investment!

Orange and Lemon Trees.

Adolph Pimentel, of Napa, has been compiling statistics, from the Assessors' report, of the number of orange and lemon trees in the State. There are 983,574 orange trees, 72 997 lemons. Los Angeles county ranks first with 729 866 orange and 55,620 lemon trees. San Bernardino is second, containing 214 531 orange and 7 845 lemon trees; Placer third, 7,817 orange, 497 lemon; Butte fourth, 6,054 orange, 728 lemon.

Family Fun.

The Frenchman's Trouble.

A worthy Frenchman, who was very hoarse and troubled with a bad cough, went to Dr. Elder some time ago to consult him about his malady. It from he went, the Frenchman, who use knowledge of English was very imperfect, turned to his friend and said, "Mon ami, I have consulted the, he naturally concluded that cough was pronounced one. To make assurance doubly sure, he looked and saw that the definition of cough was "malady in the chest," as it of a chest.

When he arrived at Dr. Elder's, the latter said:

Well, monsieur, what is the matter with you?"

"The worthy Frenchman replied:

"I hare got one little hoarse and one bad sore."

"You've got a horse and a cow," said Elder, "but I suppose you sent me to buy them!"

"I wish I could sell 'em; they roll not let me sleep de nights," said the French man.

"Why don't you lock them up in the stable? inquired the doctor.

The Frenchman was in a dispute.

"Ah! you no ms understood," he cried coaping his hands. "I have got no lady to do hoe, no one neat the cake being well greased. Bake in a quick oven as first to rise, then lessening the fast one or two sheets of paper should be laid over the top and more carefully in a slower part of the oven, or, better still, if the oven possesses a ventilator, it should be opened. Try by a long splinter of wood, and turn one over.

—Great mode after the following directions is most nutritious and palatable dish for the convalescent: Pour a quart of hot water in a clean earthenware or tin vessel over a brisk fire. When it is a little into it two tablespoonfuls of good oats or oat meal mixed smoothly in just water enough to make a thin paste; put in a lump of butter the size of a hickory nut, and, stir frequently for half an hour; then add a gill of sweet milk, and when it boils again throw in the upper crust of hard baked bread cut in small pieces; let it boil ten minutes, then add a shake of black pepper, a little salt, a pinch of grated nutmeg, and a little more butter. The pesh of an egg boiled hard and mashed makes an agreeable addition as the taste the inquiress. In cases of severe illness the butter and spice should be omitted, and as the taste requires, the ingredients may be varied to suit the demands.

To Make Some Happy.

Learn to govern yourselves and be gentle and patient.

Guard your tempers, especially in seasons of ill health, irritation and trouble, and shorten them by a sense of your own shortcomings and errors.

Remember that, valuable as is the gift of speech, silence is often more valuable.

Do not suppose too much from others, but remember that all have an evil nature, whose development we must expect, and that we must bear and forbear, as we often need forbearance and forgiveness ourselves.

Never retort with a sharp or angry word. It is the second word that makes the quarrel.

Beware of the first disagreement.

Learn to speak in a gentle tone of voice. Learn to say kind and pleasant things whenever opportunity offers.

Study the character of each, and sympathize with all in their troubles, however small.

The not evident frivolously in the smallest degree.

Avoid moods and pets and fits of sulkiness.

Learn to deny yourself and prefer others.

Beware of meddlers and tale-bearers.

Never charge a bad motive if a good one is conceivable.

Be gentle and firm with children.

Do not allow your children to be away from home at night without knowing where they are.

Do not allow them to go where they please on Sunday.

Do not furnish them with much spending money.

Why Red-Haired Girls Don't Tan.

Red haired girls, I believe, never turn brown. Then, I an heard of from a learned chemist, is because she has too much iron in her blood. In is the iron which gives the Sun Tribun his in her hair. If she has iron in her blood, her hair will be brown or chestnut, or perhaps blond.

The varying degrees of redness that we see in different red-headed girls is due to the different proportions of iron in their blood. A girl with pinky, brownish hair that shows red in a strong light has only a fair share of iron in her blood. Yet a brilliantly red hair is a sure sign of iron. The redness of her way of neutralizing the iron.

Perhaps they would n't resort to it, even if they knew it. For it is the iron in the blood that makes the red-haired girl so strong, and hardy and good natured. It is also that means of her fairness, which are very good for the health. And it is noted as a singular thing—probably also having some relation to the iron in the blood—that menstruation never kills red-headed girls. Be that as it may, according to the dictum of this learned physician, a red headed girl has many advantages over her dark haired sister.

Profits in Fruit-Growing.

The enormous profits that are possible in fruit-growing often sound like fables and romances, and yet the stories have been so often and unmistakably proven that, if facts have any weight, this has been amply and satisfactorily demonstrated. Of course not all can expect such fruit because rich in a year, but it is the incontrovertible fact that no branch of agriculture offers so great average profitableness. An exchange tells of a nectarine tree from which 1 600 pounds of fruit were taken this year. The fruit brought at the rate of $20 a ton or $16.50 to the tree. There are from 100 to 125 trees to an acre, which would make $1 650 to $2,000 an acre. Of course not all, if any, other trees in the lot yielded so much, but if we cut the figures in two the actual yield would probably be obtained. If anyone thinks that too much let us divide the figure by three and still we have the most marvelous results. We believe there never is any trouble getting $20 a ton for nectarines while other fruits bring two and three times so much. Suppose a man had twenty acres of full-bearing nectarine trees anything should hang to a market in the Sacramento Valley. Will anyone be found to dispute that the small orchard is a paying investment!

Orange and Lemon Trees.

Adolph Pimentel, of Napa, has been compiling statistics, from the Assessors' report, of the number of orange and lemon trees in the State. There are 983,574 orange trees, 72 997 lemons. Los Angeles county ranks first with 729 866 orange and 55,620 lemon trees. San Bernardino is second, containing 214 531 orange and 7 845 lemon trees; Placer third, 7,817 orange, 497 lemon; Butte fourth, 6,054 orange, 728 lemon.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SCOTT'S EMULSION
OF PURE COD LIVER OIL
AND HYPOPHOSPHITES
Almost as Palatable as Milk.
Containing the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites combined with the Fattening and Strengthening qualities of Cod Liver Oil, the patency of both being largely increased.
A Remedy for Consumption.
For Wasting in Children.
For Scrofulous Affections.
For Anæmia and Debility.
For Coughs, Colds & Throat Affections.
In fact, ALL diseases where there is no inflammation of the Throat and Lungs, a WASTING OF THE FLESH, and a WANT OF NERVE POWER, nothing in the world equals this palatable Emulsion.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

NEW AND GOOD BOOKS.
Complete Anecdotal Works of St. Alphonsus de Liguori Vols. 1 and 11 ready. The Ven. Mother Mary of Jesus Ballot. Translated from the Spanish by Mrs. Caroline Hope. 1 vol. 12mo. $1 50
Elements of Ecclesiastical Law. Ordinations, Censures, Marriages. By Sabetti-Fanchamps. Just ready. 8vo. 12.50
The New Sunday School Companion Containing the Sacraments of Penance, Eucharist and Confirmation, Catechisms, Instructions, Prayers, Ceremonies, Hymns, Music (Sacred Music), Instrumental and profusely illustrated. Boards. 50 cts. Per Hundred, $40.
The New Saints of 1885. St. John Berchmans, S. J. St. Peter Canisius, S. J. St. Antonio Rosmini, Founder of the Institute of Charity. Founder of the Society. Illustrated. 50 cents.
The Practice of Humility. By Father Peter Lorriquet. Translated from the French. 32mo. 50 cts. Pride a poison and humility the antidote. Humility the foundation of all the other virtues. Humility the way to Heaven. Humility the way to peace. Humility the way to happiness. Write standard paper. 50 cents.
Lourdes. Its Miracles and Its Pilgrims. By Mgr. Bernadou, Bishop of Tarbes. Illustrated. 12mo. $1 00
Moral Philosophy, (Ethics and Natural Right). By Rev. Joseph Rickaby, S. J. 12mo. $1 00
This is the text of the London Review of English Studies and of Catholic Philosophy, edited by Rev. Richard Clarke, S. J.
Hugoli's Sermons. Vols. 3 and 4. The Best Christians; or, Sermons on the Seven Deadly Sins, and the Christian spirit. Good and our neighbor with Sacramentals. In 70 sermons. 12mo. 2 vols. net, each, net $4 00
Sold by all Catholic Booksellers and Agents.
BENZIGER BROS.
Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Vestments and Church Ornaments,
New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.
RODGERS & KELLY,
Merchant Tailors,
Have Removed from 103 Market Street, to more elegant quarters,
103 THIRD ST.,
Near Mission,
Where they would be pleased to meet their former friends and patrons.

ARMSTRONG & NIKLAUS,
GROCERS.
Butter, Eggs, Teas & Coffees
A SPECIALTY.
2922 and 2927 Sixteenth St.,
Cor. Bell Ave., Bet. Valencia and Mission Sts.
Country Orders Packed and Shipped. Goods Delivered to any part of the City, Free of Charge.

Marble! Granite! Statuary!
W. H. McCORMICK,
Importer and Manufacturer of
ITALIAN AND AMERICAN MARBLE, AMERICAN Red South Quincy, Marble and Granite Tiles, Wall Tiles, Grates, Tiles and Mantels of Marble and Granite work. 1412 Market St., between City Hall Ave. and Larkin St., San Francisco.

B. BRADLEY,
Painting, Whitening,
AND PAPER HANGING,
923 Mission Street, 923
Telephone No. 3064

McKENNA & PURCELL,
Hay, Grain and Commission
MERCHANTS,
Consignments Solicited,
Shipping Orders a Specialty.
214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

WEDDING PRESENTS.
A GEM OF
PRICE'S Famous California Redwood CARVED
Big Over Make and Design. Challenge the World. Beware of Imitations.
Back or Ivory Handles, per pair $7 50
Finest Quadruplate Silver, per pair 10 00
Finest Quadruplate Silver, extra fine, per pair 12 00
Each style showing a well selected stock of Marble and Granite Tables, Clocks, Vases, Fancy Goods, Bronzes, Gas Logs, Gas Stoves, Fire Screens, Fire Sets, Fine Cutlery, Scissors, Shears, Razors, Pocket Knives, Carving Knives and Forks, Table Cutlery, Silver Plated Ware, Tea Trays, Tea Spoons, Tea Pots, Sugars, Creams, Butter Coolers, Cake Baskets, Fruit Baskets, Ice Pitchers, Ice Tubs, Ice Cream Spoons, Ice Cream Forks, Pie Knives, Pie Forks, Fish Knives and Forks, Fish Sets, Carving Sets, Knives and Forks, Knives, Forks and Spoons, Dessert Knives and Forks, Dessert Sets

A SAD CALAMITY.

The Corpse of a Priest Burned in Its Cells.

The profound grief into which the sad news of the sudden demise of Father John Hax hasserth plunged the inhabitants of Chorley, where he was greatly esteemed and beloved, was intensified, first on Wednesday when the appalling fact that his dead body had been burned to a cinder on the previous night or during the small hours of the morning became known. At first the news seemed incredible, or greatly exaggerated, but on examination it proved to be but too true, and even the horrible reality of the shocking occurrence was fully realized by the astonished people, it need a thrill of horror through the entire community. Only a few hours before, as it seemed, they had gazed into the calm, placid features of the dead, one who as lately as Saturday lived and moved amongst them, if not in health, at least in the full possession of his faculties, on Tuesday night the vast morning audit which crowded the church where he lay dead during the recitation of the Office, thronged around his coffin, and now, as the rumor ran, he was nothing but a charred and blackened skeleton. It is stated that the church doors were locked, the gas shut off, and the candles extinguished at ten o'clock on Tuesday night. The coffin then lay on trestles in the middle of the chancel facing the sanctuary, over the trestles was thrown a pall, and so either side were four tall candles. It would appear that the candles were not completely extinguished, and the folds of the drapery hanging on them have caught fire from one of the lights flickering low in the socket of the candlestick. A lamplighter, going his rounds putting out the public lights at daybreak, noticed a smell of burning wood, but rather not being able to ascertain from whence it proceeded, or not thinking much of it, gave no alarm. The first person to detect the fire was the Private Chamberlain Jeanine Turner, as she was going to the vestry about a quarter past six to get on the ensuing morning's Office. She immediately sent a lad to the Fire Brigade station, where the alarm was received at half past six. The superintendent (Mr. Cundiff) and fourteen men at once turned out and drove to the church, and in the course of a few minutes were able to play upon the building the thing of the damage had to be done, which, when it was found that the church was filled with such a quantity of self-acting smoke that it was about half an hour before they could get to where the coffin had been deposited the evening before. A horrifying sight met their gaze. They found the coffin nearly burnt to a cinder and almost entirely cremated, on the floor, along with the debris of the coffin, or coffins, for the body had been placed in a shell, enclosed in a leaden case, within an oak coffin. All that remained of the corpse was the trunk, the limbs and arms having been entirely consumed. A considerable portion of the flooring of the chancel, the communion rails, and the pulpit opposite the side were burned. The fire traversed the chancel floor about four or five feet from either side of the coffin and about three yards forward towards the sanctuary, going a little more to the left than to the right, and not much, about six feet, to the rear. The organ-chamber, which stands at some distance to the right, was considerably blistered and the pitch pipes were melted and gone. It is the deliberate opinion of the superintendent of the Fire Brigade that the fire would have been caused by the candles (although we have been assured by the sacristan that it might have been traceable to the negligence of the plumbers, who soldered the leaden coffin before placing it in the oak one, having been suspected) and that it must have been going on for three or four hours before it was extinguished. He nearly fell in his anxiety to get to the coffin and save the body, and Father Hax was considerable risk in removing the Blessed Sacrament to the Church of the Sacred Heart, Brook street. It was very fortunate that the gas had been turned off or the entire church and everything in it would have been consumed. As it is, the damage done has been estimated at £500. It is universally conceded that it was an error in judgment not to have had some person watching by the remains, as had such been the case, the awful calamity would not have occurred. The remains were gathered up, placed in a chest, put upon a hearse and conveyed to one of the school rooms where they remained until a new coffin was procured. Our representative was there then. When the chest, from beneath which the smouldering fire was still smoking, the smoke issuing curtain like alone, was removed, a ghastly spectacle was disclosed. The body, or rather what remained of it, was charred and disfigured mass, scarcely any portion but the skull and the bones of the legs being in any human shape. The flesh was entirely melted away, and the greatest expedition had to be used in re-coffining the mutilated corpse.

Father Hawkworth, who was a member of an old Catholic family of Yorkshire, was born in Liverpool, and ordained in May 10, 1877.—Liverpool Catholic Times.

SANTA CRUZ CATHOLIC FAIR.

Successful Effort for the Sisters of Charity.

The fair recently held in Santa Cruz for the purpose of completing the fund to pay for a new addition to the building, was a magnificent success, as the following shows:

Dues, N. Kennedy	$ 20 00
Lemonade Table, Mrs. T. Leonard and Miss Doherty	1,720 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. T. A. Sweeney and the Misses Neary	2,081 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. Payson and the Children of Mary	1,461 00
Candy table, Misses Dunphy	245 00
Candy table, Misses Dwyer	72 00
Flower table, Mrs. Thompson	145 00
Flower table, Mrs. Leonard	72 00
Total receipts	$6,050 00
Expenses for Fair	476 00
Net proceeds	$ 5,600 00

The above receipts are gratifyingly unexpected, and we sincerely return our thanks to the generous ladies who so generously took the responsibility of the different booths, as well as to those who assisted them by their liberal donations and patronage. Special thanks are due to the committee of gentlemen for their services and the Ancient Order of Hibernians for their assistance in a body.

The donations received by Thomas Leonard are not complete as he is now at retreat of the redemptorist fathers. The amount herein presented to be used for the new dormitory, will also be received by Mrs. Kennedy, the Misses Dwyer, Miss M. S. Kilty are included in this account. Two honored and one dollar from Mrs. J. H. Hourigan is included in the amount for the Mission Band.

May our Lord reward all for their kindness and generosity.

SISTERS OF CHARITY.

SISTERS NURSES OF CHIPPA.

Gold watch 317, gold-headed cane 104, bed pump set 82, saddle 195, silver watch 65, twenty dollar gold piece 202, crayon of Father Hayes 14, old pocket-book 1, gold bracelet 129, handkerchiefs and boxes 102, gentleman's gold ring 5", handkerchiefs, crosses 129, table scarf 92, gold brooch pin 17.

FAIR AT BENICIA.

Twelve raffles of Benicia are making great preparations for the grand entertainment to be given in Benicia Hall on the 22d inst. Fifteen hundred dollars in Bolton Fall and Western Mass in Portland Cathedral at 10 o'clock. Immediately after the faithful received Holy Communion.

The Absent Parter of Mission Dolores.

Rev. Richard P. Hennessy, who has been absent from his parish for a year, is expected in Europe, was at Paris when between Vespers and Benediction in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, and other places of Catholic and historical interest. Before returning to the city he will visit Rome and make a tour through Ireland.

—The eleventh anniversary of the Father Mathew Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society, No. 1, will be celebrated by an entertainment and ball at Union Hall on Wednesday evening the 10th inst.

OUR SISTER CITIES.

The Church in Alameda County

The concert recently given in St. Anthony's parish, East Oakland, was very successful, the proceeds will be devoted to improvements in the Boys parochial school.

The Catholic Ladies Home in Oakland, has at present fifteen inmates. This excellent institution is doing a good work and deserves the practical encouragement of Oakland. Catholics.

—The new St. Mary's College on the Peralta road, will be ready for the reception of students by the next scholastic session. The superior work is nearly finished, and a start is being placed in position.

—Mr. Bernard Shea, the seventh Catholic lady in Oakland, are endeavoring to secure money and a lot for the erection of a hospital. As yet no active steps have been taken in the matter, but the worthy enterprise will soon be thoroughly agitated. In such a large city as Oakland a Catholic hospital should be established and we hope that our zealous clergy will take an active interest in helping it along when the proper time is submitted for their approval and support.

—Father King's parish might well be called "the parish of the poor." The following organizations have brought his wise direction and energy been formed: St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, Immaculate Conception Branch of the C. K. of A. V. M. 1, No. 6 Altar Society, Children of Mary Society, Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, Confraternity of the Most Sacred Heart, Confraternity of the Most Holy Name, Confraternity of the Angelic Warfare, and Catholic Union All Saints No. 1. The numerous religious organizations in one parish, will inevitable be decisive of good in the promotion of faith and fervor.

—Next Sunday, the 7th inst, will be a jubilee day in Immaculate Conception parish, commencing at 10 o'clock. Mass will be celebrated at 10 a. m., and a sermon will be preached by the candidate. A Sanhjubber, going his rounds putting out the public lights at daybreak, noticed a smell of burning wood, but rather not being able to ascertain from whence it proceeded, or not thinking much of it, gave no alarm. The first person to detect the fire was the Private Chamberlain Jeanine Turner, as she was going to the vestry about a quarter past six to get on the ensuing morning's Office. She immediately sent a lad to the Fire Brigade station, where the alarm was received at half past six. The superintendent (Mr. Cundiff) and fourteen men at once turned out and drove to the church, and in the course of a few minutes were able to play upon the building the thing of the damage had to be done, which, when it was found that the church was filled with such a quantity of self-acting smoke that it was about half an hour before they could get to where the coffin had been deposited the evening before. A horrifying sight met their gaze. They found the coffin nearly burnt to a cinder and almost entirely cremated, on the floor, along with the debris of the coffin, or coffins, for the body had been placed in a shell, enclosed in a leaden case, within an oak coffin. All that remained of the corpse was the trunk, the limbs and arms having been entirely consumed. A considerable portion of the flooring of the chancel, the communion rails, and the pulpit opposite the side were burned. The fire traversed the chancel floor about four or five feet from either side of the coffin and about three yards forward towards the sanctuary, going a little more to the left than to the right, and not much, about six feet, to the rear. The organ-chamber, which stands at some distance to the right, was considerably blistered and the pitch pipes were melted and gone. It is the deliberate opinion of the superintendent of the Fire Brigade that the fire would have been caused by the candles (although we have been assured by the sacristan that it might have been traceable to the negligence of the plumbers, who soldered the leaden coffin before placing it in the oak one, having been suspected) and that it must have been going on for three or four hours before it was extinguished. He nearly fell in his anxiety to get to the coffin and save the body, and Father Hax was considerable risk in removing the Blessed Sacrament to the Church of the Sacred Heart, Brook street. It was very fortunate that the gas had been turned off or the entire church and everything in it would have been consumed. As it is, the damage done has been estimated at £500. It is universally conceded that it was an error in judgment not to have had some person watching by the remains, as had such been the case, the awful calamity would not have occurred. The remains were gathered up, placed in a chest, put upon a hearse and conveyed to one of the school rooms where they remained until a new coffin was procured. Our representative was there then. When the chest, from beneath which the smouldering fire was still smoking, the smoke issuing curtain like alone, was removed, a ghastly spectacle was disclosed. The body, or rather what remained of it, was charred and disfigured mass, scarcely any portion but the skull and the bones of the legs being in any human shape. The flesh was entirely melted away, and the greatest expedition had to be used in re-coffining the mutilated corpse.

Father Hawkworth, who was a member of an old Catholic family of Yorkshire, was born in Liverpool, and ordained in May 10, 1877.—Liverpool Catholic Times.

SANTA CRUZ CATHOLIC FAIR.

Successful Effort for the Sisters of Charity

The fair recently held in Santa Cruz for the purpose of completing the fund to pay for a new addition to the building, was a magnificent success, as the following shows:

Dues, N. Kennedy	$ 20 00
Lemonade Table, Mrs. T. Leonard and Miss Doherty	1,720 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. T. A. Sweeney and the Misses Neary	2,081 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. Payson and the Children of Mary	1,461 00
Candy table, Misses Dunphy	245 00
Candy table, Misses Dwyer	72 00
Flower table, Mrs. Thompson	145 00
Flower table, Mrs. Leonard	72 00
Total receipts	$6,050 00
Expenses for Fair	476 00
Net proceeds	$ 5,600 00

The above receipts are gratifyingly unexpected, and we sincerely return our thanks to the generous ladies who so generously took the responsibility of the different booths, as well as to those who assisted them by their liberal donations and patronage. Special thanks are due to the committee of gentlemen for their services and the Ancient Order of Hibernians for their assistance in a body.

The donations received by Thomas Leonard are not complete as he is now at retreat of the redemptorist fathers. The amount herein presented to be used for the new dormitory, will also be received by Mrs. Kennedy, the Misses Dwyer, Miss M. S. Kilty are included in this account. Two honored and one dollar from Mrs. J. H. Hourigan is included in the amount for the Mission Band.

May our Lord reward all for their kindness and generosity.

SISTERS OF CHARITY

SISTERS NURSES OF CHIPPA.

Gold watch 317, gold-headed cane 104, bed pump set 82, saddle 195, silver watch 65, twenty dollar gold piece 202, crayon of Father Hayes 14, old pocket-book 1, gold bracelet 129, handkerchiefs and boxes 102, gentleman's gold ring 5", handkerchiefs, crosses 129, table scarf 92, gold brooch pin 17.

FAIR AT BENICIA.

Twelve raffles of Benicia are making great preparations for the grand entertainment to be given in Benicia Hall on the 22d inst. Fifteen hundred dollars in Bolton Fall and Western Mass in Portland Cathedral at 10 o'clock. Immediately after the faithful received Holy Communion.

The Absent Parter of Mission Dolores.

Rev. Richard P. Hennessy, who has been absent from his parish for a year, is expected in Europe, was at Paris when between Vespers and Benediction in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, and other places of Catholic and historical interest. Before returning to the city he will visit Rome and make a tour through Ireland.

—The eleventh anniversary of the Father Mathew Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society, No. 1, will be celebrated by an entertainment and ball at Union Hall on Wednesday evening the 10th inst.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

Latest Doings at the Fair Protectorate

—No. 3 gave an excellent entertainment on the 17th ult, which was a social and financial success.

—No. 2 gives an anniversary reception at 1341 Fulton Hall, on the 17th prox.

—No. 3 is making preparations for a grand ball to be held in November.

—Institute No. 1 is noticeable for the excellent manner in which it conducts the monthly reports of business the Literary Society under some and enthusiastic. Thus the increase in membership is was suggested to another year. The committee appointed to attend to the selection of hall is expected to report favorably at next meeting.

—The ritual used by this order was the work of Miss Mary Gibbs, President of No. 1. The opening prayer was composed by Miss A. Pope of No. 2; the closing prayer by Miss Annie E. Byrne of No. 6, Novach City. The form and design of sash were presented by Miss E. Wright, President of No. 2. The odes were composed by Miss Harriet Stephens, President of the Grand Institute was designed by Miss Mary Gibbs of No. 1, and the ceremonies were established by Mrs Minnie Mackin.

—Institute No. 10 held its second session on Tuesday evening in St. Anthony's parish. Its ladies are well known as being the younger branch, but have a strong membership, judging from the efficient manner in which the work was carried in follows: Mrs. J. Strahlerk, Fr. Miss Annie Cassidy, Vice President, Miss Lizzie Lynch, Mrs. Maggie Reinsky, R. S., Miss Annie Walsh, F. S., Miss Annie Sweeney, T., Miss Maggie Forward, M., Miss Maggie Lotto, I. S., Miss Lavina Hennessy, I. T., Trustees, Miss Maggie Foley, Miss Mollie Gaffigan, Miss Lizzie Ahern, Miss Annie Rodgers.

NORTHWESTERN NOTES.

The Church in Oregon and the Territories.

The Rev. O. H. of Astoria has subscribed for the Pacific Northwest.

—Bottle City (Mont.) Catholics propose holding a charity to liquidate the church debt.

—Rev. Father Jacquet, late of Spokane Falls, has been transferred to the Indian Mission in Montana Territory.

—Rev. R. Machonian of Port Townsend, W. T., has resigned from a few months' vacation spent in Europe.

—Rev. Father Jacquet of Nesqually Mission, accompanied by Father Chirouse, visited the Catholic settlements throughout Eastern Washington Territory.

—Preparations have been taken by the Irish National League of Portland, Oregon, to form a branch of the Parnell Indemnity Fund. A grand ball for the benefit of the fund will be held in the Opera House.

—On the 2d inst. C. Bonchard, S. J., closed a very successful Professor, at Open Days at Mission of St. Patrick's church, Walla Walla, Nez Perce County, on the Sunday evening, the 30th ult. Hundreds of Masses were celebrated last Sunday in all the parochial churches of Oregon. Archbishop Gross officiated at Salem, Father Fatal

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE VICTORY OF THE ROSARY.

Our Lady of the Rosary!
Hail thee! hail of power!
Our Lady, Help of Christians! o'er
October's sunbeams trace
Is come o'er Lepanto's warm thy prayer;
Hail Mary be thy name,
Our Lady Queen of Victory!
Lepanto doth remain
A monument sought can deface,
Enduring as the main.

Since brave Don Juan, Spain's valiant knight,
Heard Europe to his aid,
"Shall Moslem arrogance and might
Hold Christendom as hog?
The Crescent's emblem blighting glare
Our Europe's plains and vales—
E'en now from Elian Cyprus bear
Arabs wou't direct walls!
There Turk and Moor in myriads pour,
Demoniac in their might;
Their banners and relentless death roar,
Thirsting—ravenous—bloodily—
The Moslem infidel stopped in gore—
In foolish hatred spilt
From Christian hearts—shall there yet move
Divinest Mercies blade and hilt!

While Mary lists and angels prite
The fearless Don Juan's vow,
The shout of victory pours its light
Full o'er the christian's brow.
In brilliant—dazzle to Moslem might—
Reverse the fleet's prow;
Proud Naples' pleaded boon bearer,
For ne'er did cross wave
Bear nobler child than he who leaves
Her port—Don Juan the brave,
To lead the heroes of the age
Against the foiled
When strength, might and rage,
Constantinople fall!

To Mary for the hosts of Juan,
All Europe's prayers arise,
For victory they pierce as one,
October's calm close skies;
And as Lepanto's azure wave
Reflects the Sunday's morn,
Two fleets, her trembling waters lave,
For battle lines are drawn;
Two fleets that such boars eyeballs brave,
To awful conflict sweep,
The Cross and Crescent hence gave Unto the empire deep.

The Fleet's holy banner streams
High o'er the deadly fin,
The crescent in blazer seems;
Two hundred thousand men
In fervent struggle to behold;
The fate of Christendom
Lepanto's conflict dread doth hold—
The victory for whom?
The victory for Christian host,
Lepanto's warm retain.
The lane of thousands Moslem lost,
And All Paulus slain!
Thwart, the pride, the Crescent's boast,
Its strength ne'er to regain!

Our Lady of the Rosary!
Lepanto's day is thine!
Our Lady Queen of Victory!
Thy power and glory shine
Through ages—history—
Our Lady Help of Christians! o'er
Thine day with fly to thee
For aid, resolve strength through thy prayer
To vanquish fiercest enemy.

MARY J. COLERAN.

Livermore, Cal., Sept. 24th, 1888.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND OF PARADISE.

There is the beautiful land above,
A sweet by exchange for all earthly love—
Where evermore is realms of deathless love,
Sweet heavenly joys await the souls that
There, weary man shall lay life's burden down
To rest forever on the peaceful shore;
There, win the glory of a deathless crown,
And reign with happy spirits evermore.

In this beautiful land there is no shore
A calm stream for weary-laden souls;
Where pure and bright expands the fadeless
shore,
Beyond the sphere that round our planet
rolls.

A few brief seasons and Earth's days of strife,
And all Time's glories fade before our eyes;
Oh, may we wake to God's Eternal Life,
In the beautiful land of Paradise.

JOHN P. MCDONELL.

Virginia City, Nev., Oct. 5, 1888.

THE RIVER OF TEARS.

Silently, swiftly, onward it flows
On to the ocean, great, vast;
Flotsam and jetsam drifting around,
Drifting or stranded—
Many are only wrecks of joys that were,
Of many hopes and loves,
The wreck of all that was wished away
In the river of years.

There by the shore on the tide flown by Grief sits on the day long
And a melody heards from the cargo
Like a requiem song
Past ships for lost souls, for there is laid,
Laid in a shroud of tears
The love that sailed for ever away
On the river of years.

And Hope with her own bright sails stands
there,
There by that tempest strewn,
Rifled in gossamer foodstuff of sunbeams,
Lost in misery's dream,
And her eyes are gazing, gazing
To where that lone horizon stars
That bears her all to the golden land
Down the river of years!

And we, too, you and I have sheltered
By that calm, calm river,
Some dreams that this autumn leaves wert lost
In its tide for ever.
What matters it all—the tide flows on
And no trifle's years,
To tell where all we loved has perished
In that river of years.

River of years, O river of years,
On thy bosom to glide
Seek through tears of blinding tears once more
To ease of morning's pride!
Back! for thy current too swift has run,
And we fear to be swept
With sailing shore where tempests have blown
Death shine so dark and dreary.

E. H. M.

THE FLOWER MIRACLE.

Seek ye a miracle? Behold these seeds,
These tiny, dusky spheres, sombrous and dull,—
I drop them in the sunless soil, and gold
A roll of earth silvered them. Flash the winds,
And resist the dry leaves. Thence there proceed
Ye blist of bloom or fragrance! all in dull
And sombrous as the fresh earth's sombre seeds.
But hither comes in June. How beautiful
The radiant flowers bloom! Dull's chemistry
Hath drawn from dusky seed and sullen clay
Essence of flowers, smells of Ambigy.
A fragrant vision fairer than the day
Blow down, proud heaven! and from the gracious Power
Which works a miracle in every flow'er!

FRANCIS C. DOUPERET.

Literary Miscellany.

Frank Harris' First Suit.

A Catholic Story in Four Chapters.

CHAPTER I.

The little town of Melville lies on the line of the New York and Lake Erie Railroad, and comprises about two hundred and one thousand inhabitants. During the summer months the number is much increased by the influx of city visitors. The Prospect House, which has a fine site on the crest of a large hill, monopolizes the hotel patronage, its only competitors being a few cottages opened as boarding-houses by some enterprising Melvillites.

One morning early in July there entered the telegraph office, which was situated in a side street, a well stirred, athletic looking personage of twenty four or twenty-five, with regular features and sharp but pleasant gray eyes. Stepping up to the raised enclosure, he addressed the lady operator.

"I wish to send a message to New York."

"Very well, sir. Please fill out a blank."

He was most unnecessarily slow in compiling that message. After almost every word, he brought his pen to a stand still and threw a quick glance at the operator.

Now, it was in the innate fitness of things that, when he looked at her, she should be examining papers or otherwise engaged; and that, when he was at his most pleasant glances she should be making a rapid survey of his countenance. One of the two must have made a miscalculation in regard to the proper moment for inspection; for as he, for the tenth time, transferred his line of vision from the perpendicular to the horizontal, he found her gaze bent full upon him. Both confused at being caught, she blushed and hastily ran her fingers through a heap of papers as if in search of some particular one, and he with crimsoned face and unsteady hand finished his writing.

"How much will it cost?"

"Seventy five cents," after examining it. Would he have it repeated at the additional expense of twenty five cents?

He would; and handed in a dollar in support of his assertion.

In a moment her nimble fingers were busy with the button, and the writer's words were flying to their destination. This girl seemed to him to be about nineteen years old. The ray has of health, deepened perhaps by the consciousness that she was being intently we chad, bloomed in her cheeks, and her brown hair clustered in waving ringlets about her forehead and temples. Her eyes, when she turned them full upon him at the conclusion of her task, proved to be those large melting ones that seem to encompass a world of space within their narrow limits.

"How long before I shall get the reply?"

"Immediately. Shall I transmit it—if it verbally?"

"I would sooner you would repeat it," he replied, with a peculiar emphasis, that plainly declared his preference for her accents to her written characters.

The quick, nueron tirk-tick soon engaged her attention, and she repeated the message at least once and a vindictive lock in Mary's direction.

"Business affairs are written in a sealed book, miss.

"Is that strictly of a business character?"

"Strictly."

"I wish you the utmost success. No, thank you. I am not going in the direction of the hotel."

With a scowl disfiguring an ordinarily pretty face, she turned out of the office, after declining his escort.

"That Miss Lisson, is a silly baby, whose temper terrises—so indulgent a father. She states forth as a sage of aristocracy in the eyes of so ignorant mother. Good morning."

CHAPTER II.

So things ran on for about three weeks As Father Navin and Mary sat down to breakfast, one morning, she said, "Father, a gentlemen asked permission to call on me this evening, and I granted it."

The old Priest looked at her in surprise.

"This is something new for you, Mary?"

"Yes, but I trust there is nothing wrong in it. You shall hear all about it."

She recounted her first and subsequent interview with Mr. Harris, and added to her recital a most exalted opinion of his character. Father Navin listened in silence. When she had concluded, he said:

"From your story of this person he appears to have acted like a gentleman. But, be careful, child. One so inexperienced as you in the ways of the world can form no idea of the amount of wickedness stored up in some men's hearts, especially in the hearts of those young fellows from the city. I do not wish to be unsympathetic, Mary. I don't think that. I merely wish to caution you against dangerous acquaintances. I have no doubt that he is a very excellent person, indeed. His desire to visit you more than half protests it. Had he invited you to visit him I should be rather likely to condemn him. It he turns out to be what you say, then by all means retain his friendship, for good companions are as beneficial as evil ones are harmful. There, child, I do not wish to spoil your digestive by a lengthy lecture. I can very soon determine the character of Mr. Harris. Rest assured all will come out right.

"Amen."

No cipher dispatches were sent that day and when Mary gave place to her rival in the evening, she thought Mr. Harris' conversation must have had a determinental effect, seeing he was lax in the reiterants of his chiefs.

At school precisely, three distinct rays at the front door announced the presence of the visitor, and in a moment he entered, followed by a tall young lady, who seemed to proposess the Priest in his favor, for a very cordial greeting passed between them. After shaking hands with Mary, he sat down.

Gradually, Father Navin led him out, and left him on politic leditative of good character or the reverse. To all these questions highly satisfactory answers were given, and, in the Priest's opinion, Mr. Harris in his mind as a very desirable acquaintance.

"Mr. Harris, how is your case in Melville progressing?" asked Mary.

"Very well, thank you, very well."

"It's a range I have not heard or read of any lawsuit in Melville lately," she continued.

"This case can hardly be addressed as a test of my professional ability," he said, with a smile. "What may be still more surprising, I am going to take it into court to-night."

"To-night!" echoed both Mary and Father Navin.

"Yes, to-night. It involves the tender question of insirimony."

"Is it a divorce suit?" asked the Priest.

"No, Father, it is not. It is a will for marriage, all quibbling aside. Let us be understood. For about a month, I have known your adopted child, and for a month I have loved her. I wish to ask your permission to end her feelings. I have reason to believe they reciprocate with mine. Should I discover that such is really the case I shall offer her a place by my side through life."

"This is rather sudden," said Father Navin.

"She shall have all the time necessary for reflection, months if need be."

"Mary, what do you say?" the old Priest asked, turning to the girl. She was pale and trembling and her voice refused to perform its function.

"Miss Lisson' Mary," continued the suitor, taking her by the hand "may I assume the position of a favored one?"

She managed to articulate "Yes."

"Pressing her hand, and parting warmly with Father Navin, he left for the hotel.

Frank's visits to the telegraph office were made without the slightest disguise now. Preteson was laid aside. Mary was the sole attraction there for him. In the evening he visited her at home and took her for a drive or a walk, Father Navin according his full consent to their trips. It was a happy period for both; but that happiness was ere long to suffer a check that threatened to ruin it forever.

Frank was seated in the parlor of the Prospect House after dinner, running over with a epil sons items inscribed in a notebook, when Miss Robbins approached him. He greeted her coldly, but laid aside his book to hear what she had to say.

"Mr. Harris," she began, taking a seat beside him, "I am going to tell you something which may prove very disagreeable to you.

"Pray spare me," he replied, lightly.

"Mr. Harris, that woman, Mary Lisson, good and pure and devoted as you think her, is the essence of deceit."

Frank's face grew almost fired, and in a hoarse voice he replied, "Miss Robbins, if you were a man, I should act differently. Now I must cut our conversation short by telling you it's a vile fabrication."

"Keep your cool, Mr. Harris," she answered, waving his avidest pain with activation. "I can prove this."

"Prove it! Have a care; this is a matter on which I will allow no trifling. You can't prove what is not true."

"But it is true and I can prove it. Listen me. At the convent I graduated from, those of the pupils who desired it, were taught telegraphy. I was one of that number. By the aid of this fortunate accomplishment, I was able to get the proof I now offer you of this woman's perfidy. Today I went to the office where we engage for New York. While waiting for its reputation, I distinctly heard the instrument tick off these words. 'Mary Lisson—May meet me at the cross roads to-night at nine. How I long to clasp you in my arms again. Ned.' Mr. Harris, that is what I heard and that is the proof I now offer you."

Frank's countenance underwent a change, ground fresh, whose face was now apparently bloodless.

"Mistake! No. If you think there is, you can soon solve your doubt. Melville cross-roads is a mile and a half from here. You can be there as soon as she. It is now half past eight now. Go and see for yourself." Hissing, with a sweeping scornsay, she left the parlor.

"Can this be true?" moaned Frank, holding his head between his hands. "Can she be deceiving me and her adopted Father? I can't believe it! Ned, yet that message. What shall I do? I'll trust her. No. I'll be there at nine, and if I find her perfidious I'll throw her over altogether.

CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.

The Patronage of Good Saint Anne.

One sultry afternoon, not very long ago, a spark from a locomotive of the Canadian Pacific Railway fell in a field in the neighborhood of the village of Sainte Anne de Bellevue, which in one of Nature's quiet and consumed in its course a large patch of Indian corn belonging to Mr. X——, who at his leisure which lay along the railway track, while another field belonging to Mr. Y——, which was ready to be reaped by the first sun equally in danger, but nothing but one or two small sheaves of oats. The neighbors who came running from near and far, congratulated the unfortunate sufferers on the sudden cessation of the fire on that side of the field to which they had not yet attend, so busy were they in endeavoring to extinguish the blaze sweeping over the stubble of Mr. X——. "Certainly there is something miraculous," said Mr. Y——, thoughtfully, "it is due to the protection of the good Saint Anne; for we had special devotions to her this Spring, which we commanced to now our grain."

It is not wonder that the Canadian habitant receives many favors from la Bonne Sainte Anne, when he is so full of piety and simple faith, so constant in his devotion that he has for her! From the habitant's hut in the Laurentides to the busy palace of the North, where the black Mr. Moore takes it easier, it is a common thing to see a pious Catholic, or a Protestant, who is not a bigot, or a Jew, who is not forgetful of those who put their trust in her,—who is quick to take the dwellers in town and country, but who has a special tenderness for the poor farmers and hardy habitans, whose water boiling enterprises benefit from the fact of some in Brittany the agricultural spirit of a thousand years. Such are the people who compose Patronage de Canada.

Chinese have no Nerves.

The North China Herald says the quality of "nerve lessness" distinguishes the Chinese from the Europeans. The Chinese can write all day, work all day, stand in one place all day, be cheated all day, be robbed every day, do distinctly tedious jobs for year and year, and dance to music that to a European and Britisher is as bad as a man who has a toothache quite quietly, and yet the Chinese are not stolid, as the Indian is, or the negro, or the Russian, or the Spaniard, but good, cheerful, fairly intelligent people, who are not low intelligence, but who have a marvellous power of not feeling. Nerves are a very modern thing, and perhaps they are a sign of progress, or of a high civilization, but they are not a sign of strength, or of the power of enduring, or of the power of doing work. The Chinaman can do without nerves. Sport or play seems to him so much trouble. He can always be whistled—and rattling machinery, deafening explosions, and shrieking children, and quarreling wives. He can sleep on the ground, on the deck, on a bed, on a chair, in any position. It would be easy to raise in China an army of a million men—say, of ten millions—tested by competitive examination as to their capacity to go to sleep across three shotted guns, and to wake up when their mouths wide open and a fly inside.

All in a Hair's Century.

The discovery of the electric telegraph.
The discovery of photo graphy.
The commencement of ocean steam navigation.
The annexation of Texas.
The war with Mexico, and the acquisition of California, and the discovery of gold that followed.
The French Revolution of 1848.
The rise and fall of Napoleon III., and the establishment of the French Republic.
The Crimean War.
The great Civil War and abolition of Slavery in the United States.
The great Franco-German War and the unification of Germany.
The partial emancipation of the Russian serfs.
The extension of Russian power into Central Asia.
The discovery of the sources of the Nile and Niger, and the exploration of interior Africa.
The invention of the telephone.

Join a Pious Society.

Belong to some pious congregation—either to that of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, or to the Third Order of St. Francis, the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, the Confraternity of the Holy Rosary, or the Sacred Heart, which is called the Apostleship of Prayer. Why?

1. Surmadin may in doing so.
2. A man lives more holily.
3. He falls into sin less frequently.
4. When he falls, it is less grievously.
5. He rises more easily.
6. Walks more cautiously.
7. He is more cautious.
8. He is more copiously bedewed with the dew of divine grace from heaven.
9. He satisfies divine justice, and avoids Purgatory with more facility.
10. He aspires with greater confidence and resignation.
11. And is crowned more gloriously in the celestial mansions.

The Editors' Way.

Hav. Mr. Salah (to desk editor of the Daily Roarer)—Mr. Scrawer, are you going to publish my prayer in full?

Desk Editor (indignantly)—Is full! I guess not. (Changing his tone)—however, we will do what we can for you. By saying out the fab-dab and gull I guess we'll have room to put in the poetry.

—Colonel Thomas M. Vincent, Assistant Adjutant General, has arrived at Washington from St. Paul and will be assigned to duty at once to relieve Colonel Sheridan, late military Secretary to the General of the Army. Colonel Sheridan is now at Newquitt preparing the memoirs of the late Gen. Ord.

SCOTT'S PORTION OF PURE Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

For Wasting Diseases of Children.

Where the digestive powers are feeble and the ordinary food does not seem to nourish the child, this new basis or food and medicine, gives strength and flesh at once, and is almost as palatable as milk. Take no other.

IDEAL SACRED PORTRAITS

Attractive Topics of Half Century.

In the Io Monn "B. I. D." says: Some there is no portrait of our Lord or His blessed Mother universally regarded as authentic, we have often wished that we could have an "Ideal" made—the highest ideal portrait—and that all others, except true copies of the original, were prohibited from being exposed in churches. We have heard of Christians, by educated men, who have your approaches in the Chinese Church, but very many depart from it English—and all Italian, French, German, and Spanish—they to look for resistance for some may to said—I pictures of the Blessed Mother. If a pious Christian sees a pic ture and is told that it is the head of Christ and afterwards sees another with different features and an unpleasing expression, and is told the same, the effect upon him is not unpleasant. I do not mean that different expressions of the same ideal features might not occur, but the features should not be changed so much as to be unclearly. The most perfect head of Christ would have the beauty and grandeur of humanity, but no predominant expression of compassion, or sorrow, or indignation, or suffering. These passions would, perhaps, be left to be inferred by the preacher, the picture in worship good and proper for the particular time, passes away, does not leave a lasting impression, and very shocking God-like ideal. In my opinion the ideal of the crucifixion, if may be said, especially in the case of the Lady, that the Saviour is in the place of the face or station regarding female beauty, ought to be a pleasing and humane; the face of the Mother of Christ should be painted with sensitive features in Palestine and Italy, features of Christ, and the face which is most like the mother and sister of the Saviour, is the ideal face, before I have a more reason in this, or the one picture (say that of Pius IX.) I have seen the ideal face seen but in Italy or Flanders by Italians and Flemings. Perhaps, in the Spanish age, one seen in various countries and in pictures, and in the same age, the ideal face of Christ, and the mother, so that the consideration has for the same form that it once had. Time, the lapse of ages might be in greater but that time is gone in the habit, that the ideal face of the Blessed Virgin—always and perpetually in—and the ideal face of Christ—and the ideal face of the Blessed Virgin—is a most influence of faith between the Christian and the Jew, and the most powerful of the Power of Religion. For example, the Pope, the Pope, the Pope

THE MONITOR.

THIRTY-SEVENTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1888.

The Catholic School of Mass-Containing Malicious Falsehoods.

"The Romanist Method of Killing our Public Schools," was the caption of an anti-Catholic article which Brother McCrary inserted in last week's Monitor, in order that his brethren might see how fought he had grown cold in his bigotry. Now we propose to turn the tables on our Methodist confrere, by exposing the malignant falsehoods which he purposely manufactured in order to demonstrate his diabolical fact for detraction. The charge brought against Catholics, in the article before us, are as follows:

1. They declared them (public schools) to be infidel, which we always protested against.

2. They did all they could to banish the Bible from the schools, and infidel with atheism and left it to do that, and to purge from our text-books all matter that could by any stretch be declared religious.

3. Then they charged our schools with being godless, having diligently endeavored to make them so.

In reply to these charges it is only necessary to point out the fact that the Catholics were right when they charged that "our Public Schools" were sectarian, as the Protestant bible was read therein! And then, when the bible was omitted from the list of studies, and every iota of Christian literature dropped from the curriculum, did not the schools become godless? Nor is it true—as Bro. McCrary says—that Catholics helped to make them so, for the excellent reason that those who transformed the Christian system of American democratic educational schools into the present infidel-making machine, never intended the Public Schools of America to be anything else than anti-Christian in their influence.

Nor is it by any means true that Catholics ever proposed any Public School text-books of "all matter that could by any means be declared religious." The compilation and publication of all such text-books have been left entirely to Protestant presses and pedagogues of the same persuasion, and while these gentlemen were busying their brains to find out how they could keep God out of their text-books, Catholics were busy building school houses wherein to teach the knowledge of God to every child that entered their portals!

4. Now they do all they can to demoralize our school system by placing women in the Principal's position, by putting control therein into women their tool, by filling their halls with cheap and as yet experienced teachers, by exhibiting lewd and textbook-like and demoralizing their expulsion from our schools, by putting into our list of text-books works of no merit and no standing among literary men, by doing all in their power to keep children from going to the public schools, and, finally, by proposing a separate school system for their own benefit.

When a Methodist preacher sets out to "make Rome howl," he can falsify faster than a cat can wink! And so Catholics determine "our Public Schools" by short, by enemies to the system on Boards of Education! Bro. McCrary is mad! Where is the law that prevents Catholics from being eligible to any office in the land? Catholics may their proportion of Public School tax, and Brother McCrary will have to revive the Declaration Bloc Laws before he can keep Catholics from off Boards of Education.

If the "best and most experienced teachers" in "our Public Schools" are found to be teaching falsehood concerning Catholic dogmas to the pupils, or if they are found to be incompetent or immoral, it is only right that they should be discharged, and Catholic Directors should be commended for putting them out. It is also just as untrue on the part of Dr. McCrary to assert that Catholics have anything to do with text-books, teachers or public schools, inasmuch as a large majority of those who manage these institutions are generally non-Catholics and consequently anti-Catholic.

No Catholic Bishop, Priest or layman ever used his influence to keep any non-Catholic child from going to a Public School. The Prelates of the American Church all declare the Public Schools to be "good enough as far as they go," for those non-Catholics who desire to patronize them but the Catholic Church, as the Church of God, must teach her children the truths of Christianity, hence Catholics build their own schools, support them out of their own private means, and then patiently accept the fine flung at them by Methodist preachers.

6. The remnant of the Roman Catholic Church be a pro rata appurtenant of the school fund to the Catholic schools by our school system.

It is false to assert that the Catholic Church has ever demanded a pro rata appurtenant of the Public School Fund, and Bro. McCrary here false witness against his neighbor when he said so.

6. The Roman Catholic foreign Priest has no sympathy whatever with the American idea of education. His plan is to make as exclusive, benighted, bigot of each child under his charge. He would not have a school where American children should be brought together by good, sound, well qualified American teachers.

"The Roman Catholic foreign Priest" is a great sycamore to all gospel sharps of the Methodist stripe. But the best evidence that the "foreign Priest" is fully in sympathy with American education, is found in the fact that the schools founded by such Priests are crowded with pupils! It is true that these "Roman Catholic foreign Priests" will not have boys and girls taught together, as they have too great a knowledge of that evil as it exists in "our Public Schools," to risk the destruction of the maidenly modesty and virtue of the daughters of honestly-wedded parents, for the chance of trying an experiment already condemned in nearly every country in Europe. These "Roman Catholic foreign Priests" believe thoroughly in preserving the innocence of the youth of both sexes, hence thousands of Protestant parents send their children to schools established by them, rather than risk their children among a promiscuous crowd of teachers and pupils who think that a knowledge of God is altogether unnecessary as the mainstay of morality in the human mind. All good citizens, therefore will say "Heaven bless the Roman Catholic foreign Priests!"

7. The deliberate intent of the Roman Catholic Church is to set a upon our school fund as soon as possible, and to make a division of it, by which it hopes to accomplish the idiotic design of breaking up our magnificent American national system of public schools.

False again! The Catholic Church has no intention of seizing upon a single cent of our school fund, neither in the present or in the remote future. In fact the School Intendants, Directors, teachers, and the hundred and one hangers on to the Public School mock, are such Hypocrisies and speculating that there is not one dollar left out of every million for anybody else to seize upon! And it is this very self-same extravagance—the peculiarities of Public School managers—that will ultimately undermine the whole system and leave the larger public school houses as empty of scholars as Bro. McCrary's Methodist mind was void of truth when it was manufacturing these malicious falsehoods against the Catholic Church.

"The magnificent American National System of Public Schools" is in no danger from the Catholic Church, but the danger comes especially from the men who finger the finances, who give out contracts to favorites for commissions, who procure positions for pay, who introduce text-books for a percentage, and who keep shouting all the time "with the leathern lungs of a Methodist preacher at a camp-meeting, "Catholics stand back! Do not dare to lay a finger on the Public Schools," while the pockets of the same individuals are filled with public plunder. These are the Samsons who will pull down "our magnificent American National Public Schools," unless the tax payers stop their extravagance and stealing.

New Home for Jesuit Novices.

The extraordinary progress which the Catholic Church is making in every portion of the United States, calls for more priests to labor in all sections of the country than our Prelates are able to procure. In the older Dioceses, wherein are thickly-populated cities, the number of assistants in each parish has to be doubled, trebled, and even quadrupled, in order to meet the increased demands upon the Clergy for their spiritual ministrations. The opening of new Dioceses also develope new fields for missionary labor, and thus it may be said in the year of our Lord, 1888, with as much truth as it was proclaimed by our Divine Saviour Himself, during His sojourn on earth, "The harvest, indeed, is great, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

America is going to be the greatest Catholic country in the world in course of time, and, as years roll on, the need of Priests will become more urgent in order to carry the Bread of Life to those Catholics who enter upon the newly-developed fields of enterprise in the Republic, which still has millions of acres of arable land inviting industrious thousands of settlers to make happy homes therein.

Hitherto the American Hierarchy have looked to Europe to supply them with subjects for the priesthood, but the demands made upon the Ecclesiastical Seminaries there for missionaries to convert the savages of Africa, Australia and other distant regions of the earth, as well as to keep pace with the urgent request for priests for every other portion of the world, renders it very difficult for American Bishops to procure priests in sufficient numbers to feed and care for the flocks entrusted to the American Episcopate.

For these reasons Ecclesiastical Seminaries and Novitiates are increasing in this country, the latest enterprise of that religious character being the NOVITIATE OF THE SACRED HEART, erected at Los Gatos, Santa Clara County, by the Jesuit Fathers, who hitherto have provided accommodations for their ecclesiastical students in their College at Santa Clara. But finding that this plan not any longer feasible, the Fathers very wisely concluded to purchase seventy acres of land at Los Gatos, and to erect thereon a building specially designed for a Novitiate that would accommodate at least fifty ecclesiastical students, who would form a community of themselves, and be constantly in the atmosphere of retirement so necessary for those who design to serve God in the spirit of obedience, poverty and chastity.

The Novitiate of the Sacred Heart is most picturesquely situated on the side of a hill which rises covered with vines and fruit trees behind it. The view from the building is superb. The valley of Santa Clara with its orchards, farms and villages, and the Bay of San Francisco beyond, are stretched out as on a map, flanked by hills on either side, and bounded in the distance by the high mountains of the Contra Costa Range. The view reaches from Mount Diablo to Pescadero, and on a clear day the steamers can be seen plying between San Francisco and Alameda, while San Jose and Santa Clara are apparently under the eye—though ten miles away.

The building, which was erected after plans drawn by Mr. H J. Crinch of this city, is of brick, and with its tower surmounted by the Cross, is a conspicuous object for many miles around. It consists of a central block with two wings running further back than the main building, and a story lower which gives an appearance of dignity to the whole. The kitchen is detached from the main building and only one story in height above the basement, but is connected with the house by a wide passage. The center building is sixty-four feet in front and fifty-five in depth. The wings are each seventy eight feet in depth and twenty-five in front. The center tower, fourteen feet square, projects half its width from the centre of the main front, and marks the chief entrance distinctly from the general mass. Above the basement the central building rises three stories in height, and a fourth story is included in the Mansard roof, which is provided with dormitories for the lay Brothers belonging to the house. On the sides the wings are only two stories in height above the basement, and are finished with plain sloping roofs. The tower rises symmetrically above the front and crowns the whole building.

Internally, the first and second floors are divided by side halls running through the whole length and width of the building in the form of a Cross, with doorways at each end and sash doors to give greater light. On the first floor the front is occupied by the parlors on each side of the entrance hall, beyond which are class rooms for the Novices and junior Scholastics. In the rear of the building facing the south are the recreation rooms and library. The refectory, a fine room forty-five feet by twenty-four feet, is in the south-west wing. The upper floors are divided into chambers for the infirmary and also for the Father Superior and his assistants. The east wing on this floor is occupied by the Chapel. The third floor, which only extends through the central building, is divided by the stair hall into two large dormitories, one facing west down on three aisles, and measuring fifty-three feet by twenty-five in width. One of these is for the Novices, the other for the young Scholastics who also reside in the Novitiate during a part of their term of studies. Above these are similar dormitories for the lay Brothers, in the Mansard roof which forms the upper part of the central building.

The water supply is obtained from an abundant spring about a mile from the house, to which it is conveyed by pipes, which pressure sufficient to carry it over the highest part of the roof. The gas is supplied from Los Gatos, and the whole building is provided with stone heaters of the latest pattern, which can be used in case of cold weather. The latter is, however, a very rare occurrence in Los Gatos, which enjoys a much warmer climate in winter than the low grounds around San Jose, and Santa Clara. It is altogether, it would be difficult to find anywhere a more beautiful spot than the grounds of the Novitiate which we have just described. But beautiful as they are at present, they will form a still more picturesque scene when the improvements contemplated by Rev. P. Mass, S.J., Superior in charge, have been completed, and among the more prominent of which are a spacious grotto in which will be placed a magnificent life-size statue of Our Lady of Lourdes, modeled after the famous shrine of our Blessed Lady in France. This grotto will be erected on the brow of one of the adjacent hills, and will be quite visible to sojourners in the valley beneath. A Calvary consisting of the fourteen Stations of the Cross will be erected on another eminence convenient to the Novitiate, so that students can perform the pious exercise of the Way of the Cross in the open air. In course of time other improvements will be added, so that this lovely spot, dedicated to the cause of Religion, may attract many souls to serve God in the sweet solitude.

Already there are a number of Novices studying for the Priesthood in the Sacred Heart, but there may be many more Catholic young men on this coast who desire to be Priests of the Sacred Heart, by joining the great Order he founded, and thereby not only save their own souls but also assist in the salvation of hundreds of others, and for the performance of such an Apostolate they will be made to shine as stars for all eternity!

The building is erected, a Faculty of competent teachers are ready to receive students, and those who desire to become perfect in God's service and also in the all-important science of saving souls. All that is needed now is that such moral pushing men should "enter into the joy of the Lord" by assuming a few years within the hallowed walls of this beautiful Novitiate sacrificed by and dedicated to the Sacred Heart. Who will hearken to the cry!

Mayhap some young men may deem themselves not sufficiently educated or sufficiently advanced in Christian perfection to become members of the Society of Jesus, but all of such to say Deus! strate devotion to God's holy will, place yourself within the Sacred Heart, and He who chosen the lowe out of the many that are called, will accomplish the rest.

Other young men may deem the rules or the vows of the Jesuit Order too strict to observe or too difficult to keep. But when God is with us all things are possible. He makes every back and every burden, and that Holy Spirit Whom Our Father sends to the short lamb," will most assuredly manifest His greatest love to those who volunteer in His service, by making the way of Our Cross which they must follow, as smooth as may be consistent with the earthly calvary every true follower of Christ must travel in this vale of tears! The servant is not greater than the Master, and as the Son of God—after whom the Society of Jesus is called—suffered and died for the salvation of mankind, so must every son of St. Ignatius be prepared to "go and do likewise," as far as a creature in this sin-cursed sphere can imitate the unlimited charity and the limitless mercy of the Creator.

We hope those lines may fall beneath the vision of many a courageous young man who will give a practical answer to the call of our Blessed Redeemer: "Take up thy Cross and follow Me." His Church needs servants in her sanctuaries, and those who are called to serve God in their youth to God, so that they can serve Him in old age and earn the crown of eternal life by persevering in the path which He has marked out for those who would be crucified on earth in order to enjoy an eternal Easter in Heaven.

If there are any such young men among the readers of the MONITOR, and we feel that there are many such, to them we say:

"Fear not! Spurn the worldling's laughter,
Thou shalt find a lamp hereafter
To lie near thine temple thine now."

It is stated that the principal witness against Mr Parnell at the Special Commission will be Mr. P. J. Sheridan.

—Mr Michael Davitt is engaged on a History of the Land Leagues in Ireland and America. Mr. Davitt expects the work to occupy him during the winter.

—Amongst the subscriptions announced at a meeting of the Parnell Indemnity Fund Committee in the Reform Club, Liverpool, was one of £20 from the Marchioness of Ripon.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BULLS.

John of Salisbury Dissected. Rev King Hears Of Consequence the "Adrian" Bull—Salisbury's "Metalogicus"—Who Wrote the Final Chapter? Proof that it was not the work of John of Salisbury.

It was impossible that any false Bull attributed to Pope Adrian IV., and containing forgery, could have fully promulgated during the lifetime of King Louis VII. of France, for the cogent reason that the fraud would at once have been discovered in consequence of the King of France having in his possession the Letter which Pope Adrian IV. sent to him, in which that Pontiff flatly refused to give his assent to any attempt at invading Ireland, which that Prince in conjunction with King Henry II. had planned, and which Letter King Louis had presented to Adrian IV. for his approval.

It is for this potent reason, therefore, that not a single trace of the huge Adrian Bull is to be found in any document issued in England prior to the year 1180, which was the year in which King Louis VII. died. This incident will appear all the more singular when we bring to mind the fact that a number of occasions occurred when King Henry could have made good use of a genuine Bull—had he possessed one—during the many years which tra spired between that period and the year in which the forged Bull, and the year when it first appeared in print by means of the instrumentality of that champion historical falsifier of the twelfth century—Giraldus Cambrensis.

If the Bull of Pope Adrian was genuine, why is it that such a document was secretly concealed for upwards of twenty years after the death of Pope Adrian? Nor was it until King Louis of France had been for a some time in his tomb, that Cambrensis injected into his "Topographia Hibernica," for the first time, the dubious document falsely supposed to have been issued by that Pontiff.

The answer to this question is very simple. When Pope Adrian was dead, and King Louis was entombed also, the human witnesses who had the power and knowledge which would enable them to discover and expose the fraud, could no longer offer any opposition; hence there was no risk to run by first injecting the forged document into the "Compass of Fools" and then by Cambrensis, so as to prepare the minds of those who perused the work of Giraldus, for the belief that such a Bull really existed in the archives of the Vatican.

Cambrensis says that the Adrian Bull was procured by John of Salisbury, and that circumstance adds to the fraud. We have already exposed the calumnies and the false levels with which Cambrensis filled his book entitled the "Conquest of Ireland," and we will now show that John of Salisbury people deplore his loss, but no one should weep at him on account of his death. Indeed, though he had a mother, and a brother, he fared no more than Gaul does. He declared, both publicly and privately, that he loved me better than he did any one else in the whole world. He had such an opinion of me that he felt pleasure in opening his heart and his conscience to me whenever an opportunity occurred itself. The Bishop of Poitiers, he was pleased to have me as his guest at his table, and, notwithstanding my epigrams, he used to say that I was a shrewd man. He also used to say that I was a man who could be recorded and given to the Muses. He also used to say that I was a man who could be possessed by him, by hereditary right, as Adrian's Letters, which was preserved to him (the Bishop) alone. For all the islands, by virtue of an ancient right, are regarded as belonging to the Roman Church. Besides, Pope Adrian sent through me a gold ring adorned with a ruby of great value, for the king's right of invasion to be fixed and strengthened in Ireland, and that Prince in conjunction with King Henry II. had planned, and which Letter King Louis had presented to Adrian IV. for his approval.

It is for this potent reason, therefore, that not a single trace of the huge Adrian Bull is to be found in any document issued in England prior to the year 1180, which was the year in which King Louis VII. died. This incident will appear all the more singular when we bring to mind the fact that a number of occasions occurred when King Henry could have made good use of a genuine Bull—had he possessed one—during the many years which tra spired between that period and the year in which the forged Bull, and the year when it first appeared in print by means of the instrumentality of that champion historical falsifier of the twelfth century—Giraldus Cambrensis.

If the Bull of Pope Adrian was genuine, why is it that such a document was secretly concealed for upwards of twenty years after the death of Pope Adrian? Nor was it until King Louis of France had been for a some time in his tomb, that Cambrensis injected into his "Topographia Hibernica," for the first time, the dubious document falsely supposed to have been issued by that Pontiff.

The answer to this question is very simple. When Pope Adrian was dead, and King Louis was entombed also, the human witnesses who had the power and knowledge which would enable them to discover and expose the fraud, could no longer offer any opposition; hence there was no risk to run by first injecting the forged document into the "Compass of Fools" and then by Cambrensis, so as to prepare the minds of those who perused the work of Giraldus, for the belief that such a Bull really existed in the archives of the Vatican.

Cambrensis says that the Adrian Bull was procured by John of Salisbury, and that circumstance adds to the fraud. We have already exposed the calumnies and the false levels with which Cambrensis filled his book entitled the "Conquest of Ireland," and we will now show that John of Salisbury

Feast of the Holy Rosary.

The Great Feast Joyfully Celebrated by the Faithful.

The Holy Rosary is the great Hymn of the Rosary, the celebration of which Sunday is always an great festival for the vast congregations of Catholics in charge of the order of St. Dominic. One of the largest congregations that ever assembled in Christian church in this city, was present at High Mass on Sunday last, and it was a most exhilarating sight to witness the manner in which every heart of the congregation seemed to be filled in consequence of being children of the Holy Mother of God.

The ceremony of blessing the rose beds place at 9:30 o'clock, at which time there were fully 2,000 persons in the church. Silks, satins, velvets, galloons, and sparkling in the spacious vestibule.

High Mass was celebrated by Rev. Thomas O'Neill, O. P., assisted by Father Hilier, O. P., as Deacon, and Rev. Father Wilson, O. P., as Sub-deacon. During the Mass the choir rendered the chant portions of the service in a manner calculated to excite devotion.

The sermon was preached by Rev. J. A. Hardy, O. P., and was filled with that rich eloquence for which the Dominicans are so celebrated. A very good half an hour was spent and the vast congregation seemed to show, by the attention with which they listened, that they felt in being called by almighty God to participate in one of the fine and not only beautiful but most Christian festivals in the Christian calendar.

The Rosary Confraternity of Women in the Rosary (named Ancora Sab. this year) in connection with the Rosary and the Holy Angels, with the piety of Christian Nations, celebrated the Feast of the Rosary in the Dominican Church, through the intercession of the Queen of the Holy Rosary, for the conversion of Sinners, the Exaltation of the Holy Church, the Peace of Christian Nations, and the Unity of Christian Princes

Farm and Home.

Diphtheria Spread by Cats.

Domestic animals have often not only been suspected but found guilty of spreading infection. In his report on the recent sustained prevalence of diphtheria in Ex-5.11, Dr. Bruce Low, of the Medical Department of the Local Government Board, incidentally states that during the continuance of the epidemic six cats died or were killed in considerable numbers from illness, and in December 1897, and January 1898, there was a large mortality among those animals, so much so that the attention of the dog commissioner was directed to it. He stated that never in his previous experience had he seen so many dead cats in the dog lamps. Some households, owing their cats ill, destroyed them. Though there were no known cases of diphtheria occuring in the practice of veterinary surgeons at Exeter, yet they saw many cases of "influenza" among animals at this time. The following is an illustration of the possible connection between diphtheria in children and in cats. A little boy was taken ill with what proved to be fatal diphtheria. On the first day of his illness he was sick, and the cat, which was in the room at the time, licked the vomit on the floor. In a few days (the child meanwhile having died) the animal was noticed to be ill and to be suffering from so severe, and at to those of the dead boy, the venom destroyed her. During the early part of its illness the cat had been seen out in the back yard at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin had been cut in the back yards at night. The second animal, which however recovered, was the pet and playmate of four little girls who, grieved at the illness of their favorite, nursed it with great care. All four girls developed diphtheria, their mother being convinced they got it from the cat; and, indeed, no other source of contact with infection could be discovered. It is easy to imagine a cat catching an infectious disease like diphtheria when we remember how often milk and other unused food from the sick room is given to the cat, or by some people thrown out into the back yard for the benefit of their neighbors cats if they have none of their own. It is a frequent occurrence to see children carrying cats in their arms, and even kissing them. It is obvious that if the cats were ill with diphtheria the children under such circumstances would almost inevitably contract the disease.—London Sanitary Record.

Little Romances.

A Scotch bandle took his sweetheart to a churchyard, and, showing her a dark corner, said "Mary, my lass, in there, Wullie used you like to be there?" It was a grim way of proposing, but Mary was a sensible Scotch lassie and she accepted him.

Mr. Johnson convinced his sweetheart of his appreciation of her by taking her finger to poke the tobacco into the bowl of his pipe.

David Webster proposed to Miss Fatcher while aiding her to unravel a skein of thread. "Grace," said he "we have been undying knots; let us see if we cannot tie one which will not untie in a lifetime."

The brothers Jacob and William Grimm, authors of the wonderful fairy stories, considered that one or the other should marry. Oblivious friends found a suitable lady for Jacob, but he declined to do the courting, so William acted as proxy. In doing so he fell in love with the lady himself, which troubled him greatly, as he did not want to betray Jacob. The letter solved the dilemma by telling William that he could have her.

Horne, in his Table Talk, gives an account of a lover who walked three miles every evening for fourteen years to meet his sweetheart, besides dogging her home on Sunday afternoons. The distance travel ed was more than 15,000 miles. For the first seven years he only stood and sorted in the door-posts, but for the remaining seven he ventured to hang his hat on a peg in the passage and sit in one kitchen settle. They were finally married and lived happily afterwards that their long, cool and deliberate courtship failed to be of profit to them.

The German Housewife.

In the richest German household the mistress superintends the kitchen and lends a hand to the cook. There are dishes which she always makes with her own hands because her Fritz likes them so. She may boast thirty-two quarterings on her escutcheon and be very proud of her lineage, but she has no nonsensical ideas about its being degrading to put on a coarse apron, lard a piece of veal, make jams, or dole out with her own hands pennies that are to be put into the potato stew. She keeps her best attire for Sundays and makes it serve on many of those festal days, for she does not follow fashion blindly or in a hurry. Ordinary days she dresses with a plainness that would excite the contempt of a French woman; but then her ordinary pursuits do not prevent her being the intellectual equal of her French or Belgian sister. She reads serious books that she may be able to converse as an equal with her well-taught sons, she practises music that she may remain on a level with her daughters, who are trained to be brilliant pianists, and she finds time to read the newspapers in order that she may understand what her Fritz has to say about the topics of the day.

Lemon Pudding.

For this the scrunch only of stale bread must be used. Half fill a small baking dish with it, remove it to a basin and pour over it just enough hot milk to make it soft, grate into this the rind of a large lemon, add the juice, strained from the pipe, sweeten it to taste and mix all well together. Heat up an egg with as much milk as necessary to fill up the dish, pour this over the bread, mix well and having buttered the dish, pour the preparation into it; put little bits of butter on top of the pudding and round the edge of the dish, and bake it for an hour until of a nice brown color. Strew a little powder of sugar over the top and serve. This mixture can be baked within a crust of pastry.

A Cheap Ice Chest.

Take two dry goods boxes, one of which is enough smaller than the other to leave a space all round of about three inches when it is placed inside. Fill the space between the boxes with newspaper packed closely, and cover with a heavy lid made to fit neatly inside the larger box. Insert a small pipe in the bottom of the chest to carry off the water from the melting ice, and you have a very cheap and tolerably effective ice box for family or grocers' use.

Fretting Will Cause Dyspepsia.

We all recognize the loss of appetite that follows anxiety or the sudden shock of grief; but we are not sufficiently alive to trace the same inevitable connection between fretting and dyspepsia. Yet it is certain that we can our digestion every time we sit down to eat after an attack of worry, as it would be wave we forced to eat so meal after a heavy sorrow.

—A geek of some note says that if peaches are peeled and placed in water for half an hour they will retain their color

Family Fun.

The Narrowest kind of an Escape

They were sitting together on the veranda in the dim twilight. The robin had sung his last song, and the fireflies were beginning to light their lamps. The pensive beauty of an early-late-year summer evening was about them, and from the stone canopy the planets and the brighter of the stellar lights were beginning to peep, those silent but eloquent heralds of the night. It was an hour for lovers and poetry.

"I suppose, Mr. Jones," said the maiden, breaking an eloquent pause, "I suppose you intend to marry some day?"

"I do, Miss Smith."

"And you mean to be a kind husband, no doubt?"

"I intend to be a model in that respect."

"You will surround your wife with every comfort, furnish her with plenty of pocket money, stay at home with her evenings instead of going to some horrid club, treat her mother, if she has one, with kindness and respect and all that sort of thing! ha! ha! Are you young man in earnest enough—you will be this and that! I have heard of you." And she shook her finger playfully at the youth.

"You may indulge in raillery Miss Smith, but, I assure you, you have exactly described my intentions. You may mock, but I have made up my mind that when I am married I will be everything an amiable and affectionate wife could desire."

"That being the case," said she, "and a few days before the est of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin also been cut in the back yards at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin also been cut in the back yards at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin also been cut in the back yards at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin also been cut in the back yards at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a few doors further off was noticed to be ill. Her skin also been cut in the back yards at night, as usual. A few days later the cat of a neighbor who lived a

It was Awful.

"A baby in a house is a well spring of joy and our one dear little Horace in the night and joy of our lives." wrote Mr Topkins in a letter to a friend the other day, and then he got up and walked over to the grate in which his own little well spring of joy had been yelling steadily for an hour and said:

"Are you going to howl for ever? You best everything for yelling and screaming that I ever saw in all the days of my life. I believe in my soul that you are two thirds hyena. It's enough to drive a fellow crazy to be shut up an hour with you! I would like to have another such a prosing thing as you are around for a bottom dollar. I wish your mother would hurry home and let me go away to my club or some other place where I could have some peace. Oh, this is awful, awful!"

A Willy Lawyer.

A good story is told of Pettigrew, of South Carolina, the great lawyer of a generation ago. He was practicing at one time before a judge who was a bachelor and who had a son and a very hard working officer. It came to be Monday Thursday, and Pettigrew and the Judge's son and Pettigrew thought they would like an adjournment of court around Good Friday. Inquiries were directed to make the motion. "Your Honor," he said, "I desire to move that the court adjourn over to-morrow." "Why should the court adjourn over to-morrow, when the docket is so crowded?" asked the Judge. "Because," said Pettigrew, "to-morrow is Good Friday, and some of us would like to go to church." "No," said the Judge decidedly, after a moment's thought, "the court will sit to-morrow as usual." "Very well, your honor," replied Pettigrew, adding as he turned away, "I know there is a precedent, for Pontius Pilate held court on the first Good Friday."

Clear.

"You say the coat is three shillings?"

"Tree shillin', mian friend."

"And you warrant it all wool?"

"All wool except the puttons and de puttun holes."

"Ah! but how can you afford to sell an all-wool coat for three shillings?"

"Mian friend, I does wonder you tax sorrhired, my dear wool in dot goat is worth as tree shillin', so help me Mahomet!"

"Then you lose money on it."

"Mian Gott! You maps me dired. But mian frien', I tell you von lottle segret, and donned you'll keep it way. Ee focus on de backs of dose sheeps vot grow dot vool ma Madin, and ha! ha! ha! ee gat rer dections!"

A Dead Item.

"Pa," asked a speculative youngster, "was I made of dust?"

"Certainly, my son, we all were."

"Jiminy! mud is common mud then like ragged hoy out there?"

"Yes," admitted the puzzled father "Just the same. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, I thought maybe as I was stuck a nice little boy I might be made of diamond dust."

Pungent Paragraphs.

Hired girl (to tramp)—Go way, I won't give you nothing.

Tramp (from Boston)—Particular grammar. Goodbye.

"Tom sleeping is delightful, Miss Echal," said Mr. Hove, "It fairly carries me away."

"Indeed!" returned Miss Echal, with a yearning look at the clock. "It had it'ne good it.

Miss Pert (just arrived from the city)—Have you been anything yourself, Mr. Dasher?

Mr. Dasher (who has been at the seaside two weeks)—No, I'm awfully dull, you know. No sentiment—nobody drown and—nothing at all.

Miss Pert—Well somebody must start the fun; why don't you!

"Get yourself full of your subject," said the professor "Connect yourself with it, and then your essay will write itself."

"Yes, sir," said Dodgeer, and Miss Coldspring, "but my essay is on 'Hum the cause of it.'"

"You are very late to night, George," said the girl, half reproachfully.

"Yes, dear. Your father's new dog met me at the gate, and I've been trying to make friends with him."

The Modern Bathing Suit.

Can's you spare me a little money, papa? How much, dear?

Well I want to buy enough material to make one of them a fashionable bathing suite How much is this stuff yard?

Three dollars.

All right, my dear. Get what you want. Here is half a dollar.

BENZIGER BROTHERS
NEW YORK 36 & 38 Barclay Street.
CINCINNATI, O., 143 Main Street.
CHICAGO, ILL., 178 Madison St.
Manufacturers and Importers of Banners AND Flags
of all kinds.
Scarfs, Sashes, Collars, Badges, Hats, Caps, Metal Badges, Emblems, etc., etc.
Banner Crosses, Knobs, Spears, Eagles, Poles, etc.
Embroideries, Oil Paintings, Silks, Damasks, Cretonnes, Fringes, Monetine, etc.
Send for our Illustrated Price-list.
It will prove to any one's advantage to consult us before placing orders.
The leading House in Republic.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.
ROBERTS & KELLY,
Merchant Tailors,
Have Removed from 103 Market Street to more elegant quarters,
103 THIRD ST.,
Near Mission,
Where they would be pleased to meet their former friends and patrons.

RUPTURE.
NO SHOTS "TREATMENTS" PRETENDED CURE
Positively cured in 30 days. No cutting, no pain, no detention from business. Cures guaranteed, or no pay. Consultation free. Truss Co. Pamphlet free. Address MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS CO. MFRS., 704 Chemical Bldg., San Francisco, Cal., or 704 Scott Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS.
New Proprietors and Managers.
New Road Avoiding the Creek Crossings
THESE CELEBRATED SPRINGS ARE SITUATED in the Valley of Gilroy, Santa Clara County, Cal., a complete recreation has been created and life glow is a delightful order. F. O., W. F. Ent., and Telegraph Office on premises. Take the S. P. R. R. Train (only) from Depot, cor. Fourth and Townsend streets, San Francisco, for Gilroy.
ROBT. & SON, Proprietors and Managers.

JOB PRINTING.
Any of the Rev Cleary, Principals of schools Society officials or Business men who desire any or money by having their Job Printing executed at the Lowest Rates, at Ed Mc Cormick Bros., 410 Sansome street, the most profitable place in the city to patronize. ☞ Call and get estimates and be convinced.

CURE FOR DEAF
Perfectly Restored Hearing. Cures Deafness, Noises in the Head, Catarrh, Etc. Sent Free. Whether Deaf or Not. Write for Our Book with Proofs. Free. Address Dept. 1 THE NICAL INSTITUTE, 1122 Broadway, New York.

ARMSTRONG & NIKLAUS,
GROCERS.
Butter, Eggs, Teas & Coffees
A SPECIALTY.
2952 and 2957 Sixteenth St.,
Near Valencia and Mission Sts.

Marble! Granite! Statuary!
W. H. McCORMICK,
Importer and Manufacturer of
ITALIAN AND AMERICAN MARBLE, AMERICAN Hard Brick Grotto, Mahogany and Stone Vases, Urns and Fountains.
1422 Market St., between City Hall Ave. and Larkin St., San Francisco.

B. BRADLEY,
Painting, Whitening,
AND PAPER HANGING,
923 Mission Street, 923
Telephone No. 3064

McKENNA & PURCELL,
Hay, Grain and Commission
MERCHANTS,
Consignments Solicited,
Shipping Orders a Specialty.
214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

WEDDING PRESENTS,
A SET OF
PRICE'S Famous California-Made
CARVERS
His Own Make and Design. Challenge the World. Secrets of Imitations.

McCORMICK BROS.,
Book and Job Printers,
410 Sansome St., 410

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street.
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor
(Late Broadway Hotel.)

DR. H. CRAIGIE,
DENTIST.
All Operations in Dentistry Performed.
TEETH EXTRACTED PAINLESSLY.
806 Market St, Phelan Building.

CATHOLIC
MORTUARY CARDS.
Beautiful Catholic Designed
MEMORIAM CARDS,
Bold Price and Illustrated Styles.
Printed in the Neatest and Cheapest Manner by
McCORMICK BROS.,
410 Sansome Street.
☞ A specimen variety of sample cards cheerfully on hand to select from.

ARCHITECTS.
WILLIS F. BOSS. F. A. SCHMIDT.
SCHMIDT & SHEA,
ARCHITECTS.
103 Post Street, Above Mearny.
(Over Bancroft's Drug Store, San Francisco.

MISCELLANEOUS.
JOHN WIELAND BREWING CO.
Largest Brewery West of St. Louis.
BEST
LAGER BEER
On the Pacific Coast.
BREWERY—Second St. nr. Folsom San Francisco.
Amount of Beer sold in 1897, 97,161 barrels.

Our Young Folks.

☞ Short, anglian contributions of about 400 words are preferred. The prize will be awarded to the best contribution received before the 15th of next July, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

A JUST REVENGE.

Written for THE MONITOR, January 1, 1898 by Mrs. Pinnerty.

The cottage was poor and small, every thing about it indicating extreme poverty. The scene was a turbary Ireland in one of the central mountained Ireland. A bleak cold wind was sweeping through the trees and the snow lay deep upon the ground. Inside the cottage one fire blazed on the hearth, no light illumined the darkness, all was cold and still. But the cottage is not uncouped. Seated around the room are three persons—an old woman, a young girl about fifteen, and a girl of about fourteen, all three apparently engaged in their own thoughts. The youth was the first to speak.

"I tell mother he said, "it's a book reader to think of! Perfect that we have lived here so long, and learned to love the old place so dearly, only to be thrown out to shed the cold and such a world as this.

"Patience, my son, patience said the old mother feebly "Silent repose against the will of God, my son.

"Yes, it's all very well to speak of patience, but when it comes to being thrown out into the world, it's another and a different thing, reply the young man, passionately.

The girl who had been listening to the talk in silence was sprung rather fast and cried "I know they are coming already to tell us what we have to do.

The mother and her son listened and they could hear distinctly the measured tramp of feet, as the far land "Orange lodgers marched up the hillside, to complete the work of another eviction.

The boy and his mother were sad and trembling, when a hand was laid on the outer door, which was rudely pushed open and a brutal-toned voice asked

"Well, Margaret Byrne, have you got my money, if not are you ready to quit the house?"

"No, Sir Morgan, I have not yet got your rent, nor am I yet ready to quit our house," answered Mrs Byrne.

"Well, old woman, if you don't pay the house I reckon I will have to make you. Time your household stuff out into the street, boys," said Morgan, turning to the enemy near at his back, "and throw the lot of the Crowbar brigade went to work with a will, and soon all of poor Mrs Byrne's earthly possessions were tossed out upon the cold snow heap in the new outside. After disposing of the furniture the "Boys" then went to work at the thatch of the cottage, and remained of that was a heap of ruins, and then the "Crowbar Brigade, having completed their work of destruction departed followed by the landlord and shared fear ing the poor family to pass on the frozen ground their own happy home.

The night passed away, and the morning light revealed a broken hearted son and daughter kneeling over the remains of their aged mother A shallow grave was dug beneath the snow in the adjacent churchyard, prayers were said over the lowly form, and a stone was placed to close up the grave, and Margaret Byrne's career on earth was over.

Long and bitterly the young girl and boy sobbed and prayed over the lonely grave. At last, whelming back his grief, the heart broken son rose to his feet, and taking his sister by the hand, he said

"We will go to America, Maude, but as sure as I live I will return again and have revenge on this Morgan family for the death of our mother, though it should cost me a life time and my life as well.

Three days later they embarked for America, and after a long and tedious voyage of three weeks they were landed safely on the land of Freedom.

When Joe Byrne and his sister reached America they immediately engaged several rooms in a large tenement house, and soon after this joined work. For two years they lived in New York, and then the gold fever broke out, and Joe and his sister embarked for California to try their luck in the land of gold. They reached San Francisco all right, and found a company of men who were bound for a new settlement in the mountains, Joe and his sister joined. Three weeks after this we find three in a small village consisting of 1 Hall of a dozen houses, a small mountain stream ran through the settlement, on the banks of which a number of men are engaged in digging and washing the earth. Among the rough gang we recognize Joe, who looks as rough and as healthy as any of them. He has been lucky, however, and has several thousand dollars safely stored away.

On this day he is working rather slowly unlikely with his pick and shovel, when suddenly his pick struck something hard. He got down on his knees and scraping the earth from the hole, he revealed to view the largest nugget of gold ever seen in Mountain Idaho. The news spread like wild fire that young Joe Byrne had found a very large nugget, and fifteen minutes after the whole town was assembled around the happy Joe. Half an hour after Joe sold his claim for $20,000, and accompanied by his sister, and the big nugget safely wrapped up in a blanket, he took the stage for San Francisco.

It was Christmas eve. John Morgan sat in his drawy office lonely engaged in writing, when the door opened and the servant announced a young man to see Mr Morgan. "Show him in," said Mr Morgan. The servant went away, and in a few minutes returned with a young man shown she said. Into the room, which the door after him, and departed, leaving Morgan and the stranger alone.

"Well, sir, what do you wish?" asked Morgan.

"I have come to see you, John Morgan, on business relating to some transactions which passed between yourself and the the social firm of Johnson Lowe & Co. Do you recognize this note?" asked the young man, producing a paper from his pocket.

John Morgan turned as pale as death the frame to his feet, and extending his hand, he said "Sir no one that note, young man. I'm strong minded, but unnerved at handing Morgan the note he coolly replaced it in his pocket, remarking as he did so "I am pretty sure! John Morgan, but I can great deal sooner, you would get the money off me yet."

John Morgan, cast a cry that would have deter honor to a wild beast, there was a flash, a loud report, and the young man sunk to a prone heap upon the cold ground.

At the same instant the office door was dashed open, and gallant Joe Byrne rushed into the room. Morgan raised his pistol, but Joe was too quick for him he sprang at Morgan, and like a young giant he wrenched the smoking pistol from his hand and hurled him to the floor.

"Ha! John Morgan," he cried. "I see you recognize me, I am Joe Byrne, whom mother you so ruthlessly murdered on the night of the 16 of 9 October, five years ago. I was a witness to the murder you just committed, and will afford me the long wished for opportunity of revenge.

"Have mercy for your mother, "muttered Morgan, calmly

"You did you drive us out into the storm, and during the night my mother died to death but I will have my revenge. Come now I will give you to jail for a sole purpose of hanging you, I will drag you to the gallows, pulled down the trap, and watch you dangle and kick your life out of the rope.

Morgan was cowered to prison, but he soon tried to be free from the gallows, he was shot in the very midst of his attempt to trying to escape. Thus the unhappy man was punished for his diabolical crime.

Let the oppressed remember that revenge belongs to God, and leaving the matter to Him, he will ultimately bring to light and punish the wrong doer.

LOVE GOD'S CREATURES.

Examples from the Lives of the Saints.

St. Richard, Bishop of Winchester, through extreme tenderness for the animal world, hardly ever ate any meat. When he was any longer children in his table, he used to say "We are the cause of your death, what have you done worthy of death so. Richard also extended to the whole animal world.

Many stories are told of the love of St. Wulfstan, also of Malbrun, the servant and particular, of his affection for the old grey horse which he constantly rode, and used partially to call Brother Byrnan Dun. He was one day in a great hurry, and for having killed an insect, saying he had taken away the life of one of God's lowly pensioners were ingratitude. The old grey horse was well known in the valley of the Tweed. Its humble abode rode him. Your time is at an end, and your time is bright, that I like to be listening to you. 19 His happiness and prosperity is constantly in the hand of each person, for it is a happiness to be good always to every other person. 20. May that's blessing be on you. 21. Farewell.

The Power of "Push."

In a certain banking house there is a door which is large and heavy. It is always open and a person entering it is seen as he enters. Though it would take a strong man to push it open. On the front of it is a small plate bearing in large letters the single word "Push."

Now if you have any business with that banking house, and have lodged your money there, you must enter. You suppose it is only open easily, though so large and heavy, for special care has been taken to make it yield thus readily. It is put there to complete the needed endeavors, but not to hinder or impede those having the right to entrance.

Now, young friends, remember that each of you in the journey of life will frequently come across closed doors, figuratively speaking, exactly like the one we have just described. Ever and anon in the path of duty you will find hardners form up which require exercise of will and energy to effectually set aside. When you encounter them do not stand perplexed and helpless before them, but do what you are invited to do at the door of the banking house—push, promptly and energetically thrust the obstacle aside.

Every pursuit, every trade, and every profession has something in the way which seems to bar your progress to following it, or to hinder your successful prosecution of it, ing with such obstacles, life for you will be a failure indeed. Do not be discouraged, nor yet be satisfied with only some of your success by chance and then the consumed to marked results. Give the door a push, that is, exert will energy, then sure and prompt success.

It will, we hope, be any of our young readers that may have the misfortune to be of a nervous or hot blood, standing idly whining that some door of obstinacy does not open for them. Push them, there are enough ready to respond to the exertion, but they are not going to succeed by magic, or wishes themselves. Push your door, and if it does not open, nine cases out of ten you will find it yields to your exertion, but if it does not, your fault with the door of the bank lying open without.

Timidity, hesitation, fear, or even presumption, under any circumstances and in scarce, lies disqualified for the same reason, and those who are under the influence. Be honest, be earnest, be energetic, but be ever ruthless and unrelenting in your efforts to be a well-trained and healthy man—in the path of industry and duty. Push it and keep it, reading the sign "push" and putting the direction into practice on every hindrance that comes before you.

Perseverance.

How any of our young readers ever watched an ant hill. If so, they will remember the hundreds of tiny creatures busy ring in all directions—constantly that the ground they seems alive and in motion. Now, if a stick or stone is placed in the way, work to do, and in doing it with all its might, not allowing anything to stand in the way of energy and perseverance can overcome.

An old writer tells us he once watched an ant trying to carry a very large grain of wheat. Without doubt it was the ant hill that it cross the trunk of a fallen tree, which, however, was quite a mountain to the ant. The ant could reach the ant hill if

Correspondence.

We gratefully publish correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertaining to the progress of the Church or the welfare of Religion.

All communications should reach this office by Noon of the preceding Saturday to insure insertion.

☞ All correspondents must reach this office on Thursday evening's mail at latest, as the MONITOR goes to press on Friday morning.

BEAUTIFUL BENECIA.

The Dominican Church, Convent and Mass. Academy.—A Dominican Priest Mass. Father Newell's Sermon. s.o., etc

VALLEJO, OCT. 5, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

Dear Sir:—Your correspondent visited Benecia on Sunday, September 30th. I was medically instructed by the Dominican Church and Monastery. I need hardly state that at Benecia is situated the mother-house of the Dominicans on this coast. Here by the pious and zealous efforts of Rev. Fathers Sorbes, Mandine, Lacome, Lacome and others, the Order of St. Dominic established a flourishing Mass. Academy, which is filled to overflowing every year, and from which issue forth every year, a very fine class of young men, who are destined to be an ornament to the world, to school classes and spread the light of the Gospel among men. The writer could see that something unusual was about to take place on the day of his visit, for the purpose of holy ordination and ordained my present case and on the whole community.

It was the occasion of the celebration of the first Mass by Rev. John Jones, O. P., who was ordained on the previous day by the Most Rev. Bishop Manogue of Sacramento, assisted by Bishop Mandine of Oakland, Bishop Hugh Mac Mahon of Marysville, and Bishop Gross of Portland. The Most Rev. Bishop Manogue, Vicar-General Rev. Father Jones and the Chancellor Rev. Father Newell, O. P., as deacon and sub-deacon, Rev. Father Lacome, O. P., as deacon and Rev. Father Lacome, O. P., as deacon and Rev. J. Jones's a hall, which looking mass, including a character in high dignity and beauty, choice are combined. It was plain that the young ecclesiastic recognized the sublime dignity of the sacred character that had been conferred upon him, for he celebrated his first Mass with a gravity and collectedness that might do credit to one who had spent a decade and a half in the ministry. Rev. John Jones was born in Arizona, of parents who are still living, and is only a mere boy of 23 years of age. He received his training for the priesthood at the Dominican Priory of Benecia.

Rev. Father Newell, O. P., preached an excellent sermon appropriate to the occasion on "Dignity and Excellence of the Priesthood." He spoke of the dignity of the ancient priests based on fulfill the requirements of divine worship and sacrament. He said he as Christ alone, the G-d-Man, on account of His personal union with God, the holiness of the priesthood is derived. His infinite sanctity, is Priest of the Most High, not the sanctity of the sacerdotal power. He put the priestly sacrifice and priesthood by perfect priestly sacrifice and conferring on His Disciples the gift of the new priesthood, on the night before His last Supper. Without the priesthood of Jesus Christ there is no Church, no religion, no faith—no spiritual life. The priesthood is the ministry of Jesus Christ. It brought the world, nation after nation, from barbarism and crime into divine knowledge and charity, and saved the sinner and saints, from falling into the former state. The Priest is the representative of Christ, the salt of the earth, the salvation of the world.

The ladies and gentlemen of the Church of Mass Mattie Fleming, in rendering the sacred music of the Mass. Miss Ida Barry, Mrs. Theo. Duff, Miss Maude Smith, Miss Mary Gagnon, soprano; Mrs. John Barry, Miss Flora Powers, Miss Belle Hoffman, Miss Mamie, Geo. Dunbank, James Barry and John Gregory, tenors.

The monastery or residence of the community is a new building, but has been put up at not two years ago at a considerable cost. While each of the Fathers and with the Brother of the Order with the modern comforts in view, the chief of our attention was given to the dormitories, refectories, and sitting rooms for the Fathers, and the dormitories for the books in ancient and modern languages, attached to the institution. Very Rev. Father Vincent Vicary, O. P., is pastor of Benecia, and Superior of the Dominicans in California. To replace the present handsome frame building, the Dominican Fathers are building a new church in Benecia an edifice that will be more in accordance with the dignity of the worship of God, the foundation of which is about a year ago. In order to raise funds for the church, arrangements are being made to hold a fair in the Opera Hall, commencing on the 23d of October. Feeling that I have been already too long, I will close with a few words to the ladies and gents, from falling into the former state. The Priest is the representative of Christ, the salt of the earth, the salvation of the world.

The ladies and gentlemen of the choir, who rendered the music of the Mass, Miss Ida Barry, Mrs. Theo. Duff, Miss Maude Smith, Miss Mary Gagnon, soprano; Mrs. John Barry, Miss Flora Powers, Miss Belle Hoffman, Miss Mamie, Geo. Dunbank, James Barry and John Gregory, tenors.

The monastery or residence of the community is a new building, but has been put up

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY.

Tell me, true Faith, that far beyond the stars,
All the elect shall meet again—
That reaches high above Earth's pelson bars
To a bliss better to mortal sil pain.

Tell me, bright Hope, that when enthroned on high
Beyond the grandeur of the spheres,
We then shall know and feel each other's sigh,
Pass from mind Earth's alloy of tears.

Tell me, fair Charity, that men shall live
Hereafter by God's love alone,
Possessed of all the joys that Heaven shall give,
And heretofore Eden all over one.

JOHN F. MCDONALD.

Virginia City, Nev.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

SONNET.

TO ST. MATY'S COLLEGE.

Before you remorseless rain I stand,
Whose time-limed walls with lichelom moss is
...
While gleams the sun on every parapet,
Casting a shadow of sadness o'er the land,
I gaze, Confectionus relics of the past,
That rest in memory as in idle hand—
Enamed up like mosaics, dimly seen yet vast—
Again come surging to my pensive mind
The school-day hours, the face left behind—
The relics of saint heaven—happy years,
Lighting my aged eyes with glorious tears,
Oh, bittersweet pain! thou't fleeting as the wind
Clads each one with pure Elysian breath—
—ut's bliss when thou art vanished

S. M. C.

From the Boston Pilot.

SONG OF DEAR DILLON.

Had conquered then, tender cupidity,
Pity and they said,
To the deep drawn breath of freedom—to the blessed light of day,
To the hands that are gathered for the conquer
in the fray—

Welcome! welcome! How that greeting beams in every joyous eye;
How it pulses through those thunder-shores that shake the listing sky;
Welcome! welcome! How it surges on the Nation's gladdened ear,
From the shielding of the peasant and the palace of the peer.

When thy footsteps's bound was loudest—when their mocking sneers and jeeds
O'er the self-reign of their capers, were fresh fetter in our breasts,
When no kindly hand would a[illegible] and no friendly voice could tell
If their rifle and nameless torturer made thy lot an earthly hell.

Oh, we watched with straining vision, and we wailed thee this day,
If, but to pledge our vengeance o'er thy cold and tireless clay
For the Abbotsford threatened, while his native
evening slept,
That the man who hard'st his pathway from that pathway must be swept.

To the prison and the plank bed and from thence
to his their grave—
Dark, who we rock the cradle early,
Sweet Dillon, dear!
For the Abbotsford threatened, while his native
evening slept,
That the man who hard'st his pathway from that
pathway must be swept.

To the prison and the plank bed and from thence
to his their grave—
Dark, who we rock the cradle early,
Sweet Dillon, dear!

We bend above the coffin, another soul has fled;
The earthly light is over, is over or lost, or dead,
Dark, who we rock the cradle first knew of earthly bliss
And above, with hands close folded, lies all we have of life,
As we bend above the coffin.

Literary Miscellany.

Frank Harris' First Suit

A Catholic Story in Four Chapters.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

CHAPTER III.

A full moon relieved with its ghostly light the gloom enshrouding Melville cross-roads. The nearest house was quite a little distance off, the farmers of the vicinity having apparently avoided building about this spot. A lone tier place or one better suited for a secret interview would hardly be found.

A tall figure, with bowed head and folded arms, stood by the fence that ran along the side of the road. After retaining this position for some minutes he began to pace up and down, as if to unsay to remain inactive.

"I wonder if she will fail me?" he muttered, stopping short and gazing along the road. "No, no; I am sure of her," and he commenced his pacing again. A few moments later and a slight foot-fall arrested his attention. It came nearer and nearer, and finally a form clad in white appeared.

"M ry!"

"Nel."

He folded her in his arms and imprinted a kiss after kiss on her upturned face.

"Mary, dear," he said, pushing the hair back off her forehead, "it seems an age since we parted. I have been in all sorts of places and among all sorts of people since then, and the image of this beautiful face has always kept me true to my God and myself."

"I dd you suffer much", she asked in a tone half fearful of some difficulty and half pitying, as if a tale of ill had already been told.

"N-N-No. The difficulty hatened me. Everything I undertook, I have deserved success; I was working for yourself mainly. I'm rich now, Mary, and have come back to make you happy."

"No!" she answered, looking up confidently into his bearded face, "all the money you could board together could not give me more pleasure than this meeting."

"Spoken like my own little darling!"

"But why did you not write to me?"

"I was compelled to use caution. My letters would have been intercepted."

"But why not have come to the house to-night?"

"I was prevented by the fact, foolish and superstitious though it may be, that if I assured the village of Melville to-night, all my ill luck, discarded on leaving, would return to me. These cross-roads are sharp, have good eyes and are inquisitive enough to make good use of them."

"I have had a kind protector in Father Nevin, Ned."

"God bless him," he ejaculated fervently. "O-h" he added, "some one is coming."

"They drew back to the fence, and the person whose footsteps had given premonition of his coming, in a few moments stood before them.

"So! This is a pretty meeting for my affianced wife."

"Frank!" She could see even by the aid of the moonlight how pale he was, the voice was hoarse and forced, and it was an effort for him to speak.

"Yes, Frank! Hideous woman," he added, fiercely, as she attempted to speak. "Not a word from you. That timely telegram has saved me from an alliance with one I cannot but despise. You may consider yourself a stranger to me in the morning."

Disregarding her cries and expostulations, he turned, walked down the road and was soon out of sight.

"What on earth does all this mean?" demanded Ned, who had been too much astonished by this sudden burst of anger to interpose a word. "Mary, what's the matter! You are shaking like one with the ague."

"That man is my affianced husband," she sobbed.

"But what kind of a man is he to act as he is?"

"Consider, Ned, my position here to-night is very compromising in his eyes, since he don't know you. He is warm, but quick. I fear some evil will come of this."

CHAPTER IV.

Mr. and Mrs. Robbins and their fashionable daughter were seated in their rooms in the Prospect House, about 10 o'clock this night, indulging in what seemed to be no amiable conversation.

"Now, Pa," said Miss Robbins, pettishly, "I don't talk nonsense. What's to prevent my marrying Mr. Harris?"

"Bella," answered her father, a small man with a face that wore a subdued expression, caused no doubt by perpetual snubbing, "Mr. Harris is a man who looks for good nature, not affection."

"James" This from his wife, who appeared were elevated an inch or more in assignment at her husband's audacity.

"Humph. Affection! Pa, you are too foolish. I suppose there is nothing effected about Mary Lennon. But she won't be my rival any longer. I've arranged all this."

"How, my dear," from Miss Robbins.

A look of pain on Miss Robbins' face, but not a syllable from her lips.

"Wait in the telegraph office to-day, I heard a message called, S. addressed to her and coming from one 'Ned,' which I told her to meet him to-night at Melville cross-roads. I commenced this plan of ours to Mr. Harris and sent him off in a hurry to witness her perfidy. When he finds this out, the road will be clear for me."

"That's a clever piece of business, Bella," with an approving smile from Mrs Robbins.

"Young lady," said her father, rising, "you have overreached yourself. Don't you remember when Melville bank was robbed Ned Lennon was cashier? The proof against him was so convincing that he had to leave the town."

"O, Pa," said Bella, impatiently, "I knew all this before. What has it to do with me?"

"Then much. That man who was a to night is her brother."

"I know it," replied Bella, coolly.

"You know it! And, striking the table with his fist, "have you the brazen effrontery to admit that you have suffered that girl's character to be blackened in her lover's eyes so that you can catch him yourself. If there was one spark of true womanly feeling in you, you would have held your peace on that subject! I was stood your insolence a long time, because I hoped to see a change. But, husband and, I assure you, I'm sick of it. Your conduct to Mary Lennon has crimmed, and his grey eyes snapping with anger, he left the room.

"Well!" Astonishment unbounded depicted on Miss Robbins' face. "Did you ever?"

"My," said Bella, biting her bloodless lips in the venom of her spleen, "I'm must not interfere."

"Child, I never saw your father act so before. I'll see to it that he never does again."

CHAPTER IV.

No sleep for Frank that night. He roved about the roads without aim or reason, half crazed at the realization of his worst suspicions. The first peep of day found him exhausted and nervous, far from home. Sickening the folly of his present course he, by a mighty effort, put down his pride and turned and started on his hotel. Weak and worn he entered, and was proceeding along the main hallway when he was accosted by Mr. Robbins.

"Why, Frank, where have you been? Your breakfast is ready."

"I'd know. I don't," he answered wearily.

"Come with me," continued the old man, taking him by the arm. They went up stairs and into Frank's room.

"Lie right down there on the bed," said Mr. Robbins. Then, drawing a chair to his side, he added "Now, you foolish boy, I want to talk to you."

"Frank merely nodded, with half closed eyes.

Frank's eyes

"Mr. Robbins, don't mention this to anyone to me. I dice cared her true character last night."

"I know all about that. You're a lawyer, are you not? Well, then, let us proceed systematically. You heard from Hills, Mary received a telegram appointing a meeting at Melville cross-roads with a certain 'Ned.' Not a word now. I'm going to talk. Up comes your jealousy like a rocket. You are determined to find out if she tries their poor affianced wife is holding a secret meeting with another. An up-and-down square man would have trusted her implicitly. I'm talking plain language now. You rush off, see her in company with this man, are convinced that she is untrue and, like a real idiot, wander about all night, groaning. Frank Harris, you are a fool."

"Am I not to believe the evidence of my own senses?"

"No. You are not. Now is any other man who has lost his reason. With one little word I can settle all your doubts."

"Mr. Robbins, I know what I saw, and, as a thousand words can't change that."

"Why, but one word can explain it. Two years ago, the First National Bank of Melville was robbed. The cashier was accused of the crime, and the stolen bonds and money being found in his apartments his arrest was ordered. He fled. Frederick Hiskins, one of the tellers, was appointed to succeed him. Hiskins, I, as one of his doctors, opposed his advancement. I always believed the cashier innocent, but could never prove it. A week ago the Hiskins died, leaving with me a document wherein he admitted the innocence of the cashier and his own guilt. He had stolen the spoil and had secretly deposited in the place where it was found. His object was to drive Lennon out of the town, which he had been his own advancement. He begged me to keep his confession secret till I could find the missing cashier; and if he could not be traced within a fixed time, to publish it.

"I don't see the connection of all this with my case," said Frank, impatiently.

"Of course you can't. Wait a bit, hotspur. That absconding cashier was the man you saw with Mary last night. Hold on. Don't explode. The man you saw with Mary last night is one who has a right always to be by her side. In short, he is her brother."

A long-drawn groan escaped Frank.

"Mr. Robbins," he said, brokenly, "I've wronged her sadly. You say, truly, I acted like a fool. I might have known there was a mistake; but my laddling jealousy blinded me. Will she ever forgive me?"

"Of course she will. If she don't she's not worthy of you."

"Where is she? Let me go to her. My jealousies rage will kill her."

"Hoot-sup My efforts last night evinced the effects of your insanity. I worked hard, Frank, and now you must do as I say."

The tired man sank back on the bed, whence he had risen on the reception of this revelation. Going to a door, which opened from Frank's room into an adjoining one, Mr. Robbins knocked thrice. It was opened, and Mary, leaning on Ned's arm and followed by Father Nevin, entered. Frank's surprise on seeing the sailors was too much for words. A mute appeal from his eyes, and he had Mary in his arms. That one look spoke volumes. All was forgiven on hurt a word.

"Ned," said Mary, "this is my affianced."

"Mary, Mary," interrupted Mr. Robbins. "Wait till you can drop the affianced."

"Frank," said Father Nevil, "the morning bell join you and my child in holy wedlock. I have watched her for eighteen years. To-morrow, your term of watching will be gone, and my it be thrice sighten."

"Young man," said Mr Robbins, with much solemnity, we have concluded that the only way to settle your jealousy is to marry you. My daughter, Bella, will be bridesmaid to-morrow at the ceremony."

Rev. T. J. Butler, recently received into the Diocese of Mich., and stationed at Monsignoure, died last week after a short illness.

A NOTABLE IRISH SHRINE.

The Way of the Cross at Knockmadoher Monuisle.

A correspondent writing recently from Tralee says

Yesterday the interesting ceremonies of blessing the Stations of the Cross and the Hospice were recently presented on Knockmadoher Mountain, near Caherciveen, took place under circumstances in every respect so bar many with their religious character. The greatest possible interest was manifested in the proceedings. They were in every respect strikingly unique. Completion of the work of a kind in this country. It is rather an established form of devotion on the Continent, but in Ireland the only extent to which our devotional or religious character are now carried on are limited to a few isolated cases of pilgrimages to holy wells, which are very numerous in the country. Some crosses are occasionally to be met with, but nothing on the elaborate principles of the opening ceremony of to-day, is to be met with in the country. A very appropriate selection was made for carrying out the proceedings by fitting a theme for the anniversary of the Feast of the parish, which is called after the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. Knockmadoher mountain—"the mountain of wells"—called by reason of the great number of them which abound both on the summit and on the slopes—is situated about three miles from the town of Caherciveen, the seat of a well and picturesque borough, on the southern shore of Dingle Bay, and on the northern side of the public road leading from Killorglin to Caherciveen. It rises gently for some distance from the road leading down to Doonsheen harbor, a sheltered little creek, and then join up boldly and more irregularly half over half until it settles down grand dignity and then, with the exception of a few ridges which rise up and give it the appearance of both f a sea, the ascent runs for seven or eight miles in a smooth and regular manner. The ascent is not considerably steeper than the other, and well-good masses of large rocks appear in quite large and irregular intervals, making the ascent if tiresome and difficult, a very difficult affair. The northern side is not so steep, and the one generally selected for making the ascent. About the centre of the mountain a high ridge commences to the sea, and formerly of the prince which guard the little harbor before mentioned. The highest point of Knockmadoher is about 2,000 feet above the level of the sea. It has always been a religious reputation, and tradition associates it closely with the Petal Days when it afforded a fitting place to the hunted down priest to hold and which it was selected for the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. It is also associated with a rather peculiar custom which seems to have been at one time quite general throughout Ireland, and which is still kept up in some parts, I mean the custom of "making rounds" on Sundays. The rounds are made by the people of the parish, and the attendance of one was obtained through the assistance of Mr. Hen. Hussey, a Catholic member of the Queen's household.

Tristram Helena is not the only member of the Royal family who are believers in Catholicism. Several of her cousins among the Hohenzollerns, have evinced a preference for that religion, and it was with considerable difficulty that the young Princess Victoria of Germany was prevented from becoming a convert. It is discouraging, when the female Head of the English Church, the direct successor of Henry VIII is unable to keep even her own family to her own church.

SEND US CATHOLIC NEWS.

We would most respectfully ask the Rev. Clergy, and all our readers of the Pacific Coast, to send us local items of general interest. We wish to make the MONITOR a chronicle of all Diocesan happenings relating to the progress of religion, but we cannot do so without the help of those who have the knowledge of the facts in their keeping. Rare facts are all we want, will our friends please furnish us with them?

THE POPE AND THE ROSARY

How Pope Leo XIII. Values this Great Devotion.

It is fitting that there should be recorded the action of the Holy Father concerning the Rosary. On the first of September, 1883 he issued an Encyclical Letter Supremi Apostolatus Officio, in which the devotion of the Rosary was seriously put forward as the great means of prayer against present evils, and recitation during the month of October was ordered. This may be called the formal institution of the Rosary Month.

In the 20th of November of the same year he addressed Letters Apostolic to the Father General of the Dominican Order, praising the effect of his Encyclical on the Rosary devotion, and ordering that the petition of imploring "Queen of the Most Holy Rosary" to the Litany should be inserted in the Litany. In December a decree was issued ordering the insertion of the title in the Litany of Loretto. On the 24 of December a Brief was published repeating the same order, and expressing the desire of his Holiness that the Rosary should be recited daily in Cathedral churches throughout the world, and in parish churches on Sundays and holidays. On the 30th of August, 1884 the Holy Father issued another Encyclical Supreme cuiusdam, in which after expressing great joy at the celebration of the Month of the Holy Rosary, he commended the prayer for the ensuing month of October, which, he said, was "dedicated to the very Mary, to be venerated until the present Holy Rosary." In the Encyclical of the 14th of September, 1887, the Pontiff, after the Mass, the Rosary was recited in honor of the Queen of Heaven, and he have a Papal document again declaring the importance of the Rosary, and the value of the prayer and their constant recitation. The Rosary was the Pope's office for the Feast of the Holy Rosary.

In thanksgiving for the victory gained, and earnest prayer for future success the Holy Father commends and emphatically recommends the Rosary. In the Encyclicals in former years and in Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites with regard to the Holy Rosary, particularly to the month of October, the Holy Father has issued most ardent appeals to the Sovereign Pontiff, and to the Sacred Congregation of Rites.

Among the numerous graces of the Holy Rosary, and of the Month of October devotions, there will be remembered and treasured in the hearts of the faithful, the tender and loving care and zeal to the Holy Father has shown in the Rosary devotion, and the increasing value and zeal to the Holy Rosary devotion as a great ready refuge against the evils of the present time, and a great Christian faith and [illegible] Mission Association of Blue Ridge, Ga., Virginia.

Insurance companies in Germany declared the Mormons are insured against the insurance on account of the substance of emigration, and it is said that the Mormons are insured against the insurance on account of the substance of emigration, and it is said that the Mormons are insured against the insurance on account of the substance of emigration.

Insurance companies in Germany declared the Mormons are insured against the insurance on account of the substance of emigration, and it is said that the Mormons are insured against the insurance on account of the substance of emigration.

The Chinese Government has released an English firm permission to set up an ice-making machinery in Canton, and the Chinese merchants are to be allowed to import the machinery free of duty. The necessary is small that foreign capital will be allowed to start manufacturing in Chinese.

In the last issue of the country the Mormons have 1,000 in Utah, 1,000 in Arizona, 1,000 in the Northern Pacific Territories, and 1,000 in the Southern Territories. The average speed upon this line is twenty two miles per hour.

Rev. Mr. Hussey, a Protestant minister, has that that of Dr. John Hall, Presbyterian, in Brooklyn, has left the Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn. The reason is largest, Dr Hall's congregation is Episcopal.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The Week's Happenings in the World.

More than 50,000 pears were made in America last year.

An advance of from 25 per cent has been made in Iowa during the past four years.

The kitchen and dining rooms of a Kansas City hotel are located on the eighth floor, and reached by an elevator.

Pasteur's method for exterminating rabbits has been astonishingly successful with Sydney New South Wales.

An immigrant who landed at Castle Garden, New York, the other day, had with him a trunk made in Germany in 1667.

In Paris the Knights of Labor include three Priests—Fathers Hunot, Albert Adam and Father Hyacinthe and Perraudin.

The Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. starts up this week. It has about twenty thousand hands, and will run night and day.

The number of children born alive in Boston in 1887 was 12,157, or 145 over the number recorded in the preceding year. The males exceeded the females by 286.

New York is the "Empire State" of the Union, and many other, and will probably cast 1,200,000 votes at the Presidential election.

The Hymnists, owners of the Welsh language, are so numerous that it is estimated the price of their coal to Sun Francisco.

In the city of Leeds, England, with a population of over two hundred thousand, there are only two Catholic churches, and one has in attendance.

Rev. Father Lefton, who of Tyrone Fifton, writes an article in Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's recent book, in which he proposes to establish a Blind Sunday School in Brooklyn.

The new forests are holding on to their sheep. The advance in the Chicago and Northern Pacific Railway, which has been for higher prices. There are no sheep at all.

Two cows from Minnesota gave, on Oct. 15, Quebec, 20 miles east of Lachasse, in the presence of many people, a total of 20 lbs. The cows are on account and the 50th six have fed.

Financial days the church clock in Hampshire England refused to work. The inspection was made, it was found that a swarm of bees had taken up their abode in the clock.

Medicine has been employed for the last six months in attempting to produce artificial sunlight, and it is said that the private work upon the subject, and it is said that the work upon the subject.

Rev. Father Robert, parish Priest of St. Thomas, Chenecetto County, N. S., died very sad lately on Sept. 22nd. He had been ill for some time, and had just finished Mass, when a woman entered with a request. He turned pale, slipped speaking, and a moment later fell to the floor. The alarm was immediately given, and he was conveyed to his bed, where he died an hour later. Father Robert was a native of St. Finan, Ireland, and was ordained in 1866.

The St. John's Sun of the 20th ult. gives the following particulars of the death of Father Lefebvre, which occurred on Friday afternoon last, while going to a sick call. Father Lefebvre, parish Priest of Grand Digue, Nova Scotia, was with an assistant, and was called to visit a sick person. He had been called to a Wesleyan settlement and had proceeded half a mile when a bolt fastening the shaft to the wagon got out of its place. The horse got frightened and the wagon was being tossed from one side of the road to the other. On meeting a small culvert, Father L. Bolt jumped from the wagon and fell on the right side of his head. When the assistants came to his assistance he was dragging from his mouth, nose and ears. He was insensible and continued so nearly all the time up to the hour of his death.

CALIFORNIA'S CLARION CRY!

"Live and Let Live,"

FRESH AND PALATABLE

GROCERIES

CONTRIBUTE MUCH TO THE

HEALTH AND HAPPINESS of Every Home.

Therefore Everybody Ought to know that

SBARBORO & CO.,

531 Washington St.,

IS DECIDEDLY THE CHEAPEST PLACE

IN SAN FRANCISCO

Where readers at the MONITOR can purchase the Best

FAMILY GROCERIES AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES.

The Old Brown Mill Stands

Where for more than a quarter of a Century—Time of Thousands of Saving, Prudent and

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

Remember therefore that if you want

GENUINE GOOD GROCERIES,

The proper place to purchase them is at

SBARBORO & CO'S,

531 WASHINGTON STREET

(Between Montgomery and Sansome.)

Compare these Prices

With any other House in the city, THEN CALL AND LEARN

OUR GOODS, SUGARS AND COFFEE

Greatly Reduced.

FRESH MEALS & MILL RATES.

16 pounds Tapioca, - - $1
16 pounds Sago, - - $1
20 pounds Codfish, - - $1
14 pounds German Prunes, $1
10 pounds Dried Pears, - - $1
Star Ground Coffee, 20-25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug) 50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea, 40 and 50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea, - 25c per lb
5-gallon can Banner Coal Oil, - $1.00
50 lb. sack Salt 35c
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs, - $1.75
20 pounds Canary Seed, $1
Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.

And all other Goods Equally Cheap.

WINE AND LIQUORS

Claret, Zinfandel, Vesline, from [illegible]
Sherry, Family, 4 gallon [illegible]
Port, Family, 4 gallon [illegible]
Old Tom Gin, 4 gallon [illegible]
Old Dust Bourbon, 4 gallon [illegible]
Old Rye Whiskey, 4 gallon [illegible]
Swan Gin, 4 gallon [illegible]
Jamaica Rum, 4 gallon [illegible]

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made carefully and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged!

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

S. SBARBORO, Manager.

WILLIAMS' ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES 320 POST ST.

PROF. De FILIPPE, professor of the Academy of Languages, 320 Post St., offers his personal instruction in Spanish and French, by which method, having studied the language, the pupil has the opportunity to practice Free library and lessons in conversation. Apply from 12 to 1 and 7 to 8, evenings.

Prof. De Filippe's simplified new system of acquiring the Spanish language, containing complete rules and examples for the easy mastery of all the Spanish verbs, regular and irregular, sent by mail for $5. Address, "Professor Language," care of Messrs. Cubery & Co., Telegraph Dept., 705 Market St., S. F.

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1888.

OUR COLLEGE IN ROME.

Incidents at its Infancy. Reminiscences of Pope Pius IX. Too First Thrown Aside.

A representative of the Monitor recently engaged a long conversation with Rev. Father Kenney, of St Paul's Church in this city, who was one of the original thirteen students of the American College at Rome. He very well recollects the incidents attending the organization of the College and never wearies in praising the late Pontiff, Pius IX as his fatherly interest manifested in it.

The Seminary was ordained in 1859 and has ever since been flourishing in this achievement. Amongst his classmates in the American College were two beloved Archbishops and Most Rev. Dr Corrigan of New York. Father Canedy stated that Archbishop Heslon, then while a student, was noted for his unassuming dignity, and for his assertive, sunny, fleeting nature—beautiful traits of character which accidently engage him to be Priest and people. He was a clever student, too, and ranked amongst the highest of his classmates. In 1861 the American College in Rome was opened on December 8th, 1859 with thirteen students, gathered, as Father Kenney says, from different parts of the great Nation. The American College in Rome was the first in the Eternal City.

THEIR CONVENTIONAL DINNER SERVED BY DIGNITARIES.

and cool, gentlemanly reserve, admitted them to the same appreciation of the higher celebrities. Their undivided made them easily distinguished in the Eternal City, and in general. Pope Pius IX. took an interest in the students of the American College. Weapons of defence from a beautiful parcelgiven to the Bluemen Pontiff, presented by Rev. Dr. Kenney, Rev. J. Wade, Second division, Wm. E. Taylor, French I. Second J. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. J. Taylor, Bernard A Smith.

Third Division—John J. Sullivan, John J. McDonald, Ed. J. Mannone, Jas. J. Myrick, Jas. P. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. Taylor.

Fourth Division—Edward A Brady, Robert Taylor, Jas. J. Taylor, Jas. J. Farrell, Wm. Taylor, Edward Isaac.

Fifth Collegian—Edward C. Hynes, George Fowler, John L. Taylor, John Hollard, Thos. Jones, Chas. O Kane.

First Immaculate—Jas. Fitzgerald, Patrick Plus O'Hara, Augustus Willie.

Second Immaculate—Wm. Sullivan, Jas. Sullivan, Jas. Stone, Charles Stone, Jas. McHaney.

Third Immaculate—John McCarthy, George Fetze, Jas. Carlessy.

Fourth Immaculate—Wm. F. Sullivan, James O'Rourke, Walter L. Mally.

Fifth Immaculate—Jas. J. Ryan, John P. Kennedy, Chas. V. Brady.

Sixth Immaculate—Jas. Willie Carey, Jas. Wm. Kane.

Third Preparatory—John E. Swan, Jas. Mahoney, Jas. Mackey.

Fourth Preparatory—Louis White, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Mackey.

HONORABLY MENTIONED.

The monthly emulgatement and distribution of testimonials, awards, and premiums, at Most Hon'l Chancellor Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall. The following literary and scientific premiums were awarded, carried out by the varsity classes.

Senior Department—Classic literature, orchestra, recitation, Theodore Lynch; classics; rec. Jas. J. O'Ery.

First Intermediate class—recitation, S. Ryan; Second Intermediate class—Jas. Ryan; Third Intermediate class—Jas. Stone.

Fourth Intermediate Recitation, George Kane, Jas. Ryan, Daniel McCarty, A. M Samson, M. Miller.

Fourth Intermediate—Jas. Wynne; Jas. J. Sullivan.

Fifth Intermediate—Jas. Mackey, Sullivan; Jas. B. Ryan; recitation, E. Mannone.

Sixth Intermediate—Jas. Carlessy, Jas. Carey, F. J. Barker; recitation, W. E. Taylor, Jas. L. O'Ery.

At the conclusion of the entertainment the Most Hon'l Chancellor, Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall, delivered the following address, which was received with great applause.

OUR BOOK TABLE.

Reviews at Recent Publications.

An Instruction on the Quarantine Fast, by Rev. Thomas Lynch, Rector of St. Mary's, Infirmary, Ireland, from the official Italian by J. McT. Nolan Dublin, Ireland.

This pamphlet contains a Pastoral Letter issued by the Pope when Ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, Cardinal Rampolla, December 1, 1887 on Quarantine. It is composed of concepts Pontiff's Pastoral and collected, it makes permanent impressions on the devout reader.

Lenten Fare and Lenten Explanation of the Sunday of Lents connected with Divine Worship, by Rev. Joseph H. Hoffman, New York: P. O'Shea, Publisher 1888.

The Redemptorists have opened a new house in the Grand Rapids diocese, with Rev. F. Lamy, C. SS. R., in charge.

The St. Mary's Total Abstinence Society, of Pittsburg, Pa., are about to build a hall that will cost at least $10,000.

Madame Julia McMahon of Brooklyn is lady of the Sacred Heart, died recently at the home of the Order, Kenwood, N. Y.

—Gray Nuns from Montreal have charge of the new parochial schools in Notre Dame parish, Minneapolis, Rev. P. Dugnail, pastor.

After the consecration of Bishop-elect Foley of Detroit at the Dome, there will be a meeting held of the Knights of the Order of Catholic Laymen.

The Rev. Jacob Nagle last at St. Mary's Church, Cincinnati, celebrated the sixteenth anniversary of his ordination to the Priesthood.

Rev. Mr. Fallon, C. S. C. lately pastor of Holy Cross, Chicago, has left for Notre Dame, Ind., where he will be Prefect of Discipline.

Rev. M. Fallon, C. S. C. lately pastor of Holy Cross, Chicago, has left for Notre Dame, Ind., where he will be Prefect of Discipline.

Rev. Father Lynch, of Ireland, who has gone to the mission of Eastern Bengal, visited by Rev. J. J. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. J. Taylor, Bernard A Smith.

Second division, Wm. E. Taylor, French I. Second J. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. J. Taylor, Bernard A Smith.

Third Division—John J. Sullivan, John J. McDonald, Ed. J. Mannone, Jas. J. Myrick, Jas. P. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. Taylor.

Fourth Collegian—Edward A Brady, Robert Taylor, Jas. J. Taylor, Jas. J. Farrell, Wm. Taylor, Edward Isaac.

Fifth Collegian—Edward C. Hynes, George Fowler, Jas. L. Taylor, John Hollard, Thos. Jones, Chas. O Kane.

First Immaculate—Jas. Fitzgerald, Patrick Plus O'Hara, Augustus Willie.

Second Immaculate—Wm. Sullivan, Jas. Sullivan, Jas. Stone, Charles Stone, Jas. McHaney.

Third Immaculate—John McCarthy, George Fetze, Jas. Carlessy.

Fourth Immaculate—Wm. F. Sullivan, James O'Rourke, Walter L. Mally.

Fifth Immaculate—Jas. J. Ryan, John P. Kennedy, Chas. V. Brady.

Sixth Immaculate—Jas. Willie Carey, Jas. Wm. Kane.

Third Preparatory—John E. swan, Jas. Mahoney, Jas. Mackey.

Fourth Preparatory—Louis White, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Mackey.

HONORABLY MENTIONED.

The monthly emulgatement and distribution of testimonials, awards, and premiums, at Most Hon'l Chancellor Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall. The following literary and scientific premiums were awarded, carried out by the varsity classes.

Senior Department—Classic literature, orchestra, recitation, Theodore Lynch; classics; rec. Jas. J. O'Ery.

First Intermediate class—recitation, S. Ryan; Second Intermediate class—Jas. Ryan; Third Intermediate class—Jas. Stone.

Fourth Intermediate Recitation, George Kane, Jas. Ryan, Daniel McCarty, A. M Samson, M. Miller.

Fourth Intermediate—Jas. Wynne; Jas. J. Sullivan.

Fifth Intermediate—Jas. Mackey, Sullivan; Jas. B. Ryan; recitation, E. Mannone.

Sixth Intermediate—Jas. Carlessy, Jas. Carey, F. J. Barker; recitation, W. E. Taylor, Jas. L. O'Ery.

At the conclusion of the entertainment the Most Hon'l Chancellor, Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall, delivered the following address, which was received with great applause.

CATHOLIC NEWS NOTES.

Church Concerns in Many Countries.

The Right Rev. Dr Miller, a leading prelate in Austria, is dead.

St. John's and Sacred Heart schools, Concord, N. H., opened with 250 pupils.

Over ten children attend St. Mary's parochial school, Dunkirk, Chautauqua, N. Y.

St. Louis University, St. Louis, opened this year with 300 pupils, 100 more than last year.

The death is announced at Cairo, Ill., of Sister Mary of St. Stanislaus, a member of the Order of the Holy Cross.

The Redemptorists have opened a new house in the Grand Rapids diocese, with Rev. F. Lamy, C. SS. R., in charge.

The St. Mary's Total Abstinence Society, of Pittsburg, Pa., are about to build a hall that will cost at least $10,000.

Madame Julia McMahon of Brooklyn is lady of the Sacred Heart, died recently at the home of the Order, Kenwood, N. Y.

—Gray Nuns from Montreal have charge of the new parochial schools in Notre Dame parish, Minneapolis, Rev. P. Dugnail, pastor.

After the consecration of Bishop-elect Foley of Detroit at the Dome, there will be a meeting held of the Knights of the Order of Catholic Laymen.

The Rev. Jacob Nagle last at St. Mary's Church, Cincinnati, celebrated the sixteenth anniversary of his ordination to the Priesthood.

Rev. Mr. Fallon, C. S. C. lately pastor of Holy Cross, Chicago, has left for Notre Dame, Ind., where he will be Prefect of Discipline.

Rev. M. Fallon, C. S. C. lately pastor of Holy Cross, Chicago, has left for Notre Dame, Ind., where he will be Prefect of Discipline.

Rev. Father Lynch, of Ireland, who has gone to the mission of Eastern Bengal, visited by Rev. J. J. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. J. Taylor, Bernard A Smith.

Second division, Wm. E. Taylor, French I. Second J. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. J. Taylor, Bernard A Smith.

Third Division—John J. Sullivan, John J. McDonald, Ed. J. Mannone, Jas. J. Myrick, Jas. P. Hynes, Wm. White, Jas. Taylor.

Fourth Collegian—Edward A Brady, Robert Taylor, Jas. J. Taylor, Jas. J. Farrell, Wm. Taylor, Edward Isaac.

Fifth Collegian—Edward C. Hynes, George Fowler, Jas. L. Taylor, John Hollard, Thos. Jones, Chas. O Kane.

First Immaculate—Jas. Fitzgerald, Patrick Plus O'Hara, Augustus Willie.

Second Immaculate—Wm. Sullivan, Jas. Sullivan, Jas. Stone, Charles Stone, Jas. McHaney.

Third Immaculate—John McCarthy, George Fetze, Jas. Carlessy.

Fourth Immaculate—Wm. F. Sullivan, James O'Rourke, Walter L. Mally.

Fifth Immaculate—Jas. J. Ryan, John P. Kennedy, Chas. V. Brady.

Sixth Immaculate—Jas. Willie Carey, Jas. Wm. Kane.

Third Preparatory—John E. swan, Jas. Mahoney, Jas. Mackey.

Fourth Preparatory—Louis White, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Mackey.

HONORABLY MENTIONED.

The monthly emulgatement and distribution of testimonials, awards, and premiums, at Most Hon'l Chancellor Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall. The following literary and scientific premiums were awarded, carried out by the varsity classes.

Senior Department—Classic literature, orchestra, recitation, Theodore Lynch; classics; rec. Jas. J. O'Ery.

First Intermediate class—recitation, S. Ryan; Second Intermediate class—Jas. Ryan; Third Intermediate class—Jas. Stone.

Fourth Intermediate Recitation, George Kane, Jas. Ryan, Daniel McCarty, A. M Samson, M. Miller.

Fourth Intermediate—Jas. Wynne; Jas. J. Sullivan.

Fifth Intermediate—Jas. Mackey, Sullivan; Jas. B. Ryan; recitation, E. Mannone.

Sixth Intermediate—Jas. Carlessy, Jas. Carey, F. J. Barker; recitation, W. E. Taylor, Jas. L. O'Ery.

At the conclusion of the entertainment the Most Hon'l Chancellor, Most Hon'l Rector, Most Hon'l Prefect, Most Hon'l Vice Prefect, Most Hon'l Prefect of the College Hall, delivered the following address, which was received with great applause.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FREE CANDY! GRAND SURPRISE SALE!

COME ONE, COME ALL, AND GET A Box of Choice French Candy!

GIVEN AWAY WITH OUR DELICIOUS Teas and Coffees!

Every Person Who Comes Direct to Our Stores, Will Get

EXTRA DOUBLE PRESENTS, EXTRA DOUBLE TICKETS,
EXTRA DOUBLE VALUE,
EXTRA CHOICE TEAS,
EXTRA FINE COFFEES,
EXTRA LOW PRICES.

AWAY WITH THE EXTRA INDUCEMENTS when ordering from Agents, Peddlers and Canvassers

MAKE NO MISTAKE:

Go Direct to Our Stores and Get All These Extra Big

THE MONITOR.

PRO TUTAMINE TUUM TE PROTEGAM.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published in the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— Eight Sisters of Mercy now have charge of St. John's parochial schools, Concord, N. H.

— "May God bless the Irishmen who, in distant south, foster and preserve our undying love and attachment to the country that gave them birth," were the words of Most Rev. Dr. Nulty, after having blessed the banner that was to be presented to an American priest by his Irish admirers in Ireland.

— We mention the readers of the MONITOR against plagiarism of reproaches whatever in the telegrams published in the daily press concerning the visit of the Emperor William to the Pope. These telegrams are all manufactured by malignant enemies of the Church. A Catholic correspondent in Rome will furnish us with the truth regarding this visit, and we will publish it as soon as it comes to hand.

— The non-Catholic Herald of Gospel Liberty conveys this not very consoling information to its sectarian mourners over the "Progress of Popery" in this Republic: "The Catholic parochial schools of the United States counter these thousand, with an enrollment of 511,000 pupils. Since 1885 the per cent. of growth in this enrollment has been four times, while the per cent of growth in the enrollment of the public schools has been eight. Catholic law demands the building of a parochial school in every parish, and there is a possibility that, ere many years, this ambition will be achieved."

— The question, "Was St. Peter ever in Rome?" is occasionally asked by Protestants, and we are happy to refer such inquirers to the Congregational Pacific of this city for an affirmative answer. We derived unusual pleasure while perusing the solemn of our contemporary last week, to read therein that "St. Peter was crucified at Rome with his head down," and that "St. Paul was beheaded in Rome." This settles the doubt which Protestants sometimes profess regarding St. Peter, and we congratulate our Congregational neighbor upon the truth thus told in its columns.

— A very pathetic story comes from Sarajevo. A laboring man applied at a convent for a nurse for his wife. The Sisters were all engaged at various places; but, as the case was urgent, a young novice, Pulka Sarabko, went. At night, when the house was quiet, the novice, rejoicing in her single duties for the honor of the Blessed Virgin, went into the kitchen to prepare some food for her patient. He kindled a bright fire. She ran to the stairs; but, rather than alarm the sick woman, who was the only other grown person in the house, she died in silence—a martyr to duty.

— The celebrated religious revivalist Moody arrived in this city last week and he proposes to give a series of revivals in this city shortly. We are very glad of this, as there are a great many wicked preachers both here and in Oakland who need a good "shaking up" for their sins, and if Rev. Moody will call at the MONITOR office we will give him a catalogue of names of preachers in this locality, and the crimes which they committed, which will send a score or ten of them to the "mourner's bench" sot least six months. Will Rev. McCleary please perform one good act in his life and escort Rev. Moody to the Monitor office.

— The Catholic Record states that one of the most virulent of reverend demagogues who spoke at the anti Catholic meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, made the discovery that Catholic influence is increasing in the State of Massachusetts, because Catholics rear their children, instead of suppressing them, after the example of the Puritans. He accordingly appealed strongly in his church, recently, to the Protestant women of Old Boston, for God's sake, to have more children, so as to keep the Catholic element from growing too powerful. He is evidently afraid that the bigots will not be able to carry out their programme of ostracising Catholics from the Boston School Board, and from positions as teachers in the schools.

— A preacher named Chaddock recently took for the subject of a sermon he preached at Fresno, "The Barren Fig Tree," and this was one of the most suitable subjects which a sectarian preacher could select. Protestantism is now, ever has been, and ever will be—a "Barren Fig Tree" in the sight of all who have ever glorified God both in Heaven and on earth. It came into the world cursing; its author was a not who was far more Satanized than sanctified. The system has been growing from bad to worse as the world grew older, until at length its very rottenness has become so apparent that few persons outside its sectarian preachers, have the least show of confidence in it as a religious system which is at all useful to any person with a soul worth saving.

— The Eastern States are rapidly trending towards Rome. Inside of fifty years the Blue Law State of Connecticut has become one-third Catholic in its population. When Bishop Tyler, its first Bishop, was consecrated in 1844, there were only 6,017 Catholics in the whole State, while they number at present fully 200,000. At that period there were but three priests and four churches in Connecticut and Rhode Island combined; at present there are 160 priests and 130 churches in Connecticut, and 113 priests and 56 churches in Rhode Island. What a joyful reflection! In less than forty-five years there are no less than 273 priests and 194 churches in a region of the New England States which was once the stronghold of Puritanical sectarianism; With such figures before them, who can gainsay the assertion that the power of God is promoting the growth of the Catholic Church

Predicaments of Protestant Preachers.

With all its indolence, parsimony, and the false glamour of supposed "sanctity" with which it is surrounded, the life of a sectarian preacher is not a happy one. Aside from the worry consequent upon the effort to raise a $2,000 family upon a $1,000 stipend, there are religious doubts and debt-collecting "dums" to deal with. Then there are internal dissensions among the "elect"—as the married members of the congregation are called. Besides these trials and tribulations, this poor preacher has to shake his hoofs much more in attempts to say anything original upon any moral or religious question, for he may offend one of the members, and cause his own salary to be cut off considerably.

Few persons outside the Protestant sects have any idea of the queer scrapes which happen inside these organizations, so for the amusement of MONITOR readers we will exhibit a couple of scenes, the first one not dramatic enough, just as we find them depicted by the daily press. Here is the first scene.

In St Ann's (Episcopal) church, New York, a soldier made some allusion to his English royal family, whereupon, a Britisher rose in his place and said: "I wish to make know that I am a British subject, and I do not like the reference made to the royal family this evening. I not intended to become a member of this church, and, now that this has happened, I shall never set foot in it again."

Such is Christianity as understood by an English Episcopalian! The Queen first and religion afterwards! This incident shows the sham sentiment which lies in the breasts of thousands of English Protestants.

Here is an entirely different scene:

In Chicago lies Mr. Stoughton in his tomb. Mr. Stoughton said recently: "I have been a Presbyterian and prominent member for two decades. I am as earnest a worker in the church as any. I have never had a word from my pastorate are listener politician. It has been my practice for many years to listen to the church at least once a month on the anti-slavery question. Unwearying in my advocacy, the destruction of the dram-shop when one of the tenants, who is very active in the matter of my rent-roll, jumped up and exclaimed: "I am glad there are no more voter present to listen to such a campaign speech as that!"

Protestant preachers are noted for making political speeches. Before doing so, however, they always ask on which side of the question are ranged the Pope, priests and Catholic people, and then they give their influence and their honeyed words to the other side—regardless entirely of any right or wrong there may be involved in the question at issue.

The promotion we have mentioned is necessary to keep Protestant preachers "solid" with the rich men of their different sects, so that they may continue their contributions and thus keep the church afloat, as a sectarian edifice without rich men would be as certain to meet with shipwreck, as would a man-of-war with all ports open and water pouring into her from all quarters of the compass.

John Savage Dead.

By the death of John Savage, the eminent patriot and scholar, which and event took place at Lauralside, Pennsylvania, on the 5th inst., Ireland loses one of her most faithful as well as most gifted sons. His talents and his nature lead him early to take to cast his lot in Ireland's cause. Many land lost—Ireland never lost—he was ever and with voice and pen, in poetry and prose, John Savage upheld the cause of Ireland as the last hour of his life. His best known works are "'98 and '48," and "Ireland Heroes and Martyrs," in both of which he has left behind him sterling facts concerning English injustice in Ireland which have helped to keep alive the fire of patriotism in many a Catholic heart.

For years Mr. Savage has been an invalid, so that he has not been prominently before the public for some time, yet, while others worked for Ireland, their efforts were blessed by the prayers which welled up from the warm heart of the departed Irish patriot. R. I. P.

— Protestants are becoming tired of the usual twang of their male preachers, and we predict that before ten years fully half the sectarian pulpits in the land will be filled by women. The American Board of Foreign Missions met in Cleveland, Ohio, recently, and on the second day's session no less than thirteen females made speeches on Protestant missions in distant lands, while only one poor solitary male preacher was permitted to say a word on the subject. How nice it will read in print: Mrs. Sallie Slapjack will preach at the Presbyterian church; Miss Mamamie Merrywell will preach at the Episcopalian church; Mrs. Cherokee Cheekchuk will preach at the Congregational church—and so on throughout the whole catalogue of sects. There is one improvement we look for when this change occurs, and that is the likelihood that the ladies will not falsely the Catholic Church so as great a degree of diabolical degeneracy as the present generation of Protestant preachers do!

— Holding two Catholic churches at the same time in one small town, will give MONITOR readers some idea of the progress of the Church in the East. Rev. Thomas Davin is about completing his new building in Cambria City, Pa., to be used as a church and parochial school. The church is called St. Columba's. The Rev. Edward Trevens has completed the excavations for a new German church to be called the Immaculate Conception, in the same place. It is also gratifying to learn that Rev. Thos. F. Coffey, rector of St. Rose's Church, Carbondale, Pa., has bought up the Baptist property near his church for the sum of $10,000. He needed it for parish purposes, and as there were only ten Baptists in the place, the good Father gave them $1,000 in piece because they were good still Baptists—and thus he bought them out.

— Jane Shaw of Portland, Maine, secured a divorce from her husband by proving that he went to a temperance meeting six nights in the week and to church twice on Sundays. The jury considered that both these actions were entirely inconsistent with this "respectable" of the age, and that any man who would thus spend his life should be compelled to spend it alone. When the husband heard the verdict he merely exclaimed "Oh! pshaw!"

Public School Encomiums.

Last week we told the contentious sectarian who edits the Methodist Advocate of this city, that the worst enemies of the Public Schools were the men who "managed them so as to make money off of every action they performed as gracious philanthropists and warm friends of "free education for the American people." We did not think, however, that we should come across an example of the baneficence of these enemies of Public Schools so soon, but the following occurrence, clipped from the N. Y. Sun, proves the truth of our assertion.

"The school trustees of Hoboken are publishing bitterly of what they claim to be the ostentatious generosity and indifference to school interests of the Board of Education. There is a dispute in the Board over the question of a point-stage which has been unknown since last May. Meanwhile there has been an organization among the school trustees and consequently the educational machinery has been brought to an almost complete standstill.

"Not only have the teachers been unable to get their salaries from the Board, but the school supplies have been cut off, and the school-houses have been unable to properly sweep their school rooms, for want of money to pay the janitors of the school houses. It has also been discovered that in case of a cold snap there will be no fuel on hand to heat the school houses.

"The "distribution of patronage" is only a small fraction of the corruption which is going on among those who pretend to be the best friends of what Hon. McCrary calls "our Public Schools."

A Funny and Very "Fishy" Story.

Perhaps the softest, flabbiest and most sickening kind of literature, ever human nature was ever forced to wade through, is the stories which sectarians tell of "converted Christmas, goody-goody sailors, jaw-breaking "sloggers," and other "brands saved from the burning," and all through the fact that the "converted" of those "reputed" sinners imagines had possessed himself of a Protestant bible.

Here is a story of one of the "John family whose proclamations we in California are so well acquainted with) which will make many readers of the MONITOR laugh for a month of Sundays, when they come to realize the manner in which the aforesaid "John" bamboozled the unsuspecting young lady who was a dear in the Chinaman's eye:

The story is headed "Keeping the Sabbath," in the sectarian paper from which we copy it, and the editor says that "a Chinaman recently described his conversion to the following incident:

She was traveling through New Mexico, three years ago, and was alone and half sick at Santa Fe on Sunday. She said a lady friend had a no-hand-sewing-machine she wanted mended, and asked a Chinaman if he was good at sewing. He said he was, and she gave him the machine to take home with him. The lady friend thinking, of course, that the Chinaman would pretend to display her cash and cause her regret. So, she held out a dollar bill, together with her handkerchiefs, and asked him again to wash them. He said he would do it, and he came up to a shelf took down a book, which the lady was surprised to see was a bible, and holding it in one hand, pulled to it with the other, looked into her face, strike a star stood in his eye, and said: "My Christian God yes Melican lady—and I know that book. You are good lady. Your face so like Christian God's face. Yes." A profound impression was made on the lady by the Chinaman's manner of making the speaker."

The above story is credited very properly to the Sailor's Magazine, and it is just such a "Sabbath" as Holiness would sanction—at least land Sabbath—at least, we mean, in order to keep him awake till "four bells."

The lady who could become "converted" through such a story as this, could be made to believe that Jonah swallowed the whale—the bible to the contrary notwithstanding.

Public School Education.

The following sentiment against the system of public school education, appeared in the Episcopal Churchman, in order to show non-Catholic readers of the MONITOR that it is not the Catholic Church alone which condemns a system of education that is far more likely to make the men of the future smart rascals than respectable citizens. Here are the results of education without religion:

"It is noteworthy, though it is perfectly natural, that absconding clerks and other defaulters are mostly men who have received much learning as they possess from public schools. That the public schools do turn out a large number of smart men is undeniable, but their neglect of moral teaching and training, which is confessed by leaders in the public school system, are likely to turn out smart rogues as competent citizens. It is greatly to be feared that the indirect effect of the methods of teaching in our schools is distinctly and unpleasantly unsound. In nearly all secular schools the one thing which is always kept before the mind of the scholar is the indispensable necessity of getting on. The stimulus of emulation is constantly applied. Year after year children are impressed with the thought that the first duty of life is to get ahead of their other people. Success in competition is made the great object of their daily work. Why should one wonder if the practical outcome of many years of such training should prove to be dishonesty in morality? Teach a child that success in getting on is the supreme object of all his efforts, teach him little or nothing of the conditions of right success, practically ignore God as the guide of every step in life, and then, why should you wonder if the result of your his system of education proves to be the making of a successful for unsuccessful rogue?"

— We have frequently cautioned Catholic parents against purchasing printed prayers from peddlers under the impression that by buying them they will be saved from eternal fire hereafter. Such prayers are like patent medicines—worthless to cure every evil incident to human nature. A Rev. friend in another diocese sends us one of these spurious prayers from week and asks the MONITOR to warn Catholics against keeping them in their houses. In doing so we adopt the language of the Catholic Times, and ask our readers all over the Union to carry out these suggestions fully and physically.

We warn our Catholic people against the vendors of certain superstitious prayers alleged to have been found in the grave of our Lord, also of "a letter written by our Lord Jesus Christ and found fifty-three years after the Blessed Saviour's death," etc. Now all this stuff is silly and superstitious, and should receive no countenance whatever from Catholics. Here all such trash and kick from your doors the vendors thereof. We have surely prayers enough approved by the Church without having recourse to such superstitious twaddle.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BILLS.

Further Criticisms on the Fruitless Chapter in Salisbury's "Metologies," Professor Jungmann's Judgment, King Henry's Oath at Crewness. An Insight into the Characters of the Five Popes to whom the Spurious Bulls are attributed. Etc., Etc. Finding of the Matrix from which Papal Seals were Forged.

In our last issue we gave the very exhaustive and caustic criticism of the Adrian Bull, as well as the added chapter in the "Metologies" of John of Salisbury, which Victor Dalton, the learned editor of the Freeman's Journal, published in Dublin a few years ago in Paris. But in order that our readers may fully understand that the Adrian Bull is not more entirely exhausted, we now produce the testimony of other writers on the spurious character of two documents which are so absolutely to have the light of historical truth turned upon them, in order to grace beyond controversy that they were purposely forged by a domestic English King, in order to give him a false claim—under cover of which he hoped to invade Ireland and to rob that people of their liberty and their property.

CONSIDERATIONS ON POPE ADRIAN'S DEATH.

In the spicy final chapter of the "Metologicus," by John of Salisbury, which has already been published, occurs the following brief but rather suspicious account of how Ireland was supposed to have been taken from its rightful owners and handed over to King Henry II. of England, without that King ever going to the trouble of making such a request: Here is what the "Metologicus" is made to say on that subject:

"At my request to Pope Adrian IV., called and gave to the illustrious King of England, Henry II., Ireland, to extend his rule over hereditary right."

If we are to believe the above extract from the "Metologicus, Pope Adrian gave Ireland to King Henry at the mere request of John of Salisbury. The fifty of such a donation being given in the reputed of a simple priest without courtly influence or kingly credentials, is by prepotent must be worthy of any consideration.

Are we to believe that the same Pontiff who refused the kiss of peace to the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, because the latter would not hold the stirrup of the Papal Pontiff's horse while he was mounting his horse, gave away an Island with a million of inhabitants, 3,000 Catholic churches and hundreds of churches, convents, monasteries and colleges, at the request of a priest of no rating great without clerical character or credential of any kind?

Are we to believe that the Pope who refused to surrender a single town in Italy to the German Emperor, backed by a hundred thousand German spears, could hand over the independent Irish nation to an English monarch at the after request repeated of a simple priest?

It is not past human credence to suppose that the Pope who for years denied Arnold of Brescia, and made Barbarossa, by the power of the spiritual sword, would think so lightly of the liberties and independence of the Irish people as to barter them all away without even asking that people if they desired such a change?

Could it be possible that the sagacious and courageous Pontiff who boldly told Frederick Barbarossa that he had the keys of the possessions, and the liberties of the Roman Church would be maintained of any "request" would give away Ireland at the former actions as to bestow Ireland upon King Henry as a personal fief to a transitory ruler?

Pope Adrian's life to one has cast no act words—had been passed "between the anvil and the hammer." He had been exiled from his flock by the fierce assaults of the vicious enemies of the Church, and more than one-half of the time he had been compelled to live in lurking against the persecutions and antagonism of armed allies who desired to crush the Papacy and to rob the Church of her temporal possessions. Is it possible, therefore, that the Pope who so persistently, and at such personal sacrifice, defended the temporal possessions of the See of Rome from the hands of vandal Emperors, would surrender so quietly, so unjustly and so profoundly, the whole Island of Ireland, the land of Erin into the keeping of a foreign king who had no more right to Ireland than he had to the Chair of St. Peter or the tiara of the Pope himself?

Pope Adrian was not the Pontiff to act in such a manner, and the mere request of Salisbury is supposed to depict him, and few people there are who will believe that such a "donation" was ever granted upon the mere request of a friendly visitor whose description of his life in Beneventum, places the stamp of "doubt" upon his whole narrative.

PROFESSOR JUNGMANN'S JUDGMENT.

Professor Jungmann, from whose "Historical Lectures" we are about to quote, has been for several years Professor of History in the University of Louvain, and as this justly celebrated Belgian historian is entirely devoid of any prejudice which might be attributed to an English or an Irish writer, thereby preventing them from giving impartial testimony in the case, we claim that Professor Jungmann's evidence adds much additional weight to the volume of testimony which we have already produced in order to show clearly, explicitly and conclusively, that the spurious Adrian Bull was manufactured in England.

Professor Jungmann says there are grave reasons for considering the Adrian Bull to be spurious, "as it is well known from history that everywhere towards the close of the twelfth century forged or corrupted Papal Letters or Diplomas were not unusual. . . . That such was the case in England is susceptible of proof from the Letters of John Sarisburensis and of others."

"Richard, Archbishop of Canterbury, the successor of Thomas A Becket, commanded all the Bishops to promulgate in all their churches the severe punishment of excommunication against the public guilty of forgery, as common had this crime become in the twelfth century! In the time of Pope Innocent III., also, various statutes were enacted against this abominable crime, which was becoming daily more widespread and dangerous;

"In view of those facts, says Jungmann, "it is not at all to be wondered at if some forged document attributed to Pope Adrian IV., should be produced and circulated. Moreover, the document attributed to Pope Adrian, which has no place, day or year whereby to locate it, must necessarily be ascribed to the year 1156 or 1157, at the time when it is said John of Salisbury visited the Pope at Beneventum. But down to the year 1175, there is not a second good chance for a forged Bull of Adrian was shown or published by King Henry of England, although it was of the highest importance that it should be made known, since there was question of the submission of Ireland."

It is from our countrymen Professor Jungmann, "that Sylvester Malone, in his Church history of Ireland, states that the Letter of Adrian was shown and its purport made known to the bishops and princes of Ireland in 1172, at a synod and to have been handed in Dublin and that, therefore, we can readily understand the cause of the ready submission of Ireland to King Henry II. "But, remarks Jungmann, "there is no mention made whatever of the Adrian document found, and the submission of a portion of the Irish people to the English King is explained sufficiently well from the different circumstances

"Even Pope Alexander III., the immediate successor of Adrian, who ruled the Papal Chair from 1159 to 1181, makes no mention in his case genuine epistles of such a concession of Ireland to Henry II. Yet, if such a donation had been made by his predecessor in the Papacy, why does he allude to the donation, or to any Bull granting such a right to King Henry II.

There are three genuine epistles of Pope Alexander III., which relate to the submission of Ireland, dated respectively from the years 1172, 1175 and 1176. In the kings and princes of Ireland, also to Christian, Archbishop of Lismore, legate of the Apostolic See. Not one another, which was first published by Sir John Cambrensis, and is said to have been found in Lucca, in the year 1172, but there is held to be a forgery, for the reason that Pope Alexander was not in the Eternal City during that year, and also because the style of the document is widely different from that known to be Pope Alexander's.

In the year Ireland 1172, there is found any mention of the supposed Adrian Bull, which Pope Adrian had conferred himself, in his little were entitled "Ex Pecunia Jungmann" which was published in 1856, among other documents in the Vatican Hall of Pope Wm under III

"Now, if such a document had been in existence, it would have been produced by Pope Adrian did not refuse to surrender a single town in Italy to the German Emperor, backed by a hundred thousand German spears, could hand over the independent Irish nation to an English monarch at the after request repeated of a simple priest?

It is not past human credence to suppose that the Pope who for years denied Arnold of Brescia, and made Barbarossa, by the power of the spiritual sword, would think so lightly of the liberties, liberties and independence of the Irish people as to barter them all away without even asking that people if they desired such a change?

Could it be possible that the sagacious and courageous Pontiff who boldly told Frederick Barbarossa that he had the keys of the possessions, and the liberties of the Roman Church would be maintained of any "request" would give away Ireland at the former actions as to bestow Ireland upon King Henry as a personal fief to a transitory ruler?

Pope Adrian's life to one has cast no act words—had been passed "between the anvil and the hammer." He had been exiled from his flock by the fierce assaults of the vicious enemies of the Church, and more than one-half of the time he had been compelled to live in lurking against the persecutions and antagonism of armed allies who desired to crush the Papacy and to rob the Church of her temporal possessions. Is it possible, therefore, that the Pope who so persistently, and at such personal sacrifice, defended the temporal possessions of the See of Rome from the hands of vandal Emperors, would surrender so quietly, so unjustly and so profoundly, the whole Island of Ireland, the land of Erin into the keeping of a foreign king who had no more right to Ireland than he had to the Chair of St. Peter or the tiara of the Pope himself?

Pope Adrian was not the Pontiff to act in such a manner, and the mere request of Salisbury is supposed to depict him, and few people there are who will believe that such a "donation" was ever granted upon the mere request of a friendly visitor whose description of his life in Beneventum, places the stamp of "doubt" upon his whole narrative.

PROFESSOR JUNGMANN'S JUDGMENT.

Professor Jungmann, from whose "Historical Lectures" we are about to quote, has been for several years Professor of History in the University of Louvain, and as this justly celebrated Belgian historian is entirely devoid of any prejudice which might be attributed to an English or an Irish writer, thereby preventing them from giving impartial testimony in the case, we claim that Professor Jungmann's evidence adds much additional weight to the volume of testimony which we have already produced in order to show clearly, explicitly and conclusively, that the spurious Adrian Bull was manufactured in England.

Professor Jungmann says there are grave reasons for considering the Adrian Bull to be spurious, "as it is well known from history that everywhere towards the close of the twelfth century forged or corrupted Papal Letters or Diplomas were not unusual. . . . That such was the case in England is susceptible of proof from the Letters of John Sarisburensis and of others."

"Richard, Archbishop of Canterbury, the successor of Thomas A Becket, commanded all the Bishops to promulgate in all their churches the severe punishment of excommunication against the public guilty of forgery, as common had this crime become in the twelfth century! In the time of Pope Innocent III., also, various statutes were enacted against this abominable crime, which was becoming daily more widespread and dangerous;

"In view of those facts, says Jungmann, "it is not at all to be wondered at if some forged document attributed to Pope Adrian IV., should be produced and circulated. Moreover, the document attributed to Pope Adrian, which has no place, day or year whereby to locate it, must necessarily be ascribed to the year 1156 or 1157, at the time when it is said John of Salisbury visited the Pope at Beneventum. But down to the year 1175, there is not a second good chance for a forged Bull of Adrian was shown or published by King Henry of England, although it was of the highest importance that it should be made known, since there was question of the submission of Ireland."

It is from our countrymen Professor Jungmann, "that Sylvester Malone, in his Church history of Ireland, states that the Letter of Adrian was shown and its purport made known to the bishops and princes of Ireland in 1172, at a synod and to have been handed in Dublin and that, therefore, we can readily understand the cause of the ready submission of Ireland to King Henry II. "But, remarks Jungmann, "there is no mention made whatever of the Adrian document found, and the submission of a portion of the Irish people to the English King is explained sufficiently well from the different circumstances

"Even Pope Alexander III., the immediate successor of Adrian, who ruled the Papal Chair from 1159 to 1181, makes no mention in his case genuine epistles of such a concession of Ireland to Henry II. Yet, if such a donation had been made by his predecessor in the Papacy, why does he allude to the donation, or to any Bull granting such a right to King Henry II.

There are three genuine epistles of Pope Alexander III., which relate to the submission of Ireland, dated respectively from the years 1172, 1175 and 1176. In the kings and princes of Ireland, also to Christian, Archbishop of Lismore, legate of the Apostolic See. Not one another, which was first published by Sir John Cambrensis, and is said to have been found in Lucca, in the year 1172, but there is held to be a forgery, for the reason that Pope Alexander was not in the Eternal City during that year, and also because the style of the document is widely different from that known to be Pope Alexander's.

In the year Ireland 1172, there is found any mention of the supposed Adrian Bull, which Pope Adrian had conferred himself, in his little were entitled "Ex Pecunia Jungmann" which was published in 1856, among other documents in the Vatican Hall of Pope Wm under III

"Now, if such a document had been in existence, it would have been produced by Pope Adrian did not refuse to surrender a single town in Italy to the German Emperor, backed by a hundred thousand German spears, could hand over the independent Irish nation to an English monarch at the after request repeated of a simple priest?

Matters have considerable stress on the genuineness of this document to which is attached the name of Alexander III., and which is said to have been given at an episcopal, not civil, audience at Benevento, the Emperor of that Pontiff's Honorius, Frederick Barbarossa, and the statements of Malone are as follows:

"Meanwhile the cousins of Adrian IV., are supposed to have visited Rome, in the year 1175—or in 1172, in some signs that was built to Waterford, is very doubtful. For Virtual Vandemont, it is said that it was, is very inaccurate in his relation of historical facts, nor can much faith be placed in his account of the Papal visit, however, that it was not until towards the close of the twelfth century that the seals of the Papal Bulls, which are first made known, as may be proved by Ciaconius himself, who at that period published the Bull of Adrian, and which it first appeared. From the first introduction by Cambrensis, the document supposed to be from Adrian, to King Henry II. by Pope Adrian, was nowhere published until the year 1175, although there were frequent opportunities for publishing it, and there follows that this document was have been purposely kept secret, and that there were other reasons besides domestic ones, for keeping the supposed "donation" document locked up.

THE "METOLOGICUS" OF JOHN OF SALISBURY

was completed by its author in 1159 or 1160, and Professor Jungmann says that clearly refer to that period as being the time when his work was the light of day. If, therefore, John of Salisbury could speak of Adrian IV. as the author of the "donation" of Ireland to King Henry, how does it happen that although the books of Saint Bernard, which were known, taken as number made of the aforesaid "donation" until the year 1175? Several authors maintain that the Forty-second chapter that being the portion of the work in which the "donation" of Ireland to King Henry is narrated—is an interpolation. The method of the book reads correctly even if those words are omitted. "Id proxo mum Hendric rex Angliae Henricus II., dedit Hibernium ut hereditam possidendam, sicut fideles redantur in monumentis suis."

The expression, "ut hereditam possidendam," engages at the idea that there was a series of years (a long interval) between the issuance of the Adrian Bull and the publication of the work of Saralisbury. Such language is never used to express short intervals when there is question of his letter of a year, and, if such the bull after being issued, the author would not have the audacity of the Papal Chancery, we say surely the bull be destroyed then discovered by forging put to no may other so.

If this explained to those especially of other creeds who are ignorant of the Adrian Bull said in Latin, as Latin was the language of the Universal Church. He cited as an example the fact that all the dignitaries of the Church, assembled at Rome, were well versed in Latin, all (although from all nations of the earth) easily understood the Latin tongue. He then proceeded to the Adrian Bull, and said that the Latin tongue, in the Universal Church, was the same, it was well received in field the Latin, and consequently, the Latin tongue, in the Universal Church, and we will transcribe, even that the Latin tongue, in the Universal Church, and we will transcribe, even that the Latin tongue, in the Universal Church, and we will transcribe, even that

Farm and Home.

Useful Receipts.

MUTTON SOUP.—Mutton soup is an excellent soup for children, especially for those whose bowels are out of order. It should be boiled as long as beef soup and with the same vegetables; but before straining be careful to remove every particle of grease, as that will give a strong, disagreeable taste to the soup. Take half a cupful of barley, choose neither the coarse nor the fine meal, but the quality between the two; put the barley in the bowl, pour hot water on it, stir with a teaspoon and pour the water off with the particles which float to the top, repeat if necessary. Then put the barley into a larger vessel, strain some of the soup over it, cut up two potatoes, and if agreeable to taste, one ripe leek into half inch pieces, and boil the barley an hour. The meat should be eaten with a mustard or caper sauce.

HAM PIE WITH A POTATO CRUST.—Cold roast beef or beef steak is very palatable in this form.

Cut the beef into small pieces, and if there is no cold gravy put the beef into a skillet with a cup of water, and season with salt, pepper and some fancy sauce; boil. When a gravy is formed, put the meat and gravy of which there should be only enough to moisten the beef, into a deep dish, and serve it with a layer about two inches thick of freshly mashed potatoes, which has been beaten very light with milk and butter. Bake in a quick oven for half an hour, or until the potato is browned on top.

CHOCOLATE CUSTARD.—Take one egg and a half ounce of chocolate to a single gill of water, then boil till smooth. Mix with it one pint of milk flavored with lemon or vanilla, add a two ounce of castor sugar. When it boils stir to it the well beaten eggs. Pour the custard into a jug or jug, set into a pan of boiling water, and stir it without one leg until it is thick like cold cream (in about 15 minutes. These custards are finer when the yolks only are used. In that case the number of eggs must be increased. The custards can be moulded by dissolving from half to three quarters of an ounce of isinglass in the milk.

Words of Wisdom.

Excellence is never given; and to man but as a reward to labor. If you have great talents industry will employ them; if you have but moderate abilities industry will supply their deficiency. Nothing is denied to well directed labor; nothing is obtained without it.

Gentility is neither in birth, wealth nor outward fashion. It is in the mind. A high sense of honor; a determination never to take a mean advantage of another; delicacy, politeness towards those with whom we have dealings; these are its essential characteristics.

If we find that our time passes slowly and heavily, we may be sure there is something wrong within. Either we have not enough to do or we work mechanically without heart or energy. If past time looks short and empty, it is because it has a distinct record of noble aims, definite resolves, worthy endeavors. If the immediate future looks tedious and uninteresting, it is because we are not living full, rich and earnest lives.

We do not always perceive that even the writing of a note of congratulation, the fabrication of something intended as an offering of affection, our necessary intercourse with characters which have no congeniality with our own, or hours apparently trifled away in the domestic circle, may be made by us the performance of a most sacred and blessed work; even the carrying out, after our feeble measure, of the design of God for the increase of happiness.

Photography as a Detective.

Photography is gaining prominence in the criminal courts. With the help a Berlin merchant was recently convicted of crooked ways in keeping his accounts. The slight difference in color and shade of inks are made manifest in the photographic copy. Blue inks appear nearly white; brown inks, on the contrary, almost black. The book of the accused were submitted to a photographer, who took off the pages connected and brought into court the most undoubted counterfeit of the illegitimate after-entry of some of the accounts. A subsequent chemical test substantiated this evidence. The photographic is to be preferred to the chemical test, because it brings it proofs to the courts and out into them to inspection, leaving the document under inspection unharmed; while the results of a chemical test must be taken on the evidence of the chemist alone, and the writing examined is perhaps destroyed. In another case similar to the above, changing the date of a note by an ink-sufficient erasure and addition, was proved by means of photography.

Our Mother's Sorrows.

The Catholic Church marks seven events in the life of the Mother of God, as y rode of intense sorrow for her; the circumcision, the flight into Egypt, the loss of the Child in the temple, the carrying of the cross, the crucifixion, the death, and the burial of Jesus. On those occasions the sacred Heart of the Mother of God was pierced through and through with a sword of sorrow; and the prophecy of the holy Simeon was fulfilled: "Thou own heart a sword shall pierce."

An Alleged Cure for Whooping-Cough.

Dr. Mohn, according to the Revue Mensuelle des Maladies de l'Enfance May, 1886, claims that he has in a number of cases produced instant and permanent cure for whooping cough by fumigations with sulphur. His mode of procedure is as follows:

In the morning the children are stripped and removed from their sleeping room, in which are hung all the clothing, toys, and in fact everything with which the children are brought in contact. In this room about four ounces of sulphur for every cubic yard of space is ignited, and the sulphurous acid allowed to remain in the room for about five hours. The room is then well aired, and the next evening the child sleeps in a room and bed which has been completely disinfected, and it is said that a cure is at once produced. As to whether this will be attained in all cases, we do not presume to state.—Therapeutic Gazette.

Housewifely Hints.

Red Cabbage makes look pretty on tea table over a white table cloth.

The favorite designs for every peach work continue to be fans and sabrons.

A neat design for a splasher back of a wash stand is of swans swimming among water lilies.

An old nurse says that rain water if heat ed very hot is very soothing to wash and tired eyes.

White lace spreads over silk or silesia of some delicate shade, with pillow shams to match, are revived.

Earth's Best Mother.

We wonder at times why the Mother of God should have had sorrow at all, since She was God to Whom no harm could come. He was the all powerful God when he was carried into Egypt, when He stood among the doctors of the law in the temple, and when He hung on the cross between two thieves. But He was human, the Blood of Mary's blood and Flesh of Mary's flesh; and as each every pin He suffered was felt by her. She was a true Mother, who loved her Son and was faithful to Him all through her life.

Family Fun.

His Proposal Rejected.

Some months since a gentleman had the misfortune to lose his wife, a literary lady of some reputation, says the Yonkers Gleaner. After grieving for a number of weeks a bright idea entered the head of this widower. He thought he could do something to lessen his sorrow, and for this purpose he called on a lady (his acquaintance) and requested to speak a word with her in private. Thinking she was about to receive a proposal the lady blushed with becoming modestia.

"Myrtle" he said with downcast eyes, as he took her hand, "you know my wife."

"Yes."

"It is not good for man to be alone."

"Perhaps not."

"Did you ever reflect upon that part of the marriage service which requires couples to observe unto each other until death parts them?"

"I have."

"I have often reflected upon it myself. Non death has parted me from my wife and I feel very lonely.

"I should think it like ly."

"I think I must do something to restore to me her kind sous famous and the manner of my home.

He pressed the lady's hand and sighed. She returned the pressure and was softened a little to encourage her.

"My dear," he said, after a long pause, "I'll come to the point at once. I have a proposal to make.

"A proposal?"

"Yes,"

"Why" she said, blushing, and covering her face with her hands.

"I have concluded to write my wife's biography. Now, I have but little skill in literary ease so, and if you will correct my manuscript and write the head-ly of the chapters I will give you ten dollars."

She sprang from his side and her eyes flashed with anger.

"Did we you hanged first, and then I wouldn't, you—you—"

She left the room, not being able to express her rage. The widower sighing took up his hat and went home.

A Taking Name.

A happy father out on Massachusetts street had his first child, a girl born in the old, vaccinated day before yesterday. "Hy George, is it that great?" he exclaimed as he saw the doctor at work. "By Gor, why, I guess I'd call her by that name. Vaccina! Why that is a girl's name, ain't it? Vaccina Vrin Saunders. Capital! People will think we are descended from some old Roman family. Poor little Vaccine. The mother strongly objected to this application for her first born. She wanted it named Imogene. But the father was determined, and Vaccina Vrin Saunders she will go through life. Her diminutive will probably be "Vacky."

No Rose for Them.

Miss Clara (retiring for the night)—Eric! wake up; there is the sweetest music you ever heard in front of the house. I just expected that Charley said his friends would serenade us to night.

Mr. Eric (testing)—Ah, Clara, is it the lovely! Ought to get up and throw flowers from the window!

Miss Clara—Oh, I think so (dropping a bunch of roses with great caution) There Eric!

Voice (below)—Mein Gott in Himmel! ze no lil on raw.

Rare Good Luck.

Husband—You seem very happy.

Wife—Why should si'l! My jewel of a servant girl is n't going to leave me after all.

"Why not?"

"She had engaged to work for Mrs. Fortunatus, but she can't now, for this morning Mrs. Fortunatus died. Was n't it sweet of her?"

Candidates' Pictures.

Forman (great dolly)—Here's an order from down stairs to print a cut of Hilkins, the Democratic candidate for Mayor. We haven't any cuts of him.

Able Editor—How much did he pay for it?

"Five dollars."

"Only $5! Scratch a board on Lydia Pinkham, and run that in."

Very Unkind.

Brown (broadly)—I think, Mary, that baby gets his temper from me.

Mrs. Brown—No, John, I don't think so. I think you've got all you ever had.

Preserving the Entities.

Foggs—Just look at that absurd hat, Why it's as tall as a steeple.

Boggs—What about that! Is it there a bein under it?

Short Smiles.

Miss Dearleigh (on the tennis ground)—Won't you join us, Mr. Whitehead?

Rev. Mr. Whitehead—I am sorry to say I have to do the marriage service with me, Miss Dearleigh.

"My dear children," said Deacon Black, addressing the assembly, "can you tell me why you come to Sunday school?"

"Cause our pa's would wallop us if we didn't," promptly respond d a small urchin.

Caller—Your little dog doesn't look well, Mrs Hobson.

Mrs Hobson—No, poor little fellow! The baby's crying kept him awake all last night. He barked until nearly morning.

Mr. Biggs (reading English History)—The Prince of Wales in 1796—

Mrs. Biggs—The Prince of Wales in 1796! Goodness! I did n't know he was such an old man as that.

It y—And you're quite sure, doctor, I'm perfectly sound and well?

Doctor—I tell you, sir, you could n't be better.

Eve—I am sorry for that. I don't see how I can work that cream trip with my cough.

Uncle Rastus (to his young hopeful)—Dolphus, yo' young rascal yo' take dat sixteen pound cannon yo' mout ah stop shootin' by.

"Dolphus—Yes pa.

Uncle Rastus—Don'yo' know it am dangerous to do little sh ds stunnuck to shoot sixteen pounds? Some day eddication will kill yo' dahk, kit yo' shoak.

Mother—Don't think so much of getting presents. You know it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Bobby (b)—Then I hope lots of people will be blessed on my birthday.

Young Wife—Heroes! Now here, sir, your dog has run off with a whole sponge cake that I left on side to cool."

Tramp—Don't worry, m'am. That dog is capable of more than this. He has got an extraordinary nose, for this morning Mrs. Fortunatus died. Was n't it sweet of her?"

CHURCH CANDLES!

—REDUCED—

Beeswax Candles 25 & 30 c For Candlemas.

PATENT WAX AND STERIC ACID CANDLES!

Highly Finished in Quality. Burns clearer than Candles of other Manufacturers.

PURE OLIVE OIL. PURE ALTAR WINE.

Candles ordered now payable after Candlemas, 1887. Being the first to large: introduce all grades and qualities of Candles for Altar use on the Pacific Coast, I feel I have some claims on the patronage of purchasers. My Patent Wax Candle I have introduced for the services of the Forty Hours Devotion. Before ordering from others, I would be pleased to have you call and examine my stock and get prices. I will promise to sell all grades of candles from 3 to 10 per cent. cheaper than other manufacturers. My Candles and Olive Oil are burned on all the Altars on the Pacific Coast, and are endorsed by His Grace Most Rev. Archbishop Riordan, Most Rev. Archbishop Gross, Rt. Rev. Bishop Mora, Rt. Rev. Bishop Manogue, Very Rev. N. Congiati, S. J., all the Rev. Clergy, Presidents and Superiors of Colleges and Convents.

The following letter lately received from Rev. J. A. McLaughlin, C. SS. R., is self-explanatory:

VENG CANDLES, 'Pure Wax,' I must state are the best I have seen and anywhere. They were seen in all the Missions given by me and my companions in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and Oregon City, and also in the Dioceses of Los Angeles and Monterey, and gave entire satisfaction at every place in the other dioceses. These burning qualities cannot be excelled if even equalled by candles of any other make which I have ever used. As to the price, this is based on all doubt very reasonable.

I am, Yours Respectfully,

J. A. McLAUGHLIN, C. SS. R.

St. Alphonsus' Church, St. Louis, Mo

This is only one of many similar letters received from the Rev. Clergy of the Pacific Coast. Satisfying a continuance of your valued orders, I am, very sincerely,

JOHN A. LENNON,

WHOLESALE GROCER AND TEA IMPORTER,

315 and 317 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JOHN WIELAND BREWING CO.

Largest Brewery West of St. Louis.

BEST LAGER BEER

On the Pacific Coast.

BREWERY—Second St., nr. Folsom

SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold in 1887, 97,187½ barrels.

JOB PRINTING.

Any of the Rev Clergy, Principals of schools or Institutions can have their Job Printing done at the Lowest Rates, at the Franciscan Press, 418 Sansome street, the most profitable place in the city to patronize. All Call and get estimates and be convinced.

CURE FOR THE DEAF

A. H. DIX, Sole Manufacturer, 117 Liberty St., New York. Please name this paper.

ARMSTRONG & NIKLAUS.

GROCERS.

Butter, Eggs, Teas & Coffees

A SPECIALTY.

1205 and 1207 Sixteenth St.

Cor. Hoff ave. Bet. Valencia and Mission Sts.

Country Orders Packed and Shipped. Goods Delivered in any part of the City, Free of Charge.

Marble! Granite! Statuary!

W. H. McCORMICK,

Importer and Manufacturer of

ITALIAN AND AMERICAN MARBLE, American Lead Scotch Granite, Marbleds and Onyx Vases, Statues, Monuments, Urns and all kinds of Marble and Granite work. 1440 Market St., between City Hall Ave. and Larkin St., San Francisco.

B. BRADLEY,

Painting, Whitening,

AND PAPER HANGING,

923 Mission Street, 923

Telephone No. 3066.

McKENNA & PURCELL,

Hay, Grain and Commission

MERCHANTS,

Consignments Solicited.

Shipping Orders a Specialty.

214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

WEDDING PRESENTS.

A SET OF PRICE'S Famous California-Made CARVERS.

The Cry Rabe and Design. Challenge the World. Beware of Imitations.

Price's Cream Baking Powder, per pound ..... 25 cts.

Price's Cream Baking Powder, 2 pounds ..... 40 cts.

Price's Cream Baking Powder, half pound, per doz. $1.

Sent anywhere on receipt of price. Address

W. PRICE, Pioneer Cutler, 415 Kearny St.

RAILROADS.

SAN FRANCISCO NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD

"THE DONAHUE BLOOD OUTLOW ROUTE."

(COMMENCING SUNDAY, APRIL 3, 1887, AND UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE, TRAINS WILL RUN ON THE SEVERAL DIVISIONS OF THE Pacific Improvement Company, Market Street Wharf, as follows:

Leave S. F.	Destination.	Arrive S. F.
SAUSALITO DIVISION.
7:00 A. M.	Petaluma,	10:40 A. M.
3:30 P. M.	Santa Rosa,	6:10 P. M.
5:00 P. M.	Cloverdale,	10:25 P. M.
SONOMA VALLEY DIVISION.
7:00 A. M.	Fulton,	9:30 A. M.
3:30 P. M.	Windsor, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville,	6:10 P. M.
7:00 A. M.	Cloverdale,	8:15 P. M.

Stages connect at Santa Rosa for White Sulphur Springs, Mark West Springs, Fulton for Lake Sonoma, Villa for Skaggs Springs, at Cloverdale, for Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Harbin Springs, Blue Lakes, Upper Lake, Vichy Springs, Kavanaugh Springs, Ukiah, Mendocino City and the Geysers.

EXCURSION TICKETS from Saturdays to Monday, at reduced rates, to Santa Rosa, Fulton, Windsor, St. Helena, Calistoga, Cloverdale.

EXCURSION TICKETS good for Sundays only—to Petaluma, $1 50; to Santa Rosa $2; to Healdsburg $3; to Cloverdale, $4 50; to Geyserville, $4.

From San Francisco to Fort Point, Tiburon and San Rafael, 8:00 A. M., 2:00 P. M., 3:30 P. M., 5:00 P. M., 6:30 P. M., 8:00 P. M. Sundays—8:00 A. M., 1:30 P. M., 5:00 P. M.

To San Francisco from Fort Point, Tiburon—Week Days—7:00 A. M., 10:40 A. M., 1:40 P. M., 4:10 P. M., 5:45 P. M., 6:50 P. M., 8:20 P. M. Sundays—7:00 A. M., 10:00 A. M., 1:00 P. M., 4:00 P. M., 6:00 P. M., 8:00 P. M.

To San Francisco from Sausalito—7:00 A. M., 8:45 A. M., 10:40 A. M., 1:40 P. M., 3:40 P. M., 4:10 P. M., 5:45 P. M., 6:50 P. M., 8:20 P. M. Sundays—7:00 A. M., 10:00 A. M., 1:00 P. M., 4:00 P. M., 6:00 P. M., 8:00 P. M.

To San Francisco from Petaluma—Week Days—7:00 A. M., 8:45 A. M., 10:40 A. M., 1:40 P. M., 4:10 P. M., 5:45 P. M., 6:50 P. M., 8:20 P. M. Sundays—7:00 A. M., 10:00 A. M., 1:00 P. M., 4:00 P. M., 6:00 P. M., 8:00 P. M.

To San Francisco from Santa Rosa—7:00 A. M., 10:40 A. M., 1:40 P. M., 4:10 P. M., 5:45 P. M., 6:50 P. M., 8:20 P. M. Sundays—7:00 A. M., 10:00 A. M., 1:00 P. M., 4:00 P. M., 6:00 P. M., 8:00 P. M.

To San Francisco from Cloverdale—7:00 A. M., 10:40 A. M., 1:40 P. M., 4:10 P. M., 5:45 P. M., 6:50 P. M., 8:20 P. M. Sundays—7:00 A. M., 10:00 A. M., 1:00 P. M., 4:00 P. M., 6:00 P. M., 8:00 P. M.

NOTE—Saturday's train to leave Santa Rosa for Sausalito at 3:30 P. M. will run to San Rafael only.

A. W. FOSTER, Superintendent.

R. R. RYAN, General Agent, 650 Market St., Chronicle Building.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor

(Late Grandview Hotel.)

DR. H. CRAIGIE,

DENTIST.

All Operations in Dentistry Performed.

TEETH EXTRACTED PAINLESSLY.

806 Market St, Phelan Building.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JAS. SCHEIBLI,

Having Enlarged His Store, has laid in an entire new stock of Foreign : and : Domestic : Suitings.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

539 Clay Street, 539

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

17 POWELL STREET,

BRANCH,

1156 MARKET ST.

LAUNDRY.

(Rch St. bet. Folsom and Howard S. P. Co)

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 787.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Laborers, Sawmill Men, Dishwashers, Waiters, Chambermaids, and for private families and country. Also, good reliable male Help, without any charge to employers. Signals waiting rooms for males at 608 Clay street.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

—Importers and Dealers in—

BOOK, NEWS,

WRITING AND WRAPPING

PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

MANUFACTURERS OF—

Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.

512 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

Adjustable and Common Dress Forms.

Paper Mache Busts

Also, Display Jewelry Trays, Rolls, Pillows, Cushions, Skirts, Bustles, and perfect jewelry form stands.

224 Stockton St

SAN FRANCISCO

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

PIANOS

GAINED THE PREMIUM for general excellence, at the Mechanics' Institute Fair, 1886, and at the Mechanics' Institute Fair, 1887, the only instruments honored with a medal, and recommended for purchase by the committee of judges, composed of Dudley Buck, Wm. Coulter, Wm. Greene, Wm. Hoff, Wm. Lyman, Wm. Sherwood, Wm. Shakespeare, Wm. Tell Wm. Penn, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Wm. Cullen

MEMORIAL CHAPEL.

Dedication at Santa Clara College.

THE RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES.

Father Sestini's Sermon on the Need of a Religious Basis for all True Education.

The Memorial Chapel of Santa Clara College, which has been in process of construction during the past year, was opened and dedicated on Rosary Sunday. The establishment of the chapel is due to Rev. R. E. Kneas, S. J. President of the College, who in the year 1885, addressed a letter to the graduates requesting their aid in erecting a memorial to commemorate the days who honored the College from 1855 to 1885, and suggesting that as better memorial than any other that the construction of a chapel where their children might long implore the aid of the Father of Light for themselves and pray for those who gave them life.

In this letter the Father stated that to such a chapel, if erected, would be found to be was the first President of the College who had spent his younger years as a student within its walls. Nine hundred of these circular letters were sent to as many graduates, but as the address was not necessarily known in many cases a large number of letters never reached their destination. About 100 replies came in in reply, and by April, 1886, Father Kneas sent out another letter, in which he said that the number of graduates who could effectually assist in the work would not exceed 200, that the proposed chapel would be 125 feet long 45 feet wide and 42 high. It would cost $15,000 and he thought that the work could be done for $10,000.

A sufficient amount of money was subscribed to make the work possible on April 11, 1886, and the work was prosecuted from that time forward as fast as the money would allow. The corner stone was laid in June, 1887, by Most Rev. P. W. Riordan, and the work from so nearly done that the chapel can be used as a place of worship, and accordingly was formally opened on the Feast of the Holy Rosary.

The cost of the building, it may be fairly needed the figures given in Father Kneas's last circular letter: $22,000 have already been expended, and from $10,000 to $12,000 are still needed to pay the bills now outstanding.

The building was designed by Bryan J. Hinch of San Francisco, the Brick work was done by M. Keane of San Jose, and the carpenter work by Mr. Hinch.

It fronts toward in the large playground of the College from which it is entered by two double doors having a portico in front. The latter, however, is not yet erected. The ceiling slope and the plaster are in place. The building is of brick, 110x50 feet, exclusive of the portico at the side for colonial aisle. The ceiling is arched and divided into panels, the ribs of which are painted blue and adorned with golden stars. The sanctuary and window deep recess is in the form of a dark gray and polished wood, the altar being of the same material and of the same color, which is lighted by two windows of stained glass in the place, with a domed roof; the massive pillasters which support it are ornamented with arabesqui mottos with metal Corinthian caps painted and gilt out with gold. The altar rail is also of artistic marble which takes on a fine a polish as the granite. When the building is completed the great pilasters of the nave will also be ornamented with the same material and will the wainscoting around the entire wall to the height of four feet. Opening from the nave are four confessionals with doors of carved wood which open in designs of the Sacred Heart of the Order, which is the patronal of the College. The nave will be lighted by stained glass but only two windows are in place at present. This window, which at present the chief glory of the interior decoration, represents the Sacred Heart of the Order, which is told by the chronicles in this way:

"While the Saxons army of Frederick II. was ravaging the valley of Spoleto, a body of infidels advanced to pillage St. Chiara's Convent, which stood cot side Assisi. The maid in her poverty had no vessels to defend her, and no treasure when with to buy of the foe. After one reasons we have the Blessed Sacrament, she ordered the pyx to be placed in a monstrance, above the gates of the convent, and then, on her knees, prayed: "Do not, my Lord, deliver to the cruel beasts of this world those who confess in Thee." A voice from the Host replied: "I will always have them in my care." A modern poetic note of the faithful book, which tells that God and the saint's convent was safe. Thus was the saint's poverty more powerful than the enemy's army.

The scene in the window represents the saint lifting the monstrance while the Saracen horse fall back from the walls in terror. The window is of the finest quality of glass and the work is of the finest kind. Father Mahon of San Francisco, who is the donor of the window, has expended "My protection will never fail you. A modern poetic note of the faithful book, which took flight and the saint's convent was spared. Thus was the saint's poverty more powerful than the strength of man."

The following remarks are taken from the address the monstrance while the Saracens have fallen back from the walls in terror. The window is composed of Italian glass and the work is of the finest kind. Father Mahon of San Francisco, is the donor of the window.

The Sermon of Very Rev. Joseph Sasia, S. J., in Dedicating the Chapel.

The ceremonies on Sunday were attended by a large number of the graduates of the College from different parts of the State. The usual Mass and benediction of Rosary Sunday were followed by the R. E. Kneas, celebrant; Rev. J. D. Walsh, assistant; S. Marinoni and Rev. Joseph Sasia, deacon. A special musical program was performed by Rev. Joseph Sasia, President, Superior of the Society of Jesus, in Dedicating the Chapel.

"Whenever we contemplate the spirit and the tendencies of the age in which we live, human things are tempting us to think it great to feel the last place. It gives it in a place at all. What frequently happens in every sphere of social life from the family to the State is seen in the schools, where, from the primary school to the university, God is carefully excluded. I need not tell you that in the Catholic Church is absolutely opposed to the practice of the world. Shall we, therefore, be ashamed of the world? Shall we, therefore, be ashamed of the spiritual life? Shall we, and in definitive the beautiful Chapel of Santa Clara, the principal and duties of our faith is made conspicuously manifest to all men. We believe that the highest literary and scientific culture can only be attained by a due attention to religion. Nay, we hold that there is no true education which is not some fully religious. Man was a whole to perform upon this earth, to fulfil it which he was born, and which can only be achieved by obedience to Christ law.

The lesson sent to, in the eyes of God, of great importance, is that the world is of little value, the moment that the world is of little value. This is what Jesus meant when He said: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." In this saying our Master gives all the pomps and powers and glories of the earth to the balance and weighs them as naught in comparison with a single soul.

"Such being the importance of the soul, it is a matter of necessity that all education should deal primarily with those things which are essential for its salvation. The Catholic Church gives praise to every age and to all the arts of culture and leads others to a knowledge of deeper things, yet to a greater spiritual, that only knowledge which makes the classroom holy, holiness and enhances its only reflection. Yet, in this, man can not be advanced one step towards his end, unless

"to man can not become pure, save through the agency of his immortal soul, even through Christ, as there can be no virtue in which does not take into consideration, and give the greatest place to, the principles taught by Christ. An education which omits this central and in genius principle can not give to the soul of the world a complete idea of anything hither than themselves. A spring cannot rise higher than its source, and an education derived solely from nature can never get beyond nature, and can never know the pure, holy, moving and stirring one human soul, and that one soul is the soul of God's will. We are not only to be Christians, and we are Christians only that we may be redeemed and regenerated by His blood to be the children and the spiritual of the Church. We were not made for an animal life and a natural end, but for a spiritual life and a supernatural end—the end of seeing our Lord face to face in the manifested splendor of His glory. If the end of our life is supernatural, the means of obtaining that end must also be supernatural. And by what supernatural means can this life be obtained except through the doctrines of the Church which has been divinely founded? The Church, and the Church alone, is established upon the Holy Sacraments of religion. Without these there is no Church. Without Church there is no Divine Sacrifice, and Divine Sacrifice there is no Sacrament. Deny the existence of the Divine Sacraments and you destroy the Church. Destroy the Church and you substitute nature for grace, and make man's will the Supreme law. We need hardly of practical virtue. We should know the beauty of virtue and hatefulness of vice, both in our national and individual life, for if we do not have them, even our financial prosperity and our scientific culture will pass away. Justice exalteth a nation, but sin makes nations miserable. Nations are blessed in the right hand only when for no their power, their glory, their wealth, and their in the development of their own culture and in the salvation of their souls. Barbarous nations perish by the sword. Civilized nations that ex-Christ, the Christ-made manifest, the Christ-made manifest, the Christ-made manifest

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1888

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Lightly tinted and deeply dyed,
Flutterily downward sofa by side,
The Autumn leaves! ah!
Consummate fallow day and slight,
Musing a sad yet lovely sight,
For so it seems to me.

Telling of Summer's golden sway,
Of sunny hours in vanished May,
Than will return no more!
Whispering from their lowly bed,
Gentlest message of the dead,
Across the far-off shore.

Lightly tinted and deeply dyed,
Fluttering downward side by side,
For, lo!—they are falling now!
Millions of leaves that once were bright,
Glowing 'neath Summer's radiant light,
Come rustling on the bough.

So let them go with Spring's soft breath,
Fresh leaves will bud to wait on Death;
So must we wanderers all.
The tale from Autumn leaves I tell,
Is watch and trust do all things well,
Waiting the Father's call.

MARION PRITCHARD.

San Francisco, October 29, 1888.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

ROWING AND REAPING.

O member not when the golden time
Of the harvest draweth near,
If the crops will bring a goodly store,
Or a much and heavy sheaf sore;
Why wonder when you reaps the seed,
Which you have sown and wept over,
Why wonder when you reaps the seed,
Which you have sown and wept over?
Why wonder if the reaper sows
Some noble mark among the sheaves?
You've sown it there among your wheat
To mention, happy days believe!
And now to sorrow and remorse
You reap the traits said storm and wind,
And wrought with the bitter lot
When age has chastened heart and mind.

We sow in youth with careless hand,
At thoughtless farmer sown his field;
But we too often foster weeds,
And more not than the grain to shield,
And when the noon tide's golden sun
Has ripened both the grain and weeds,
The then we for life's Autumn glow
Shall reap the fruits of life deeds.

How often is the harvest burnt!
How often in the field once sown
With fairest seeds of faith and hope,
With rankest poisons overgrown!
Too late we will breaking hearts,
We reap the traits the bad seeds bear—
Weeds, pusts's bright color all to spent,
And now unbind the noon day's grave.

We sow in joy, we reap in tears,
We sow in sin, we reap in pain,
We sow in hope, we reap in fears—
A harvest without golden grain.
And when the Master sends at last
Our summons from the field of life—
We, without a sheaf to bear
From all the turmoil, care and strife.

AGNES O'NEILL.

San Francisco, October 29, 1888.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

ADAM AND EVE.

In days of old, on Earth we're told,
There dwelt alone a sinless man,
Nearest and dearest to God's heart
His spouse was bright as the radiant light
That shines as the angels shore,
Fair as the flower of "Eden's Bower,"
Young image of Heavenly love.
This lady fair whom grace was given,
Enjoys the endless light of Heaven.

JOHN F. MCDONELL.

Victoria City, Nev.

THE LAND OF THE BEAUTIFUL DEAD.

By the feet of the pomegranate where poverty weeps,
And sight to the tower of the king,
Clean, clean to the cradle where infancy sleeps
And joy leaves to linger and sing,
A garden of light full of Heaven's perfume,
Where never a tear-drop is shed,
And the roses and the lily are ever in bloom—
Tis the land of the beautiful dead.

Each moment of life a messenger comes,
And beckons man over the way!
Through the hallows-dole of woman and rolling of drums,
The army of mortals obey.
For lips that have kissed not a mortalness know,
Lips that have kissed not a mortalness know,
Lips that have kissed not a mortalness know,
But no longer that our loved ones are watching
In the land of the beautiful dead.

Yet a shadow that we know are the home-fry was crowned,
And we stood in the valley alone;
Not a trait that we prized in our darkness is lost—
They have labor and lovelier grown,
As the lilies burst forth when the shadows at last
Into light and dawn breaks, so shall we see
Do they look in the glow by the Pillar of Light,
In the land of the beautiful dead.

O! the dead, the dead, the beautiful dead,
Are alone to the heart of Eternity wed,
When the last dead is done and the last word is said,
We will meet in the beautiful land of the dead!

A GEM FROM PURGATORY.

A mournful mental scheme, a solemn doleful cry,
A piteous prayer for mercy, it seems to reach the sky;
"Have pity on me, comrades! Oh, you who are in friends,
And sooner me from misery, and make to God amends."

Oh, burning is the fire, consuming are the pains,
The sufferer never rises, the midnight never wanes;
Oh, render me assistance, oh, save me when you may!
Thus cries the voice that echo from that dungeon night and day!

"Have pity on your father! My children will and reason him from misery, for wretched is his condition!
Outcasts for their shameless of punishment so Oh, help your yearning parent! Oh, pray and persevere.

"Your mother, yes, your mother! Dear son! Dear my mary soul is languishing and yearning to be free!
Long is the night and deep the gloom, and of torment and of misery that from this prison rise."

"My husband! Yes, my husband, who were so Oh, could you only think of, or could you only see
The agony and hatred, the grief that gnawe away,
And tears my soul in anguish and fills it with dismay."

Hard is the lot, dear Christians, of those formidan
Harder the heart of relative, who them in misery
For life is short and soon will end, and perhaps
Will be your turn
To call on friends for succor, from from that over

Literary Miscellany.

Gatalin's Great Sorrow

A BEAUTIFUL SEQUEL TO "VALISKA."

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "ORIELA."]

CHAPTER II.

Late next afternoon Gatalin having thought over Vincenzo's words on the preceding evening, questioned her husband thus:

"Manuel, why did you allow that man to talk to me as he did? You, and not he, should have intercedered me to Filetta."

"Oh, never mind that. He meant nothing. He has queer ways, but you know he is the orisal and must be obeyed."

"Man be obeyed! Why, Manuel, what do you mean? He looks like a bad man. I hear him very much, and you must not go out and leave me alone while he is here."

"Not I must go. I—we go to the Jacinda together this evening and will not return until sometime tomorrow. Filetta will stay with you and take you around the place, so you will not be lonely."

"Why not go in the daytime, Manuel, and be home at night. I will not stay in this house alone if that man is here."

"He goes with us and will not be here, so fear not. I will return as soon as possible, and will bring you something nice from the store at the ranch."

"I noticed no store there, and now, Manuel, answer me: Why do you leave far from every one? There is none my boy attached to this place. Filetta is rich and Vincenzo has a lace which portrays a vetiens hotel."

"Nonsense, child! You are nervous and tired after your journey; rest will restore you and to-morrow you will feel different. Hush away now, and tell Filetta to show you the grounds as I will have to leave in a few moments," and saluting his wife, Manuel went off with his chief, and was soon far away from the villa, but not in the direction of the Jacinda. Gatalin noticed this when they started, and, calling Filetta to the window where she stood, said: "See, that does not look like the road to the Jacinda, nor is it in the direction that Manuel showed me. Where are they going now?"

"Oh, to the highway leading to the city, I guess; but do not worry yourself for they are coming and going after that fashion all the time."

"But Senora, how did you come to meet Manuel Monroy? It seems strange that one like you should have married him. Did you know where you were going to?"

"Know it! Yes! I knew we were to live here, but I did not know it was so far from every one. We could dia here and the people outside would never know it. Oh, Filetta, how could you endure to live so long here alone. I believe it would kill me if I could not get out and go to town once in a while. Does it take long to get there by the main road?"

"Way, my dear lady, didn't you know you are nearly fifty miles from the nearest village, and there is no road, only a trail through the mountains, to get there."

"Why Dios live here, and why are we such a lonely spot? You know it—you must tell me what it means."

"Oh, Senora, believe me, I do not know if may surmise, but I can not really tell you why. My brother, Vincenzo, never lets me know any of his business, and I have never been away from here since we came but once, and then I wasn't to see that no one until they came back here."

"What do they do at the Acrunda that they are continually running there?"

"Senora, they do not always go there, and what they are doing, do not ask me, for I cannot tell you." Then turning around and looking at her sharply, she continued:

"Dona Gatalin, I am beginning I have to be; there is no help for me. But you why did you come? I fear your sorrow summoned the day you left your mother's home and trusted your life to Manuel Monroy. But I must go now and see that all is ready for Vincenzo when he returns in the morning, for one can never tell when he is coming and he is very hard to please sometimes."

Gatalin's heart beat fast as she listened. She felt that something was wrong. "Oh, God!" she murmured, "Surely if I had come from my mother's home with my husband and blessing I would not now be here. Oh, mother! mother! why did I desire to go? I fear I have sealed my doom. Filetta is right. I shall slip the cup of sorrow and not joy." And with a heavy heart she wandered aimlessly about the place, and late that night sought her cozy but not to rest. Vague fears disturbed her repose, and she lay there, straining her ears to listen, and longing for her husband's return.

Morning came, and with it Vincenzo, but Manuel had not yet returned. Gatalin shuddered as she entered the dining room and found herself alone with Vincenzo, who arose to greet her, saying: "Good morning, Dona Gatalin, I hope you have rested well after your long journey. How do you like your mountain home? Rather quiet is it not? But we will try to make it pleasant for you. Here comes Filetta with the coffee, so let us breakfast together."

"Thanks," she replied, "I will wait for Manuel. He returned with you, did he not?"

"No, fair lady, he did not, you see he visit Rennolo, who dwelt in with me, returns to the ranch. But come, it is useless to worry about him. He is away much of his time and you will have to learn to get on without him. I will try to amuse you if you will be good."

"I do not require to be amused. I—I have some work to do which will keep me busy," answered Gatalin, as she seated herself at the breakfast table with a heavy heart. After barely tasting her coffee, she arose and sought her own room, where she wept long and bitterly. "Oh, God!" she mourned, "what has come over me! Here I am left alone to the mercy of a villian, and no one to protect me. My husband is evidently a coward in this man's presence, so much does he seem to fear him."

Time with a foreboding that some terrible evil was hanging over her, Gatalin kept her room until Filetta came to call her at noon, and even then she plead a headache and begged to be left to herself. When the noon day meal was over she heard Vincenzo's voice in the hall below, and soon he and Rennolo came up the stairs, and, entering the room next to hers, they talked in a low tone for a long time. Poor Gatalin sat pale and trembling, listening to them, when presently, she heard her own name mentioned.

"We will have to take Dona Gatalin, too," Rennolo was saying; "she cannot stay here alone, and we must have Filetta there to entertain the old German and his wife while we run the rodeo. I am glad he has changed his mind and taken a notion to round up now, instead of later, as we will have a better show to get in our work."

"Yes," answered Vincenzo, "but do you think he will be apt to know you again? Remember the poor old senior gave you a donation for your church at one time, and he may recognize you!"

"Oh, no, I guess not, he is very old and mind-addled; see my hand if you put it under his nose. Her when I Monroy coming back! continued Rennolo.

Gatalin, terrified at the mention of her husband's name, still listened with bated breath. They seemed to have forgotten her presence and were talking much louder than before.

"Oh, some time to-morrow. He will have to come and take his Dona Gatalin over, for I do not suppose she will go with us; but wait, time will change her notions," said Vincenzo. "She a beauty more fit to be the chief's consort, than his subordinate's wife?"

"Yes," returned Rennolo "but she prides aside of the dainty, little golden haired American she took with her to Tucson. I was taken aft her at first sight, but I am a little sorry she, she fainted in the desert. I never knew Gatalin had played her so deeply; I thought she had some idea of the business. She believed I was Gatalin's brother and if she had not left us so suddenly, this captain would have brought her to the villa as Valiska Varonda. By-any means in my power I would have won her."

"You are a fool," said Vincenzo.

"No, I am not," replied Rennolo, with emphasis, "she is the only woman I ever cared for, and I swear I shall have her yet. I mean to find out if Lady Gatalin knows where she is now."

"Enough of that. Let us return to business. If you run that right we can gather enough of stock I last in all winter. Wonder if the Dutchman will bring any one along with him?

"Yes, two herders, and an American named Walding."

"Oh, that is bad! But I'll entertain him and keep him out of the way."

"Yes, ha! ha!" laughed Rennolo, "the and old Sam Sackbiffer have put many a dollar in the collection-box for me. You have no idea how good I can look. I do it fine, and it pays much better than your part of the business. These old country folks are such believing old fellows."

Gatalin shuddered as she listened. "My God!" she exclaimed, "can it be that these villians follow with God and rob His Church? Merciful Heavens! am I in the midst of such a gang of wretches who scruple not at anything?"

Even then she did not realize the terrible truth; that she was surrounded by the vilest of God's creatures; that the man to whom she was listening not only robbed the Church but masquerraded as a Priest, and laughed at the deception he played on some of the innocent, ignorant people. But he failed in his reckoning about Sturbridge, for Sam and his friend were true Catholics and were not slow to see the difference between the sham and the real Priest. These men had noticed some of the queer actions of the supposed parish Priest, and, as he showed no credentials, they began to suspect that he was a Liberal impostor, and time are long proved the correctness of their surmises.

When Gatalin heard Valiska's name mentioned she quivered with excitement. "Oh! my darling! my darling!" she murmured, as she fell on her knees and bowed her head in her hands, "God was merciful to save you from him, and I, oh, my innocent little friend, I would have lured you on to your doom had you listened and had your way. And now, God only knows where you are. Alas! poor me! God has deserted me—left me alone. Yet why should His guide me when I turned from Him and sous to this? Oh! I fear He will not listen to me, but, I thank God, Valiska has not come to this. O lately her good angel must have inspired her to run away from me."

So in terror and tears Valiska kept her room until her husband returned next day. When she saw him she was so startled at his pale, tired face that she exclaimed:

"Manuel, my husband, "what is the matter with you? Are you ill? Why did you not come back with Captain Vincenzo yes! I have never left this room since he returned. How could you leave me alone when you know he would be here?

"I—I couldn't help it. He is my captain and I have to do as he says."

"O, would to God I had been more earnest, Manuel. You deceived me. Why did you not tell me the truth! I have heard enough in the house to freeze my very blood. I have done wrong to some hart, to marry out of my faith, and even now, are my honeymoon has well commenced, I have to hear that man's insults, and you are not brave enough to defend me against them."

"I he does not mean to be insulting, it is just his way, and it would be no use for me to say anything—he would not heed me."

"Then you must take me away from here, immediately. To stay here and have to hear all that with no redress would kill me, oh, God! I have sinned, and now I suffer."

"Gatalin dear, calm yourself and you will get over this. The place is strange and lonely, but, you know, I am with you. Vincenzo is a little lonely, but this will soon pass away. You must try and rest more hair you have done, so we shall be the Acrunda in a few days; so try and forget about Vincenzo for I am sure he will never harass you."

"Oh, Manuel" she cried "you do not know that I have heard him and Rennolo with my ears! and Valiska in the balcony, and the language he used was not pleasant to my ears." Now I tell you, Manuel, I have found you all out. These months are a blood-curdling to me, and I know that there is no use in my trying to hide from you my sorrow and misery."

"I will try, if I can help it," he said as he went out."

"No, if you go again I will go with you," she said as he left her. Thus the poor wretched lady passed her days in a state of distracted. Vestly, her sun had found her out. She rarely left her room while Vincenzo was away, and remained secluded in her nursery, being alone so much she had plenty of time to think, and bitterly did she bewail her lot. With tears she prayed to God to rescue her from her miserable position and at last a respite came. The trip to the Acrunda was expected for her and Filetta any way. Vincenzo had started off and was some some three weeks, to the city, they told her, Rennolo, too, had gone, so that Manuel and the leader were the only ones at the villa outside of the cook, Juan, and thus she felt free for a ride. She watched from the surrounding hills and her spirits rose as that she was almost her careless, happy self again. Manuel was at home with her, kind, moody and restless and proved a faithful companion. That afternoon a stranger, riding a fine head of horses, came up to the villa, and, after a hurried conversation with the stranger, Manuel saddled a horse and started off in his company.

When she saw him about to depart, Gatalin pleaded with him not to go. "Manuel, oh, said, "do not leave me. We know not what may happen, but you know that man may return, and if you are not here I shall go mad."

"Gatalin," replied her husband, "you are as silly as an early-chick. I shall, and will not, stay to humor your whims. Go in the house, and behave yourself like a woman and not like a silly child."

"Madre mia!" she cried as she turned to go, "what shall I do! Where shall I find a place for protection when my own husband denies it."

Manuel did not appear to hear her, and he was soon galloping off with the stranger Gatalin went up to her own room and watched them from the window. She saw them go in the direction of the Acrunda, but the wild desire to follow her husband took possession of her. But how could she do it! She had no way. She thought a while. Yes, there was the pony she had ridden to the place. She would saddle it and follow him. She had now been at the villa some time and these sudden, mysterious trips alarmed her. Life was not much to her anyway now, and what use in her if she lost it in the venture, so, setting her jaw with a firmness, she left the room, and was soon on the trail her husband had taken. Her hair and silver hair long behind her too.

She had ridden several miles without resting the distance she had gone, when suddenly, the sound of voices arrested her attention, and, as she came to a turn in the path, she found herself on the edge of a steep descent. From the bottom of the ravine came the words: "Gitana! Gitana! does this meet? she almost screamed, as she saw Vincenzo, Rennolo, her husband and the stranger, bending over them as she most paralyzed with fear as she stood riveted to the spot. They were too busy, and too deeply interested in what they had to see that she was near. She gathered all her courage and took a longer, clearer look. Yes! "My God!" she murmured, "one is dead and they are digging a grave."

Yes, Gatalin was right; they were digging a grave and she watched them with a face of ashy paleness. The brutal was merely ready and the unfortunate victim was soon to be laid away. Manuel, and two others whom she had never seen before, came forward and aided the others. Lifting a long pine box carried it to the grave and lowered it in, and then she fell, heavy thud of the earth, as it fell on the dead, reached her ear. Fascinated, she watched until the last spadeful of dirt was thrown over the lonely grave; until she saw them mount their horses which she had never seen before, and then she turned away sick unto death. Her poor overtaxed nerves aroused her to new terror as he said:

"Now boys to the Acrunda next week. We made a good haul this time. Never too bad we had to leave this poor chap here, but, you know, 'dead men tell no tales.'"

"Merciful Redeemer," she moaned, "I am the wife of a murderer and a villian. Oh, God! is pity let me die." She tried to turn her horse to go she knew not where. Her strength was failing her and she heeded not where the animal took her. "Oh, mother! mother! if I had only listened to you! You were more than right when you told me I would rue the day I met Manuel Monroy. Divine Redeemer! I forget you; married out of the Church, and inflicted a mortal wound on my faith for the man who has broken my heart."

Then as she thought they might come out of the canyon that way and overtake her, she tried to urge her pony on, but the terrible sight she had witnessed unnerved her; her horse stumbled, and she fell on the rocks, breaking her arm. The pain of this wound, added to all she had suffered that day, was too much for her and sweet, yet unconsciousness came to her relief. How long she lay there she knew not, but when her senses returned the moon was shining, and she was lying there alone on the hills too weak to move.

After they had done their villainous work Vincenzo and his party returned to this villa by another path. When Manuel learned of Gatalin's absence he became much alarmed and, with the others, searched the whole valley around, without finding a single trace of his wife. At a loss where to go next, he chanced to pass the stable, and noticing that the side saddle was gone, he jumped on his horse and took the trail for the mountains, and there, within a few miles of the scene of his crime, he found his wife, so changed in a few short hours that he scarcely recognized her.

"Poor child," he said, tenderly, as he stooped to pick her up, "are you hurt?"

"Its no matter, she said, "but I am stunned you are—this, O, all!" she cried. She had tried to time but the pain of the broken arm overcome her, and she fainted again. Manuel picked her up and carried her home, and it was not until the next morning that she learn from Filetta working to procure for that consummate again returned. Then she lay for days, raving of the grave and wishing death would come to her relief. When she was able to travel they took her to the Lacinda, for the memory of that terrible scene never left her. Nor Sturbridge, the cattleman, was there with his wife and little son.

Gatalin soon recovered her health and strength, and, with her husband, she left the Lacinda, for, they told her, Rennolo, too, had gone, so that Manuel and the leader were the only ones at the villa outside of the cook, Juan, and thus she felt free for a ride. She watched from the surrounding hills and her spirits rose as that she was almost her careless, happy self again. Manuel was at home with her, kind, moody and restless and proved a faithful companion. That afternoon a stranger, riding a fine head of horses, came up to the villa, and, after a hurried conversation with the stranger, Manuel saddled a horse and started off in his company.

When she saw him about to depart, Gatalin pleaded with him not to go. "Manuel, oh, said, "do not leave me. We know not what may happen, but you know that man may return, and if you are not here I shall go mad."

"Gatalin," replied her husband, "you are as silly as an early-chick. I shall, and will not, stay to humor your whims. Go in the house, and behave yourself like a woman and not like a silly child."

"Madre mia!" she cried as she turned to go, "what shall I do! Where shall I find a place for protection when my own husband denies it."

Manuel did not appear to hear her, and he was soon galloping off with the stranger Gatalin went up to her own room and watched them from the window. She saw them go in the direction of the Lacinda, but the wild desire to follow her husband took possession of her. But how could she do it! She had no way. She thought a while. Yes, there was the pony she had ridden to the place. She would saddle it and follow him. She had now been at the villa some time and these sudden, mysterious trips alarmed her. Life was not much to her anyway now, and what use in her if she lost it in the venture, so, setting her jaw with a firmness, she left the room, and was soon on the trail her husband had taken. Her hair and silver hair long behind her too.

She had ridden several miles without resting the distance she had gone, when suddenly, the sound of voices arrested her attention, and, as she came to a turn in the path, she found herself on the edge of a steep descent. From the bottom of the ravine came the words: "Gitana! Gitana! does this meet? she almost screamed, as she saw Vincenzo, Rennolo, her husband and the stranger, bending over them as she most paralyzed with fear as she stood riveted to the spot. They were too busy, and too deeply interested in what they had to see that she was near. She gathered all her courage and took a longer, clearer look. Yes! "My God!" she murmured, "one is dead and they are digging a grave."

Yes, Gatalin was right; they were digging a grave and she watched them with a face of ashy paleness. The brutal was merely ready and the unfortunate victim was soon to be laid away. Manuel, and two others whom she had never seen before, came forward and aided the others. Lifting a long pine box carried it to the grave and lowered it in, and then she fell, heavy thud of the earth, as it fell on the dead, reached her ear. Fascinated, she watched until the last spadeful of dirt was thrown over the lonely grave; until she saw them mount their horses which she had never seen before, and then she turned away sick unto death. Her poor overtaxed nerves aroused her to new terror as he said:

"Now boys to the Lacinda next week. We made a good haul this time. Never too bad we had to leave this poor chap here, but, you know, 'dead men tell no tales.'"

"Merciful Redeemer," she moaned, "I am the wife of a murderer and a villian. Oh, God! is pity let me die." She tried to turn her horse to go she knew not where. Her strength was failing her and she heeded not where the animal took her. "Oh, mother! mother! if I had only listened to you! You were more than right when you told me I would rue the day I met Manuel Monroy. Divine Redeemer! I forget you; married out of the Church, and inflicted a mortal wound on my faith for the man who has broken my heart."

Then as she thought they might come out of the canyon that way and overtake her, she tried to urge her pony on, but the terrible sight she had witnessed unnerved her; her horse stumbled, and she fell on the rocks, breaking her arm. The pain of this wound, added to all she had suffered that day, was too much for her and sweet, yet unconsciousness came to her relief. How long she lay there she knew not, but when her senses returned the moon was shining, and she was lying there alone on the hills too weak to move.

After they had done their villainous work Vincenzo and his party returned to this villa by another path. When Manuel learned of Gatalin's absence he became much alarmed and, with the others, searched the whole valley around, without finding a single trace of his wife. At a loss where

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1888

GOOD ST. ANTHONY.

A Saint Who Restores Things Lost.

Apropos of the interesting paper on St. Anthony which appeared in these pages not very long ago, it may seem to be a pity that the Saint's name should be so little known, and that so few should know of his goodness to them. It is certainly a great blessing to have a family whom there is not at least one client of St. Anthony especially favored by him the great "rent-fee" at whose interession

"Faithful limbs and chattels but Both old and young recovered boast."

Every person experience. I have obtained one or two favors of St. Anthony, which if related may encourage others to have recourse to the patron of Padua.

About ten years ago, when I had been a Catholic only a few months, I attended the opening of Parliament in the Senate Chamber at Ottawa. The display was the greatest I could be, it was thought, exceptionally brilliant, and many thousands of people congregated to see what was to be seen, and to catch the beautiful face of the daughter of the Queen of England. The crush was very dense, and in passing through it I lost from my pocket a prayer-book, which was given me by a dear friend, and which I valued very much. I searched for it, but it was lost, and I was very sorry. I had recourse to St. Anthony, and promised to give a certain number of alms if I found it. I did not find it, but I was very much surprised and pleased to receive a letter from a Protestant friend in Ottawa, who had picked up the prayer-book and had taken the trouble to find out my address and return it to me. I had to pay a little postage, and I felt that I was well rewarded for my trouble in giving the alms, which I did, and I felt that I was well rewarded for my trouble in giving the alms, which I did, and I felt that I was well rewarded for my trouble in giving the alms, which I did

THE MONITOR.

PROPERTY OF THE R. C. ARCHDIOCESE OF SYDNEY.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7 1906

—THE— "Christ'mas Monitor."

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All prose and poetical contributions intended for the forthcoming issue of THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR must reach the office by December 6th, or in the interim their appearance in our Christmas Issue, which will be published December 19th next.

THE CHRISTMAS "MONITOR."

SEND FOR COPIES AT ONCE.

Subscribers and others who desire to procure extra copies of the Christmas Monitor to send to Friends through out the United States, or Ireland, or any other portion of the globe, should send in their orders at once; as we wish to be disappointed, as there is always a great demand for the Christmas Monitor. Ten Cents a copy is all we charge for the postage. Hinge-dated Christmas Monitor, filled with the best Catholic prose and poetry we can procure in California, the Eastern States and Ireland. Send it in your Friends' place and show them what California can accomplish in the way of Catholic literary enterprise.

☞Send in the names and corresponding cards early, and the copies ordered will be sent by mail direct from the office, postage free.

Badly Muddled Malicious Methodist Preachers.

At the regular gathering of Methodist preachers which took place in this city last week, a more than ordinary amount of anti-Catholic malice was manifested. The Christian commands: "Love your neighbor as yourself," and "Thou shalt not bear false witness against your neighbor." Have no place in the anti-Catholic code from which Methodist preachers procure that Christlessness, unchristian and unchaitable mixture which they call Methodism, hence at their Monday meetings the very atmosphere becomes impregnated with an admixture of bad manners and bigotry combined, which must be most pleasing to Beelzebub, but which must be equally hateful in the sight of God.

The chief issue which drew forth the additional dose of anti Catholic calumny at last week's Methodist meeting was a paper on "The Pope and the Gospels," prepared by Dr. Anthony, who presented the case in about as correct language, and in as truthful a manner, as a man born blind would lecture on the sun, moon and stars of the heavenly constellation.

—Money Digest (Sydney) before an intelligent public in this relation pronounced:

He gave the history of its publication in Paris of the translation of the Greek gospels into French by Henri Lasserre, which had last year enjoyed a phenomenal circulation, some thirty thousand copies having sold in a few days. The style was that of a novel of high grade. It had the approval of Leo XIII. and of the Holy Office. But the Jesuits got after it, charged it with "Under Prohibition" and the "Index Expurgatorius," found some expressions in it of which they did not approve, and placed the book in the Index Librorum, from which there was little possibility it would ever be taken, so that it was virtually suppressed. The Pope, the speaker thought, had unfolded himself by first approving the book, and then by ordering the action of the Jesuits forbidding its circulation. According to this it was not the Pope that was infallible, but the Jesuits. Such tyranny over man's souls was a thing no longer retain its supremacy. If the Protestant translation of the gospels was thus prohibited by the Jesuits, so was this spurious Methodist one.

In order that Catholics and intelligent Protestants may have a correct version of this event in French literature, and in order also that the falsehoods of Dr. Anthony may be forever squelched, we append a brief account of the whole transaction alluded to by Dr. Anthony, and from which every impartial reader is welcome to deduce his own conclusions.

Two years ago M. Henri Lasserre, a well known French writer on Catholic topics, and the author of several excellent volumes which has been translated into English, determined to carry out an idea which he had conceived of publishing a new translation of the Gospels in a cheap and attractive form in the French language, so as to familiarize the French people with the Christian lessons taught therein.

The translation was made in the finished and florid style of M. Henri Lasserre's other works, and, when the work was ready for publication, copies were presented to the Archbishop Richard, Archbishop of Paris, for his approbation, and if the work was found to contain nothing contrary to faith and morals his Grace's Imprimatur was expected.

Whether through carelessness, which, in the light of subsequent events, was criminal, or through placing too much reliance upon Henri Lasserre's literary reputation (which induced the Archbishop to forego the usual rigid scrutiny given to works like the Gospels where a Proviso's Imprimatur is required) the book was merely glanced at and the Archbishop's Imprimatur was accorded.

When the page containing the necessary ecclesiastical authorisation of the work was printed, copies of the book were sent to Rome, one of which was presented to the Pope, who, upon receipt thereof, instructed Cardinal Jacobini to acknowledge the receipt of the volume, which his Eminence did in the following Letter:

Vatican, 10 Novembre 1887.

Monsieur Directeur Supérieur :—

The Holy Father has received in regular course the French translation of the Holy Gospels which you have undertaken and accomplished, to the delight, and with the approval of, the Archiépiscopal authority.

His Holiness commissions me to express to you his approval of the object with which you have been inspired in the execution and the publication of that work, as full of interest, like the Pope for the homage of filial devotion which compensates the volume which you offer to him; and he charges me to make known to you his sincere desire that the object with which you pursue, and which you indicate in the preface if you think may be fully attained.

Yielding most willingly to your desire, his Holiness sends you, from the bottom of his heart, his Apostolic Benediction.

And I myself (e'c) by the opportunity to express myself with much relish.

Your very affectionate servant,

L. CARDINAL JACOBINI.

Rome, 6th December, 1886.

Translation.

Monsieur Le Directeur Supérieur :—

WELL-BELOVED

We, Brother Joseph Mary Larroze, humble Master General and Servant of the whole Order of the Friars Preachers, to all the Ancestors of the Living Rosary greeting and the spirit of Prayer.

As is belonging by hereditary right to the office with which we are charged, to protect the interests of the Association known by the name of the Living Rosary, we have judged that we could do nothing better nor more advantageous for the well-being of said organisation, than to collect together all the Decisions given until now by the authority of the Holy See and the Sovereign Moderators in favor of this association, and to publish them with the authenticity which they bear.

Besides these laws, the Directors, each one for the associates confided to his care, can from part of our local rules, according as they may judge it expedient in the Lord to do so, for, in order that this devotion of the Living Rosary may flourish, it is necessary that all the associates follow strictly their Superiors in everything ordained by them for the good government of the Pious Association, provided that such local legislation does not openly conflict with the Decrees of the Holy See or of the Sacred Congregation of Indulgences.

It is our will that in all books, leaflets and opuscules whatsoever hereafter to be published on the direction of the Living Rosary, whether by the Religious of our Order or by persons outside of it, the Decrees of Supreme Authority, viz., those published in this little book, which now have for all Sodalists of the Living Rosary legislative force, be carefully distinguished from all regulations that are only local, viz those made by the authority of Directors, and which have only directive weight; these things we say, because we desire every Sodalist to be well instructed on every point as to his obligations.

If, then, there should be found, in books hereafter published on the aforesaid association (the Living Rosary, any obscurity, it must be interpreted according to the light given by the Pontifical Decisions—but if anything contrary to these documents be found in such books, it must be rejected.

As we are well aware that quite recently certain doubts have risen among the faithful in regard to this devotion, we expressly declare that there is but one Living Rosary, that it is exclusively under the care of our Order, and that we do not permit it to be united to any other association of a similar nature, as the Rosary of the Apostleship of Prayer, the Rosary of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, or any other similar association (the Living Rosary) should——not either that in the matter our will may be clearly known to all, we deprive, by these presents, Zealators, Zealatrices, Counsellors, Presidents and even Directors, in a word, all persons who propagate the Living Rosary in general to any other association, of all faculties in the case, and we declare them to be so deprived, and we forbid them to make use of their power in middle in the propagation or government of the Living Rosary. However, the members of such associations, if they belong to the Living Rosary, and, in this manner, the associates of the Living Rosary may join any other association, but on this express condition that they fulfil the obligations pertaining to each association separately, and in such a manner that Sodalitas may not be joined together.

Furthermore, we hope that this devotion now established on its own basis, and strengthened under its own limits, will become a vigorous offshoot, through the zeal, of the great Dominican Rose-bush, and we earnestly exhort all associates, the more so, because just now grave calamities afflict our holy Mother the Church, to implore with the first discovered the errors in Henri Lasserre's book. This discovery was made by a French Bishop, and when his pamphlet obtaining the work came to the notice of the Congregation of the Index Henri Lasserre's work on the Gospels was forthwith condemned. Henri Lasserre—like the good Catholic he is—not only assented to the condemnation of his book, but he also called in every copy known to be for sale.

Were Henry Lasserre a Methodist preacher, he would have spurned all ecclesiastical censure and continued to circulate corrupt, inaccurate and mutilated version of the Holy Gospels—and gloried in the ill-gotten gold he derived from the deception! But Henri Lasserre is a Christian, and therein lies the difference between him and a follower of hen-pecked Wesley.

Dr. Anthony told his agonised brethren that he thought the Pope "rectified himself by first approving the book and then inducing the act of the Jesuits forbidding its circulation," but neither the Pope nor the Jesuits committed the sin ascribed against them, it is Dr. Anthony that stands as a self-nullified lunatic before the public!

Dr. Anthony also exhibits his ignorance when he called Henri Lasserre's book a "Protestant translation of the Gospels," as Henri Lasserre is a good and obedient son of the only Church Christ established on earth. But his book gave incorrect translations of the Lord's prayer, and placed in the authorised texts of the Gospels in many places, hence it was condemned for the time being, but when the proper corrections are made and the texts made to conform to the authorised version of the Bible, then Henri Lasserre's Gospels will be removed from the Index and circulated for the good of the people—the opinion of Dr. Anthony to the contrary notwithstanding.

— Cardinal Ignatius Mamotti died last Thursday in Rome. He was born January 13th, 1847, and created Cardinal November 16th, 1894.

Now let us turn to the accusation which this mischief making Methodist malignier brings against the Jesuits—those turbulent spirits who are constantly arising up in ghostly form before the minds of fabulous purgatives" in Rome, and that these same old Jesuits found some expression in Henri Lasserre's book which they did not approve, and so these traitors placed the work "in the latter list, from which said Dr. Anthony, "there is little probability it would ever be taken, so that it was virtually suppressed."

Were it not a Methodist preacher who told this "yarn," our readers, no doubt would be astonished to learn that there is not a single sword of truth in the whole story. But people have become so accustomed to reviving the anti Catholic nonsense of raving Methodist preachers at their yearly relaxation, that readers in general are astonished only when men of Dr. Anthony's tribe tell the truth even by accident.

The Congregation of the Index of Prohibited Books is composed of a certain number of Cardinals, and the Jesuits have just about as much to do with putting books on that list as Dr. Anthony has in sending people to heaven!

Now as it the Jesuits—as asserted by the jaundiced imagination of Dr. Anthony—had the first discovered the errors in Henri Lasserre's book. That discovery was made by a French Bishop, and when his pamphlet obtaining the work came to the notice of the Congregation of the Index Henri Lasserre's work on the Gospels was forthwith condemned. Henri Lasserre—like the good Catholic he is—not only assented to the condemnation of his book, but he also called in every copy known to be for sale.

Were Henry Lasserre a Methodist preacher, he would have spurned all ecclesiastical censure and continued to circulate corrupt, inaccurate and mutilated version of the Holy Gospels—and gloried in the ill-gotten gold he derived from the deception! But Henri Lasserre is a Christian, and therein lies the difference between him and a follower of hen-pecked Wesley.

Dr. Anthony told his agonised brethren that he thought the Pope "rectified himself by first approving the book and then inducing the act of the Jesuits forbidding its circulation," but neither the Pope nor the Jesuits committed the sin ascribed against them, it is Dr. Anthony that stands as a self-nullified lunatic before the public!

Dr. Anthony also exhibits his ignorance when he called Henri Lasserre's book a "Protestant translation of the Gospels," as Henri Lasserre is a good and obedient son of the only Church Christ established on earth. But his book gave incorrect translations of the Lord's prayer, and placed in the authorised texts of the Gospels in many places, hence it was condemned for the time being, but when the proper corrections are made and the texts made to conform to the authorised version of the Bible, then Henri Lasserre's Gospels will be removed from the Index and circulated for the good of the people—the opinion of Dr. Anthony to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE HOLY ROSARY.

THE MASTER GENERAL OF THE DOMINICANS, THE SUPREME MODERATOR OF THE ROSARY IN ALL ITS BRANCHES, TRIBS, IN EXPLICITE TERMS, TO WHOM BELONGS THE GOVERNMENT OF THE LIVING ROSARY ASSOCIATION, AND HOW IMPORTANT IT IS FOR ALL ITS SODALITIES TO FOLLOW STRICTLY THE DECREES ENACTED BY THE HOLY SEE AND THE SOVEREIGN MODERATORS.

Brother Joseph Mary Larroze, humble Master General and Servant of the whole Order of the Friars Preachers, to all the Ancestors of the Living Rosary greeting and the spirit of Prayer.

Protestant Religious Statistics.

The following figures showing the strength of the Catholic Church as compared with the sects, is taken from the New York Independent, a Protestant paper which, of course, would very naturally put the number of Catholics in America at as small a figure as possible. There are fully 10,000,000 people in the United States who ought to be Catholics, if they were all true to the faith in which they were baptized. Here are the figures furnished by the paper in question:

Denomination	Churches	Ministers	Members
Catholic	10,258	10,413	10,000,000
Methodist	66,236	29,313	4,090,520
Baptist	54,874	29,000	4,000,000
Presbyterian	12,017	9,565	1,236,005
Lutheran	19,215	9,000	1,200,000
Congregationalist	4,504	4,040	497,561
Episcopalian	7,647	4,000	800,000
Reformed	2,029	2,015	360,000
Latter Day Saints	1,125	1,000	300,000
Christian Union	1,000	1,000	200,000
Christian Union	1,000	1,000	200,000
Swedenborgian	1,000	1,000	200,000

Support Your Press.

In a recent Letter to the editor of the New York Herald, Morning Star, Archbishop Janssens gives this striking opinion as to the duty of Catholics to support the Catholic Press:

"The press is a most powerful engine for good or for evil. This is fully and emphatically established by our Holy Father the Pope, and by all thinking men. The press, in our country, is not officially connected with the Church, but it is not officially inimical to the Church. The press is, indeed, in most cases, unfriendly, and, therefore Catholic papers, edited in true Catholic spirit, are simply a necessity of the day, to correct misstatements, to contradict falsehoods, to support the people with Catholic news of the whole world, to develop and sustain the burning Catholic spirit in the hearts of the day, and to lighten the faithful of the day, and to stir to organisation and doctrine. The Catholic people ought to be a whole, and to be every Catholic friends, and when carefully read by the members of the family, it is bound to do a vast amount of good. The English tongue is destined to be the language of at least all the young, and it should be our duty, if every Catholic to make himself acquainted with all the questions concerning the welfare of the country, lest also in the internet of religion."

In reference to the bogus Adrian Bull his Holiness wrote: "Quos (fiteras) praesertim adversus Pseudonomen noster edium regi Anglise de iteris Pontificiis Consessus dictitur," the translation of which is: Which letter the aforesaid Adrian, our predecessor of venerable memory to the late Henry King of England, in reference to the country of Ireland."

This is plain and positive proof that the first intimation Pope John XXII. ever had that such a document as Pope Adrian's Bull to King Henry of England had any existence, was when he received it from the people of Ireland who used it as an engine of terrorism against the civilian and injustice which the Papal Delegates in Ireland were then subjecting them to.

The rebels and the Irish people of the Province of Ulster, being no longer able to willing to undergo the robbery, rapine, cruelty and injustice heaped upon them by their British tyrants, broke out in rebellion and called to their assistance Edward Bruce, brother of the celebrated hero Robert Bruce, King of Scotland. In order that their rebellion might be justified in the eyes of the then reigning Pontiff they forged the document in question, and the Irish princes of the whole Island, the Irish sent couriers to the two Cardinal Legates, Jonsolin and Fissolo, then living in Scotland, a cloaking a copy of the so-called Adrian Bull for the purpose of pointing out the fact that its sanctions having been signed by the English monarchs—the whole document was void in consequence of such violations.

When Pope John XXII received the letter of complaint from the Irish people, he caused a literal to be addressed to King Edward, of which the following is a correct translation, there being in existence several false translations which were purposely made through English influence, in order to make it appear that the Pope sent to the King of England a transcript of the Adrian Bull as he found it in the Vatican archives:

John, Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to Edward, Illustrious King of England, Health and Apostolic Benediction.

The earnest exhortation which We address to your Excellency in our Letter which we have to do what is pleasing to the truly just Judge, to preserve peace in the countries and among the subjects of your kingdom, to pitch far off that can contribute to your renown and glory, manifestations of your paternal heart which desires the exaltation of your Excellency. You ought then to receive them with affection, and show yourself docile to the voice of the Father.

We have received a Letter which the Princes and people of Ireland sent some time ago to our Brother Jonsolin, Cardinal Priest of the titles of SS. Peter and Marcellinus, and Luke Fisolo, Cardinal Deacon, of the title of St. Mary Lucrezia, Nuncios of the Apostolic Sees in Scotland, which contains many facts that seemed sufficient to their own Letter to Us.

In these Letters to the Irish, among other things, they complain that they have been condemned to a happy servitude, having, under a name of liberty, been reduced to the most illicit Letters drawn up for that purpose, condemned the people of Ireland to pass more than 700 years in a state of slavery, and that the Irish people have never enjoyed a moment of liberty, and that the people of the country have never known the kings of England except as enemies, as a nation, and to that end that on the opposite side of the sea, the people of Ireland

Farm and Home.

The Origin of Tea.

The tea-plant grew for endless centuries in Central Asia, and the gustatory Chinaman blandly assert that the drink was invented by Chin Nung some five thousand years ago. A poetic version makes it sixteen hundred years ago, and gives the following account of its earliest appearance: "In the reign of Yuen Ty in the dynasty of Tsin, an old woman was accustomed to proceed every morning at daybreak to the market place, carrying a mug of tea in her hand. The people bought it eagerly, and yet from the brink of day to the close of evening the mug was never exhausted. The money received was distributed among orphans and beggars. The people noised and confined her in prison. At night she flew through her prison window with her little vase in her hand. If you care to do so you can read this story and enjoy it in the original Chinese of the "Che Pu," or "Ancient History of Tea," and will no doubt find the transition easy.

Tea was not heard of in China again for three centuries and a half, when a "Fo-hi" priest is said to have advised its use as a medicine. In the ninth century an old beggar in Japan took a sac of the seeds and plants back with him to his native land. The Japanese relished the new drink, and built an Ooska a temple to the memory of those who introduced it. This temple is still standing, though now almost seven hundred years old. Gradually the people of Tartary and Persia all learned to love the drink, and serve it at all hours of the day.

The honor of introducing the herb into Europe may be considered due equally to the Dutch and Portuguese. Early in the 17th century tea became known among "persons of quality" in Europe, and in 1657 some Dutch traders carried a quantity of sage, which was then used to make a drink popular in Europe, to Canton, and by some ingenious device succeeded in making the almond-eyed tea-drinkers think it a fair exchange for an equal quantity of very good tea, which was brought home in safety and without the loss of a single Dutchman.

Fruit as Medicine.

Grapes come first, especially black grapes, which are most nutritious of all the same time are purifying to the blood. Grape cures are quite the fashion in some parts of the continent, and are said to work miracles at times. Peaches also are most hygienic to the human system, as well as being one of the most exquisite fruits in nature. Nothing indeed is more delicious, wholesome and medicinal than a good ripe peach. Peaches should not be eaten over-ripe, however. They may be eaten at meals or between meals; they are particularly hygienic when eaten at breakfast. An orange at before breakfast will, it is said, cure dyspepsia sooner than anything else. Apples are also very hygienic, especially when baked or stewed. They are excellent in many cases of illness and are far better than wine, oil or pills to cure constipation or liver complaints.

When oranges are taken only the juice should be swallowed; the juice of oranges, as of lemons, is most valuable to make drinks in case of fever. Tomatoes are also excellent remedies in liver and bowel complaints, and are certainly more pleasant than medicines; only the juice, however, should be taken. Figs, raspberries, strawberries, currants and mulberries are all cooling and purifying to the system, while being nutritious at the same time. If we had know the health, that is stored up by nature in our gardens and orchards, we would rarely have need to seek the chemist. How little, for instance, is the watermelon known, yet, when in season, it may be taken in excess and is health, and almost in unlimited quantities, except when cholera is raging, when it must be avoided like most other fruit. This alone will tell how beneficial fruit in general is in all ordinary times.

In the general invasion of a lemon squeezed into a cup of strong coffee will effect immediate relief in scurvy head ache.

A ten-mile of ripe or dried whortleberries and drank in place of water is a sovereign for many forms of convulsions & diseases.—Home Guardian.

Culinary Axioms.

Meth boomen's feast.
After cheese comes nothing.
Dot eyes more than the lanest.
Give a bad egg a shire.
Many cooks mother make good hake.
Hunger makes raw beans relish well.
Sweet meat must have some sense.
It is good to be merry at meat.
A hungry man is an angry man.
Raw meat begets a raw appetite.
The table rots more than the thief.
An empty stomach listens to nobody.
Great plenty breeds much dainty.
Tripe broth is better than no porridge.
When content is, there is a feast.
Meat is much but manners are more.
Of soup and love, the first is best.
He liveth long that liveth well.
Enough is a feast; too much a surfeit.
Black plums may not so sweet as white.
Hope is a good breakfast, but a bad supper.
Steel a goose and give the giblets in alms.
Salmon and sermon bare their season in Lent.
The taste of the kitchen is better than the smell.
Butter to go to bed supperless then to get up in debt.
Who gives the scarpe, gives him the leg and the wing.
There is no cake but there is the like of the same make.
Every one buttoth the fat hog, while the lean one bumeth.
Who hath spice enough may season his meat as he pleaseth.
He that waits on another man's trencher makes a late dinner.
The best physicians are Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman.
Who boils his pot with chips make his broth smell of smoke.

A Problem of Domestic Service.

The problem of domestic service in America would be solved if the women of America would treat their hired girls in the same manner that they treat their hired boys. It very frequently happens that a merchant retains an unknown in his employ for a long term of years.

A banker is not changing his book keeper or cashier every three months. The lady of the middle class thinks nothing of entertaining her husband's book keeper at dinner and, if the young man is gentle and worthy, she would not seriously obj ect to his asking her husband's book keeper to call. But if she would not think of thus entertaining the young woman who does her housework faithfully, and she would feel outraged beyond measure if her son should pay her social attentions.

How strange a social distinction is thus drawn between the hired girl and the hired man!

It is to be wondered at that the refined and sensitive gentlewoman, who by birth and the circumstances of life possesses the very accomplishments so desirable in a good housekeeper, and whose competent and intelligent service would be the joy of her employer, shrinks from an occupation which bars the door of society against her and represses every worthy ambition.

Family Fun.

A Sad, Sad Tale.

A stranger with a sad, tired look and a manner indicating that he wished to escape general observation, came wearily into a little Western town the other day. He stopped at the town well to take his thirst and while he drank a deamen of the town drew near, and, as a newcomer face and an air of general discouragement.

"Stranger here, ain't you?" he asked of the wayfarer.

"Yup—strange now, but I used to live round here."

"No—did you? Lately?

"No; not nigh on to ten year since I left.

"And you ain't been back since?"

"No; there's been a good many changes here, since then, and I can't reckon there's many left I uster know."

"Maybe not, whu'd you know?"

"Well, leaves see—there was a woman named Watts I used to know—Sally Watts.

"Did you know Sally Watts?" asked the inquiring citizen.

"Reckoned I did. I—did you ever hear of Sallie?"

"Yes, I—"

"D'you know Sallie Watts?"

"Yes, I—I—"

The wayfarer looked carefully around, lowered his voice and sat cautiously.

"See here, Mister, I've a favor to ask. It won't much. Would you much mind pretendin' Sallie Watts is a stranger? was round askin' for her? Sad? Know it was sad, and I'd rather have a hyperon on my trail than Sallie Watts. She's as tiles I'm dead, and I want her to cling to that idee. If you know Sally Watts, Mister, maybe you know how high she seemed to be in the devil. If she sits on a Cyprian throne on—on—I know here, straight up I mean—on—I've got a sympathy kind of a fuss for her. Sad? Know it was sad. Sad? I'd have you know how fo-fol-fo-a fellar thats went through what I've went through with, an' I feel as if I'd like to confide in you. Stranger, I uster be married to Sallie Watts!"

The recipient of this confidence gave a little gasp and wrung the hand of the poor wayfarer, saying with deep fervor:

"Thy me, man; I'm married to her now."

They Got Their Seats.

Two young Wall street men boarded a crowded elevated railroad car on Franklyn street, New York, the other day.

"Frank, my dear," said the taller, "I'm sorry we got into such a crowd, too. I'm nearly worn out with running. Been an awful busy day for me."

"No seats here unless we—

"Unless what?

And then the taller man bent down and whispered softly in his companions ear.

"All right," quoth the other as the gate swung back and he sailed in the open door and remarked:

"It's a crowe rice or?"

The short man smiled, the gateman further remarked:

"Bartowsbrass.

And the tall youth from Wall street inquired in a loud tone of voice:

"How things at the hospital?"

The passengers turned around at the speaker but said nothing.

"Pretty good," said the short young man. "Got a real case of Asiatic cholera in to-day."

Nervous movement on the part of old lady occupying two cross seats.

"Asiatic cholera, ah! That is interesting. Likely to die?"

"Yes—

"Did lady and three merchants leave the car.

"Rather discouraging, eh!"

"Yes; has the third small pox we've lost in a week. If it wasn't for our typhoid fever patients doing well we'd be awfully down."

Two countrymen leave precipitately, followed by a woman and a boy.

"By the way, did your diphtheria men well?"

"No. He is there yet. Fearful case. Worst we have got in the three months the yellow fever districts."

Hurried departure, followed the gateman.

"My station," yelled seven men, three women and a mean-looking simulacrum of a

"Ah," said the shorter young man from Wall street, taking possession of one of the vacant seats and patting his feet on another. "I don't know what we would have done but for our gentle and patient."

And the rest of the passengers who had been meditating a wild break for the Bowery station, listening to his remarks, felt relieved at being thus fooled, but decided that they had been fooled, but decided that they had not been so badly fooled as those who started for Central Park and got off at "Bergenbeachrow."

A Sad Flatterer.

Husband (tipsy, late home; wife dating up her hair before the looking-glass; his heart full of remorse; ready to give him a deadful scolding)—Why, dear, what are you doing?

Wife (suspicibly)—Don't you see what I am doing. Fixing up my hair.

H—Well—he—I'm glad to see you do that.

W—And where have—

H—I say I'm glad to see you doing that. For you—he—have the most beautiful hair I ever saw.

W—Where have you—

H—I say you have the most beautiful hair I ever saw. And it just matches your face. For you have the most beautiful face—hey—I say—the most—

W (smiling)—Do you think my face beautiful?

H (putting his hands under the pillow)—You are the most beautiful woman in the world.

W. (t. ningly) You darling John, you are a sad flatterer. Let me unbutton your collar for you.

He Helped Him.

Say, pard, I'm starving. Gimme a dime for a meal won't yer?

The speaker was a sad-eyed tramp. The man addressed might have been one of the Malthus' 400. The vision of sorrowful gloom scowfully at the scene of poverty, flowing his eye to more than usual, the unshaven cheek and chin of the hungering man.

"Heah," he said, "heah's a quarter. I don't give a dam fah peoah hoogah, but fah the sake of society I and get shaved."

What is Life Without Love?

Jeanie—Madam, your husband charges you with assault.

Madam—Yes, your honor; I asked him if he would crack once to love me, and he was so slow in answering that I hit him with a soup tureen only a woman, your honor knows what a woman's life without love is a mere blight.

Saw Her Explained.

Our Maid—My mission found two fishes in the soup this morning, and she carried lily put out with you.

Our Mistress—Your mission from trying to be generous. Why, sal ation, there was frost I put in only a compliment. They're worth a dollar a pound.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EXTRA DOUBLE
THE GREAT AMERICAN
Importing Tea Co.,
Are giving away extra double Premiums to all their customers, and are Selling Pure Teas and Coffees AWAY DOWN.
If you would drink the finest teas and the choicest coffees it will pay you to visit their stores.
They are the largest dealers and leaders of the low-at prices. Their stores are all over town.
Make no mistake, go direct to the stores and see what extra bargains they are offering.
CITY STORES.
140 and 142 Sixth st.
1419 Fillmore.
511 Montgomery st.
2008 Fillmore st.
106 Sansome st.
614 Geary st.
801 Market st., opposite Fourth.
3250 and 3252 Kearny st.
333 Hayes st.
218 Third st., SAN FRANCISCO.
327 Broadway
1363 San Pablo ave., Oakland.
Send for Catalogue. Prompt attention to country orders.
Wholesale Store, 32, 34, 36 and 38 Market st., San Francisco.

NEW AND GOOD BOOKS.
God Knowable and Known. By Rev. Matthew Hale Smith. 8 vo., author of "Talks on the Times," "Hunt from Moscow" etc. Illustrated, cloth, gilt $1.25
Requirement in Paris. Adam Martinez. Large Monthly of Information. By Mrs. Lorinda Z. Chaffee. 8 vo. Illustrated, cloth ..... 12 books
Sursum Corda. A Manual of English Hymns and Tunes for the use of Catholic Schools and Choirs. 12 mo. Cloth, limp edition ..... 25 cts
Illustrated edition 50
The New Saints of 1885. St. John Bosco, S. J. St. Peter Claver, S. J., St. Peter Fourier, Rodriguez, S. J., and the Canonization of Blessed Margaret Mary. Illustrated, cloth ..... 50 cents
The Bleeded Ones of Christ or Christ Stigmatized. Rev. C. A. Walworth. Large Monthly of Information Mary Of Agreda. 12 mo. Illustrated from the German Of Father A. Deharbe. With a new preface from the Of Cardinal Wiseman. Cloth, gilt edition ..... 50 cents
The Practice of Humility. By Rev. Hippolyte Leroy, S.J. Translated from the Italian by Rev. J. Jones, S. J. 18 mo. Cloth, gilt edition ..... 50 cts
Lourdes. By Inhabitants, In Pilgrims, the Sick Pilgrim. By Rev. Richard F. Clarke, S. J. Illustrated ..... 75 cents
Moral Philosophy. (Science and Wisdom.) Large Monthly. By Rev. Joseph Rickaby, S. J. 12 mo. Cloth $1.75
Jesus Christ. The Son of God. Large Monthly. Author of Catholic Philosophy, series by Rev. Richard F. Clarke, S. J.
Sold by all Catholic Bookstores and Agents
Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,
MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF
Vestments and Church Ornaments,
New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.
ROBERTS & KELLY,
Merchant Tailors,
Have Removed from 1019 Market Street, to most elegant quarters,
103 THIRD ST.,
Four Blocks
Where they would be pleased to meet their former friends and patrons.

OPIUM HABIT Thoroughly cured in 10 to 20 days. No pain. No publicity. Cure guaranteed. Terms reasonable. Consultation free. The DEWARS REMEDY Co., 734 Folsom ave.

HUTCHINSON'S BEST MADE GLOVES.
For Ladies or Gents, wear warranted, made with new Prunella Fastening, Self Adjusting, Self Measuring, Self Shrinking. They have money in fastening from Gloves and Mitts. Ask your Dealer for them. Manufactured only by Jas. C. Hutchinson, Gloves Works, Gloversville, N. Y.

WARD & CO.'S
Male and Female
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.
606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.
Telephone No. 767.
A WAITS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL & Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Sawmill Hands, Laborers and Mechanics, also, pure Cider for sale Help, without fee, always in employment. Situations without fee ... Clay street.

WEDDING PRESENTS.
A SET OF
PRICE'S Famous California-Made
CARVERS.
His Own Make and Design. Challenge the World. Beware of Imitations.
Stock at Jerry Hamilton, per pair $5 00
Price's Cocoaine Handle, per pair 1 00
Price's Quartz Handle, extra fine, not to be confounded with Cocoaine 2 00
A full assortment stock of English and American Razors and Forks. Best C. C. T., or by mail. Orders filled by mail or express.
M. PRICE, Pioneer Cutler,
615 Kearny st

BATEMAN BROS.
Contractors and Builders,
Room 11, Exchange, S. W.
104 Pine Street. Cor. Pine & Sansome Sts.
SAN FRANCISCO

MISCELLANEOUS.

Alexander Doran,
(SUCCESSOR TO C. BLUMAN)
Dealer in
STATIONERY, BOOKS, TOYS,
AND
FANCY GOODS.
A first class assortment of
Prayer Books, Bibles, Crosses, Etc.,
WILL ALWAYS BE FOUND HERE,
AND AT NEW YORK PRICES.
Please Call and Examine Our Stock.
S. W. Cor. Mission & 16th St.

Julius Scott & Co.,
REAL ESTATE.
OFFICES:
417 Kearny St., SAN FRANCISCO | 115 West St., OAKLAND, CAL. | SONOMA, CAL.
Farms and Fruit lands at all sizes, Stock, Timber and Stump Ranches for sale and exchange. Business Chances and improved and unimproved country lands and vineyards throughout the State.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF PAINTS, OILS and GLASS
112 and 114 California St.,
SAN FRANCISCO

H. McCORMICK,
DEALER IN
Catholic Books, Stationery, Church Goods, Ornaments, Flowers, etc.
IMPORTED AND SUPPLIED FROM MADE TO ORDER
Gilt Prayer Books and all kinds of Church Goods.
Agent for the Monthly Magazine.
412 & 414 Montgomery Avenue, near St. Francis Church.

CATHOLIC
MORTUARY CARDS.
Beautiful Catholic Designs
MEMORIAM CARDS,
Printed in the Neatest and Cheapest Manner by
McCORMICK BROS.,
410 Sansome Street.
Any Catholic Society or simple cards constantly on hand to select from.

RAILROADS.
SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD
"THE DIRECT PACIFIC COAST ROUTE."
Leave S. F. | DESTINATION | ARRIVE S. F.
8:00 a.m. | Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Ukiah, Willits and Sherwood | 6:40 p.m.
3:30 p.m. | Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Ukiah and Way Stations | 10:10 a.m.
4:00 p.m. | Sonoma and Way Stations | 9:00 a.m.
Passengers transferred at Junction from the Willits Sulphur Springs and Sherwood Springs Stages, and at Ukiah from Springs, Vichy Springs, Saratoga Springs, Blue Lakes, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Upper Lake, Porter's, Kelseyville, Soda Springs, Bucknell's, Siegler's, Howard's, Harris', Bonner's, Keeler's, Ashley's, Orr's and the Geysers.
SUNDAY EXCURSION.
EXCURSION TICKETS from Saturday to Monday, to Petaluma, $1.75; to Santa Rosa, $2; to Healdsburg, $3; to Cloverdale, $4.
EXCURSION TICKETS good for Sundays only—to Petaluma, $1; to Santa Rosa, $1.50; to Healdsburg, $2; to Cloverdale, $3; to Guerneville, $3.
G. P. Thompson for Point Tiburon, leaves Sansome Sunset, 7:00 a.m., 9:00 a.m., 11:00 a.m., 1:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:00 p.m., 11:00 p.m. Sundays—7:30 a.m., 8:00 a.m., 9:00 a.m., 10:00 a.m., 11:00 a.m., 1:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:00 p.m., 11:00 p.m.
To San Francisco from Point Tiburon—Week Days: 6:00 a.m., 7:00 a.m., 8:00 a.m., 9:00 a.m., 10:00 a.m., 11:00 a.m., 1:00 p.m., 2:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:00 p.m., 9:00 p.m. Sundays—8:00 a.m., 9:00 a.m., 10:00 a.m., 11:00 a.m., 1:00 p.m., 2:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m., 4:00 p.m., 5:00 p.m., 6:00 p.m., 9:00 p.m.
Tickets to Points Beyond Sausalito and Point Tiburon can be purchased on board the cars and boats.
Connections at Ferry with Sausalito Land and Water Company's Steamers.
R. ROSS, Superintendent.
R. MCKINLAY, Gen'l Pass. Agent.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROAD
5.00 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) from Tiburon Ferry, connecting with Train leaving Sansome st. at 4 P. M.
SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.
8.00 A. M. (Sundays only), from Tiburon Ferry, connecting with Train for Sonoma and Way Points. Returning arrives in San Francisco at 6 P. M.
Tickets to Sonoma and return, $1.50; to Glen Ellen, $1.
H. F. WHITING, PETER J. McGLYNN,
Gen'l Superintendent. Gen. Pass & Ticket Agent.
Ticket office at Ferry, 201 Montgomery street, and No. 1 Ecker Montgomery street.

QUICK TIME
AND CHEAP FARE
To Eastern and European Cities
via the Great Trans-continental All-rail Route
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.
(Pacific System.)
Daily Express Trains connect at Junctions with the several Railway lines in the East.
PASSENGERS BY
New York & New Orleans
with the several Steamer Lines
TO ALL EUROPEAN PORTS.
PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS
TOURIST SLEEPING CARS
A Limited Number of Tourists Sleeping Cars are attached to Overland Express Trains, Accommodations at Reduced Rates.
Apply at Company's Office, 613 Market st., corner Second, for Tourist Sleeping Car Tickets, and for other information, and for Sleeping Car Berths, Time Tables, and other information, call at Company's Office, 613 Market st., corner Second.
RAILROAD LANDS
For Sale or Reasonable Terms.
Apply by or address
W. S. HILLER, Land Commissioner, 1 Market st., S. F.
JEROME MADDEN, Land Agent, 1 Market st., S. F.
A. N. TOWNE, General Manager. T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass & Tkt. Agt.
No. 1 Market st., San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JAS. SCHEIBLI,
Having Enlarged His Store, has laid in an entire new stock of Foreign and Domestic Suitings.
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.
539 Clay Street, 539

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,
PRINCIPAL OFFICE.
17 POWELL STREET,
BRANCH.
1156 MARKET ST.
LAUNDRY.
Tel. Bet. Sutter and Bush, Bet. Powell and Stockton.
McKENNA & PURCELL,
Hay, Grain and Commission
MERCHANTS.
Consignments Solicited.
Shipping Orders a Specialty.
214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

BLANE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,
Importers and Dealers in
BOOK, NEWS,
WRITING AND WRAPPING
PAPERS.
Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.
MANUFACTURERS OF
Patent Machine Made Paper Bags.
516 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

Adjustable and Fixed Forms.
Paper Machine Busts
MADE TO ORDER.
The Trade Supplied. Illustrated Catalogue and Price List free on application. Best perfect pulp forms are in demand.
224 Stockton St
SAN FRANCISCO

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
PIANOS
GAINED 1st HONOR at the Industrial Exhibition of the Pacific Coast, 1883, for the Best Pianos Made on the Pacific Coast. Warerooms, 308 Post street, San Francisco. Factory, Cor. Geary and Stockton streets. Pianos Tuned, Moved and Repaired. Pianos Stored Free. Pianos Rented, Rent Allowed on Purchase. Pianos Sold on Easy Payments. Pianos Sold Cheap for Cash. Pianos Sent Free to Any Part of the Country. Pianos Sent on Trial. Pianos Boxed Free. Pianos Warranted Five Years. Pianos Exchanged Free. Pianos Tuned by Factory Tuners. Pianos Tuned by Ladies. Pianos Tuned Forever. Pianos Tuned Anywhere. Pianos Tuned Anytime. Pianos Tuned Cheap. Pianos Tuned Quickly. Pianos Tuned Perfectly. Pianos Tuned Scientifically. Pianos Tuned Fashionably. Pianos Tuned Reasonably. Pianos Tuned Satisfactorily. Pianos Tuned Pleasantly. Pianos Tuned Tastefully. Pianos Tuned Lastingly. Pianos Tuned Fortunately. Pianos Tuned Unfortunately. Pianos Tuned Anyhow. Pianos Tuned Everywhere. Pianos Tuned Everybody. Pianos Tuned Everything

POPE AND EMPEROR.

Current Account of the Emperor William's Visit to the Sovereign Pontiff.

The accounts published by the daily press regarding the visit of Emperor William II. of Germany to the Holy Father, were published to rout the enemies of the Church, and contained allusions to not-to-be-forgotten words of the Pope and the Emperor which were anything misleading. The following correct account was sent by a special correspondent:

ROME, October 15, 1888.—On last Friday, the 12th inst., the principal avenues of this Leonine City were all en fête, and adorned with flags on the occasion of William II.'s visit to the Holy Father, and the streets were lined with troops, and mounted gendarms surrounded the vast Piazza of St. Peter's. Precisely at 1:40 the carriage of the Emperor entered the Court of St. Damasus, in which is the grand white marble staircase leading to the Pope's state apartment. The Prince Rampolla, in the beautiful robes of the Chamberlain's de coppa e spada, (of the cloak and sword) was awaiting the Emperor's coming.

THE FINE BODY OF PAPAL GENDARMES,

in full uniform, were on duty, and on the left of the Cortile were a hundred men of the Palatine Guards with their drum. At the entrance to the great staircase the Corps of Swiss, with their most quaint costume as designed by Michael Angelo, were on guard, and the Papal servants, in magnificent liveries of crimson and gold, with raised velvet patterns, and eight chamberlains in their Sixteenth century costumes of black and velvet and cloth, and with chains of office and ancient caps and feathers, also four chamberlain's priests in scarlet. In the middle of the great group, so splendid in color, and so quaint in costume, were the Prince Rampolla and the Marquis Sacchetti, Marquis Bartolgi, Master of the House, and many other dignitaries of the Papal Court, including the Prince Altieri, representing the Noble Guard and Colonel de Courten of the Swiss Guards and Monsignor Mazzali, major-domo.

SALUTING THE EMPEROR,

led the way up the marble staircase to the great hall called the "Sala Clementina," adorned with the frescoes of Raphael in Volpi, Maestro di Camera, Noble Guards, mere chamberlains, the colonels of the Palatine Guards, gendarmes, and others. Passing these to the second state rooms there were a row of packed men of the gendarmes. In the third room were more Palatine Guards. In the fourth were the Noble Guards; they follow the chapel where the Holy Father was his daily Mass, and here were the officials called "Honorabili," or doorkeepers, Masters of the Ceremonies, and others. This hall is hung with green satin damask. Then comes the Throne room. The Throne room had on four sides, covered with red velvet, gold embroidered, and is surmounted by a superb canopy in red velvet, and in the center of which is embroidered the descending Dove, which represents the Spirit of the Holy Spirit. It was 1:55 p.m. when the Emperor came near the throne room.

THE POPE RECEIVED HIM STANDING at the foot of the grand Pontifical Throne, surrounded by his Eminence Cardinal Oreglia, Count Camillo Pecci, in the uniform of the Noble Guards, Prince Ruspoli, Cardinal Mertel, and the door of the Throne room opened, and the Emperor halted a moment and made the prescribed reverence, bowed low twice and his helmet in his right hand, and then advanced towards the Holy Father, who advanced towards the Holy Father, who advanced towards the Holy Father, who

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1888.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

A REVISIT

TO MY ALMA MATER IN SOUTH BOW.

To youth's long years—oh! guardian of my Youth,
Since then and yon, tempest by sorrow's storm,
And watered by deep grief, with tears gazed on
Thy hoary pot thy venerable form.
Protector of my Youth! thy spell-bound,
Though crossed with furrows here and there;
While rain ghastly stares from the hoary wall,—
Yet as I ever beautiful and fair.
Stern solitude is now thy only guest,
Save when some bird his habitation takes
Within thy frame; while ever and anon,
His trembling thrills the gloomy silliness breaks.
Or when the wind rose will subvert the sky!
It stops to linger here that it might tell,
In wailing strains, the history of thy fate,
And weirdly sigh a deep and solemn knell—
What consolations owed into my mind,
As once again, within the lapse of years,
I contemplate thy calm old yet grand,
With stilled sobs and eyes humid with tears;
In youth's enchanting hour, my footsteps trod
For years within thy playground, where is gone now!
Ah! oft since then harvested with great care,
Have I heaped blessings on thy teacher brow,
Aye, often wished some down I was a boy,
Humbling contented 'neath thy gentle care;
With soul enchanted with untold happiness
Scarcely hankling to bright pleasure's rays
Pleasant it was, with cherished friends, to roam
Along the mountain's rugged rim and through
The darkling wood that slumbered to the vale,
Where trees and shrubs with life generally
Gazed
O,Gazed the morsels of the stream alone,
That constant murmured, as it onward went,
To great the sea, into our willing ears,
Strange, glowing tales of earth and firmament.
But where are they? those friends to boyhood dear?
Those same bright, untarnelled with a care?
I breathe the question, and the passing wind
In hollow tones, slow echoes "Where?"
Pardonable, with reverent voice, some praise
Their God,
Some revered by the mountain or the wave,
With fame or infamy work out their lives;
Others, their duties o'er, rest in the grave.
'Twas here we hoarkened to the master's voice,
Thundering, with earnest look, some mighty truth
We gazed with fains adoms as he ceased.
And dreamt we solved the mystery, Lorenzo,
Ah! blind simplicity of thoughtless youth.
Ere I had known you, you had onward fled,
Your unlor forgotten memory now but speaks
Of joyous days, that slumber with the dead.
The present has no tempting joys for me,
The future shows no pleasure true and vast,
Save heaven above, my thoughts alone shall be
Deep-centered on the visions of the past.

J. T. COTTRIGRAE.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE STAR OF HOPE.

The Star of Hope is beauty shines
O'er all the paths of mortal life;
Its rays enchant and cheer and entwine
My heart and soul where'er I go.
In youth's glad sunshine, all seem'd fair
To my yearning heart in mirthful play,
But, years since then has brought it's care,
And grave sorr'ys the place of joy.
The sports of boyhood's happy time
Can please the longing heart no more,
And ranging o'er Earth's varied clime
My soul still sighs for brighter shore.

Oh, what is life's brief space to man
Then all his energy days are o'er,
His longest years are but a span
That breaks like one upon the shore,
My heart oft wakes the dreams of old
O'er happy prospects once so bright,
But later but yielding pulse cold
To all the charms of former light.

Yet, Hope, like the northern star,
As firmly fix'd to purpose bold,
Guides to a happy home afar,
Where peace is never mar'd by cold.
The Star of Hope still guides my path
Serene o'er life's uncertain sea,
And, through all storms, bright or dark
Hope's golden star still shines on me.

A warning voice, soon, suggest
The paths of right my feet should tread,
Then, guiding yonder, I find the best
Were mark'd out by the upon dead,
Which mars works of merry rise and blows
Through all the track of changing years;
And evermore their footprints
The lonely isles of mortal tears.

The records of the past still bears
The intuition of nightly mind
Upon man that need on lingered wines,
And left Earth's treasures all behind.
Then, hail to thee, bright Hope, my guide
In all life's sorrows, dark and drear,
Through all my days shine at my side,
Each varied year succeeding year.

In Hope's bright Star there is a charm
That soothes the wanderers here below,
And, through the life of life's storm
May Hope's fair beams still cast a glow.
Yet, while Time's restless sun shall roll
Unseeing o'er the lives of men,
Let mortals stand upon the shoal
Of that dark tide, and hope smile.

Those beams of Hope to man are given
To raise his thoughts to realms above,
That he may gain the blissful Heaven
With Jesus in eternal love.
Until said Death shall shift my hand,
And all my fleeting days are o'er,
My soul shall prize those on life's strand,
Loved Star of Hope for evermore.

JOHN F. MCDONNELL.

Virginia City, Nev.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

SORRY TO ANGER.

With spurning scorn contemptuous he hied
My heart. The pent-up anguish of my soul,
Like storm at sea, quick burst, without control
Thole bare, while truth'rous Reason turned and fled.
With symbolic fanning, conscious words I said;
Nor blamer their impact 'ill calm reason come
To cover me with sorrow deep and shame.
While in my heart, I wished his dead,
Nay, in fancy's eye, his wowering form
Lay lifeless in the shell-embrace of death
Ah! with what joy I saw his heart's blood warm
And heard the quick, faint gasp of his last breath.
Oh! what a crime at Anger's shrine to bend,
A worshipper of that foul fiend
The soul with overwhelming surges rend.

E. M. C.

— The concert in aid of the new parish of St. James, will take place in the Minster Opera House on the 22nd inst.

Literary Miscellany.

Gatalia's Great Sorrow

A BEAUTIFUL SEQUEL TO "VALISKA."

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "SERELDA."]

CHAPTER III.

One day Gatalia and little Sam were walking around the barnyard when Sam's sole rode up. Mr. Starkbother and his wife were coming to meet them when he shouted to look at Varoudini.

"Mine Gott in de himmel!" he muttered under his breath, as he looked again, and then turning to Gatalia said: "Madam, could you tell me who ver dat man vat gun is shoot now?"

"That—that is Rosado Verondini, Vincenzo's partner!"

"Vall, dat post dar daifels! Van I goes to Mass in dee town, dat man calls himself der brisel, and now he comes to redoo der gatlias. I no understand vat dat mean. In my country der brisel never do dat."

Just than Mr. Waldeg came up and joined them. He, too, had recognized in Rosado the vile wretch who had dared to desecrate the ignorant people. Starkbother was wild. He spoke but little English, but being a true Catholic he immediately noticed the difference between the sham and the real.

"Mina friand," he said addressing Mr. Waldeg, "vat you dinks? Dat man who gun in shoot now; vhere you see him last dimse, eh?"

"My friend," returned Mr. Waldeg, "that man is a vile, Liberal sneeper, who has long been deceiving the ignorant, and aiding the vicious, in this bad country. You know that this place is infested with a set of villians, called "Liberals," who try to cloak their apostasy, and dare to call themselves Catholics though they are not recognized by the true Church. One of these vile wretches you have before you. I told you that this was not the place for any Christian family. The example is too dangerous."

"I see dat, and I vas sadonished vas I see dat man vat I dink vas dar brisel np hars mit the cow-pigs. I can't make me dot out."

"No, for a true Priest, with his oraden have to go slow with them here unless you know they are truly ordained Catholic Priests."

"Vall, dis vas der first dims I see der disfel bley der brisel. In mine country dar brisel vas dar brisel, und der bad man vas der bad man, but shicat der same, I gosts ma ood of dar dufels country so quick as I can."

"To the best plan," answered Mr. Waldeg. "I would not bring my family here for the wealth of the whole country, and I have some hers myself more than business demands. To a foreign Catholic the things they witness here seem terrible, for any time the people call themselves Catholics, true Church; they are the vilest vartiges of creation, and sometimes they even succeed in misrepresenting us. Hence we are known to strangers, and then truth abuses supreme in contrast to their depravity and wicked ness."

"Shoot der sams I gesta me out post quick," said Starkbother, as he moved away.

Gatalia heard all this, "Great Heavens!" she cried, "I am in a nest of vile, a den of thieves. Oh, Merciful Father, help me! Show me the way out of this!" And going into the house she wept bitterly and tried to pray for strength to get away, for she had resolved to go if possible. But the end was not yet. She had still much ahead of her, for she had forgotten God and home and mother—and now she seemed to be forsaken by all.

Thus, in one continual agony of fear, she passed her days at the Amendo Manoi where her every movement, as he suspected she had tried to follow him the day he found her on the mountain path, she determined she should not do again. But had he suspected that she had seen them bury one of their victims he would have been savagely alarmed and she would have fared even worse than she did. Since that awful evening in the canyon, she had said but little to Manuel, never again referring to what she had seen. Fear sealed her lips. She had been afraid of Vincenzo from the first feeling, that he was capable of anything, and that it would be dangerous to let him know she had seen them at their murderous work.

After the police was over they went back to the villa, and for months she remained there, her only companions being Filetta and the great watch-dog that had made friends with her. Manuel was away most of the time, and she trembled—almost cried out—in her anguish when she thought of the many crimes she felt sure they were committing. Vincenzo was often there when all the others were away, and he invariably tried to tempt her by his flattery, but she sought peace in her own room where she would lock herself in and remain for days at a time.

Filetta pitied her and tried to console her: "Ah, Senora" she would say, "its plain, you did not know all—did not know to whom you were trusting yourself. But, never mind, my bad brother goes to-night to be away some time and then we will have a little respite."

"Oh, thank God!" said Gatalia, fervently. "Filetta, tell me, do I look sensible? Sometimes I feel as if my brain was giving way."

"Si mi pobre Senora, you look sensible enough. But where are all your roses gone? You are as pale as a lily."

"They are buried, Filetta—buried forever."

"No, no; you must be more cheerful, and perhaps the next time we go to the Amendo we will manage to get away from them."

"Oh, Filetta, when, when do we go there again? And will you help me—will you go with me?"

"Si, si; but be patient. It is nearly a year since the last raid, and Mr. Stark bother will be there as he is negotiating for a sale of all his cattle and is going to leave the country; and perhaps if we manage it right and tell him our trouble he will aid us to get away from here. I suppose you know he has found out the true character of Rosado, who is even a blacker villian than my bad brother Vincenzo. Oh! I know Gatalia, if you only knew what I know and I will come back to you."

Thus she prayed through the long dark hours, while the bandits drank and made merry. When morning dawned she rose pale and trembling, longing for the day to come when they would start for the Amendo, Gatalia found out in that terrible year that sin brings its own punishment, and verily she repented in dust and ashes.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

A Case of Highway Robbery.

At a New York fair the other day for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers, for an hour preceding the beginning of the performance the refreshment booth was surrounded by bevy of beautiful ladies and elegantly dressed gentlemen. One of the latter was an original admirer of one of the ladies, and taking advantage of the fact, she impressed upon him the necessity of wearing a rose and giving it to her. Of course he was willing to do her anything truly too readily, and in an instant the deft fingers had fastened the flowers together with wire and twisted. Then working the ends through the buttonhole, she fastened them to the lapel of the coat with an ordinary pin.

"Now, sweet," her quarrel, reading for his pocketbook and bending a glance on the upturned face of the charming lady.

"Twenty-five dollars," she replied, without a tremor or hesitancy in her voice.

He was stunned for an instant, but he was too shrewd to manifest it visibly. Having deposited the crisp bills in her outstretched palm, he said:

"Excuse me, but may I ask what is the itemized tariff for bouquets? I merely inquire through curiosity."

"Five dollars for the rose, five for the geranium, five for the pin and tire for fastening it to the lapel of your coat," was the quiet reply.

A moment later, when the young man had joined his male friends, one of them, who had heard the conversation, remarked:

"He didn't charge you for the wire, old boy."

"That's so; let's get away before she thinks of it."

Miners with Green Hair.

A contract has been let on the Martin White mines at Ward, Nev., and work is to be commenced forthwith. A queer phenomenon is connected with the working of the Martin White ores. The ore very low, and it is necessary to roast the whole of it. During the roasting process no disagreeable or deleterious fumes are observable, and the men and the beasts of all the men engaged about the works are soon dyed a bright and source of Nevada mines ores of various colors, principally green. Not a man of them is either the hair or beards of the workmen changed from their natural hue to green, and that there is been even in the ore of the Martin White than on that of many other mines. Old miners say arsenic has a tendency to turn the hair, and all denote that the emerald has imparted to the hair is due to the presence of some unknown and mysterious metal or mineral. White, light, and sandy beards and hair take a grass green, whereas black or dark brown hair is dyed a deep bottle green. The hair is not injured by the change of color. It retains its original softness and strength.

First Night of the Blind.

An old negro woman in Pennsylvania, who was born blind, late in life received her sight by the removal of the cataract. When the bandage was first removed, the patient started violently, and cried out as with fear, and for a moment was quite nervous from the effects of the shock. For the first time in her life she looked upon the earth.

The first thing she noticed was a little dog's apparent intelligence. She ran up to a reporter she said that she thought they were teacups, although, strange to say, a few moments afterwards she readily distinguished a watch which was shown her. It is supposed that this recognition was owing to the fact that she heard its ticking. The blaze from the lamp caused the most lively surprise in her mind. She had no idea what it was, and when it was brought near she wanted to pick it up. When night approached upon the day when she first used her eyes she was in a fright, fearing that she was losing the sight which she had so wonderfully found after a lifetime of darkness.

Cost of Pardoning Sins.

A good story is told of himself by a season ticket holder on the Boston and Maine Railroad—a wide-awake, jolly, generous, jokelovingly gentleman, liberal in his religion, living in a home on a short time since, with the Catholic priest of his village, who had been active in trying to induce his flock to become temperate, he familiarly addressed him in language something as follows: "Father—you are doing a pretty good work now-a-days, I don't know but what you are doing as much good as all the other clergymen in town." The priest quietly replied that he was doing what he could to prove his people. "Ill tell you what it is," continued the gentleman, "I've been thinking of attending your church, but was afraid it would cost too much to get all my sins pardoned." "Oh" said the priest, "we can manage your case; when we have a very large contract, we make a liberal discount."

— The contribution of a railroad from Joppa to Jerusalem has been mentioned by the Turkish Government.

— Subscribers will please look at the date printed on their paper or wrapper, and if they find that their subscription has not been paid they will help the Morrow financially by remitting $2 00 promptly.

A PRIEST'S FORTUNE.

A Singular Case in Connecticut.

So runs the story in the New York Sun: The settlement of the litigation over the large estate of Father Thomas J. Synnott, for thirty years rector of St. Augustine's Roman Catholic church in Bridgeport, and what will be a famous case in the legal annals of Connecticut. The decision has made divers measures great enough without the court holding on. Five months ago Judge Simeon Eaton, of Norwalk, rendered the decision that the deeds were void. The case was at once appealed to the Supreme Court of Errors, but pending the appeal the matter has been settled. John Synnott agreed to accept $100,000 in lieu of all his claims upon the estate. The remaining $150,000 is to be divided among the other heirs, of whom Robert Synnott, the executor, is one.

Capt. W. H. Hinks of Bridgeport was appointed administrator of the estate. A search for the heirs resulted there to be fifty three in number. Father Synnott had left no wife nor children. They were all half blood, and three brothers and two sisters of half blood, and they and their descendants were found in Illinois, Wisconsin, Wyoming Territory, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Canada, and a half a dozen places in Ireland. Two brothers were living in Ireland, still earning their daily bread by the sweat of their brows, according to the estimate of the estate now made. Legally the case settles in Connecticut that a man may bequeath his property to whom he pleases.

John Synnott, who accompanied to court by Capt. Hinks, is a tall, spare, intelligent, quiet, Canada, and a half a dozen places in Ireland. Two brothers were living in Ireland, still earning their daily bread by the sweat of their brows, according to the estimate of the estate now made. Legally the case settles in Connecticut that a man may bequeath his property to whom he pleases.

John Synnott, who accompanied to court by Capt. Hinks, is a tall, spare, intelligent, quiet, Canadian

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1888.

"Christmas Monitor."

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All press and poetic contributions intended for the forthcoming issue of THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR must reach this office by the number 8th, so as to insure their appearance in our Christmas issue, which will be published December 19th next.

THE CHRISTMAS "MONITOR."

SEND FOR COPIES AT ONCE.

Subscribers and others who desire to procure extra copies of the Christmas Monitor to send to Friends through the number of Exiles in Ireland, or any other portion of the globe, should send in their orders at once, so as not to be disappointed, as there is always a great demand for the Christmas Monitor. Ten Cents a copy is all we charge for the twelve-page Illustrated Christmas Monitor, filled with the best Catholic press and poetry we can procure in California, the Eastern States and in Ireland. Send it to your friends and show them what California can accomplish in the way of Catholic literary enterprise.

Send in the names and corresponding cash early, and the copies ordered will be sent by mail direct from this office, postage free.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—A Roman correspondent cables to a New York contemporary that there is a possibility of an Irish Cardinal being created at the next Consistory.

—It is stated that the brother of Mr. J. Lockwood, Q. C., who is now appearing for certain of the Irish members at the Parnell Commission Inquiry, has become a Catholic within the past few weeks.

—The Turkish Government has sent to the various provincial authorities imperatives not to place any obstacle in the way of the conversion of Armenians desiring to become Catholics.

—The Pope recently received a number of Neapolitan pilgrims. His Holiness, in this course of a long address, protested against Rome being called the capital of the Kingdom of Italy, as it ought rightfully to be the capital of the Catholic world.

—The Gouvernoire Romano publishes a letter from the Pope to Cardinal Lavigerie, in which his Holiness speaks in terms of high praise of the zeal displayed by the Cardinal in his undertaking.

—The Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, Bishop of Hobart, Tasmania, who has held the service for nearly fifty years, has been raised to the rank of Archbishop. Hobart is now a metropolitan See, and is on an ecclesiastical level with Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane and Wellington.

According to a dispatch from Rome to the Observateur Français, the Consistory for the creation of the new Cardinals has been definitely fixed for the month of December. Amongst those who will be raised to that honor are Mgr. Macchi, Majordomo, and Mgr. Annibala, Assessor of the Holy Office.

—Mr. Dillon, M. P., arrived at Thurles last Wednesday week as the guest of Archbishop Croke. Both addressed a large concourse of people. Mr. Dillon said the Archbishop's reception of a criminal would not lessen the people's respect for him. They had achieved their end without the loss of a drop of blood, Thurles would not be forgotten.

—The fourth child of the Princess of Wahlsburg Wolfegg, the Princess Marie, has taken the veil at the Convent of the Sacred Heart, at Reidenbourg. A son of the same Prince lately entered the Society of Jesus. The family of Wahlsburg is one of the most illustrious of Swabia. One of its members is Mgr. de Waldbourg, Domestic Prelate of his Holiness.

—The Hon. Michael Henry Herbert has been appointed British Charge d'Affaires at Washington. Lord Sackville will go to England immediately on leave of absence. It is understood that the Government will allow his case to rest until after the Presidential election excitement is over. Mr. Herbert is a son of the famous English Catholic lady Herbert of Lea.

—The Rev. Joseph Von der Heyden, late of Belgium, has been visiting his cousin, Rev. Father Vygen, of Pultnam, Conn. The young priest, who was lately ordained, at the age of 22, by special permission of His Holiness Leo XIII., has been conducting a spiritual retreat, with most gratifying results, in Pittsburg. He is an accomplished scholar, and master of five modern languages. Father Von der Heyden has gone to Idaho Territory to assist Bishop Glorieux in attending to the spiritual wants of his vast diocese.

—It is generally well known that Methodist preachers are renowned foes of "yellow legged chickens," but we never saw so candid an admission of that fact as appears in Brother McCrea's Christian Advocate last week, wherein we read that for the convenience of the chicken-loving preachers the next session of the District Conference is to be held at Long Beach, in southern California, where, the writer says, "the chickens are very numerous, and the trees are not so high as in other localities." It takes a Methodist preacher to provide for the "inner man" first, last, and all the time!

THE HOLY ROSARY.

The Holy See and the Supreme Moderators still urge the Living Rosary belongs.

Decrees of the Holy See and the Supreme Moderators in Regard to the Stability of the Living Rosary.

Our Most Holy Lord, Pope Pius IX, blessing, his Brief Quod pure humilitatis, issued on the 17th of August, 1857, committed the Living Rosary to the care of the Dominicans, the Most Rev. Father Joseph Maria Larcara, then Vicar General of the Order, commenced the work of the re-establishment of the Sodality. The present Master-General, the Most Rev. Joseph Maria Larcara, has added several decrees to those enacted in 1857 and 1879, by his worthy predecessor. We give those of both.

1. Directors of the Living Rosary, all and each, whether general or diocesan, who hold their office by a legitimate title on the 15th of November, 1877, were confirmed therein for life, and were empowered to appoint new Zelators over associations of fifteen members, even those to be placed over new associations. But the successors of such must be appointed each time by the Provincial of the Dominican Province in which such Sodalities exist.—Father Sanvito, 1877.

2. In like manner, all Zelators and Zelatrices who had office on the 15th of November, 1877, were confirmed therein for life. —Father Sanvito, 1877.

3. All members hitherto received, or in future to be received into the Sodality by such Zelators, were to be reckoned as legitimately admitted, and as being in a condition to share fully in all its graces and indulgences.—Father Sanvito, 1877.

4. The Directors, even those diocesan, thus confirmed, were not in future to choose, as formerly, new directors.—Father Sanvito, 1877.

5. From the date above specified, no Directors could not be appointed by any one but the Master General of the Dominican Order, or through his delegation, by the Provincials, each in his own Province. —Father Sanvito, 1877.

6. All Directors of the Confraternities of the great Rosary, which have been Canonically erected with the authority of the Master General of the Order, and the consent of the Ordinary of the place, or which shall be hereafter so erected, are to be regarded as the legitimate Directors, with all rights, of the Sodality of the Living Rosary. —Brief of Pius IX. Quod pure humilitatis.

7. Rite in as much as the Sodality by no means is to be considered as a Confraternity (for it does not possess a Confraternity right, to which the name of a Sodality is to be inscribed, nor are its members obliged to any public exercises, but are divided into bands of fifteen, each one meditating on a certain mystery and reciting daily for a month his decade of the Rosary), it is in no manner to be considered as bound by the usual laws of Confraternities, and therefore many Living Rosary Sodalities may exist together under their various legitimate Directors in the same place, and contribute as alms for life, may continue their work of zeal, as before, even in places where the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, or Convents of the Dominican Order exist. It is quite otherwise, however, with Directors or Presidents who have received their appointment subsequently to November 15th, 1877.—Fr. Sanvito, 1879.

8. Provincials of the Dominican Order, each within the limits of his own Province, may appoint local Directors, but not, therefore, general or diocesan. Should it seem necessary to have in some places general or diocesan Directors, recourse must be had in every case to the Most Rev. General of the Order. Hence, as a Director now receives faculties only for a certain place, if he is moved from that place, or if, as pastor, he is transferred to another parish, ipso facto the faculties conceded to him, cease.—Sanvito, 1877.

9. By special delegation of the Master General of the Order, Provincials may appoint Directors in places where at present no Dominican Province exists, as in Scotland, Algeria, &c.—Sanvito, 1877.

10. But in places where the Confraternity of the Most Sacred Rosary is canonically erected, Provincials cannot appoint other Directors of the Living Rosary. Hitherto a special reason exist for instituting other Directors in certain places, recourse must be had in every case to the Most Rev. Master General of the Order—Sanvito, 1877.

11. And, if it so happen that the Confraternity of the Most Sacred Rosary is canonically erected in a place where heretofore there existed only the Sodality of the Living Rosary, and that such Sodality is presided over by a Director or President who has been appointed since November 15th, 1877, by the very fact of the erection of the Confraternity, the facilities of such a particular Director or President, whether granted to him by the General or the Provincial, expire, and the Director of the Living Confraternity, has, with full right, all power in all matters relating to the Sodality of the Living Rosary in such a place and under such circumstances.—Sanvito, 1877.

12. In places where the Confraternity of the Most Sacred Rosary is not established, Provincials may appoint local Directors of the Living Rosary, either for life or for a limited time, as they may judge most suitable.—Sanvito, 1877.

13. The following formula is that to be used by the Provincials in giving faculties to priests to establish the Living Rosary Sodality in their districts.—Sanvito, 1877.

"We, Brother . . . . . Prior Provincial of the Province . . . . . of the Sacred Order of Preachers.

"We consider it as one of the chief duties of our office to labor most zealously every day to propagate and render most fruitful the devotion to the Most Holy Mother of God and her Rosary, which has been so pseudly declared by the Apostles to belong by hereditary right to her Order.

"Since, therefore, our Most Holy Lord, Pope Pius IX., by a Brief dated the 17th of August, 1877, committed the supreme government of the Living Rosary to the Most Rev. Master General of the Order, by the authority delegated to Us by him, We appoint and establish you . . . . . Director of the Living Rosary Sodality in the city or place commonly called and We decide and declare that you are so appointed, and that you are to the possession of all the rights and graces which are known to belong to the duty or office of all such Directors; provided, however, there be not existed in such place any Confraternity of the Most Sacred Rosary, canonically erected with the authority of the Master General of the Order and the consent of the Ordinary of the Diocese. But if at any time in the future such a Confraternity should be erected, the Sodality and the Director of the Living Rosary, ipso facto the facilities which we now, by these presents, grant you, will expire, for every Director of the aforesaid Confraternity possesses de jure and regularly, in his own district or territory, the government of the Living Rosary Sodality, and of its Zelators and associates.

14. Although local Directors have not in future the power to appoint other Directors, they may commission one or more, men or women, with the name of President or Presidents, Zelators, Zelatrices, to preside over the several Zelators of the locality under the authority of the Director. —Sanvito, 1877.

15. But also Provincials may do in places where the Rosary Confraternity is not established, and where the local clergy may not be disposed to undertake the charge of Director.—Sanvito, 1877.

16. The Zelators and Zelatrices should have, if possible, a monthly meeting of the associates, so that the Mysteries may be distributed by lot to each one. The Supreme Pontiffs have approved this arrangement. If, however, the aforesaid meeting be not feasible, then the Zelator or Zelatrice with two associates may proceed to the drawing of the Mysteries, and transmit to the absent members, the Mysteries designated for them by the drawing. This method has been authorized by his Holiness Pope Gregory XVI., through his Eminence Cardinal Lambruschini, Protector of the Sodality of the Living Rosary.—Gregory XVI.

17. If, however, the associates agree together or privately, each to take the same Mystery to the one before recited, according to the natural order of the decades, the devotion may be thus maintained, and the indulgences equally secured, according to a declaration of the same Supreme Pontiff. —Gregory XVI.

18. If any reasonable cause be adduced, the occurrence, for example, of a particular feast, the changing of the Mysteries made in the usual way of drawing, may be postponed for eight days from the day when a month has elapsed since the last drawing. —Gregory XVI. Oporeto circa rem, 7 June 1838.

19. By a declaration of the Most Rev. Father Vicar General of the Order of Preachers, Joseph Maria Sanvito, the first Supreme Moderator of the Living Rosary Association after the Brief Quod pure humilitatis of Pius IX.: "All and each of these Sodalities must have the one self-same name of the Living Rosary, without any additional title; and the present author must be observed that no novelty be introduced into the method of reciting the sacred Mysteries of the Most Sacred Rosary, by which the authentic Rosary so dear to Holy Pontiffs and the Most Blessed Virgin might be in more fully and explicitly presented by the present Supreme Moderator of the Living Rosary Association, the Most Rev. J. Larcara, in these words: "We expressly declare that there is but one Living Rosary, that it is exclusively under the care of the Order, and that we do not permit it to be united to any other association of whatever name, as for example, to the Rosary of the Apostleship of Prayer, or the Rosary of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, or any other similar association, lest it (the Living Rosary) should be exposed to the danger of losing its ancient privileges.

And, in order that in this matter our will may be clearly known to all, We deprive by these presents, Zelators, Zelatrices, Presidents and even Directors, on a word, all persons who propagate the Living Rosary as a pious work by other associations, of all facilities in the case, and We declare them so deprived, and Wherefore take from them all power to interfere with the legitimate organization of the Living Rosary. Nevertheless, members of any other association may belong to the Living Rosary, and, in this manner, the associates of the Living Rosary may join any other association, but on this express condition, that the obligations undertaken are distinct from one another, and are not to be mingled and confounded together.

20. Since the Devotion of the Most Sacred Rosary, as it was established by the Most Holy Patriarch St. Dominic, chiefly consists in contemplating the minds and hearts of the faithful by their continual meditation on all the Mysteries of the Life of our Lord Jesus Christ and of His Most Holy Mother, therefore let the Directors of the Living Rosary, and, indeed, all who labor for the propagation of this pious Sodality, most earnestly encourage and keep before the people, the form of prayer which our holy Father Dominic valued so much as a remedy for the evils of his own times, and which today is so powerful to increase faith and charity in the hearts of the faithful, and let them ever and carefully bear in mind that the Living Rosary Devotion is only, as it were, a wainscoting for the complete Rosary, in that established by St. Dominic, and that its Sodalities are only a preparatory school for the perfect practice of the Rosary, an nervous training to the great Confraternity, whose spiritual fruits are so much more abundant, and whose treasury of indulgences is so much more ample.

Decreto de libris periodi, in Italico fin.

Instructions given by the Most Rev. Father Larcara, in 1884, to the Provincials of the whole Order, in regard to the Living Rosary.

The following jubilee are to be kept well in mind by our Order in propagating the Living Rosary. It must be well and diligently explained to the faithful.

We consider it as one of the chief duties of our office to labor most zealously every day to propagate and render most fruitful the devotion to the Most Holy Mother of God and her Rosary, which has been so pseudly declared by the Apostles to belong by hereditary right to her Order.

Since, therefore, our Most Holy Lord, Pope Pius IX., by a Brief dated the 17th of August, 1877, committed the supreme government of the Living Rosary to the Most Rev. Master General of the Order, by the authority delegated to Us by him, We appoint and establish you . . . . . Director of the Living Rosary Sodality in . . . . . *Dominicis, Romanorum Pontificum Brevibus, Ordinationibus ac Decretis, Sacrosanctae Romanae Ecclesiae Cardinalium Congregationum Decretis, Ordinationibus, Instructionibus, Responsis, Sanctae Sedis Indulgentiis, Sacrae Poenitentiariae Apostolicae Responsis, Sacrae Rituum Congregationis Decretis, Ecclesiae Catholicae Doctorum Sanctorum Patrum Scriptis, Ac Probatae Ac Approbatae Theologiae Ac Ecclesiae Catholicae Doctrina Ac Praxi Ac Sensu Ac Ratione Ac Mente Ac Intentione Ac Ordinatione Ac Decreto Ac Ordinat

Farm and Home.

The Fruit Trade of California.

The British Consul at San Francisco, in the course of a report on the agriculture of California, refers to the enormous fruit trade of that State. It produces every sort of fruit that grows in a semi-tropical and temperate climate—among the former are the orange, lemon, citron, shaddock and other citrus fruits, the olive, pomegranate, fig, banana, apricot, nectarine, walnuts and almonds; grapes producing wine and raisins, growing in the temperate zone are apples, pears, plums, cherries, peaches, currants, gooseberries, blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries. The green fruit trade of the State has increased enormously. In 1867 the trade in green fruit with the Eastern States amounted to about 30,000 000 pound weight. The output of the various canneries in 1866 amounted to about 30,000,000 pounds, including 659,950 cases of fruit, 202,500 of vegetables, and 22,500 of jellies and jams. The estimate for 1867 is 799,500 cases of fruit, with an average of about 60 pounds of fruit to the case. Of these 200,000 were peaches, 175 500 apricots, 150 000 pears, 90,000 cherries, 40,000 plums, 35,000 grapes, 25,000 blackberries, and 15,000 each strawberries and gooseberries. The export of dried and evaporated fruits and vegetables is also enormous; thus the export of grapes treated in this way in 1867 was 16 000,000 pounds, apricots 3 000,000 pounds, honey 1,340 000 pounds, French prunes 1,750,000, walnuts 1,500,000 pounds, peaches 1,750-000, grapes 600 000 pounds, apples (evaporated) 550,000 pounds, peaches (unpeeled) 1,250,000 pounds, almonds 500 000 pounds, plums 500 000 pounds, and smaller quantities of many other fruits. The growing of prunes for raisins has proved a most profitable crop, with a ready market for all that can be made. Californians believe that their raisin crop will eventually drive the foreign produce from the markets of the United States, and from the statistics of the trade the Consul is inclined to think that they will. The wine production in 1867 was 13 000,000 gallons; 150 000 acres of the State are planed with vines, and not less than 90 per cent. of these are foreign varieties. "That this improvement in the quality of wine produced is very marked there can be no doubt, and the lower California wine, with its indisgreeable, fiery, harsh taste is fast becoming a thing of the past. This is due to the importation of the best varieties of foreign vines and a more careful system of cultivation, manufacture, and preservation of the wine." The number of sheep in the State was from four to four and a half millions; the wool clip in 1854, was 173,000 pounds, and in 1858 it had reached to 56 550 920 pounds. After this it fell off, and in 1867 was 31,564 215 pounds, but with a great improvement in the quality.

Value of the Egg.

It is remarkable what a place in the world the egg occupies. It is an article of commerce that stands monopolitiive, an agricultural product for which the demand never runs out; men may surfeit on all other diet. An egg is ever welcome as a food. On account of its multitudinous ways of preparation, nothing aids so much as it plays in making other foods better, and it is a veritable dainty and a food esteemed par excellence from the king to the poorest of his subjects. Why are eggs so popular? Are they so superior as a food? Yes. An egg contains very nearly all the elements of nutrition that go to make tissue. Because it contains phosphorus and other forming material, it is the scholar's fare; because it is rich in albumen, it is the invalid's invigorator; it strengthens the consumptive, and is all best proof against malignant jaundice. No human appetite has yet rejected an egg in some form, and to convey nourishment in disease it is our ready resource. An egg is natural; not only is it a food, but in many circumstances a very efficacious medicine. The white is one of the best remedies for burns, and an oil extracted from the yolk is considered by the Russians as an almost infallible cure for cuts and lacerations. Avan antidote to poison it occupies a foremost position, the white only being used, this antidotes the acids—sulphuric, nitric, muriatic, oxalic, carbolic; the alkalies—ammonia, soda, potash, lye; corrosive sublimate is effectually antidoted by the whites of two eggs and tartar emetic is made quite harmless. Sugar of lead is also antidoted by it. Were you aware before that the egg is as valuable as represented, and that it is a true life preserver or either as a food or medicinal 'ion, much more might be said, but we hope the will justify a due appreciation in its favor.

Doctors on Beer Drinking.

Not long ago D R Locke of the Toledo Node interviewed ten of the principal physicians of that noisesome city of beer sellers. This is some of the testimony

Dr S. R. Thorne: "In regard to surgical operations, every physician dreads to have anything to do with beer drinkers. It is dangerous for a beer drinker to even cut his finger."

Dr. S. H. Bergin, of thirty five years' practice said: "It kills quicker than any other liquor. Pneumonia, pleurisy, fever, etc., have a first mortgage on the beer drinker."

Dr. M H Parmalee: "Beer is worse than whiskey, the hops contained in the beer producing congestion of the liver, dyspepsia and kindred diseases. Habitual beer drinkers seem to have no constitutional power to resist disease."

Dr. W. T. Rodenser: "Beer drinkers are very liable to die of pneumonia, and when a confirmed beer drinker takes pneumonia he dies."

Dr. S. S Longran: "Every part of the body of a confirmed beer drinker becomes loaded down with morbid and poisonous matter, and every part will soon fall into ruin and decay."

Dr. J. T. Wood: "Lager beer, if used at all, should be used as a medicine, as lemon, quinine, chinbark and strychnine."

Dr. C. A. Kirkley: "There is no more fruitful source of Bright's disease than beer drinking. The evil effects are not confined to the consumers of the beverage, but are transmitted to their offspring."

"Dr. C. W. Chapman: "I regard beer as harmful as ardent spirits, brandy and whiskey, as it produces fatty degeneration on the heart, liver and kidneys."

Dr. G. A. Collamore: "Beer drinking produces a morbid effect on the heart, lungs, stomach, liver and kidneys. The brain is kept in hypersmic condition which prevents normal oxyhenation or the excretin use of the mental function."

Do not Punish Unjustly.

After all, it is perhaps better that the child should be a little spoiled rather than it should be unjustly punished. The latter sometimes makes a very unhappy memory to carry about with one. A gentleman said a short time ago: "I shall never forget, though I have wished a thousand times that I could, how I punished little Minie for continually pronouncing a word wrong—as I thought wilfully—after I tried hard to make her say it correctly. She was quiet for a few minutes after I had punished her, and then she looked up and said: "Papa you will have to whip me again; I can't say it. You can imagine just how I felt, and how I kept on remembering the look on her face and the tone of the sad, little voice."

Family Fun.

A Smart Answer.

A conversation between two little girls, one French and the other Irish—to the enormous amusement parties in regard to the descendants of the above named race—which was overheard the other day, might be read and pondered upon by some of our American friends with a good deal of profit.

The children, neither of them over seven years of age, had been discussing nationality, and at last, the descendant of St Patrick broke out:

"I am Irish! I am! Irish!

"You you are," quoth the little French maiden.

"No, I ain't" said the other. "But if I am Irish you're French."

"Oh, no," said the French girl, "I am American."

"But I hear your mother talking French to you."

"Oh, you, my mother is French, but I am American."

"Well," said the maid of Erin, turning her nose in the air, "my mother don't talk Irish to me, and your mother talks French to you, so I guess I'm more Amarican than you are."

Country Scenery.

"Are there any objects of special interest in this locality?" asked a party of tourists of an aged rural resident in M scoui. The old man reflected a moment and then said:

"Ain't ben to see Sim Dagg's set o'rigitate, has you? All boys an'——"

"No," hastily interrupted the spokesman of the party, "you don't understand, sa—"

"You'd orter go an' see Bob Paterson's Berkshires shetes; they ain't but three months old and they weigh——"

"We are looking for——"

I do'no, but I gets a leetle bit of a curiosity of my own back here in the shape of a punkin that weighs eighty odd pounds an' is still growin'."

"You don't understand; we are looking for beautiful of nature; choice bits of scenery, etc."

"Oh, scenery. Well, I do'no yit there is any scenery round here, I never hear of it t'ones was. But I tell you them shetes of Bob's is wuth——"

But the tourists had gone on.

Serving an old Friend.

Young man (to editor)—I sent a little poem here yesterday, sir; my name is Waffles.

Editor—Oh, yes; you are a son of Mr. Montague H. Waffles!

Young man—Yes sir.

Editor—Well, I destroyed the poem myself—burned it up, and buried the ashes ran fast deep. Your father, young man (with emphasis), and I were old boyhood friends, and I love him as a brother. Bless his old boy! Tell him what I have done for him.

He "Set 'em up."

Wife (eminently)—It must have been late when you came in last night John, for I didn't go to sleep until 11 o'clock.

Husband (uneasily)—Eh was 11:30, my dear.

Wife—And you kept muttering in your sleep, 'set 'em up, set 'em up.'

Husband—Yes, I was playing tenpins with Brown. I need a little exercise of that sort.

A Jew's Sabbath.

Mr. Isaacstein—I sells you dot coat, my frend, for seventeen tollar; you daks how along.

Customer—I thought, Isaacstein, that you didn't do business on Saturday. Isn't this your Sabbath?

Mr. Isaacstein—Ja; I can ties out for seventeen tollar ras not peesness, dot vas charity.

The Very Worse.

Old Man's Darling (imploringly)—Tell me the worst, dear. Believe me, I can stand it.

Smart Doctor (doubtfully)—I don't know about that. If newer, nerve yourself then, madame. Your husband will get well.

Such is Fame.

Stranger—Don't you know mal I'm Mr. Watkins, the man who has just given $100,000 to the Associated Charities.

Clerk—Don't know you, sir.

Stranger—I also backed Red Guffin in his fight up the Hudson last week.

Clerk (literally)—My dearer, the house is yours. What'll you have?

It Broke the Engagement.

Young Spinkle (referring to the evening being chilly)—You should never drink something that would have been a protection to you, Miss Cross.

Miss Crossall—Yes; I should have thought of that. Ma said there were so many traps around here after dark.

Sizing Her Up.

Mrs. Hard—Do have some icecream, Miss Sweetooth.

Miss Sweetooth (hesitatingly)—Well, just a little, Mrs. Hard. Only mouthful.

Mrs Hard—Bridget. Fill Miss Sweetooth's plate up again.

Logic.

"Ma," remonstrated Bobby, "when I was at Grandma's she let me have two pieces of pie."

"Well, she ought not have done so, Bobby," said his mother. "I think two pieces of pie are too much for little boys. The older you grow, the more wie done you will grow."

Bobby was silenced, but only for a moment. "Why ma," he said, "grandma is a good deal older than you are."

Short Smiles.

"Yes, George," she said, Uncle James is a lawyer, as well as pipe and tobacco fancy."

"Fancy of lawyers, dear," he remarked with a loving smile.

"Yes George, but they are handy for a young lady to have in the family in the event of any wrangling, you know."

Miss Amy—You know everything, Mr. Smith. What does a debonair mean?

Smith (frank)—Debonair? Oh, yes, dah, a "dah;" "oneer," oh never; oh, no!—yes—no—the whole thing means, "never get in debt."

Miss Amy—Thanks, awfully.

Exit Smith for a dictionary. After reading it he sails for Cape Town.

"Mamma, what is 'her jags?'"

"I don't know, dear; why?"

"I heard papa say, "Wait till her jags goe to the country, and we'll paint the town red."

"Who did he say it to, dear?"

"To the new maid."

"Ah!" "Her jags' dear, is the new maid, and papa wouldn't have to wait long before she goes."

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHURCH CANDLES!

—REDUCED—

Beeswax Candles 25 cts For Candlemas.

PATENT WAX AND STERIC ACID CANDLES!

Highly finished as to Quality. Burns clearer than Candles of other Manufacturers.

PURE OLIVE OIL. PURE ALTAR WINE.

Candles ordered now payable after Candlemas, 1880. Being the first to largely introduce all grades and qualities of Candles for Altar use on the Pacific Coast, I feel I have some claims on the patronage of purchasers. My Patent Wax Candle I have introduced for the services of the Forty Hours Devotion. Before ordering from others I would be pleased to have you call and examine my stock and get prices. I will promise to sell all grades of candles from 5 to 10 per cent. cheaper than other manufacturers. My Candles and Olive Oil are blessed on all the Altars on the Pacific Coast, and are endorsed by His Grace Most Rev. Archbishop Riordan, Most Rev. Archbishop Gross, Rt. Rev. Bishop Mora, Rt. Rev. Bishop Manague, Very Rev. N. Congiati, S. J., all the Rev. Clergy, Presidents and Superiors of Colleges and Convents.

The following letter lately received from Rev. J. A. McLaughlin, C. SS. R., is self-explanatory:

Year Candles, 'Pure Wax,' I must state are the best I have seen used anywhere. They were used in all the Missions given by us and my companions in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and Oregon City, and also in the Dioceses of Los Angeles and Nesqually, and gave entire satisfaction not only to us but also to the other clergy. Their burning qualities cannot be excelled if you equalled by candles of any other make which I have seen used. As to the price, this is beyond all doubt very reasonable. I am, Yours Respectfully,

J. A. McLAUGHLIN, C. SS. R.

St. Alph ness' Church, St. Louis, Mo.

This is only one of many similar letters received from the Rev. Clergy on this Coast. Soliciting a continuance of your valued orders, I am, very sincerely,

JOHN A. LENNON

WHOLESALE GROCER AND IMPORTER,

315 and 317 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIXTH YEAR.

With a remarkable beautiful Frontispiece in Gold and Colors.

PRICE, free by mail, 25 CENTS.

Per doz., $2.00; per cent., by mail, $2.25.

THE BEST ILLUSTRATIONS.

Nights.

The New Sunday School Companion.

Contains the Catechism, Doctrines and Prayers for Church, School, and Home; Hymns, and Music; Stories for Children; Information; Illustrations, Beautifully and profusely illustrated.

$2 Cents.—Per 100, $16.00.

Sold by all Catholic Bookstores and Agents.

BENZIGER BROS.,

Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,

—MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF—

Vestments and Church Ornaments,

New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.

ROBERTS & KELLY,

Merchant Tailors,

Have Removed from 101 Market street, to more elegant quarters,

103 THIRD ST.,

Near Bonnet,

Where they would be pleased to meet their farmer friends and patrons.

OPIUM HABIT Positively cured in 10 to 20 days. No Pain, No Exposure. No Sickness. Guaranteed. Treatise (Sealed) Free. Address, DR. WILLIAMS' INDIAN CANCER CURE, Lebanon, Ind.

HUTCHINSON'S BEST MADE GLOVES.

For driving or street wear, made with care from primest Kid, Kid, Reindeer, Buckskin and Dogskin, and warranted to give satisfaction. Ask the manufacturer. Best stores for them will be found in every city and town. Manufactured by Hutchinson, New York.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

506 and 510 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 743.

A LIVE TO SEE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL & Beds, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Barnyard Hands, Gardeners, Chambermaids, and Married Couples for permanent position and market. Also, good reliable Free Help, without any charge to employers. Detailed sitting room for ladies at 506 Clay street.

Alexander Doran,

(SUCCESSOR TO C. BLEASDALE.)

—Dealer In—

STATIONERY, BOOKS, TOYS,

AND—

FANCY GOODS.

A first class assortment of

Prayer Books, Bibles, Crosses, Etc.,

WILL ALWAYS BE FOUND HERE

AND AT NEW YORK PRICES.

Please Call and Examine Our Stock.

S. W. Cor. Mission & 16th St.

RAILROADS.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

"THE PEASANT DRAWS GOLDEN RIVER."

COMMENCING SUNDAY, APRIL 4, 1880, AND until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave Broadway Wharf, San Francisco:

Leave S. F.	Destination	Arrive S. F.
8:00 a. m.	Petaluma, and Santa Rosa.	5:15 p. m.
3:30 p. m.	Petaluma.	10:30 a. m.
3:30 p. m.	Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville, Cloverdale.	5:15 p. m.
7:45 a. m.	Point Reyes.	5:15 p. m.
3:30 p. m.	Point Reyes, Cloverdale and Way Stations.	10:30 a. m.

7:00 a. m. 8:00 a. m. Guerneville. 5:15 p. m. 6:00 p. m.

7:00 a. m. 8:00 a. m. Duncans Mills, Intermediate Points. 3:30 p. m. 6:00 p. m.

8:00 A. M. (Sundays only) from Tiburon Ferry (foot of Tiburon Ferry, Sausalito, Cloverdale, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville, Cloverdale and Way Stations.

RETURNING.

8:00 A. M. (Sundays only) from Tiburon Ferry (foot of Tiburon Ferry, Sausalito, Cloverdale, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville, Cloverdale and Way Stations.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

8.00 A. M. (Sundays only) from Tiburon Ferry (foot of Tiburon Ferry, Sausalito, Cloverdale, Healdsburg, Lytton, Geyserville, Cloverdale and Way Stations.

R. C. WHITING, General Superintendent. PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt.

Ticket offices at Ferry, 222 Montgomery street and 78 Market street.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROAD

5.00 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) from Tiburon Ferry for the towns of Sonoma, Glen Ellen and Way Stations. Returning leave Glen Ellen at 7:00 A. M.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

8.00 A. M. (Sundays only) from Tiburon Ferry for the Towns of Sonoma, Glen Ellen and way stations. Returning leave Sonoma at 3:30 P. M. Round Trip Tickets to Sonoma, $1.00; to Glen Ellen, $1.50.

R. C. WHITING, General Superintendent. PETER J. MCGLYNN, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agt.

Ticket offices at Ferry, 222 Montgomery street and 78 Market street.

QUICK TIME

AND CHEAPEST FARE

To Eastern and European Cities

via the Great Trans-continental All-rail Route

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

(Pacific System.)

Only Express Trains make prompt connections with the several Railway Lines in the East.

CONNECTS AT

New York & New Orleans

with the several Steamer Lines

TO ALL EUROPEAN PORTS.

PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS

—ARE—

TOURIST'S SLEEPING CARS

Attached to Overland Express Trains No additional charge for Berths in Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Tickets sold, Sleeping car Berths secured, and every information given upon apply then at the Company's Offices, where passengers waiting in person can secure choice of rooms, etc.

RAILROAD LANDS

For Sale on Reasonable Terms.

Apply by, or address,

W. S. MILLS, Land Agent, San Antonio, Texas. JEROME MADDEN, Land Agent, 1 Market St., S. F.

GEO. H. ANDREWS, Land Commissioner, G. H. & N. R. R., San Antonio, Texas.

A. N. TOWNE, General Manager. T. H. GOODMAN, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt.

San Francisco, Cal.

CATHOLIC

MORTUARY CARDS.

Beautiful Catholic Designed

MEMORIAL CARDS,

Both Plain and Illuminated Styles,

Printed in the Neatest and Cheapest Manner by

McCORMICK BROS.,

410 Sansome Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JAS. SCHEIBLI,

Having Enlarged His Store, has laid in an entire new stock of Foreign : and : Domestic : Suitings.

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

539 Clay Street, 539

LA GRANDE LAUNDRY,

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

17 POWELL STREET,

BRANCH,

1150 MARKET ST.

LAUNDRY.

(Rch St. bet. Folsom and Howard S. F. Cal

A. T. KENNA. T. PURCELL.

McKENNA & PURCELL,

Hay, Grain and Commission

MERCHANTS.

Consignments Solicited.

Shipping Orders a Specialty.

214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

—Importers and Dealers in—

BOOK, NEWS,

WRITING AND WRAPPING

PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

—MANUFACTURERS OF—

Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.

516 to 516 Sacramento and 519 Commercial Sts., S. F.

Adjustable and Common Dress Forms.

Paper Mache Busts

FOR SALE.

The Highest Prize Medal was awarded to these goods, and perfect satisfaction guaranteed.

224 Stockton St

SAN FRANCISCO

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

PIANOS

GAINED THE PREMIUM for greatest number of first premiums, including Centennial Medal, over all competitors, at all fairs, and wonderful power of tone, elegance of finish, and adaptability to climate, combined with the most substantial and durable construction, endorsed by Eminent Musicians, Teachers, and Purchasers, as the best and most reliable piano. Also, a full assortment of other pianos, including upright pianos, three strings, full iron frame, and all the latest improvements, at prices lower than the lowest, for cash or on easy payments. Also, Estey Organs, the best in the world. Illustrated catalogue free. Address, HEALY & CAMPBELL, Sole Agents, 628 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

KNABE

PIANOS.

Unequalled by and Emphatically the Best Piano in the World.

A. L. BANCROFT & CO., 121 Post St., S. F.

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

EDUCATIONAL.

HEALD'S

BUSINESS COLLEGE.

24 Post St., San Francisco.

Incorporated by Act of Legislature. Instructions in Business, Penmanship, Drawing, Telegraphy, Shorthand and Typewriting. Business Men supplied with competent Book-keepers, Penmen, Telegraphers, Stenographers and Typewriters. Circulars sent free. Address as above.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA..... CALIFORNIA

This Institution, which was founded in 1851, and in 1855 invested with the privileges of a University, is situated in large buildings, with extensive shady play-grounds, covered gymnasium, recreation hall, and Observatory, now complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has, also, practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Civil Engineering, Mechanics, Drawing, and Music. For the latter a new building 100x40 has just been finished, that leaves nothing to be desired.

Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Diplomas in the Commercial Department.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-annually in advance):

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once..... $ 15 00

Board, Lodging, Washing and Mending Bed and Bedding, per quarter..... 100 00

School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicines, Baths, etc., per session of ten months..... 50 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 219 Hayes street, San Francisco.

REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J.,

Feb 28 1880 ly. President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

SAN JOSE ..... CALIFORNIA.

This institution offering the solid advantages to young ladies wishing to receive a solid and refined education, was founded in 1851, it was incorporated by the State Legislature, and subsequently, the course of study was extended to the Collegiate order of the rights and privileges of Collegiate Institutions.

It occupies large buildings, with extensive grounds, and possesses every thing to make Science tasteful, attractive. The course of instruction is thorough, in all the Departments. The facility for acquiring the Spanish Language may find it desirable to devote their whole attention to it, and they will do so.

The architectural super logies of the first Monday in August, and ends the last day of June. Pupils are received at any period of the year.

TERMS:

Per quarter, (payable in advance)

Boarding, Tuition in English, French, and Music, Bed and Bedding, Washing and Mending..... $ 75 00

Drawing..... 5 00

Painting in Water Colors..... 5 00

Painting in Oil Colors..... 5 00

Vocal and Instrumental Music form extra charges.

For Circulars, address,

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

ST. CERTRUDE'S ACADEMY.

RIO VISTA, SOLANO CO., CAL.

THIS ACADEMY FOR YOUNG LADIES, UNDER the charge of the Sisters of Charity, is pleasantly situated on an eminence in the picturesque and healthful town of Rio Vista, Sacramento River, Solano County, California, and is conducted under the immediate care of the Sisters, who have charge of the boarding department of the Academy. The healthful variety, Purity of air permanent will be found equal to any in the Sacramento Valley. Pupils received at any time during the term, and will be charged only from date of entrance.

The academic year is divided into two sessions of five months each, the first commencing about the first of August, and the second about the first of January.

Terms per Session, Payable in Advance.

Board and Tuition, also use of bedding	$125 00
Washing, per month	1 50
Fuel, Water (private rooms)	10 00
Dancing in class (teaching Polite Manners)	10 00
Use of Piano, per month (for practice)	1 00

Terms per month in advance:

Junior Class	$ 8 00
Intermediate Class	7 50
Senior Class	10 00
Music, Piano lessons, with use of instrument	10 00
Music, Piano lessons, without use of instrument	8 00

Music lessons are required for pupils in boarding, also use of instrument.

Pupils will be received at any time during the term, and will be charged only from date of entrance.

The academic year is divided into two sessions of five months each, the first commencing about the first of August, and the second about the first of January.

For Circulars, address,

SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY,

Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.

SACRAMENTO, - - CALIFORNIA.

Conducted by the Sisters of Mercy

TERMS

(Payment Monthly in advance):

Board and Tuition, per quarter..... $ 62 50

Washing..... 15 00

Music (Piano) and Instrumental Drawing, Painting and Vocal Music form a form extra charge.

MT. ST. MARY'S,

GRASS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION (CONDUCTED UNDER THE Care of Nuns, is amply incorporated, and empowered to confer Diplomas, Medals, and other marks of distinction, the first of which opens August 30th, and the second on the 1st of Monday in January. Its Course of Studies and Instruction is the same as that in Mount St. Mary's Academy, San Francisco, in Jesus.

Pupils are received at any time, their compensation dated from the date of their entrance.

TERMS—TERMS OF ADMISSION

Entrance Fee (once only)..... $10 00

Boarding, per month..... 25 00

Washing, per month..... 2 50

Music and Drawing, per month..... 2 00

Painting, per month..... 2 00

Vocal Music, per month..... 1 00

Bed and Bedding, per month..... 2 00

Fuel, per month..... 1 00

Physician's Fee (in case of sickness).

For particulars address the Lady Superior at the Convent of Mount St. Mary's, Grass Valley, Nevada Co., Cal.

ST. MARY'S

Of the Holy Rosary

ACADEMY

Woodland, Yolo Co., Cal.

The Academic Course is Thorough in all its grades.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

and VOICE CULTURE

—ALSO—

DRAWING AND PAINTING,

Beside Particular Attention

Phonography, Type-Writing and Book-Keeping taught.

The health, morals and comfort of the pupils have the most careful attention. Send for Circular and Catalogue.

SISTERS OF THE HOLY CROSS,

WOODLAND, YOLO CO., CAL.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools.

Offers Every Facility for Acquiring a Thorough Knowledge of the Latin, French, Spanish, Italian, German, Greek, Hebrew, Elocution, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Astronomy, Mineralogy, Botany, Geology, Civil and Ecclesiastical History, Bookkeeping, Surveying, Navigation, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing, Painting, Etc., Etc.

The Commercial course has been made with a view to the requirements of those who wish to enter practical business life at an early age.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and corrected in the class room.

TERMS:

(Payments, invariably in advance.)

Board, Tuition, Medical Attendance, Bed Linen, Washing and Mending..... $150

Bed, Bedding, Washing and Mending..... 50

Use of Piano..... 50

Extra Charges for Music and Drawing.

REV. BROTHER, President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.

(Incorporated by the Sisters of Notre Dame)

This institution, founded in 1868, chartered in 1878 by Act of Legislature of the State of California, and incorporated with the University of California, will open its new street, opposite the Old Mission Church, on the 1st of August, 1880, with a full corps of teachers necessary to the acquisition of a solid and refined education.

TERMS:

Tuition, Board, Washing and Bedding, per month..... $ 25 00

Use of Piano, with use of Instrument per month 2 00

Vocal Music, Private Lessons..... 2 00

Drawing, per month..... 2 00

Painting in Water Colors, per month..... 2 00

Painting in Oil Colors..... 2 00

Vocation equal at the College.

Physician's Fee (in case of sickness).

For particulars address the Lady Superior at the Convent of Mount St. Mary's, Oakland, Cal. For other particulars, apply to the Superior.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY.

A Select Boarding School.

Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools.

Fruit and Jackson Sts., OAKLAND, CAL.

This institution is a select boarding school for boys up to the age of fifteen years. It aims to be similar to the comforts and adjuncts of home, with the advantages of a superior Christian education.

The mild and practical discipline of sending them out to attend to boarding school, and only with their parents, or guardians, that the institution properly is a home, and that the children feel it to be such.

Substantiated by the Ladies, Bedding, Washing and Mending, Bed and Bedding, Washing and Mending, Use of Piano, Drawing and Painting, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Use of Piano, Drawing and Painting, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Use of Piano, Drawing and Painting, Vocal and Instrumental Music

PROTESTANT HOME RULERS.

Letter from Mr. Gladstone

At a recent public meeting in Dublin, under the auspices of the Protestant Home Rule Association, letters were read from Mr. W. E. Gladstone and Mr. J. Morley.

Mr. Gladstone wrote:—"I have been assured by competent authority that the number of Protestants in Ireland in favor of Home Rule is greater than the number of Catholics opposed to it. When the people of England and Scotland are satisfied that more than three-fourths of the people of Ireland desire Home Rule, much of the hesitation, due to misrepresentation on this point, will disappear, and the cause will thus be greatly strengthened. I saw with pain that on the late visit of Lord Hartington to Belfast, a number of Protestants assembled to upbraid everything that their grandfathers condemned, and to condemn everything their grandfathers applauded. No town was more devoted a century ago to the sentiment of Irish Nationality. It may even have pushed that noble sentiment to excess. But now a large part of the inhabitants want to support Lord Hartington, who holds that Irishmen are not entitled even to commercial liberties except on condition of abandoning the idea of Nationality. I hope that as you have properly chosen this time to bring together at a meeting in Dublin the Irish Protestants favorable to Home Rule, the meeting may receive large and cordial support, and that it may be seen that there are multitudes of earnest and decided Protestants in Ireland who are true enemies of bigotry and misrepresentations to the traditions of their fathers."

Mr. Morley wrote:—"I am glad to know that you have a meeting to-morrow, and to have that your action is not discouraged by the dalier in setting the great question between England and Ireland, on, on this side, are satisfied with the progress which is every day being made in English opinion. If Ireland continues to exhibit her present patience and resolutely to maintain her just demand, nobody here doubts the result."

Mr. Childers, M. P., wrote:—"I should have been especially glad to be associated with a body so representative of your body is, and to hear myself the refutation of the assertion so often made by our opponents that no support is given to Home Rule by the Protestant Irish."

The speakers included Mr. Pierce Mahony, M. P.; Thomas A. Dickson, M. P.; James A. Pinkerton, M. P. (cousin); J. C. Stevenson, M. P. (South Shields); and Swift M'Neill, M. P.

Amongst the resolutions passed was one declaring that inasmuch as the premises of Irish land was pre-eminently an Irish question, and can not be effected at the risk of the Irish people alone, without entailing responsibility upon them tax payers of Great Britain, we are strongly of opinion that the London tax of the future should be collected, not in the English treasury, but by local authorities only to a Parliament of the Irish people.

The Church in England.

The London correspondent of the N. Y. Freeman's Journal speaking of the Church in England says:—I think it is not generally known that there are between three and four hundred Catholic churches and chapels in this city and suburbs, where perhaps over half a million of the faithful worship. A Jesuit Father of London with whom I was speaking on this subject gave me to understand that it was impossible to arrive at anything like the exact figures, but that half a million was the ordinary estimate. Of course this wonderful increase in the number of Catholics living in London and other large English cities is principally due to the influx of Irish workingmen and their numerous families. There are some convertcions among the English upper classes; very few indeed among the middle and lower classes. Still, when the world ever gives for the name of being that is the least resembles a genuine return to the faith. Certain prejudices against the Church have died out. Cath olics can even now have a yearly and public pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Edward the Confessor, which was closed against them two hundred years ago. But for all this there is still a great deal of secret bitterness shown towards converts by their relatives and friends. They are cut socially, and often have to suffer severe loss by being disinherited. Under such circumstances it is only the true vocation of God that can come into the Fold. How many must see the truth, but are deterred from embracing it by the thought of the hardships they await them!

Cardinal Howard's Condition.

Cardinal Howard has been removed for the winter to a private asylum near Bright

—He has been quite insane now for nearly a year, though at first he had frequent lucid intervals, in which his grief and despair are said to have been highly pathetic. He is now or ay all the while, says a recent dispatch, and the cerebral affection is hopeless. He still looks the picture of health, and, save for a wild glance in the eyes. His manse almost steadily in his chair. He is captain in the Horse Guards, which he was before he took orders, and his language now is much better adapted to the manner than to the manse. He is very watchful though, about his clothes, and insists on maintaining a cardinal's dress throughout, even to the red stockings and the red berretta, which he wears but on the side of his head, like an officer's forage cap.

The Next Consistory.

At the coming December Consistory in the Vatican the Pope will create a number of new Cardinals. Those already announced to be lifted to this dignity are Dr. Kremenitz, Archbishop of Cologne; Mgrs. Tonnos and Melignan, Archbishops of Tours and Rouen; Mgr. Dunwel, Archbishop of Catania; Mgr. Macchi, Nuncio of the Vatican; and Mgr. Annibale, the Assessor of the Holy Office. There is talk also that has been for years back, of the inclusion of Archbishop Williams of Boston in this list, but nothing definite seems to be known about it. The Archbishop of Paris would have been included, it is said, but the French Government objected. The relations between the Vatican and the Paris authorities are worse now than for a long time back, owing to the appointment of Boulanger activist in the Moniteur de Rome concerning which the Le Phogaro sharply scolded the Papal Legate.

THE CATHOLIC ROME ALMANAC.

We are indebted to Messrs. Sadlier Bros. of New York for copies of their ever-welcome Catholic Almanac, well known to our readers as the Catholic Almanac. Notwithstanding this is the 6th year of publication, and we must say that among the numerous Catholic Almanacs published on this continent, the Catholic Home Almanac is the best, and the most reliable. The work costs only 50cts., and there are many books published at $1.00 that do not contain as much interesting reading as this beautifully illustrated Catholic Almanac for the coming year.

To the Poor.—A Person cured of Deafness and noises in the head of 28 years' standing by a simple remedy, will send a description of it free to any Person who applies to NICHOLSON, 177 Smithtown St., New York.

—The Redemptorist Fathers McLaughlin and O'Ries are giving missions in Montana.

TELEGRAPHIC TICKS.

News of the World in Condensed Form.

—Mrs. Jay Gould is dangerously ill.

—Dr. Hostetter, the famous bitters man, is dead. He was aged sixty-nine years.

—Mr. Chamberlain has arrived in the United States to marry Miss Endicott.

—New York city has 427 miles of street sewers.

—During the present year 19,458 persons have been naturalized in New York.

—Will Barber, Register of Deeds at Lakota, D. T., has gone to Canada. His shortage is $10,000.

—A large measure has been work in a cold storm at Lincoln and sixty persons were blinded.

—Henry Blake, now Governor of Newfoundland, has been appointed Governor of Queensland.

—Mrs. Judge Hirsch of Navarro county, Texas, gave birth to six children on the 4th ternon of Saturday, November 3d.

—The Vermont Legislature has passed a bill prohibiting the sale, manufacture and use of oleomargarine in that State.

—The discovery of a wonderful waterfall, said to rival the Niagara in beauty, is reported in Colorado.

—A Sunday school Superintendent in Jersey city has organized a brass band as a drawing attraction.

—Montana's population is estimated by the Governor at 140,000, an increase of 10,000 over last year.

—The Indians in the United States still can more land than there is in France or in the whole German Empire.

—It is estimated that there are 200,000 sex lights in use in the United States and 1,000,000 incandescent lamps.

—Colored gold in Christendom is not very ancient. It is only about four centuries old, being first coined in 1320.

—Two little pet dogs wearing sealskin blankets, attracted attention on Broadway, New York, one day last week.

—In the ten years ending with 1880 the wheat area of the United States spanned a per a little under 19,000,000 acres to nearly 38,000,000 acres.

—A reservoir at Montrose, on Lake Geneva, burst Tuesday, injuring several persons and drowning many. Seven bodies have been recovered.

—A dispatch from Melbourne announces that a fire yesterday destroyed a whole block of buildings at Broken Hill, causing a loss of $100,000.

—Russia evidently intends to stand by ex-Queen Natalie. Should the divorce case trouble and Austria occupy Servia, Russia will occupy Bulgaria.

—Mr. Gladstone has recommenced his annual recreation of tree felling. He prefers to cut oak, and leaves the gymnoceu for younger hands.

—Bananas are in competition with Cupid to some extent. A German officer can not marry an American lady without the consent of the Chancellor.

—A collision on the Brooklyn Elevated Road last evening threatened many people with death. Both locomotives were smashed. No one, fortunately, was seriously injured.

—Private advices from St. Petersburg say the Czar was injured in several places in the recent accident to his train and that he is suffering from severe pains in his chest and legs.

—The French Parliamentary Committee appointed to consider a revision of the Constitution has decided by a vote of 6 to 4 in favor of a revision by a constituent Assembly Constituent Assembly.

—The English Coroner's Commission has made a report. It advocates the cooperation of England with the United States, Germany and the Cape Colony, to secure the —Living in India seems to be attended with difficulties. According to the latest official returns, 24,841 persons were killed by wild beasts in that country last year, and 1,000 were killed by snake bites.

—A resident of the northern part of Maine has kept a record of the weather for twenty-five years, and he claims that there have been only thirty-three days when neither rain nor snow fell.

—The name of the White House is derived from the fact of its Virginian architect, which it is built, being painted white to conceal the discoloration caused by smoke and weather.

It is estimated that there are five American cities who are worth $200,000,000 each, worth $100,000,000 each, 100 worth $5,000,000 each, 200 worth $2,000,000 each, 500 worth $1,000,000 each and 1,000 worth $500,000 each.

—The Queensland Parliament has come to a decision in regard to the Chinese bill in accordance with the Sydney conference. The clause relating to the imprisonment for life of Chinese illegally entering the colony is reserved for royal assent.

—A dynamite bomb was exploded in the Regatta office in the Bay of Santa Cruz, Tuesday evening. Another bomb was exploded in the lighting office in the Horse Guards, which the war office has not yet made public, but no one was hurt.

—Most of the clubs in Philadelphia had private wires introduced into their clubhouses and a special operator employed to speak night in order that the members might receive the returns of the great contest at the earliest possible moment.

—Lord Shrewsbury, the English Peer who has made a fortune in London by supplying the public with Hansom cabs, is about to visit the United States. He will place 200 cabs, drawn by English horses, in the Pacific Capital.

—A woman who applied for renewal of her license to keep a public house in Stockton, England, was opposed by the local vicar on the ground that his congregation would be lessened thereby, and that it would have "a deterimental effect on the church offerings."

—There is only one Murchison in the New York directory. His name is Kenneth M., and he is a merchant in Wall street. The only Murchison known to be living in California, hails from Tuscarora, and his name is not in the directory. The name is not common but it is well known, and will not be forgotten.

—The Viceroy of Canton has memorialized the Emperor declaring Corea to be the greatest menace to the peace and prosperity of the empire. He says it has burned up $10,000,000 worth of property, and is a greater peat than opium. He wants the stuff banished from the empire.

—The final surveys for the proposed Nicaragua Canal, says the Guatemala Star, are now completed. Members of the surveying party allege that the result of their work is most satisfactory, and exceeds the anticipations of the company. It is expected that the work of excavation will begin next December.

—A collision on the Brooklyn Elevated Road last evening threatened many people with death. Both locomotives were smashed. No one, fortunately, was seriously injured.

—Private advices from St. Petersburg say the Czar was injured in several places in the recent accident to his train and that he is suffering from severe pains in his chest and legs.

—The French Parliamentary Committee appointed to consider a revision of the Constitution has decided by a vote of 6 to 4 in favor of a revision by a constituent Assembly Constituent Assembly.

—The English Coroner's Commission has made a report. It advocates the cooperation of England with the United States, Germany and the Cape Colony, to secure the

Poetry.

THREE NEW FLOWERS FROM THE GARDEN OF ST. IGNATIUS.

3.—ST ALPHONSUS RODRIGUEZ HUMILITY'S VIOLET.

Deep in earthly verdure set,—
With the sky of Heaven wet,—
Blooms the meek-eyed violet.

Lowly blooms! born to be
Joy and fitting type of thee,
Flower of sweet humility!

In Religion's garden, too,
Thou a sweet self-violet grew,—
Violet purple, yet true.

Of the lowly grace that hides
Where no flaunting bloom abides,—
Where its blast scorns guides

Loving haste and eager feet
From the highway's glare and heat,
To be calm seclusion sweet.

Once, where lollers was renown
For their busy Spanish town
Angels gazed in fondness down.

Ah! so marvel! true, I ween,
That those how lily eyes serene
Smiled, thus, on the busy scene.

For within the restless heart
Of the therapist and holy mart
Grew Love's violet, lone, apart,

In its sweet, celestial grace,
From the Spanish-polished race
Crowding street, and market-place.

But the dread Destroyer sought Ever that lowly bloom, and brought Sorrow's blasts, with anguish fraught.

Yet a benison is Death—
Through the chill, and fatal breath
Fondest tender sindreath.

For it wafts that blossom rare
To its pure, congenial air
In Jagalia's golden fair.

There in sweetest verdure set,
With the dews of Heaven wet,—
Delight grow for ever!

But ere there it could not break
Lofty place,—in lowliest seek Endeed, fitment root it took.

Yet onto its calm retreat
Balmy breath of grace sweet
Led the pilgrim's super feet.

Meek Alphonsus! hidden, lone,
By the worldly throng unknown,—
Upward to thy Maker's throne,

Rose thy life's serene rare—
Strenuous thy deep brightness fair
Swiftly through skies Eden's air.

Till, from out our earthly gloom
Angels bore thy rifened bloom,
With the wealth of rich perfume,

To the fields of Infinite light
Where His fairest blossoms bright
Bloom within the Master's sight.

There the violet's charms unalone,
Where the stainless lily gloms
Near the rich heart of the rose.

And the lowly blossom's name,—
Ripened with light of Infinite fame,—
Mortals greet with fond acclaim.

Saintly flower! whose beauty twines
With the Shepherd's crown of fairest
Newly, o'er Religion's shrines.

While, before those altars bright
Plead we for the lily's white,
And Love's bloom of rosy light.

By the charm that drowsy thee
Fadeless may our garland be,
Violet of humility!

San Francisco.

YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE.

—Death Roll: Assessment No. 11 is now delinquent in many Institutes.

—Vermont has just formed Y. M. I. 101 Good for the Green Mountain State!

—The first public appointment of Institute No. 50 will take place at Irving Hall, Post street, on evening of the 25th inst.

—Institute No. 60 Nevada Ridge, will celebrate its Anniversary by a grand ball on Thanksgiving Day.

—At No. 50's entertainment, which takes place on the 23rd inst, the Athenæum Dramatic Society will present a farce entitled "Thank Goodness the Table is spread." Mr. J. J. Healy will charge the stage.

—Brother McIntyre of No. 99, (Cincinnati), reports that organization is a most flourishing society with a membership of 100 members. He proposed it have disappeared in the face of energetic work. At a recent meeting $60 was subscribed towards permanent improvements.

—President Ford, of No. 100, at the last meeting announced that he had received letters from Hon. T. H. Kinkead, of Omaha; Counsel C. J. Finckett, Boston, and Michael T. Gibbons, of Philadelphia, in response to the formation of Institutes in those places.

SOCIETY AFFAIRS IN SAN BERNARDINO.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir.—As political times are over, we already is satisfied that the country is safe, there does not come to be given to the workingmen of the U. S. throughout the State and Nation. The Boys of No. 27 are now preparing to get down to work and alien 3; a grand posh frowed. Every member has constituted himself a committee of one, to induce Catholic young men to join, and it is believed that they will meet with great success.

On account of the great excitement over the election, No. 27 did not meet on last Wednesday night. A meeting will be held Wednesday, Nov. 14.

Bro. Cause, of Los Angeles a member of No. 31 was in the city of San Bernardino last week.

Bro Dias of No. 27 is once more around and looks well after his long confinement.

The Young Ladies and gentlemen's Catholic Social Club, will hold their regular meeting in the Y M I Parlors, on Tuesday evening next.

HERMAN.

YOUNG IRELAND PARLIAMENTARY CLUB.

Some last week the Y. I. P. Club has collected the sum of $95 towards the Parnell Defense Fund. The total amount collected approximates to $1,000. Of this sum $1000 has already been forwarded. President Sullivan-ole at the last meeting appointed Thomas Bannerman, J. J. Healy, and Patrick Ryan, as a committee to make resolutions in memory of John Kavanagh, a late member of the club, who died on October 20th.

It was decided by a unanimous vote of the club to hold semi-monthly dramatic readings and debates, with members and others will take part. D. Cassidy, T. H. Bannerman and M. Malady were appointed by the President to make the necessary arrangements for the library committee.

The meeting closed with a stirring patriotic address from Col. J. J. Tobin.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

Armagh.—At the election of Town Commissioners for Lurgan, on October 5th, Messrs. J. Gilchrist, H. McKee, J. Campbell, A. Stevenson and J. Mathews, the four candidates of the Constitutional Association, were chosen. The only other candidate was Mr. J. F. Mathews.

Antrim.—The Lord Lieutenant went to Belfast on October 11th, and performed the ceremony of opening the new Free Public Library and Museum, and afterwards attended a public banquet. He took advantage of the occasion to inform the citizens that the Queen had been pleased to confer the character of a city on Belfast, but forgot to mention that this privilege was mainly owing to the exertions of the Nationalist Member for West Belfast, Mr. Sexton.

Clare.—At Kilrush, on Tuesday, Oct. 16th County Court Judge Kelly announced that there being no criminal business to be tried Quarter Sessions the Grand Jury need not be sworn, nor need the jurors attend.

Cork.—The interesting ceremony of a young lady taking the white veil took place at the Convent, Passage West, on October 16th, when Miss Ellen O'Callaghan, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Daniel O'Callaghan, of Rathmore Farm, Barnaheise, assumed upon the religious life as Sister Mary Michael.

Another convicted prisoner, Mr. Gainey, of Fermoy, has been released from the County Cork Jail.

The Irish Municipal Elections have very generally resulted in a victory for the Nationalist candidates. Some contests between the two political parties took place. The popular candidate was returned without a Kinsale. In Fermoy the contest lay entirely between Nationalists, and the Town town elections created greatest interest on account of the different opinions as to the politics of the candidates. Messrs Long, Fitzgerald, Kinsman, Farrell and Lombard were returned, the-two who, whatever may be their opinions on other Nationalist questions, are publicly pledged as Nationalists

Derry.—On the evening of October 18th a banquet was given in Derry, to the Town commissioners who have so ably stood between the poor tenants of Greenfort and their rack-renting landlords in a fair adjudication of the spirit of the Ninth Parliament Bill. Paddies and his two comrades, the Lord Lieutenant and Mr. Blake, M. P., will deserve the compliment where their Nationalist friends in Derry have paid them. Such men cannot be kept down, nor bought by their enemy either in the north or south.

At noon, on Friday, October 19th, Father McFadden left Derry by train, for Ballykelly. During the morning he was visited by Mr. Jeanie McFarlan, M. P., and a number of clergymen and friends who had attended the banquet on the previous evening. On leaving the hotel Father McFadden, Father Stephens and Mr. Blake were handsomely received by a considerable crowd who accompanied them to the tremendous cheering. Horses were accompanied to Letterkenny by Mr. Hazel Sheehy, M P., Michael McCartan, M. P., Mr. Thomas O'Hanlon, M. P., Mrs. Anna Parnell, Cambridge, Mr. James Halliday, Hampstead, Mr. Jeremiah McVeagh, Belfast, and a large number of clergymen. At the various stations en route large crowds were gathered, and at Letterkenny upwards of 5,000 people were assembled, including the bands. In the evening another banquet was given, at which Bishop O'Donnell was present. Letters were read, reported speech in defence of the Irish prisoners and other patriotic sentiments. Speeches also took place afterwards, and the town was illuminated.

Donegal.—The election of Town Commissioners took place on October 15th, in Letterkenny, with the following result:—Mr. Michael Doherty (Nationalist), 58 votes, Mr. Hugh D. C. Fullerton, 57, Mr. P. Carroll (Tory), 47, and Mr. Hector Boyd, 46. The three first named, who were the outgoing Commissioners, were declared duly elected.

Dublin.—Among the solicitors who attended the end of the Michaelmas Term sittings which has just concluded, we notice the name of Thomas J. Healy, Belfast, Messrs T. M. and Maurice Healy, M P., Tim Healy, Belfast, and Mr. Joseph Kelly, selected by Mr. Harrington, M P., for the Kilkenny Independent Parliamentary Vacancy, and also exceptional knowledge of the intricate law relating to succession in Ireland is to be attributed the large number of Nationalists who are joined in one of the Dublin wards. Mr. Healy intends to contest the Kilkenny town of Wexford, where, it is needless to say, we wish him every success.

Down.—Great excitement prevailed in Bangor, on Tuesday morning, Oct. 16th, when it became known that the dead body of Miss Hamilton, daughter of proprietress of the Harbour Hotel, had been discovered in a stable at the rear of the hotel, suspended by a rope round the neck from a beam resting on two of the partitions in the stable. The coroner was held, when a verdict of suicide was returned, adding under temporary insanity was returned.

Galway.—Mr. William Kirwan has resigned the Mayoralty as Manager of the National Bank, Tuam.

Hubert Sutchwell, Esq., Cregge, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the County Galway, and becomes an ex-officio Guardian of Glenamaddy Union.

Rev John Cunningham, C. A. Loughrea, has been appointed by the Bishop of Clonfert, successor to the late Rev. Richard Ireland, P. P. Kilconieron.

On the 19th October, the ceremonies of Reception and Profession took place at the Presentation Convent, Loughrea, when the young lady, who had the happiness of being received was Miss Margaret Cunningham, youngest daughter of Don Miguel Cunningham, Esq. Gurteen, Ballinasloe. We pray to God for her same Sister Mary Alphonsus. The young lady who was professed, after completing her Novitiate, was Miss Lizzie Josephine Wilson, third daughter of Patrick Wilson, Esq., Dunsleitnan House, County Dublin, called in religion Sister Mary Ita Joseph.

Kildare.—The following was the result of the election, on Oct. 15th, for Town Commissioners, in Naas—H. Donohoe, 96, J. Bermingham (sitting), 83, R. Wheeler, 80, Wm. Staples (sitting), 56, R. Fowler, (sitting), 42, P. J. Duncan, 41. The first three were declared elected. In Newbridge the result was—Mr. Joseph Farrell (sitting) and Nationalist, 81, J. Quinn (N), 78, T. Toomey, (N), 58, J. Coogan, (N) 24 The first three were declared elected.

Kilkenny.—Mr. Thomas Quinn, M P., for Kilkenny, is seriously ill in London.

The death is announced, on Oct. 16th, at Castle Cor, Castle Eagle Hill, Ballinasloe, after a brief illness, of William Delaney, aged 80 years, who, for 50 years, was a well regarded. His interment took place on the 19th, at Fuhlestown cemetery.

Leitrim.—A number of evictions have taken place on the estate of Mr. Henry Wynne, of Ballinamore, County Leitrim. Five tenants were put out.

Limerick.—On Tuesday, October 16th, Cornelius Lynch and Patrick Farrell opened the Gaelic Athletic Sports at Limerick. The attendance of the gay, fairy on the pleasurable state of the city, this being the third meeting held in Limerick this year, betokening the peaceful state of Limerick. This was marvellous story

Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE,
556 Kearny St., Tuesday Evening, Nov. 13, 1888.

WHEAT—No. 1	1 00@1 07½
Feed	1 00@1 07½
Cornmeal	2 50@ [illegible]
Rye	1 17½@1 20
Barley, feed	90@ [illegible]
Barley, Brewing	1 00@1 05
Hinckel Barley, P ctl	1 00@1 05
Middlings	17 00@20 00
Bran, P ton	15 00@16 00
Hay	11 00@14 00
Hay, wheat	11 00@14 00
Potatoes—
Burbanks, P lb wholesale	1½@1½
Buckeye, P sack	1 00@1 10
Onions, P ctl	1 25@1 35
Young Hoosiers	1 50@1 60
Red Rockers	1 00@1 10
Eggs—
Choice, P doz	30@35
Butter—
Choice fresh roll	30@32½
Fancy	35@37½
Pickle	20@25
Cheese—
Domestic	11@11½
Eastern	12@13
Honey—
Wheat	11 50@13 50
Wood—
Wood, Southern Coast	7 50@ [illegible]
Sal Joaquin	7 50@ [illegible]
Humboldt	13@17
Meat—
Beef, on foots	3@3½
Mutton, wholesale	6@6½
Mutton, retail	8@10
Pork, wholesale, dressed	8@9
Pork, retail, dressed	9@10
California Hams	13@13½
Eastern Hams	13@13½
Lard, P lb wholesale in bulk	9@9½
Wool, P lb—
Fine, white	2 20@2 50
Fine, foxy	1 50@1 75
Tunnels, P ton	8@11 00
Fine, Valley, California	12@14
Fine, Mountain	12@14
Hops, Pacific Coast	6@8
Tallow, P lb	3½@4
Hides—
Stocks	6
Cowhide	1 00@1 25
Calf	1 00@1 25
Steers	1 00@1 25
Horse—
Large, P bale	3 50@4
Wax, P lb	25@27
Hops—
Crop of 1888	8@11
Crop of 1887	5@7
Crop of 1886	3@4
Crop of 1885	1½@2
Crop of 1884	1½@2
Crop of 1883	1½@2
Hops, Pacific Coast	6@8
Hops—
Crop of 1888	8@11
Crop of 1887	5@7
Crop of 1886	3@4
Crop of 1885	1½@2
Crop of 1884	1½@2
Crop of 1883	1½@2
Hops, Pacific Coast	6@8

MARRIED.

[illegible]

DIED.

[illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS.

FULL WEIGHT PURE
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE
Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Endorsed by the Heads of the Chemical Depts. of Washington, Yale, and most leading Universities. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Ammonia, Lime, or Alum. Sold only in cans. PRICE BAKING POWDER CO. NEW YORK. CHICAGO. ST. LOUIS.

THE CATHOLIC
Mutual Beneficial ASSOCIATION
OF THE Archdiocese of San Francisco and Pacific Coast.
OFFICE, Room 48, Phelan Building
OFFICE HOURS: 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.
Regular Meetings of the Board, 1st Monday in each Month.
E. O. DENNISTON, Secretary.
DR. M. J. DUNN
DENTIST.
REMOVED TO 850 MARKET STREET,
(Opposite Fourth St.)
San Francisco, Cal.
FORD BROS.
Sanitary : Plumbers.
GAS AND STEAM FITTERS,
617 LARKIN ST., bet. Ellis & Eddy, S. F.
Gas Stoves, Gas Fixtures and Globes.
Jobbing promptly attended to.
SYLVESTER & SUBLETT,
DENTISTS,
Fabulous Extractions
With Vitalized Air.
48 SIXTH ST., COR. MISSION,
Rooms 12, 13 and 14, S. F.
PRICE REDUCED—A SETTLE.
PRIVATE HOSPITAL,
For Mental and Nervous Diseases.
428 BRYANT ST.
Large Grounds and Every Convenience for the Cure of Patients.
Dr. W. F. WHITWELL
Cor. Fillmore and Bryant Sts., S. F.
GILROY HOT SPRINGS.
New Proprietors and Managers.
New Road Avoiding the Creek Crossings
THOSE FEBRUARY SPRINGS ARE SITUATED in a part of the Coast Range, 17 miles east of Gilroy, and 2 miles south of Hollister. The Springs are now in charge of Mr. W. F. Hay, formerly of the Springs, and Mr. Jas. Gilroy, formerly of Gilroy, who will be pleased to receive visitors at the Springs. Address, Gilroy Hot Springs, Gilroy, Cal.
GOLDEN BROS.,
GROCER,
113 Tenth St., Bet. Mission & Howard.
SPECIALTIES:
Fine Butter,
Fresh Ranch Eggs,
Fine Teas and Coffees.
Endowment Insurance.
THE OCCIDENTAL
Self Endowment Association
The Greatest Bargain
EVER OFFERED.
1,000 Pairs of Ladies' French Kid Langtry Button, Patent Tipped, at $3 per Pair.
$3 SHOE.
MOORE & MURPHY
138 Ninth Street.
COUNTS & DEAL, SOLICITED
MR. W. H. DANIELL,
Late Lecturer and Vocal Teacher at
New England Conservatory of Music,
BOSTON,
Will Receive Pupils at 524 SUTTER ST.
A Few Reliable Agents Wanted.
Address, GEO. C. JONES, Secretary,
ROOM 28,
Phelan Building, Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CATHOLIC
MORTUARY CARDS.
Beautiful Catholic Designed
MEMORIAN CARDS,
Printed in the Neatest and Cheapest Manner by
McCORMICK BROS.,
416 Sansome Street.
CUMMINGS & FAULKNER
UNDERTAKERS,
28 South Market Street,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
Everything requisite for First-class Funerals.
THE ESTABLISHMENT OF
JAMES McGINN,
FUNERAL DIRECTOR
AND EMBALMER,
Continues under the management of his son
EUGENE McGINN,
39 Eddy Street.
RADWAY'S READY RELIEF.
Is a cure for every pain. Toothache, Headache, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Backache, Pain in the Side, Chest, Back and Limbs, with a short dose of Radway's Pills, you can defy the world and be free of pain in a few minutes.
R. H. HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CENTS.
THE CALIFORNIA REMEDY
Authors Cough, Colds, Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Pain in the Chest, Whooping Cough, Lame Back, Pain in the Side, Rheumatism, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.
Sold by all Druggists for 50 Cents.
J. H. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome St., San Francisco.

THE MONITOR.
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS AND DEFENSE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., 536 KEARNY ST., San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
Gold Coin by Mail (strictly in advance) — $1 00
One Year by Mail (if not paid in advance) — 1 50
Six Months (not paid in advance) — 1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance) — 75
Three Months (if not paid in advance) — 1 00
Single copies — 10 cents
Remittances should be made by Postal Note, Express Money Order, or Registered Letter. Postage Stamps will be received in payment for subscriptions to the amount of 25 cents.
Business Office, 536 KEARNY ST., San Francisco, Cal. Editorial Rooms, 536 Kearny St.
Post Office at Second Class Rates.
A. J. McGARVEY, Editorial Manager.
For Sale by Newsboys and Newsdealers at 5 cents per copy.
Subscribers who do not receive their papers promptly will confer a favor by reporting the fact at the Business Office.
Communications should be addressed to the Editor.
Communications on business should be addressed to the Business Manager.
Communications on business should be addressed to the Business Manager.
Communications on business should be addressed to the Business Manager

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

A SOLITARY STROKE.

I.

With solemn step I walk along,
Where sleep forever the unnumbered throng
Of silent dead;
And as I tread
The sacred place I was each stone,
And sense can hush the sobbing moan
Of sadness deep that rises to my breast,
And usher for utterance,
For those who in the grave eternal rest.

II.

My roamings o'er, I sit beneath
A drooping willow tree—emblem of death—
Pondering on things
And happenings,
Weird, strange, that mar each human life;
Anon with joys, with griefs than rife,
Vainly I strive to grasp or understand
The mysteries that hang o'er this sovereign hand.

III.

Gay youth and solemn age abide
Within this plumy city side by side, Eternally.
Death wrathful!
Bathes awfully, and his mortal dart
Pierces the young and aged heart.
No armor mailed or strength can overthrow,
Or stop the rapid course
Of this malignant conqueror of woe.

IV.

Let him watched down with sorrow deep,
Rumble amid the solemn silence where sleep
His heathen gone;
Such sights upon
His grief-worn heart, comfort will cast;
For well he knows that those now past
Were burdened by great suffering and woe;
Yes with outspeaking soul,
They bore them patiently while, here below.

V.

The thought shall serve his heart to great
Misfortunes, which through life he'll meet
With desolate cry;
Or when rolls high
The surging waves of grief and pain—
Like tempests o'er a desert plain—
Twill steal his lament soul with courage strong,
And fortitude to bound
The wrathful waves as on they sweep along.

VI.

And when I pass as sweeping slowly fall,
The sad and dirge-like notes of the churchyard bell
Breathed on the air
As anthem rare,
As my dirge for the graves of the dead,
As I pass to my home
Where I shall rest
For those whose bodies frail are "neath the sod—
Whose pure and lustrous souls
Contented roam the garden of their God.

S. M. C.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

LINES.

On the definition of the (Consul) Ecumenical Church of Constantinople, County Sligo, Ireland—the birthplace of Gladstone.

We dedicate a sacred shrine
To Patrick and his saints, now,
That all thy deeds in Heaven may shine,
While Ireland's rights are won.

As through the Western wilds we roam
O'er hills and valleys free,
Though far beyond the ocean's foam
Our hearts are with thee.
The germs of truth, though spurned to earth,
Will rise as pure as gold,
And bloom again a new born birth,
Endeared a thousand fold.

We join the sons of Erin's shore
To catch thy guardian fire,
And on thy feast, 'till life's is o'er,
To wake the silvery lyre.
Yes, millions of the world to-day
Revere thy spotless name—
The most renowned in matchless ray,
The first in Ireland's fame.

We raise to thee—all Heavenly planned,
Mid tones of harp and lyre—
A sacred shrine to light the land,
And wake the muse fire.
Emancipation's diamond star,
In beauty lights the way
Of Freedom's deep resounding car
To Erin's dawning day.

Still o'er the ocean's shrine wave,
Sweet memory wings her flight
To the spot where thy honored grave
Gleams through the mystic light.
Far off on Kerry's green-clad strand,
Thy name emblazoned shine—
The brightest one in Erin's land,
Thou hast done noble deeds.

Age to come shall e'er applaud
Thy worth, endeared to all;
As the unerring "Mills of God,"
Man's deeds shall grind so small.
Loved O'Connell, thy noble name
Survives the stain of rust;
The nations hail thee with acclaim,
Whilst kings may fall to dust.

JOHN P. MCDONALD.

Virginia City, Nev., November, 1888.

THE HOLY SOUL.

Hark! from Eternity's vast deeps
A long low cry of pain;
Like a mighty flood it surged sweep
Again and yet again,
The wa ail of the prison house we hear,
"Where the "Universal Judging" vests no door.

The lurid tongues of flame leap high,
In that all-mournful prison;
And those within, ever moaning cry
For liberty, for heaven.
"Redeemed" is writ on every brow;
And, yet, not one may enter now.

Oh, God, how great is their reward
When Love shall set them free!
How terrible the grieving, Lord,
For their great destiny!
When shall they, in unveiled light,
Before Thy Throne stand pure and bright!

Lo, they have waited the earth of pyre
In joy, in hope, in grief;
Bound hand and foot, in torture-wire,
They pray no for relief,
Weeping to each one who attends,
"Have pity, at least you, my friends!"

Shall we be heedless of their cry,
Those who have passed away?
Some, there may be, that you and I
Have loved in life's short day;
We crept to lay them "neath the sod,
Oh, let us help them home to God!"

By the most holy Sacrifice—
Relics of Calvary,
By deeds of love, by empathiest voice,
Yes, we may set them free;
May place them where, above the sky,
God wipes the tear from every eye.

Literary Miscellany.

Gatalia's Great Sorrow

A BEAUTIFUL SEQUEL TO "VALISKA."

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MARIONETTA.

CHAPTER IV.

A few days after the events recorded in the last chapter, the inmates of the villa left for their harvests, where, to the great joy of Gatalia and Filetta, they found Sam Starkfelter, but not his wife and child.

"You don't mind, miss Gatalia, my go to dis place again? Not for der biggest reach in der country."

"'Tis better not," said Gatalia, to whom he was speaking. "How I wish I had never seen it."

"Vy, you gests too much of der Liberals too, yes, I dinks you sees der man vat gail himself der priest, vat tells dar lies und fools der peoples."

"Oh, how glad you should be to get away. If you only knew what Filetta and I have suffered." Here she told him her trouble.

"Miss Gatti! you suffers all dot, poor vomans, I helpe you. You gests out vid me."

"Yes, yes! yes! I will never forget your kindness. I know God has sent you to our aid. Oh, Mr. Starkfelter, if I had to stay here much longer I would become insane."

"I dinks so; but vere you mean dot man? How you comes to marry mit dot kind?"

Gatalia told him all. How she had disregarded her mother, and married out of her Church.

"Yell, miss poor vomens, dot vas wrong, you done der wrong ding und you gets in der bad place, but shoot der sames I helpe you gest out. Van I gose vs Vaps on dose smard boaps some beedle drieks, und we gose before day vinds out. I gives dem von chance to drive some few more gattles away und ven dey goes, ve goes too. I dakes you to some place in der American country, und I vinds you some place vere you says till you writes to der mutter und dells her you vas sorry, den you gose home.

"Oh, my friend," she replied, "I can only give you my gratitude and my prayers in return, though the doubtful God will hear me now, and Filetta I will she go with me!"

"Vyletts, who! Vas dot der vomen vat some here mit you? Yes, I dakes her, too. But miss Gotl I believes I have bed luck. Dar dient vonnish me if I vont help you get."

Gatalia was beside herself with joy, she could scarcely believe the hour of her escape was so near at hand, and thanked God with all the fervor of a grateful, penitent heart.

"Oh, mother, mother," she whispered, "if will return to you and try to make up for the past. With the Divine assistance I will try to give you as much joy as I have caused you sorrow."

Poor Filetta, too, was pleased to think that they would soon be far away from the villianous gang at the villa, and wondered last anything should happen to prevent their departure.

Mr. Starkfelter told them that a daring robbery had been committed on the high way through the mountains and some valuable jewelry stolen. "I believes dot miss Vincenzopo done dot dued. He goes away shond dot demo, und ven he comes back he stea's mine horse from de ranch und goets away to der hills."

"Yes," said Gatalia, shuddering "some of that jewelry came to the villa, and a bracelet paid for by a lie rested on my left arm for a few moments. It seemed to me an agony I endured while I wore it would kill me.

"Yell, yell, poor woman, you have a terrible life dees; but I never hears there vas dat villa. I blaw to God, I dinks der men does many bad deeds in dot place, und, diefels like, dey vas not let nobody know vere dot place vas. Ven I seen you dot vas the first dime I hear of der villa. Dot woman, Vilatta, dells me nodings."

"Poor child, she was afraid to. But in truth the place is very hard to find, or even to locate. It is far over these mountains in a little green valley in the middle of the chain, and there seems to be no road to or from it, only a bridle path which winds about, crossing itself in all directions. But do not speak of it. That place has bleached my hair and ruined my life."

"Yall, ve says nodinge more, but ven I get to down I dells der beeples vat I dinks, und maybe der bandit takes von leedle reach away ven der officers come to gleau am oods."

Ere long the robs was over, and Gatalia, pale and nervous, was in daily dread that Manuel would tell her to prepare to return home with him, thus preventing her escape. Sam Starkfelter had sold his ranch and was preparing to go. Manuel and the others were there. Filetta watched them closely. At last the propitious moment had come, for she found out that the men were going away (to the mine, they said) that night.

She hastened to Gatalia telling her that the man were going, but that they would return in the morning to take them home. "So start to get ready," said Filetta. "Try to appear natural, and do not alarm Manuel. He watches your every movement, if you avoid him too pointedly he may suspect something, and so induce the others to change their plans—this preventing our escape, and perhaps killing our friend before he gets beyond their reach. Oh, Donna Gatalia, calm yourself. Do not show your disgust so plainly. On your self control depends all."

"Yes, I will try Filetta, but I hatha the man more than tongue can tell! His touch chills my blood. If he takes my hand it is all that I can do to suppress the cry of anguish that rises to my lips. Oh, I would gladly have sold my soul to Satan—been completely in his power—to have cared for him at all."

So they went about quietly preparing a few things for their journey. Gatalia's eyes sparkled and her cheeks flushed with subdued excitement as evening drew near, and, when the shadows of night fell and the bandits rode away bent on some new crime, she breathed freely. Now, now the hour had come! Sam Starkfelter hitched up his team and drove away alone. Juan was there, and to avoid detection the girls, having left a light in their room to deceive him into the belief that they were there, had gone ahead of Mr. Starkfelter to wait a mile from the harvests and await him there. When they reached the grove the two knelt down, and, in the darkness and silence of night, prayed for help to get away from that den of evil. Trials are great purifiers, and Gatalia was almost pure from suffering. She repented deeply, and truly, and, if ever a penitent sinner pleaded earnestly for pardon—contrition, she did while they awaited their deliverer. Silence reigned around and nothing was heard but the distant howl of the coyote, and the moaning of the wind as it rushed through the trees.

They had not to wait long for Sam, and soon they were speeding away from the scene of their trials. Gatalia trembled, fearing her husband would return and pursue them. Mr. Starkfelter tried to lodge her fears, saying:

"I guess not. Day vas too busy—der dofelos. Day vinds some gattles to dake home, und, maybe, dey meet some poor yellow und goets away vid him, und, you know, dot dakes dime. Ve goets away I dinks."

Sti Gatalia sat still and prayed. If the wind shook a branch she started and looked about her. Her nerves were so shattered that she feared everything since her terrible ordeal in the canyon. That misery the night had effected her hair and broken her spirit. Her only desire now was to repent, see her mother, and obtain peace and forgiveness for the past.

After several days travel they came to the town of P——, on the line of the railroad in Arizona. Here Sam left them in charge of a lady friend, telling Gatalia to write to her mother from there, as he had to remain in that place for a few weeks, and would help her to go home if they wished to have her return. She wrote a pleading, penitent letter and anxiously awaited a reply. Ere many days it came in a morning envelope. The poor mother whose declining years she had burdened with sorrow was no more. Her daughter's sin and ingratitude had killed her. The poor old broken heart was stilled. God had given her rest from her a crown forever.

Poor Gatalia was stony in her grief. "Oh, mother! mother!" she moaned, "I have killed you! Yes, can you see the sorrow in my heart?"

When Mr. Starkfelter came to see them she showed him the letter. "I cannot return now," she told. "There is no home to go to. Mother is gone. What shall I do? Can you advise me?"

Sam thought for a few minutes and then said: "Yell, I dells you. You stay here a vile und I vinds you some vay to make der livers. Can you vell?"

"Oh, yes; I can sew pretty well."

"And I," chimed in Filetta, "and I can make lace and embroidery."

"Yell, dot vas good. Now you two keeps togedr und promise to be good, und I gets you in an etabliss and some vork to begin, und I haya der rest dis mith und fo der place so you gets along eelis, und Sen you helps yourself if you vis."

"Oh, thanks you kindest of friends! May God reward you for your goodness, cried both girls.

A few weeks more passed and Sam, after having given them a start in the dressmaking business, went his way, rejoicing that God had given him a chance to do "von leedle thing" for Him.

Gatalia and Filetta settled in their small but comfortable abode, made their peace with God, and worked humbly and patiently for a living. Many people noticed the beautiful sad-eyed woman, with her pallid face and the streaks of silver in her hair, and pitied and patronized her, for she was scrupulous about her work and always pleased them. Every day saw her and Filetta at Mass and there they prayed for the bandit husband and brother to give up their lives of sin, to repent and ask pardon of God.

Thus three years passed away, the two girls living in peace and supporting themselves by their industry. Soon a convent reared its head in the little town, and Gatalia became a frequent visitor there. The good Sisters were very kind to her and she in return aided them in many ways. One day when she was at the convent, Sister Julia, her favorite, was telling her that a new Sister had come to assist them with their labors.

"Have she comes now and I will introduce you," said Sister Julia, as a smiling nun approached them. Gatalia started and turned pale as she looked into the sweet face of Sister Hilda, in whom she recognized the Valaska of the past. She stretch out her arms and embraced her, saying: "Valaska, darling, dosh you knot me? Can you forgiva me?"

"Hush! hush!" murmured the Sister "No, this is my old friend Gatalia."

"Yes," she answered, and weeping she told them both her whole story.

"Poor child," said they, "you have suffered much."

Sister Hilda tried to console her and promised to pray for Manuel. Gatalia prayed incessantly for his return, for she felt that she was still a culprit and an outcast and would remain such until he came and were married in the Catholic Church, or she was freed from him by death.

Here was a life of sorrow for years. By means of hard work and careful saving, she and Filetta managed to build themselves a little cot near the convent and lived there peacefully, tending their flowers and doing all they could to console and encourage others.

One calm evening in spring, many years after their arrival in P——, as Gatalia was sitting in a window sewing and thinking of the past, she heard the gate open and saw a stranger enter. He tapped at the door and she opened it with a smile, her face then calmed her by name.

"Gatalia, my wronged wife," said he, "don't you know me? Have you no word of pardon for me? Speak, tell me you know me. I am Manuel Monroy."

Gatalia was too much surprised to speak, but she gazed steadily at him and slowly began to realize that it was he. Then the terrible past rushed back, she seemed to see the grave in the canyon, and, shudder ing, turned away.

Manuel covered his face with his hands and turned to go away. "'Tis but just. I do not deserve better, but, oh God! I'm hard after all these years, and all the miles I have travelled to seek her, to ask her pardon, and to tell her that I have tried to repent."

She sobbed, heard these last words, and turned towards him with her hand stretched out in welcome. Manuel, my husband, I was all the bad, and then, wait and trembling, she fell back on the lounge.

Filetta, hearing their voices, entered the room, and, recognizing Monroy at once exclaimed:

"Malo Parouan! How came you here?"

"I came to seek my wife, to tell her how I have tried to return to the God I have forgotten so long; to do her justice and to beg her to forgive me."

Then, when Gatalia had somewhat recovered from her shock, he told them how lead to his home, and how, after searching they found that she and Filetta had gone, and, fearing that they had found out and would relate some of their terrible deeds, they fled to the near-at where they embarked as seamen on a vessel bound for China. How, on the vessel's return laden with a rich cargo, they had planned to kill the commander, steal the vessel and cargo and start out anew in piracy. But God in His great goodness had given them a chance of wealth may acquire eternal happiness. Repentance is not a strong word, he continued, for I feel that I can never make amends but I left to the choice of the head of the Church, I will do what he thinks best, in order of bline (frame of sulphur) and sulphur (the so called "Pipes" Pyrol, silver, gold), held in high respect by the faithful, and, when I had enough to be able to spend my time in the ministry, I will be a wandering Jew, and, then, one day, he bade farewell to the gate of the convent.

The monk died as he was told, and St. Bernard denied the Pope, the Church, the pitcher, and tell him what he saw there.

"I am coming, Father Abbot.

"Are there no sings, or insects, or dirt of any kind?" asked the abbot.

"No, it is perfectly clean. The water has washed it and prevented anything sticking to the bottom, and the brick.

"That is just what your wacky conference gave to you, my son, it washes your soul and keeps it pure, and prevents sin and imperfections from clearing to it."

SEND US CATHOLIC NEWS.

We would most respectfully ask the Reverendy, or any of our readers of the entire Parishes, to send us the local items of general interest. We wish to make the Monitor a chronicle of all Diocesan happenings, leading to the progress of religion, and we can do this unless we are aided by those who have the knowledge of the facts in their keeping. Dear Uncle Ace of the West will our friends please forward us with them?

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

As Natural Nutrition, Strengthening and Wasting in Children.

It is most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system and builds up the body. It is a delicious form and powerful nutrient. Prescribed by Physicians. Take no other.

FILIPPINI'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES, 220 POST ST.

PROF. DE FILIPPINI, graduate of the Academy of Turin (Italy), teaches the Italian language, pronunciation, elocution, Spanish and French, by the Ollendorff system, in a few months, or at the rate of one lesson a week. Private lessons in acquiring foreign languages, whole families taught at their residence. Pupils can enter at any time. Prospectus free. Private lessons, $5 per month. Class lessons, $2 per month. Apply from 10 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Dr. JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a new system of medicine, Jayne's Tonic Laxative, containing compound iodine and iron, Jayne's Sanative Pills, a specific for all liver and stomach troubles, Jayne's Hair Tonic, the great hair restorer, and Jayne's Diarrhœa Mixture, for sale by druggists. Dr. Jayne's Medical Almanac, 1889, 100 pages, 1 cent stamp. Address DR. JAYNE & SON, Philadelphia.

DEVIL WORSHIPPERS.

Shocking Hallucination in Armenia.

According to Herr Vambe Pasch, who recently made a journey from Tabiz to Lake Van, the Nestorian Christian grave with the name of Devil worshippers a number of communities scattered through Kurdistan, and in the Valley of the Euphrates, to the number of about 40,000. Their chief seat is in the Valley of the Euphrates, to the number of about 40,000. The city of the Jezeds or Devil Worshippers, with contains the temple and residence of their Sheik Adi, and not far thence the village of Bachdida, the seat of their civil and religious head. According to tradition, their faith had its origin in certain apostatic members of the Armenian Church, and their name is variously derived from Jezed or God. Their faith has, probably, much earlier origin, deriving from the influence of all four religions successively holding sway in those regions from Zoroastrianism to Islam. They adore genuine devil worship, and kiss the place that the sun at his rising and setting touched by his beams.

They worship the figure of the right hand at the holy taper, then dress their over the shoulders and kiss the place, and, after having they raise Malak, and receiving the formula of Islam as a prophet, while they pronounce Christ as a great saint, among the prophets, and, as the spirit of the Lord, who, one day will come to rule the world. The priests have a special dress, standing with their Shamian costume, the dervi, and no great a their respect for him, and, no great a distance from the people, but, in the midst of the people, themselves, and, in the place of the people, themselves, being they name

THE MONITOR.

TRUTH! SOBER TRUTH! OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1888.

THE

"Christmas Monitor."

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All press and pastoral contributions intended for the forthcoming issue of THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR must reach this office by December 8th, so as to insure their appearance in our Christmas issue, which will be published December 15th next.

THE CHRISTMAS "MONITOR."

SEND FOR COPIES AT ONCE

Subscribers and others who desire to procure extra copies of the Christmas Monitor to send to Friends throughout the United States, to Ireland, or any other portion of the globe, should send in their orders at once, so as not to be disappointed, as there is always a great demand for the Christmas Monitor. Ten Cents a copy is all we charge for the twelve-page Illustrated Christmas Monitor, filled with the finest Catholic press and poetry we can procure in Catholic, the Eastern States and in Ireland. Send it to your friends and show them what California can accomplish in the way of Catholic literary enterprise.

Send in the names and correspondingly cheap copies, and the orders collectively will be sent by mail direct from this office, postage free.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The number of priests in England is now 2,646, including those expelled from France. There are 1,461 churches and chapels.

—It is with unfeigned pleasure that we note the fact that Abraham S. Hewitt, the Knownothing Mayor of New York, was buried on the polls by Grant, the Democratic candidate, who was elected.

—Sister Sarah Jones, President of the Female Academy of the Sacred Heart, recently distributed by fire in New York, has died plans for a building to cost $200,000 at Nicholas and Convent avenues, New York.

—The Dublin Freeman acknowledges the magnificent total of £11,500 received for the Parnell Defense Fund up to October 20th. The Freeman notes what it styles one very gratifying fact that even the poorest country districts are subscribing nobly.

—So vicious has life in London become that the Lancet, Magazine has undertaken the task of that city. He says they are almost sure to lose their faith and morals too.

—The question of re-establishing diplomatic relations between England and Rome is mooted by the daily press to be again upon the tapis, and it is stated that Cardinals Simeoni, Jacobini, Rampolla, Agliardi and Masotti have been appointed by Pope Leo to again examine into the matter.

—As announced in these columns several months ago, Cardinal Gibbons has for some time been writing a work on Catholic controversy which is now nearly ready for the press. His Eminence will treat entirely of the rudimentary principles of religion and appeal to the human intellect as a factor leading men to the true Faith.

—The London Standard regrets that Lord Randolph Churchill differed with Salisbury in regard to the Sackville affair. It says: "A knuckling down policy is not the best nor the wisest policy in the face of such notorious and repeated aims of unfriendliness as we have recently experienced at the hands of the United States Government.

—Lord Cavan has sent a check for £105 to the Gladstone Club at Birmingham to commemorate the great leader's visit. "Had Birmingham remained true," his Lordship wrote, "Mandeville would have been now alive, Dillon would be in good health, O'Brien would be a strong man, and Ireland would be happy, free and loyal."

—Miss Virginia McTavish, of Baltimore, though admitting that she and the Duke of Norfolk were guests at the same house during her recent visit to England, denies emphatically that she ever visited Arundel Castle, and says very distinctly that she is not engaged to his Grace, never has been, and never expects to be.

—A second report of the death of Father Sohleyer, the inventor of Volapuk, having been published in the Paris correspondence of the Times, Mr. S. Harvey, of the Inner Temple, wrote for information to the Volapuk Bureau in Constance, and was gratified to receive a telegram from Father Sohleyer himself that he enjoyed good health.

—A telegram from Lincoln, Nebraska, states that President Fitzgerald of the Irish National Leagues of America, has issued another stirring appeal, reviewing the causes leading to the appointment of the Parnell Commission and its work, and asking Irishmen of every political shade to join in raising at once a Parnell Defense Fund, and remit the same as speedily as possible to the Treasurer, Rev. Charles O'Reilly, at Detroit, Michigan.

—A correspondent in New Orleans informs us that Mother St. Augustine (Cooke of the Ursuline Nuns, was called to the reward of her holy life in that city on the 1st inst., and as the deceased had many relatives and friends in California, notice of her death was entered in the MONITOR. Mother St. Augustine (Cooke was born in Doneraile, County Cork, Ireland, March 20, 1811. R. I. P.

Archbishop Seghers' Remains.

Our readers will learn from a dispatch on the first page that the remains of the martyred Archbishop of Alaska arrived at Victoria, V. I., on Thursday last on board the steamer Tartar, and were interred beneath the main altar of St. Andrew's Cathedral in Victoria, on the following day.

Among the Prelates present to assist at the obsequies of the unfortunate Prelate, were Most Rev. Archbishop Gross of Oregon, Bishop Junger of Nesqualy, Bishop Brondel of Montana. A number of priests from the Washington Territory and British Columbia were also in attendance.

Next Wednesday, the 28th inst., will be the second anniversary of the shocking murder of the dearly-beloved Archbishop by his servant Fuller, and the Monitor appeals to the Rev. Clergy all over this coast, the Religious Orders and the Catholic Laity in general as well, to give to the soul of the deceased Prelate, whose blood will be the seed of the Church in Alaska in the future, their pious offices and prayers on that day in particular, as his grace deserves the sufferings of the Catholic faithful of the Pacific slope for his arduous labors in behalf of that Church of which he was such a substantial pillar. R. I. P.

The Decadence of France.

Almighty God withdraws His graces and blessings from Nations, just as He does from individuals, whenever they knowingly and perseveringly continue in continuous opposition to His laws. For this reason it is not at all singular to learn that France, a long pagan nation, has decadence dating from the time when her infidel rulers suppressed the Religious Orders, stole the revenue and property of the Church, exiled the Jesuit Fathers, and closed the schools and hospitals of France against Christian teachers and Sisters of Charity.

Such anti-Christian ways on the part of the infidel element in the government of France, has called down upon that hitherto Catholic nation a penalty from heaven which will of inately make France a barren wilderness in the tabular birth rate of the world.

Already the French papers are becoming alarmed at the great falling off which has occurred in the birth-rate of that nation hitherto so prolific in population. While the native population of England and Germany are increasing at the rate of half a million a year, the deaths in France outnumber the births, and so certain is this to go on year by year to the ruin of France as a nation, that even the Paris Gaulois is forced to confess that if "can fix the day, not a distant day, when, by the perennial falling of of births, France will have lost one-third of its population. The result is fatal. Within half a century France will have fallen below Italy and Spain, to the rank of a second-rate Power. There is no hope for this country. If this continue, in addition to other causes of decadence, we are a lost nation."

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BULLS.

A Rare and Important Witness Introduced.—Chapters from the Celebrated Work "Cambrensis Eversus" by Dr. John Lynch.—Invaluable Secondary Evidence Against both the Bogus Bulls.

In the first portion of this volume we made a passing allusion to a celebrated work on Irish ecclesiastical history, "Cambrensis" by Dr. John Lynch, and expressed our regret that the work was so rare that not a copy of it could be found on the Pacific coast. Fortunately, however, through the great kindness of friends, a copy was purchased in London, and now we are enabled to lay before our readers some very important evidence which hitherto has been completely hidden from public gaze both in consequence of the high price of Dr. John Lynch's invaluable work, as well as from the fact that but very few copies of this learned work are for sale in any portion of the world.

Cambrensis Eversus consists of a general history of Ireland from the earliest ages, and from the amount of historical matter to be found in this vast storehouse of Irish lore, we are surprised that so little attention has been given to the exhaustive work of an author whose we look upon as eminently the most truthful, polished and learned among all the men who have ever attempted to write on Ireland.

Dr. Lynch devotes but a few chapters to the consideration of the bogus Bull attributed to Popes Adrian and Alexander, but—as our readers will discern further on—in that brief space, he has furnished such proof of the spuriousness of those documents that not a doubt can remain in the mind of any impartial reader.

The Papal Bulls, the falsely-called Adrian Bull, our readers will remember, mention also in that document that the Catholic population of Ireland in the twelfth century was steeped in vice both morally and intellectually. In order to show the falsity of the forged document, and also to over throw the injurious mode by Giraldus Cambrensis upon the moral character of the faithful Irish Catholic people, Dr. Lynch, in the work before us, devotes three chapters of the second volume to that disputed point, and although we have touched upon that aspect of the question under consideration already, in a brief way, we feel that Dr. Lynch's evidence will not only add to the share of useful knowledge which every Catholic should possess, but it will also re-affirm the fact that neither in the twelfth century, nor at any time anterior or subsequent, were the morals, customs or habits of the Irish people in that state of degradation set forth by the notorious Giraldus Cambrensis, the English falsifier, whose untruths were so numerous as to gain for him the very doubtful honor of being distinguished from all other historical writers as the man who "could not tell the truth except by accident."

Alluding to the charge made against the piety and morality of the Irish people by Giraldus Cambrensis, Dr. Lynch says:

"Still, although we have enjoyed a more ample opportunity of success to his father on the throne of Westminster, and assign his death to 1162. Perhaps it may be Muirchertach Mac Lochlainn, who was proclaimed king of Ireland in the year of our Lord 1166. If all other circumstances concur, we can safely compare with chronology, maintain that he was the king referred to by the chronicle for Pope Adrian ires led to the year 1156. Now, as there is always which took place in the day-so-called prior that Irish kings at home and Irish reclamations abroad were malicious to us, it will be not improbable to think that Pope Adrian would a bounty have dropped the Irish depravity of morals. Would not the fear of being denounced as unpopular have deterred him from making them? It is utterly absurd to suppose that the only mark of his Holiness's displeasure, or censure, of his Irish pupil Marianus, should be to transmit to posterity a defamatory character of the preceptor's native country, especially when he knew that the Marianus rising in fame and learning, was to be selected for the honor of instructing others.

Every person who has even a slight knowledge of the Christian religion, or even will aware that it would be a course to deprive such country, which is pledged in average depravity and universal ignorance of the knowledge of faith, and to be plant an abundant harvest of virtue and religion in a barren soil, while barrenness and aridity would be the consequence of his ire land. The men who were so eminent for the cultivation of literature, and so engrossed devotion in charity, which produces the fruits of faith, shall be at home, with ourselves and our friends, before it extends to those who belong to others. St. Paul desired to become an anathema for his brethren according to the flesh, nor would those who are Christ's forbear, in imitation of the author says, "to instruct foreign nations in the knowledge of faith, if there was no abundance of public instructors left after them at home.

The Pope, after duly weighing these things, would certainly have come to the conclusion that the Irish would not teach abroad what they had not learned at home. He must have known, that either monastic study before or during his pontificate, Marianus, Malachy, Gerrase, Gilla, Christopher Mariana, Christian and Gregorius of Ratisbon, Marcus and twelve other monks, in the monastery of Mantiergalan, and Maurice, with his twelve associates at Würzburg, were celebrated for their sanctity and learning.

All home to Ireland every diocese had its bishop, every parish its priest, old monasteries were repaired, new ones were built, and all abundantly supplied with monks. The native annals of Ireland and contemporaries prove the uninterrupted succession of bishops and monks. No great was the number of priests in Ireland, that 300 of them assembled in council in 1172, with Gilla Christ, Gilla Christ and Maelisa Ua Hadhi, Archbishop of Tuam. Catholicus, Archbishop of the same See, a prudent and a learned man (for his age), was accompanied by Gilla Christ, Bishop of Lismore, 1175, by Leman, Archbishop of Robhin, Gilla of Ardfert, Bishop of Limerick, Augustine of Waterford, and Felix of Lismore. If their flocks were plunged in that hideous barbarism charged against all the Irish by some writers, how could they be worthy being called to a Council place to sit in

[1] The full title of the work is, "Cambrensis Eversus; or Refutation of the Authority of Giraldus Cambrensis on the History of Ireland. By Dr. John Lynch (1662), with some account of the life and writings of Lynch, from his own and former times. Edited, with translation and copious notes, by the Rev. Matthew Kelly, Royal College of St. Patrick, Maynooth. Published in Dublin by the Celtic Society, during the years 1848 to 1851."

[2] Vol. II., chap. xxi., page 102, et seq.

A HATCH OF NEW BOOKS.

Catholic Publications of Monster Beaudet Should Procure.

The Messrs. Benziger Bros., are by all odds the most active and enterprising in the Catholic publishers in the United States. Not a month in the year passes that the Monitor does not receive copies of new books from this House, and some of the books then sent are so important and so timely, that we feel sure the present week we have received from the Messrs. Benziger

I.

FORGIVE OR THE Church of the Catacombs, by Rev. Francis Cassilly, S. J. Author. A Historical Picture of the Sufferings of the Early Church in Pagan Rome, illustrating the Glories of the Christian Martyrs, as exemplified in the lives of the fair young Vivania Sylvyr, St. Agnes; the Lovely Soldier, St. Sebastian; the Deacon Martyr, St. Vincent; the Holy Priest-Physician, St. Cosmo.

This is a delicately illustrated work, well edited for a Christmas or New Year's present. It is in all respects a tasteful and meritorious work in every respect, and a copy of it should be found in every Catholic household of the Pacific Coast. Illustrated and on appropriate. The artistic decorations of this work adorn most of the pages of the volume, and as a description can do them justice. They comprise an equisite, artistic Chromo-Frontispiece, 32 large tinted pictures, 24 others printed with a tint, and introducing an entirely new feature, illustrations by the eminent artiste Vier Dargent and Joseph Blanc; numerous engravings descriptive of the Catacombs, and the Christian Martyrs of early Roman, ornamental initials and embossed cover, with a new design, gilt edges, uncut. Prefaces by Rev. Richard Brennan, LL.D., Canon of St. Sion of Lincoln Church, New York, and at the work is 8vo. of 27 50, according to binding.

II.

PICTORIAL LIVES OF THE SAINTS, With Reflections Every Day in the Year. Compiled from "Pictorial Lives of the Saints" by Father Rumpler, to which are added Lives of the Canonized Saints Canonized since the Decree of the Holy Sacred Congregation, which was issued in the year 1885. Edited by John Gilmary Shea, LL.D., Author of "Pictorial Lives of the Saints," "Pictorial Lives of the Saints," "Pictorial Lives of the Saints." Illustrated with 12 Chromo-Lithographs and 12 Photogravures. Cloth, gilt edges, 8vo. 1 50.

III.

THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS, With Reflections Every Day in the Year. Compiled from the Lives of the Saints, Ancient and Modern, and Intended for Every Day in the Year. Edited by Rev. Hubert Lecoindre, D.D., Author of "Lives of the Saints." Illustrated with 12 Chromo-Lithographs and 12 Photogravures. Cloth, gilt edges, 8vo. 1 50.

IV.

THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS, With Reflections Every Day in the Year. Compiled from the Lives of the Saints, Ancient and Modern, and Intended for Every Day in the Year. Edited by Rev. Hubert Lecoindre, D.D., Author of "Lives of the Saints." Illustrated with 12 Chromo-Lithographs and 12 Photogravures. Cloth, gilt edges, 8vo. 1 50.

CATHOLIC BOOKS AND RELIGIOUS ARTICLES.

A Wallfield, the author known author, whose other works are all of a high order of merit, has written a work on Christian Evidences, which we have not seen, but which we have every reason to believe will be a valuable work. Mr. Wallfield's work is entitled "Christian Evidences Chiefly Moral and Social." The work is 12mo., cloth, and persons who desire to procure it for a Christmas or New Year's present, should write to Messrs. Benziger Bros., for it. Mr. Wallfield's work is a most valuable one

Farm and Home.

Useful Domestic Receipts.

BEEF SANDWICHES TO TOAST.—Cut an onion fine and fry it slowly in one table-spoonful of butter in a stew-pan. Add one pint of tomatoes cooked and strained, one teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper and one pound of beef cooked or uncooked, cut in small pieces. Simmer very slowly until the meat is tender.

POTATO TURNOVERS.—Mix about a pint of hot mashed potatoes with one egg, season to taste and roll it out thin, put a balls and press or roll it out thin, put a tablespoonful of meat minced and seasoned on one half, fold over and press the edges together and brown on each side in drippings.

LIVER RAGOUT.—The liver of a well-fed calf is washed, skinned, cut into slices and then into strips. Next two or three onions, some thyme, tarragon, chives, and parsley are minced fine, and in plenty of butter, previously heated; the liver is added with a little salt and stewed until tender, which will require about a quarter of an hour—a prolonged stewing makes it hard—then add some grated bread, and a cupful of wine, or a few slices of lemon, without the seeds, and let the whole boil up. Tender beef's liver can be used instead of calf's liver.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—One quart of graham flour, one tablespoonful of powder and half a tablespoonful of salt, sifted. To this add two eggs, well-beaten, two ounces of melted butter and enough milk to form a batter, mixing thoroughly. Bake in muffin rings or pans half filled with the batter, and bake in a brisk oven.

PLAIN PUDDING.—A delicious plain pudding is made by stoning a pound of prunes until they are soft, removing the stones, add sugar to your taste and the white of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Make puff paste for the bottom of the pudding dish. After beating the eggs and prunes together until they are thoroughly mixed, spread them on the crust. Bake for half an hour, or until you are sure the crust is done. A jelly cake batter can be used instead of the puff paste and with the two remaining eggs you can make a Washington.

NEWMARKET PUDDING.—Take one pint of grated bread, one quart of milk, one cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, and the yolks of four eggs. Soak the bread crumbs one hour in the milk, then add the other ingredients and bake. When it is done spread a layer of jelly over the top, then cover with a meringue made of the whites of the eggs and half a cup of sugar. Brown slightly.

ALMOND CREAM.—One cup of rice, one pint and a half of milk, one-half cup of sweet almonds, one-quarter of a cup of white sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Blanch the almonds, chop them fine, put them with rice, sugar and salt, into the milk, and when nearly done the rice is tender. Serve it hot with cream and grape jelly. A pretty way to serve it is to half fill fancy cups with the almond cream, then add two tablespoonfuls of cream cream and one of jelly.

LEMON TURNOVERS.—One lemon grated, the rind and juice, one cup of cornsuar, one-half cup of shopped nuts, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of melted butter, one egg. Line a pie plate with pastry, put in the mixture, cover with pastry, and bake.

Economy is Wealth.

"I would like a little money this morning, John," said the wife, who was about to start down town. "I want to go to the dining room."

"All right, Maria," said the husband, looking up from his paper. "Here's $10."

"I have found a place on Sixteen street that suits me, so she put the money in her purse, "where they are going to sell some nice oil cloth by auction."

"Auction! Hold on for a moment, Maria. Here's $10 more."

Amateur Reform.

Congressman Allan of Mississippi, is not much of a "reformer" himself, but he did attempt once to bring an erring brother back to a sense of shame and repentance. And this was the result, as told by Allan to a group of his colleagues on the floor of the House the other day:

"Janks, you have been drinking again," Allan said sternly to the offender, a negro boy of his.

"I know it," replied Janks, meekly.

"Didn't you tell me you would swear off forever on the first day of the month?" asked Allan.

"Yes, I did; and I meant to do it sure."

"Then why didn't you do it?"

"Well, you see, Allan, I—I was out of town that day."

He Promptly Corrected his Error.

It was at a railway eating station. The man from Montana was hungry and in a hurry.

"Please pass me them portaters, mister," he said, addressing the elegant gentleman from Boston, who sat next him.

The Bostonian slowly frowned his gold eyeglasses on the man from Montana.

"Did you think I was one of the waiters?" he asked, icily.

The others held their knives and forks suspended in mid-air expecting to see the man from Montana shrivel up, but no such phenomenon took place.

He turned and beckoned to the nearest waiter.

"George, come here, please."

"What is it, sir?" asked George.

"I wanted to apologize to you, that is all. You see I mistook this party here for you, but I hope you won't be offended at it. Now pass me them portaters and we'll go on with the round up."

A Useful Accomplishment.

"Now occupations for women are being constantly discovered," said Mrs. Brown, "I see by the papers that a woman is making a pile of money by whistling."

"They should all learn to whistle," commented the old man, "not as a means of livelihood, but because it would come in handy when they asked the price of a stylish bonnet."

A Wife's Point of View.

"Poor Jenny, it must be an awful shock to you," sympathised her friend, "and to think you trusted him all these years!"

"Yes," sobbed Jenny, "I knew that my millinery alone came to more than his salary, but I never suspected him."

His Wife's Extravagance.

"Seems to me you are always wanting money, Mary Jane. I gave you 75 cents yesterday. Do you think I'm a gold mine? Here's a quarter."

(Up-town an hour later) "What's that? Carry this State by 15,000! I've got $50 that says he won't. Pat up, gentlemen, or shut up. Money talks!"

A Question of Time.

"Conover, I'ld end the young man. "I despair of being able to express my feelings toward you as I would like, and I am afraid you would not have the patience to listen to me. I—I always was kind of slow and bungleome, you know."

"Hadssed," said the maiden softly, but with a perceptible business-like ring in her voice, "if you think you can express your self in fifteen minutes I will listen to you. I expect Mr. Spoonamore at 9 o'clock.

And the young man was just fifteen seconds by the watch in expressing himself.

Poor unfortunate Spoonamore! When he came he was entertained by Miss Grainvia's good old mother.

The Only Substitute.

Stranger (from Dakota)—I hear you are making mustard plasters by the yard, and selling for one.

Druggist—Yes, sir. Would you like to see one?

"Not now, but if you'll warrant them good and hot you can send me about forty yards to Lizzie Bardville, Dak. Winter is coming on, and wool is too high for poor folks.

How he Got Rich.

"I was always poor when I was boarding," said Smith.

"If we did you make your money, then?" asked Jones.

"I began to keep boarders myself."

A Modern Instance.

"Madam, are you a woman suffragist?

"No, sir; I haven't time to be."

"Haven't time! Well, if you had the privilege of voting who would you support?"

"My husband."

Short Smiles.

Mr. Isaacstein (to school-teacher)—How was Sadie Jacob getting on at your Sunday-school?

Teacher—He is doing nicely, Mr. Isaacstein. He is in percentage now.

Mr. Isaacstein (joyfully)—Vell, dat's good. I gave you a dollar for dat. Vell, don't you teach dot boy noddings less than von hundred per cent. He vas too young yet to study very hard.

First Preacher—You appear to be having remarkable success, brother.

Second Preacher—Yes; my people have become very liberal since I changed my plan of taking the collection. I now have them do before the sermon.

"Has that made a difference?"

"A very great difference. If I find the collection is small I preach a two hours sermon on 'charity,' but when I am large give them a twenty minutes' discourse on the delights of Heaven."

Stranger (addressing an old colored bricklayer)—Uncle, who's building this house? Colored bricklayer—Mr. Hirebbug he build de house, but Queen Anne she drawed de plans.

"Maud, don't you think Mr. Robinson is a very placid gentleman?" asked Lily.

"I know he's troubled with a very bad temper."

"You surprise me! I have always found him very mild tempered.

"Oh, it isn't his own temper, it's his wife's."

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Pleasing Sense of Health and Strength Renewed, and of Ease and Comfort Follows the use of Syrup of Figs, as acts gently on the KIDNEYS, LIVER & BOWELS Effectually Cleansing the System when Costive or Bilious, Dispelling Colds, Headaches and Fevers and permanently curing HABITUAL CONSTIPATION without weakening or irritating the organs on which it acts. For sale by druggists at $1.00 Bottles by all Leading Druggists. Manufactured only by the CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N. Y.

CATHOLIC MORTUARY CARDS. Beautiful Catholic Designed MEMORIAM CARDS, Each Plate at Illustrated Styles, Printed in the Handsomest and Cheapest Manner by McCORMICK BROS., 410 Sansome Street.

A monthly variety of sample cards (assortment) on hand to order from.

FUJI CO., Direct Importers of Japanese Tea —AND— Fancy Goods. A LARGE VARIETY OF HOLIDAY GOODS ON HAND. The largest of Tea ever held under one roof. Prices Reasonable. 100 FIFTH STREET.

THE DR. ZEILE Turkish, Electric, Russian, Steam And every kind of medicated water, steam or hot air BATH. THE ONLY PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE LADIES and Gentlemen can be treated at the same time or at separate and distinct bath houses as all so ground 220 to 226 Postle Street, bet. Montgomery and Kearny.

Dr. Seth Arnold's COUGH KILLER the best Cough Cure! Wm. A. Myer, Weston, Mo. Druggists, 25c., 50c., and $1.00.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts., Entrance to Calvary Cemetery. San Francisco.

A JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Souvenirs of Beaucaire from Italian Shops. All at Made of Rosemarie and Orange Work done to short notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to. REMOVAL. The J. Dewing Company PUBLISHERS, Booksellers, School Furnishers, And Piano Manufacturers. Now Occupy Their New Store in the FLOOD BUILDING, 813 MARKET ST. Where they continue all their former branches of business and add a retail department, embracing Pianos and Organs, Miscellaneous Books, Fine Stationery, Imported Leather Goods, etc., etc., etc. Special Attention is invited to THE DEWING BROS' PIANO, the Best Instrument made in Pacific Coast Publication. The J. Dewing Company, 813 Market Street, S. F.

HUTCHINSON'S BEST MADE GLOVES. For sale by all first class dealers. Wear more than any other glove. Ask your dealer for them. Take no other. Manufactured only by the manufacturer, Sexed Glove Manufacturer, 1 Wooster Place, Johnson Street, New York.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE. 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 767. ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cooks, Waiters, Chambermaids, Laundresses, Plain Cooks, Gardeners, Coachmen, and Market Gardens to hire, Boarding and Lodging Houses, also, good reliable Help, without any charge to employers. Details sending stamp for letter at 608 Clay street.

Alexander Doran, (SUCCESSOR TO C. SLOSSMAN) Dealer in STATIONERY, BOOKS, TOYS, AND FANCY GOODS. A first-class assortment of Prayer Books, Bibles, Crosses, Etc., WILL ALWAYS BE FOUND HERE AND AT NEW YORK PRICES. Please Call and Examine Our Stock. S. W. Cor. Mission & 16th St.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW AND GOOD BOOKS.

God Knowable and Known, Dr. Per Mark Hopkins, Jr. and Philosophy and Science: Their Union Demonstrated Conversations with Children on the Bible, Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies, Ruskin's Queen of the Air, Ruskin's Mornings in Florence, Ruskin's Ethics of the Dust, Ruskin's Crown of Wild Olive, Ruskin's Time and Tide, Ruskin's Two Paths, Ruskin's Ariadne Florentina, Ruskin's Proserpina, Ruskin's Deucalion, Ruskin's Aratra Pentelici, Ruskin's Lectures on Art, Ruskin's Art of England, Ruskin's Stones of Venice, Ruskin's Modern Painters, Ruskin's Elements of Drawing, Ruskin's Elements of Perspective, Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies, Ruskin's Unto This Last, Ruskin's Munera Pulveris

A NEW SOCIETY.

A Universal Catholic Organization.

ITS OBJECTS PLAINLY STATED

"The Work of Perpetual Intercession for the Church and the Sovereign Pontiff."

It was with a view of enabling all Catholics to show by some permanent means their filial devotion to the Common Father of the faithful, that a new work was recently inaugurated in Rome, whose special features and aims deserve to be universally known. This work was begun silently, and in the fruit of earnest love and pioneering prayer. Not long ago, in France, some pious ladies conceived a strong desire to work more actively for the Church and the Sovereign Pontiff. They formed themselves into an association, and gave it a name that expresses well their supreme object. They called it "The Work of Perpetual Intercession for the Church and Sovereign Pontiff." The lady associates believe that prayer is, after all, our strongest weapon, our most effectual instrument for any good to be done, for any grace to be obtained; hence, though no form of good work compatible with their object was excluded, they nevertheless made constant intercessory prayer for the eternal stress of their efforts.

They secured adhesions to their plan, submitted it to the judgment of the Holy See, and humbly asked its decision. It proved favorable, and on May 7, 1886, was published the decree of the Cardinal Vicar erecting canonically the new work of perpetual intercession. The next step was to find a habitation for it. The pious originators asked for a place in Rome which might be the centre of the association, and the Pope's Vicar at once granted them his own chapel until the requirements of the society should demand larger accommodation. Statutes were then written and approved, the first of them stating that "the work of perpetual intercession is placed under the patronage of Mary, the Queen of Apostles, and of St. Catherine of Sienna, the Patroness of Rome and the Angel of the Papacy." The fundamental idea of the work is summed up in the following words from the prospectus issued by the association:

"The Work of Intercession has for its object: 1. To labor by every possible means, in its humble sphere, for the defence and exaltation of the Holy See.

"2. To render more and more stringent the ties which bind all Catholic hearts to the persecuted Roman Pontiff, and to awaken throughout the world that spirit of earnest and unceasing prayer by means of which the first Christians obtained the deliverance of the Prince of the Apostles.

"3. This work will also be an act of solemn reparation for the outrages with which modern impiety never ceases to oppress the Church and the Vicar of Jesus Christ. It is assumed by members of those same worlds Reparation, intercession, glorification. Thus imposing on its humble prayer has already been solidly established in Rome, while branches are also founded or shortly to be founded, in all countries as a means of enlisting the active sympathies of Catholics, organized and united, and through them, of all who love the Church and her august head, on behalf of this great enterprise of faithful, loving and unceasing intercession. The organization of the work of perpetual intercession is very simple. Every day Masses are celebrated at the end of the work, exclusively for the Sovereign Pontiff and in the name of the Church who, from whatever part of the world, may have accumulated a request for them. Benedictions of the Most Holy Sacrament is given every evening for the same intention. The members of the work of intercession are invited to recite every day for the Holy See, the Church the prayers in use during jubilees, seven Our Fathers, seven Hail Marys, and the Glory be to the Father.

"Any person who has given or collected even one shilling or sum of $20, is entitled to be called a founder. Each founder has a right to all the advantages which the work may be able in future to procure for its members; and it will be the privilege of such a founder to designate a day in each year, in perpetuity, for the celebration of a Mass in his or her name, for the Sovereign Pontiff. Foundations for the Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament may be made on the same conditions. The names of all the persons who have had Masses and of the sort of the work are inscribed each day on a tablet placed in the church. These lists are preserved and presented from time to time to the Holy Father. The central direction of the Work of Intercession is confided to Rome to a committee of ladies chosen from among the members belonging to the various nationalities. The committee is directed in its functions by his Eminence the Cardinal Vicar or by a Priest appointed by him. He it is who decides upon and directs all that concerns the administration of the work and its developments. Local committees have already been established all over Europe, and it is hoped that before long the American, English and Irish societies of the work will also be thoroughly organized."

Some Queer Election Bets.

Two brewery employes in Cincinnati agreed to jump into a canal, cross and return, or forfeit a week's wages if Cleveland was elected.

A colonel of Minneapolis consented, if Cleveland was elected, to sit astraddle of the top of a barn all Thursday from 9 a. m. until 7 P. M.

A Baltimore actor agreed to walk up and down the principal streets of that city wearing a stove hat and full answer to a Christmas Day, if Harrison was the fortunate candidate.

A Democratic young lady of Indianapolis agreed to marry a young man of that place if Cleveland was defeated. If Cleveland was elected he to pay her $100, or, in default, marry her just the same.

A. E. Pelton, editor of the Salida News, Colorado, offered to wager his newspaper, published for the benefit of the general good and the office, presses and general good will and fixtures, against $10,000 on Grover Cleveland's success.

Rev. H. F. Thomas, pastor of the Cardenal Mahaffey Episcopal Church, in Philadelphia, Robert W. Harrison, a Democrat, and they were willing to make considerable sacrifice in the maintenance of their respective political principles. They bet on the following conditions: If Harrison was elected, Harrison was on two Sundays to occupy the pulpit of the pastor that may have accumulated during the intervening weeks. If Cleveland was elected, the pastor had to canvass for the sole benefit of the machine for the purchase of the profits over to the winner of the wagger.

—It is reported that the new bells for Holy Cross church, Sacramento, will be cast next month by the firm of Cassidy, who cast the bells for the city of Utica, and a description of it read in Sacramento papers who applied to McSHANE, 117 Mott-street, N. Y.

—Pacific Portrait Company, professors of the art of photography, will do good work for $2 per dozen. Sample 25c. Address, Box 1, Station D, New York.

—Pacific Portrait Company, professors of the art of photography, will do good work for $2 per dozen. Sample 25c. Address, Box 1, Station D, New York.

HONORING THE SAINTS.

Imposing Ceremonies in San Jose.

On Sunday for the first time in the history of St. Joseph's Church, says the San Jose Times, the canonization of a saint was celebrated there. Not in years had an event in the Society of Jesus been commemorated with more solemnity, and the time is out of mind when an occasion received more interest or in the ways of decoration and illumination, attendance and music. The occasion was that of the canonization of St Alphonsus Rodriguez by Pope Leo XIII. On next Sunday a similar celebration will take place in honor of St. Peter Claver, and on the following Sunday it will be repeated in honor of St. John Berchmans.

On Sunday, both at High Mass in the morning and at Vesper services, St. Joseph's Church was crowded. Every seat was occupied and many stood in the aisles and about the doors. But it was not until in the evening that the full beauty and magnificence of the decorations were fully exposed, from floor to ceiling the walls were covered with rich satin. Every pillar and arch was draped with the same material, which was embellished with strips of gold and golden stars. Around the entire auditorium, forming a deep frieze, long folds of crimson satin, while just above, on the mouldings, were placed in an unbroken line hundreds of fancy tapers, enclosed in crimson colored paper shades. On all sides of the building were hundreds of wax candles in all, there were between 1,500 and 2,000 of these lights. The main altar was draped in white silk, with golden stars and cloth of gold festoons, blending and enhancing the rich hue of the silk swung to and fro at regular intervals throughout the auditorium. The vestments of the celebrants and the assistants harmonized with the embellishments of the altar, and were the robes suitable to the celebration of the Mass. The decorations were designed by Father Congiato, S. J., and the designs executed by the Fathers of the College of Jesus. The cost of decorations was very great. In the morning Solemn High Mass was celebrated with the full musical strength of the church. In the evening Father Cataldo, S. J., delivered a most impressive sermon.

A DESOLATE LAND.

Ireland as Seen Through French Spectacles

The Paris correspondent of the Cork Examiner says: "A series of articles on Ireland in the Republique Francaise, by Mille. Alfred Tessier, are attracting notice. I may begin with the translation of a short passage from one of these articles, and before I do so I ought to mention that the description is particularly struck with the desolate appearance of the country. We see Irish nature lands, but where are the cattle? Nothing like a flock, only some small and pretty cows, shaggy with long wool, wandering about in little groups, now and then a sheep, and very rarely a goat with beard and horns, but close to the houses, two or three of those fine pigs that the Irish peasantry raise as much as his honey, and to the care of which they are as much a part of his family as his cow, or pony, or horse, or those of York, so generally renowned.

"The horses are rare, but what strikes the stranger most is to see so many in ruins, so ruined by fire. Then, to complete the picture, there are the wooden huts of the police, whose mission ought to be to protect the farms against malefactors, and not to massacre peaceable people, and to burn houses. Certainly this is the only country in the world in which the police ought to be in such strange work—Tiberius Nero. The talented lady soon after treated the reader to a sketch of the manner she describes—the rags, the bare feet of the women and children, etc., etc.

THE GOLDEN ROSE.

Presentation of the Protestant Serenity to the Princess Imperial of Brazil.

The recent presentation of the Golden Rose to the Princess Imperial of Brazil, was accompanied by a ceremony of striking and solemn magnificence. The Rose had previously been the same institution. The arrival of Rio de Janeiro, and on the morning of the day appointed for the presentation, the Rose was carried by the Ecclesiastical Curia to the Cathedral, where it was received by the cardinal. The Chapel Sistine Mass followed, celebrated pontifically by the special Nuncio, Mgr. Spolentini, before the prayer Placet the Nuncio took his seat on the faldstool prepared for him and received from the hands of the Secretary the Golden Rose, which during the function had remained on the high altar. The Princess was then escorted by the Consul d'Eu to the high altar, where, kneeling before the Nuncio, she received the precious gift from his hands, and then kneeling down she prayed for the occasion: "Heavens from our hands this Rose. We place it in thy hands according to the commission entrusted to us by the Holy Father Leo XIII. It is an emblem of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and, being the most beautiful of flowers, allegorizes the person of Christ. Receive it, therefore, and may Christ fill thee with good things, making thee like a tree bringing flowing waters." After kissing the Rose, and making a short and suitable prayer, the Princess, with a profound obeisance, retired, the ceremony having been accompanied throughout by soft music played by a select orchestral band. After the religious ceremony, the imperial family received the Ambassador of the Roman Curia in a State conversation. The usual honors following such celebrations have been distributed, Mgr. Spolentini receiving the Grand Cross of the Rose, the President of Council the Order of Pius IX., and Cardinal Rampolla one of the principal Orders of the Brazilian Empire.

Cardinal Moran.

His Eminence, Cardinal Moran, left Sydney for Sydney, a steamship chartered by his secretary, Dr. O'Haran. The sum raised was not as Vincentian Fathers, some of whom are to do missionary work in Sydney, and others to carry on a new building in the diocese of Bathurst. There are also other priests and several nuns. The latter, Mrs. Dr. Brady, of the Sydney Irish College, went to Naples on purpose to bid good-bye to the Cardinal and see him off.

St. Bridget's Restaurant and Hall.

The entertainment and soiree given in St. Bridget's parochial hall, Stockton Gulch, on Fifth-st. street, last Saturday evening, was very well attended, enjoyed, and the young people, who had kindly consented to display under whose direction the entertainment was given, may well feel proud of the admirable manner in which it passed off. The following programme was executed, and received well. Miss Panel Noble, Mr. Jas. F. McCarthy and Mr. Frank Shaw, Sonora, special musicians. The "Home Chorus," by the little boys of St. Bridget's school, drilled great credit on Prof. Schlosser, organist, and Mrs. Mary Hanch, pianist. Recitation, Master Willie Hodkins, recitation, Mr. Jas. F. McCarthy; recitation, Mr. Jas. F. McCarthy; recitation, Mr. W. J. Hyne. At the conclusion of the programme, the ever-popular and beloved Rev. Father Levinski, Pastor, then took place and received as follows: Lucky numbers, drawing numbers, 179, silver cake stand, 24; silver vase, 24; cow and calf, 3; French clock, 17; quilt paid valid, 21; ladies gold watch, 90; saddle horse, 299.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

Antrim.

There is nothing the boiler's house of the right of Belfast, and that of Orange Lodges, Protestant Associations, Unionist Associations, Unionist Associations, Unionist

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1888.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

TO THE SACRED HEART.

"HOME OF CHILDHOOD."

Sacred Heart! how calm thy rest—
Pillowed on thy Mother's breast,
Watched by her adoring love.

While Thy angels from above,
Shining hosts more dazzling than Hovering near Nazareth's town,
Faithful watch and ward to keep
O'er thy childhood's happy sleep.

Sacred Heart! the home and shrine
Of all grace. Heart divine!
Resting from the hour of birth
All the ills and woes of earth;
Sleeping time to help us share
All humiliating and its care;
Toiling with industrious hands,
Model meet for children's hands,
Bowing in obedience mild
To Joseph's mandate, Holy Child.

Heart adore with hosanna lyre,
Fountain pure of love's desire—
Till our lips in death grow dumb,
Ever our prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come."
Let our spirits yearn for home;
Bid us have no longer room
O'er life's pathway rude and long;
Bind us with thy honeyed strong,
Lead us through earth's vexed world
To thy Heart, O holy Child.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.
Mary Woodland, Cal., 1888.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE OLD OAK TREE.

The stately oak, the binding tree
That towers upon the standing hill,
Like sentinels. The elm,
Their branches shade the summer rill.

These huge old forest trees have stood
The storms of darker sept past,
And still are monarchs of the wood
In verity old by nature cast.

The sturdy, fair, the noble oak,
Slow sift beneath its branching leaves,
The bards of every age have woke
The dreams of love, the tale that grieves.

How oft around this ancient oak,
In summer's hot and sultry hour,
The shepherd and his flocks were laid
In cool repose beneath its bower.

And when the woodman's stroke swift fell
Those sturdy, grand old forest kings,
Their timbers all are fashioned well
In works of art, and useful things.

And when of old their timbers been
Were built into proud ships of war,
Like great leviathan above
The wreck of fleets o'er ocean far,

Our ocean ships have ploughed the waves,
And stood the battle's thunder shock;
They sank the foe in watery graves,
And all his boasted greatness mock.

Twas in oak ships that Paul Jones fought
His famous battles on the sea,
And o'er the ocean nobly wrought
America, first nation of the free.

Twas in her hearts of native oak
That England's valor proudly won
The drums that quashed Napoleon's sun.

Around in stately solitude,
With pleasant scenes that ever shore,
Beneath its branches—shadby still,
The birds in repose sweet shall enfold
Sweet lays by every gushing rill
To the oak tree, so dear and old.

JOHN F. MCDOWELL.
Virginia City, Nev., November, 1888.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

AS THE LAST SWEET NIGHT I'LL SPEND.

Ah! 'tis the last sweet night I'll spend
Around my youthful home,
For now morn will gild my path
Across the ocean's foam.

So let me talk, my loose friend,
With you awhile, dear Hugh,
And gently waft the fields to-night,
Such rapturous sight to view.

Beneath the castle's shady walls,
Where fry's breathing balm
And fragrant mosses hardly stir,
In the moon's pearly calm—

We'll sit upon the chamomile's leaves,
Reminding youthful days,
For yonder rocks jut up, bespoke
Anxious struggle with the sewing machine.
It was a marvel of ruffles and ribbons.
The unhappy children, too, were cut up
to their eyes.
"Shocks! Why, of course," she said,
raising her habitual frown into a "society"
smile. "If Aunt's coming a lot, you ridiculous eye. But I can't abide Grandpa's pipe. And he will sit in the front of the house with it. John says that it's his only pleasure. But I can't allow it, all the same. People ought not to cultivate such pleasures. But he's Irish, you know, poor old man."
Silence.
"Maybe you thought it strange that I called the children in. I came out just to apologize for it. But the real truth is," lowering her voice, "that grandpa has such an awful brogue and I'm desperately afraid Howard and Lucinda might catch it."
"If it had been small-pox, this sentence
could not have been breathed more solemnly
through her nose.
"I does seem hard, and John, though he was born in this country, sometimes thinks it's not quite right. But since I caught
Howard saying 'Day' at his uncle's, you can imagine my sensitiveness. I have interdicted
all communication."
"Mrs. Murphy," I began, feeling very hot and indignant, "you and your husband
—" I paused. One may do a great deal of harm by speaking the truth at the wrong time; so I changed my words, "seem
to suffer a great deal."
"Oh, we do, I assure you. Our friends are so nice. A succession of good family, like yours, for instance, would be a sunshine
in a cold perspiration, thinking of what an awful time we'll have when grandpa goes!
Of course our friends will come and we can't keep out his Irish relatives
they are common. I just put my foot down
the other day when the old man and some thing about his 'wake.' I settled him on that point. He said he didn't expect a very cheerful funeral if I had the dirging of it.
Much talk! I wonder an old man can live
and talk of death in such a frivolous way.
I wish I could get him into an institution.
I do dread a mixed funeral."
Howard began to sing, "I want to be an angel."
His mother listened with complacency.
The old man grumbles, too, because
the children are not baptized. It's time enough, I say, though John worries a little about it. I haven't quite decided on their names yet. Sometimes I think I'll call
Lincoln Regina'd. Pretty, isn't it? But
John's a Baptist, and I'll just take my time. Another thing, I continued this conversation with John, encouraged by my silence, "the old man wants a priest.
I offered him a little and Baptist spiritual consolation, but he got real mad. He's so set and ignorant. John does not like to go over to the priest's house. He doesn't go to church often now, though he was active enough when I married him, and if he had kept it up and the Catholics in our town hadn't been so fresh, I'd almost have joined his persuasion. One church is as good as another if the people are genteel
is it. I think the old man will have to die without his priest unless he gets very ill
indeed."
I made a mental note of this.
The next day, Brian Murphy saw Father
Lightly. The elegant Mrs. Murphy said he was "quite a gentleman, though she did not see how a minister of religion could expect to be continuous to recommend milk punch three times a day to a man with an foot in the grave."
After the old man had unburdened his mind to Father Lightly, he grew more serene. Even the spectacle of his two nephews, bareheaded and barefoot, starting out to join the little Baptists in the usual anniversary procession of the Brooklyn
Sunday schools only made him shake
his head and say:
"Poor poor children! If they had only had the luck to have had a decent Irish wake, they'd be happy enough. It's that brought us to this country."
One of the neighbors happened to have a wake, but it was sad enough to sorrow
by it and easy enough, while smoking a pipe, before drinking, to push the old man off the stoop, which the action always seemed to do the trick.
Madam was glad enough to get the old man out of the house. "He spoiled the look
of the stoop," she said and the old man was almost happy, when, just as we turned the corner, I in the decent pipe for him.
"Sore, sor," said Bridget, the servant,
meeting us on one of these pilgrimages,
"you never did a more blessed thing. Oh,
my heart's sore with the gentility of that
female bigund."
When we became more intimate, as we naturally did, as we went slowly along, in twilight under the cool shade of the park trees, he seemed anxious to find excuses for his son. He seemed to grow lighter in spirit with every trip, though his health did
not perceptibly decrease.
"John means well," he often said, "but
a man's meaning is nothing, if his wife doesn't mean the same thing. She means well, too, of course. I'm afraid it's my own fault that things are as they are. Sure,
my wife, and the other Nora, my daughter-
in-law!
I could hear her voice within, scolding
the servant in a strident way. Why had Howard been allowed to dabble in the water and why had not Lincoln his best apron on! These questions repeated for an hour, were very evident. "Howard and Lincoln," said the old man, in a low voice,
with a careful glance at the door, "they're the names of my grand children; and my son and my father's before me was William Murphy."
There was a bitterness in this simple statement which opened my eyes.
The quaint figure of the old man, stout,
clumsy, bent, dressed in an alpaca coat, out
of pocket of which the clay pipe peeped,
was out of place beside the prim brown
stone wall, with its "genteel" stucco ornaments,
and his rich brogue was out of place
beside the high-pitched tones of his sister, nervous and excessively genteel daughter-
in-law.
And somehow I thought of Mrs.
Piatt's "In Primrose Time," with a great sympathy for the old man.
In the fading twilight, beside this chromatic old man, who could not even be mown accord, the simple and blithe phrases
of his sprightly young sister, "Hide
coln, cried the shrill voice inside, "I told you to keep away from your grandfather."
The old man was indeed alone. By and
by, his son, lithe, slender, bright-eyed,
with a business manner and whiskers on in the approved way of the time, came up.
"Better, father?"
"Well enough, John."
And with a slight bow to me he passed into the house. He came out in a short time and helped the old man in.
I was comfortable enough where I was.
The dinner bell had not begun to ring yet,
so I took the old man's chair and watched the changing sunset, amused and wondered why the twilight to-night should be sadder
than usual.
Madam, the daughter-in law, came out
upon the stoop with Howard and Lincoln,
two thin, over grossed youngsters. Madam had evidently been handsome once. Her surroundings, over anxiety about household matters and the necessity of making a good
an appearance before neighbors, had wrinkled
the light skin and thanned the blonde hair which she tied in a small knot at the back of her head. Her frock, or wrapper, or gown, or whatever it was, bespoke anxious struggle with the sewing machine.
It was a marvel of ruffles and ribbons.
The unhappy children, too, were cut up
to their eyes.
"Shocks! Why, of course," she said,
raising her habitual frown into a "society"
smile. "If Aunt's coming a lot, you
ridiculous eye. But I can't abide Grandpa's pipe. And he will sit in the front of the house with it. John says that it's his only pleasure. But I can't allow it, all the same. People ought not to cultivate such pleasures. But he's Irish, you know, poor old man."
Silence.
"Maybe you thought it strange that I called the children in. I came out just to apologize for it. But the real truth is,"
lowering her voice, "that grandpa has
such an awful brogue and I'm desperately afraid Howard and Lincoln might catch it."
"If it had been small-pox, this sentence
could not have been breathed more solemnly
through her nose.
"I does seem hard, and John, though he was born in this country, sometimes thinks
it's not quite right. But since I caught
Howard saying 'Day' at his uncle's, you can imagine my sensitiveness. I have interdicted
all communication."
"Mrs. Murphy," I began, feeling very hot and indignant, "you and your husband
—" I paused. One may do a great deal of harm by speaking the truth at the wrong time; so I changed my words, "seem
to suffer a great deal."
"Oh, we do, I assure you. Our friends are so nice. A succession of good family, like
yours, for instance, would be a sunshine
in a cold perspiration, thinking of what an awful time we'll have when grandpa goes!
Of course our friends will come and we can't keep out his Irish relatives
they are common. I just put my foot down
the other day when the old man and some thing about his 'wake.' I settled him on that point. He said he didn't expect a very cheerful funeral if I had the dirging of it.
Much talk! I wonder an old man can live
and talk of death in such a frivolous way.
I wish I could get him into an institution.
I do dread a mixed funeral."
Howard began to sing, "I want to be an
angel."
His mother listened with complacency.
The old man grumbles, too, because
the children are not baptized. It's time enough, I say, though John worries a little about it. I haven't quite decided on their names yet. Sometimes I think I'll call
Lincoln Regina'd. Pretty, isn't it? But
John's a Baptist, and I'll just take my time. Another thing, continued this conversation with John, encouraged by my silence, "the old man wants a priest.
I offered him a little and Baptist spiritual consolation, but he got real mad. He's so set and ignorant. John does not like to go over to the priest's house. He doesn't go to church often now, though he was active enough when I married him, and if he had kept it up and the Catholics in our town hadn't been so fresh, I'd almost have joined his persuasion. One church is as good as another if the people are genteel
is it. I think the old man will have to die without his priest unless he gets very ill
indeed."
I made a mental note of this.
The next day, Brian Murphy saw Father
Lightly. The elegant Mrs. Murphy said he was "quite a gentleman, though she did not see how a minister of religion could expect to be continuous to recommend milk punch three times a day to a man with
an foot in the grave."
After the old man had unburdened his mind to Father Lightly, he grew more serene. Even the spectacle of his two nephews, bareheaded and barefoot, starting out to join the little Baptists in the usual anniversary procession of the Brooklyn
Sunday schools only made him shake
his head and say:
"Poor children! If they had only
had the luck to have had a decent Irish wake, they'd be happy enough. It's that brought us to this country."
One of the neighbors happened to have a wake, but it was sad enough to sorrow
by it and easy enough, while smoking a pipe, before drinking, to push the old man
off the stoop, which the action always
seemed to do the trick.
Madam was glad enough to get the old man out of the house. "He spoiled the look
of the stoop," she said and the old man was almost happy, when, just as we turned the corner, I in the decent pipe for him.
"Sore, sor," said Bridget, the servant,
meeting us on one of these pilgrimages,
"you never did a more blessed thing. Oh,
my heart's sore with the gentility of that
female bigund."
When we became more intimate, as we naturally did, as we went slowly along, in twilight under the cool shade of the park
trees, he seemed anxious to find excuses for his son. He seemed to grow lighter in spirit with every trip, though his health did
not perceptibly decrease.
"John means well," he often said, "but
a man's meaning is nothing, if his wife doesn't mean the same thing. She means well, too, of course. I'm afraid it's my own fault that things are as they are. Sure,
my wife, and the other Nora, my daughter-
in-law!
I could hear her voice within, scolding
the servant in a strident way. Why had Howard been allowed to dabble in the water and why had not Lincoln his best apron on! These questions repeated for an hour, were very evident. "Howard and Lincoln," said the old man, in a low voice,
with a careful glance at the door, "they're
the names of my grand children; and my son and my father's before me was William Murphy."
There was a bitterness in this simple
statement which opened my eyes.
The quaint figure of the old man, stout,
clumsy, bent, dressed in an alpaca coat, out
of pocket of which the clay pipe peeped,
was out of place beside the prim brown
stone wall, with its "genteel" stucco ornaments,
and his rich brogue was out of place
beside the high-pitched tones of his sister, nervous and excessively genteel daughter-
in-law.
And somehow I thought of Mrs.
Piatt's "In Primrose Time," with a great sympathy for the old man. He seemed to grow lighter in spirit with every trip.

Literary Miscellany.

An Every-Day Story.

Maurice Francis Egan in Catholic Home Almanac for 1889.

The old man had worked hard. The coin in his reddened hands were swollen.
As he sat in the sun, with his head thrown back against the wall, one could see how white his forehead was in comparison with the sun burned and weather tanned skin of the rest of his face.
His eyes were clear and blue, with an occasional sparkle in them which was quenched soon enough. Only once he showed a sudden interest in what was going on around him. It was when a hand came struck up "The Kerry Dance." He showed a row of well preserved teeth, such as are seldom seen in old men born on this side of the water, and said:
"Twas Nora's song. And it always brings back to me the old days in Kerry, before her mother and me ever thought of coming to America."
The sparkle went out of his eyes, as his daughter-in-law, a thin, yellow haired, ex-organic Connecticut woman came down the stoop and called his little grandchild into the house, which was part of a long row of Brooklyn brown stone flats.
The old man sighed, pulled out his pipe, and suddenly put it back again, with a furtive look at the door, from which his nervous and keen daughter-in-law had just disappeared. The old man closed his eyes.
The "Kerry Dance" faded down the street.
"O, the joy of the Kerry dancing." The sunset, pink and gold and purple that day, made a background for the brilliant spark which the arm of liberty spiked in the bay. Water and land seemed one, blended in a lake of slowly changing tints. From the puff on the other side came a sultry breeze laden with the scent of clover.
Across the lots opposite, late at this season of the year smooth as a tennis lawn, a little child, in a red frock, moved slowly, carrying a steaming pail towards the cloek factory, where one or two lights already gleamed like stars. The open, now far down the street, softened its notes, but still played the "Kerry Dance."
What was the old man thinking of in this alien land? Hoeyes were closed. A flash of light shone on the cross of the church which spires among the trees. It touched his eyelids and he looked up in a startled way and gasped his sick.
"This is peace," I said.
He sighed, "there is no peace for an old man like me, so, on this side of the grave."
"Why, you ought to be peaceful, and happy, too."
"I am alone."
There was a soft cadence in his voice and a sad one.
"Alone! Haven't you your son and your two grand children and your daughter-
in law?"
I could hear her voice within, scolding
the servant in a strident way. Why had Howard been allowed to dabble in the water and why had not Lincoln his best apron on! These questions repeated for an hour, were very evident. "Howard and Lincoln," said the old man, in a low voice,
with a careful glance at the door, "they're
the names of my grand children; and my son and my father's before me was William Murphy."
There was a bitterness in this simple
statement which opened my eyes.
The quaint figure of the old man, stout,
clumsy, bent, dressed in an alpaca coat, out
of pocket of which the clay pipe peeped,
was out of place beside the prim brown
stone wall, with its "genteel" stucco ornaments, and his rich brogue was out of place
beside the high-pitched tones of his sister, nervous, and excessively genteel daughter-
in-law.
And somehow I thought of Mrs.
Piatt's "In Primrose Time," with a great sympathy for the old man. He seemed to grow lighter in spirit with every trip.
In the fading twilight, beside this chromatic old man, who could not even be mown accord, the simple and blithe phrases
of his sprightly young sister, "Hide
coln, cried the shrill voice inside, "I told
you to keep away from your grandfather."
The old man was indeed alone. By and
by, his son, lithe, slender, bright-eyed,
with a business manner and whiskers on
in the approved way of the time, came up.
"Better, father?"
"Well enough, John."
And with a slight bow to me he passed into the house. He came out in a short time and helped the old man in.
I was comfortable enough where I was.
The dinner bell had not begun to ring yet,
so I took the old man's chair and watched
the changing sunset, amused and wondered why the twilight to-night should be sadder
than usual.
Madam, the daughter-in law, came out
upon the stoop with Howard and Lincoln,
two thin, over grossed youngsters. Madam had evidently been handsome once. Her surroundings, over anxiety about household matters and the necessity of making a good
an appearance before neighbors, had wrinkled
the light skin and thanned the blonde hair
which she tied in a small knot at the back of her head. Her frock, or wrapper, or gown, or whatever it was, bespoke anxious struggle with the sewing machine.
It was a marvel of ruffles and ribbons.
The unhappy children, too, were cut up
to their eyes.
"Shocks! Why, of course," she said,
raising her habitual frown into a "society"
smile. "If Aunt's coming a lot, you ridiculous eye. But I can't abide Grandpa's pipe. And he will sit in the front of the house with it. John says that it's his only pleasure. But I can't allow it, all the same. People ought not to cultivate such pleasures. But he's Irish, you know, poor old man."
Silence.
"Maybe you thought it strange that I called the children in. I came out just to apologize for it. But the real truth is,"
lowering her voice, "that grandpa has
such an awful brogue and I'm desperately
afraid Howard and Lincoln might catch it."
"If it had been small-pox, this sentence
could not have been breathed more solemnly
through her nose.
"I does seem hard, and John, though he was born in this country, sometimes thinks
it's not quite right. But since I caught
Howard saying 'Day' at his uncle's, you can imagine my sensitiveness. I have interdicted
all communication."
"Mrs. Murphy," I began, feeling very hot and indignant, "you and your husband
—" I paused. One may do a great deal of harm by speaking the truth at the wrong time; so I changed my words, "seem
to suffer a great deal."
"Oh, we do, I assure you. Our friends are so nice. A succession of good family, like
yours, for instance, would be a sunshine
in a cold perspiration, thinking of what an awful time we'll have when grandpa goes!
Of course our friends will come and we can't keep out his Irish relatives
they are common. I just put my foot down
the other day when the old man and some thing about his 'wake.' I settled him on that point. He said he didn't expect a very cheerful funeral if I had the dirging of it.
Much talk! I wonder an old man can live
and talk of death in such a frivolous way.
I wish I could get him into an institution.
I do dread a mixed funeral."
Howard began to sing, "I want to be an
angel."
His mother listened with complacency.
The old man grumbles, too, because
the children are not baptized. It's time enough, I say, though John worries a little about it. I haven't quite decided on their names yet. Sometimes I think I'll call
Lincoln Regina'd. Pretty, isn't it? But
John's a Baptist, and I'll just take my time. Another thing, continued this conversation with John, encouraged by my silence, "the old man wants a priest.
I offered him a little and Baptist spiritual consolation, but he got real mad. He's so set and ignorant. John does not like to go over to the priest's house. He doesn't go to church often now, though he was active enough when I married him, and if he had kept it up and the Catholics in our town hadn't been so fresh, I'd almost have joined his persuasion. One church is as good as another if the people are genteel
is it. I think the old man will have to die without his priest unless he gets very ill
indeed."
I made a mental note of this.
The next day, Brian Murphy saw Father
Lightly. The elegant Mrs. Murphy said he was "quite a gentleman, though she did not see how a minister of religion could expect to be continuous to recommend milk punch three times a day to a man with
an foot in the grave."
After the old man had unburdened his mind to Father Lightly, he grew more serene. Even the spectacle of his two nephews, bareheaded and barefoot, starting out to join the little Baptists in the usual anniversary procession of the Brooklyn Sunday schools only made him shake
his head and say:
"Poor children! If they had only
had the luck to have had a decent Irish wake, they'd be happy enough. It's that brought us to this country."
One of the neighbors happened to have a wake, but it was sad enough to sorrow
by it and easy enough, while smoking a pipe, before drinking, to push the old man
off the stoop, which the action always
seemed to do the trick.
Madam was glad enough to get the old man out of the house. "He spoiled the look
of the stoop," she said and the old man was almost happy, when, just as we turned the corner, I in the decent pipe for him.
"Sore, sor," said Bridget, the servant,
meeting us on one of these pilgrimages,
"you never did a more blessed thing. Oh,
my heart's sore with the gentility of that
female bigund."
When we became more intimate, as we naturally did, as we went slowly along, in twilight under the cool shade of the park
trees, he seemed anxious to find excuses for his son. He seemed to grow lighter in spirit with every trip, though his health did
not perceptibly decrease.
"John means well," he often said, "but
a man's meaning is nothing, if his wife doesn't mean the same thing. She means well, too, of course. I'm afraid it's my own fault that things are as they are. Sure,
my wife, and the other Nora, my daughter-
in-law!

THE MONITOR.

PASTORAL LETTER AND OFFICIAL NEWS OF THE ARCHDIOCESE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published in the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1888.

THE "Christmas Monitor."

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All press and poetical contributions intended for the forthcoming issue of THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR must reach this office by December 15th, so as to insure their appearance in our Christmas issue, which will be published December 19th next.

THE CHRISTMAS "MONITOR."

SEND FOR COPIES AT ONCE.

Subscribers and others who desire to procure extra copies of the Christmas Monitor to send to Friends throughout the United States, to Ireland, or any other portion of the globe, should send in their orders at once, so as not to be disappointed, as there is always a great demand for the Christmas Monitor. Ten Cents is the price of each of the two-page Illustrated Christmas Monitor, filled with the best Catholic literature of all we charge for the Illustrated Monitor, 6th, so as to insure their receiving it by the Christmas Mail. Address, Editor Monitor, 414 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.

PASTORAL LETTER

MIXED MARRIAGES.

Inasmuch as many Mixed Marriages are constantly occurring in this Archiepiscopal Province, it is considered wise to keep the law regulating such marriages before the faithful, so they may avoid scandal, and we print this Pastoral again for general information.

TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO:

Dearly Beloved:—Appointed by the Vicar of Christ, as we are, to watch over your spiritual welfare—may, placed by the Holy Ghost though most unworthy on our part, to govern you in religious matters, having, moreover, to give an account of your souls to the Divine Judge—were are constrained by a sense of duty and responsibility to address you some words of admonition. For, although we are aware that many among you are dutiful children of the Church, and delight in reverent and obeying its holy laws, there are others that we trust they are few; who imagine that the Church is too rigid, and that they are at liberty to dispense themselves from its rules—to obey or to disobey. But the Church, like Christ, is the same yesterday, to-day and forever; it is the same here as in other parts of the world; its sacred laws, enacted under the guidance of the Divine Spirit, are as binding here as in any other place.

Therefore, we deprecate the haste of those who, when about to marry, will not give timely notice to their Pastors, nor wait for the due publication of the banns; we heartily deplore the bad dispositions of those who, under the guise of marriage, receive the holy Sacrament of Matrimony without any religious jurisprudence; and we sincerely regret the negligence of those who fail to obtain for themselves the treasure of the nuptial benediction as a pledge of the favor and protection of Heaven. Too, above all, we deplore, as being the most disastrous consequences, the rashness of those who recklessly make mutual engagements without carefully examining whether in the persons of their choice they possess the qualities required in good husbands or wives. Now, among the qualities which a Catholic should seek in a Christian before matrimonial engagement, and, in fact, before beginning or contemplating any mutual affection, is the unexceptable treasure of the Catholic Faith.

Hence the Church abhors, and has ever abhorred, mixed marriages; she does not allow them to be celebrated inside of her temples; nor with her sacred vestments, nor with the imparting of any blessing. And this attitude and those laws of the Church are founded on very obvious reasons. For, leaving aside those happy instances in which the non-Catholic party respects in the Catholic the right of the free exercise of religion and of the Catholic education of the offspring, and treating the question on its own merits, it is evident, in the first place, that the faith of the Catholic is naturally liable to be weakened, if not seriously injured, by the absence of all faith or different belief in the other party. In the second place, and, frequently, the actual non-Catholic and sometimes anti-Christian exercise of one spiritual guide, must naturally and necessarily dampen, materially injure, or wholly paralyze the faith of the offspring. It also happens that before the children are sufficiently old to understand and profess their religion, the Catholic parent is carried away by death; and in this case it cannot reasonably be expected that the surviving parent, who does not value the Catholic faith for himself, will take much interest, or any interest at all, in securing it to the children. Would to heaven that such experience did not superabound in these cases, and that we were never called on to mourn over the deplorable results which we have recorded.

Hence, every Catholic young man and young woman should validly and seriously reflect on all this before entertaining the thought of even the possibility of an engagement, and should also take counsel, in due time, of persons and respective Pastors. Instead of doing so, there are some Catholics who, disregarding the authority of the Church of Jesus Christ, and almost abjuring their faith, apply for the celebration of their marriage by a civil officer or Protestant minister, not only exposing themselves thereby to make a contract which has no force before God, and consequently does not prevent their intercourse from being a horrible concubinage, but also committing really a sin of sacrilege—partaking of the sacrament of Matrimony in a sacrilegious communion received at the hands of a minister of a magician. This language may appear strong, but, we fear it is scarcely strong enough to awaken the indifferent Catholic to a sense of his duty—the only object we have in view.

We, therefore, ordain: 1st. That the Pastor, unless authorized by the Ordinary shall not assist at the marriage of those who will not have applied to him at least three days previous to their marriage; 2nd. That none can be married without having furnished due vouchers for their freedom, and, when both parties are Catholics, without the due publication of the banns; 3rd. That in no case whatever can a Catholic be married by any other person than a Priest, without subjecting himself to the censure of excommunication; 4thly. That when the parties are entitled to a nuptial benediction, the Pastors shall see that the special Mass for that benediction shall accompany or follow the celebration of the marriage; 5thly. That, as the Holy See teaches, there may be a grave cause for a dispensation for a mixed marriage, and that the usual promises must be made—otherwise it would be a grave sin to contract.

Finally, we direct that this circular be read from the Altar at high or last Mass and Vespers, on the first Sunday of Advent every year, in all the Churches of this Province.

Yours sincerely in Christ,
✠PATRICK W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.
✠FRANCIS MORA,
Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles.
✠PATRICK MANUCY,
Bishop of Sacramento.

—In the current issue of the Forum, Mr. Edward Atkinson, the notable statistician, has this to say concerning the generosity of people who die wealthy in this world's drama: "It is probable, to say the least, that fully 90 per cent of the whole body of the people spend nearly all that they can earn, of this 90 per cent, a portion may be setting aside a moderate part of their earnings, perhaps five in a moderate way. Of the remaining 10 per cent, a part are enough to protect themselves against want in their latter years, and a very small part may become rich, and then spend nothing for others."

—An Eastern exchange reports the case of a wealthy man in its vicinity who pays cash even for his church services. He does not have a pew in church, but goes twice a year and drops a nickel in the collection plate each time.

—Catholics residing in the Diocese of Sacramento will please bear in mind that the annual collection for this orphans will be taken up next Sunday.

The Season of Advent.

With next Sunday the season of Advent will begin. Advent is a time of prayer and penance which the Church has designated for her children in order that they might prepare their souls for the worthy reception of the Sacraments on the great festival of the Nativity of our Divine Lord.

A well-known theologian has made this striking comparison between Advent and other recurring events in the annual calendar of the Church: "What rigor are ordinary festivals, what Lent is to Easter, what the four thousand years was to the coming of the Messias—that Advent is to Christmas."

The Catholic Church neglects no means whatever in order to revive in the hearts of all her children the fervor of the first Christians. Is this solicitude not the part of our Holy Mother to go unanswered? Is the false of Bethlehem Whose we expect less beautiful, less holy, less worthy of our love, that we should neglect to make Him, who as an infant in His Mother's arms, He received the adoration of shepherds, kings and sages? Has the Son of God ceased to be the Heavenly Consoler of our human frailties or the Merciful Sufferer for our sins? Is His presence in the Blessed Sacrament less beneficial or the influence of His Body and Blood in our souls less beneficial? Those are the questions every Catholic should put to himself in order to become stimulated with the wisdom of the Church herself in pointing out to her children the time for caution and charity, for alms-giving and atonement, so that he may be prepared to receive the Babe of Bethlehem with a soul adorned with as fair a dwelling as that of the ever Blessed Mother who gave Him birth.

Who Shall Decide?

The discussion on the topic "No Salvation Outside the Catholic Church," which has been going on in some Eastern papers for sometime between Father Muller, C. SS. R., and several Pastor Fathers, seems to be far of an end from any solution. In fact we may say that the matter has become more a war of rancorous recrimination than anything else.

A new "disturbing element" has also been injected into the heated discussion by the following generically-opposed opinions concerning the merits of Father Muller's late work entitled "No Salvation Out of the Church," regarding the correctness of which Archbishop Gross, of Oregon, has written this unqualified endorsement.

PORTLAND, OREGON, Oct. 27, 1888.

Rev. Very Dear Father:—Your book, "No Salvation Out of the Church," came duly to hand. I have given it a very careful perusal. Now, in my humble opinion it is of any weight with you, you may rest assured that I am entirely of the views expressed by you concerning the necessity of belonging to the Catholic Church to obtain eternal saving life. Moreover, I believe that the Church should be the Church Exclusive in these United States. Often unwarrantably I am pained to believe it is the fact, that liberal Christianity creeps into the sanctuary. I have long been of the opinion that a deeper knowledge of Rome would be much needed for our clergy especially. Hence I have never been satisfied with the manner in which dogma is ordinarily taught in our seminaries. The seminarians are sinking under the weight of Moral Theology, to the fourth rate handbook of theology.

Hence I have never been satisfied with the manner in which dogma is ordinarily taught in our seminaries. The seminarians are sinking under the weight of Moral Theology, to the fourth rate handbook of theology, that the day I have also been of the opinion that a deeper knowledge of Rome would be much needed for our clergy especially. Hence I have never been satisfied with the manner in which dogma is ordinarily taught in our seminaries. The seminarians are sinking under the weight of Moral Theology, to the fourth rate handbook of theology, that the day

A Reply to a Musing, Canting Methodist Preacher.

In last week's Christian Advocate Rev. C. V. Anthony, of one wing of the splintered system of sectarianism invented by John Wesley, makes a very unchristian, untruthful and abortive attempt to wriggle out of the unenviable attitude the Monitor placed him in when we criticised his comments on Hiram Lassere's "Four Gospels," a few week's ago.

As far as the Honorable Lassere goes, he has, under Advocate's command, Dr. Anthony has merely dodged the question, squirming in every sentence and faltering in every paragraph. He references his first attack about the Pope having given his approbation to Hiram Lassere's book, when the Pope's Letter never mentions any approval of anything connected with the book, except the object Hiram Lassere had in undertaking such a work. As an apologist from our former article, the object might be good, but the means employed to arrive at the completion of that object ought not to be accomplished with the law of God and the Church, and hence ecclesiastical condemnation would follow—no matter how high or how holy the object might be.

Dr. Anthony, like all general rantcats of the Methodist persuasion, seems to be most awfully affected with anti-Christian zeal for Jesus. No doubt he is a sincere Christian, but he is a Christian who is without sin in the Wesleyan camp first cast a stone at them! What Jesus ever offered to help to raise a regiment of soldiers to defend the cause of American Independence as John Wesley did? What Jesus ever publicly rejoiced over the victory of English troops and the defeat of Washington's army at Revolutionary days as John Wesley did? What Jesus ever ran away with another man's wife as hundreds of Methodist preachers have done? What Jesus ever preached inflammatory political harangues from his pulpit against the government which shelter and protected him? What Jesus ever sowed the seeds of religious rancor and sectarian strife in peaceable communities as Methodist preachers have perpetually performing?

Need we carry this parallel of character between the sanctified sons of Christ and the sanctified sons of Belial any further? We think not. On the one side we see a body of holy men devoting their lives constantly, humbly and perseveringly to the service of God, giving up home, comfort, society, and what the world calls pleasure, and riches, and honor, in order to imitate Him after whom their Superintendent Society is named, in obedience, poverty and chastity. And, on the other hand, what do we behold? A body of conceitedness, malicious men, infallible in their fanaticism and intolerant in their ignorance. Men here to hate those who seek to gain heaven by other roads than the rocky, rutty and roundabout labyrinth which leads into heaven, and which travelers thrown will find its end closed up by the sign "No Thoroughfare."

Black-hooded bigotry never yet called down the blessing of God on any cause, and until Methodist preachers get rid of their anti-Christian intolerance against their fellow-men, their rash and ridiculous fanaticism will only throw a shadow of darkness on saving the souls of religious dissent among Christian people, and the world will be justified in believing them to be more sinful than saintly, more hypocritical than heavenly.

What a contrast do we not behold in the Christian characteristics of those two bodies? The Methodist preachers stand self-condemned before the world, whilst, on the part of the Jesuit Fathers, the Monitor can justly defy any body of men in any matter how black their bigotry may be—to substantiate a single charge of disloyalty to the land, or its laws ever brought against them. Their self sacrifice, zeal and good will after the self-abnegation of the Son of God among His earthly career in that respect, is the same as current Methodist preachers! Their morals are modeled in the practices that Christianity teaches, and the Christian world recognizes as such, for their Wesleyan sneering Methodist calumniators. Prayer and self-sacrifice have been their constant studying hours, while politics permanent every action of a Methodist preacher's week day life, and yet, they are the only religious which in politics in every instance, "Jesuit."

Broad acres, as a rule, fattening the sun, and consequently, producing the dying effect upon the jungle. If the stricken with epidemics from the general climate which Jesuits overrun, they, with a wise and holy forethought, have ever been the first to leave the sick and dying, and, in the instance of Methodist preachers, to leave the sick and dying behind them, with intimations to bring them up in and to calumniate them to private friends and to the world, as the result of life-long Wesleyan preachers who have to have been sent into this world in order to make the world better, and to prepare for the Jesuits everything, the most in regard to orders of Nature.

The Nature Spirits of Methodism are so strong in place to be very mild and good, and as Dr. Anthony has tried to blacken the character of the Jesuits, we have to compare with the evangelical rights of the black-hooded bigotry, he must not blame and we must be excused for the comparison. Jesuits are not here let us say, as bigots Protestant to compare with great commercial and family men as the Jesuits, and the Jesuits are not, as Dr. Anthony tries to make out, the Jesuits are the great center of Catholic and Christian civilization, and, as such, they are the objects of the attacks of the Antichrist, they are the objects of the attacks of the Antichrist, they are the objects of the attacks of the Antichrist

Farm and Home.

For Husbands.

Perhaps some wives would like to cut out the following and paste it in their husbands hats.

1. Always come home good tempered, leaving toothache cares behind, and be most amiable. Remember that your wife should be a good housekeeper and a domestic woman. Can you cook?

2. Make yourself agreeable to your wife and friends, and do not sit glum all the evening, looking utterly bored.

3. Be tolerant to your wife's faults, and do not expect perfection until you have first become perfect yourself.

4. Be punctual at meals. Remember a cook cannot keep a dinner waiting without its being spoiled. Do not expect meals are ready at your beck and call.

5. Do not expect your wife to keep accounts, unless you take the trouble to keep your own correctly.

6. Dress as well and as neatly as your means will allow, and be careful not to put your best trousers wet, as hagg knows are a thing no woman can respect.

7. Be as kind and attentive to your wife as you were before your marriage, and remember she has got no pipe to go to for comfort.

What Every Woman Ought to Know.

—Iron calicoes on the tight side and they will keep clean a longer time.

—Clean shelves by boiling in lye half a day; then wash in fresh, water till clean.

—Iron silk on the wrong side when quite damp; if silored, use an iron which is not very hot, to avoid fading it.

—Prevent dust rising from the floor by washing it with suds in which a little ammonia is poured a teacupful of common molasses.

—Preserve white satin dresses through the winter by wrapping them in blue paper, with brown paper outside, sewn together at the edges.

—Prevent carcasses from burning dull and caking on the wick by keeping the oil until used, in a can tightly corked both at the neck and spout.

—Make brooms last longer and sweep better by wetting them in boiling soapsuds once a week, and when not in use, hang them up or invert them.

—Fish may be sent in cooler water, while looking through a hole in the ice, by covering the observer with a blanket so as to exclude the direct rays of the sun.

—Preserve summer ribbons and silks by putting them away wrapped in brown paper; white paper, on the account of the chloride of lime used in its manufacture, produces discoloration.

The Hot-Water Cure.

It may seem a startling assertion, but it is unerring a fact, that more persons are to-day taking hot water for various ailments than any single drug in our pharmacopeia. The spread in the belief in the medicinal value of hot water has travelled chiefly by word of mouth. To apply hot water medicinally could not have become so universal a custom unless great benefit had been bestowed by it upon many.

It was first employed in 1856, according to Dr. Cutter, by Dr. J. H. Salsbury, who made use of it in series of experiments on ourselves upon animals and men, with reference to the effects of local upon the animal economy as a cause and cure of disease. These experiments were commented upon by the London Lancet as "valuable American contribution to medicine," according to Dr. Cutter.

The benefits that result from the internal use of hot water must be due, in part, at least, if not wholly, to heat, said Dr. Ambrose L. Ranney in a recent lecture before the Academy of Medicine, in this city. Some of its effects are manifested almost immediately in organs not connected directly with the digestive apparatus.—Dio Lewis.

Killing Herself with Gloves.

A physician of Syracuse, N. Y., says that one of the strangest cases that has come under his observation in practice is a young lady of that city who is addicted to the habit of chewing gloves. For several years her friends and physicians have been fighting to break her of the habit which she carries to such excess that her life will be the penalty paid. At times she breaks herself of the habit for a few weeks, but sooner or later steals away to buy a quantity of the gloves. She has been known to dispose of a quarter of a pound in a day. Druggists have been warned not to give her the opium, but there are so many stores whose proprietors have not been called upon that she has no difficulty in obtaining a supply. Excess in the use of opium is considered more harmful to the system than the use of opium.

The Depth of Sleep.

The depth of sleep has been the novel subject of investigation by two German physicists, working upon the principle that the depth of sleep is proportional to the time required to waken. Ingenious experiments showed that, with a perfectly healthy man, slumber during the first hour is very light. After an hour and a quarter the depth of sleep increases very rapidly, and reaches its maximum a trifle more than two hours. Two slumber then lightens gradually, but reaction into deeper sleep occurs after five and a half hours of repose, after which gradual waking proceeds. Imperfect health or unusual exertion produced marked irregularities.

Eat Fruit.

Fruit-eating must obtain more than it does, not as a luxury, but as a hygienic measure. Our lives are becoming impaired, and most eating is a luxury which is incompatible with many generations without deterioration of the vigors.

Fruit should be kept where the children can help themselves to it. A barrel of apples will often save a fit of sickness. Three or four eaten every day will do them ever so much good. Never scrimp your children's supply of fruit if you can help it.

Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is more easily prevented than cured. The great point is not to catch cold or expose one's self in damp clothing or on damp soil. The disease is most frequent among soldiers, sailors, farmers and others who get wet or go with wet feet.

Woolen clothing is best to prevent it; a daily bath is important and only a moderate amount of meat should be eaten. The perspiration of rheumatism is very acid, and has a sour smell and causes much discomfort. The disease is often cured by Turkish baths, a bread, milk and fruit diet, with free use of lemon juice.

The Model Mother.

Happy would all Christian mothers be if at the end of their lives they could say they were faithful to their children even in death. And unhappy must those mothers be who hand over their children to the influence of a false education, and when they are dying know that are leaving behind them children who will not even say a prayer for their souls. Their own hearts 'a sword shall pierce,' but their sorrows shall never lise crowned with joy, like Mary's, the Mother of God all meeds by the cut.

Family Fun.

A Matrimonial Catechism.

"Now, darling, I promised my mother that my wife should be a good housekeeper and a domestic woman. Can you cook?"

"I can," said she, swallowing a great big lump in her throat.

"Can you make good bread? That is the fundamental principle of all housekeeping."

"Yes I went into a bakery and learned how to make all kinds of bread." She added under her breath, "Maybe."

"And can you do your own dressmaking? I am comparatively a poor man love, and dressmaker bills would soon bankrupt me."

"Yes," she said frankly, "I can make everything I wear, especially pillars bonnets."

"You are a jewel," he cried with enthusiasm, "come to my arms."

"Wait a minute there's no hurry," she said coolly. "If I my turn to ask a few questions. Can you sew a button and darn in cotton?"

"Why my love I should hire that work done."

"Can you make your coats, trousers, and other wearing apparel?"

"But that isn't to the purpose."

"Can you build a house, dig ditches, plant corpses, and—"

"I am not a professional."

"Neither am I. It has taken most of my life to acquire the education and accomplishments that attach you to me. But as soon as I have learned all the professions you speak of I will send you my card. Adieu, sweet," and she stepped away.

And the disconsolate young man went to the nearest drug store and bought a twelve-for a quarter cigar, with which he speedily reclosed himself.

A Miser's Economy.

There lives, a short distance from the town of Vale, Helena, a man of extraordinary meanness.

His day he was starting out for town to do his weekly shopping, when his wife came out and asked him to buy her a darning needle.

"What's the matter with the one I bought you last winter?"

"The pea's broken," she replied.

"Bring the needle here," said he; "I'm not going to throw any such extravagance. I'll have the needle repaired."

The woman was wise in her generation, and made no protest. She brought out the broken needle.

The economical farmer rode into St. Helens, and stopped first at all at the blacksmith's shop. He took out the needle and handed it to the blacksmith. "I want that mended," he said.

The blacksmith knew his customer, and keeping his face partially straight, said that the eye should be made whole in no hour's time. The farmer rode away, and the blacksmith walked across the street and bought a new needle for a nickel.

When the farmer called again the blacksmith gave him the new needle. The farmer looked at the smooth polished surface of the steel, and remarked that it was a good job.

"How much will it be?" said he.

"A quarter," said the blacksmith, and the farmer, as he paid it, remarked that he knew the needle could be mended, but his wife would have gone to the expense of buying a new one if he hadn't interfered.

Experience Teaches.

"Mister" said a countryman to a Sixth avenue dry goods clerk, "I want to get a shawl for a party little girl down at Starlin's Corners. You needn't say nothin' 'bout it to the newspapers, cos I want to keep it quiet, but we're goin' to be married in a month an' I'm thinkin' of givin' her a shawl. S'thinks' hang my—hat! scuse.

"I can show you a fine one in India shawls, sir."

"N no, I guess I don't want them. I had a pair of cashmeres once, an' I'm dinged if the boeds didn't all cosse off."

He Was Embarrassed.

Jinks was a young man who had been married about a year, and he was telling a friend how different he was when single. "Were you much embarrassed when you popped the question?" asked his friend. "Embarrassed! I should say I was. I owed $1 500 for board and clothes and one thing or other, and didn't have a darned cent to pay it with."

His First Offence.

Mi s Gotham (to Mr. Wabash recently returning from abroad)—I suppose you were at court while in London, Mr. Wabash!

Mr. Wabash (uneasily)—Well er-yes, Miss Gotham; but only once, and then I got off with a merely nominal fine.

Filial Solicitude.

"I know we are poor, dear papa," said Evelyn, nestling her head against his shoulder, "but Edwalenne is brave and hopeful and he says that love will make it easy. "I know it will," said old Hyam, grimly. "He's made away with six tons of parlor coal and $72 worth of gas since Christmas, and it's next winter that's worrying me."

A Poor Compliment

Husband—Prof. Wideband paid you a very fine compliment after dinner last night, my dear.

Wife—Oh, did he; what did he say!

Husband—He said that you weren't handsome, but you were one of the most intelligent women he ever met.

Wif.—Prof. What's his name has received his last invitation from me.

A Sad Blunder.

First Train Robber (at the West)—What train did you stop last night!

Second Robber—Overland express going West.

First Robber—Got much!

Second Robber—Naw, shock full of people comin' home from the Eastern summer resorts.

Pairing Off.

Billkins—I hope I'm not in the way, Miss Tompkyns.

Miss Tompkyns—Why, Mr. Billkins, how can you suggest such a thing! You know I believe in even numbers. Fully one Charlie makes two; Jack and I make four; you and the dog make six. We are all paired off nicely.

It Was The Cat.

"What was all that racket in the yard a moment ago, Bobby?" demanded the old gentleman; "it was enough to set one crazy."

"I was playing with the cat, pa," explained Bobby.

"Well if you can't make less noise when I'm trying to read, I'll have you mother tie you to the hodpost."

"I won't making any noise, pa," said Bobby, with an injured air; "the noise was all made by the cat."

MISCELLANEOUS. MISCELLANEOUS.

CHURCH CANDLES!

—REDUCED—

Beeswax Candles For Candlemas.

PATENT WAX & STERIC ACID CANDLES!

Highly finished at moderate price. Burns clearer than Candles of other Manufacturers.

PURE OLIVE OIL. PURE ALTAR WINE.

Candles ordered now payable after Candlemas, 1889. Being the first to large!) introduce all grades and qualities of Candles for Altar use on the Pacific Coast, I feel I have some claims on the patronage of purchasers. My Patent Wax Candle I have introduced for the services of the Forty Hours Devotion. Before ordering from others I would be pleased to have you call and examine my stock and get prices. I will promise to sell all grades of candles from 5 to 10 per cent cheaper than other manufacturers. My Candles and Olive Oil are based on all the Altars on the Pacific Coast, and are endorsed by His Grace Most Rev. Archbishop Riordan, Most Rev. Archbishop Gross, Rt. Rev. Bishop Moreo, Rt. Rev. Bishop Manogue, Very Rev. N. Congiati, S. J., all the Rev. Clergy, Presidents and Superiors of Colleges and Convents.

The following letter lately received from Rev. J. A. McLaughlin, C. SS. R., is self-explanatory:

Very Candles, Pure Wax, I must state are the best I have seen used anywhere. They were used to all the Missions given by me and my companions in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and Oregon City, and also in the Dioceses of Los Angeles and Monterey, and gave entire satisfaction not only to me but also to the other clergy. Their burning qualities cannot be excelled if even equalled by candles of any size made which I have seen used. As to the price, this is beyond all doubt very reasonable.

I am, Yours Respectfully,

St. Alphonsus' Church, St. Louis, Mo. J. A. McLAUGHLIN, C. Ss. R.

This is only one of many similar letters received from the Rev. Clergy on this Coast. Soliciting a continuance of your valued orders, I am, very sincerely,

JOHN A. LENNON

WHOLESALE GROCER AND IMPORTER.

315 and 317 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.

SIXTH YEAR.

With a remarkably beautiful Frontispiece in Gold and Colors.

PRICE, Free by mail, 25 CENTS.

Per dozen, $2.00; per dozen, by mail, $2.25.

THE BEST WRITERS!

THE BEST ILLUSTRATIONS!

The Best Family Reading for Winter Nights.

The New Sunday School Companion.

Containing the Catechism, Devotions and Prayers for Church, School, and Home; Hymns and Music for Mass and other Instruction. Illustrated, cloth. Beautifully and profusely illustrated.

25 Cents.—Per 100, $15.00.

Sold by all Catholic Bookseller and Agents.

BENZIGER BROS.,

Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,

—MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF—

Vestments and Church Ornaments,

New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.

ROBERTS & KELLY,

Merchant Tailors,

Have Removed from 1003 Market Street, to more elegant quarters,

103 THIRD ST.,

Near Mission,

Where they would be pleased to meet their former friends and patrons.

Dr. Seth Arnold's COUGH KILLER is the best Cough Cure I ever used.

Wm. A. Myer, Weston, Mo.

Druggists, 25c., 50c., and $1.00.

HUTCHINSON'S BEST MADE GLOVES.

For dressing or street wear, made with care from the finest Kid, in all the leading shades, at the Universal and Standard Price, Dollar and a quarter pair. Can save money by buying from Agents who keep them. Ask for Hutchinson's Celebrated Kid Gloves. Sold by Retailers throughout the United States. Albert Hutchinson, Johnstown, New York.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 695.

LEAVE TO BE PAID—FIRST CLASS HOTEL (2 Help, Farm Hands, Tunnelmen, Dairymen, Sawyers, Shingle Weavers, Blacksmiths, and Market Gardens for private families and ranches, and also good reliable Female Help, without any charge to employers. Satisfactory setting forth on notice at 608 Clay street.

Alexander Doran,

(SUCCESSOR TO C. SLEGMAN)

—Dealer in—

STATIONERY, BOOKS, TOYS,

AND—

FANCY GOODS.

A few class specimens of

Prayer Books, Bibles, Crosses, Etc.,

WILL ALWAYS BE FOUND HERE

AND AT NEW YORK PRICES.

Please Call and Examine Our Stock.

S. W. Cor. Mission & 16th St.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DANIEL SHEERIN,

STONE AND MARBLE YARD,

Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.,

Entrance to Catholic Cemetery, San Francisco

JUST RECEIVED

A Large Assortment of Monuments and Grecian Work from Italian Marble.

All kinds of Monuments and Grecian Work done to order on notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

Show this copy of the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscribe. Only $2 a year when paid in advance

McKENNA & PURCELL,

Hay, Grain and Commission

MERCHANTS.

Consignments Solicited,

Shipping Orders a Specialty.

214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE,

—Importers and Dealers in—

BOOK, NEWS,

WRITING AND WRAPPING

PAPERS.

Card Stock, Straw and Binders' Board, Etc.

MANUFACTURERS OF

Patent Machine-Made Paper Bags.

512 to 516 Sacramento and 510 Commercial Sts., S. F.

RAILROADS.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD

THE OCEANIC STEAM SHIP COMPANY

Will leave Broadway Wharf, San Francisco, for Honolulu and Australia, Samoa, Tonga and Fiji, on the 28th of each month, or immediately on arrival of the mail steamer from Sydney, touching at Honolulu and Auckland, and carrying passengers, mails and freight for these ports.

For freight or passage, apply at the office of the company, 637 Market street, opposite Lick House.

JOHN D. SPRECKELS & BROS., Agents.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE

SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA

This Institution was founded in 1851, and in 1862 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies large buildings, with extensive shady playgrounds, gas, mineral spring, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a complete Philosophical Apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has, moreover, ample schools of Drawing, Surveying, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business, for the latter course a Diploma is given. Instruction is given in the Ancient and Modern languages, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Drawing, Painting, Dancing, Elocution, Military Tactics, Phonography, Typewriting, Telegraphy, Photography and Commercial Business. The Course of Studies is that of a Catholic College, and has been found to be the most practical and complete. Terms (Board, Tuition, Washing and Mending, Bed and Bedding, Use of Library, Medical Attendance, Use of Philosophical Apparatus, Use of Musical Instrument, Use of Gymnasium, Use of Baths, Use of Band Instruments, Use of Boats, Use of Tennis and Other Grounds, Use of Chemical Apparatus, Stationery, Premiums, Graduation Fee, Use of Bed and Bedding, Use of Text Books, Use of Stations, Use of Medal, Use of Diploma, Use of Dormitory, Use of Lavatory, Use of Refectory, Use of Chapel, Use of Infirmary, Use of Washing Apparatus, Use of Refectory Furniture, Use of Dormitory Furniture, Use of Chapel Furniture, Use of Infirmary Furniture, Use of Washing Apparatus Furniture

OUR REPUBLIC.

Its Future Greatness Outlined.

ITS VAST EXTENT OF TERRITORY.

A Nation Extending From the Pole to the Equator.

The well-known newspaper correspondent Blakely Hall, writes from Washington to the New York Sun, the following interesting interview with Senator Ingalls, in which the latter gentleman foreshadows the great future which this Republic has before it.

I have had a talk with the most picturesque and striking figure in the hurly-burly of Washington political life. When Senator John J. Ingalls speaks in the Senate the chamber is crowded. His utterances are amazingly sharp, pungent, caustic and severe at times, and it has been the generally expressed opinion that he prepared his speeches with great care. I find, however, that the facility of force and finish which is so marked a characteristic of his public talk is the natural manner of the man. The President of the Senate has been wildly lampooned by the democratic. He is tall, spare, and agile looking. A big "splash" of white hair surmounts his forehead. His eyes are bright, and he spares strained affectation of any kind. He wore a morning jacket and strolled up and down his library smoking as he talked to the point. The interview which appears below was written out and submitted to his revision. It is authorized and endorsed.

"There is a feeling of unrest among the people throughout the United States for the peaceful acquisition of Canada and Mexico. Why speak of an ocean bound republic?"

"Stephen A. Douglas, I believe," said Senator Ingalls, "first formulated the phrase, but the idea is as old as Jamestown and Plymouth. It was in the mind of the Mayflower. Obsolescent its impulse, the column of Anglo-Saxon aggression has in two centuries marched across the continent, and now pauses upon the coast of the Pacific waters for new conquests. It has expelled the Indian, the Frenchman, the Spaniard, and the Chinaman. It is conquering, peaceful, and tolerant so element that it cannot absorb and assimilate. Having abolished the Western frontier, it will move northward and southward to the pole of the earth.

We have reached the limit of arable land in our public domain. In ten years the agricultural system will be extinct within the territory now open to settlement. Since the war with Mexico we have ceased to enlarge our boundaries, not because the instinct of acquisition was lost, but because we had enough. The pressure of surplus population will soon be felt, and the overflow will flood Mexico and Canada inevitably, and perhaps Cuba and the other West Indian islands, which we need for their tobacco and sugar products in order to complete our commercial independence. We have paid dollars enough on sugar in the past thirty years to have purchased Cuba from Spain thrice over. We also need additional accommodations in the torrid zone for the surplus African population of this country, which will require an section before the close of the century. The race problem in the South is not yet settled. If the whites and blacks cannot assimilate, they will eventually, probably, separate peaceably by common consent, the negroes establishing themselves in the tropics and accomplishing their destiny in their congenial native environment. We have now a continuous line of railway to Mexico. It will soon be continued to the valley of the Amazon. Vanderbilt could build a railway from Chicago to the City of Mexico without change from New York to Buenos Ayres. Along this highway the Anglo-Saxon race will move to the domination of the hemisphere.

"Canada's confidence in the power of Great Britain is average her wrongs and enfeeble her rights is supreme," I said. "What is your opinion of the capability of Great Britain to force the Dominion back?"

"The unbridled rord between England and Canada was long since severed. The severance of the bond is almost complete. The intrusion of England in the politics of this continent is an indefensible impertinence. It is dictated by deliberate hostility to the United States. It is a sentiment at variance with our people understand and will ultimately resent. Talk as we may about kindred blood, and the language of Milton and Shakespeare, there is not an American who does not feel immeasurably that England is the only enemy we have among the nations, and sooner or later we shall be compelled by self respect, if not for self preservation, to adjust the account with the Island Power from this hemisphere. There is no alternative. The press of Halifax and Vancouver are pointed at us. The Canadian Pacific Railroad, built by England's subsidies, makes another incursion from more northwhile than our seacoast. Great Britain, jealous of our supremacy, is necessarily opposed to our territorial expansion toward the pole and the equator. Her commercial jealousies are complicated with her fears of our rapidly increasing power. Her navy is the mistress of the seas, and she is the only power that could now conduct toward us has been characterized by treachery, duplicity, and insult in peace, and by brutal ferocity in war. Left to the operation of social, industrial, and commercial forces Canada would irresistibly gravitate into the American Union.

The ultimate solution is inevitable. It may be delayed and temporarily. If British men-of-war continue to laud do on the flags of American fishermen without protest it will be said England has practically no more jurisdiction than the United States has in the Monroe or the Tuileries, the issue will pass beyond diplomacy, and our volunteers will march on Montreal and Quebec, and take possession of the Canadian Pacific and the St. Lawrence. The chief political obstacle would be found in the fact that Canada would naturally be Republican. Wheat was raised last year in the valley of Peace River a thousand miles north of St. Paul. The great arable plains and rich interval would attract populations like that of Dakota, incapable of adopting Democratic heresies."

"Suppose Canada were to answer the retaliatory measures by similar measures against us, what would be the effect?"

"In my judgment there is not even a remote possibility of the adoption of the policy of retaliation, either by the United States or Canada. All know that England is the real party in interest, and our resentment of British land did not persuasively interfere to exasperate, irritate, and keep alive the causal resentments between the United States and Canada the adjustment of our differences would long ago have been complete.

Then the Senator looked at his cigar. It had gone out. He took a match from a vase, and talked no more about politics and statesmanship.

St. Joseph's Church, Berkeley, will not hold a fair this year, but Rev. Dr. Comerford, the pastor, is endeavoring to meet the expenses of the church, amounting to $1000, by personally soliciting subscriptions from his parishioners.

To our DEAF—A Person cured of deafness and noises in the head by a simple remedy, will send a description of it free of charge to any applicant. Address Nicholson, 177 Mandlewgil St., New York.

Correspondence.

We urgently solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertinent to the progress of the Church or the spread of the Faith.

Communications should reach this office by Tuesday evening's mail at most, as the MONITOR goes to press every Tuesday night.

AMONG THE LEPERS.

The Good Work Done by the Franciscan Sisters.

WAIAHIA, Oahu, H. I. October 31, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir.—Please allow me space in the column of your valuable paper for a couple of lines concerning the work of the Board of Health's twelve islands to the Hawaiian Legislature of this year's session. The idea of sending them to the MONITOR was suggested to me by hearing from time to time, since unchastitely flung by bigots against the only lever "missionaries" in these islands, especially those who are devoted to the good keeper in Kalawao and Molokai.

To a Catholic reader I need make no comment, the extracts will be readily understood. I will simply state that, to my mind, no better religion on the world—the Christian charity of Mr. Dutton and the Sisters of Charity could be given to my poor people. Every one, Mr. Editor, is a writer of Father Damien, S. M. Hyde, the apostle of Molokai, Father Wendelin Gulick, not a Catholic in his surprise, the Sisters of the Board in speaking of the leper settlement of Molokai he says:

"I cannot say enough of the inestimable and disinterested services to the sick rendered here by Mr. J. Dutton, who is a trained nurse, and seems to be entirely devoted to the work, and for the purpose of living with the lepers and devoting his life and entire time to their benefit; in the following instructions from Dr. Mouritz, he may be seen kneeling beside the bed of a poor leper and healing the many sores of his patient, and administering to the comforts of the sick, and very much to the satisfaction and comfort of the patient.

Again he says: "Women are hospitals for the lepers, and does may be built if necessary do much, and they may be managed as he talked to the point. The interview which appears below was written out and submitted to his revision. It is authorized and endorsed.

"There are three hospitals for the peaceful acquisition of Canada and Mexico! Why speak of an ocean bound republic?"

"Stephen A. Douglas, I believe," said Senator Ingalls, "first formulated the phrase, but the idea is as old as Jamestown and Plymouth. It was in the mind of the Mayflower. Obsolescent its impulse, the column of Anglo-Saxon aggression has in two centuries marched across the continent, and now pauses upon the coast of the Pacific waters for new conquests. It has expelled the Indian, the Frenchman, the Spaniard, and the Chinaman. It is conquering, peaceful, and tolerant so element that it cannot absorb and assimilate. Having abolished the Western frontier, it will move northward and southward to the pole of the earth.

We have reached the limit of arable land in our public domain. In ten years the agricultural system will be extinct within the territory now open to settlement. Since the war with Mexico we have ceased to enlarge our boundaries, not because the instinct of acquisition was lost, but because we had enough. The pressure of surplus population will soon be felt, and the overflow will flood Mexico and Canada inevitably, and perhaps Cuba and the other West Indian islands, which we need for their tobacco and sugar products in order to complete our commercial independence. We have paid dollars enough on sugar in the past thirty years to have purchased Cuba from Spain thrice over. We also need additional accommodations in the torrid zone for the surplus African population of this country, which will require an section before the close of the century. The race problem in the South is not yet settled. If the whites and blacks cannot assimilate, they will eventually, probably, separate peaceably by common consent, the negroes establishing themselves in the tropics and accomplishing their destiny in their congenial native environment. We have now a continuous line of railway to Mexico. It will soon be continued to the valley of the Amazon. Vanderbilt could build a railway from Chicago to the City of Mexico without change from New York to Buenos Ayres. Along this highway the Anglo-Saxon race will move to the domination of the hemisphere.

"Canada's confidence in the power of Great Britain is average her wrongs and enfeeble her rights is supreme," I said. "What is your opinion of the capability of Great Britain to force the United States back?"

"The unbridled rord between England and Canada was long since severed. The severance of the bond is almost complete. The intrusion of England in the politics of this continent is an indefensible impertinence. It is dictated by deliberate hostility to the United States. It is a sentiment at variance with our people understand and will ultimately resent. Talk as we may about kindred blood, and the language of Milton and Shakespeare, there is not an American who does not feel immeasurably that England is the only enemy we have among the nations, and sooner or later we shall be compelled by self respect, if not for self preservation, to adjust the account with the Island Power from this hemisphere. There is no alternative. The press of Halifax and Vancouver are pointed at us. The Canadian Pacific Railroad, built by England's subsidies, makes another incursion from more northwhile than our seacoast. Great Britain, jealous of our supremacy, is necessarily opposed to our territorial acquisition toward the pole and the equator. Her commercial jealousies are complicated with her fears of our rapidly increasing power. Her navy is the mistress of the seas, and she is the only power that could now conduct toward us has been characterized by treachery, duplicity, and insult in peace, and by brutal ferocity in war. Left to the operation of social, industrial, and commercial forces Canada would irresistibly gravitate into the American Union.

The ultimate solution is inevitable. It may be delayed and temporary. If British men-of-war continue to laud do on the flags of American fishermen without protest it will be said England has practically no more jurisdiction than the United States has in the Monroe or the Tuileries, the issue will pass beyond diplomacy, and our volunteers will march on Montreal and Quebec, and take possession of the Canadian Pacific and the St. Lawrence. The chief political obstacle would be found in the fact that Canada would naturally be Republican. Wheat was raised last year in the valley of Peace River a thousand miles north of St. Paul. The great arable plains and rich interval would attract populations like that of Dakota, incapable of adopting Democratic heresies."

"Suppose Canada were to answer the retaliatory measures by similar measures against us, what would be the effect?"

"In my judgment there is not even a remote possibility of the adoption of the policy of retaliation, either by the United States or Canada. All know that England is the real party in interest, and our resentment of British land did not persuasively interfere to exasperate, irritate, and keep alive the causal resentments between the United States and Canada the adjustment of our differences would long ago have been complete.

Then the Senator looked at his cigar. It had gone out. He took a match from a vase, and talked no more about politics and statesmanship.

To our DEAF—A Person cured of deafness and noises in the head by a simple remedy, will send a description of it free of charge to any applicant. Address Nicholson, 177 Mandlewgil St., New York.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND.

Antrim.

The average annual death rate represented by the deaths registered for the last week in Belfast, is the lowest ever recorded in Belfast or Ireland was 22.3 per 1,000 of the population.

A party of Scots Highland Imperial Yeomanry are have been lately on a visit to Belfast. They appeared in their national costume, and as they drove through some of the principal streets they attracted not a little attention.

The Nationalists of Ballybrickens and surrounding districts have been very much annoyed by the splendid band and banners of Ballycastle Orange lodge on the occasion of the release of Father McFadden. After having been detained for parades the streets playing a choice selection of national airs. Proceeding afterward to a field, kindly placed at their disposal for the occasion, a large bonfire of the hawkins was kindled, which illuminated the country for miles around.

Carlow.

There was a singular occurrence at Borris races on the 27th ult. One of the five horses which ran for the Alamanac plate was Mr. Merrellin's "Dalaty," upon which, a fortnight previously, the operation of the tracheotomy was performed as a cure for the distressing ailment called "roaring." "Dalaty" accordingly ran for one with a metalic tube in its throat, opening at its neck, where it was secured with a silver plate—and not only ran the race, but won it.

Cork.

A serious disturbance took place on Thursday night, November 1st, in Middleton, which some months ago was the scene of the outrage on

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THANKSGIVING.

The onward course of fleeting Time
Has borne another year away;
Crowned with its varied joys and grieds,
From dawn dawn till dying day.

For all Thy gifts we thank Thee, Lord!
Amidst Nature's sweet harmonious strain,
In morning's fair and beauteous light,
In evening's calm and peaceful rest.

We own Thy power when Night appears,
And throws his mantle o'er the day,
And sunset's lingering rubeous blush
In golden splendor fade away.

We bless Thee for the fragrant flowers,
Those meek creations pure and bright,
The angel values of the earth
That breathe of Heaven's eternal light.

And for the stars—those eyes of love
That steal the light of seven dims,
Who gaze on our celestial home.

O Power that rules o'er land and sea,
And stills the billow's mighty sway!
Still guide us in our safe here,
'Mid life's tempestuous be our stay.

How few will think amid the world's Unceasing tumult, strife and care,
To raise their thoughts to day to Thee,
In reverent homage, grateful prayer.

But we as members of Thy Fold,
In sweet atonement prep to Thee;
A heart's one to Thy loving Heart,
May this our simple homage be.

And may the prayers to-day we breathe
Of thankfulness and hope and love,
Be borne by angels' stainless hands
Before Thy glorious throne above.

ADRIN GERRETT.
College of Notre Dame, San Jose, Nov., 1888

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

MUSIC.

The following poem was read at the Christian entertainment held at Notre Dame Convent, San Jose, on the 15th ult.]

Faint echo of celestial strains!
Pledge of our Heavenly Father's love,
Soul-stirring art that charm'st the path
Of exiled man to Life above.

Oh! for a Seraph's glowing coal
To fire my lips that they might tell,
Enchantress of the heart and soul!
The magic of thy holy spell.

Oh! for the blest Cecilia's gift
To charm an audient ear of the skies,
That he might hail the potent skill
To praise the divine of Paradise.

Music! how wonderful that art!
Unfathomed Sea of mystic spells;
What feelings in thy various strains,
Hallowed, sublime, or fearful, or sad!

Thy strains are dear to one and all;
They fan the breast of age and youth,
They blaze the nations—and—the—hall;
Yes! Pleasure's favorite child thou art,
Yet thou art Sorrow's friend as well;
Thou mingles with the festive chant,
And wailest in the funeral knell.

And Music! thine the mortal blast
That cites the patriot's burning soul
And bids the coward quail and fly
At Freedom's stern roll.

Voice of adoring Faith and Love,
Thou blendest the organ peal with prayer—
And, seeking thy eternal source,
Thou obeyest a balm or balm and care.

And of so sweet in captive bonds,
What may we hope from thee above,
Interpreter of God's own thoughts,
The celestial language of His love.

Oh! rapture of that blissful hour,
Whose charms so mortal pen can trace,
When Song and Music's wealth shall flow
In love and light from Jesus' face.

And we shall understand at last,
The dark and light, Life's fair and sharper;
And what seems discord in this world
Will fade, attuned to heavenly harps.

JOSEPHINE MUTHUS.

MARY IMMACULATE.

And this chill December gloom,
Which forms always their darkling tomb,
Are yet the gleam of Christmas gladness
Breaks for a while the winter's sadness,
Brame out a ray,
Spring-like today;
Comes a white flower,
Glad for the hour;
Rings up a cry
Close to the sky.

MARY IMMACULATE!

Tears thou when first the hallow pale,
Drives in shame from Eden fair,
Smiling, adown the years of sorrow,
Labor today, and death to-morrow.
Found in the world
Spoke by the Lord
Hope of repetier
Woman, this Eve,
Saved from her woe,
Crushing her foe.

MARY IMMACULATE!

So in this hour of darkest night,
Alas! that men should scorn to light!
When hearts from Truth and Beauty turning
With sensuous, shameless free are burning.
Bless a star,
Radiant star;
Stands forth a Pope
Strong in his hope,
Flings to the world
Banner unfurled.

MARY IMMACULATE!

Ours are the shepherds' eyes that keep
'Mid gathering gloom the watches sheep;
Priests though we be, our hearts grow weary
Chilled by our watch, this winter dreary!
Ours be to-day
Courage to pray
That through the night,
Waiting for light,
Our hope may be
Constant to Thee.

MARY IMMACULATE!

REV. ARTHUR RYAN.

Consumption Can be Cured.

Not by any secret remedy, but by proper nourishment and the judicious use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites, containing the healing and strengthening virtues of these two valuable specifics in their fullest form. Prescribed universally by Physicians. Take no other.

Literary Miscellany.

Father Joseph's Mountain Rose.

Sara Trainer Smith in the Catholic Home Almanac.

From the valley, the mountains were veiled in the Promised Land. Unfolding against the softly luminous sky, shadowed by the flying clouds and brightened by the June sun, thickly wooded sure where the occasional clearing showed paler green against the darker frame, majestic, serene, unfurbished as from the hand of God, they saw a rest to tired eyes, a vision of hope to weary souls. Truly, they typified "the heights of heaven," and the toils and trials of earth were dwarfed in the face of their silent encouragement.

So, at least, it seemed to some of the dwellers in the valley, who filled leaning eyes to their fairness, and forgot, too then, that on the heights, also there were many shrouded from that fairness in clouds of saddest care.

On the edge of one of those clearings vivid from afar, there stood, one lovely summer morning, a small, small house. It was ruddy hue of logs and roughly plastered with clay. It had a ragged roof and a clumsy chimney. Two small windows gave light enough to the one room, sparsely furnished, but neat and clean and far from stark poverty. On this morning, the door was white table, the worn arm chair, the bottle stood white—shirts all, the bed in the corner—yet it was in the glory of the day. With such a radiance indeed, that the pallid face on the pillow and the young sleeping, baby face beneath it, were halved like the faces in the pictures on the wall.

Hands—the bed hands, in perfect silence, a very little pair, two small hands tightly shaped before her and her wide, frightened, loving eyes fixed on that pallid face. In broken sentences, with many a pause, spoke a wand-string weird, her dying mother was uttering her last commands, her last instructions, her last caressing endearments. And, thus alone, ignorant of the full meaning of much she saw, with a child's utter abandonment to the present and a child's unconscious disregard of the future, the little daughter listened to every word with an intensity and fervor far beyond her years. Too familiar voice had changed—was dying.

"When the father wins, I said the pipe, softly forming the syllables, "Go bid an niece to part the childer. Remember that, Ryg! Stay with the baby, darlint! Hev I told ye sterel Dys mind?"

"Yes, mother," briefly assented the child.

"Hev a good little thing. He'll be little throuble to anyone, wid ye to care for him.

A longer pause, and the mother's breath came harder—her eyes closed. She she started as from sleep and went always on.

"Ah, Ryg—ye must keep the Faith—an' the baby. Ye mustn't give it up. Fer ye's Catholics—Catholics—Catholics! Never rides rose with each repetition—"Ye must never forget it. Up here—God forgive them—it's little they know of any good. Ye mustn't be that way, Ryg—ye mustn't—ye mustn't, darlint! Dys mind me, Ryg!"

"Yes, mother," repeated the child.

"Hesan's on ye! Ye war always that good, the H'ssen Virgin be praised—an' I'm a mother to pray—an to the baby, poor little mite! Oh, Ryg—ye little know yer poor mother's heart th' day! Are ye there, my dove?"

"Yes, mother." The poor little creature's heart thrilled with a wild fear, but her thin, thin lips! "Mammy! Mammy dear!" she said, sobbing, lays her head down on the pillow, one so white and cold. But her mother took no notice. After long waiting, she spoke—but so faintly, she was scarce heard.

"Ryg, dear—did he wid ye! Remember the baby—Remember! Ye's the prayers!"

The child stood motionless. A look of agony flashed into her determined little face that would have stirred a heart of stone.

"Oh, the prayers!" murmured the dying woman. With convulsive strength she rose in her bed. "Holy Mother, hear! Ye as now and in the hour of our death! Ryg, go to the priest—go to the priest—in the valley—it's my last wish to ye! Say the prayers, darlint!"

She sank upon the pillow, the last words treuld on her lips. With one burst of grief, Ryg threw herself on her knees.

"Oh, mother! mother! I'll be sayin' the prayers for ye. I'll say them—yes, that I will—hard as fast! Listen to me, mammy, listen! And asking the Son of the Divine devoutly, she began.

In this hour, from the lonely mountain heights, there went up together to God, a child's agonies of prayer and a mother's soul.

The sun shone hot on the baby's face. He stirred in his sleep, struck out with his pink fists, and rolled his curly head, damp and dark with the dews of sleep—and death—to and fro, at the pulse of his mother's breast. He awoke with a shrill scream. Ryg opening up. Her mother lay perfectly still and awfully white.

"Oh, Tim—Tim, she didn't hear ye! Oh, mother—hev, yo'll never hear wunst more!"

She gathered the baby in her arms and they wailed together. The sorrow and the terror and the loneliness of those pitiful cries! They crept through the green forest and hung echoing in the farmer dell—the birds piped shrilly at the sound and—down the shadows—the silence of the mount—its fed affrighted, and two hunters followed its means to the cabin door. There, they paused, looking at each other—too full for speech. Then, one of them stepped reverently over the threshold and the other hastened to the next clearing for help.

When it came, the baby was smiling with wet eyes from the rough but kindly cradle of the hunter's arms. But poor little Ryg lay face downwards on the floor beside the shouted dead, her breath coming in long, gasping sobs of an exhausted and anguished child.

Poor little Ryg indeed! The neighbors, shocked and sympathetic, but reticle, piled her with questions, prized her, discussed matters in all the hearings, and tore her innocent, ignorant, love-sheltered little heart with a thousand pangs they never intended. Rough, ignorant, unemployment in the extreme, aroused to study of any kind, least of all, the study of a child's mind and heart, these mountaineers acted upon the apparent belief of many "high enlighted people that, being a child, it may was either dead or a lowered tone of reason, or either could not or would not understand what was said. But, with every nerve strung to the highest pitch, with every natural fear aroused, with every word of her mother vividly recalled by each reference to her, Ryg understood the faintest whisper. These people, although the nearest neighbors, were yet strangers to her. Her parents, of course, were not "Mount'n people." They had drifted to the clearings on the tide of fortune when Ryg was a baby—a quiet couple, living each other, their children and their Faith, the last a barrier hard to surmount between them and the mountaineers around them. Contented and reserved, they had labored on together, on till the little home and the little farm had slowly grown to a home they were comfortable in and loved with a honest pride. Other labors were here to them, a church was built at Ryg, only ten miles away, and they had come to think themselves safe and well to die, many, six months before, the father and two of the children were seized by a virulent fever, and in the end the mother weakened to the verge of the grave. The neighbors had been there then, but as was Ryg's aunt from "away beyond the Ridge," and Ryg had seen but little, heard but little of the crisis, the expressions, the opinions on every subject that were now so strange and sore to her. And, with a child's abandonment to the present and the now, Ryg had forgotten the past.

Many and sharp were the comments, the conjectures, the suggestions of the gar-rulous neighbor women, while fulfilling their neighbor's duty to the dead. The lonely death, the helpless and apparently forsaken children, their blank future, the absence of "Uncle," as Ryg called her mother's brother who had come to them after her mother had returned to her home beyond the mountains—all were fruitful of remark. Ryg could not tell what she did—if all of the discussion her mother and uncle had held before her. Without Martin, poor Kate could not face life or her away from her own people, so far from the comforts of her cherished Faith. The hard and bitter labor, the privation and exact provision that she had once thought the way to fortune were only to be endured and resisted by a light and happy heart, and now, Kate had another, while Uncle was but a boy, although a brawny and willing one, and could keep the home over their heads, but he could look for another, and Kate was fearful, he should not—she spoke. That was three weeks before. When he left, in her feverish desire to hasten hearing, Kate had not dared to tell him she was ill, lest he'd refuse to go. Unconscious that her sickness must prove fatal, hoping to see her home again, she had bravely with her ill, she had not sent for any one, and when she found herself unable to leave her bed, it was too late. Ryg was left alone, and too frightened to do anything, she thought, to go alone beyond the home—to leave the baby a prey, perhaps, to fire, to wolves, to the wolves, with the child's utter abandonment to the present and a child's unconscious disregard of the future, the little daughter listened to every word with an intensity and fervor far beyond her years. Too familiar voice had changed—was dying.

"Ryg, dear—did he wid ye! Remember the baby—Remember! Ye's the prayers!"

The child stood motionless. A look of agony flashed into her determined little face that would have stirred a heart of stone.

"Oh, the prayers!" murmured the dying woman. With convulsive strength she rose in her bed. "Holy Mother, hear! Ye as now and in the hour of our death! Ryg, go to the priest—go to the priest—in the valley—it's my last wish to ye! Say the prayers, darlint!"

She sank upon the pillow, the last words treuld on her lips. With one burst of grief, Ryg threw herself on her knees.

"Oh, mother! mother! I'll be sayin' the prayers for ye. I'll say them—yes, that I will—hard as fast! Listen to me, mammy, listen! And asking the Son of the Divine devoutly, she began.

In this hour, from the lonely mountain heights, there went up together to God, a child's agonies of prayer and a mother's soul.

The sun shone hot on the baby's face. He stirred in his sleep, struck out with his pink fists, and rolled his curly head, damp and dark with the dews of sleep—and death—to and fro, at the pulse of his mother's breast. He awoke with a shrill scream. Ryg opening up. Her mother lay perfectly still and awfully white.

"Oh, Tim—Tim, she didn't hear ye! Oh, mother—hev, yo'll never hear wunst more!"

She gathered the baby in her arms and they wailed together. The sorrow and the terror and the loneliness of those pitiful cries! They crept through the green forest and hung echoing in the farmer dell—the birds piped shrilly at the sound and—down the shadows—the silence of the mount—its fed affrighted, and two hunters followed its means to the cabin door. There, they paused, looking at each other—too full for speech. Then, one of them stepped reverently over the threshold and the other hastened to the next clearing for help.

When it came, the baby was smiling with wet eyes from the rough but kindly cradle of the hunter's arms. But poor little Ryg lay face downwards on the floor beside the shouted dead, her breath coming in long, long, gasping sobs of an exhausted and anguished child.

Poor little Ryg indeed! The neighbors, shocked and sympathetic, but reticle, piled her with questions, prized her, discussed matters in all the hearings, and tore her innocent, ignorant, love-sheltered little heart with a thousand pangs they never intended. Rough, ignorant, unemployment in the extreme, aroused to study of any kind, least of all, the study of a child's mind and heart, these mountaineers acted upon the apparent belief of many "high enlighted people that, being a child, it may was either dead or a lowered tone of reason, or either could not or would not understand what was said. But, with every nerve strung to the highest pitch, with every natural fear aroused, with every word of her mother vividly recalled by each reference to her, Ryg understood the faintest whisper. These people, although the nearest neighbors, were yet strangers to her. Her parents, of course, were not "Mount'n people." They had drifted to the clearings on the tide of fortune when Ryg was a baby—a quiet couple, living each other, their children and their Faith, the last a barrier hard to surmount between them and the mountaineers around them. Contented and reserved, they had labored on together, on till the little home and the little farm had slowly grown to a home they were comfortable in and loved with a honest pride. Other labors were here to them, a church was built at Ryg, only ten miles away, and they had come to think themselves safe and well to die, many, six months before, the father and two of the children were seized by a virulent fever, and in the end the mother weakened to the verge of the grave. The neighbors had been there then, but as was Ryg's aunt from "away beyond the Ridge," and Ryg had seen but little, heard but little of the crisis, the expressions, the opinions on every subject that were now so strange and sore to her. And, with a child's abandonment to the present and the now, Ryg had forgotten the past.

Many and sharp were the comments, the conjectures, the suggestions of the garrulous neighbor women, while fulfilling their neighbor's duty to the dead. The lonely death, the helpless and apparently forsaken children, their blank future, the absence of "Uncle," as Ryg called her mother's brother who had come to them after her mother had returned to her home beyond the mountains—all were fruitful of remark. Ryg could not tell what she did—if all of the discussion her mother and uncle held before her. Without Martin, poor Kate could not face life or her away from her own people, so far from the comforts of her cherished Faith. The hard and bitter labor, the privation and exact provision that she had once thought the way to fortune were only to be endured and resisted by a light and happy heart, and now, Kate had another, while Uncle was but a boy, although a brawny and willing one, he could keep the home over their heads, but he could look for another, and Kate was fearful, he should not—she spoke. That was three weeks before. When he left, in her feverish desire to hasten hearing, Kate had not dared to tell him she was ill, lest he'd refuse to go. Unconscious that her sickness must prove fatal, hoping to see her home again, she had bravely with her ill, she had not sent for any one, and when she found herself unable to leave her bed, it was too late. Ryg was left alone, and too frightened to do anything, she thought, to go alone beyond the home—to leave the baby a prey, perhaps, to fire, to wolves, to the wolves, with the night dragged on to dawn, until the sun shone hot on the baby's face. He stirred in his sleep, struck out with his pink fists, and rolled his curly head, damp and dark with the dews of sleep—and death—to and fro, at the pulse of his mother's breast. He awoke with a shrill scream. Ryg opening up. Her mother lay perfectly still and awfully white.

"Oh, Tim—Tim, she didn't hear ye! Oh, mother—hev, yo'll never hear wunst more!"

She gathered the baby in her arms and they wailed together. The sorrow and the terror and the loneliness of those pitiful cries! They crept through the green forest and hung echoing in the farmer dell—the birds piped shrilly at the sound and—down the shadows—the silence of the mount—its fed affrighted, and two hunters followed its means to the cabin door. There, they paused, looking at each other—too full for speech. Then, one of them stepped reverently over the threshold and the other hastened to the next clearing for help.

When it came, the baby was smiling with wet eyes from the rough but kindly cradle of the hunter's arms. But poor little Ryg lay face downwards on the floor beside the shouted dead, her breath coming in long, long, gasping sobs of an exhausted and anguished child.

Poor little Ryg indeed! The neighbors, shocked and sympathetic, but reticle, piled her with questions, prized her, discussed matters in all the hearings, and tore her innocent, ignorant, love-sheltered little heart with a thousand pangs they never intended. Rough, ignorant, unemployment in the extreme, aroused to study of any kind, least of all, the study of a child's mind and heart, these mountaineers acted upon the apparent belief of many "high enlighted people that, being a child, it may was either dead or a lowered tone of reason, or either could not or would not understand what was said. But, with every nerve strung to the highest pitch, with every natural fear aroused, with every word of her mother vividly recalled by each reference to her, Ryg understood the faintest whisper. These people, although the nearest neighbors, were yet strangers to her. Her parents, of course, were not "Mount'n people." They had drifted to the clearings on the tide of fortune when Ryg was a baby—a quiet couple, living each other, their children and their Faith, the last a barrier hard to surmount between them and the mountaineers around them. Contented and reserved, they had labored on together, on till the little home and the little farm had slowly grown to a home they were comfort-

IRISH ANIMOSITY.

Why Irishmen Hate English Injustice.

The hatred which the Irish Americans have for England has been a difficult to a striking manner by the Sackville incident. The reason for that hatred was summed up twelve years ago in a remarkable passage by the late Professor Cairnes, the well known economist, himself an Irish Protestant, and, although an advanced Liberal, an opponent to the abstention and placing of higher education in Ireland in the hands of the Roman Catholic Church. The passage will be found in his "Political Essays," p. 187.

Not a few public writers lay much difficulty in accounting for the persistent hatred manifested by a portion of the Irish people for the English name. It would help the writers to a solution of the difficulty if they would reflect on the condition of mind in which the victims of the violent expulsions just described must have arrived at. Attention. It is strange that after years the picture of the dismal scene, with its groans and tears, and the smoking ruins of their homes, rushing to process vividness, the high spirits of the men, the dejection of the wayside, and wretchedness of the women and children, the sickness of the land, and a more permanent place in their memories than the abstract idea of Catholic Emancipation, Corporate Reform, the Nomination Boroughs, or the Reformed Church Court. Moreover, the country into of such bitter recollections would naturally not be likely to be favorable to the growth of an able clear reasoning Irish landlordism. Nothing could be more unfavorable to the cause of order that a thirst for vengeance should be implanted in a country, the natural, even, nothing based, for what they could without regard to the cause and effect of their actions. Nothing could be Ireland should possess the sufficient means to attack the cause of her wrongs, to be paralleled with a fanatic zeal to their wrongs, and bequeathed to their posterity.

Nothing is more truth in this memorial year being. Even Mr. Gladstone's Bill, if time finds does not appear to have shaken the determination of the Irish.

Cardinal Corrigan.

Archbishop of this city, says the New York Times, are disappointed at the news that was thrown out on Monday night at the meeting of the Board of Archbishops of Corrigan.

President of the Catholic University made an address, in which he referred to the Cardinal's absence from the country, and made up to his dignity of the Cardinalate. The Archbishop's address was received with the greatest enthusiasm and applause, and he was given a hearty ovation. Cardinal Corrigan, in his address, said, "I am very happy to be with you, and I hope that I may be able to do something for the University. I have had some pleasant associations with the University, and I hope that I may be able to do something for it. I remember the time when the University was in its infancy. I remember the time when the University was in its infancy. I remember the time when the University was in its infancy

THE MONITOR.

PRIEST-PROOF PAPER OF PUBLICITY

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper Published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

— The Earl of Lucan, one of the heroes of Balaclava, died in London last month, at the advanced age of 84. His great grandfather was married to the grand-niece of Patrick Sarsfield, the celebrated Earl of Lucan.

— Mr. Sheehan, M. P., (a Catholic and an ex-Papal soldier), has been sent to gaol for a month in Ireland for telling a party of policemen that they might go the hottest place over heard of!

— The Boston Pilot's Rome correspondent denies the truth of the report that the Pope had directed Cardinal Gibbons to convey the Pope's congratulations to President Harrison on his election, on the ground that Catholic interests would be safe in his hands. This fact only goes to show how entirely unreliable Roman news is when connected and corrupted by the cable manipulators.

— Alluding to the arrival of Archbishop Riordan in Rome, the Dublin Nation says his Grace this deserved compliment: "The great and important diocese on the Pacific Coast, under the able guidance of Archbishop Riordan, has made marvellous progress. The new Cathedral in course of erection will in itself be a monument to his energy and zeal."

— Catholic literature has sustained a heavy loss by the death at Paris, on the 19th ultimo, of Miss Kathleen O'Meara, otherwise known as "Grace Ramsay." Modest and unassuming, she rarely spoke of her own works—eager to praise and encourage those who followed, however distantly, the paths of literature where she had achieved an exalted place on earth. Within the last year she has labored with much detachment under the pressure of a deep grief, and very poorly, considered by the Sacramento of the Church, this wonderful worker went to her reward. R. I. P.

— A London-made dispatch in yesterday's dailies says that the French Government has secretly advised the Pope to leave Italy, in the event of a rupture between France and Italy, and has offered all possible assistance in the event of his deciding to go to France. The spurious character of this sinlegram is easily discovered when the question is asked: What does France want the Pope for when that Government has robbed the Church, stifled Religious Orders, turned the Sisters of Charity out of the hospitals and removed every vestige of the emblems of religion from public and private gaze? The devil may like holy water, but it is nowhere on record that his Satanic Majesty ever sent to the Pope for even a pitcherfull of it.

— Cardinal Manning, who would be promoted by English Catholics than all the rest of the Colleges of Cardinals put together, is recovering his strength slowly but surely, and though he will never appear on the platform or in the pulpit with his old frequency, his interest in public affairs is as keen as ever, and the management of his diocese by malice, down to every detail, in his own hands; Cardinal Newman, to whom the Pope telegraphed his special blessing the other day, and whom Mr. Gladstone regretted to miss seeing while in Birmingham, is almost in his normal state again; Cardinal Howard, who has been taken to Brighton, though still pronounced incurable, has picked up his physical strength in a way which has astonished his doctor.

— The Rome correspondent of the Dublin Nation says: "The anti-clerical law is again under discussion, and Signor Crispi seems determined to carry its provisions as fate. It is as wicked in its conception as were the Penal Acts passed in England against the Catholics of Ireland in the reign of William of Orange, Queen Anne, and the Georges. A clause of this intended code decrees in substance, "that if any priest or clergyman, by advice or spiritual direction or preaching, &c., disturbs the peace of a family or congregation, the said priest or clergyman may be summoned before a court of justice,' and will be liable to receive sentence of imprisonment for said offence." Here is striking at the root of all clerical influence over the people, and rendering the discharge of the duties of ministers of religion utterly impossible. Is it any wonder the Holy Father should complain to the world of the attempts made by the Italian faction to destroy his liberty, and substitute wickedness and infidelity for morality and Christianity. The "Code" has not yet passed through Parliament, but it will not be Signor Crispi's fault if the new year does not witness it in full swing as an operating law in "United Italy."

— Last month one of the original founders of the Irish Sisters of Charity died at the Novitiate, Milltown Park, at the great age of 96. She was born in Spain, but was educated at York with Mary Aikenhead, whom she subsequently joined in establishing the first house of their community in London, where they endeavored to carry out the great works of charity—visiting the sick and poor, teaching and training young girls. For very many years Sister Salesarea was the assistant of Norman at the house at Harold's Cross, Dublin, but advancing years made the position too onerous. After the removal of the Novitiate to the present beautiful situation at Milltown, she went to live there. She was a person of exceptional ability, and from the beginning was one of the special counsellors in all the affairs of importance of the Sisterhood. She was of a bright, genial disposition, and calculated to exercise great personal influence. It is said that on the death of Sister Aikenhead, in 1857, the whole of the Sisterhood was that Sister Salesarea should become Superiorress-General, but her humility would not allow her to assume the office. The affectionate prayers of hundreds, even outside the Order, will be sure to be raised in intercession for her. R. I. P.

Manufacturing Roman "News."

It seems to be a standing rule with the news vendors who control the Atlantic cable to serve up "the Pope," as mental food for their ravenous readers, whenever there is a paucity of literary provisions in the public marts of Europe. Last week we were told that the Pope had sent another Encyclical to the Irish Bishops, in which his Holiness took the very extraordinary precaution of so managing its measure that as the cable hungry, however, it seems from the same source of "information," that the Bishop of Limerick took one of his servants into his confidence (?) and the whole Papal plot was spoiled! This shows how correctly Robert Burns "gauged" human events when he wrote

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men
Gang aft a-gley,
And leave us nae else but grief and pain
For promised joy!"

What disposition was made of the mental divulger of the Pope's well-protected "secret," the daily press does not say, but it is reasonable to suppose that he has been summarily sent adrift from the service of Bishop Dwyer, after having undergone public excommunication with "bell, book and candle." We await further intelligence with much anxiety.

Another equally spurious cablegram announced last week that "hundreds of telegrams" were sent to the Pope requesting whether he was going to evacuate Rome? And then the cable-manipulator continued by bringing Cardinal Howard's on the scene, and making him say that "nothing has been decided upon?" The Holy Father has no intention to leave Rome unless some act of violence on the part of the Revolutionary or the Robber King should drive him into exile. So the whole story is pure fiction.

Last Saturday, however, Montreal was turned into a manufactory of Roman news, and the worst lot of rubbish ever yet palmed off on a patient people was the result. Telegrams from the Spanish in the daily press that some obscure political refugee, from Louisiana, who was recently in Italy, conversed with some of the Cardinals in Rome, and they decided forthwith, in his presence, that "the next Pope must not be an Italian!" Then this wonderful modern Munchausen went to Paris, and in that city he met a Mr. Cornelly, who also had previously called the Cardinals to meet him in secret council on the trifling matter of deciding who shall be the next Pope, and there the Cardinals called in deep conclave by the supernatural inspiration of Mr. Cornelly—decided that Cardinal Gibbons was just the man for successor to Pope Leo XIII., whose "great age" seemed to warrant those ecclesiastical dignitaries in adopting Davy Crockett's motto: "Never eat your last meat till you've killed another coon."

It seems, however—from the important telegram of course—that the College of Cardinals is not a unit regarding the fitness of Cardinal Gibbons to fill the Papal Chair. Taschereau of Quebec would be "the most popular (!) and the least objectionable (?) candidate for that position, in consequence of the Canadian Cardinal occupying a unique (?) and strong position (?) as a British subject (!?)."

A fatal defect in the candidature of Cardinal Gibbons for the Papacy, was subsequently discovered by these Popemaking politicians, in the fact that he "is not a diplomatist!" Of course, European Royalty could never tolerate that the seat of the Fisherman should be wielded by anybody born in the Wild West, when such notice only very recently in Europe through the exhibitions given by Buffalo Bill's braves and brilliant bare-back riders in London town! This, of course, throws Cardinal Gibbons out of "the race" for the Roman tiara.

The Pope makers next remind their "intelligent readers" that Cardinal Taschereau not only comprises "a unique and strong position" for the reasons named, but they also add that he would be considered—when Pope—as a Frenchman by France. It would certainly be an act of great condescension on the part of the 30,000,000 inhabitants of France, to style a man born in Quebec a Frenchman, simply because he was called to the See of St. Peter! And what would the Canadians say? Assuredly they would never permit a Prince of the Church, and a Pontiff, to be purloined from them after such a fashion—even if by so doing he could—in the language of this very ludicrous dispatch—"elicit the sympathy and support of two powerful nations?"

The moral of all this is: Let not Catholics pay any faith to so called "news" from Rome, when they find it running at large in the columns of the daily press, as such "news" is generally "doctored" designedly by the enemies of both the Pope and the Church.

Since the foregoing was in type, a London made cablegram announces that the Bishops of Ireland maintain an attitude of "reserve" about the "alleged Papal Rescript." An no wonder! How could the Irish Prelates speak of what they had never seen! Then the same telegram says that "a private letter (which means a London-made mosstrich) received here says that Bishops refused to consider it a Rescript but simply a letter which imposes no obligation on them to make it public." Of course, in the eyes of the English manufacturer of these mysterious dispatches, the Irish Bishops are entirely wrong in their conclusions, and the only wonder is that the anti-Catholic journals generally do not, as they not suggested to that blustering individual the propriety of forging a Papal Rescript, and thus making history repeat itself for the hundredth time in the career of English chicanery—whenever the cause of the Church or of Ireland comes before that malignant combination of merciless tyrants.

—The English Government is at its old tricks of opening Parnell's letters as they pass through the London Post Office. A government that permits such an outrage upon decency to be perpetrated, deserves the condemnation of every honest minded citizen.

The English Bishops to Pope Leo XIII.

The following is a translation of the letter which the English Bishops have addressed to the Holy Father in protest against the Penal Code, which is at the present moment passing through the Italian Chamber:

Most Holy Father—The undersigned Bishops of England have learnt with great sorrow and indignation that there have later been proposed and are about to be carried into Italian Parliament against the Holy See, the clergy, and the Catholics of Italy, under the pretext of religious attacks against authority whether by word or by writing. The authority to be protected by these laws is the authority of a tyrannical that by violence has possessed itself of the City of Rome. Henceforth whomever shall venture to write or to speak in defence of the rights of the Holy See and of the Catholic world is to be punished by fine and imprisonment. There is no exception made in favor of any person, however eminent or sacred may be his dignity. The writer who shall speak in the cause of your Holiness whose sole—the Catholic world was your Primacy over the Catholic world was and to be guaranteed, is not exempted from these penal laws. To proclaim to the people of Christendom that Rome is the capital of the Catholic world will be an offence against the authority which by force has established itself within its walls, and would be a violation of those laws. That which is lawful to all Catholics throughout the world is a crime by some means, and forth be unlawful only in Italy, and, above all, in those who are public men—disguised and isolated.

We, who live in a land where the Catholic Church enjoys full liberty, are profoundly aggrieved and offended at seeing the injustice and the violence with which the sacred rights of the Head of the Church are trampled and violated in the very centre and in the very seat of its supreme authority. Already the filial devotion of all Catholic pastors and people of all parts of the habitable world, and also the free and lawfully public opinion of all civilized nations, have rebuked and condemned this illegal legislation. We also add our protest to that of the civilized world, detestable and unjust, and we offer the testimonies of such great signatures. We offer fervent prayers to the Divine Head of the Church, that He may bring to naught these and all other attempts against the liberty and independence of His Vicar upon earth, and we humbly implore for ourselves and for England the Apostolic Benediction.

November 10th, 1888.

Importance of Catholic Societies.

Some of the most lucid and forcible reasoning on the importance of Catholic Societies has emanated from the cultured mind of Rt. Rev. Bishop Chatard, of the Diocese of Vincennes, and amongst many readers of the MONITOR may not yet believe in any Catholic organization, we great Bishop Chatard's words will be read with pleasure, as they are stamped upon the minds of all our readers, so that Catholic societies may increase and multiply on the Pacific coast.

In a lengthy article in the American Catholic Quarterly Review, Bishop Chatard says,

"Our Catholics should band together, come to each others assistance, and prove that union is strength. Our Catholic journals should be more generously supported, and even business men should be willing to give them a share of their patronage. Our secret societies, too, he will hardly be able to find employment. We are the last to be Freemasons, and we are the last to be Odd Fellows, and we are the last to be Knights of Pythias, and we are the last to be Knights of Labor, and we are the last to be Knights of Honor

Farm and Home.

Agricultural Notes.

—In New Jersey there is such an abundance of apples this year that the prodigal farmers are feeding them to the pigs.

—It is claimed by Bureau's Valley Irrigation district have voted in favor of raising $110,000 by issuing bonds. Only one vote was cast in opposition to the plan.

—E. L. Crawford raised on one vine 11 squashes weighing as follows: 64, 60, 56, 50, 44, 41, 37, 48, 70, 34, 114; total, 229 pounds. The largest one measured 3 feet 10 inches by 2 feet 3 inches.—Georgetown Gazette.

—L. H. Cutting, a prominent chicken fancier of this place, will leave for Japan in a few days, taking with him a large collection of fine-breed fowls raised on his establishment near French Camp. The fowls have been purchased for prominent Japanese officials who reside at Yokohama and Tokio.—Stockton Independent.

—When a man can raise between six and seven thousand sacks of potatoes in one season on forty acres and dispose of them readily at good figures, he may safely claim that he lives close to one of the garden spots of the planet. L. J. Murray of Cottage, about twelve miles east of Visalia, is one man who has done this thing the present year.—Visalia Delta.

—W. H. Jackson informs the Anaheim (Nev.) Gazette that he planted a little patch in beets this year on the 16th of June to experiment, and for his pains he has stored away for his cattle 1,000 pounds of that vegetable, some of them weighing four pounds apiece. He claims there is no other plant that will remove alkali so quickly, that there is no better food for cattle, and that he will plant several acres next year and raise the best attainable.

Coffee and its Effects.

Coffee owes its stimulating and refreshing qualities to caffeine. It also contains gum and sugar, fat, acids, casein, and wood fiber. Like tea, it powerfully increases the respiration; but, unlike it, does not affect its depth. By its use the rate of the pulse is diminished. It lessens the amount of blood sent to the organs of the body, distends the veins and contracts the capillaries, thus preventing waste of tissue. It is a mental stimulus of a high order, and can that be liable to great abuse. Carried to excess, it produces abnormal wakefulness, indigestion, sinking, heartburn, tremors, debility, irritability of temper, trembling, irregular pulse, a kind of intermittent sinking in delirium and great injury to the spinal functions. Unfortunately, there are many coffee-tipplers who dope-fed upon it as the drunkard upon his dram. On the other hand, coffee is a sovereign efficacy in taking over the nervous system in emergencies. Coffee is also, in its place, an excellent medicine. In typhoid fever its action is frequently prompt and decisive. It is indicated in the early stages before local complications arise. Coffee dispels stupor and lethargy; is an antidote for many kinds of poison, and is valuable in spasmodic asthma, whooping cough, cholera infantum, and kindred ailments. It is also excellent as a preventive against infectious and epidemic diseases. In districts rife with malaria and fever, the drinking of hot coffee before passing into the open air has enabled persons living in such places to escape contagion.

Lost Her Sight through Folly.

About a year ago one of the most loving girls in the State lived at No. 40 Orange avenue, Los Angeles, says the Times of that city. A pair of large liquid blue eyes got off a face that was large and uncomely. The young lady was highly educated and possessed all the qualities that go to make up a society belle. Her parents are well to do and she has wanted for nothing since she was old enough to prattle. Her face is one full and that itself has proved her undoing. It is called vanity. She fairly worshiped her own eyes and did everything in her power to make them more beautiful than they were.

She used numerous drugs before she found what she wanted. This last drug made her eyes sparkle like diamonds; and she used it to such an extent that her sight eyes began to shrink. This brought her to her senses and the family physician was called in. But he came too late, and informed the poor girl that she must lose one of her eyes, sure and probably both. The right eye was taken out some time ago and she has lost all sight in the left, and will be blind for life. It is one of the saddest cases that was ever brought to light in this city.

What is Luck?

A philosophical definition of luck is given by an English writer as a capability of being imposing. "The first Rothschild was probably right, from his point of view, when he said he never would employ an unlucky man. On the other hand, the lucky man is usually the man who finds fortune; who, whether apparently slow or rapid, can do just what his especial circumstances require him to do. Very stupid men are often ready men, armed with a readiness as of dogs when they taint from under a cartwheel usherett. The Tom who makes fortune is usually a man with just the foresight or the judgment or the intuitive perception of the way things are going—a faculty like long sight or keen hearing, and independent of intellectual power—requisite to make large profits quickly. In fact, the fortunate man is usually the man who, in consequence of some hidden quality in his nature, deserves fortune."

Youth and Old Age.

A writer who is a good observer, and has had considerable experience, thus defines the difference between the old and young. There is, he says, a wide gulf between youth and age, and he hence the proverb "You can't get an old head on young shoulders." This proverb was written by an old man, youth had nothing to do with it. Youth don't believe the old man knows anything, and the old man expects continually that the young man will be along saying, "I didn't know it was loaded." The young man will seek the counsel of those age in years and experience and avoid the mistakes in life. But Young America will continue to figure in the diverse courts, and compound his sixties at ten cents on the dollar. He don't want to be told that it is loaded; he prefers to find out himself. He gets there and pays the piper generally.

People Prot too Much about Trifles

Women find a sea of trouble in their housekeeping. Some one says they often put as much worry and anxiety into a loaf of bread, a pie, a cake, or into the weekly washing and ironing as would suffice for much weighier matters. Suppose these things go wrong to-day, the to-morrow are coming in which to try again, and the thing is not worth clouding your own spirit and those around you, injuring yourself and them physically—for the mind affects the body—and for such a trifle. When a thing is beyond repair, waste no useless regret over it and do no idle fretting. It is ten to one that your sight will be found that seventy of spirit that will enable you to make the best of all things. That means contentment in its best sense.

Family Fun.

Whist as it is too often Played.

"Whom dual is it?"
"Who dual but I?"
"You, didn't you?"
"I didn't know."
"Yes, it's Mr. Hi's deal."
"Why, so it is."
"What's trumps?"
"Diamonds."
"Diamonds! Well, if I ain't got the unluckiest hand."
"Well, I just haven't got a thing."
"I never did have quite such awful luck."
"Whose play is it?"
"Let me see—what's trumps?"
"Diamonds."
"Oh, so it is; how stupid of me to forget."
"It's your play."
"Oh, is it! What is led?"
"Spades."
"Let me see now—mm—um—spades led and diamonds are trumps."
"Hurry up and play."
"Oh, if you didn't have ten trumps!"
"Who took that trick?"
"You mean thing!"
"Oh, if you didn't make four! You're horrid! Whose deal is it?"
"Mine."
"Oh, I'm so tired."
"Shuffle and deal."
"Oh, I'm so tired."
"Shuffle and deal."
"Oh, I'm so tired."
"Shuffle and deal

"THE JOLLY THREE."

Bumboat Women Derived Across the Atlantic.

NEW YORK, November 27.—Nora Fitzgerald, Katie Donovan and Mary Cummings, three bright-eyed Irish lassies, conduct a bumboat business in this harbor, Ireland. They sell apples, cakes and other things to passengers of vessels that enter the harbor. Their winsome ways made them very popular with the officers in Queenstown and won for them the sobriquet of "The Jolly Three." When the Union steamer Arizona moored alongside Queenstown last Sunday morning the three bumboat women made their appearance as usual, each armed with a tug basket filled with oranges, apples, etc.

Bumboat women are not allowed to board the Union liners, but "The Jolly Three" succeeded in stealing aboard. While they were selling their merchandise to the steerage passengers, Danny O'Brien's boat, which brought them out, got adrift. Before he could tell the officers about the women the Arizona's lines were let go, and, amid the weeping and wailing of the three women, the steamer sailed away from Queenstown and "The Jolly Three," with their baskets, were compelled to take a sail across the Atlantic. The women became quite contented after two days out, but poor Danny, the bumboat longed to be back among his comrades. Captain Brooks wanted them kindly and said he would get them here in time to sell to-day on the Wyoming, but owing to the gales which the Arizona met she did not arrive until after the Wyoming had sailed. All of them are still on the Arizona, and Captain Brooks will not permit the young lassies to leave the steamer for fear that some harm might come to them.

The Celtic, which arrived the other day, also brought a young lad who is a "bumboating" in Queenstown. His name is Johnny O'Neill, and he is 14 years old. He returns home to-morrow.

A PRUDENT PRIEST.

He Disagrees with his Bishop but Goes to Rome with Him.

The trouble which has culminated in Father Lambert of Waterloo, N. Y., having sailed for Rome, is said, on pretty good authority, to be simply a matter of jurisdiction. Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, honestly believed that Father Lambert was still a Priest of the diocese of Alton, from which he came after the close of the war. Having so instructed Rome, the Propaganda authorized Bishop McQuaid to interrupt the exercises of the ministry of Father Lambert in the Rochester diocese till the matter of his legal residence was adjusted.

Father Lambert claims that he has been released from his oath to Alton, has been furnished with his "exeat" and has been of fending long enough, under the Canon Law, in the diocese of his adoption, to acquire a residence. He sailed with Bishop McQuaid for Rome to bring the matter formally before the Propaganda and await judgment.

Russia and the Vatican.

ROME, November 29.—The conference with Cardinal Rampolli and the Russian Envoy the Pope has proposed to establish diplomatic relations with Russia the same as with Germany, a Russian Minister to be sent to the Vatican, but no Nuncio to St. Petersburg.

The Parnell Fund.

NEW YORK, December 3.—Banker Eugene Kelly, president and treasurer of the Irish Parliamentary Fund Committee, and co-day: "None of the money which was sent to Mr. Parnell has been used by him in law-suits. The money is his, though, he does not as he sees fit with it for the cause of Ireland. We sent our last contribution, $10,000, by Sir Thomas Henry Grattan Esmond when he left here some months ago. We have very little on hand, less than $500. We haven't attempted to raise any money within the past few months, because we did not consider the time fitting. We will have a meeting of the committee in a few days to decide what we had best do.

Portland's New Hospital.

PORTLAND, Dec. 3.—Archbishop Gross has bought five acres of land in a beautiful situation on the slope of the hills west of this city as a site for a new building for St. Vincent's Hospital, paying $30,000 therefor. The site of the present hospital is near the grounds of the Northern Pacific Terminal Company, and property all around it has been built up and the situation has become undesirable for hospital purposes, and a more healthsome and commodious building will be erected on the new site.

The Monument to Sheridan.

WASHINGTON, November 27.—Samuel Kissen the sculptor, is engaged upon a monument for the tomb of General Sheridan in the Arlington Cemetery. The monument is to be a monolith of granite, with three sides entirely plain. Upon the front side, looking towards the city, is to be a portrait bust of General Sheridan in bas-relief of bronze. The bust is to be surrounded by a wreath of laurel on one side representing victory, and of palm on the other side representing peace. Back of the bust is to be the General's headquarters flag.

A Catholic Church Burned.

St. Raphael's Catholic Church, one of the oldest at Sagamore Bridge, was burned to the ground on Wednesday. The structure was built in 1854 and has been enlarged at considerable expense. The fire caught near the furnace room, evidently from a defective flue. Nothing was saved, the building being completely gutted. The loss is between $12,000 and $15,000. The parsonage adjoining escaped with scorch on the west, caught fire but all except the kitchen part was saved. The Pastor's private residence, a frame structure on the east, was partially consumed. The Catholic schoolhouse close by was saved, although somewhat scorched. The buildings were partially insured.

Labouchere's Invective.

For scorching invective, no one can brilliant than accurate, we have seldom seen anything to equal Mr. Henry Labouchere's comments on Chamberlain. Speaking at Bradford recently the editor of Truth said: "Chamberlain has been called a Judas. I do not appear of historical comparisons for they are seldom exact. Judas had some good about him. True he betrayed his Master, but he repented and returned the money to the priests, and hanged himself. Chamberlain, sup with Caiphas, sing the praises of Pilate, appear on platforms surrounded by Scribes and Pharisees and declare that he alone of the Apostles was a true Christian, and then go home and footle No, he repented and hanged himself."

Cheap Fruit in California.

Plus Cal. Prunes, 20 lbs. for 25c, at the phone 1m of Stanford, 1 to 1, 101 Washington street.

Prescriptions.

Take your prescriptions to Frank S. Kelly Pharmacist, chemist and family druggist. Telephone 1m, 1 to 1, 1 Eddy street, opposite Phelan building.

—If you require genuine pure wines, brandy or liquor of any kind for the sick or convalescent, call at Mahoney's, Jaline St. Market of 968 and 970 Folsom street, one block your choice with full satisfaction guaranteed.

—Tom Brown & Son, No. 38 Stanly street, have just received a large consignment of the Imperial Winthrop Range, Parlor and Office Stoves which they for a reduced price.

Correspondence.

We respectfully solicit correspondence from all parts of the Union on subjects pertaining to the progress of the Church or the spread of the Faith.

All communications should reach this office by Tuesday noon, so as to insure insertion.

AF All correspondence must reach this office in advance of publication, and be signed to the Editor, not to press every Tuesday night.

NEVADA CATHOLICS.

Our Comstock Correspondent Tells of Many Things—Rev Father Bonchard's Grand Lecture—$1,802 55 Result of the Fair—Those Who Labored for This Great Success—St. Mary's School; what it is Doing—a Record of a Year—Leader Pupil for One Month—Its Superiority Over Public Schools—Consert by the Pupils—The "Enterprise" Makes a Statement—St. Aloysius' Sodality—A Heavy Letter Ship Written by Our Weekly Correspondent.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., Dec. 2, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir.—It is not often that the people of Virginia City are favored with a lecture by Rev. Father Bonchard, S.J. It is rarely we are privileged to be present when that gifted Follower of the illustrious Loyola preaches in his own inimitable way on the grandeur of Christianity. But when such an opportunity is afforded, then comes one time when go to hear such a sublime discourse, the entranning eloquence and irrefragable logic of the Church of Holy Christ in the challenge of the world. Such was the case last evening when Father Bonchard gave his lecture on the subject of great interest—"Universal Science."

Though on this question there exists so many conflicting opinions among learned and profound thinkers, Father Bonchard gave a lucid explanation of the teaching and Doctrine of the Church of Christ and the means of salvation ordained by a just and merciful God and left in the world as the medium through which we are to work out our salvation. This writer, if he understood aright, took the renowned lecturer to say that outside the Catholic Church there was no salvation. He then proceeded to explain the meaning of the word Catholic and showed how it was in fulfilled or corporate union with the only religious society on earth, organized and constituted by divine Wisdom the Life-giving Gospel to every creature under the sun for all time, would be eternally lost, for there are good souls who are not in visible union with the Catholic Church, and yet are united in an invisible manner to the soul of the Church, who will be saved, provided that their lost hearts have been in the state of grace. Your correspondent thinks this is very far statement of the teaching of Holy Church, and respectfully refers the reader to the Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII. Father Bonchard had in his lecture, what, to adopt it as the result of such strong reasoning in the New York Freeman's Journal, Rev. Father Bonchard had in his sermon representative of every belief in the Comstock, and they all agreed that the lecture was a decided success. Never was a lecture delivered with universal ability, and success which is any way comparable to it. Father Bonchard's

A FATHER'S FINAL CONVERSION.

A Happy Reminiscence of One Christmas Eve.

FIRST PRIZE STORY.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "E. M."]

CHAPTER I.

It was Christmas Eve, in a by-gone year, and Edna Gray was standing before a mirror arranging her simple, white dress. For weeks she had looked forward to this night with a feeling of intense pleasure. Throughout many years she had been attending a Sabbath School, and, as no one could remember ever having heard of an absent mark against her for eleven years, she was often laughingly alluded to as "the immovable Picture." This year, for her attendance and exemplary zeal, she had been promoted a recompense more costly than usually given to the ordinary Protestant Sabbath School scholar, and tonight that reward was to be here.

A change had come over the girl in the last few days; no one knew why, and, what may seem strange, no one cared to inquire. She stood, gazing at the reflection of herself in the glass, dreaming strange dreams. At length she said:

"I know I am not beautiful, but when I am my best on anything I always attain my object. Every one likes me; it seems I possess the power to make others love me. I wonder what page would say if I told him what is troubling me now, and before I go I must tell him, for I could not enter that festival hall with my mind burdened with this secret."

Just then Mr. Grey entered, and he looked pleased as his eye rested on his favorite daughter. "Ah! little one," he said, "you are growing beautiful, and sometimes I shall be losing you too. What is it to be a minister's wife, eh!"

"Oh, you, papa; nothing like that. Something you least expect. Let me tell you what happened on Sabbath last."

The child's arms were around his neck, and her head nestled on his bosom. She was not beautiful, and, in fact, until lately she had been considered quite plain, but she possessed that magic power of drawing others to her. The father gazed fondly upon his little one, and wondered how he could ever part with his "sunshine," as he called her.

"Papa," she said did you ever hear of Protestant Sisters?"

"No."

"Well, on last Sabbath, at the afternoon services, we were all startled by the appearance of two ladies dressed exactly like the Roman Catholic Sisters of Mercy here. They wore large black cloaks over their dresses, poke bonnets, and long veils thrown over the bonnets. Some say they had beads and crucifixes at their sides, but I did not notice that. Of course we were all very curious to know about them, and asked a great many questions of our Sabbath School Superintendent and Rev. Mr. Fenn, our pastor. They concluded the information. The two ladies were Protestant Sisters of Mercy. Their Mother House was in London, England, and they were travelling for their health. One of them was an heiress in England, and they had offered hand any place in California suitable they would settle here. Mr. B——, our our minister said it would be a fine thing if some of the ladies of the congregation would consent to join them in their holy undertaking, as it would be such a good way to counteract the influence of the Roman Catholic Sisters here.

"Now, papa, I immediately said in a half whisper, my that I would join, and you know I have seen the shell looks he showed upon me. I was told that such work was not for me, but for those who had loined nothing but sorrow and bitterness in their young lives. But I can not look upon it in that light, for I think the younger we give up all for God, the more acceptable it is. Do you know, papa, that since then, I have made up my mind to be a Sister, but not a Protestant one, a real one I mean—a Catholic Sister of Mercy. Oh! if I could only receive for my gift to-morrow, Faith! Then would I give up everything, for you would I be contented to have you and all belonging to me in order to serve God through his destitute poor."

"Edna!"

Mr. Gray's voice was stern, and his face cold and dark as he pushed her from his embrace.

"Edna, listen! Never let me hear such words from you again if you value my love. I hate, yes, I hate Catholics. The day I hear you are one, that day will be your last on earth. I swear that my hand shall speed the bullet to your heart. I thought, let one moment, that you meant what you have just said, I would slay you now. No child of mine shall ever say 'I am a Catholic,' and live! Heaven grant that there are only idle words of yours! Much as I love you my love can be turned to hate. Promise me, my child, you will never take such a step. Never! never that you will never think such a mything of that accursed Popish religion! Don't have around what I thought was dead! I will kill you if ever you seek to know aught of Romish mummeries!"

Slowly the girl turned and faced her father, and her eyes met his unflinchingly. It staggered him to see her so calm before his anger. "Father," she said, "I know I am out of age. You may withhold your consent for a while, but your threats cannot move me. I will attend the Mass and I am out of age. You may withhold your consent for a while, but your threats cannot move me. I will attend the Mass and I will do what I think is right.

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR to all MONITOR friends, both far and near!

—A cablegram from Rome says that Archbishop Riordan left Rome on last Thursday.

—The Parnell Investigation still drags its slow course before the Commission, but nothing counted last week worth noting.

—Italian Catholics are arranging for a special Peter Pence collection at the end of the year as a thank-offering wherewith to clope the Jubilee year.

—News has just arrived in Rome of the death of Mgr. Bougaud, Bishop of Laval, who had only been consecrated to the episcopate on February 2nd. His death is bewailed with much sincerity of sorrow there, as he had many friends among ecclesiastical circles in all parts of the world. R. I. P.

—Do not forget the poor in your list of those worthy of presents during the coming Holiday season. "The poor ye have always with you," says our Divine Redeemer, and extremely blessed is that Catholic who helps the poor for God's sake. There is a poor boy in every church, yet some Catholics never seem to find that out.

—London French proposes that a Christmas present of £500 be sent to Father Damien, the heroic apostle of the leper settlement of Molokai, Sandwich Islands, in order to enable that great servant of the lepers to provide a suitable church for his afflicted flock. We hope the proposition may be successfully consummated.

—The present issue of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR is memorable for many reasons, not the least interesting of which is the fact that this issue is the largest the MONITOR ever printed. We heartily thank our thousands of Catholic friends all over this coast and the whole country for this extremely gratifying success.

—A rapid and wonderful increase in the population of this United States was manifested in the late Presidential vote. The total Presidential vote was 352,968 in 1824; 1,416,772 in 1860; 4,676,853 in 1870; 7,219,947 in 1880 and 10,656,447 in 1888. It is altogether probable that the total vote this year has increased to nearly 11,000,000. These figures, indicating the growth of the country, are almost bewildering. Since 1860 the population has more than doubled.

—Every Catholic family should possess a Crucifix, a Statue of the Sacred Heart, a Statue of the Blessed Virgin, and also one of St. Joseph; so we hope that children who may design purchasing Christmas presents for their parents will bear this text in mind and then provide each Catholic home with emblems of that faith and union with God which brings a perpetual blessing of peace, purity, and prosperity, through the prayers which statues and pious pictures suggest at all hours of the day and night.

—A New York paper relates the following sad event, which is only another example of the uncertainties of life: "On Tuesday George H. Forster was elected President of the Board of Aldermen by some thirty thousand majority; but on Wednesday he died without ever hearing of his success. He had been ill for some time. It was one of the most touching cases that can be imagined. It is one other illustration of the instability of human ambitions, human struggles or even human successes, and that the ways of Providence are beyond man's ken."

—That bigoted bye-word which has been a favorite phrase with all Irish haters in the past, when alluding to the natives of Erin as "the ignorant Irish," will hereafter have to be buried in the turgid waters of oblivion, as Father Edward Brady says in an article on Ireland in the December number of the Catholic World, that during his recent visit to that country "he did not come across a single young person who could not read and write." Knowledge is a great power, and, in the hands of the Irish people, it will help them to attain Home Rule in the near future.

—The Belgian Government is again to be congratulated on the signal success of the "ballotage," or second election of October 29th, for the vacant seat in the parliamentary representation of Brussels. The candidate of the united Catholics and Independents, M. Fowis de ten Boeshe, was somewhat over the Liberal, M. Gheyn, a former Minister of Finance, by 8,040 to 7,837. This defeat in the capital itself is a bitter pill for the Liberal or anti-Clerical party, disrupted and disorganized as it is. "The result," declared M. Burge, the head of the Liberal League, at the stormy meeting held after the proclamation of the result, "is a veritable defeat of the Liberal party." The pill was an unusually bitter one.

—Father E. J. McCabe, who edits the Catholic Youth, the best paper for juveniles in America, says with forcible truth that "it should be regarded as a first and sacred duty to have a Catholic paper in every Catholic household; for it will always be a guide and a counsellor, and a teacher of morality for young and old. The Catholic paper is a reflection of the daily life of the Catholic Church, and from it Catholics can learn how to regulate their daily lives. The Catholic paper is also a defender of the Church, and as such is recommended for support by the leaders of the Church. This is precisely the mission of the MONITOR, and we ask our friends everywhere to send in such a new subscriber for 1889, as a New Year's gift for which they will receive our most generous thanks.

THE CHURCH ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Inasmuch as this number of the MONITOR will be read by many persons in distant lands, who have but a meagre idea of the progress which God's Church is making on the Pacific Coast, we deem it interesting to present a brief synopsis of the present condition of the Church in the several Dioceses forming the ten ecclesiastical divisions or Provinces on the western slope of North America.

Readers at a distance, when scanning the following figures, will do well to bear in mind that it is only about forty years since emigration to this coast commenced, prior to which time there were not a dozen Catholic Churches north or south of San Francisco, except the adobe edifices erected by the early Spanish missionaries for the use of their Indian converts.

Since 1848 the Catholic Church has kept well on a parallel line with the growth and development of the whole coast, and her progress, although slow at first, has become greatly accelerated during the past eight years, since the superb, private, prelific and ecumenical advantages of this section of the New World have become more familiar to the denizens of the Atlantic slope, who have annually migrated westward in hundreds of thousands in order to participate in the prosperity and growth of the Golden West.

The consequence has been that new churches and schools have been erected during the past few years in every place on this coast where the Catholic population was of such numerical magnitude as to call for them, and when the number of priests and Teaching Orders in the Diocese would justify their erection.

It is also gratifying to notice that Catholic zeal has well increased in the hearts of the flock of Christ on this coast. This is manifested by the large attendance of children at the parochial schools and Catholic Colleges, by the increased attendance at churches, and by the liberality with which contributions are made to every object wherein Faith or Charity is the moving spirit in the appeal.

In fine, we can send to our co-religionists in all portions of the Christian world, the "glad tidings of great joy," at this holy Christmas time, that in no section of the Universe is there a better present or a more prosperous future for the Catholic Church, than in that section of this Pacific Coast bounded by the northern line of British Columbia on the north, down to the northern line of Mexico on the south.

"Westward the star of Empire takes its way," and each succeeding year will find the population increasing ever every foot of land within these geographical limits. In this region can be found the climate of every nation in Europe. Portions of it are as cold as Norway; another section of it partakes of the pleasingly variable climate of Great Britain, while in the southern portion—the land of the grape, the fig and the olive—a climate will be found precisely of a character akin to that of southern France and Italy.

On this coast, therefore, the Scandinavian of the north, or the Sicilian of the south of Europe, can find congenial employment for their industry in this great land of Freedom smiles upon all, and where Religion blesses every man's honest labor.

In the Pacific Coast there are two Ecclesiastical Provinces, viz. the Province of Oregon in the North, comprising the Archdiocese of Oregon, the Dioceses of Nesqually (Washington Territory), Helena (Montana), the Vicariate Apostolic of Idaho, and the Diocese of Vancouver's Island, and British Columbia territory.

This Ecclesiastical Province extends from Northern California into a portion of the British possessions, and also takes in Alaska, which is under the supervision of the Ordinary of Victoria, B C. The latest census of this growing portion of this Northwest gives statistics concerning the Religious affairs of that region in the following order:

Archbishop, 1; Bishops, 4; Priests, 120; Churches, 101; Chapels and Stations, 70; Colleges, 6; Academies, 20; Parochial schools, 20; Hospitals and other charitable Institutions, 20; Catholic population about 100,000.

The Ecclesiastical Province of San Francisco comprises this Archdiocese and the Dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles, Sacramento and Utah. This Religious division of the territory of the Lord's vineyard aggregates about as follows:

Archbishop, 1; Bishops, 3; Priests 275; Churches, 197; Chapels and Stations, 224; Colleges, 10; Academies, 25; Parochial schools, 33; Charitable Institutions, 24. Total Catholic population estimated at 225,000.

Besides these two Ecclesiastical Provinces on this coast, there are in the far East the two Vicariate-Apostolic, viz. the Vicariate-Apostolic of Athabaska-Mackenzie, under the jurisdiction of Rt. Rev. H. J. Faraud, O. M. I., and a number of priests of the Oblates of Mary.

These missionary Fathers have planted the Cross along the banks of the Peace, the Mackenzie, and the Liards Rivers, and around the shores of the Great Slave Lake, Athabasca Lake and Lake La Biche. They are assisted in their labors by the Sisters of Charity, who have opened academies on the banks of the Mackenzie River and on the borders of Lakes La Biche and Athabaska—these being the most northern Christian schools on the American continent. The religious statistics of this region are as follows:

Bishop, 2; Priests, 34; Lay Brothers, 28; Male and Female Institutions, 6; Orphan Asylums and Hospitals, 6; Sisters on mission, 23.

North of this region is bounded the Vicariate-Apostolic of British Columbia, having for its northern boundary the 60th parallel of north latitude, and for its southern boundary the 49th decree of north latitude.

This Vicariate is also in charge of Priests and priests belonging to the Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, who have about 20,000 baptized Indians and a few thousand Catholic settlers and traders under their spiritual care. The following respectable representation the Ecclesiastical condition of the Vicariate:

Bishop, 2; Priests, 21; Churches, 16; Chapels, 8; Schools, 10; Convents, 4; Indian Boarding schools, 3. The Sisters of St. Anne have academies for young ladies at New Westminster and also at Williams' Lake and Kamloops City.

The Sisters also manage a boarding school for Indian girls at St. Mary's. The Oblate Fathers have charge of St. Louis College, New Westminster, also Industrial boarding schools for Indian boys, at St. Mary's, at Williams' Lake and at Kamloops City.

Christian education and charity go hand in hand in every Diocese on this coast, and readers of the MONITOR can realize the extent to which both these Divine factors in propagating the Faith operate from the influence upon the people at large, from the following digest of the different institutions in the Dioceses named:

PROVINCE OF OREGON.

ARCHDIOCESE OF OREGON CITY.—This Archdiocese was established in 1846 and comprises the State of Oregon. Its episcopal institutions are Mount Angel College in Marion county, conducted by the Benedictine Fathers of St. Benedict's Priory at Mount Angel; St. Michael's College, Portland, under charge of the Christian Brothers. The Female Religious Orders engaged in works of Charity and Mercy are the Sisters of the Most Holy Name of Jesus and Mary, who have very flourishing Academies, boarding and day schools in Portland, East Portland, Jacksonville, St. Paul's, Salem, the Dalles, and other places. The Benedictine Sisters have academies and schools at Gervais, Oregon City, Albany and Grand Ronde. The Sisters of Charity, from the Mother House of Providence, Montreal, Canada, have very commodious hospitals in Portland and also at Astoria.

DIOCESE OF NESQUALLY.—This Diocese embraces Washington Territory, and among its institutions are Holy Angels' College at Vancouver, St. Patrick's College, Walla Walla, both under charge of secular priests with lay assistants. Gonzaga College, located at Spokane Falls, is under charge of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus. The Sisters of Charity of the Union of Providence have flourishing academies and schools at Vancouver, Olympia, Walla Walla, Cheney, North Yakima, Fort Colville, Tekoah and Spokane. The same Order has charge of Hospitals and Orphan Asylums at Vancouver, Walla Walla, Olympia, Seattle and Spokane Falls. The Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary have a very flourishing academy at Seattle; the Sisters of St. Benedict have boarding and day schools at Fairvoy and also at Chinook. Father Chazanne has a day school for boys at Olympia, and there are a number of schools for Indians in the Diocese.

DIOCESE OF HELENA.—This Diocese comprises the Territory of Montana, and although it was not erected until 1884, it has made wonderful progress in that brief period. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Vincent's Academy and St. John's Hospital in Helena, both conducted by the Sisters of Charity, of Leavenworth, Kansas, who also have useful schools at several of the Indian Reservations, where the Fathers of the Society of Jesus have schools for both white and Indian children. The Ursuline Sisters have schools at Miles City, on the Crow Indian Reservation, and they also conduct Indian schools among the Cheyennes, at Ashland, and among the Blackfeet Indians. The Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence conduct schools on the Flathead Indian Reservation, they also have charge of St. Clare's Hospital at Helena, and St. Patrick's Hospital at Missoula City. St. James Hospital, at Butte City, is in charge of the Sisters of Charity from Leavenworth. St. Ignatius Mission, in Montana, is conducted by Mr. M. Kenny and assistants.

DIOCESE OF VANCOUVER ISLAND.—This diocese comprises Vancouver Island and Alaska Territory, being one of the largest Dioceses in the world. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Louis College, Victoria, V. I., Principal, Rev. J. A. Van Neval; A Young Ladies Academy, an Orphan Asylum, and a Reformatory school are conducted by Victoria by the Sisters of St. Anne, who also have schools at Nanaimo and Cowichan, as well as hospitals and schools at Juneau City.

VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF IDAHO.—This Vicariate comprises the Territory of Idaho, and although established in 1868, its progress has been somewhat slow in consequence of the sparse population. The educational institutions are St. Mary's Academy, at Boise Missouri, conducted by the Sisters of Providence; St. Alphonsus' Academy at Lewiston, conducted by the Sisters of Charity; a boy's school in Boise Missouri and a day school at Nez Perces Mission, both under the supervision of the Society of Jesus.

PROVINCE OF SAN FRANCISCO

ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The educational and charitable institutions of this Archdiocese are both numerous and beneficial. The leading educational institutions are Santa Clara College, at Santa Clara, under the direction of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, and a staff of competent professors. This institution is said, even by non-Catholics, to be the most meritorious educational facilities in California. St. Mary's College, adjoining, is under charge of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who are at present reaping a harvest of success in Oakland, which they expect to remove some time next Summer. St. Ignatius College in this city, is also under charge of the members of the Society of Jesus. Sacred Heart College is under the supervision of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who also have charge of parochial schools in this city, as well as educational institutions at Oakland, Martinez, West Oakland, and Brooklyn. The Brothers of Mary have charge of St. Patrick's College, Stockton, and St. Joseph's parochial school for boys, in this city. The Sisters of Notre Dame have Young Ladies' Academies and schools at San Jose, Santa Clara, San Francisco, Alameda, Redwood City, and Petaluma. The Sisters of the Most Holy Name of Jesus and Mary, conduct Academies, select and parochial schools in San Francisco, Oakland, and Vallejo. The Sisters of Mercy conduct schools in San Francisco, Oakland, Brooklyn, and Rio Vista. The Sisters of the Presentation conduct schools in San Francisco, Berkeley, and Sonoma. The Sisters of St. Joseph conduct schools in West Oakland. The Dominican Sisters conduct schools in Stockton, San Francisco, Vallejo and San Leandro. The Ladies of the Sacred Heart conduct a Young Ladies Academy in this city. The Presentation Sisters conduct an Academy at Santa Rosa, and the Sisters of Charity conduct schools in this city, and also have charge of the Male and Female Orphan Asylums, the Foundling Hospital and the Lying-in Hospital in this city. The Sisters of Mercy have charge of St. Mary's Hospital, the Magdalen Asylum, the Magdalen Asylum, and Our Lady's Home for Aged and Infirm Females, in this city. The Diocesan Male Orphan Asylum is located at San Rafael, and is in charge of Secular Clergy and assistants, the Dominican Sisters attending to the female departments. The Sisters of the Holy Family (a local Community), devote themselves to taking care of the sick and the poor, as well as the Catholic education of indigent children whom they feed, clothe and instruct in their two Orphan Asylums in this city. St. O. Overlay has charge of the Vicariate's Directory for Homeless Boys, at 200 Howard street, where a free lunch and an employment office is open to all the boys of San Francisco who are the offspring of neglected parents or who are without friends. These Christian education and charity are both well represented in this Archdiocese.

DIOCESE OF MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.—Comprising the southern section of the State of California, was established in the year 1840. Its educational and charitable institutions are represented by St. Vincent's College, located in Los Angeles, and conducted by the Fathers of the Congregation of the Mission. The Order of the Daughters of Charity conduct the following institutions in the diocese: School of the Immaculate Conception and Orphan Asylum at Los Angeles, where they also manage St. Vincent Infirmary, one of the handsomest hospital buildings in the State; St. Vincent's School and Orphan Asylum at Santa Barbara; School of the Holy Cross and Orphan Asylum at Santa Cruz. The Sisters of the Holy Cross and Immaculate Heart of Mary conduct the following institutions: Convent and School of San Luis Obispo; School, Orphan Asylum and Convent at San Juan; School at Hollister; School and Convent at San Buenaventura; and the Cathedral Parochial school at Los Angeles. The large parochial school attached to the church of the Lady of Angels, at Los Angeles, is under charge of the Sisters of Charity. The Sisters of St. Joseph conduct school in San Diego and also at Fort Yuma. The Sisters of Loretto conduct a school for girls at Silver City. A college is at present under way at Fort Monterey, and other localities are preparing to establish schools during the forthcoming year. The Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus are expected, will open a large educational institution in Los Angeles during the coming year. The Franciscan Fathers have charge of an extensive orphanage at Pajaro.

DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO.—This diocese was erected in 1886, and comprises the former Diocese of Grass Valley, together with the Archdiocese of Sacramento, Yuba, Tuolumne, Amador Calaveras, Mariposa, Eldorado, Placer, Alpine and Mono counties in this State, as well as Sonora county in Mexico.

The educational and charitable enterprises in this Diocese comprise the following institutions: St. Joseph's Institute, Sacramento, a College for boys, under the direction of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. The Sisters of Mercy have Academies and schools at Sacramento, Red Bluff, Humboldt Bay and Grass Valley. The Sisters of Charity have a prosperous academy at Vallejo. The Sisters of Mercy also manage an Orphan Asylum and Hospital. The Sisters of Notre Dame have a well established academy at Marysville. The Sisters of St. Dominic have a flourishing academy at Auburn. The Sisters of the Holy Cross have a prosperous academy at Woodland, and a High School for boys in reputation at Marysville. The Sisters of Mercy have a large Orphan Asylum at Grass Valley. A magnificent new Cathedral and an episcopal residence is now in course of erection at Sacramento, the capital of the State.

VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF UTAH.—This Vicariate was erected in 1886, and comprises the Territory of Utah and several counties in Nevada. Its principal educational and charitable institutions comprise All Hallows College in Salt Lake City, a first-class College for boys and young men, under the direction of a large Faculty of professors. Holy Angels Academy, a large and flourishing institution, with a number of competent lay assistants. The Sisters of the Holy Cross have a number of educational and charitable institutions scattered throughout Utah, among which may be counted St. Mary's Academy, St. Ann's Orphan Asylum, Holy Cross School and Holy Cross Hospital, all located in Salt Lake City. Mention must be made of the Sisters of Mercy, who have charge of the Mary's Hospital, the Magdalen Asylum, the Mater Misericordiæ, and Our Lady's Home for Aged and Infirm Females, in this city. The Diocesan Male Orphan Asylum is located at San Rafael, and is in charge of Secular Clergy and assistants, the Dominican Sisters attending to the female departments. The Sisters of the Holy Family (a local Community), devote themselves to taking care of the sick and the poor, as well as the Catholic education of indigent children whom they feed, clothe and instruct in their two Orphan Asylums in this city. St. O. Overlay has charge of the Vicariate's Directory for Homeless Boys, at 200 Howard street, where a free lunch and an employment office is open to all the boys of San Francisco who are the offspring of neglected parents or who are without friends. These Christian education and charity are both well represented in this Archdiocese.

DIOCESE OF MONTEREY AND LOS ANGELES.—Comprising the southern section of the State of California, was established in the year 1840. Its educational and charitable institutions are

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

Winter had thrown its robe of spotless white over the fair face of Nature, the strifes of contending hosts and the din of arms had for the first time in centuries died away. The victorious Eagles of the Imperial Cesar had taken their loftiest flight and spread their wings over a conquered world.

Peace, on a star, blessed December night, when darkness hung heavily over the sky and shining serenely through their azure homes, out upon the midnight air, and silence ensued for a short time thereafter. Behold He was born whose Word pierced the realms of ancient night. His whom myriad Angels adore, born in a poor stable, holding court with the Shepherds. We hold profound reverence from naught. He who dwelt in the thunderbolt, was wrapped in swaddling clothes. He whose the Heavens cannot contain, was peacefully slumbering in the arms of the Virgin of Nazareth. He for Whom the ages of years have taken attempts to describe this solemn yet lovingly tender Mystery!

The angels appearing in the solemn stillness of midnight, chanted their heaven-born canticles, which were heard by the startled ears of the listening shepherds. Suddenly the vision disappeared, the mystic symphony is hushed into stillness. The midnight watchers hear naught but the sighing of the wind or the bark of the watch-dog, which ever and anon disturbed the solitude of slumbering Bethlehem. Wrapped in wonder and astonishment, the Shepherds go over to Bethlehem to adore the "Infant Pentheus."

Leaving behind the cave in order to assure themselves that they had reached the end of their nightly pilgrimage, these "Men of God Hill, discovered Heaven came to preach the Gospel to the poor and to abolish the curse of slavery, there rejoicing under the form of a little babe peacefully resting in his humble crib.

The Infant God was next visited by the Magi, who had followed the guiding star from the far Orient to the "hillock and hamlet of Bethlehem." They found Him not wrapped in soft garments, nor reposing in the couch of luxury surrounded by numberless worldly attendants, but they found Him occupying His throne of perpetual poverty, protected from the chilling, cold and biting winds of Winter by a stable and mangers. What a night must have met the gaze of the Magi skilled in ancient lore! The feeble light of the Bethlehem star enabled them to perceive an aged patriarch, a tender Virgin, and a helpless Infant whom they recognized as—

What a spectacle The King of Eternal Ages born in time, adored by the Wise of the earth. The Cradle of Him who came to abolish sacrifice was not to be covered with blood. Hence the Magi also neither Hun nor other cruel barbarians. They offered Him gold as an earthly prince, myrrh and incense as God.

Gaudenus Claudianus, "Thou antipoty would have expatiated in praise of the Virgin Mother, if thou hast seen or a Virgil would have left us of the son of God in a manger, of the songs of the shepherds, of the Magi prostrate before the star, of the Angels descending to the desert, of a Virgin Mother adoring her new born Infant, of the choirs of innocence, enchantment and grandeur!

What pleasing recollections the time of Christmas brings with it. Again the family circle enjoys the domestic hearth and recalls the memories of bygone days. The absent dear ones are present in spirit. The cold raises the mantle of charity warm that time, in his hurried march, has wrought upon their clockered corner. The aged sire and venerable grandsire whose locks have been whitened by the winters long ago, are young again, and their countenances are lit up with all the joyous youth. The weather beaten sailor, far away on the swelling sea, whose frame has become inured to the blasts of a northern winter, has joyful visions of his far off happy home on Christmas Day. Even the poor exiled soldier, who wears the badge of his adopted country, thinks tenderly of the rosier value and sparkling streams of his native land; and his heart warms, his pulse quicks quicker, as he hears the Christ anthem and the chimes of a thousand bells proclaiming that it is Christmas Day. Christmas is necessary to all classes, the young are doubly cheerful, and their joy is expressed in the effulgent beams that light up their innocent faces. What does all this mean? Why, it means that Christ, who lost the God-Man by his coming brought "peace and joy to men of good will.

It does but recall the strain heard centuries ago on the plains of Palestine, when the angelic hosts sang on clear, liquid resonances, to the astonished shepherds "Glory be to God in the highest and peace on earth to men of good will." Oh, Christmas, from the depths of your innocent souls pour forth your sincerest hymns of love and praise, and with hearts filled with gratitude offer to your new born King the gold of Charity and the incense of Prayer.

To heavenly powers chant your gladsome harmonious Hosannas before the throne of the Omnipotent for this is Christmas Day.

J

The Worst Life Yet.

BOSTON, December 11.—A sensation has been created by the Pope's refusal to bless medals and rosaries sent to Rome by an Irish priest, who resigned from the Catholic church in Ireland. The Pope sternly says "I cannot bless these things, they are contrary to the Gospel. They seem to prefer the Gospel of Judas and O'Brien to the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

The above cablegram appeared in the daily papers of last Monday morning. Let us stop the press in order to denounce its contents as the most unhallowed invention that ever emanated from that faithful son of the Father of Lies—the English press, who has charge of the cable dispatches which it is pretended—come direct from Rome.

The New Reformer says: "The Archbishop of Cashel was in Charleville last week, staying at the residence of Very Rev. Canon Ryan, but his Grace was utterly unable to appear in public, owing to the grief with which he was overcome by the loss of his sister, Here Mother Teresa, whom he had loved with the greatest fondness.

THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR.

We take considerable pride in presenting our readers with the CHRISTMAS MONITOR, which is made up in great part from the contributions of Catholic writers who have a deep interest on Catholic literature.

The MONITOR can say with truth that no Catholic paper in America has a greater number of prose and poetical writers contributing to its columns, and among these will be found the names of several who have already gained both name and fame for their literary genius. Others, again, are just beginning to develop a taste for Catholic literature, and to foster such a laudable ambition in the duty of the Catholic press, and the MONITOR has the happiness of knowing that some have been born the cradle whose were nursed the first-born thoughts of many a Catholic type in literature, who has since gained literary renown through the encouragement thus given to their earlier efforts.

It is with laudable pride, therefore, that we point to the pyramid of original poetry and Christmas stories, as well as to the great variety of selected matter suitable for this holiday season, which freights the MONITOR this week, and which will be read with both pleasure and profit in many distant lands, as the MONITOR finds its way into the social home, of some dear relative in Europe, bringing up to mind the long and fond of many a California relative or friend, who, though lost to sight, is still held in sweet remembrance when Christmas fare adorns the festive board, and "fond blue eye fondly turns away, in the prayer of many a pulsating heart.

Cheering Words from "Bull-Dog" Readers.

Are would be impossible to express our grateful thanks to the hundreds of friends of the MONITOR who are showing a wide and kindly good wishes for the success of what they fondly style "the grand old MONITOR, we take this method of returning our warmest and most sincere thanks for the innumerable good wishes and fraternal greetings contained in a basket full of communications at present before us from subscribers both at home and in distant lands alike, all breathing a spirit of love for the MONITOR and an appreciation for its editorial labours which makes every person on the MONITOR staff feel that they have a home in Heaven and them whose generous sentiments will ever be treasured in our heart well as to encourage to make the grand old MONITOR what it has been, and what it will be—the Catholic Church, the Popes, the Priests, the Bishops and the Catholic people against the world, and their enemies, both foreign and domestic.

In order that our readers may have an idea of the appreciation in which the MONITOR is held, we append a few random extracts from the pile of correspondence before us

AN ANCIENT SUBSCRIBER SAYS:

MR. EDITOR:—I have been sending some of the money I owe for subscriptions, and a letter money I received from home, I will send you the balance as soon as I can. I am reading the MONITOR while I write me, I was quite surprised to find that you had such a grand issue of your paper.

AN EXPERIENCED EDITOR SAYS:

"May time for reading is very limited in consequence of my duties, but I manage to dip into the MONITOR every week. Indeed, I enjoy return I receive it every week by reading the MONITOR, and I find it a great help to me in my work. I wish you success with the numerous enemies of our holy Faith.

AN IRISH PRIEST SAYS:

"I regret very much that I have not been able to write you before, but I have been from home on the interesting parish tour practice the student labours of Church dogmas and the great Christian doctrines. I was sorry to see a paper delivered of our holy Faith which is worthy of a different paper.

AN ARMY OFFICER SAYS:

"I find small my copy of the MONITOR to the Army and Navy Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., thinking, as I have my own, that chances are it's a good wholesome paper falling into hands of some Catholic soldier who has left the Church in the U. S. service, and I never allow the MONITOR to be thrown away or used as waste paper. I send them to a dozen or more chaplains. I always send every copy where I think it worth while, and I distribute about thousands of mine away in every year.

ANOTHER CHRISTMAS SAYS:

"I have not forgotten that I owed you a year of the MONITOR and as I wish other people the same literary benefit, I enclose a list of names and a dollar, and will distribute among subscribers "to the grand old MONITOR."

A CONVERTED WOMAN SAYS:

Long life to the old MONITOR and great success to the MONITOR for many years. I regard the MONITOR as the lowest and best Catholic paper published in the United States."

These samples of the sentiments of our readers are all we can find room for, but we again thank them for their kind words and their generous support, and will do our best to please and to please the Christian world of—for their cheering words and good wishes, which will serve to inspire us with the laudable ambition of making the MONITOR well worthy of the generous patronage which it is accorded by Catholics of all ages and of all nationalities.

An Excellent Idea.

The Home correspondent of the Dublin Nation says that portrait important news recently in the shape of a remarkable proposal in ecclesiastical circles in Rome that the Irish Bishops have presented a memorial in which, while expressing their devotion to the Holy See, they ask that all matters regarding them may be communicated through the Sacred Congregation, and not through a secular channel, as at present. This is a confirmation, but should the same prove to be true, it will show that the Irish Bishops are determined to maintain the independence of the Irish Church, and to preserve that direct and immediate relation with the centre of ecclesiastical authority which, by history and precedent, it is entitled. The fewer intermediaries, the less the danger from alien or intermeddlesome influence.

The great cause of complaint hitherto has been that the English press has been too often the medium of communication between the Pope and the Irish Prelates an anomalous that has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction and of pain to both the Hierarchy and the laity of Ireland.

MONITOR MISCELLANY.

Rev. John Leahy of Lockford was in the city last week.

All the Catholic schools are busy preparing for the annual examination.

Rev. Father Harrington and J. Nugent are well pleased with the result of their recent tour.

John A. Obeen of Newport, Oregon, has given Archbishop Gross a block of land on which to build a Catholic church.

Gingerbread was broken last Monday week for a new Catholic church at San Rafael. The cake will be on sale from 8 to 10.

Wednesday, December 5th, was the 25th anniversary of the establishment of some Catholic institution on the Northwest Coast.

"The Salamanchuda's Adventure," a Christmas story written for the MONITOR by Jas. A. Hughes, will appear next week.

The Christmas entertainment of the scholars attending St. Mary's college will commence on Wednesday, December 19, and continue daily until Friday the 21st inst.

Wednesday, Friday and Saturday of next week are Ember Days, therefore fast days. The 24th inst., the eve of Christmas, is also a fast day.

The Indians of Marysville recently had a very successful fair which lasted three days. The proceeds will go to the church of that prosperous little town.

Every Catholic in the city should visit St. Dominic's church, corner of Bush and Stockton streets, on next Sunday, and participate in a spiritual feast to be derived from the Forty Hours' Devotion.

The State Council of the Catholic Knights of America will be held on the 18th inst. in Oakland, on the evening of December, January and February, and on March 17th, 18th and 19th.

Rev. Joseph Leahy is lying dangerously ill at his residence in Lockford, the result of the lungs. Father Leahy arrived in this city from Ireland about two years and has made a brilliant career in the Catholic, or Hibernian ministry, and is a brother of Rev. Father Leahy of Lockford.

Today at 10 o'clock at Solano High school will be celebrated at the Church of Mount Carmel, Vallejo, the Feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Patron Saint. The choir will be accompanied by the Vallejo Band, and a sermon will be preached. The Blessed Sacrament will take place at 7 o'clock this evening.

The numerous friends of Rev. Mother Lester Daly, Superior of the Presentation Convent, on Powell street, who was taken sick on the day of her feast day, will be pleased to learn that she is improving and the physicians in attendance have hope of her recovery, but she will never again be able to take an active part in the management of her order.

THE THIRTY-ORDER OF ST. FRANCIS.

Its Establishment and Progress in this City

Although comparatively unknown in this city, the Third Order of St. Francis has been established for a few years, and has been gaining a firm hold of the Catholic people, who are taking to it with a zeal worthy of the Poor Man of Assisi himself, a Territory of St. Francis, and who, in the spirit of humility in the Middle Ages, by the example of the Franciscans, has taken rank with the Dominicans and Jesuits in the Catholic Church.

Some two years ago he secured for his parish church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, a grant of the Third Order of St. Francis, and he gave notice which it still retains, for its name church, from the Franciscan Fathers at the Mission Dolores, which, he has formed hundreds with the Franciscan Fathers, and the Third Order of St. Francis, which is the Catholic Church.

After the ceremonies of the Rite and Ceremonies of the Third Order of St. Francis, Rev. Father Kelly, Director of the Third Order, of St. Francis, in the Church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the pioneer and mother of all subsequent Third Orders of St. Francis, in the Church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the Holy Ceremonies of the Third Order of St. Francis, in the Church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the pioneer and mother of all subsequent Third Orders of St. Francis, in the Church of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the Holy Ceremonies of the Third Order, by the Holy Father, Pope Leo XIII., Pontifex

Our Young Folks.

☞ Short, original contributions of merit will be accepted for this department.
The proper name and address of contributors should accompany their MSS.
Communications should be written on one side of the paper only, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

THEIR CHRISTMAS GUEST.

Written for the Monitor by "Cinderella."

It was Christmas Eve. The snow was falling rapidly and it was fearfully cold. But the family about whom I am going to write, lived in a pretty little cottage. The trees were leafless and rattled against the house; and the rose bushes, and all the other bushes, were bare. But even all of outside of the cottage looked dismal, all inside was bright and cheerful—everything betokened comfort. On the hearth rug, before a blazing fire, an old cat dozed, while a large Newfoundland dog lay sleeping near a little girl, about three years old, who was singing her baby doll to sleep. A small, bright little woman was busy sewing, and at the same time she had her foot on a cradle, which contained a baby of about one year old, while a tall, fine-looking man was reading his newspaper. Everything looked contented, even the old dog that lay near the little girl.

"What was that?" asked Mrs. Seymour, the lady of the house. "It seemed like the cry of a child." And as she spoke she looked lovingly at the babe in the cradle and the little one rocking her doll to sleep.

"Nonsense," said her husband. "I did not hear it, it was only your fancy."

Mrs. Seymour being a gentle person said "perhaps it was." But soon it sounded more distinct than before. Mr. Seymour also heard it this time, and laid down his paper and listened; and even Carlo pricked up his ears. The little girl, Lizzie, was fast dropping to sleep, and the bright eyes found it hard work to keep open. So Mr. Seymour said to his wife:

"It will go, Alice, and see if I can find anything, for I pity those who are out on such a night." So saying he threw on his overcoat and had reached the gate when he stumbled over something.

"Why, it's a basket," he exclaimed, as he brought it towards the house. "I wonder who left it here."

He entered the house and placed it in his wife's lap, and she at once began removing the shawls and other articles that were covering something, and when at last she had removed them all, she found a baby! A pretty child with large brown eyes, that blinked at the light fell on them. It looked to be about eight months old and was scantily dressed. A card was attached to one of its little sleeves, asking the inmates of the house to take the baby for the love of God, and to care for it, as both its parents were dead and it had no friends.

Mr. Seymour was pretty well off and as once adopted the little waif. "We will accept it as a gift from God," said he. "The note does not state what its name is, does it, Alice?"

"No," she answered, glancing over the note, "and I do not know what to call her."

"I know," replied her husband, "call her Alice, after yourself." This he said with a fond smile. So the little one was named after her kind friend.

Little Alice, as we must call her, was now dressed and laid to sleep in the cradle with the little baby of Mrs. Seymour. Lizzie was put to bed in her own little crib, after hanging up her stocking for "Santa Claus" to leave some of his treasures in. As Lizzie's younger sister, Lucy, was near little Alice's age, they became inseparable. Mr. and Mrs. Seymour watched over them with the greatest love, and never let anything enter any of their minds that Alice was not their own sister, so they lived in blissful ignorance of the fact.

We must now pass over five or six years of the children's lives. Lizzie is about ten years old and Lucy and Alice are about eight. It is again Christmas Eve. We will take a peep into the little cottage. It is fitted up just the same, and the aged old Carlo are there as they were on that Christmas Eve so long ago. Mrs. Seymour looks just the same, and Mr. Seymour has the same kind look on his face. The three children are talking softly of the joys that to morrow will bring, not only to them, but to all the world. The old dog sets up and walks over to the children and lays his great head in Lizzie's lap, as if he knew that she was his oldest friend among the three girls. Mr. Seymour looks lovingly at the pretty group, and then turns to his wife and says:

"Three children for us to love and to love us. I do not regret that I took the poor little orphan who cried for help that bitter night, and I think we have been happier ever since." But the children do not notice his remark, and go on talking, not knowing that one Christmas night a little girl cried for help and was taken into a home full of love and happiness.

Costly Christmas Crockery.

A prosperous-looking citizen dropped into one of the crockery stores last week, and said he wanted a teacup and saucer for a Christmas present.

"Yes, sir," said the clerk. "Fine quality or ordinary?"

"Best you've got," said the man. "No cheap stuff for me."

The clerk opened a case and took thereon a dark decorated blue and gold cup of Sevres ware. "There's a pretty thing," said he handling it to the customer, who took it and looked it over carefully. "Yes, that's good, said he; "got anything better?" "Oh, yes, here's a dainty piece," said the clerk, handing the customer another cup of white and gold, with a ruby and emerald beading and a gold band. "There's the best you've got?" asked the man. "Yes, that's about our best." "Well, how much for the blue one?" "Twenty dollars." "Tam—!" The man nearly dropped the cup in his amazement. "Twenty dollars for that thing? Is pegged, Grantons make, here made in this other one?" "Those were made at from $720 to $1,000 apiece." "Gaudy colors and spices! Heavens and earth!" exclaimed the man. "Haven't you got something for a dollar?" "Oh, yes, plenty of them; we prized the urbane clerk, "but you said you wanted the best." "Well, I do, too, but dong me if I'll pay $60 or $70 for the best teacup and saucer that ever was made."

So he selected one for $1.25 and went away, pondering on the pomps and vanities of the world.

NORA'S CHRISTMAS HYMN.

A Holiday Story Founded on Fact.

Three were three in the O'Meara family, Thomas, his wife, and little Nora. Little Nora was seven years old.

The O'Mearas were poor, and one of them was not contented. This was the husband and father. He had become careless of late, and he did not attend to his religious duties as he had formerly done.

The morning sunlight, shooting its golden arrows into the O'Mearas' little home, saw a very pretty picture.

Little Nora sat by her mother's side, repeating the following hymn:

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our Infant Redeemer is laid.

"If I forget the rest, dear mother," said little Nora. "It has something sweet in it about shepherds. Please say it again."

And Nora's mother began:

"Cold on His cradle the dewdrops are shining,
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall."

"Oh, I remember now," cried Nora, eagerly continuing:

"Angels adore Him, in slumber reclining,
Maker and Monarch and Saviour of all."

They were proceeding to the second stanza, when Thomas O'Meara entered.

"Stop and what's the use of teaching the child that!" he said. "She'd better be learning her A B C's. Go and get your primer, Nora, and leave hymns to cold women and them that lives them."

"I like them, father," said Nora, raising her eyes imploringly.

"Do as I bid you."

And Nora obeyed, dampening the well thumbed primer with her tears.

Thomas O'Meara shortly afterwards was discharged by his employer, and he resolved to leave Ireland and go to America.

He had but little money, and he intended to let his wife and child remain in the old country until he could earn sufficient to pay their passage to the New World.

Well, he started, and Nora wept more tears at his departure than she did about the hymn.

Three months passed, and one joyful day Mrs. O'Meara received a letter from her husband, inclosing a sum of money, and telling her to come at once to him.

As soon as possible, Nora and her mother were on shipboard, speeding over the ocean. The steamer that carried them made a quicker trip than usual. They arrived two days before they were expected.

Thomas O'Meara had promised to meet them at the landing-place, but he was not there.

Anxiously Mrs. O'Meara scanned every face on the wharf—that fam liarface was absent.

Sick at heart, she stood,' with Nora by her side, waiting for his coming. Every newcomer she fancied to be him, and then with painful disappointment saw that it was not he—the expected one.

As night fell she took refuge in a hotel. Her husband had forgotten to send her any address, but she knew he worked in Troy, so the next morning she left the city and went out into the open country. She would inquire for Thomas O'Meara at the different farmhouses. Surely the people would know him. Alas! she did not know what a large place America is.

The first house she came to, Nora knew him. It was bitter cold—Christmas was near—and Jack Frost pinched poor little Nora's cheeks purple, and almost freezes the tears in her blue eyes.

At the end of the third day the snow began to fall, and the mother and daughter found shelter in a deserted tumble-down old barn. Grief and anxiety had done their work. Mrs. O'Meara fell sick with fever. She grew worse, finally becoming delirious.

There was no home in sight. Little Nora was alone with her suffering mother. It was ten days since they entered the barn, and during that time they had eaten no food.

Poor little Nora was growing very weak. She pressed her lips to her unconscious mother's hot brow. It was a sad Christmas Eve.

"Poor, dear mother," she thought, "father would let me sing my hymn now, to cheer her up, I know."

She began the hymn in her shrill, childish voice.

"Cold on His cradle the dewdrops are shining,
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall."

Out on the lonely road sounded the merry jingle of sleigh-bells. Two persons were in the sleigh—the driver and another. The moon shone solidly bright on the far-reaching expanse of snow.

"Hark!" said the driver—it was Thomas O'Meara, and the man by his side was his employer. "Do you not hear a sound, sir?"

"The win-l!"

"Sure there's no wind at all, at all. Listen! Dye hear that!" O'Meara reined in the horses.

Through the deep stillness of the night came the child's faltering voice, singing:—

"Cold on His cradle, the dewdrops are shining;
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore Him, in slumber reclining
Maker and Monarch and Saviour of all."

"That's the voice of an angel, or if my name is O'Meara," cried O'Meara.

"Too voice comes from yonder barn," said his employer.

Thomas O'Meara entered the barn, and found his wife and child. They were wrapped up warmly, placed in the sleigh, and taken to the kind employer's home.

Mrs. O'Meara soon recovered, and Nora's choice soon grew red again. The steamer had arrived two days before Thomas O'Meara reached the city, to meet his wife and Nora. His employer had forgotten to send her any address, but she knew he worked in Troy, so the next morning she left the city and went out into the open country. She would inquire for Thomas O'Meara at the different farmhouses. Surely the people would know him. Alas! she did not know what a large place America is.

The first house she came to, Nora knew him. It was bitter cold—Christmas was near—and Jack Frost pinched poor little Nora's cheeks purple, and almost freezes the tears in her blue eyes.

At the end of the third day the snow began to fall, and the mother and daughter found shelter in a deserted tumble-down old barn. Grief and anxiety had done their work. Mrs. O'Meara fell sick with fever. She grew worse, finally becoming delirious.

There was no home in sight. Little Nora was alone with her suffering mother. It was ten days since they entered the barn, and during that time they had eaten no food.

Poor little Nora was growing very weak. She pressed her lips to her unconscious mother's hot brow. It was a sad Christmas Eve.

"Poor, dear mother," she thought, "father would let me sing my hymn now, to cheer her up, I know."

She began the hymn in her shrill, childish voice.

"Cold on His cradle the dewdrops are shining;
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore Him, in slumber reclining
Maker and Monarch and Saviour of all."

"Hark!

Correspondence.

We gratefully solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertaining to the progress of the Church or the spread of her Faith.

All communications should reach this office by Tuesday morning of each week.

☞ All correspondence must reach this office by Tuesday evening's mail at latest, as the Monitor goes to press every Tuesday night.

NOTES FROM THE VERNTOUX.

The Children of Mary Present a Fine Example.—The Prospectus Thus now on the Constants, Secular, Catholic, Sectarian and Personal Matters.

[FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.]

VIRGINIA CITY, December 9th, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:—

Dear Sir:—As mentioned in last week's issue, the young ladies of the Children of Mary received Holy Communion in a body to-day. At an early hour the members assembled in their beautiful hall at the convent to arrange for the procession to the church, which was to be a most elegant affair, and ladies who are peculiar to the Children of Mary, they started for the church, where they slowly and reverently took seats reserved for them. Too much praise cannot be given the officers of the society for the admirable order and uniformity preserved throughout. What a glorious example, too, did the large band of sodalists not give to the congregation, their friends and families!

Now it seems the fearful ravages of Infidelity are spreading far and wide. People no longer profess belief in a Saviour, or in the existence of a God, or in the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. Protestantism is like a rotten branch which has long ceased to be respected as a religion. Its Ministers have no authority to preach or to teach Christianity. The potent fact has taken hold of society, and it is as true as a specify daily of last week that there is hardly any respect for the principles the preachers profess to preach. From this terrible condition of society, so deplorably given to disbelief in all revealed religion, the world has no hope of amelioration or relief, save in the grand old Catholic Church, which has braved the fury of hell and the combined hatred of all the powers of darkness since mankind has been on this mortal sphere, and will continue to give a far more life-like appearance to the figures established than any other material used in their manufacture by other makers.

The large clay statues are made of wood, manufactured gaudily, varnished, gilt and decorated. They are so respect and superior to the ordinary run of religious statuary, that they must be seen to be appreciated. These figures range in height from three to six feet.

In order to accommodate the Rev. Clergy and Religious Orders, who desire to procure statuary and purchase them upon the most favorable terms, the Sisters of Mary, of Virginia City, are determined to do their part in accomplishing.

The Holy Angels' Solidarity for young ladies approaches Holy Communion in a body on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. There were about 75 of them. Their manner was most devotional.

Many new regulations are to be inaugurated in Virginia, Dublin, Ireland, which promise very impressive adapting a very close imitation of the Holiday Boys. T. J. McGrath, Wilton Road, George Gomon and Louis Legra are the blooming choristers. Mr. McGrath is the most improved in volume and religious expression.

The ministers here are having a difficulty in attracting an audience if a person may so judge from the unique and exceedingly funny subjects they advertise as their Sunday texts. Anything to draw, seems to be their motto.

Mary O'Donnell, of our city, who has been visiting Mr. Keating of the Savage mine, left for her home in Ireland on Saturday.

A prominent young lady of the Children of Mary it is said will enter the matrimonial state this month. Miss Maggie O'Reilly, the accomplished of Mary, has been almost on the borders of the great Hereafter, but hope was entertained of her ultimate restoration to health, and a useful life.

Prosperity has at length revived on the Comstock. The miners have all gone to work in the hidden bowels of the earth.

Miss Lizzie Maher, Sp. Cath., 11 years, is very difficult to stand off the asylum who spoke the Sacred Heart Convent, Sacramento, Cal., to her parents for the principle the preachers profess to preach. From this terrible condition of society, by deplorably given to disbelief in all revealed religion, the world has no hope of amelioration or relief, save in the grand old Catholic Church, which has braved the fury of hell and the combined hatred of all the powers of darkness since mankind has been on this mortal sphere, and will continue to give a far more life-like appearance to the figures established than any other material used in their manufacture by other makers.

The large clay statues are made of wood, manufactured gaudily, varnished, gilt and decorated. They are so respect and superior to the ordinary run of religious statuary, that they must be seen to be appreciated. These figures range in height from three to six feet.

In order to accommodate the Rev. Clergy and Religious Orders, who desire to procure statuary and purchase them upon the most favorable terms, the Sisters of Mary, of Virginia City, are determined to do their part in accomplishing.

The Holy Angels' Solidarity for young ladies approaches Holy Communion in a body on the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. There were about 75 of them. Their manner was most devotional.

Many new regulations are to be inaugurated in Virginia, Dublin, Ireland, which promise very impressive adapting a very close imitation of the Holiday Boys. T. J. McGrath, Wilton Road, George Gomon and Louis Legra are the blooming choristers. Mr. McGrath is the most improved in volume and religious expression.

The ministers here are having a difficulty in attracting an audience if a person may so judge from the unique and exceedingly funny subjects they advertise as their Sunday texts. Anything to draw, seems to be their motto.

Mary O'Donnell, of our city, who has been visiting Mr. Keating of the Savage mine, left for her home in Ireland on Saturday.

A prominent young lady of the Children of Mary it is said will enter the matrimonial state this month. Miss Maggie O'Reilly, the accomplished of Mary, has been almost on the borders of the great Hereafter, but hope was entertained of her ultimate restoration to health, and a useful life.

Prosperity has at length revived on the Comstock. The miners have all gone to work in the hidden bowels of the earth.

Miss Lizzie Maher, Sp. Cath., 11 years

Christmas Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE DYING MAGDALENE!

The sunset's deepening glow
Through the shattered windows creep,
Where a woman was and low
Awaken from her troubled sleep.
In the twilight's mystic gloom,
Flying forms like spectres float,
Around the shadowy room,
Flitting and whispering shadows!
Whispering : whispering :
Of the Styx and the shadowy boat!

A gilded "Palace of Sin,"
With its hangings rich and rare,
But its beauty cannot win
The girl from her hall despair!
She is dying ; dying here,
Close in sounds of reigns mirth,
Despairing, fainting with fear,
What is the glory all worth!
Wondering, wondering :
If there's peace for the dying on earth!

Faint sounds come up from the street,
As the powder crowds increase,
They, the weary watchers greet,
And hear her the lullaby of "Peace."
As she asks the reason why,
"Christmas Eve!" she's told, and knows
Why crowds are hurrying by,
Thinking, regretfully,
"What a place for a Christmas repose!"

Sad thoughts—the ghosts of her past,
Draw the silken curtains back,
And each mournful glance cast,
They torture her like a rack!
Through the aisles of vanished years,
Flitting visions come and go
That drench her soul with their tears,
Tearfully dropping as low,
Wearily, wearily :
Heath the weight of the bitterest woe!

In deep and endless despair,
She sinks and gazed in hate
On the room and grandeur fair ;
The sin with its odorous weight
Like a loathsome cobra twined,
Crushing out her fasting hours!
Rack pain with eyes of the reptile afraid,
Scorching her soul with their pow'r,
Glostingly, glostingly :
As the serpent in the vision dreamed!

She sought the truth at her glass,
And its mirrored answer came—
But "true Death that smiled alas,
And gazed from that royal frame :
As its truthful face she read,
Falling faint to narrow fear,
And chilled with shiv'ring dread,
Feeling the Messenger near !
Fiendishly : purposefully :
"Send not Death to me here ! Oh, not here !"

Then down and out to the street,
In her anger flight to shame !
Not a hand was bowed to greet,
Though many were friends, in name.
For a woman ruined and lost—
Toy of Satan's idle hour,
A bauble carelessly tossed—
Lose her away and her pow'r,
Dying and shrieking,
With the glow of her beauty's dow'r !

She walked alone in the crowd,
And in lonely bitterness,
Like a damp and chilly shroud,
She felt on her bosom press!
And from Memory's prison room
Rushed the past to life again !
And some scenes cast from their tomb
Surging the maddening brain !
Making her sickey
Like a decade of terrible pain !

And he passed close by her side
With his wife so pure and good !
Though for him she her honor died,
He frowned as she trembling stood !
And drew away in fear
Lest the robes that trailed at his feet,
And Virtue's raiment so dear
Those of the wicked should greet,
Fearfully : carefully :
Did the Saint frowning upon her retreat !

She saw the revelling scene,
And his draught of deadly wine,
And his lips that called her "queen,"
And jewels that treasuresome shine.
Oh, the days so sweet and brief !
Passion's swiftly rolling stream,
That wains eternity's grief !
Closely in Memory's beam
Stand out in sorrowing scenes
Of her ruin wrought, feverish dream !

Now, dying out in the gloom !
Not a place to lay her head !
For she spurned the gilded room
And from its memories fled !
She had lost her prison home,
Seeking Death's merciful face
Beneath the pitying stars !
Yearfully facing the place.

Shuddering : positive :
From the air of the chilling degrees !

But an Angel guided her Sight
To a place of blessed rest,
To the home of purity's delight,
Ere truth on her soul was prest !
Ah !—true many weary years—
Glorious years of heaven lone
Shine facing out in her tears !
Book, with children and angels
Blighted and withering—
To the home of her innocence came !

She saw the immortal rise,
And her own magnolia tree !
And the rays of Eastern skies
On things as they used to be.
While such holiday tree and land
Valued a fragment "Welcome home !"
To south the wanderer's grief,
Home ! and to never more roam !
Dying in peacefulness
In the shade of her hallowed home !

She waited breathless and weak
To her book so light and low,
And drew back too faint to speak
At frowns that bade her "Go !"
As she round heard with their spell
"Mother, dear, I came to die !"
Then over the threshold she fell !
Gathering from outside one
Relation and footsteps
Would the step of the Prodigal be !

Once more the motherly hands
On her shrinking form were pressed,
And they broke the fett'ring bands
And brought her the longed-for rest,
From those lips forgiveness came
Kissing sin and guilt away !
Her tears washed out all the shame ;
Purity's cleansing ray
Purifying and refining
The first gleam of Eternity's day !

In accents tender and mild
She was welcomed back to rest
And again was called "My child !"
And held to the loving breast.
From a mother's pure embrace,
Snared the soul of Magdalene !
The arms of sanctified grace
Wrapping their glorified sheen
Lovingly, savingly !
Round the soul of the demi-monde queen !

MARY LANGLEY.

A SOMNAMBULIST'S ADVENTURE.

A STORY OF ONE CHRISTMAS EVE.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY JAMES L. ROBBIN.]

CHAPTER I.

It was Christmas Eve. The rain fell in torrents and the lonely mountain roads looked wild and weird to the eye of a traveler who was unfortunate enough to be caught in the storm. He was a young man, and his name was John Everett. Three days before, while at college, he had received a letter from his mother to the effect that his father was dying. Being thus notified, he hurried toward his home, which was situated in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. The railroad did not then run to the village in which he lived; so, reaching the end of the line, he was compelled to abandon the train and travel the rest of the way, a considerable distance, through the mountains, on horseback. Being anxious to reach home he immediately procured a horse and started off.

A storm had been threatening in the morning and he had hardly gone a mile when it commenced to rain, making travel over the sleepy, slippery roads very dangerous. He kept on, however, and when we made his acquaintance he had been on the road all day. He was just thinking of finding shelter when, glimmering in the distance, he saw a faint light. Not having tasted food all day, he made for it with the intention of asking for hospitality for the night.

"Surely," he thought, "they cannot refuse me a mouthful of food and a bed on Christmas Eve."

With this intention he soon reached the house, dismounted and knocked at the door. There was silence for a moment, and then the door was opened by a burly looking man, who, after staring at the traveler for a moment, said :

"Who are you, and what do you want?"

"I want shelter for the night and a mouthful of food," answered John. The stranger hesitated for a moment and then said :

"How much money have you got?"

"Oh, I've got enough to pay you for your trouble," answered John.

"All right," said the farmer, "come in."

John entered, and the farmer led the way to the kitchen, where two other persons were seated—the farmer's son and daughter. The former was like his father, a stout, surly-looking fellow, whose face showed a fondness for money. With the girl it was different. She had a pretty face and her eyes were mild and gentle; they looked up as John entered, and the son asked.

"Who's this fellow, father?"

"Oh, he's a traveler who got caught in the storm; he wants supper and is goin, to stay here all night. Here, Sue," he said, turning to the girl, "bustle round and get the gentleman some supper, and then go up and fix the bed in the spare chamber."

Supper was soon ready, and after eating it, being tired and sleepy, John said he "guessed he'd go to bed."

"All right," answered the farmer, "come on."

John "came on," and the farmer led the way up a rickety staircase to a small room in the back of the house. Here he found a small cot, and hastily saying a few prayers, he tumbled into bed. How long he slept he did not know, but he was awakened by a hand being laid on his shoulder, and a sweet voice whispering :

"Get up, fly from this place if you would save your life!"

Starting up quickly, he found the fair daughter of his host standing beside him. She appeared greatly frightened, and when he asked her the cause, she replied :

"Oh, sir! Leave this place. My father and brother have planned to rob and murder you. Hark! Here they come already! Oh, sir, fly, while you yet have time!"

John paused for a moment and listened. He could hear the cautious step of his host already ascending the stairs. The steps were drawing closer, he waited no longer, but raising himself on the window sill, lowered himself carefully on the outside and let go. He dropped into a pool of water under the window and bruised himself considerably, but he was not hurt otherwise. His only thought was of escape, and so he rushed off entirely regardless of the direction.

After running some distance he came to the bank of a small pool, where he seated himself on a log to breathe. After resting for awhile, he rose and started down stream. He traveled for an hour in that direction, and then started to climb the mountain at which the stream stopped. Climbing in silence for awhile, he saw before him the ruins of a wooden hut. On reaching it found it to be quite extensive. It had almost all fallen to pieces, but several rooms were yet standing, and entering one of them, John stretched his weary limbs upon the floor, muttering to himself.

"Here at least I will be sheltered from the storm and from thieves."

Lulled by the pattering rain drops he soon fell asleep, only to be awakened again by a crash of thunder. After rapidly endeavoring to get to sleep, he finally gave up the attempt and seated himself against the wall, where he began to think over the strange events of the night. Suddenly his thoughts were interrupted by a low, wailing cry, which seemed to come from the foot of the mountain. He listened; again and again the cry was repeated. "Some one in distress, he thought. "I'll go and see."

So, rising to his feet, he proceeded down the mountain side to the brook, where, to his amazement, he found a baby, apparently about two years of age, lying on the wet ground, with its face turned up to the driving storm. With an exclamation of pity, John picked up the infant and carried it to the room in the ruins. Here he again seated himself and sought to console the child.

"Poor baby, he said, "I wonder how it was left there! What's your name, baby?"

"Johnnie," answered the child, with a lisp.

John asked further questions, but the baby, who could hardly speak, could not answer them. So, after half an hour's cogitating, all that John learned was that the baby's name was Johnnie, and he wanted his mamma. He also began to doze, when he suddenly became aware of a strange presence in the room. Opening his eyes he saw a figure, clad in white, standing before him. It did not move, it did not speak, and John became conscious that his hair was commencing to stand on end, for the strange, white, clad figure was a ghost.

CHAPTER II.

Christmas morning dawned bright and clear, bringing peace and happiness to all the land. Mr. Silver got out of bed very early that morning, saying to his wife

"Get up early Maa, Ellen. You'd better go to late Maa, as we can't leave the baby alone."

So saying he started off. His wife laid in bed awhile longer and then got up and went to the kitchen to get the breakfast. She found the fire out and had the water boiling, but before she started to set the table she resolved to go and see if the baby still slept. So, stealing softly to the children's room, she carefully approached the crib, but she suddenly started back with a frightened cry, for it was empty! Her darling was gone!

"Oh God!" she cried, "my darling! My Johnny! Where are you, where are you? Oh, Christ, my Saviour, Who want here on Christmas Day, restore my lost darling!"

Just then the door opened and Mr. Silver came in.

"Why, what's the matter, Ellen?" he asked in astonishment, "is baby sick?"

"No, no!" she cried. "Now, he is gone!"

"What!" he cried, "Oh, I see it all, now. You had an attack of your old malady, sleep walking, last night; and in your sleep, get up and dressed yourself, took the baby from his crib, carried him off somewhere, laid him down, and came back without him. See, your white dress is still damp from the rain, and your slippers are covered with mud. Come, and we will look for him."

Silently he took her hand, and together they left the house and proceeded in the direction of the ruined cot-rest. They reached it without finding any trace of the lost child, and entered. Reaching the first room they found the insensible form of John Everett stretched upon the floor, with little Johnnie lying sound asleep across his body. With a glad cry of joy the mother threw herself on her knees beside her child, while Mr. Silver turned his attention to John. He soon succeeded in reviving him; but no sooner had he caught sight of Mrs. Silver than he cried out:

"There it is again. Oh, take it away, take it away"

"Take what away?" asked Mr. Silver in astonishment.

"The ghost! The ghost!"

"What ghost?"

"Oh, there, there," he cried, pointing to Mrs. Silver. "I saw it last night."

"You saw it last night. Why that's my wife."

At this juncture Mrs. Silver laughed, and said:

"He must have seen me while walking in my sleep last night. Glad in this white dress I look very much like a ghost."

Then she related to the astonished John the story of her strange malady and its effects, and in return, he told her the history of his night's adventure. At the conclusion, Mr. Silver said.

"I know your father well; he and I are old friends. He was very sick, and not expected to live, but night before last, I believe, he had a change for the better and is now able to sit up."

John was delighted. He accompanied Mr. Silver home, and after they had breakfasted Mr. Silver hitched the old white mare to the dog cart, and took John home. They passed John's house about five o'clock, where he found his parents anxiously expecting him. He stand home until after New Year's, and then returned to college. He is now a jurist Priest, beloved by his people, to whom he never tires telling of his adventure on that eventful Christmas Eve.

Fathers and Daughters.

There are few lovelier relations in life than that existing between a father and his daughter, when that relation has been developed to its best extent by tenderness and honor and affection on one side, and by confidence and submission almost to adoration on the other, the veneration sifted forth by perfect faith in the virtue and nobility of its object. The trust in her father which a young girl feels and all unconsciously exhibits, is something so flattering to his pride as it is delightful to his affections. But the father who accepts it, perforce, yet knows that he does not deserve it, if he is any sort of a man, is more to be pitied than envied. And the young girl who receives her father's intense affection as something purer and holier than other mortal feels, and who is unworthy of that emotion, is one almost beneath pity. A man conscious of the lore he has called forth in a pure and gentle being feels obliged to live up to the opinion which that gentle being holds of him, so far as it may be in his power; the child is, in a way, his guardian angel, and often when he is tempted he hears the rustling of that angel's wings. How much, then, it behooves the young angel to attend to her angelhood, and to be all that her father deems her; to break no faith, to keep the law, avan the unwritten law, to be, so much to herself as to him, a congregation of loveliness only just short of the virtues of St. Agnes herself. For the daughter has the father's faith in her in trust, and to betray that trust would be to commit a sort of sacrilege.

SEND US CATHOLIC NEWS.

We would most respectfully ask the clergy, or any of our readers in this entire Pacific Coast, to send us local items of general interest. We wish to make the MONITOR a chronicle of all Diocesan happenings relating to the progress of Religion. We feel we need do no explanation to any of those who have the knowledge of the facts in mind, regarding these facts are all we want will our friends please furnish us with them!

Diseases of Confession. There is a article which so richly deserves the entire confidence of the community as Hagyard's Balsamic Tincture. Those suffering from Asthmatic and Bronchial Diseases, Coughs, and Colds should try them. They are universally considered the superior to all other articles used for similar purposes. The late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher said of them: "I have never changed my mind in speaking them from the first, except I think yet better of them which I began by thinking well of. I have also recommended them to friends, and they have proved extremely serviceable.

FROM SUMMER STARLIGHT TO CHRISTMAS TAPERS.

A TALE OF TRUE LOVE.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MAY S. CORCORAN.]

"Oh, Yoland, am I not lovely!"

As she spoke Ethel Freril tossed her head back and raising an immense fan, rested it lightly upon the perfect rosebud lips. Her women were blessed, or cursed, with beauty equaling hers. A slender, graceful figure ; small head, crowned with golden brown hair ; a complexion more like a tinge of pink, though that night her cheeks resembled the deep red of roses, eyes once gazed upon the world is forgotten. Great limpid, brown orbs, one instant shining through tears, the next dancing mischievously.

"Can he resist me?"

"Ethel, I wish that bill was over." Yoland's face clouded. "What is Fred Lingley to you? Darling, listen to me this once. Don't trifle with him; he is not a man to be trusted."

"Trusted," Ethel laughed. "Spoil this splendid flirtation! Of course I could never marry an Atheist. Yet I like him. You are sure he cares for me. It is six months since we met."

"He hope you, Ethel. Let him go. Where is the sweet child who vowed she could not live out of a convent, whose every thought and word were promptings of piety?"

"Would she were dead! Between love for the world and remembrance of what I once was, I am mad at times. Dear, but these slippers are tight," she added, with a quick revolution of manner.

Against a huge plant, in the full glare of hundreds of lights, leaned Ethel Freril. A richly dressed man approached. There was a half conscious pride in the poise of his head, in every movement, that art cannot give; a fire in his dark eyes which told of southern blood, an intellectual showing on his broad brow that few of Miss Freril's dainty admirers could boast.

"At last!" he exclaimed, bending over her.

She lifted her eyes slowly. "Mr. Ah, pardon. I thought some one had introduced you."

He started back angrily. "You are right. We do not know each other."

A faint smile flickered about her lips. She rose and a dainty bit of lace fell at his feet. Stooping, he returned it to her.

"Remember!" A little silvery peal of laughter rang in his ear.

"The happiest day of my life! Yes, he said fervently.

"A poor compliment. Then you saw me but a moment, to-night you have stared a full hour."

"Then you were kind, while to-night."

"I am some kind. See, the waltz is reserved for you."

"If you would grant me one of our old time talks instead of all this buzz and turmoil."

"Thanks. Compliment number two. Others care to dance with me. Adieu Sir."

During the remainder of the night, Fred Langley just only watched her flitting lightly through the hall. When she was leaving he addressed: "Will you pass judgment on my new team, to-morrow, Ethel?"

"Delighted, Sonor," she smiled.

He quitted the gay throng for the deserted village streets. As he wandered aimlessly along the winding road, he muttered:

"I wonder could I get it shaken."

Sinking upon the grass, he indolently lighted a cigar, seeing, in its curling smoke, pictures of his past.

A child playing round an old Spanish castle, the idolized pet of a beautiful mother, the spoiled plaything of a careless American father. A self-willed boy, drinking deep of pleasures far beyond his years, crossing the ocean to try life anew in California home. A reckless, [illegible] manhood, a child, with steady aim, at one who dared dispute his honor; but towering instantly to lift a dusky handkerchief, dropped by a pretty, mischievous girl in passing. Last—A jealous, determined lover.

The clocks chiming, the horses galloping home drowned by the hammer of hoofs, among the flowers, when Ethel Freril, unclosing her heavy lids, smiled from her dreamy, half-conscious laughing.

"You really expect me to enjoy a ride in that broiling sun?"

"We can drive through the woods, and it will vanish in an hour."

With evident reluctance, under the shelter of a wide white hat, she left her flowery nest, only pausing in the gateway to send a kiss and a snatch of a merry little song over a golden embrace to Yoland, standing on the rose-wreathed porch where she would watch so long for the coming of that bright face.

"Sir, Mr. Langley, the moon has already risen. We must turn." She laid one small, firm hand on the lines. He caught it and pressed it to his lips.

"We shall never return, Ethel Freril, until you are my wife."

The girl made no movement. Every ranges of color fled as she met his ardent gaze with one of cold contempt.

"How manfully you have acted," she said slowly. "Release my hand, please."

"And thus loss you forever. No, Ethel, you are mine. Not a power on earth can save you. Why find it hard, darling?"

His strange, beautiful eyes flash into hers, and, although the words are wild, his tone is deeply pathetic and tender.

"There is a power given to even the meanest mortal, that will deliver me, Heinz Death from danger."

"Diabonos!" he exclaimed. "What do you mean? We shall be married almost instantly after reaching Home, I have everything arranged."

"How! By whom?" she asked, scornfully.

"The Judge." In the hotel parlor."

"Thy marriage! What I have been taught to believe a union of souls formed by God alone."

"Will not our hearts be as truly joined as with the Latin words of your Church?"

"Hush," she said, sadly. "Can we worship at the one shrine? Can we suffer vows to the one God?"

"If there be a God, you Hat, Ethel, you could not think me base enough to interfere with your devotions. And, darling, might you not teach me?"

"Never. I might sacrifice my soul for you and it would be useless. Putting aside the question of religion, could I ever again meet those who trust me? Don't answer. You do not understand."

"You are not dying, Fred," she pleaded. But the heavy lids had closed again and the silky curls hung upon his brow.

"Hum, Gracie; call Father Black."

"His has only fainted," the young Priest said, as he forced a few drops of wine between the clinched teeth. "Poor, poor old fellow, this is a surprise," when Fred was comfortably placed upon a couch in the nursery.

"You, Gorge? Pardon, Father Black I can's quite forget our College days. "But, Hat, Had I dream this was it at all?"

"She it was," the Priest laughed.

"Shall I explain? Well, that night after leaving you she went directly to the Convent, where she remained six months. The Superior would not permit her entering the Novitiate, and at the end of that time, even she became convinced that the world was her sphere. Pride, yet unsubdued, forbade her returning home, so she obtained a position as teacher in this out of the world place, and on Sister of Charity ever did more good than she does among these rough miners. To night when I left her half fainting from excitement, she simply clasped her hands and moved away to pray for you."

"Her prayers saved me," Fred said, reverently. "Let me go quietly home, Gracie. The little angel will have the soon to pray for me."

"Not a blush was once noticed, flushed like a school boy.

"Enough," Father Black smiled. "I must go on the altar."

Never had Heaven seemed to Fred Lingley so near, so real, as during that midnight in the little mountain chapel, listening to Ethel Freril's sweet voice singing prayers :

"To your Infant God and mine."

"All was hushed, the dim aisles, where the moon had not had away.

Vanished were the slender Christmas.

And the sweet crossed to away

Lo, their wings are gently waiting,

And the angels softly rise,

Gathering towards the tabernacle

Worship bending, from their eyes.

"Ethel," he whispered. "Hurad I."

"Stop, Fred. Now that I see your face I trust you." She blushed prettily, and : "You know the rest.

Christmas Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE CHRISTMAS BELLS.

The Christmas bells! hear now in air
Hi-ho, they sweet chiming bells
And hold their clamorous silence pow
Ye earth, ye hills, ye mountains
A welcome from the heavenly lips
Ding, dong, ding, ding
Yes, ye must shake air
Ding, dong, our welcome strain
Heavenly tones everywhere.

I feel to their tones as they bound along,
Pleading with joy the dark gad mind,
Shadow the heart of the listening throng,
At the sweet tone of the Christmas bells.
Lulled with truth and celestial sight
Hark ! ye ye Christmas bells
Resting, ring your voices
Let it echo to the skies,
And tell all man to rejoice.

They speak a tale, a wonderous tale—
Of mystical, strange mysterious tale,
And known in every hill and vale,
Yet always glad the tidings are,
Of one enlighted moment—I know and said.
Hark ! ye ye angels of earth,
Gladly, we sing
Let the the Saviour's birth
Christ's natal day.

They tell how Christ, the Saviour mild,
Descend from all the heavens
Take human shape and like a child,
With love divine on mankind smiled,
To save, yes, for the sin.
It is the glad hour,
Overshadowed with love,
The All Rolling Power
Come down from above.

They tell how on that sacred night
The starry hosts resplendent shine,
When man's hands ascended in flight,
In thrilling tones sang music bright
Fa ynine of Jesus, Lord Divine,
In the manger He lies,
O, unheard great,
Lord of earth and skies,
In infancy's state.

Such music, ev'r, I ween, was heard,
Since Adam in the garden fair
Life's estranged to God's sweet word,
Yet now will sing Christmas carol,
With pleasure constant, deep and rare.
Thus gladly we sing,
And loudly declaim
Fair wonds that will ring
True praise to His name.

O, man ! job with that sweet refrain,
Thy heart and hand and harp tune ye,
The a salm, an anthem to pain,
The glad, celestial, Christmas strain,
The bright bells sweetly walk along.
Glory to God on high—
Peace on earth—
And man is allkindly
To men of good will.

J. T. CONTONOUR.

CALIFORNIA'S CLARION CRY!

"Live and Let Live."

FRESH AND PALATABLE

GROCERIES

CONTRIBUTE MUCH TO THE

HEALTH AND HAPPINESS

Of Every Home.

Therefore Everybody Ought to know that

SBARBORO & CO.,

At their Old-established place of Business,

531 Washington St.,

IS DECIDEDLY

THE CHEAPEST PLACE

IN SAN FRANCISCO

Where readers of the MONITOR can purchase the best

FAMILY GROCERIES

AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES.

The Old House Still Stands

Where—for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of darling, Parlest and

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS

HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

☞Remember—Sbarboro ... that if you wind

GENUINE GOOD GROCERIES,

The proper place to purchase them is at

SBARBORO & CO'S.,

531 WASHINGTON STREET

[Between Montgomery and Sansome.]

Compare these Prices

With any other House in the city, THEN CALL AND EXAMINE

OUR GOODS,

SUGARS

AND

COFFEE

Greatly Reduced.

FRESH MEALS & MILL RATES.

16 pounds Tapioca,	$1
16 pounds Sago,	$1
20 pounds Codfish,	$1
14 pounds German Prunes,	$1
10 pounds Dried Pears,	$1
Star Ground Coffee, 20-25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug) 50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea, 40 and 50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea, - 25c per lb
5-gallon can Banner Coal Oil, -	$1.00
50 lb. sack Salt -	35c
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs, -	$1.75
20 pounds Canary Seed,	$1
Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.

And all other Goods Equally Cheap.

WINES AND LIQUORS

Claret, Table, Old, gallon, from	$0 to 75
Claret, French, gallon	$1 50
Sherry, Cask, gallon	$1 50
Port, Cask, gallon	$1 50
Old Tom Gin, gallon	$2 50
Old Cognac Brandy, gallon	$5 00
Old Hunter Whiskey, gallon	$2 50
Swan Gin, gallon	$2 50
Jamaica Rum, gallon	$2 50

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

R. SBARBORO, Manager.

FILIPPE'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES

PROF. DE FILIPPE, author of the Grammar of Castile and Madrid, continues to give personal instruction in Spanish, French, Italian, Latin, German, English and Hebrew, at his Academy, 1 Montgomery, opposite Lick House. Classes for beginners in all languages, where students have not the opportunity to practice. Fine library and foreign periodicals free to students. Apply room 18 to 21 in the Academy.

Prof. De Filippe's simplified new system of acquiring a Spanish language, containing simplified rules and examples for the same, with Spanish Reader, exercises, regular and irregular, conversations for every day use, pronunciation, etc., etc., 1 vol. 12mo, 75 cts. Prof. De Filippe's Dual Dictionary, 75 cents. Sent by mail.

A QUEER CHRISTMAS AT DOVER STATION.

A SINGULAR STORY OF WILD WESTERN LIFE

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY M. A. DEVONSHIRE.]

CHAPTER I.

The wide, deserted plains were desolate of all human life that dreary cold of December. Sky and earth alike were one dull gray, while the air was damp and thick. It boded a storm. Darkness was coming on, and the long, straight iron roadway was terrible.

Soon through the desolate quiet sounded a monotonous dull pounding which gradually grew louder. The frozen earth vibrated. Then was a rushing sound, then a loving and moaning indescribably weird in this deserted place. On came a herd of cattle a thousand strong—thirsty, hungry, cold ; pressing ahead for the friendly shelter of the foot-hills. On, on, they came, a mass of red, of white, of black, with a thicket of waving horns. The earth shook as the army went momentfully into the distance, the echo of their lowing following them as they followed the magnificent Hereford, their leader. They were gone and the ghostly silence came back. Later, a dark object, four-footed and furry, followed in the great beaten trail made by many hoofs, but there were no dead cattle that had fallen by the wayside, and a wolf howled a baffled hunger cry and turned his tail, and a panting gray wolf that had feasted so long upon dying cattle that unfathomable, mysterious distance.

Now the air is alive, cattle and wolf have fled, but the snow commence the plains. Night merrily it comes, as white, as healthy and as beautiful as when happy, sheltered children watch it from pleasant home windows. Thick and fast the snow comes, the frosty buffalo grass has a fleecy carpet, the sharp, rotten, stalks of cactus and thistle have an eerie robe, and the white carpet is as unpolluted and pure as a cloud—there is nothing to mar its perfect surface.

Listen ! A dull, rumbling roar, deadened by the blanket of snow, is heard in the distance. Nearer and nearer it sounds, and, at last, human life comes into the dreariness. A great red eye flashes away off on the horizon, but comes steadily on with many little attendant eyes of light and a big curl of smoke that mingles with the snow and hills, with its hot, black breath, unpolluted by the cold, pure air. Nearer and nearer it comes, and, at last, it is a train, five hours late, making up for lost time on the level prairie.

Few passengers were in the Pullman car, for who that could help it would travel on near Christmas time ? There was an old English gentleman, with white hair and beard ; a stout, red-faced cattle-owner from Texas, who looked indifferently at the snow, for he knew his cattle were safe in warmer latitudes ; then there was a young college boy going home for a vacation, and three pretty girls in the same happy journey. Of course the colored porter was there, and the dignified conductor, conscious of his becoming uniform. Two of the young ladies were sisters, Nellie and Fannie Haight, and the third was a friend, Harriet Lawrence, but better known among her acquaintances as "Harry." They were all bound for their home in Denver.

"I can't see a thing but snow," said Fannie, fastening her nose against the glass, "and, oh, my! any thing pleasant happens. You know will be jolly though in Denver, and lots more there too. Maybe we can go sleighing, if the snow is deep enough."

"He too bad we couldn't get home until Christmas Eve," said Nellie. "I don't think of all the delays we had. I thought we should never start the last time."

"I wouldn't miss Christmas at home for anything," chimed in Harry; "the children will be so glad to see us, now make it more pleasant and Christmasy."

The old Englishman listened to their chat half sadly, and it seemed to him a long way back to his Christmas days, when he still looked out of the window, the young man tried to look old and smiled as if he thought his grave was near, and when the porter went to sleep in a corner, but the conductor, forgetting all about his finery, walked in and out of the car in a worried manner.

Meanwhile the snow fell faster and thicker in great matted flakes. It clogged the wheels, dropped into the smoke-stack, hung defiant and dripping to the big red light, curtained the little windows, drifted on the doors and steps, and then joined a wild shrieking wind that came from nowhere, in the infinite distance across the land, yelling shouts like through the dark—tumbled into great heaps, rolled into ruts and inclines, piled high on hillock regions, or gathering on great level tracts, thing barrier arrier across the roadway before the panting iron horse that fought it so bravely.

"A merry, merry Christmas" shrieked the wind in its riotous glee. All the passengers were asleep, and they did not even know that the train had stopped. Only the lynx-eyed conductor and porter knew that the train was snowed in at Dover Station, the most deserted spot of a place in all that forlorn region.

"And was shan't be home aroun on Christmas Day," moaned Harry, as she awoke and looked out on the wide, snow-covered landscape. "And snowed in here ! Here there is nothing but a coal station and a dugout," she concluded, seeing a little dark mound in the snow where a women and boy were shovelling a path.

"You' rather be thankful, Miss," said the porter who this interest with a well-paid Pullman porter takes in a young lady in his care, "if we had been snowed in out on the plains, we might have been the dreariness. A great red eye flashes away off on the horizon, but comes steadily on with many little attendant eyes of light and a big curl of smoke that mingles with the snow and hills, with its hot, black breath, unpolluted by the cold, pure air. Nearer and nearer it comes, and, at last, human life comes into

THE MONITOR.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PAY OF PUBLICATION.

MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1888.

PASTORAL.

RIGHT REV. BISHOP MANOGUE.

To the Rev. Clergy of the Diocese of Sacramento.

Dearest Brethren Beloved:

The following Decree issued at the desire of the Father of the faithful on All Saints Day, first day of last month, you are hereby notified to observe and cause to be observed in all churches where there is a local and stationary Priest. All conventual chapels having attached or adjoining thereto a local resident Priest, are expected to comply with the instructions and prescriptions of the said Decree.

A DECREE—CHRIS ET OMNIS.

LEO XIII., POPE.

Following is the correct translation of a Decree just received from Rome. Regarding the Religious Exercises to be observed in all the churches throughout the Catholic world on the last day of the present year:

A number of Prelates throughout the Catholic world have lately written to the Holy Father Leo XIII., begging that all the children of the Church, who, during the year now drawing to a close, have sweetly have celebrated his Sacerdotal Jubilee with unanimous and ardent manifestations of love for his person and zeal for religion, should again assemble to return thanks to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, whence graces flows abundantly on all. Now, His Holiness, complying with these desires and prayers, which were laid before him by the under mentioned Secretary of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, and which affirm most excellent proof of devoted piety towards God, and filial respect towards the Vicar of Jesus Christ on earth, has thought well to declare that he strongly approves and commends the proposal that in metropolitan, cathedral, collegiate, parochial, and other churches, where, with the consent of the Ordinaries, it may be desired, the Most Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist shall remain exposed for some time on December 31st next, the last day of the year, for the public adoration of the faithful, and for the worship of the Sacred Heart; that five decades of the Rosary of the Blessed Virgin shall be recited, and that then, after the singing of the Ambrosian Hymn and Tantum Ergo—the prayers Deus cujus Misericordiæ, Concede nos, and the Collects for the Pope and the Church being added—there shall be Benediction with the Divine Host. To each of the faithful who, after having made a good Confession and approached Holy Communion, shall devoutly attend such a public service, and shall pray with faith and confidence to the Sacred Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ in thanksgiving, and also for the tranquility and peace of Holy Mother Church and the conversion of sinners, the Holy Father deigns to grant a Plenary Indulgence in the usual formsy form of the Church—an Indulgence which will also be applicable to the souls in Purgatory.

Wishing promises, Dearly Beloved Brethren, as well as the dear people entrusted to your paternal care, every blessing, spiritual and temporal, and hoping a blessed Christmas and a happy and joyful termination of this year of our Lord, may be your portion and reward,

I am your faithful and devoted servant in the Sacred Heart of Jesus,

✠P. MANOGUE,
Bishop of Sacramento.

Sacramento, Dec. 18, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—When making presents on Christmas Day, let your first present be a gift of your soul to God.

—The way to feel light-hearted at Christmas is to cast off your sins in the Confessional shrine.

—Dr. Stoecker, the Lutheran Court Minister at Berlin, says that all but a fraction of the non-Catholic children of that city are unbaptized, and that the outlook is that in the next generation there will be very few baptized persons there outside the Catholic Church. Such is the way in which Protestantism kills Christianity in every country where its baneful influence is felt to any great extent.

—It is a cause of constant complaint among Protestant preachers that their congregations are everywhere growing small by degrees and beautifully less, so the New York Evening Post makes this sensible suggestion: "If the churches mean to hold their own as moral and religious agencies, they must once for all cease to be what too many of the Protestant churches are, pleasant and fashionable Sunday clubs, where wearied business men have their intellectual palates tickled once a week with music, good society, and soothing reflections on life, and death, and judgment."

—In his recent speech in Scotland, Lord Salisbury paid the Irish people this compliment in order to show their consistency in opposing England so long as Ireland is enslaved: "When we quarreled with Spain the Irish sided with Spain. When we quarreled with America the Irish took the side of America. When we quarreled with France the Irish sided with France." Lord Salisbury might have continued and completed the compliment by telling his hearers that as long as Home Rule was denied to Ireland, so long would the Irish people side with any nation that England engaged in war.

—Benjamin Harrison will be 55 years, 8 months and 14 days old when he is inaugurated President of the United States. His distinguished grandfather was 58 years old at the time of taking the oath of office forty-seven years ago. Three other Presidents were 55 years old at the beginning of their Administrations. They were Martin Van Buren, Zachary Taylor, and Rutherford B. Hayes. Lincoln became President at 52. John Tyler and Chester A. Arthur were 51. Millard Fillmore was 50. Franklin Pierce and James A. Garfield were 48. Grover Cleveland was 48. Grant was 47. All the other Presidents were older than Gateen Harrison.

How Irish Tenants are Robbed.

Few persons outside of Ireland have any idea of the grasping exclusiveness with which Irish landlords have wrung the last farthing from their half-starved and impoverished tenantry during the past—up to the time when the Irish National Leagues first called attention to the cruel and unjust extortion.

In order, therefore, that the readers of MONITOR may fairly understand the reasons which impel the oppressed, famishing, starved and half-clad Irish tenantry to demand a reduction of exhorbitant rents at the hands of their landlords, we give a few sample cases which came before the Commissioners appointed by the English Parliament to investigate and to fix fair rents. The cases we cite were tried in Tulsa, County Kerry, where the poor unfortunate tenants had been slaving for generations in order to gratify the greed of grasping landlords, until nothing was left to the last sufferer save the poor house or compulsory exile. Here are a few examples of the reductions made by the Commissioners, after examining into the crop values of the land rented and the market value of its products.

PRESENT NAME.	OLD RENT.	NEW RENT.
James Dillon	£ 350	£235 50
James Hurley	300	180 00
Walker Moore	300	180 00
Ed. Mulvey	1,000	800 00
J. Mulvey	200	190 00
Daniel Barton	250	190 00
R. Dowling	1,125	675 00
J. Leahy	415	215 00
M. Leary	280	180 00
John Connor	400	210 00
D. Cooley	400	200 00
P. Cantillon	450	220 00
Total Old Rent, $6,850.	New Rent, $3,549 50

Here we find a dozen tenants, many of whom are under the same landlord, evicted, effecting a saving of $2,833 50 out of a total expenditure of $6,850 00! The different crops, divided among the dozen poor families in question, would give to each of them the sum of $236 29 wherewith to purchase food and clothing every year! The old rent entailed penury, slavery and starvation; the new rent means an honest reward for hard and honest labor, a release from the grasping greed of a vexacious landlord and a small allowance for every day's labor which the tenant-farmers of Ireland spend in improving the landlord's land. If the Irish National Leagues never accomplished any other good in Ireland than this, it would have earned the eternal gratitude of the Irish people.

California's Progress.

A slight idea of the progress which California is making in the increase of her products may be gleaned from the simple fact that in the year 1885 the green fruit shipments from Sacramento were 800 car loads, which has recently increased in the following proportions: In 1886, 1,000 carloads; 1887, 1,279 carloads; 1888, 1,568 carloads. The Sacramento Board of Trade predicts that if the future return of prosperity to the vineyard are anything like what the past has been, and they promise to be better, the output in the past two years justifies us in estimating that June, July and August, A. D., 1889, will show many days when it will take over 500 cars to care for the daily fruit demands of that month alone.

Another feature which shows the progress of this State is found in the fact that immense areas of land which hitherto had remained idle and unutilized have recently been settled upon by horticulturists whose purchase of trees this year—in the Sacramento market alone—are designated by the following figures: Peaches, 168,000; plums and prunes, 113,000; pears, 120,000; apples, 63,000; apricots, 56,000; olives, 30,000; almonds, 76,000; oranges and lemons, 91,000; grapes, 120,000. The progress thus reported in this line of industry might be easily demonstrated as applying to almost every line of productive enterprise in the State.

No More Chinese.

It will be a great relief to the Pacific Coast when the Chinese are completely excluded from coming in competition with white labor. As it is, however, a marked diminution in the number of Chinese coming to this State has already been noticed since the passage of the Exclusion Act, and hereafter, it is safe to say, that very few Chinese will be added to the number at present in this State.

This gratifying state of affairs opens wide the door for all the white laborers who are willing to work, to come to California, where they can earn more money in a year than they can procure by muscular effort in Europe and beautifully less, so the New York Evening Post makes the sensible suggestion: "If the churches mean to hold their own as moral and religious agencies, they must once for all cease to be what too many of the Protestant churches are, pleasant and fashionable Sunday clubs, where wearied business men have their intellectual palates tickled once a week with music, good society, and soothing reflections on life, and death, and judgment."

—In his recent speech in Scotland, Lord Salisbury paid the Irish people this compliment in order to show their consistency in opposing England so long as Ireland is enslaved: "When we quarreled with Spain the Irish sided with Spain. When we quarreled with America the Irish took the side of America. When we quarreled with France the Irish sided with France." Lord Salisbury might have continued and completed the compliment by telling his hearers that as long as Home Rule was denied to Ireland, so long would the Irish people side with any nation that England engaged in war.

—Benjamin Harrison will be 55 years, 8 months and 14 days old when he is inaugurated President of the United States. His distinguished grandfather was 58 years old at the time of taking the oath of office forty-seven years ago. Three other Presidents were 55 years old at the beginning of their Administrations. They were Martin Van Buren, Zachary Taylor, and Rutherford B. Hayes. Lincoln became President at 52. John Tyler and Chester A. Arthur were 51. Millard Fillmore was 50. Franklin Pierce and James A. Garfield were 48. Grover Cleveland was 48. Grant was 47. All the other Presidents were older than Gateen Harrison.

—The Pope is about to despatch a letter to the American Bishops instructing them to support morally and materially the scheme proposed by the Bishop of Pratanico to establish a seminary for the instruction and training of missionaries to give aid to Italian emigrants arriving in America.

POPE LEO XIII.

The Holy Father's Reply to the Letter of the English Prelates.

A few weeks ago the MONITOR published the Address of the Bishops of England to the Sovereign Pontiff in consideration of the new Italian Penal Code—which was recently passed by the Italian Senate on a vote of 40 affirmative to 23 negative.

Following is the Holy Father's reply to the letter in question:

To our Beloved Son Henry Edward, Cardinal Priest of the Holy Roman Church of the title of St. Andrew and St. Gregory on the Caelian Hill, Archbishop of Westminster and to our Venerable Brethren the Bishops of England.

POPE LEO XIII.

BELOVED SON AND VENERABLE BRETHREN, HEALTH AND APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION: Though We had no doubt or uncertainty as to your full agreement with the other Bishops of the Church in strongly condemning the new laws brought forward by the Italian Government against the clergy under the pretext of repressing attacks against authority, yet your joint letter, which gives proof thereof, is as welcome to Us as if We had looked forward to any such comfort. Your letter shows more and more clearly the zeal and piety which the pastors of the Church are divinely prided "to be perfect in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. I. 10), and it is a sure proof that, in Our condemnation of those laws, We have not been led by any sinister hatred of the government of this land, but, in fulfillment of that high office, have stood up in defence of the eternal law which enjoins that what is right and forbids what is wrong. We are glad that in your foresight you have denounced those new laws as being opposed to the spirit of modern civilization, and injurious, not only to the rights of the Church, but also to those of private citizens, which, through asserted in word, are in fact violated. As in past times you have shared in Our joy, so now your sympathy with Our sorrow and your offer of all possible aid have given to Us no slight consolation. But fearlessly proclaiming Our rights before men, and offering to your prayers to God in Our behalf, you wish, with the apostolic benediction and authority of all right thinking men, to defeat the attempts of the enemies of religion, that God may quell the storm which agitates the Church. In the meantime We gratefully accept your good wishes, and, in return, pray that God may make all grace abound in you, and, in testimony of Our constant affection, We lovingly in the Lord grant to you, Beloved Son, Venerable Brethren, and to the flocks entrusted to your care, Our Apostolic Benediction.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's, on the 15th day of November, in the year 1885, the eleventh year of our Pontificate.

POPE LEO XIII.

The Boston Election.

Commenting on the anti-Catholic and anti-American spirit of religious bigotry which entered into the late election in Boston, the Monitor (of that city) advances the following sensible and patriotic sentiments:

The annual municipal election in Boston was made this year rather a school than only the Democratic Party has seemed to have been disregarded and sectarian lines established. The women voters took the election pretty much into their own hands and made no terrorism for them. The cause of all the excitement may be traced to a paper made by the Catholic clergy last winter against a certain text-book which contained matter which, it was said, was in the School Board, as then constituted, open to the objection that it was not in keeping with the Protestant public evidently did not approve of the action of the Board. Of the eleven members of the Board who were elected Tuesday, not one was identified with the Catholic Church. Of the thirteen who held over eight are of that faith. The fact that the School Board complied with the request of the Catholic clergy to retire a particular text-book from the schools warrants the assumption that it contained matter that had no proper place in the books designated for our Public Schools. It must always be borne in mind that the property of citizens of all religious are taxed for the support of our schools. It follows as a consequence that text-books should be kept free of matter to which people of any religious belief could reasonably object. An institution supported by a general tax should be devoted to the promotion of purposes upon which all these people are practically agreed. The branches of study taught in our schools should be confined to those which by common assent are useful. There are certain principles of morals common to all creeds which may safely be inculcated in school text-books, but instruction in dogmas properly belongs to the churches and the home circle. The Public School system can be of no practical advantage to any other basis. The determination to separate Church and State, which the American people reached at an early period in their history, has proved beneficial to both Church and State. The Schools are State institutions. The Church as a distinct organization has nothing to do with them. Clergymen and church members are invited to take their part as citizens to take part in their management, but the especial teachings of the Church should be dropped at the door of the school-house. Every once in a while the Protestant portion of the public seem to forget that the schools are strictly a State institution. A little encroachment from one religious organization is repelled by another which considers its especial tenets attacked. The departure from this common law provokes another and a conflict is precipitated like that which threw the conservative city of Boston into a state of unhealthy excitement. The Protestant element has won a political victory, and the question now remains if they will use it wisely. If the majority forget all ideas of triumph and place the system on the common ground it was designed to occupy the excitement will soon be over.

The Oakland Times advances these impartial sentiments upon the same subject:

The religious discussion in Boston has assumed a phase which will disgust good people on both sides. The controversy arose over the objection of the Catholic element in the city to the introduction into the Public Schools of a certain history, which it was claimed did the Church an injustice in treating of Papal Indulgences. The discussion has led to much bad blood on both sides and is becoming more bitter all the time. If reports can be relied upon, one of the favorite lines of attack of the Protestant party is against the introduction of "unsexed nuns" and "red-eyed priests" to the lecture rostrum in Boston. The lecturers do a thriving business if no one else does. The other day the Rev. W. H. Thomas, a Methodist minister of Worcester, Mass, who had been requested to announce from his pulpit a lecture by an escaped nun, thus prefaced: "I am not in harmony with the un-Christian, un-American, disorderly assaults upon the Roman Catholic Church, now so popular about Boston. I am endeavoring to educate my people to higher things, and most decline to read your notice." If Boston had a few men like the Rev. Mr. Thomas, this unseemly fight would not have been commenced, or, having been commenced, would have been settled long ago.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—For some time past it has been rumored that before the departure of Archbishop Duhamel, of Canada, from Rome, that the Apostolic Vicariate of Pontiac will be erected into an Episcopal See and in all likelihood the Diocese of Ottawa may be divided again, the portion lying in Ontario to remain with Ottawa and the portion in the Province of Quebec to be a separate Diocese. This will remain unconfirmed until his return.

—Writing from Rome in the latter days of last month, a correspondent of the Boston Pilot says: "Archbishop Riordan, of San Francisco, is still in Rome. It is right to state that during his stay he has followed thoroughly in the footsteps of Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ireland, and other American Prelates, in representing the state and claims of the Irish people in Propagandi and to the Holy Father. It is due to the great Prelate of America to have at known of them, that they never come to Rome without taking the opportunity of expressing their feelings on Ireland's regard, and American Prelates like the American people, are not persons to mince words.

—The London Register calls attention to a very singular confusion of an international character which recently occurred in Europe. That journal says: "A rather curious result of the Italy-German alliance, and of the Italian Law of Guarantees, is that the French government has offered to pay the salary of Italian clergymen in the East which was withdrawn by Signor Crispi. We cannot agree with a Continental Catholic contemporary that this incident is gratifying. It is only another illustration of the Italian Government's determination to ignore and to an anti-Catholic government attempting to assume, for reasons of bitter intolerance and spite, the pose of supporter of the Papacy.

—Bishop Keane asked a very pertinent question recently when he thus alluded to the Catholic societies which are maintained among young men in America: "Looking at the flourishing men of our country who are so ashamed that they might have the privilege of showing as glorious a Christian work as this? From the depth of my heart I pray that the vocations of the brothers of the Christian Schools of the Francisean Brothers, and all other Teaching orders, may be multiplied tenfold in the country. I feel and repeatedly that I am really more a believer for the multiplication of the Teaching orders. Why, I am ashamed sometimes to say that the most conscientious work I have done in my life was in the Teaching order. Yet the most consoling work I have done in my life was in the Teaching order. Yet the most consoling work I have done in my life was in the Teaching order. Yet the most consoling

Farm and Home.

Evils of Early Pruning.

L. W. Kirkpatrick, a practical orchardist, contributes the following to the Gilroy Gazette on the evils of early pruning. We would like to say a word of warning to orchardists and vineyardists upon the subject of early pruning. In our mild climate of California we are apt to begin pruning too soon, especially early apricots, such as Early Moorpark, Royal, etc. These should not be pruned before the 15th of December. Bartlett pears, early peaches and cherries are also subject to the same natural law. Why is this a correct theory? I speak from personal experience, having that in mind cost me, on my ranch, over $500 in 900 trees, or 9,000,000 pounds. The crop will bring the producer about $50 Court The Riverside crop this season will exceed 200,000 boxes. The Fresno product after pocking, is worth in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, perhaps more. The Fresno raisin is fast winning favor at the East. The large packing-houses in this city—notably the Pacific Fruit Company and George W. Meade & Co.—take great pains in assorting and packing their raisins In both cases boxes are used, they not only have carefully adjusted "centers," but all the raisins are carefully handled after coming from the "rocters," in order that broken or surplus fruit may be thrown out. The order of this care has given prominence to the Fresno raisins at the East, and created for it at all times a market.—Fresno Expositor.

Products of a Tulare Farm.

In 1884 A. L. Cressy of Modesto bought 400 acres of land lying within three miles of Hanford, and placed it under the management of C. H. Howard, an experienced farmer recently from Maine.

There are now upon the ranch 275 head of cattle, which includes sows and young stock, thirty head of brood mares, all of which are expected to foal this spring; also eighty head of colts and mules one and two years old, One hundred head of cattle were sold one month ago, bringing a little over $4 000; sixty head of calves were sold during the winter, netting $900.

There have been sold within a year horses aggregating in value $2750. Four of the brought $1580, without any special trouble in breaking or training. There were also sold last fall hogs amounting to $600.

Six hundred tons of alfalfa hay were cut and stacked during the year, 300 tons being still on hand, which may be sold or held over until another winter, as thought desirable.

The stock is turned off the fields that are cut to hay about April 1st, from which time until September 1st these crops of alfalfa hay are gathered, averaging to the aggregate about five tons to the acre. These fields then furnish green pastures for the remaining seven months, when it is again time to clear them of stock, preparatory to gathering another hay crop.—Hanford Times.

Profit in Oranges.

The largest naval orange grove in the world is claimed to be at Fomona, Los Angeles county. It consists of 100 acres upon which are planted 10 000 trees. The land was bought by the present owners few years ago for $15 000, but is now considered worth $75,000. Seth Richards is the owner of this magnificent property, and expects to add another here to his orchard this winter. The average yield of an orange orchard is hearing in about three boxes of fruit, and when it is remembered the fact that navel oranges usually sell from $3 to $4 a box on the tree, it almost bewilders one to estimate the probable returns from this orchard.—Fresno Republican.

Entitled to the Best.

All are entitled to the best that their money will buy, in every family should have, at once a bottle of the best family remedy, Syrup of Figs, to cleanse the system effectually when costiveness is present. One bottle by all druggists.

Family Fun.

A Witty Idea.

A funny story of a local jurryman, an Irishman, who not wished a judge and that without lying, is current in South London. He came breathlessly into court. "Oh, my lord, if you can excuse me, I'm sick and don't know which will do first—my wife or my daughter."

"Dear me, that's sad," said the innocent judge. "Certainly, you are excused."

The next day the jurryman was met by a friend, who, in a sympathetic voice asked, "How's your wife?"

"She's all right, thank you."

"And your daughter?"

"She's all right, too. Why do you ask—?"

"Why, yesterday you said you did not know which would die first."

"Nor do I. That is the problem which time alone can solve."

Reviewing the Sermon.

Mrs. Smith—Did you like Dr. Fulpit's sermon last Sunday?

Mrs. Brown—I thought it was perfectly grand, didn't you?

"Yes. The way he pitched into people for talking about their neighbors did my heart and soul good. Did you notice how that contemptible, cross eyed thing, Mrs. Bejones, colored up! And no wonder, for I'm sure—don't you breathe a word of it, though—that she is not one bit better then she ought to be. Why, her husband goes away and leaves her for weeks at a time. She says he's a traveling man. I'd like to know where he gets the money to travel on."

"And look at the way she dresses!"

"Oh, it's awful! She ought to be church ed."

"That's just what I think."

Signs of Domestic Bliss.

D. Smith—Have you seen the beautiful motioes that Smith has hung up in his house?

Miss Travis—No: what are they?

D. Smith—Well, the first one—hung up about three months after marriage—is "God Bless Our Home."

Miss Travis—How charming! And so original, too.

D. Smith—The second, hung up some time later, is "Love Endures All Things."

Miss Travis—So beautiful!

D. Smith—And the third, hung up about a week ago is "Lock Out For the Rising Sun."

Miss Travis—Oh! Shocking!

Belonged to no Order.

"Bob," said a stranger, who lived across the street; "in your father's Mason?"

"No, sir," replied the boy.

"Does he belong to the Knights of Pythias?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! Perhaps he is an Odd Fellow?"

"No, sir."

"It is possible! Then he must be an Elk!"

"No, sir."

"Is he a Grand Army Man?"

"No, sir."

"That's strange. Er—can you tell me what in thunder your father means, then when he gets out on the sidewalk every morning and makes all kinds of signs and swings his arms and hollers—"

"Oh, you mean!" cried the boy, "Why not!"

"Pa has had St. Vitus' dance for thirteen years."

Johnny's Letter to Santa Claus

The story is unreasonable, but it may be told. It was Christmas time, and Johnny's father, to punish him, told him he would send word to Santa Claus not to bring him anything. The small boy was rather troubled at this, but presently he was seen to be at work writing something looked like a letter. "What are you doing?" his father asked. "I'm writing to Santa Claus." "It isn't any use, I'm tell him not to bring you anything. Then the small boy brought over the letter: "Dear Santy Claus—Yes sagdat bring anything to mee this yere. Yours truly, a very bad boy. Best pleas being ed good pappa s box of ciggers, an a wody hows wifes a long tale, an a drum an a horn an a wegin an a big box of candy, and anything alse you can think ov."

A Sensible Proposition.

Johnnie, a bright boy of six years, while being Easd up for school, observing his little sweetheart much the worse for wear, and having more mended places than he admired, turned quickly to his mother and asked:

"Ma, is pa rich?"

"Yes, very rich, Johnnie; he is worth two millions made a half."

"What lie, ma?"

"Oh, he values you at ourmillion, me at one million; and baby at half a million."

Johnnie after thinking a moment, said: "Ma, tell papa to sell the baby and buy us some clothes for a Christmas present!"

No Change Left.

A little domestic anemity, growing out of the turkey raffle was overheard yesterday by the reporter. An old gentleman with a turkey under his arm, met an his wife who then he met his wife, who was going out shopping.

"I've been lucky I've ware to win the turky for a quarter, my dear," she said with a pleased smile.

"Eye," he assented, but his voice had rather a dubi; ion tone.

"And now let me here the change of that one dollar bill I gave you to get the other things, she said.

"Change!" echoed the old gentleman in deep disgust. "Why, I had to spend it all to treat the fellows who didn't win."

A Puzzled Young Man.

A young man who was married, as all of us have been at one time or another, was what he should give his girl for a Christmas present, thought it would be a good scheme to question her little brother on the subject. He didn't get exactly the information he wanted, but he learned something that he had previously believed of every girl but his own.

"Did your sister say she wondered what Santa Claus would send her?" he asked.

"No," replied the little brother, "but I heard her tell ma that she wondered what you would give her."

The Mean Thing!

As Christmas has come around, the young man who has been toasting his toes, and foraging on the back parlor sofa, tries to get up a quarrel with his girl so as to escape bankrupting himself on a Christmas present.

He Told the Truth.

An old lady met her little grandson and asked him what he expected to get for Christmas.

"I'm going to have a bob sled," said the little man.

"And what make you th Christmas going to bring you a sled?" she asked with an amused smile.

"Of course," was the irreverent reply of the little fellow, as he winked his eye knowingly, "I saw my father dragging it home last night."

MISCELLANEOUS.

SYRUP of FIGS

A Pleasing Sense of Health and Strength Renewed, and of Ease and Comfort Follows the use of Syrup of Figs, as it acts gently on the KIDNEYS, LIVER & BOWELS Effectually Cleansing the System when Costive or Bilious, Dispelling Colds, Headaches and Fevers and permanently curing HABITUAL CONSTIPATION without weakening or irritating the organs on which it acts. For Sale in 50c and $1.00 Bottles by all Leading Druggists. MANUFACTURED ONLY BY THE CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOLIDAY GIFTS

GREAT VARIETY.

Low Prices!

BOOKS OF ALL KINDS, STATIONERY OF ALL SORTS, Albums of New Styles.

Photograph Screens and Cases.

Henry Bibles, Haverty's History of Ireland, Pictures of Ireland, Poets and Poetry of Ireland, McGeagan's History of Ireland.

The J. Dewing Company, 818 Markes Street, S. F. (FLOOD BUILDING)

OPENING EVENINGS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.

JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.

Show this copy of the MONITOR to your Catholic friends and neighbors, and ask them to subscri e. Only $2 a year when paid in Advance

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA

This institution was founded in 1851, and in 1852 was incorporated with the privileges of a University. It occupies six large buildings, with ample playgrounds, covered gymnasium, swimming pool, etc. It possesses a museum of natural history, a philosophical apparatus, a collection of paintings, and a library of 15,000 volumes. It has also practical schools of Assaying, Surveying, Geology, Photography and Commercial Business. For the latter a new building 164x40 has been finished, that leaves nothing to be desired.

Diplomas are given in two departments—the Classical and Scientific—and Certificates in the Commercial course.

TERMS:

(Payable semi-annually in advance: Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once, $ 15 00 Board, Lodging, Tuition in all branches Washing and Mending of Clothes, School Stationery, medical attendance and Medicine, Bath, etc., per session of ten months.....$50 00

For further particulars apply to the President of Santa Clara College, or to St. Ignatius College, 316 Hayes Street, San Francisco.

REV. R. E. KENNA, S. J. President.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools.

Offers Every Facility for Acquiring a Thorough Education, whether Classical, Industrial or Commercial.

THOSE WHO COMPLETE THE CLASSICAL Course receive the degree of A. B., the Scientific, B. S., the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the students in Rhetoric, Composition and Elocution are publicly discussed and corrected in the class room.

TERMS.

(Payments, invariably in advance.)

Board, Tuition, Medical Attendance, Books, Stationery, Washing and Mending, per term of Five Months.....$150.00

Day Students.....40.00

Vacation at College.....30.00

Extra Charges for Music and Drawing.

BRO. BETTELIN, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Syrup of Figs

NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD

SAN FRANCISCO

RAILROADS.

SONOMA VALLEY RAILROADS

"SONOMA VALLEY RAIL ROADS." Commencing SUNDAY, Dec. 1886, AND U until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave from Vallejo Street Wharf, San Francisco, as follows:

Leave S. F. (SUNTAYS) Arrive in S. F.

WEEK DAYS. | SUNDAYS. | WEEK DAYS. | SUNDAYS.

7:00 a. m. | 8:00 a. m. | 9:00 a. m. | 10:00 a. m.

3:00 p. m. | 2:30 p. m. | 5:00 p. m. | 3:00 p. m.

Leave S. F. (SUNTAYS) Arrive in S. F.

WEEK DAYS. | SUNDAYS. | WEEK DAYS. | SUNDAYS.

6:00 a. m. | 8:00 a. m. | 9:00 a. m. | 10:00 a. m.

3:00 p. m. | 2:30 p. m. | 5:00 p. m. | 3:00 p. m.

Stages connect at Sonoma with Trains for Santa Rosa, Springs, Schastopol and Water of Springs. At Glen Ellen for Bogas Springs and Glen Ellen. At Boyd Springs, Kenwerthy, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Bartlett Springs, Bucknell's, Harbin Springs, Pine Grove, Upper Springs, Everett Springs, Middletown City and the Geyserville.

EXCURSION TICKETS from Schastopol to Sonoma, or Petaluma, $1.75; Santa Rosa, $2; to Healdsburg $3; to Cloverdale, $4; to Sonoma, $1 50; to Glen Ellen, $1 50.

EXCURSION TICKETS good for Sundays only—to Schastopol, $1 50; Santa Rosa, $2; Healdsburg, $3; to Cloverdale, $4 50; to Geyserville $3 50; to Sonoma, $1; to Glen Ellen, $1 50.

From San Francisco to Point Tiburon and San Rafael Week Days: 7:00 a. m., 1:30 p. m., 3:00 p. m., 5:00 p. m., 6:15 p. m. Sundays: 8:00 a. m., 9:30 a. m., 11:00 a. m., 1:00 p. m., 3:00 p. m., 5:00 p. m., 6:15 p. m. Leave San Rafael: 7:10 a. m., 10:40 a. m., 1:40 p. m., 4:10 p. m. Sundays—7:50 a. m., 9:40 a. m., 2:00 p. m., 4:50 p. m. Leave S. F. Sundays: 10:00 a. m., 12:00 m., 2:00 p. m., 4:00 p. m. Leave San Rafael: 8:00 a. m., 10:00 a. m., 12:00 m., 2:00 p. m., 4:00 p. m.

Tickets to Point Tiburon and San Rafael, 15 cents.

Children half price. Dogs, 25 cents.

Tickets for sale at Ferry, 721 Montgomery street and 25 Fremont street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. & A. BAKER, Oldest Instalment House IN SAN FRANCISCO. 742 & 744 Mission St., Adjoining St. Patrick's Church.

The only dealers in Bicycles portraits of Archbishop Riordan and Father Cook, at six dollars each, our Dollar dress, fifty cents per week. Largest and most complete stock of Catholic Goods. A full assortment of Ladies' Ulsters and Jackets. We make a specialty of Dressing all kinds of pictures. Have also a large and complete line of Earrings, Bracelets, Pendants, Pins, Chains, Rosaries, Crucifixes, Holy Water Fonts, Statues, Crosses in every style. We make a specialty of Silver Crucifixes Prices at Twenty five Dollars each, complete with frame. Send for circular. A large line of Table Damask, Sheeting, Towels, Linen and Cotton Curtains, Cretonne Poles and Holdings and Home Keeping goods in general—no Instalments.

DR. A. LUDLUM HILL, 1443 Market Street, Bet. Tenth and Eleventh, . . . San Francisco. ALL WORK REASONABLE. No Charge for Extracting when plates are ordered. Old Plates made over Like New. LOCAL ANESTHETIC ADMINISTERED. ALL WORK WARRANTED. 25

PACIFIC Business College, 320 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO. Life Scholarships $70 SPEND FOR CIRCULAR.

JOHN WIELAND BREWING CO. Largest Brewery West of St. Louis. BEST LAGER BEER On the Pacific Coast. BREWERY—Second St., nr. Folsom San Francisco. Amount of Beer sold in 1887, 97,167½ barrels.

SAFETY ENDOWMENT UNION Pays $5,000 DURING LIFE! IN SO EQUAL COUPONS. SAFE DEPOSIT BUILDING, ROOM 20.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASK FOR THE GENUINE LAGER BEER —OF THE— United States Brewery AND YOU WILL GET THE VERY BEST IN THE MARKET

JOHN GUERIN, DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF WOOD AND COAL. 412 O'FARRELL ST., Bet. Taylor and Jones . . . San Francisco.

Pure Wines and Liquors for the Holidays CHEAP FOR CASH.

Table Wines . . 50c, 60c, 75c, and $1 Angelica Wines . . $1, $1.50 and $1.25 Muscat Vineyard—by th. $1.75 per gal. Old Port or Sherry, $1, $1.50, $1.25 and 50c Kentucky Whiskies . . $1.50, $1, $0.50 and 25 Scotch Whiskey, . . $1.50, $1.75 and 50 Rum, Brandy, Gin, 50c, $1 per gal. and upwards.

Other Wines and Liquors at lowest rates.

And we will deliver the goods free of charge anywhere. Our goods have specially been selected for the Holidays and are sure to meet with your approval, as our experience and time in business will verify. And we will further state that we are strictly Wholesale Dealers, and supplying families with good and pure Wines and Liquors.

INSURANCE.

H. M. NEWHALL & CO., OFFICE: 309 & 311 Sansome St. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. Shipping and Commission Merchants. Agents for Growers and Manufacturers. Charterers of Vessels for all Trades. Agents for the Mexican Phosphate and Sulphur Co's Products. General Insurance Agents.

JF Have Correspondents in all the Chief Cities of the United States, Canada, Australia, India, China and the principal Islands of the Pacific Ocean and Atlantic and Gulf Ports of the United States and Canada.

General Agents for the Pacific Coast

National Assurance Company OF IRELAND. Capital, ... $5,000,000

Atlas Assurance Company OF LONDON. Capital, ... $6,000,000

Boylston Insurance Company Capital and Surplus, ... $715,500

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA. FIRE AND MARINE. Capital paid up, ... $200,000 Assets, ... $1,000,000 JOHN J. ROSE, President. JOHN H. WISE, Secretary. 439 CALIFORNIA STREET. CHAS. A. LATOUR, Agent. JOHN J. ROSE, Jr. Agent. JEREMIAH DENNY Corp Solicitor—Ofc. 406 Sansome Street. GENERAL INSURANCE AGENCY JOS. C. JENNINGS & CO., San Mutual Insurance Co. Sonthern Insurance Co. Germania Insurance Co. CITY AGENT London & Lancashire Fire Insurance Caledonian Insurance Co. OFFICE, 317 CALIFORNIA ST. SAN FRANCISCO.

BELLS ETC.

WEED & KINGWELL CALIFORNIA BRASS WORKS 125 First Street S. F.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULIUS H. MEDAU, 968 and 970 Folsom St., Near Sixth . . . . . San Francisco. —WHOLESALE— WINE AND LIQUOR DEALER, Established 1876. We SELL TO SUIT TO SUIT CAREFUL BUYERS, and guarantee satisfaction in every respect, and if not satisfactory, we pay the freight, return the goods and refund the money. Our Pure Wines and Liquors for the Holidays CHEAP FOR CASH. Per Gallon. Port, Sherry, Tokay, Muscat, Angelica, Claret, Hock, Sauterne, Zinfandel, Riesling, Cider, Brandy, Whiskey, Rum, Gin, Port Wine, Old Port or Sherry, Old Tom Gin, Old Rye, Old Bourbon, Old Scotch

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

Programme of the Christmas Examination.

As announced in last week's MONITOR, the Christmas examinations of St. Mary's College commenced last Thursday, and will conclude on next Friday. Every day's examinations are interspersed with music by the College Orchestra and also enlivened by recitations by members of the College.

Last Thursday the Third Commercial Class underwent examination, and on the subsequent days the classes mentioned in the following list:

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13TH.

The examination of the Third Commercial Class was interspersed with the following piece by exercises: Music, "Welcome Merrily," Orchestra; "Leap for Life," George D. McGrath; "Farmer John," James Carroll; Quartet Solo, "Home Sweet Home," Thomas F. Bell; "The Bell of Liberty," Carroll Scott; Vocal Duet, "Call Back the Times," W. Smith, C. Scott, O. Willard; "Old Ironsides," William A. Sullivan; "The Union," Thomas F. Bell; Cornet Solo, "Medley," George D. McGrath; Cornet Recitation, "Our Defenders," The Class; Music, "Dawn of '89," College Orchestra.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14TH.

The Second Commercial Class underwent examination, the exercises having been interspersed with the following musical selections and recitations: Music, College Orchestra; Recitation, "Monitory," John S. McNally; Cornet Solo, Master A. Tully; Recitation, "The Rebel," Master J. Tully; Recitation, "The Sentinel's Reveille," Master J. Tully; Recitation, "The Union and the Gold," John T. Scott; Violin Solo, William F. Carroll; Recitation "The Wrecked Mariner," Master J. Tully; Violin Solo, William F. Kearney; Piano Solo, Thomas E. O'Brien; Recitation, "The Christian Soldier and the Lion," William F. Carroll; Recitation, "Seminole's Reply," Albert W. Sisson; Music, College Orchestra.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 17TH.

Examinations of the First Commercial Class in Christian Doctrine, Arithmetic, Orthography, Book keeping, Algebra, Grammar and History. The following interesting musical and literary exercises were pleasingly interspersed through the programme: Music, "St. Nicholas March," College Orchestra; recitation, "The Father's Church," John A. Shander; piano solo, "Merry Christmas," Joseph F. Kearney; extract, "The Bessima Council," Wm. G. Farmer; concert recitation, "Washington, his clear, calm, mind," Master Joseph Tully; piano solo, "Home, sweet home," by Master Joseph Sullivan; Bohemian extract, "Death of Alonzo," Master F. Yackel; recitation, "For Life Religion," James T. Finley; piano solo, "Holiday Gallop," John V. Hughes; recitation "The Wayward Knight," Joseph F. Kearney; extract, "O Brabagio! Dull," Thomas F. Bell; music, "God Bless our Home," college orchestra.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 18TH.

Yesterday the Business Department pupils were examined in Christian Doctrine, Arithmetic, History, Rhetoric, Geometry, Algebra, Book-keeping, Commercial Law, Physics and Physiology. The other exercises were: Introductory March, orchestra; Christian Doctrine; concert recitation, "The Hermit of Dreen," class; Mental and Practical Arithmetic; essay, "The Choice of Major Andre," Jas. M. Bailey; History and Rhetoric; essay (continued), "The Choice of Andre," Joseph Sullivan; Algebra; essay, "Benjamin Franklin," M. E. Wagner; Book-keeping and Commercial Law; essay, "A Mother's Influence," Wm. H. Lackey; Physics and Physiology; essay on recitation, "Elsie's Children," class; "National Airs," orchestra.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19TH.

The Third Collegiate Class will undergo examination today in Evidences of Religion, Natural Philosophy, Arithmetic, History, Algebra, Geometry, Physics, Rhetoric, Latin and Greek. The exercises will be interspersed as follows: Music, "College Orchestra; essay, "Alfred the Great," Fred F. Nourse; essay on Music, Francis A. McMahon; essay, "Our National Holidays," Joseph R. Bell; essay, "Washington," Thomas E. Finnerty; essay, "Shipwreck," Thomas F. McNally; essay, "Schools," Joseph T. McNally; essay, "Liberty," Joseph T. Mullin; essay, "The Duties of the Citizen," Thomas F. Bell; essay, "Our Country," Joseph F. Kearney; essay, "Washington," Joseph T. Scott; essay, "Hughes' English Grammar," Joseph T. Mullin; "Hughes' English Grammar," Joseph T. Scott;

Monitor Christmas Poetry.

AN IRISH EXILE'S PETITION TO SANTA CLAUS.

BY DANIEL COSLLY, M. P.

GOOD SANTA CLAUS, list to this prayer of mine, and grant me the boon I'm about to ask;
It will brighten an exile's weary way, and will lighten an exile's dreary task.
Here 'mid these cold California hills, where the banished wdrea in the night wind cry,
There are souls that yearn for your kind care, as you pass in your fur-lined garmants by.
Be gracious, and visit my hut to-night, when the snow from the grey sky thickly falls,
And think not alone of the children's wish who are able to sleep within city walls;
I'll open my heart to receive your gift, and a thousand blessings you'll have from me,
If you tell me how dear old Ireland farm, as she rests in the far-off Eastern sea.

II.

Oh! I were to learn at this Christmas time, is this land where freedom and gold abound,
How is every soul that I know as well as I grew to manhood on Ireland's ground;
Are the hills and the rivers and the streams the same as they were in Killowen years ago,
When to serve the Mass at the midnight hour we merrily paced through the crusted snow?
Standish O'Grady on Sunn where of old it stood, looking over Carrigoffer's deep, broad bay,
Or, where a star's alone in hyphen's haven I have seen stanzas craft pacing under moight?
Is the "big tree" still by Rosstrevor's bridge in whose shade the trout at the midges dart?
Tham, these are the things I would like to know, so, Santa Claus, whisper them to my heart.]

III.

Have many graves opened since I was there by the silent well in Kilbeggy's clay,
At "the end o' the road" do the boys and girls meter now on a Sunday are to play?
Ughis ath-cliathas changed? In the dust removed where a nameless one darkest sacred his name,
As he dreamed that in after years he might inscribe it aleak on the roll of Fame?
Are many girls still left? Is she the same—my Mavourn dear, with the soft, blue eyes,
Whose promise that night by her father's gate is memory's dearest and sweetest prize?
Oh, carry this message to her from me—that I'm growing rich in this Western land,
And that soon I'll hasten to redeem this pledge that I gave her then as I clasped her hand.

IV.

But, Santa Claus, listen—I pray you tell when to night by my regret conch you wait:
Has the cause of our land gone down beneath the crushing power of the British hate?
Has the Celt succumbed? With a craven's heart has his proud nature to use Ireland's trust,
And the old Green Rag that our fathers prized, lies it trampled in the highway's dust?
Is or the lesman stand on our soil to-day one who has struggled and wrn on the fight,
And point to our battle field as his at the centuries' end by the right of might.
With arrogant glance, or has he shown a sign of resistance never a sign,
And, showing his teeth, can he truthfully say, "Tais beautiful land is mine, is mine ?" ?

V.

Ah! such a story tell not to my heart, but say that the Christmas angel's soft, white wing
Will flash o'er a land of no-sorrow's dawn where the sun to freedom's ideal sing—
Allied with a scourge unbroken yet, with a faith as firm as in days of old,
And with hopes as bright as when wm's rail tide from the comparts of Limrick backward rolled;
You'll gladden my heart with this welcome news that Ireland is resolute still and strong,
That with donations soul she is struggling yet with the linked battalions of fraud and wrong,
Yet with linking eyes and defiant mien she faces the foes in the olden fight,
And joyfully waits for the coming hour when she'll stand in Liberty's sacred light.

VI.

Then, Santa Claus, visit my lonely hut when the snow from the grey sky thickly falls,
And think not alone of the children's wish who are able to sleep within city walls;
I'll open my heart to receive your gift, and a thousand blessings you'll have from me,
If you tell me how Ireland farm to slight, as she rests in the far-off Eastern sea.

Bernard Garrigan's Conversion and How it Came About.

A CHRISTMAS STORY OF SORROW TURNED TO JOY.

Bernard Garrigan had been the proprietor of a drinking saloon for twenty years. In that time he had rolled up a fortune of great many thousand dollars, for his place was at the corner of two of the busiest streets in a large city, where the tide of travel from early morning to late at night was almost incessing.

Nearly all the time business with him was very brisk. Whether it was prosperity or hard times, he was able to plod them with drink, he rarely imbibed any himself.

He did not obtain because he had any scruples, but for two other reasons. In the first place he was determined to make money, and then he knew that if he drank much his brain would become too unsteady for such a business.

Day after day he became used to the spectacle of men drinking themselves to ruin, but he pocketed the money and said: "Well, if they will have rum, I might as well sell it to them as anybody else."

Things went on in this way for years, and the landlord of the International Saloon became richer and richer. They desired him to run for the position of alderman of his ward, but he declined. He did not intend to give up his business or have it interfered with in any way. He was determined to roll up money, and politics should not interfere. Nothing should interfere. He had his family to raise, and he thought that they should not be poor. He would put away a good nice sum for each of his children, and when he was fifty years old he would go out of business altogether. While, however, he attended to it so industriously, there were times when he used to ask himself whether after all it was the right thing to get rich in this way. He saw many a disgusting scene in front of his bar, and sometimes his conscience troubled him as he saw poor wretches spending their last penny, and drinking themselves into perdition. But conscience was too weak for the greed of gain that had taken possession of him.

At last Mr. Garrigan received a blow that stunned him.

He had three children, the oldest one was a boy to whom he took the greatest delight. Charlie Garrigan was his father's favorite. He was never permitted to come near the saloon, and was sent to the best schools in the city.

His father delighted in him, and looked forward to his making his mark in the world. He should be educated, have plenty of money, and then what a future was before him!

One Christmas Eve, however, Charlie Garrigan, who was then only 18 years old, came reeling into his father's saloon, every drunk.

At first he was not recognized in this terrible plight. His clothes were torn and soiled, his hat battered out of shape and his face was red and bruised.

When his father, startled by the racket, recognized his own son, he could scarcely believe his eyes.

Was this his boy Charlie? Was this the boy whom he had guarded so carefully? Could it really be that this disgusting object was his own son?

He had seen other men' sons in a similar condition, but they never opposed so humiliation.

He had sold liquor to some in a worse state of intoxication; but the sufferer of such a traffic never opposed to him as it did now.

For a few minutes he stood speechless, watching the mad antics of his drunken boy. Then he came to a sudden decision.

"Stand everybody out," he said to his assistants, "and close up."

The crowd in the saloon heard these words with some surprise, and some rebelled against being forced out after they had settled themselves for an evening's carousal, but in a short time the saloon was cleared and the lights were put out. A hack was called, and the saloon-keeper and his drunken son were rapidly driven home.

"Mr. poor my was in such a condition that he could give no account of himself, and the wretched father was too crushed to make any attempt to find out how he came to be such a pitiable state.

His boy, helplessly drunk!

He never realized until that moment what an awful thing it was for any son to be helplessly drunk. He had seen many drunken men. He had sold liquor to many such. Here, however, was a spectacle that was bearing itself into his very soul. His own boy was drunk.

Well, he got him home, put him to bed, and watched beside him all night long.

Strange thoughts came to him.

"Do other people feel as I do," he said to himself, "Do other fathers feel the degradation that is upon me at this time? Have other men's hopes been blasted as mine have been?"

"Have I really brought the same bitter anguish to other parents as some of these saloon keepers have brought to me?"

And then he thought: "Now, suppose this goes on. Suppose my boy should become a confirmed drunkard—what would become of me? Why, I would kill me."

Then came the sensations of conscience. "You have helped make drunkards of other people. Your wealth has grown because you have pandered to this vicious appetite. You have prospered upon what has been taken from other men's happiness. Now retribution has come."

After awhile his thoughts went out in another direction: "What can I do! What can I do to undo the mischief?"

What ought I to do for other men's sons? Is it right for me to go on with a business that brings so much misery?"

All night long he sat there thinking, thinking, thinking. He could not sleep. He did not try to sleep.

His whole nature was stirred.

Finally, just as the day was breaking, he heard the sound of a bell.

What was it? Fire! No, not as alarm of fire. It was a church bell, calling people to the first Mass on Christmas morning.

He listened intently. He pictured to himself the worshippers going into the church, the organ peeling, the singing, the solemn service of joy because Christ had come into the world "bringing peace and good will to all men."

For a month had passed since Christmas had been in church.

His Sundays had usually been spent in his saloon, or in rambling about, or asleep at home.

Now as he listened to the bell ringing so cheerily in the early morning, on this Christmas morning, he said to himself, "Oh, what a difference there might have been in my life had I clung to my faith!

"Perhaps I would not have had so much money, but I would be out of this horrible business, and my boy might have been a comfort to me.

"Is it too late to make a change?" The boy was quietly sleeping, and with a sad, longing look at him the wretched father, moved by a sudden impulse, put on his coat, and went out.

The bell had stopped ringing, but the church, which was quite near, was all lighted up brilliantly for the early service. It seemed to welcome him with its warmth and brightness, and he went in.

A CATHOLIC HOME ON CHRISTMAS EVE.

May Love and Peace and Happiness with "Merry Christmas" Come!
To brighten at present and bless each hearth and heart and home!

They were singing some beautiful music as he entered the doors, but he shrank back into the darkest corner he could find and dropped upon his knees.

How long he stayed there, or what was done he did not know. He was only conscious of the deep misery that had come to him as he thought of his own home now to be wrecked, and of the homes of other men he had helped to ruin by his awful traffic.

At his knees there upon the floor of the church, visions of sorrowed families he had known floated through his mind, and as each terrible picture was presented, his conscience said to him "Behold your work."

It grew almost unendurable, and yet he could not banish the visions until there came into his soul a resolution that, God helping him, he would close his saloon, and would make some reparation to the families he had ruined.

He was one of the first of each month, will secure you regularly the sum of $50. This will continue for the whole of the present year.

Yours very respectfully,

BRICKYARD FRANKLIN.

To all his patrons who had accounts with him, he sent a little explnr that he was out of the business, and did not intend to sell liquor to them any more.

Some of them had quite failed from his memory, but others he could recall clearly. But why did he want to recall those people? Some of them were heavy in debt to him, and others were nothing but poor wretches who came in every rainy day for a drink.

He wanted to recall them for he had made up his mind to do three things, the first was never to open his saloon again, the second was to give away all the liquor he had in stock, and the third was to do something for the families of the men who had been ruined by his business.

Although during the next week he called to the assistance of a clerk, whom he engaged to take charge of the place, he was always busy because of the men who had once been his regular customers, and who came to see their friends.

It is quite a little taste and tending, I'm sure, for Christmas Day.
To grow into Christmas in Minnie
Is a thing of a wonderful kind,
And how she shaped it the winter
Is a story I'm sure to find.

Just sweet, and fresh and tender,
Is the Christmas Day in Minnie
Is a story of a wonderful kind.

Is a story of a wonderful kind.

Where, amid the Christmas cheer,
Is the lighter and more elated
Than the Christmas Day in Minnie
Is a story of a wonderful kind.

Is a story of a wonderful kind.

Is a story of a wonderful kind.

RIGHT REV. EUGENE O'CONNELL, D. D.

The learned Prelate whose portrait we present to the readers of the Monitor, was born in Roslagh, County Meath, Ireland, on the 15th of June, 1816. He was educated in St. Finian's Seminary in Navan, and studied Theology at Maynooth College, where he was ordained in the year 1842 by Archbishop Murray of Dublin.

In 1847 the venerable and beloved subject of our sketch was called to All Hallows College, Dublin, in order to fill the position of Dean in that widely-known nursery of Catholic missionaries.

When Archbishop Alemany was consecrated Bishop of Monterey in 1850, his first care was to provide Priests for that portion of the flock of Christ entrusted to his charge. Accordingly he visited Ireland in 1851, and on his return he was accompanied by several volunteers for this difficult region, and among these pioneers of the Cross on this coast, was the present learned and holy Bishop of Joppa.

Father O'Connell returned to All Hallows College in 1854, and remained there until 1861, when he was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Marysville, in this State, being consecrated by Cardinal Cullen at All Hallows College, on February 3rd of that year.

Bishop O'Connell returned to this State in April, 1861, and on the 25th of that month he was accorded a most generous and hearty welcome by Archbishop Alemany and the Reverend Clergy, among whom were Very Rev. P. Magnentie, V. G., Rev. J. J. Prendergast, Rev. John Maginnis, Rev. T. J. Dalton, Rev. M. King, Rev. J. A. Gallagher, Rev. John P. Harrington, Rev. J. S. Cotter, and Rev. E. Gallagher.

The ceremony of welcome took place at the Seminary of St. Thomas, Mission Dolores, of which Very Rev. J. J. Prendergast, V. G., was then President. Father Michael King presented the gifted guest with a purse containing $1,000, as a memento of the love in which he was held by those among them who were former students of that fruitful Mother of Missionaries.

In 1867 the venerable and beloved subject of our sketch was called to All Hallows College, Dublin, in order to fill the position of Dean in that widely-known nursery of Catholic missionaries.

When Archbishop Alemany was consecrated Bishop of Monterey in 1850, his first care was to provide Priests for that portion of the flock of Christ entrusted to his charge. Accordingly he visited Ireland in 1851, and on his return he was accompanied by several volunteers for this difficult region, and among these pioneers of the Cross on this coast, was the present learned and holy Bishop of Joppa.

Father O'Connell returned to All Hallows College in 1854, and remained there until 1861, when he was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Marysville, in this State, being consecrated by Cardinal Cullen at All Hallows College, on February 3rd of that year.

Bishop O'Connell returned to this State in April, 1861, and on the 25th of that month he was accorded a most generous and hearty welcome by Archbishop Alemany and the Reverend Clergy, among whom were Very Rev. P. Magnentie, V. G., Rev. J. J. Prendergast, Rev. John Maginnis, Rev. T. J. Dalton, Rev. M. King, Rev. J. A. Gallagher, Rev. John P. Harrington, Rev. J. S. Cotter, and Rev. E. Gallagher.

The ceremony of welcome took place at the

The Christmas-Tree; or the Angel's Whisper.

Turning longingly on his pillow, Willy regarded his mother with a smile of pleasure as she entered his room and gave him a morning kiss. With a small, delicate voice the child asked:

"Did you sleep well, mamma?"

"I did, my darling; how did you sleep?"

"I slept a little, mamma." was his hectic reply.

"Do you know that Christmas is at hand, my love?" asked the lady, eyeing him with fixed attention.

"I know it well, mamma," was the answer of the young patient, as he sloped and gazed on one of his mother's beautiful violets. "For the last eight days I have been thinking of nothing but Christmas, mamma. Won't you make me a Christmas-tree, mamma?"

"Yes, my darling," said the mother, with difficulty suppressing a tear; "you shall have a beautiful Christmas-tree.

"A big, big, tree," said Willy, raising his thin, tiny hand, "with everything on the boughs—toys and cakes and bon bons and jackets and trousers, mamma, and you will invite all the poor little children of the neighborhood?"

"Whatever you like, my darling."

"Do you think, mamma, I shall live till that time?"

At this agonizing question the poor mother could no longer control her feelings. It was too much for her. She relieved her oppressed heart by bursting into tears. Madame Warren—such was the lady's name—clasped to her breast the pale and feeble child on whom the coming Angel of Death flung the shadow of his wing. There was a time—it was not very remote—when Willy was strong and robust, and filled the house with his noisy mirth, with noise and uproar.

Struck by some deadly but unknown complaint, he was visibly wasting away—growing paler and thinner, but more intelligent every hour—pushing before her eyes, above all, it seemed her to know that her beloved child was conscious of his fate. He knew that death, in all his terror was approaching his couch, and the ovule was filled her with horror.

"Do not cry, dear mamma; I did not intend to grieve you. Forgive me if I have displeased you. But why not talk of death? I am not going forever mamma," he continued, looking up at her, "I shall wait for you in Paradise. Do not cry."

Making a terrible effort to crush her feelings, a sickly smile wrenched the beautiful lips of Madame Warren.

"Why do you give way to such melancholy ideas, you naughty boy! You must grow well and become big and strong, and be a man to love and protect your poor widowed mother."

"No, mamma," said Willy, in a sad and pensive tone. "Do not deceive yourself. I shall not live. Let us prepare for my departure. Don't you see, mamma! When my cousin Harry was going abroad they all were merry and laughing while preparing for an event which might separate them for years. Harry may never come back; I am going to a better place than Harry went to. I am going to Heaven."

"Don't you see, mamma, he continued. God will send you consolation. It is happy for me to die young. Netty says that nothing is so beautiful in the sight of God as a pure soul. Don't you remember what the Queen of France said to her son? I read it for me yourself, 'No one but God knows how much I love you, but I would rather see you dead at my feet than guilty of a single mortal sin.' I shall not commit sin in Heaven, mamma, and my soul in the presence of God will always continue pure.

DECORATING THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

"Netty is not your mother, Willy, and she talks to you of things which are beyond the comprehension of a child. Through the intercession of the Virgin Mary you will recover, to make your poor mother happy. For I cannot live without you, my child."

Willy shut his eyes and seemed to think. Madame Warren drawed the curtains and then softly quitted the room. The young Netty, whose fervent faith sustained and encouraged the little patient was sitting on the stairs.

"Is he better?" asked Netty.

"Better!" exclaimed Madame Warren; "how can he be better when you fill his mind by your talk! I ought to banish you from his presence. You have filled his mind with the idea of death; he is always talking of it. How could he know anything on such a subject if you did not tell him? My God! I do not murmur against Thy will; but this chalice is too bitter," said the poor lady, wiping her eyes.

Netty knelt down before her mistress.

"Don't blame me," she whispered; "I would give my heart's blood to restore him to health. But I am persuaded that the angels visit him."

The two women burst into tears. Madame Warren raised Netty to her feet.

"My good, my faithful Netty!" she exclaimed. "Forgive me; my mind is so distracted by grief that I do not know what I am saying. Forgive me, Netty; but let us try to cheer up Willy, to inspire him with a love for life, to make him wish he used to be. Oh, Lord, Lord! if You take my child, take his mother also; my Willy is more necessary to me than the light of day."

They heard Willy at this moment calling Netty. She entered the room at the call.

"Here I am, sir," she said.

"You have been crying, Netty. I see the tears on your cheeks. That is bad; you should not cry, Netty."

"Are you thirsty, darling?"

"Not now, Netty. Come near me, Tell me, will you help my mother to make a Christmas-tree for me? Do you think I'll live till Christmas?"

"Did you ask your mother that question, darling?" asked the nurse, in tones of great anxiety.

"Yes, I did."

"You did wrong, darling, you made your mother cry, which you should never do. God can even you if He wishes and makes you as well as ever."

"I will not get well, Netty," said he in a tone of such such certainty that the poor nurse shuddered. "I know I shall not recover, and I think I ought to prepare my mother for an event which I know shall take place. I have a plan in my mind . . . but I won't tell you yet. Only take care of me till I come. Keep my mother from me when I want to see the Christmas-tree with its lights all ablaze and toys on every bough, and the children rejoicing and jumping around it—a beautiful tree that will make the children happy. There are children in this town who never have a penny to spend—no boy cakes or toys or anything. It is lamentable, Netty! Now I want to make those children happy for once—to make them laugh with pleasure. Their angel guardians ought to take pity on these poor destitute children, Netty; especially when they have no mother. If I had a brother I am sure my mother would not feel so sad. If I could get a brother I think I would be happy, Netty, for my mother would not cry any more."

"Don't talk that way, darling; you'll break your Netty's heart. . . . I ask you, for God's sake to get well. You will be a fine, big man like your father was, when you get well. You will grow up tall and handsome, after you recover in the spring Then well go out, hand in hand, into the sunny garden and gather roses—white roses—for mamma's birthday. Won't that be nice, love?"

"Netty, Netty, you cannot deceive me. I'll never gather roses any more. Don't you see! when people are sick, they become wise. I have heard voices, Netty, in this sick bed, which I never heard when I was well. Oh! if I could tell you what I see: what beautiful gardens full of flowers—fairer than our white roses a thousand times. Oh, they are delightful!"

The child was so situated at this moment that he could see through the lofty window of his room the remote horizon and the azure arch.

Pure as the Spirit who made it.

A sweet rock and silent Netty stood gazing on her little patient. A smile of rapturous pleasure lighted up his attenuated features and wreathed his lips. Some invisible power seemed to lift him from his bed, as if to hear him sway. Netty knelt down in trembling joy, and, with joined hands, she prayed to Heaven to shield, guard and protect that innocent child.

It was now Christmas Eve, and Madame Warren was going and coming, and giving orders all day long, and gliding noiselessly, over and down, into Willy's room to gaze on her darling. She was busy and anxious but comparatively easy in mind, for she was preparing the Christmas-tree. It was to be placed in the ground floor. In obedience to the caprices of her son (if it was caprice) she had ornamented a gigantic pine tree with the most exact and diligent attention, until the admiring domestics declared it was splendid. She entered the sick chamber with her tears as she whispered:

"My child will not see Christmas night."

The doctor made no reply, a silence that struck her heart, as it were, with the blow of a sledge. Meantime it was Christmas Eve, and Willy, animated by the accomplishment of his desire, seemed less feable. An insane hope took possession of the mother's heart as she noted the change.

"It was everything is ready, mamma, you will dress me up, and I'll go down to see the Christmas-tree."

On hearing these words the mother and nurse exchanged a look of anguish.

"My good, my faithful Netty!" she exclaimed. "Forgive me; my mind is so distracted by grief that I do not know what I am saying. Forgive me, Netty; but let Netty to cheer up Willy, to inspire him with a love for life, to make him wish he used to be. Oh, Lord, Lord! if You take my child, take his mother also; my Willy is more necessary to me than the light of day."

They heard Willy at this moment calling Netty. She entered the room at the call.

"Here I am, sir," she said.

"You have been crying, Netty. I see the tears on your cheeks. That is bad; you should not cry, Netty."

"Are you thirsty, darling?"

"Not now, Netty. Come near me, Tell me, will you help my mother to make a Christmas-tree for me? Do you think I'll live till Christmas?"

"Did you ask your mother that question, darling?" asked the nurse, in tones of great anxiety.

"Yes, I did."

"You did wrong, darling, you made your mother cry, which you should never do. God can even you if He wishes and makes you as well as ever."

"I will not get well, Netty," said he in a tone of such such certainty that the poor nurse shuddered. "I know I shall not recover, and I think I ought to prepare my mother for an event which I know shall take place. I have a plan in my mind . . . but I won't tell you yet. Only take care of me till I come. Keep my mother from me when I want to see the Christmas-tree with its lights all ablaze and toys on every bough, and the children rejoicing and jumping around it—a beautiful tree that will make the children happy. There are children in this town who never have a penny to spend—no boy cakes or toys or anything. It is lamentable, Netty! Now I want to make those children happy for once—to make them laugh with pleasure. Their angel guardians ought to take pity on these poor destitute children, Netty; especially when they have no mother. If I had a brother I am sure my mother would not feel so sad. If I could get a brother I think I would be happy, Netty, for my mother would not cry any more."

"Don't talk that way, darling; you'll break your Netty's heart. . . . I ask you, for God's sake to get well. You will be a fine, big man like your father was, when you get well. You will grow up tall and handsome, after you recover in the spring Then well go out, hand in hand, into the sunny garden and gather roses—white roses—for mamma's birthday. Won't that be nice, love?"

"Netty, Netty, you cannot deceive me. I'll never gather roses any more. Don't you see! when people are sick, they become wise. I have heard voices, Netty, in this sick bed, which I never heard when I was well. Oh! if I could tell you what I see: what beautiful gardens full of flowers—fairer than our white roses a thousand times. Oh, they are delightful!"

"Make them sit down, mamma."

When she quitted the room for this purpose, Willy addressed Netty:

"This is my last Christmas on earth," he said with a sad but angelic smile. "I shall never see another Christmas on this world, but we ought to thank God who kept me alive to see this. I'd like to see the children at dinner. Call Eugenie (this was the name of the butler), and let him carry me into the room."

The men came in and lifted that light burden with respect and tenderness. The feeble arms of the child embraced the neck of the servant as he carried him round the table. Madame Warren, as she looked at him, foolishly fancied that her son would get well. When in the dining room Willy gazed at the happy children enjoying their meal; he studied every face. Some sounds escaped his lips, but no one, not even the servant understood them.

"Bring me back to the Christmas tree," said Willy.

"Are you tired, my darling?" asked his mother.

"No, mamma; but don't leave me my more. Let me hold your hand in mine. Netty will give the toys and clothes to the children. I am not strong enough.

On hearing these words Hope vanished from her soul. Her heart which was so full of confidence a moment before, was now wrung with unspeakable anguish.

"You remember the first Christmas-tree you ever had for me, don't you mamma?" asked Willy, pressing his mother's hand feebly. "Oh! how well I remember it. there was a little gun and little men, and everything that is nice."

"Do you wish to see the children in this room?"

It was now Christmas Eve, and Madame Warren was going and coming, and giving orders all day long, and gliding noiseless, over and down, into Willy's room to gaze on her darling. She was busy and anxious but comparatively easy in mind, for she was preparing the Christmas-tree. It was to be placed in the ground floor. In obedience to the caprices of her son (if it was caprice) she had ornamented a gigantic pine tree with the most exact and diligent attention, until the admiring domestics declared it was splendid. She entered the sick chamber with her tears as she whispered:

"My child will not see Christmas night."

The doctor made no reply, a silence that struck her heart, as it were, with the blow of a sledge. Meantime it was Christmas Eve, and Willy, animated by the accomplishment of his desire, seemed less feable. An insane hope took possession of the mother's heart as she noted the change.

"It was everything is ready, mamma, you will dress me up, and I'll go down to see the Christmas-tree."

On hearing these words the mother and nurse exchanged a look of anguish.

"Well, mamma," he exclaimed, "what are they doing?"

"They are lighting the candles."

"Dress me, Netty. Netty, mamma, if you please."

His thin and wasted form was wrapped in furs; his hair hair arranged in ringlets, white lace ruffs half covered his delicate hands.

"I'll walk down, mamma; allow me to lean on your arm."

Thinking, as she heard him, that a misstep was about to be wrought, she complied with his request.

"Hi! my love Netty on the other side, mamma. I'll walk between you."

His little feet as they went down, glided over the stair carpet. A flush of pleasure lighted up his wasted features, as he contemplated the tree sparkling and radiant with burning tapers, teeming with fruits and candies and cakes and ribbons and toys. He was carried round and round and danced it on every side, and then sat down on a sofa by his mother's side, smiling and saying: "I wish my school fellows could see a crowd of poor children came streaming into the room. Every poor child in the neighborhood was there, wondering and sweetened, but delighted.

Willy gazed at them with indescribable attention. He seemed to devour them with his eyes. Netty silently contrasted the healthy faces of these orphan children who had no one to care for them, with the sad faces of the children of Willy, which ankles her, the mother was blind to every object save her child.

"Will you do what I ask, mamma?

"If you wish to distribute them yourself, my love, I shall have them brought to your side, answered his mother.

"Have you agreed dinner ready for them, mamma?"

"An excellent dinner, darling."

"Make them sit down, mamma." When she quitted the room for this purpose, Willy addressed Netty:

"This is my last Christmas on earth," he said with a sad but angelic smile. "I shall never see another Christmas on this world, but we ought to thank God who kept me alive to see this. I'd like to see the children at dinner. Call Eugenie (this was the name of the butler), and let him carry me into the room."

"Don't talk that way, darling; you'll break your Netty's heart. . . . I ask you, for God's sake to get well. You will be a fine, big man like your father was, when you get well. You will grow up tall and handsome, after you recover in the spring Then well go out, hand in hand, into the sunny garden and gather roses—white roses—for mamma's birthday. Won't that be nice, love?"

"Netty, Netty, you cannot deceive me. I'll never gather roses any more. Don't you see! when people are sick, they become wise. I have heard voices, Netty, in this sick bed, which I never heard when I was well. Oh! if I could tell you what I see: what beautiful gardens full of flowers—fairer than our white roses a thousand times. Oh, they are delightful!"

The child was so situated at this moment that he could see through the lofty window of his room the remote horizon and the azure arch,

Pure as the Spirit who made it.

A sweet rock and silent Netty stood gazing on her little patient. A smile of rapturous pleasure lighted up his attenuated features and wreathed his lips. Some invisible power seemed to lift him from his bed, as if to hear him sway. Netty knelt down in trembling joy, and, with joined hands, she prayed to Heaven to shield, guard and protect that innocent child.

VERY REV. SADOC VILARRASA, O.P.L. O. P.

Few Priests on the Pacific Coast were better known or more respected than Very Rev. Sadoc Vilarrasa, Provincial of the Dominicans in this State, who died in March last, on the Feast of St. Patrick, to whom he was especially devoted.

Father Vilarrasa was a native of Valencia, Spain, where he was born in 1814, coming to this country as a missionary Priest in 1848, and being the companion of Archbishop Alemany, O. P., in the infancy of this Archdiocese. Both have ceased from their labors and if may well said of them that "their works follow them."

Madeline Marston's Fate.

A CHRISTMAS STORY OF REAL LIFE

The sun was setting slowly over the hills in the mountainous county of Westmoreland, and the dark green trees stood out in bold relief against the gold and crimson sky. To the right and left as far as the eye could reach lay vast fields of snow, to which here and there with glimpses of the splendid of the dying sun. Silence reigned supreme and nature was alone, except for the presence of a girl who was leaning against a wooden fence which divided one large field from another. She was apparently deep in meditation, and that of no pleasant nature, for from time to time was heard a low signing sob, and she muttered to herself in despairing voice, "Oh, if I knew, if I even knew, even the worst—anything is better than this cruel suspense."

Madeline Austin—for this is the name of the girl—is tall and slight, of about two and twenty years of age, not pretty to the casual observer, but possessing an attraction far more than that of mere prettiness. Her chief end, to many, her only beauty is her auburn hair, of that peculiar shade that Paul Veronese delighted in, of which he school loved to depict; her complexion is of the pale, clear type which generally goes with auburn hair, and her eyes are of that dark hazel that painters say green in others. She is attired in a long scarlet cloak bordered with dark fur and wears a fur cap on her head. Her face is worn with grief and pale from sleepless nights and distress of mind, yet there is about it a look of certainty so nearly had dimmed the clear steadfastness of manhood Austin's eyes, for here was one of those natures which seem so firm and so strong. Even those with whom she lives, her sister and brother, have not had the faintest conception of what she has suffered during "so short a time which to her poetic nature seemed long about her daily duties with the same energy as is her unclouded life before this sudden great trouble, none of them knew how well it is for those happy mortals who can relieve their burdened hearts by tears, and how much less they suffer than those strange natures who seldom or never weep.

Presently a hasty step came crunching over the crisp snow, and a clear voice says,

"Good evening, Miss Madeline, a penny for your thoughts."

"Well, Squire Marston," answers Madeline, "I fear they are hardly worth even the proverbial penny."

"Oh, no," rejoined the Squire with a laugh, "I am the best judge of that, I guess, stay, have you heard the news about Geoffrey Lyndon?"

"Why," says the girl, turning pale and stretching out her right hand to support herself against the fence. What—what about him?"

"Why, I'm surprised you haven't heard," goes on the Squire, prosily. "Judge Morse has found him guilty of theft and manslaughter, and has sentenced him to penal servitude for life, and served the young scamp right, say I."

A pause, a moment or two passes, and the Squire looks at his companion. She is deadly white; her hands are grasping the rails of the fence convulsively, and her lips are full of horror and despair. The Squire is amazed at last.

"Why, Madeline," he says, "I had no idea you cared. The girl interrupted him quickly, and said, in a strange, far away voice, "I speak to no one, please; indeed, I cannot bear it" and, turning her back on him, walks slowly towards her home.

Squire Marston watches her retreating figure till it is out of sight, then gives a long, long low whistle, which expresses volumes of surprise, astonishment, and pity, says word about Squire Marston. He is a typical English gentleman of the fox hunting type—a man of forty-six in appearance, stout and of medium height, red faced, with straight black hair and small, sharp blue eyes, which, when he is not drinking too much for the outer man, his character may best be described by negatives, for with one exception—his love of fox hunting—he had no decided tastes. He was not, as you doubtless have guessed, overburdened with brains and the few he did possess were lying dormant for want of exercise, for having a comfortable income of £5,000 a year and a good estate, he considered all exertion quite superfluous.

Now John Marston had long cherished for Madeline Austin, a secret liking. I cannot dignify it with the name of love, such natures as his are incapable of that in the highest and most ennobling sense. He, like the Lord of Crokjon, "let his table head thought she'd look well." Madeline had long been aware of his sentiments through the medium of her father, who was anxious to see his daughter comfortably settled, more especially as his son in law elect had promised to pay him (Austin) £3,000 on the wedding-day. But Madeline's heart was given elsewhere. For the last two years she had been secretly engaged to Geoffrey Lyndon, a young man possessed of little as yet but talents and indomitable energy, but, with these, what is impossible? He had been for three years studying law in the Middle Temple in London, and was only in the neighborhood of W — (the county town near which Madeline lived) at Christmas and during the long vacation. These holidays he spent with his widowed mother, who lived in a small dower house not far from Austin Manor. I'd course it was out of the question that Madeline and Geoffrey should marry for some years yet, but they were perfectly content to wait, happy in their great treat of each other, and enjoying of the golden future which the future might bring. However, lately Madeline had been much troubled by hints from her father and brother concerning Squire Marston, and indeed Jean Austin had gone so far as to tell her that she and she alone could save their house from ruin and themselves from disgrace.

Jean Austin was a young man of about six and twenty, and his character lacked all the good qualities so highly developed in that of his sister, he was weak, cowardly and extravagant to the last degree. Always a delicate boy, he had never been denied anything he wished for, and now the trials and responsibilities of manhood had come he lacked the stamina wherewith to sustain them. Just at present he was in dire distress, for, some three weeks previous to the beginning of my story, he received notice from a Jew with whom he had had negotiations, in the form of loans, to say he must pay within seven days' time. Three of the seven had gone by in perplexity, and on the evening of the third he went to a large dinner party at Squire Marston's, where he hoped, if fortune would have it, the conversation at dessert turned on the subject of the wonderful success of some young man who had acquired a fortune in another way than by actual toil. Mr. Green, who lived a quarter of a mile in Marston's house. The gentleman was a retired tea merchant, and was immensely wealthy and very eccentric. His chief pleasure was to hoard, he positively refused, in spite of the advice of all his friends, to keep any money in the county bank. The bulk of his fortune was invested in three per cent consols, but he always kept from two to three thousand pounds in gold and bank notes in his dressing case. This circumstance was well known in the neighborhood, for Mr. Green's housekeeper was a most inveterate gossip.

The morning after Squire Marston's dinner party, the inhabitants of the quiet town were startled by the news that Mr. Green's house had been broken into the night before, that he had been found by the butler at six o'clock that morning in a senseless condition and that £2,000 was missing from his dressing case. The alarm had been immediately called in but produced the same hopeless, Mr. Green had been struck on the back of the head by some heavy object—he might linger for some days, but recovery was not to be looked for. Wild sentiment prevailed all over the district and many were the conjectures as to the perpetrator of the deed. Geoffrey Lyndon had returned to London that morning by the 8 o'clock express, he had heard nothing of the catastrophe. He was sitting in his room in the Temple the following afternoon reading some intricate legal point when he was disturbed by a hasty knocking at the door. Before he had time to open it three policemen entered, and one of them walked over to where Geoffrey stood, laid his hand on his shoulder, saying in a peremptory way, "Geoffrey Lyndon, I arrest you in the name of the Queen."

"What?" exclaimed Lyndon, "you arrest me. What in the name of all that's wonderful, Wild—Brown—what's it about? You have mistaken your man. No! No!"

"No joke at all, young man, as you will find to your cost. You are charged with manslaughter and theft, and I advise you to come quietly with us, for the more force you make the worse it will be for you."

"Manslaughter! Theft!" said Lyndon, rubbing his eyes, "why, I must be dreaming. What—what do you mean?"

"Now, none of that," interrupted the officer roughly, "I've told you the charge and it won't do with us. Come with us now, or else I shall have to put those bracelets on you (showing a pair of hand cuffs) and you won't like that."

There was no help for it; he had to go back to the house to await his trial at the next assize, which took place three weeks after his arrest. This now brings us back to the house and whom my story opened. Squire Marston had then just told Madeline Austin the result of the trial.

PART II.

It is a windy March morning; cold and cheerless; a biting east wind blowing over the Westmoreland hills, but in spite of the unpromising state of the weather the little town of W— is on the alert, for it is not a grand wedding to take place to-day? The bell of St. Agatha's are ringing out joyfully, and already (at half-past nine) the village school children are ranged, dressed in white frocks, in two long rows, stretching from the gate to the front door, their aprons full of flowers to strew on the path of the bride. For Madeline Austin is a favorite with rich and poor, but more so specially with the latter class. You will, perhaps, not be surprised to learn that she has summoned to assume her own feelings in order to save her father and brother, though her heart is far away in that dreary Portland prison where Geoffrey Lyndon is drooping out a sad miserable existence.

But hush there is at last a stir amongst the crowd of loiterers at the gate as Squire Marston and his friend, Sir Philip Lessner, walk into the church. Then come the numerous false alarms and whispers of "It's he!" "there she comes" "look! look!" which are inevitable at every wedding.

However, at last she does come, accompanied by her father and the priest's daughter, who is bridesmaid. And very beautiful looks Madeline Austin looks, although very pale she is quite self possessed and carries her head well up. Just as she enters the church door the sun peeps through the clouds and lights up her auburn hair glancing through the lacy folds of her veil. Then the ceremony begins, and Madeline goes through it with a heroism worthy of a better cause. At length all is over, the register is signed, the Wedding March peals out triumphantly, and Squire and Mrs. Marston walk down the path through the rows of village children, who make pretty speeches and scatter their flowers before their feet. So the sacrifice is completed; and few even dream that it is a sacrifice.

THE SECOND CHRISTMAS EVE.

Again it is Christmas Eve, but three years later, and Time has left no marks on the grievances and enjoined away mistakes. Madeline Marston has been lonely in her grave for nearly a year. Jean Austin had died two years before, and on his death-bed, filled with a tardy remorse, he had confessed to the theft of £2,000 from Mr. Green. He said he had been tempted after killing the old man, but while stooping over the dressing-case he heard a movement, and, looking round, he saw the murdered coming towards him. Without calculating the strength of his blow he caught up a heavy weighted walking-stick lying near him and struck him on the head, instantly knocking him down, then caught up the money and rushed home with all possible speed. Arrived, he locked himself in his room, and, taking down stairs he took out a pocket bandkerchief which he had purchased the night before, at the party that night, and in his excitement he dropped it on the stairs. This handkerchief was identified by the police next morning and, combined with Lyndon's hurried journey to London, helped to fasten the guilt on him. Squire Marston was tried and convicted, but his death occurred in the hospital.

Holy Christmas tide is here once more and the bells of St. Agatha's are ringing out a joyful peal to the morning serves to herald the day of peace and good will. The church is brilliantly lighted and festal rays of brightness and cheer, form a distinct and gloomy corner of the churchyard, known as the Marston lot. A beam of moonlight would reveal a place with marble cross standing thereon and revealed in the words

MADELINE MARSTON,
AGED 25,
"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

But now a dark shadow intercepts the light and Squire Marston stands in sad mourn with bent head and drooping shoulders close to the tomb of his wife. His hands are clasped in the frame in a sudden spasm of deep sorrow, and he murmurs brokenly "Oh, that I could atone! Oh, that she knew! Madeline, Madeline, I repent the course I took; I judged him harshly; would I could make amends!"

Suddenly, as if in answer to his wish, there stands before him, like an apparition, Geoffrey Lyndon—but so changed, so haggard and worn, that he is only a shadow of his former self, after two years of penal servitude. But the smile of the man is unchanged, the same upright, honest glance shines from his clear eyes, as he stretches out his hand over the grave of his lost love, and says to Marston, "You were her husband; I loved her, and I trust them, as a dying answer to the words, the Christmas peals again ring out and the white-robed choristers of St. Agatha's chant those glorious words of the angels song

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, Peace, good will towards men."

Send the Unanswered Messages in your friends Almanac and on the Atlantic States and will make their Christmas and New Year's more happy

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROFESSION AND DEFENSE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office: 536 Kearny St., San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

One Year by Mail (if paid in advance)	$2 00
Six Months (if paid in advance)	1 25
Six Months (not paid in advance)	1 50
Three Months (if paid in advance)	1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance)	1 25
Bound or any of the Series Premiums (in advance)	$2 50
Single copies	5 cents

Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
P. J. McCORMICK, Editorial Manager.
Monitor Office, Box 2261 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
is one in the thirty-second year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a church and reliable Religious Newspaper, has given it a wide circulation and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertising.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.
All communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications with the greatest preserved rents will be inserted in the order accepted by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of declined articles.
All contributions and communications, whether on business or otherwise are to be addressed to the Manager.

For thy Seed be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Seed, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus, iv. 33)

VOL. XXXII. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1888. NO. 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GOLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING.
— Every Description of — Church and Altar Ornaments
— AND —
HOUSEHOLD GOODS
Repaired and Plated
On the above metals in the most beautiful and durable style.
BAY STATE PLATING WORKS,
Bet. Bay, Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco.
S. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

DR. M. J. DUNN
DENTIST.
REMOVED TO 850 MARKET STREET,
Opposite Fourth St.,
San Francisco, Cal.

FORD BROS.,
Sanitary : Plumbers,
GAS AND STEAM FITTERS.
617 LARKIN ST., bet. Ellis & Eddy, S. F.
Gas Stoves, Gas Fixtures and Globes.
JOBBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

JOHN HICKEY,
Merchant Tailor,
224 SIXTH STREET,
Bet. Folsom and Harrison Sts., San Francisco.
Suits to Order from $20 Up.
CUTTING TAUGHT.

A. SYLVESTER. G. SULLBETTE, JR.
SYLVESTER & SUBLETT,
DENTISTS
Painless Extraction
With Vitalized Air.
8 SIXTH ST., COR. MISSION,
Rooms 15, 16 and 18, S. F.
HOURS—8 to 5 P. M.

PRIVATE HOSPITAL,
For Mental and Nervous Diseases,
638 BRYANT ST.
Large Grounds and Every Convenience for the Care of Patients.
For PARTICULARS ADDRESS
DR. C. W. WHITWELL,
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE,
507 Bryant St., San Francisco.

AN ELEGANT RESORT.

The lack of elegant refreshment resorts is a marked feature of American life, and this is so generally true as to cause comment by travelers. The fact is undoubtedly true, however, that there is probably no more elegantly appointed place of the kind in the world than the Delmonico restaurant (Delmonico's, it is in Fleur d'amour), which is a worthy counterpart of the Delmonico's in New York. Its location is on Mission, Tenbarr & Kearsley, who have spared no pains or expense in the matter of fitting up the place with all the appliances that go to make up the service of a first class restaurant. The place is one of the finest and its fine table service, attended adapted to the purposes of a place that is unique after an evening at the theatre, or of the attractive lunch, or dinner, or, finally, the beautiful private apartments which are fitted up in connection with the place. Ladies can go there, especially as she made of supplying all necessary refreshments.

DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING.

The building has a frontage of 55 feet by a depth of 122 feet and is four stories in height, the Basement being of brick and the upper floors of wood.

The Basement (ivy feet high is arranged for Restaurant Hall and Refectory.

The first story is 15 feet high and contains the Parlors, General Office, Assembly Hall and Ladies' Ante Room. The ceiling of this floor is 12 feet in width, has two spacious bay windows, with 8 feet each and contains the main stair-case leading to the upper floors and to the Hall.

The second story is 15 feet high and contains the President's Room, Library, Bed Rooms, Bath Rooms, Ante Rooms, etc.

The third story contains the Chapel, Sacristy, Choir Loft, Bed Rooms, Bath Rooms and Lavatory.

The Chapel is 20x40 and 18 feet high, finished with modelled segment ceiling and stained stained windows, the one over the altar being enriched with a fine representation of Our Lord blessing little children, the whole so exhibiting the general finish of the altar, as to form an integral part of it. The Chapel is furnished with Altar, Altar Rail and Prie Dieu, Sanctuary Lamp, Stations of the Cross, Harmonium and Lavatory.

The Sacristy is 20x10 and 18 feet high, finished with modelled segment ceiling and stained stained windows, the one over the altar being enriched with a fine representation of Our Lord blessing little children, the whole so exhibiting the general finish of the altar, as to form an integral part of it. The Sacristy is furnished with Wardrobe and stuck him on the head, instantly knocking him down, then caught up the money and rushed home with all possible speed. Arrived, he locked himself in his room, and, taking down stairs he took out a pocket bandkerchief which he had purchased the night before, at the party that night, and in his excitement he dropped it on the stairs. This handkerchief was identified by the police next morning and, combined with Lyndon's hurried journey to London, helped to fasten the guilt on him. Squire Marston was tried and convicted, but his death occurred in the hospital.

Holy Christmas tide is here once more and the bells of St. Agatha's are ringing out a joyful peal to the morning serves to herald the day of peace and good will. The church is brilliantly lighted and festal rays of brightness and cheer, form a distinct and gloomy corner of the churchyard, known as the Marston lot. A beam of moonlight would reveal a place with marble cross standing thereon and revealed in the words

MADELINE MARSTON,
AGED 25,
"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

But now a dark shadow intercepts the light and Squire Marston stands in sad mourn with bent head and drooping shoulders close to the tomb of his wife. His hands are clasped in the frame in a sudden spasm of deep sorrow, and he murmurs brokenly "Oh, that I could atone! Oh, that she knew! Madeline, Madeline, I repent the course I took; I judged him harshly; would I could make amends!"

Suddenly, as if in answer to his wish, there stands before him, like an apparition, Geoffrey Lyndon—but so changed, so haggard and worn, that he is only a shadow of his former self, after two years of penal servitude. But the smile of the man is unchanged, the same upright, honest glance shines from his clear eyes, as he stretches out his hand over the grave of his lost love, and says to Marston, "You were her husband; I loved her, and I trust them, as a dying answer to the words, the Christmas peals again ring out and the white-robed choristers of St. Agatha's chant those glorious words of the angels song

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, Peace, good will towards men."

Send the Unanswered Messages in your friends Almanac and on the Atlantic States and will make their Christmas and New Year's more happy

YOUTHS' DIRECTORY

A Home to Save Homeless Boys

AN INSTITUTION WORTHY OF SUPPORT.

A Charity that Appeals to All.

San Francisco possesses many institutions of charity, but none of them is more useful than the Youths Directory, located at 2020 Hyde street, of which we present an illustration above.

If the Directory is generously sustained, it is calculated to effect a vast amount of good in its sphere, by not only saving the morals of boys who might otherwise become castaways and criminals, but its benign influence will go far towards saving the souls of thousands of young men who are rescued from scenes of destitution and drunkenness, and lifted into the pure atmosphere of industry and a home.

What is it to save a boy? It is to rescue a soul most precious in the sighted God from and lost wanderings and eternal companionship. It is to hold up virtue in a soul plunged through no fault of itself into a vortex of vice. It is to a boy means to furnish to the State a worthy citizen and to the Church a consistent Catholic. Who so derelict in his duty to his country and his Church as to refuse help to such a holy cause? We cannot certainly hope, therefore, that many hundred readers of the Monitor will join Sunflower Lodge, and by their annual contributions of one dollar, (or as much more as their means will allow,) become sharers in this great work of supplanting vice with virtue, and changing an element in this community which might otherwise become "dangerous" in the future, into a virtuous, sober and indust

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 8 1886.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

NOBODY'S LAND.

BOW SCHEMOZZ GOT IT, ANIL WHEN HE DID WITH IT.

Twas the strangest bird of a strange old world,
Many thousand years ago,
When nobody owned it, East or West,
And no one was born below.

When the rivers went to the silent sea
With nobody on them sailing,
When the mighty forests may have moaned,
And nobody heard their wailing.

Twas were no homes or gardens then,
No flowers to scent the air,
No noisy boys or laughing girls,
Only silence everywhere.

Silence early and silence late,
Silence by night and day;
Silence East and silence West,
Where nobody ever had away.

Silence; silence everywhere—
On hill and dale and glen,
Until the slumbering echoes woke
To the living voice of man.

When the Lord of the Sun from his dazzling Throne,
Sent forth the glorious bright;
The Lord of the Moon, and the shining stars,
He said it was not right.

He saw his valleys and mountains fair,
Gentle stream and rushing flood, and
And nobody should own them all, ay,
He said it was not good.

So He bade his servant somebody take
Your unclaimed Nobody's land,
To care for fields, enjoy the blooms,
And build its temples grand.

Forth came somebody at His word,
He weak and yet so strong;
He filled with wonder when I look
On this work that he has done.

For when he came he had no house,
No stone or timber to wear,
No sword or pistol to bite hand,
Though lord of all things there.

The birds, the beasts and the fishes came,
And passed before his view;
He gave them names they since have held,
Name known to me and you.

The horse had more strength and speed than him,
The lion could tear him down,
The bird could soar and the fish could swim,
In what was heaven and slightly taller. From Some looks one night judge they were sinters; and the elder, who had just entered the room, was grieving at some of the flowers.

"Shay, Ethel," said the elder, "do you intend to take those flowers over to the hospital this evening?"

"Yes, Ethih," replied the other, "I shall take some this evening and the rest to morrow morning."

"Hist, dear," replied Edith, "we have a thousand and one things to do this evening, and it is now quite late; could you not postpone this till to-morrow?"

"No, Ethih, dear, if I put it off till to-morrow many other annoyances may arise and prevent me, and besides, I have so many here that I am afraid that I shall not have time to distribute even those which I intend to take there this evening. While I am arranging these, Ethih, you had better tell Joe to hitch up the sleigh, for I am getting late," said Ethel. "I could not obtain so many flowers as I wished from the conservatory, but those artificial ones will last a long time."

Another Christmas was nearing its close in the great city. The sky held no dull, grey hue through all the day, and towards evening it lightened a little. For a few hours in the morning the snow had fallen, and it now lay heaped in the corners, hanging from eaves, or covering the leaves and trees, making the most grotesque figures. At day-long the jingle of sleigh-bells was to be heard everywhere, and merry shouts. It seemed not to lessen. Now and then a party of merry children, wrapped all up in their fare like Laplanders, would go merrily along. Ever and anon, a great wagon laden with boxes filled with curious looking images and dolls of all kinds, also rocking horses and velocipedes, would pass swiftly by. Then a market wagon, filled with game and fruit, would go jingling on its way. All the shops had put on their holiday attire, and presents, bright and new, were exposed to view in every shop window. Good old Santa Claus, with his round, merry face, looked out upon happy faces from among his treasures, and would repeatedly and a "merry Christmas" to all who looked at him. In many windows, fresh, green wreaths could be seen hanging, and on peering further within, one might see a Christmas tree in course of dressing.

Although nature seemed to have coddled herself under a robe of ermine, and the sky looked gloomy above, yet everything about seemed to grow brighter. Sad faces seemed to take on a smile, and grim old "Father Time" bade the spell join in the pleasure of the merry children.

On a quiet street, and quite out of the great whirl of business traffic, stood a large house surrounded by a spacious garden. The pavement in front was covered with snow, and the gate and fence posts looked like a row of soldiers guarding the entrance to the mansion. Two plants were weighed down with snow, and looked as if they were mourning the death of the flowers and seeking them in the cold, moist earth. Wreaths were in the windows of the house, and a gaily-dressed Christmas tree could be seen through one of the front windows.

In one of the large front rooms on the upper floor, a girl could be seen hastily arranging some flowers in baskets, while alongside of her stood another girl, a little older than herself and slightly taller. From their looks one might judge they were sisters; and the elder, who had just entered the room, was grieving at some of the flowers.

"Shay, Ethel," said the elder, "do you intend to take those flowers over to the hospital this evening?"

"Yes, Ethih," replied the other, "I shall take some this evening and the rest to morrow morning."

"Hist, dear," replied Edith, "we have a thousand and one things to do this evening, and it is now quite late; could you not postpone this till to-morrow?"

"No, Ethih, dear, if I put it off till to-morrow many other annoyances may arise and prevent me, and besides, I have so many here that I am afraid that I shall not have time to distribute even those which I intend to take there this evening. While I am arranging these, Ethih, you had better tell Joe to hitch up the sleigh, for I am getting late," said Ethel. "I could not obtain so many flowers as I wished from the conservatory, but those artificial ones will last a long time."

Ethih, after giving for a moment more on the profusion of flowers, left the room, humming a melody in a low voice. A short time elapsed when she again entered and came tripping lightly across the floor. She had been thinking of some beautiful Christmas gift which had arrived, with their names attached to it; or of some present she had just sent to her friends; or, perhaps, of the festivities which were to take place on the morrow.

"It's time assist you, dear sister," she said, "by putting those flowers you have so neatly together into this basket, and we will soon be ready, for Joe does not take long to hitch up."

"Are you dressed, Ethih?" asked Ethel looking up from her baskets.

"Oh, dear," said Ethih, "that that will take only a fly; so let me finish arranging these flowers while you prepare yourself for the journey, for I think that it is colder than it was this morning."

Ethih tripped out, and in a moment returned, and soon had everything ready for the sleigh ride. The sleigh, to which was hitched two fine bay horses, now stood before the door. The animals, fresh from the stalls, stood impatiently champing their bits. It was not long, however, before the two girls, wrapped in furs, stood in the doorway. They were saying "farewell" to an elderly lady, who seemed to be their mother, while behind the group stood a servant holding two large baskets filled with bouquets, each tied with a blue ribbon, on which "Merry Christmas" was imprinted.

Soon they were snugly covered with furs in the sleigh, and with their fleet steeds

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1888.

The Closing Day of the Dying Year.

This year of Our Lord, 1888, ends on next Monday night, and the Monitor desires most earnestly to call to the minds of its thousands of readers that the last day of this year should be passed as far as possible—in the manner prescribed by the Pope for observance throughout the whole Catholic world.

The Vicar of Christ has called upon the Faithful in the one true Fold of Christ, to assemble in their churches on that day, and there—filled with this spirit of Faith, Hope and Charity—make solemn thanksgiving to the SACRED HEART OF JESUS, the perennial fountain of Divine mercy, for all the favors which the Church, the Vicar of Christ and the Catholic people have received during the year to be so appropriately closed.

In the Decree, by authority of which next Monday is to be celebrated as a day of special devotion throughout the Catholic world, the Holy Father directs "that in metropolitan, cathedral, collegiate, parochial, and other churches, where, with the consent of the Ordinaries, it may be desired, the Most Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist shall remain exposed for some time on December 31st next, the last day of the year, from the public adoration of the faithful and for the worship of the Sacred Heart; that five decades of the Rosary of the Blessed Virgin shall be recited, and that then, after the singing of the Ambrosian Hymn and Tantum Ergo—the prayers Deus cujus Misericordiæ, Concede nos, and the Collects for the Pope and the Church being added—there shall be Benediction with the Divine Host. To each of the faithful who, after having made a good Confession and approached Holy Communion, shall devoutly attend such a public service, and shall pray with faith and confidence to the Sacred Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ in thanksgiving, and also for the tranquility and peace of Holy Mother Church and the conversion of sinners, the Holy Father deigns to grant a Plenary Indulgence in the ordinary form of the Church—an Indulgence which will also be applicable to the souls in Purgatory."

In obedience, therefore, to the mandate of the Vicar of Christ, let every Catholic, beneath whose roof-tree these lines may fall, resolve to visit a church on next Monday and to assist at the devotions therein, so that by mingling his gratitude to God with the prayers of the hundreds of millions of his co-religionists, he may become a participator in the blessings which are so numerously showered upon faithful souls through that beautiful and salutary devotion in honor of the SACRED HEART OF JESUS.

"The Heart of the Man-God," says an eminent ecclesiastical authority, "is the living centre of the love and sympathy of Christ, our Brother, our Saviour and our King. Who is the Son of the Virgin Mary and of the Eternal Father. The human Heart of Jesus is the Heart of the Son of God, in whom Person it subsists and lives and, accordingly, the homage of adoration rendered to it in the Blessed Sacrament, and the supplications addressed immediately to it—are directed to the Divine Person of the Incarnate Word."

Let there be, on this occasion, therefore, a grand concerting of Catholic devotion all over this Coast. The Blessed Sacrament will be exposed for the adoration of the Faithful in all the churches, and let the Sacred Heart be surrounded by a guard of honor during the whole day, from the dawn of the morning until the last tick of the clock which will proclaim the death of the year 1888, and the birth of the New Year of 1889.

Rallying Round the Vatican.

It will be gratifying to Catholics all over the Pacific coast to learn that in nearly every country in Europe where Catholics have freedom of speech, the claims of the Holy Father to his rights in Rome have been unanimously endorsed. Here is the spirit manifested by some of the Catholics on the European Continent, and which should infuse courage into Catholics everywhere:

A second Congress of the Austrian Catholics has sent an address to the Holy Father to which he has replied. It will be enough to quote the following extract from it: "The more directly the war against religion and against society is being waged in our times, the more necessary does it become for Catholics to spare no trouble in order to resist successfully those attacks of the enemy. Therefore, the letter which you have sent Us proclaiming your purpose, and detailing the programme of the important questions to be discussed at your second Congress, has been most gratifying to Us." Another letter has come to the Holy Father from the Spanish Episcopate assembled in Toledo, expressing their gratitude for his Holiness's Encyclical on "Liberty." The Catholics of Amsterdam have also just sent a protest against the present position of the Holy Father, and asserting the wrong that is done to Catholics throughout the world by having him deprived of the independence which is essential to the free work and mission of the Church.

— What can be done to cure the fearful evil of political corruption which is overflowing the land? In this city it is abominable, but San Francisco it seems is not the worst city in the United States in that regard, as a New York paper states that in a single ward of the city of Elmira, New York, where, fifteen years ago, a man was almost mobbed for selling his vote, on November 6, 1888, 200 freemen, out of a total poll of 800 votes, sold themselves to the highest bidder, and the only mobbing done was the rush to reach the paymaster first!

— The Holy Father has honored Ireland by nominating Father Louis Hickey, Prior of the Irish Dominican College of St. Clemente, in Rome, as one of the Consultors of the Sacred Congregation of the Council.

Death of Very Rev. I. T. Hecker.

On last Saturday death claimed one of the most energetic and industrious literary lights of the Catholic Church in the Archdiocese of New York. Very Rev. I. T. HECKER will not only be a great loss to the Church and the Parish Congregation of which he was Founder and Superior but Catholic literature will find a void in its ranks which few men in America can fill.

VERY REV. ISAAC THOMAS HECKER, was born of German parents in New York City, on December 18th, 1819, so that he was within four days of entering on his 69th year when he was called to that reward promised by Almighty God to every "good and faithful servant," and of which happy class of Catholic converts he was a bright and shining example.

Father Hecker followed the feeble and misleading light of one of the Protestant sects for the first twenty-four years of his life, but at length he was blessed with a vision of that true light which leads to God and eternal happiness. He was received into the Catholic Church by Rev. P. Hecker, C.S.S.R., of New York, and was immediately thereafter accepted as a postulant into the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer. He then went to Belgium, where he studied theology and philosophy for six years, and after a brief sojourn in London, where he finished his education, he was ordained by Cardinal Wiseman, in October, 1849. In the Spring of 1851, Father HECKER was one of a band of young Redemptorists sent to this country to labor in missionary duty, which he continued to perform for the following five years.

In 1856 Father HECKER had matured his plans for the establishment of a Congregation differing somewhat from the Redemptorists. Accordingly he proceeded to Rome, where he spent some portions of the years 1857-8 in performing his ideas and bringing them into conformity with the directions of the Roman ecclesiastical authorities.

These deliberations resulted in the establishment of the Congregation of St. Paul, the members of which are known as the Paulist Fathers—six of whom gave a series of very successful missions in this city and State some thirteen years ago.

At the first organization of the Congregation of St. Paul, Father HECKER was chosen Superior, and again in 1875 he was re-elected for nine years, so well did he labor for the glory of God and the good of the youngest congregation of priests in the Church of Christ.

Aside from the arduous labors imposed upon him by virtue of his official cognomen with his Congregation, Father HECKER was busily engaged in parochial and missionary duties; but amidst all his multifarious occupations he found sufficient time to institute and direct a Catholic Publication Society, to establish the Catholic World magazine, and to make most valuable contributions to the current Catholic literature during each year of his long, useful and self-sacrificing existence.

Father HECKER'S best-known works are "The Aspirations of Nature," "Questions for the Soul," and "The Church and the Age." But aside from these three very valuable contributions to Catholic literature, Father HECKER has written hundreds of articles for the Catholic World, which have made his name both familiar and revered by all who have had the happiness to receive instruction through the wisdom flashes of his well stored mind.

Peace to the soul of this simply faithful Father! He lived wisely and well. God called him from the humblest walks of life to place him at the head of a Congregation which, from its very foundation thirty years ago, has been doing a work in the Church by voice and pen and printing press, which would otherwise have been left unaccomplished.

The Paulist Order is peculiarly adapted to America, where the war against the Church has to be met in the literary arena, and where the faith of thousands of Catholics can only be kept alive by frequent visits from missionary Priests who devote themselves to rescuing the seed of Catholic truth in souls where it has ceased to fructify through sin, indifference or evil association.

The Father and Founder of this most useful Congregation has been called to his reward, and it is to be confidently hoped that although the Church militant in America has lost one of her brightest, bravest and best defenders, the Church triumphant in Heaven has gained an addition to its ranks by the adoration of the soul of the dearly loved deceased Father HECKER.

Our loving Mother the Church says: "It is a holy and a wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins." Hence the second, or offener, and the more fervently Catholics pray for their deceased friends, relatives and benefactors, the sooner such unfortunate souls will find favor with God, and thus be enabled to plead before the throne of Mercy for those who helped them out of their suffering.

As a priest and as a citizen, Father HECKER was a benefactor to the whole human race. He founded a Congregation which will live and flourish throughout ages in the far distant future, and which will move his name and fame to fill the whole world with the same measure of glory as that of the founders of the other great orders in the Church. His writings have been the means of bringing many converts into Christ's only true Church, and in every way commensurate with Christian duty, Father HECKER labored through life to make his fellow-man more acceptable and pleasing to God, and in doing this he has earned that eternity of peace and happiness which we earnestly pray that he may now be enjoying in heaven!

— Having sent Apostolic missionaries to every other portion of the globe, Ireland is now furnishing Priests and Sisters to Christianize the pagan tribes of Africa. Rev. Father David, of the Cistercian Order, who is collecting the alms of the faithful and enrolling recruits for his mission amongst the natives of Zululand, has been lecturing to crowded audiences at Cork, Waterford, Wexford and Carlow. During last month a second party of postulants (about twenty in number), with their Priests and professors, left Ireland for this seat of Christian warfare.

How the "Romanists" were "Beaten at Boston."

The day when John Wesley gave utterance to this diabolical sentiment "No government, not Roman Catholic, ought to tolerate men of the Roman Catholic persuasion," he laid the corner stone of that Satanic system of intolerance which has since the civil characteristic of Methodism ever since.

The late election in Boston gave the Methodist organ in this city a chance whereon it must cheerfully wired its interference when it declared that the "Roman tide" was turned in Boston, and then with a Lutheran leer—the Advocate alluded to the MONITOR as having "made fun of the Catholics because of voting on school questions," and then Rev. McCreary asks—"What does the MONITOR think of that now?"

The MONITOR is always able, ready and willing to answer any and all questions put to it concerning Catholic affairs, hence it gives as a good picture to enlighten our evangelical confreres upon the causes which led to the "Romanists" being beaten in Boston, and we may preface our remarks by candidly saying that a defeat under such circumstances of fraud, fanaticism and foolishness, as we shall develop in an hour, when compared with a victory won by the wickedest ways which Wesleyan intolerance and dishonesty could suggest.

How was the Boston victory won? By incendiary appeals on the part of Methodist preachers to the intolerant spirit of sectarian hatred against American citizens simply because they were Catholics. Is there anything to be proud of on the part of Methodists in gaining a victory under such infernal impulses?

How was the Boston victory won? By deliberately telling as set forth by the following dispatch:

VOTES WHO HELPED TO ELECT A MAYOR IN BOSTON.

Boston, December 5.—Illegal voting of women in the recent existing city election as discovered—that. The very first precinct in question shows ninety-five votes in excess of the registry, and there is no doubt that all or nearly all of the excess is due to the votes cast, illegally, for the Mayor, by women. Hart carried this ward by 207 votes. Numerous other precincts showing a similar name was the check list were found, and the recount is not yet half completed. Take Hall's word for it and blindly vote for the list that the women voted, straight tickets, including the School Committee, instead of voting for the school committee only, as required by law.

Intolerance stops at nothing in order to achieve its machinations and malignant aims, and it is not at all unlikely that the Methodist preachers of Boston, whose lenten thrusts blared forth blasphemy and bigotry for weeks before the Boston election, taught their female flocks the trick of voting for every officer on the ticket, when they were not entitled by law to commit any such crime. As Methodists proud of their disciplinarians, we may preface our remarks in order to enlighten our sectarian brethren in the Advocate feel that it is advancing American morality, or conducing to the success of Christianity, by winning Methodist votaries through Methodist intolerance and Methodist iniquity of the darkest dye!

How was the Boston victory won? By the foulest means that ever disgraced a decent community. Here is what the Boston Public says on that point:

"May or O'Brien has no reason to be ashamed of the support which he received in the election of last Tuesday, said Mr Hart, though he is now the Mayor-elect, cannot feel proud of his victory when he reflects upon the manner in which it was won. Hundreds of Protestant women who never before had cast a vote for a ticket as the Republican ticket, came out on Tuesday to vote against the Catholics. Prejudice was made to fight and fear prejudice, and we reasonably fear that the Republican party will lose the creditable work, that its motto since they began to fight and well others from up to the 12th of election. A large corruption fund was raised in behalf of the Republican candidate, the latest accusations were made against the present city government, and the city election was tenaciously dragged into the political arena for purpose of making the approach to party and race prejudice, added to already, more than enough of it."

Are "dishonest issues," "the vilest appeals," and a "huge corruption fund" the trickster's tools of which triumphant Methodism is proud? If so, every American citizen should earnestly pray "God save this people from the baneful influence of Methodist bigots who thus glory in their sin, shame and public scandal!

How was the victory won? By resorting to tactics that would disgrace a regiment of the lowest ruffians that shared in the fiendish act of burning Charlestown convent. Here is what the Boston Pilot says of the shameful doings of Methodist preachers prior to the election:

This result is a Democratic city was carried by the religious bigotry of Protestant clergymen, by certain Protestant ministers, and by the action of a section of the Democratic party, the leader of which bitterly assailed Mayor O'Brien and joined hands with the Boston British American and Orange party.

It is painful and shameful that a city possessing the intelligence, should be, this age decide the municipal election on grounds that would disgrace the days of the blue Laws and the whipping post. The boundless preachers worked especially to rattle the middle-class Protestant women and men, who, like Scotch Presbyterians, are not, as a class, with hysterical hysteria, and "Converted Catholics" were brought to the rescue. In Boston, women are allowed to vote for the School Board; and as a result, in a city half Catholic, every Catholic name was swept off the ticket. Tomorrow, if the Catholic children were withdrawn from the Public Schools, more than half of these would starve. Argument or comment is thrown away. The only word for such a result is—Shame!

And these are thy weapons, O Wesley, saints! "incendiary preachers," "unequipped nuns," and converted priests." What a trinity of fiends wherewith to sin the infernal contents of Methodism! It is no wonder that the Boston Pilot says blame! when it ponders over the putrid slime which the Advocate's co-workers in Wesleyan iniquity employed in order that the "Romanists" might be beaten in Boston!

Having thus exhibited the disreputable means by which bigots, blackguards and Protestant fanatics won this so-called "victory" for anti-Catholic cranks, let us proceed to enlighten Rev. McCreary upon a few points upon which he has permitted his prejudices to paralyze the trifling issues of truth which exists in his mental regions.

In the first place, then, the political battle at Boston was not a victory over "Romanism," in any sense of the word. The conflict commenced when that scurrilous school-book "Scanlon's Outline of History," was very properly excluded from the Public Schools. The Directors who did that proper deed were Protestants. Had the Catholic members of the Boston School Board desired ever so much to discard the book in question, they had not votes enough to accomplish it, so it was far minded Protestants who pitched Scanlon's work out of the Boston schools, and in the late election the contest was between fair minded Protestants on one side, and fraud, fanaticism and a fusion of Methodist foulness of all kinds, on the other.

Brother McCreary, with his usual contempt for truth, says that the Democratic party joined hands with the Republicans against the Catholics, who put Scanlon's work out of the Boston schools, but the Editor of the Advocate is forced to be informed where he says anything about Priests or Popery, as he is half crazy on both those subjects.

His idea for falsehood has also led Rev. McCreary into the assertion that those anti-"Priests" of Boston are constantly engaged in "filling up text-books for the children of American Protestants and other friends of the schools." It is reasonable to suppose, therefore, that Rev. McCreary knows where he speaks whereby he makes this assertion, and the MONITOR will give the Editor of the Advocate one hundred dollars in gold coin, on a New Year's gift, if he can furnish us with the names of the "Priests" and the "text-books" they have "filled up" for the Boston schools. The fact is Rev. McCreary has told another Wesleyan "whopper," just to keep his pen true to its peculiar goodness for perpetrating falsehoods against the Catholic Church.

Now what are Christians who love Christianity for its truth, virtue and purity, to think of a Methodist preacher who will willfully and malignantly manufacture the most diabolical falsehoods against his fellow-citizens, for no other reason than because they happen to belong to a Church which emancipated from God nearly eighteen hundred years before Methodism was begotten by Revolutionists. A system of sectarianism which leans upon its escutcheon the intolerant sentiment of "No government, not Roman Catholic, ought to tolerate men of the Roman Catholic persuasion," is always armed and equipped for deeds of unforgivable darkness by means of the most infernal character.

Decidedly Rev. McCreary calls the Boston election "a victory over Romanism." Well, although this is not true, we will permit the Advocate to take pride in the possession of a Wesleyan weapon, and at the same time draw consolation from the fact that it is only fools, frauds and fanatics who glory in triumphs won at the sacrifice of all that is sacred in American citizenship.

May God preserve this Republic against the insidious wiles and the unscrupulous ways of political parties of the Wesleyan stamp. They are a constant menacing danger against which it is well all Americans should be warned. The unscrupulous means employed to win the disgraceful victory in Boston were designed by them, not to secure things they have received at the hands of Boston by means of the blackest bigotry and the foulest of corruption, but to make the coast in the near future, unless the public eye is kept steadily on the scheming squad who pose as preachers of Methodism, but who are in reality ranting politicians who are preparing for a campaign in this city fully as factional and corrupt as that of Boston.

The Advocate asked the MONITOR "what it thought of the Boston victory?" We have answered this question in a way which will leave the impression upon the Editor's worst partiality that American politics ever developed, and we leave the Advocate to decide for itself which the Boston election represents to every member of the Methodist sect.

A Methodist Miracle:

We presume there are not many readers of the MONITOR who ever heard of a Methodist miracle, and yet we can easily convince our patrons that such a superhuman event has been brought about by the ministrations of a few Methodist preachers.

The first to figure in this Methodist miracle is the Rev. Dr Carver, who publicly declared during last April that "there were 300 Catholics in this county a hundred years ago than there are today." Dr Carver stated, therefore, that there were less than 300 Catholics in the United States on the first day of April, 1888.

The next gospel-teller to add to Dr. Carver's miracle was Rev. Dr. Howard, who stated last month that there were "seven millions of Catholics in Ameriica at the time Washington."

The third preacher to have a finger in the Methodist pie, is our perverse preversaurier, Rev. Dr McCreary, who says that half of the population of San Francisco is Catholic, or, in other words, that there are more than 150,000 Catholics in San Francisco alone.

Here we have recorded three different assertions! If Dr. Carver is right, why Dr. Howard is wrong. If Dr. Howard is right Dr. Carver must be wrong. Then, perhaps, according to some slab-sided logic peculiar to the Methodist sect, both are right in making the assertion that in the short space of nine months, viz from the time of the meeting of the Oakland preachers in April of this year, to the meeting of the San Francisco preachers last week, the Catholic Church had had a "big boom" in this republic, as its membership increased from less than 300 in April last, to "seven millions" in the month that shows this gray!

After this, who says that the days of miracles are past, when the Methodist clergy can perform them by merely turning the crank of their fanatical lore for falsehood!

The discovering cases of bearing false witness lie by bombastic, bigoted followers of the Methodist fraternity, reminds us of a certain text of Scripture which is very appropriate when applied to their case. It says this: "And the chief priests and all the council sought for evidence against Jesus, but found none, for many bare false witness against Him, and their witnesses were not agreeing."

The question be declined from this text is the Son of God was innocent of the charges brought against Him by the Jews, just as His Church is guiltless of the charges brought against her by the Pharisees of Methodism in this year of our Lord 1888.

—It is rumored that the Marquis of Londonderry will soon resign the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, and that the Marquis of Dufferin will be his successor.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Chicago Times makes this suggestive comparison: "The evidence thus far adduced before the Parnell Commission goes to show that crime has existed in Ireland for the last three or five years. By a striking coincidence crime has also existed in England and Scotland during the same period. Indeed, we have had some of it in our home."

The Boston Globe pertinently asks Why should people keep raising the issue now "Is marriage a failure?" when the statistics of recorded marriages show that a woman's chance to marry are one fourth of one per cent. from 50 to 56 years of age; three-fights of one per cent. from 45 to 50; 22 per cent. from 40 to 45; 30 per cent. from 35 to 40; 15½ per cent. from 30 to 35; 9 per cent. from 25 to 30; 22 per cent from 20 to 25, and 14½ per cent. from 15 to 20. The average percentages still exceed those of any other business speculation.

—In order to show the fearful condition of the criminal classes in England it is only necessary to point to the fact that in the last ten days of the month of November, 1888, there were as many murders committed in England as there had been in Ireland during the whole year of the Land League force, in England, and more than twice as many in Scotland. Yet we hear nothing about the Land League in Ireland, but we hear much about the Land League in England, and we read every thread. In the meantime, we see the Land League force open and shut, the scattered papers, all continue to be as quiet as a graveyard, while the grouping of the figures, the arrangement of the Land Leagues, and the reception of the children by means of a large curtain, but very large curtain, which, by the way, is protected from prying eyes by the chivalry of the Irish people, the grouping of the stamp of true perfection of art. The really and the ideal, the ideal of the Land Leagues, which the Holy Father greatly encouraged, and affectionately blessed the Land Leagues, and the real, the Land Leagues, which the Holy Father greatly condemned

Farm and Home.

Some Interesting Statistics.

Here are some facts, says the Middle Argosy about the people who compose that population of the world

There are 1,000,000,000 in the world, and the Mohammedans profess more than 1,000 religions.

The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of life is about 33 years. One-quarter die previous to the age of 17. To every 1,000 persons only one reaches 100 years of life. To every 100 only 6 reach the age of 65, and not more than 1 in 500 lives to the period of age.

There are on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants. Of these, 33,023,033 die every year; 91,824 every day; 3,730 every hour; and 60 every minute, or 1 every second.

The married are longer lived than the single; and above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to 50 years of age than men have, but fewer afterward.

The number of marriages is in the proportion of 75 to every 1,000 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after equinoxes—that is, during the months of June and December.

Those born in Spring are generally of a more robust constitution than others. Births are more frequent by night than by day; also deaths.

The number of men capable of bearing arms is calculated at one-fourth of the population.

A Mountain Ranch.

J. M. Wainer, a young man who had tired of trying to make money by raising wheat, a year or two ago, went into the mountains and purchased a ranch partly improved—an acre of which was devoted to apple trees. His original intention was to raise cattle on his mountain ranch, and he is now engaged in that industry, but having learned of the profits to be derived by raising apples, he is devoting a great deal of attention to that industry as well. This week he informed the Times that he derived a profit of $400 per year from this one acre of apple orchard. He has eight acres more of trees growing that will not come into bearing for two years yet, and this winter and next spring he expects to put out ten acres more to apple trees. The orchard is not cultivated after the trees come into bearing, but a small stream of water courses its way alongside the trees throughout the year, which keeps the soil moist and pliable. Mr. Wainer's ranch is in Mt. Vernon precinct, one and a half miles below the Dillon dump. Mr. Dillon has a three-acre orchard in the same neighborhood, and he finds no trouble in disposing of his apples at 5 cents per pound right at home, the orchard thus bringing him an income of from $1200 to $2000 per year, the amount being varied by an off season, the trees bearing more fruit some seasons than others. There are thousands of acres of hill lands in this county adapted to raising apples, and as the supply of this fruit is never equal to the demand, it is strange that a greater number of people do not engage in the business.—Tulare Times.

Queer Methods of Taxation.

In view of the great discussion of the various methods of taxation, at present agitating our own country, the following from Chamber's Journal, may be of interest: Many strange methods of taxation have prevailed in England. A review of some of those is interesting. The first tax ever imposed was that levied by Julius Cesar, who ordered the chiefs of the various cities to send annually to Rome a fixed number of men and wild animals—the former to be sold, and the latter would be lavished, and the latter would be used for the great fights of the Colosseum. But very often the men and the wild animals were put on an equal footing and forced to fight with each other in sight of the bloodthirsty and applauding Romans. But of all taxes ever imposed on a people the "birth tax" was the most odious. It lasted thirteen years, dating from 1695. Every person not in receipt of alms was required to pay 2 shillings for every "little stranger" that came into existence. The tax was a great burden to the lower orders; but the nobility and gentry were subject to still heavier payments than their poorer neighbors. Thirty pounds had to be paid on the birth of the child of a duke. This sum gradually diminished, according to a fixed scale, until it reached 10 shillings, the amount levied on real estate of £60, or personal estate of £600 and upwards. Reasonable excuse was be given in most cases why it is that certain things are taxed; but where the imposers of the "birth tax" can find an excuse sense to our modern minds impossible. Contemporaneously with this "birth tax" there existed another, called "The bachelors' tax." It was not a very heavy imposition, and was probably intended to be as much a reminder of their duty as a means of "raising the wind," which William III so often stood in need of. As soon as a man reached the age of 25 he was liable to the tax, which was one shilling yearly till he took to himself a spouse. But it did not stop with bachelors; and here we think it was unjust, for it taxed widowers with young children. Besides the shilling every person had to pay an amount according to his rank for the luxury (or otherwise) of single blessedness; thus a duke or an archbishop was assessed in the yearly sum of £12 10s., an earl £11 5s.; a gentleman 5 shillings. Social distinctions were nicely drawn then.

The Errors of the Past.

The memory of our debauts and sins ought not to fill us with despair, but to furnish us with new incentives for more heroic effort. Nature does not keep her wounds open, as soon as they are made the healing process begins. There is nothing more unnatural or morbid than dwelling on one's past errors and blunders; it debeats the very ends which nature is trying to secure. The errors of the past ought to be healed in the only way in which they can be healed—by noble living, by the consciousness of having overcome them. The only real repentance for past sin is to be found not in sitting down in sack-cloth and ashes, but by girding your loins afresh and pushing on to a higher where the temptations of the past no longer have any power over us. The future is our inalienable possession; it is the youth upon which we all draw; it is the opportunity to retrieve the past which is open to every one.

WILL FIGURES LIE?

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 11th, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

Dear Sir—Figures will not lie if properly and correctly computed; but the art of making a mistake in making a division of the quotient, the 67 cents becomes a very pretty number. The one who sold 3 lbs one dollar had ten cents over. Now, I am not expounding from her group of 20 sheep, belonging to Mr. Smith, who sold at the rate of 2 for $1 60 had taken out only 20 dollars in 13 drawn, they received 20 dollars and 20 cents, and the number drawn which amounted to 200 00

Then for the remaining 10, which the woman had who sold at the higher rate. She received 20 00, or 2 00 for every ten, which amounted altogether to 20 dollars! Deducting 12 00 which she took out of the proceeds. Which is 12 00 the total of their respective receipts, 32 00 equal 16, 16 divided by 2 equals 12 00 which was the amount she took out. G. R.

Family Fun.

THE FEMININE WAY.

Difficulties Experienced by a Woman in Making Out a Money Order.

"I want to get a money order," she said, throwing her head through the window in her usual fear lest she should be late.

"Make out an application, then," replied the clerk. "You'll find the blanks on the desk back of you."

"What application? I just want to send $15 to——"

"Fill out the blank," interrupted the clerk, handing her one.

"I—I—will you please fill it out for me?"

"I can't. It's against the rules. You other fill it out yourself.

"Oh, dear me, I don't believe I can. What do you do first?

"Write the date."

"Where?

"On the first line.

"There? On that line?

"Yes—that's it."

"Why, let me see, is this the 10th or the 15th?

"The 10th."

"I thought so, but I wasn't sure. What do I do next?

"Write out the amount to be sent."

"It's $15.

"Well, write it on the next blank line?

"There?

"Yes.

"How say it is, after all? Now, what should I do?

"Where is the money to be paid?

"Oh, at Chicago.

"Well, write 'Chicago' after the words 'Payable at.

"I—I—don't see any 'Payable.'

"There it is."

"Oh, of course; how perfectly ridiculous of me not to see it myself! Now, what shall I put after 'State of?'

"Why, 'Illinois' to be sure."

"Why, I thought we began at home! Now, let me see, what comes next?

"To whom are you sending the money?

"Oh, to Mr. John Smythe; that is, I'm really sending it to Mrs. Smythe, who is my sister, but we thought it would be better to send it in his name and save her the trouble of going to the office, and of course he can give it to her, as the money's really for my sister; but it is the same any difference, I suppose——

"It makes no difference at all."

"I didn't see why it should, really, and I'm glad it don't, for sister isn't in good health, and she might not be able to go to the office herself, and——

"Write Mr Smythe's name and address on the line below."

"His full name?

"Yes—there are so many Smythes."

"Joseph N.' will do, won't it?

"Yes, yes.

"I can write it 'Joseph Newman Smythe' if you prefer. Newman is his middle name.

"Joseph N. will do.

"Yes, will it? I'm sure I don't see why it shouldn't. He's so well known anyhow.

"Now write your name and address on the other lines as quickly as you can, please; there are others waiting."

"I don't take her but about twenty minutes to do this, and ten more to ask if Smythe will have to be identified, and when he'll get the money, and how she'll know his get it, and if the post-office is responsible if the money is lost, and if a registered letter wouldn't have been just as safe, and so on in a way that only helpless and suffering postal clerks know anything about.

Proof-Readers' Poetry.

Some writer has produced a poem entitled "Sounds from the Sanctum. It reads just too pretty, and gives us the thought that the author never visited a sanctum when business was in full blast. If he had visited about midnight, he would have heard a few sounds—one poring over a proof-slip, the other holding the copy; and the sounds would have been something like these:

Proofreader—As flowers without the sunshine fare—comma—or—semicolon—

Compositor—Thunder! not more—period.

Proofreader—I breathe a dark and dismal mare—

Compositor—Blunder—comma—or—period—

Proofreader—Shoot the comma.

Compositor—Shoot the author!

Proofreader—The dose. As flowers without the sunshine fade—semi-colon—colon—fond sing seven, he never—period—lies—no joy in life—comma—no worms—

Compositor—Warmth.

Proofreader—No warmth I share—comma—and health and vigorous five—

Compositor—Hiss! Health and vigor fly.

Proofreader—Health and vigor fly—full stop.

That's about the sound of it when poetry is on deck.

A Shrewd Bargain.

Editor (writing to eminent literary man)—If you will send us a copy of your three hundred to two thousand words—we will pay you $200. You understand that this is $200 for the use of your name, and $5 for the story—our usual rates.

Literary Man—I regret to say that I have no time or inclination to write the story, but I inclose my name. Will you use it, and in return send me check for $200.

Business Maxims.

"There's a fine business motto," said a peddler to the grocer "'Ready pay makes the heavy (or otherwise) of single blessedness.' Thus a duke or an archbishop was married in the yearly sum of £12 10s., an earl £11 5s.; a gentleman 5 shillings. Social distinctions were nicely drawn then.

"Why, 'Illinois' to be sure."

"Why, I thought we began at home! Now, let me see, what comes next?

"To whom are you sending the money?

"Oh, to Mr. John Smythe; that is, I'm really sending it to Mrs. Smythe, who is my sister, but we thought it would be better to send it in his name and save her the trouble of going to the office, and of course he can give it to her, as the money's really for my sister; but it is the same any difference, I suppose——

"It makes no difference at all."

"I didn't see why it should, really, and I'm glad it don't, for sister isn't in good health, and she might not be able to go to the office herself, and——

"Write Mr Smythe's name and address on the line below."

"His full name?

"Yes—there are so many Smythes."

"Joseph N.' will do, won't it?

"Yes, yes.

"I can write it 'Joseph Newman Smythe' if you prefer. Newman is his middle name.

"Joseph N. will do.

"Yes, will it? I'm sure I don't see why it shouldn't. He's so well known anyhow.

"Now write your name and address on the other lines as quickly as you can, please; there are others waiting."

"I don't take her but about twenty minutes to do this, and ten more to ask if Smythe will have to be identified, and when he'll get the money, and how she'll know his get it, and if the post-office is responsible if the money is lost, and if a registered letter wouldn't have been just as safe, and so on in a way that only helpless and suffering postal clerks know anything about.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHURCH CANDLES!

—REDUCED—

Beeswax Candles For Candemas.

PATENT WAX AND STERIC ACID CANDLES!

Highly finished as to Quality. Burns clearer than Candles of other Manufacturers.

PURE OLIVE OIL. PURE ALTAR WINE.

Candles ordered now payable after Candlemas, 1889. Being the first to largely introduce all grades and qualities of Candles for Altar use on the Pacific Coast, I feel I have some claims on the patronage of purchasers. My Patent Wax Candle I have introduced for the services of the Every Hours Devotion. Before ordering from others I would be pleased to have you call and examine my stock and get prices. It will promise to sell all grades of candles from 3 to 10 per cent. cheaper than other manufacturers. My Candles and Olive Oil are honored on all the Altars on the Pacific Coast, and are endorsed by His Grace Most Rev. Archbishop Riordan, Most Rev. Archbishop Gross, Rt. Rev. Bishop Moore, Rt. Rev. Bishop Manogue, Very Rev. N. Congiati, S. J., all the Reverend Clergy, Presidents and Superiors of Colleges and Convents.

The following letter lately received from Rev. J. A. McLaughlin, C. SS. R., is self-explanatory:

"Tom Candles, Pure Wax: I must state that the best I have seen used anywhere. They were used in all the Missions given by me and my companions in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and Oregon City, and also in the Dioceses of Los Angeles and Monterey, and give entire satisfaction not only to us but also to the other clergy. Their burning qualities cannot be excelled if even equaled by candles of any other make which I have seen used. I am, Yours Respectfully,

J. A. McLAUGHLIN, C.SS.R.

St. Alphonsus Church, St. Louis, Mo.

This is only one of many similar letters received from the Reverend Clergy on this Coast. Continuing a continuance of your valued orders, I am, very sincerely,

JOHN A. LENNON

WHOLESALE GROCER AND IMPORTER,

315 and 317 Clay St., San Francisco, Cal.

SIXTH YEAR.

With a remarkably beautiful Frontispiece in Gold and Colors

PRICE, free by mail, 25 CENTS.

Per dozen, $2.00; per dozen, by mail, $2.35.

THE BEST WRITERS!

FINE ILLUSTRATIONS!

The Best Family Reading for Winter Nights.

The New Sunday School Companion.

Containing the Catechism, Devotions and Prayers for Church, School, and Home Hymns and Simple Music for Mass and other Submissions. Illustrated, Beautifully and profusely Illustrated.

25 Cents.—Per 100, $15.00.

Sold by all Catholic Booksellers and Agents.

BENZIGER BROS.,

Printers to the Holy Apostolic See,

MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS OF—

Vestments and Church Ornaments,

New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago.

A REMOVAL NOTICE.

ROBERTS & KELLY,

Merchant Tailors,

Have Removed from 1021 Market Street, to more elegant quarters,

103 THIRD ST.,

Where they would be pleased to meet their former friends and patrons.

FUJI CO.,

Direct Importers of Japanese Tea

—AND—

Fancy Goods.

A LARGE VARIETY OF HOLIDAY GOODS ON hand. The general of Teas can be had here while at wholesale. Prices Guaranteed.

120 FIFTH STREET.

COUGH KILLER

I will mail bottles of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of WILD CHERRY COUGH KILLER free with Awards of Merit, Prices Reasonable. T. W. Robertson, Lyttle, Ill.

Druggists, 25c., 50c., and $1.00

MATTHIAS GRAY CO.

206 Post Street,

—General Agents for the Celebrated—

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS!

(THE BEST IN THE WORLD).

Great Galaxy Pianos.

Scranich & Bach Pianos.

C. Koenisch Pianos.

C. D. Pease & Co.'s Pianos.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,

606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

Telephone No. 747.

A VIATE TO SEE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Rooms, Farm Ranch, Tomatoes, Dairy, Barnyard Ranch, Gardener, Gardener, and Market Garden, for partials business and machine. Also, good vehicle if desire Help, without set change in employment. Partials giving cross no notice at 608 Clay street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DANIEL SHEERIN,

STONE AND MARBLE YARD,

Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts.,

JUST RECEIVED

A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops.

All kinds of Monuments and Grafite Work done to short notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

McKENNA & PURCELL,

Hay, Grain and Commission

MERCHANTS,

Consignments Solicited,

Shipping Orders a Specialty.

214 DRUMM ST., S. F.

B. BRADLEY,

Painting, Whitening,

AND PAPER HANGING,

923 Mission Street, 923

Telephone No. 3064

CHAS. GUILLET,

French Confectioner,

905 LARKIN STREET,

San Francisco

RUE CREAM PARLORS.

Wedding and Surprise Parties supplied at short notice and reasonable terms.

Telephone No. 3208.

224 Stockton St

SAN FRANCISCO

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

PIANOS

GAINED 1st PREMIUM for general excellence, Mechanical Perfection, Durability, Beauty of Design, Elegance of Finish, Purity of Tone, Quality of Action, Power, Sweetness, Evenness of Tone, Capacity to Stand in Tune, Adaptability to Climate, Prices, Terms, etc., at the Mechanics' Institute Fairs, 1875, 1877, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, and Highest Medal, Paris, 1878, over all competitors, including Steinway, Chickering, Mason & Hamlin, Decker Bros., Knabe, Steinway, Gilbert, Hazelton, Weber, Stuyvesant, Emerson, Ivers & Pond, Sohmer, Hallet & Davis, Chickering & Sons, Wheelock

OUR MONTANA LETTER.

Early Explorers and Catholic Missionaries.—Adventures of an Bonanzite Irish Baronet.—His Strange Sojourn Among Indians.—Early Gold Seekers in Montana's Auriferous Regions, etc., etc.

[FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.]

HELENA, MONTANA, Dec. 21, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

DEAR SIR:—Dakota Montana, the products of whose mines in 1887, added over $30,000,000 to the nation's wealth, and which produced, over 1888, is estimated at some $200,000,000, possesses other "mines" in a bizarre sense, in her Indian and other legends, which, with your permission, I'll try "to pan out" and lay before your readers. History has nothing more brilliant or lurid on her pages than the sufferings and privations endured by the Jesuit missionaries and explorers, while endeavoring to Christianize and civilize the Indians of the Great West. The earliest exploration of Montana, west of the Main range of the Rocky Mountains, must be credited to the Spaniards; while that of the region east of the "range" must be given to the French. Verendrye was dispatched by order of the French Government to travel as far as he could, west, and take up all the country over which he travelled in the name of France. On New Year's day, 1743, he was with his party at "The Gate of the Mountains," some twelve miles distant from this new $-working city of Helena, but little did the adventurous Frenchman then dream of the wealth of "gold dust" and "nuggets" that lay within a dozen miles of the camp, right here in Last Chance Gulch. On the top of one of the peaks of the Rockies, Verendrye planted a wooden plate of the arms of France, and raised a mound of stones upon which the Jesuit, Pere Coquard, planted the "Cross." Coquard was one of the leading spirits or Verendrye's various expeditions, and had the honor of being the first Christian minister—the 6 of Catholic Priest, who ever set foot upon Montana's soil. The Jesuit Coquard consulted the present Jesuit rector of Helena, inasmuch as he was an able writer, a writer not given to flattery or servility to his superiors. From his writings, Clarke and others obtain so many stories of discovery. Further Verendrye reported to the French government the existence of gold in Montana. For some decades after Verendrye's and Coquard's exploits—as of 1730-1744, the country was practically abandoned. Father Coquard was as assistant and priest friend of Verendrye's.

BRILLIANT ROMANCE PAID THE JESUITS.

Poor unfortunate Verendrye shared the fate of that greatest of all explorers of discovery, Columbus. Neglected by the Government he had served so well and faithfully served, he died broken hearted. Over sixty years also the French explorers discovered the Rocky Mountains, Congress that sent Lewis and Clarke's expedition; but none of the explorers or missionaries left such epitaphs upon the Rocky Mountain regions as Pere Coquard or Coquillard, the Illustrious Jesuit. It poor readers and theologians will pardon the rather obvious comparison, I'll for a moment only, compare, for the sake of illustration, the Catholic Church to the Federal Army during the late Civil War. The Jesuits in such comparison form Sheridan's invisible, immortal Cavalry. Let your readers place the other great religious Orders in any brigade or division of such army as they wish. Of course, to dispel the moment's spell, call the "Federal Army," wherever you wander upon this earth you will find "Holy Mother Church," wherever you wander through the pages of History you of pioneer work for religion, and, as Bancroft says, "the glory of the Church of all ages and climes, the rise to before the mind's eye surrounded with a strange and solemn majesty that fills the soul with reverence and awe."

AN SCOTTISH IRISH BARONET—HIS MONTANA CAREER.

One of the most wonderful expeditions to the Rocky Mountains, undertaken by private or individual enterprise, was that of Sir George Gore—who "rustled" in Montana from 1864 to 1869. Like most modern "Crusaders for Rescuers," Sir George was a trifle eccentric in his character and remarkable in his habits. Born in the West of Ireland, wealthy, owning large estates there, he determined to see the Great Republic where so many of his countrymen had found a refuge from poverty, starvation, persecution, and oppression. He represented British government; which in the dark years of the famine and cholera in 1847-8, there those cross when they asked for loaves of bread. The London Times, on your readers are aware, could not then refrain from a shriek of hellish joy when it said, "the Celts are going with a vengeance." The descendants of those men are over able to help Parnell to his fight with that murderous organ which endeavors to prove him an assassin.

But to return to my story as I have been led by an old Montanian about Sir George. He was one of the most popular men that ever wandered over these mountains, range, or through the canyons of this magnificent Territory, owing to his genial, good nature, business ability, and rare great liberality. He treated the Indians as brothers, and to this day his memory is held green in many a poor Indian's wigwam, in mixture of fun, cordiality, love of the chase and adventure, for miles and miles of the Upper Georgs Creek the Yellowstone his outfit consisted of a half hundred men, one hundred and fifty of the best horses he could buy in St. Louis for the use of his men—three horses to a man. Four pack-trains wagons and carts, and a score of good dogs. The party shared the wild delights of the chase (perhaps the brothers) half of the game, were abundant in those days. Sir George found a feast for the body in the wild excitement of the chase, and for the mind he made an interesting study of the Indians, learning of hunters, traders, and adventurers of all sorts who then rendezvoused in Montana. Turning up the Yellowstone some eight miles above the mouth of Tongue River, he built "Fort Gore," where he wintered with his retinue. The gradual and peaceful dawn could not be darkened by either his brown, stern, men or himself. He was away from the hamlets of men, indifferent to the issues then pending in the Crimean struggle between the "Russian bear" on the one hand, the English Lion, the French Cock, the "sick man" of the Ottoman, and the Sacrificial on the other hand. On the Tongue river on Indian camed Uccki dist. Sir George had his buried with all the honors possible. Five hundred pounds of ammunition were fired over his grave, Gore reading the prayers of the Catholic Church for the dead over the corpse, and dropping a few tears that were doubtless favorably noted down by the Recording Angel.

GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE AND GORE'S RESCUE.

Rumors of the immense horde of bison which surrounded "Fort Gore" in 1865-6, and of their destruction by orders from the Indian Office at Washington, reached the ears of the Government. Sister Government to stop Gore's wholesale slaughter in that paradise of the buffalo. A good as any of the men of Gore's expedition was hockey wealthy settlers in Montana, and are as proud of their wonderful hunt, for those old Hunters can draw the long bow in tallies; years and years have and Sir George, as were the fellows of Alexander the Great or the Great Napoleon—the Immortal Corsican. Sir George on hearing of the Tongue river constructed some out boats, and sending his wagons and the largest portion of his command to Fort Union by land, like rather Irishmen, took the remaining portion, was the first man who ever descended this Yellowstone in boats. Arriving safely at Fort Union, he contracted with the agent of the American Fur Company to build two large boats with which to descend the Missouri river, the company's agent, Major Culbertson, agreeing to take his stock, wagons, etc., at a certain figure. When the boats were finished, a circumdestanding arose as to the terms of the bargain, and he insisted that, in his contract with the man, the company agreed to transport, free, owing to his generosities. He seemed to have been a hot, fiery, passionate "Irish," only in his fire for the result; he would not stand the double dealing of the Fur Company. He, therefore, burned his wagons and all the supplies not needed, in front of Fort Union, guarding over the ashes of his wagons and supplies, and the ashes of the lines of his wagons which escaped the flames, that night he threw them into the deep, not part of the Missouri river, where "Bruce" only could reach them. Before disbanding his company he made a present to each man in his command—in addition to the wages agreed upon—of a good horse and a considerable "chance." The remainder of his bonus and cash he gave to the Indians and Half-breeds," poor, Poll-tax-ers for a future been a sum more of the dodge and eccentricities of the generous Connaught man, whose name is to this day cherished in Montana. I believe the gallant Sheridan, Colonel Miller, at present resident in his estate in St. John's Hospital, suffering from acute rheumatism, was one of Gore's command. Colonel Miller's wanderings in Montana and elsewhere would fill several large interesting volumes. Next year I will perhaps be able to chronicle some of them, as I intend to interview the fat, corpulent Colonel (weighing only some three hundred pounds) at his residence.

GOLD DISCOVERED IN MONTANA.

Verendrye reported to the French Government as far back as 1730, the mineral riches of this Rocky Mountain region. From an account published in the Helena Herald some years ago, it seems that an old mountaineer, whom very name is not now remembered or known, brought to Mary Culbertson, then in charge of the Fur Company's post near the present town of Fort Benton, a sack of "pulse" which he had to offered for $1,000 agreeing to take it all out in supplies. This was in 1850, about the same time as Gore and Culbertson had their adventure-standing. The mountaineer was very silent as to the locality where he found that gold, merely stating in answer to all questions put to him, that he had been prospecting for some time, that he was alone when he found that gold, and he found "bushels" of gold. The agent thought it worth while to send a trusty man, who was an intelligent Irish employe of the fort, a man named O'Ray, came to the rescue at this period—and Culbertson even him to exchange for the "sack of dust," a supply of horses, arms, ammunition, clothing, provisions and mine supplies. The following year the agent sent the gold he got for those supplies to the mint and received for it over $1,000. Then four years before "Gold Tom" in 1860, placed his rough pine and log mine shine here, hewed out with an axe, on Gold Creek, near Pioneer, in Deer Lodge County, the gold of Montana had reached the United States Mint.

YOURS TRULY.

ONE OF THE MEN'S.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

Antrim.

The Lurgilbill Branch of the I. N. L. held a meeting on Sunday, November 25th, Rev. Father Burke P. P., in the chair. After the business was transacted, the Rev. chairman addressed the meeting on the question of the coming Winter, and pointed out what each member present, what was his ability of meeting his rent as compared with last year, when they all said it was harder to meet their rents this year, for though prices were a little better than last year, yet crops were far from as large, and no matter what price an article sold, also in the market when you had to sell, the amount, it brought you so many $'s—the thanks having been passed to the chairman, the meeting separated.

Armagh.

The new Catholic Hall at Dungannon was formally opened on Sunday, November 25th, by the Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian, Bishop of Down and Connor, assisted by Rev. J. P. Hayes, V. G., Dungannon; Rev. H. Donnelly, C. C., Donaghmore; Rev. P. Donnelly, C. C., Dungannon; Rev. J. P. Murtagh, C.C., do.; Rev. J. McCaffrey, P.P., Donaghmore; Rev. S. Sheehy, P. P., Pomeroy; Rev. Peter McNally, Lecturer, C. C., Ballygawley; Rev. Peter Mullhaw, C. C., Coalisland; Rev. Felix McNamee, C. C., Donaghmore; Rev. Dr. Mooney, C. C., Moy; Rev. Felix McNally, C. C., Pomeroy; and a large number of the general public. The architectural address was delivered by Rev. P. Donnelly, C. C., Donaghmore, who took for his subject "patriotism."

Cavan.

The beautiful new church which Father Boylan rebuilt at Crossdoughan, was dedicated by the Bishop of Kilmore on Sunday. A large number of clergy were present and took part in the ceremonies. The church was crowded to overflowing. Father Boylan, through whose exertions the new edifice owes its origin, The lands for the church, the collection began by Father Boylan, and they were supplemented by a bazaar held in Cavan in the Spring by the Rev. Peter Brady, who, with his curates, Rev. P. Brady, from Albany, was present at the ceremonies.

Cork.

The following which started letter has been received by Father Kennedy from Mr. O'Brien:

MOUNTJOY PRISON, DUBLIN,
November 24, 1888.

MY DEAR FATHER KENNEDY—I cannot say how how my heart was wrung to hear of the sorrowful news that has been inflicted upon you well and your hands sore in Mealin. I hope to God and the Blessed Virgin that my son in the House of Commons of telling the story of the proceedings in Mitchelstown will have inflicted upon you I believe there was a severe relapse (pay of self-sacrificing priest Fitzgerald. Yours ever,

WILLIAM O'BRIEN.

Rev. M. D. Kennedy, C. C., Mealin.

Donegal.

The long-standing dispute between the Mayors of Carrigaline and his Gentlemen tenantry has at last been settled. About twelve months ago the tenants demanded a reasonable reduction in their rents, which the landlord refused to grant, on the plea of expenses. Matters remained at a standstill, 26, the newly appointed agent, Mr. Hammond, arrived on the scene, and at once set to work to settle the dispute, which he did in a few days, and the tenants at once paid the rent, and allowed the reduction, which amounts to about 25 per cent.

Derry.

The new Temperance Hall in Derry was opened on Sunday, 25th November, with considerable ceremony, including an inaugural address by the Most Rev. Dr. O'Donnell, Bishop of Raphoe. There was a large gathering of the clergy of all ranks. The proceedings commenced with the performance by St. Colomb's brass and reed band of a grand "Te Deum." Mass was specially sung for the occasion by the Rev. P. McLaughlin, the late Father Bittel, Rev. Hugh McMenamin presided.

Dublin.

The commemoration of the twenty-first anniversary of the execution of the Manchester martyrs took place on Sunday, November 25, at Glasnevin Cemetery. It will have been noted that similar celebrations at Waterford, New Ross and Kilmacow have been prohibited by Dublin Castle. There was an attempt, it is believed, to interfere with the Dublin demonstration. On the cemetery, a guard of honor of police detailed from all the tributes, under the orders of Superintendents Mackie, Lardey and Toole, with a force of mounted police under Inspector Cotter, the National Movement could have to close. The National Movement could have to close. The Dublin Brigade Committee, however, had taken the precaution of having their rules and rules and beautiful monuments over a large number of graves in Dublin in a fitting and beautiful manner, and the Committee, in the interest of the relaxation to popular favor.

Waterford.

The movement for the promotion of the social Science Congress, and the year of Waterford selected by the good Sisters of Charity, is already in full swing. The Sisters of Charity, who have in the Convent on Thursday, Nov. 29th, and unfully representative of the feelings of the Waterford people on this subject. The Rev. Father Egan, Chaplain to the Convent, was in the chair. The following clergy were present: The Most Rev. Dr. Power, Lord Bishop of the Diocese; Very Rev. Canon Fleming, P.P., Dungarvan; Rev. Father Walsh, St. John's College; Rev. Father Quinlan; The Rev. Mother Superior; Rev. Mother; Mrs. Phelan, Mrs. Farrell, Miss Hynes, Miss Carroll, Miss Walsh, Miss Ryan, Miss Caddell, Miss Power, Misses Ryan, Miss O'Reilly, Misses Sullivan, and others.

OUR CATHOLIC SOCIETY COLUMN.

Contributions for this Department solicited from Secretaries of Societies. Notices of meetings, reports of entertainments must reach us not later than Tuesday of each week.

YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE.

No. 59 will visit No. 55 two weeks from to-night.

—Grand President Fleming visited No. 71 and 84 at their meetings last week.

—No. 41 of Virginia City is making arrangements for a grand benefit entertainment.

—At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Institute, Mr. W. Wyn Wyn was re-elected President and Mr. Patterson, Secretary.

—Grand Lecturer H. Dimery visited No. 3 South San Francisco, on the first Monday in January. He will visit No. 1 in Jackson's Hall.

—Since the meeting, we have had little news to ambulance during this month, and many members are expected to be amongst us shortly, when the show being kept open in the evenings.

—The sight of tickets in number 1 Institute, of an individuals has proved by the fine list of tickets in the hands of the Institute, which it was distributed by Bro. having no tickets—a tickets on a handsome gold watch, which will be given away.

—Mr. F. J. Alcock, District Deputy V. M. I. of Sacramento, visited No. 1 last Monday night. Lecturer, organized as Institute at Astoria, on Tuesday was. The following officers were elected to serve until next June: James Kennedy, President; Wm. Scally, 1st vice-president; H. Kelly, 2d vice-president; J. Ryan, Treasurer; J. Ryan, Recording Secretary; Bart. Wall, treasurer; Jos. Ryan, Financial Secretary; Jas. McGinnis, Patrick Kearney, Alex Ross, Henry Leisenwebber, sentinels.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

—The next regular meeting of Y. L. I. No. 9, will be held Tuesday Eve., Jan. 8th 1889.

—Y. L. I. No. 1 will hold a social Tuesday, Jan. 8th.

—Installation took place in No. 8 last Sunday, Miss Lizzie Lynch, P. G. P. officiating.

—Y. L. I. No. 1 held a very pleasant meeting on Wednesday evening. Installation ceremonies were performed by the Grand President, Miss Fisher, officiating. As a token of respect and a reward for services rendered, Miss Fisher was unanimously re-elected, and Miss Mary Gibbons, the Vice President, was presented with a handsome gold and ladies necklace, by the ladies of No. 1.

—At the meeting of the Y. L. I. No. 3, held on Tuesday, Nov. 27th, the following officers were installed by the Grand President, Miss Carrie Gallagher: Vice, Miss Annie Dale 1st V. P., Miss Lizzie Mae; 2nd V. P., Miss Sarah Ryan; Rec. Sec., Miss Kate Cronin; Fin. Sec., Miss Mary Lennon; Treasurer, Mrs. C. A. McFadden; Marshal, Miss Maggie Bateman; Board of Trustees—Misses Kate Meehan, Agnes Cronin, Mary Gallagher, Annie Dale, Mrs. Carrie Gallagher, Sarah Sen., Miss Kate Meehan Orinda Sen., Miss Mary Cronin.

CATHOLIC LADIES' AID SOCIETY.

The members of the above society gave a very successful entertainment at St. Cecilia's Hall last Wednesday evening. The hall was crowded to overflowing with very interesting and beautiful holiday wreaths, berries and evergreen. A very interesting and amusing programme was made by Vice Pres. J. J. Prendergast, V. G. The Rev. Father was followed by the words of welcome, congratulations and commendation to her sister workers from the President, Miss Mahoney, on behalf of the Society. The following programme was then given: Piano, Miss Burns and Dalgleit; Song, Joe Meeks; Harp Selections, Master F. Pulcher; Piano, Miss Lizzie Dalgleit; Recitation, Miss Crawford; Recitation, Master Morris; Piano, Miss Lizzie Dalgleit; Recitation, Miss Frances Dougherty; Vocal Duet, Miss Mc Cormick and Miss Meehan; Song, Joe Fish; Harp Selections, Master Pulcher. Refreshments were served at the conclusion of the well rendered programme, and the entertainment concluded with dancing. The young ladies of the Committee of Arrangements were—Misses Mahoney, Dougherty, Burns, Cronin, Ley, Gallagher, and all the arrangements were most complete. The Misses Sullivan had a large stock in charge. The Misses Sullivan have, warranted juice which they sell for Fair, Fairs, Picnics, Parties, Weddings, Families, etc. Address Sullivan Bros., Oakland.

—John J. Clark, Architect, 6 Billy St., room 5, corner of Dolphin; San Francisco, Cal. Plans and specifications for all kinds of buildings, a specialty. Estimates free.

—R. S. LITTLE, Oakland, 1th Street, Bernard office and warehouse of Alameda, Cal.

—I receive twice a month a lot of imported cremonts. Suits to order from trimmings and workmanship $20. Remember parties half price. Cleaning $1 a week; 2 suits to order. He sells for $20. Cleaning and repairing. 1108 Market street, opposite Odd Fellows Building.

MARRIED.

BATTE—BRADLEY—In this city, on the 14th inst., by Rev. Father Barrett, Mr. Joseph Batte to Miss Ellen Bradley.

BOYLE—KELLY—In this city, December 16, by Rev. Father Crowley, Hugh Boyle to Miss Mary Kelly.

DIED.

BURKLEY—In this city, December 14, Patrick Burkley, native of Ballyhaly, county Limerick, Ireland, aged 70 years.

MARTIN—In Oakland, December 15, Maggie A., beloved wife of Thomas Martin, and sister of Mrs. Mary Ann Ryan, a native of Ireland, aged 47 years and 10 days.

MCCARTHY—In this city, December 15, Dennis, son of Michael Dennis and Mary McCarthy, aged 1 year, 1 month and 15 days.

MCCARTHY—In this city, December 16, Thomas J., beloved husband of Bridget McCarthy, a native of Ireland, aged 40 years.

MCGOVERN—In this city, December 15, Bridget, beloved wife of Patrick McGovern, a native of County Cavan, Ireland, aged 50 years.

MCNAMARA—In this city, December 17, Bridget, beloved wife of Michael McNamara, a native of County Clare, Ireland, aged 50 years.

MOYNAHAN—In this city, December 17, Patrick Moynahan, a native of County Cork, Ireland, aged 70 years.

WHITE—In this city, December 16, William Henry, beloved son of Mary and the late Thomas White, aged 21 years.

MCNAMARA—In this city, December 17, Peter Joseph, beloved son of Michael and Bridget McNamara, a native of Dublin, Ireland, aged 30 years and 1 month.

BRENNAN—In this city, December 16, Michael, beloved husband of Annie and John C. Brennan and Mrs. J. Lynch, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

MCNAMARA—In this city, December 15, Thomas, beloved son of Ann and Mary Dolan, a native of Ireland, aged 21 years.

MCCARTHY—In this city, December 17, Maggie E. McCarthy, a native of San Francisco, aged 17 years and 4 months.

—Telephone 3184.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF
JAMES McGINN,
FUNERAL DIRECTOR
AND EMBALMER,
Continues under the management of
EUGENE McGINN,
39 Eddy Street.
Telephone 3184.

CUMMINGS & WARD,
UNDERTAKERS,
28 South Second Street,
SAN JOSE, CAL.
Orders promptly filled either Day or Night
Embalming a Specialty.

RADWAY'S
READY RELIEF.
It is a cure for every pain, Toothache, Headache, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Backache, Pleurisy, Swelling of the Joints, Cramps, Spasms, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Colds, Chills, Fever and Ague, Diarrhoea, Colic, Flatulence, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Vomiting, Nausea, Heartburn, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Hysteria, Headache, Toothache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Backache, Kidney Pains, Inflammation, Weakness, Pain in the Chest, Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys, Bladder, Lungs, Throat, Sore Throat, Difficult Breathing, Consumption, Cold in the Head and Lung Troubles.
Sold by all Druggists for 50 Cents.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome St. San Francisco.

FULL WEIGHT PURE
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE

PURE ALTAR WINE
OUR SPECIALTY.
Fine Table Wines
From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyards.
Arnold, Hawkesby & Co.

Fresh Garden Seeds
Fresh Flowering Seeds
Fresh Vegetable Seeds
Fresh Flower Seeds
Fresh Seeds
Fresh Seeds
Fresh

Poetry

"IF ONLY."

Amid a busy multitude I rate,
A busy multitude around me throneing,
And yet I was alone and desolate,
The victim of one vain, resistless longing.
My heart sighing and sick and sad and lonely,
And ever seemed to say "Alas! if only."

A passing friend in kindly pity said,
"Fold not, companion, to this strange darkness that
Its night as well have spoken to the dead,
As the listen of that low refrain.
My heart sighs as fast and sad lonely,
And ever seemed to say "Alas! if only."

A brother propped me lovingly by the hand:
"The world around," he said, "is clothed with light Take comfort." Ah! he could not understand
How unshaking the secret of my sadness
My heart within me felt so dark and lonely,
And ever seemed to say "Alas! if only."

A sister wakened me with a thoughtful eye,
And happiness impressed almost to awaken
Remind that touch of gentle sympathy,
I almost felt that I was not forsaken.
And yet my heart within fell and lonely,
And ever still it said "Alas! if only."

A mother's glance, oh! such a holy glance,
Looked down through years upon my desolation
As, as I met it, I felt my heart entrance
The spell of that unbroken love, I felt
Of a true then my heart felt and and lonely,
And ever seemed to say "Alas! if only."

And still amid that crowd I sate and sighed
Alone, though loving friends around were thronging;
For as I thought on those, my own lost bride,
Still I one sound that ever seemed long to
My heart still seemed lonely "Alas! if only Then was home, I were not lonely."

Irish Metropolitan Magazine.

WHAT IS HEAVEN!

"What is Heaven?" I asked a little child,
"All joy" and in her innocence she smiled.

I asked the aged, with her cares oppressed
"All suffering o'er, oh! Heaven at last, is rest."

I asked a maiden, meek and tender-eyed,
"It must be love!" she modestly replied.

I asked the artist, who adored his art,
"Heaven is all beauty!" spoke his raptured heart.

I asked the poet, with his soul afire,
"The glory—glory!" and he struck his lyre.

I asked the Christian, waiting her release,
"A home! her, love she murmured, "Peace."

So all sung truth with hopeful eyes above,
"The beauty, glory, joy, rest, peace and love!"

Literary Miscellany.

The Denver Express.

A STORY OF WILD LIFE IN THE WEST

CHAPTER III.

Sinclair found his wife very thoughtful when he came home, and he listened with much interest to her story

"Poor girl," said he, "Foster is the man to help her. I wonder where he is I must inquire about him."

The next day they proceeded on their way to San Francisco, and matters drifted on at Barker's much as before. Johnson had, after an absence of some months, come back, and lived without molestation amid the shifting population. New and then, too, the elder residents fancied they recognized another unknown face among those of some of his former "crowd" about the "Bonshanse's House," as his gaudy saloon was called.

On the very evening on which the story of Denver Express opens, Jim Watkins, the famous, Jim Watkins, agent and stagegrabber at Barker's, was sitting in his little office, communicating with the station room by the broken window. It was a cool, silent, efficient man, and not much given to talking about such episodes in his past life as the "wiping out" by Indians of the emigrant party to which he belonged, and his own rescue by the scouts. He was smoking an old and favorite pipe, and taking with one of the "boys" whose duty it peared at the wicket. On a seat in the station sat a woman in a black dress and veil apparently waiting for a train. The woman suddenly rose and ran to the window

"Mr. Watkins," cried she, "can I see you for a few moments where no one can interrupt me? It is a matter of life and death." She stabbed the sill with her thin hands, and her voice trembled. Watkins recognized Sally Johnson in a moment. He unbolted a door, motioned her to enter, closed and again bolted it, and also closed the inlet-window. Then he pointed to a chair, and the girl sat down and leaned eagerly forward.

"If they knew I was here," she said, in a hoarse whisper, "my life wouldn't be safe five minutes. I am waiting to tell you a terrible story, and then I board who was in the train does have to-morrow night. Mr. Watkins, don't, for God's sake, ask me how I found out, but I hope to die if I don't tell my you the living truth. They're going to-morrow night to rob Number Seventeen—the Dead Man's Crossing, fifteen miles east, and rob the passengers and the express car. It's the worst gang in the country—Parry's. They're going to throw the train off the track, the passengers will be maimed and killed, and Mr. Sinclair and his wife are on the train. Oh, Mr. Watkins, send them warning!"

She stood upright, her fine doubly pale, her hands clasped. Watkins walked deliberately to the railroad map which hung on the wall and measured with a pen. Then he resumed his seat, laid his pipe down, fixed his eyes on the girl's face, and began to question her. At the same time he signaled his friend, with which he had held the pipe, forward in way to the telegraph key. Soon but an expert could have distinguished any change in the clicking of the instrument, which had been almost incessant; but Watkins had "called" the head office on the Missouri. In ten minutes the "sounder" rattled out, "All right. What is it?"

Watkins went on with his questions, his eyes still fixed on the poor girl's face, and all the time his finger, as it were, playing with the key. If he were impenetrable, so was not a man sitting at a receiving office nearly five hundred miles away. He had "taken" but a few words when he jumped from his chair and cried

"Shut that door, and call the superintendent, and be quick! Charley, brace up, my—and mount and write this out." With his wonderful electric pen, the handle nerved hundreds of miles long, Watkins, unknown to his interlocutor, was printing in the Morse alphabet this startling message:

"Information received. Every gang going to throw Number Seventeen off track near sixth mile post, this division, about nine to morrow (Thursday) night. Kill passengers and rob express and mail. Am alone here No chance to rearly every, but believe it to be on square. Better make arrangements from your end to block game. No sheriff here now. Answer."

The superintendent, responding to the hasty summons, heard the message before the clerk had time to write it out. His tips were domely compressed as he put his own hand on the key, and sent these laconic sentences "!!! K Keep perfectly dark. Will manage from Julesburg."

Watkins, at Barker's, room from his seat, opened the door a little way, saw that the station was empty, and said to the girl, frankly but kindly

"Sally, you've done the square thing, and saved that train. I'll take care that you don't suffer, and that you get well paid. Now, come home with me, and my wife will look out for you."

"Oh, no," cried the girl, shrinking back, "I must run away. You're mighty kind, but I daren't go with you. Detecting a shade of doubt in his eyes, she added: "Don't be afraid. I'll die before they'll know I've given them away to you," and she disappeared in the darkness.

At the other end of the wire the squeaker sounded and spoke impatiently. Watkins operator and clerk, ordered his fast mare harnessed, and gave to his operator the

"Read that," said he to his secretary. "It was about time for some one to do this kind, and now I'm going to let Uncle Sam (the United States) take care of that man train. If I don't get to the reservation before the general's turned in, I shall have to wake up. Wait for me, please." The gray mare made the six miles to the military reservation in just half an hour. The general was smoking his last cigar, and was alert in an instant, and before the superintendent had finished the jotum of "hot Hollands" hospitably tendered, the orders had gone by wire to the commanding officer at Fort ——, some distance east of Barker's, and troops were on their way.

Returning to the station he remarked to the waiting secretary

"The general's all right. Of course we don't tell that train a word, but if those Parry bounds meets business, they'll get all the fight they want, and if they're good souls, which I doubt, may the Lord have mercy on them."

He prepared several despatches, two of which were as follows

Mr. Brown, Superintendent, N. Y., Pacific Junction

This telegram you authority to take charge of train on which you are, and to direct the military officials will train man orders. Please show, and act in accordance with information wired station agent at Pawnee Junction.

To the station agent

Expected Parry gang will try wreck and rob express car and mail near sixth post, this Division, about nine Thursday night. Troops will swing out from Fort ——, and be ordered ready for them. Keep everything secret and act in accordance with orders of Mr. Sinclair.

"It's worth ten thousand dollars," sentimentally remarked he, "that Sinclair and that train. He's got both hand and brains, and pluck, and he won't be bad and slept the sleep of the just

CHAPTER IV

The sun never shines more brightly, and the air was never more clear and bracing than when Sinclair helped his wife off the train at Pawnee Junction. The station-master's face fell as he saw the lady, but he saluted the engineer with as sassy an air he would assume, and wished for an opportunity to see him alone. Sinclair read the despatches with an unmoved countenance, and after a few minutes' reflection simply said, "All right. Be sure to keep the matter perfectly quiet." At breakfast he was distrait, so much so that his wife asked him what was the matter. Taking her aside he at once showed her the telegram.

"You see my duty," he said, "my only thought is about you, my dear. Will you stay here?"

She simply replied, looking into his face without a moment's

"My place is with you. Then the conductor called "All aboard, and the train once more started

Sinclair asked Foster to join him in the smoking compartment, and tell him the promised story, which the latter did. His father was at Barker's, he frankly and gratefully said, had been the turning point in his life. It had taught him to keep from gambling and drinking, had found honest employment, and was doing well.

"I'm two-thirds paid off, sir, and I'll be quite out of debt in a year. As Kansas's a little, I'll want to head that over just that I left behind at Barker's. She was engaged to marry me, and when I came to think of it, and to see how I'd been drinking and raising the heart, till now, to look for her but, seeing I'm on the right track, I'm going to find her, and get her to come with me. I'm a steady man now, sir, and I can't bear fault, and I aren't going to marry her."

Foster, quietly asked Sinclair, "do you know the Parry gang?"

The man's face darkened.

"I know them well, sir. I know them much too well. Parry is as ungodly a cutthroat as ever killed an emigrant in cold blood, and has got in his gang nearly all those hounds that tried to hang me. Why do you ask, major?"

Sinclair handed him the despatches "You see the only man on the train I whom I have shown them," said he.

"I am going to put the responsibility on your shoulders. I have no doubt that if we are attacked the soldiers would dispose of the gang, but I think it only prudent for the safety of the passengers. We must not alarm them. They can be made to think that the troops are going on a scout, and only a certain number of muskets may need be told of what we expect. Can you, this afternoon, go through the cars and pick them out? I will then put you in charge of the passenger car, and you can post your men on the roofs, ready to act in case of need. My place will be ahead.

"Major, you can depend upon me," was Foster's reply "I'll go through the train, and have my eye on some boys of the right sort, and that's gal that shooting irons with them."

Through the hours of that day on rolled the train, still over the crisp bells's grass, across the well-worn buffalo trails, past the prairie dog villages. Meanwhile there had been set in motion a measure of that power to which appeal is so reluctantly made in times of peace. At Fort —— a lonely post on the plains, the orders had that morning been issued for twenty men, under lieutenant Blainey, to parade at dusk, with carbines, two days rations and ball cartridge, also for Assistant Surgeon Kalter to report for duty with the group. Orders sent to destination were communicated direct to the lieutenant from the post commander, and on the morrow the troopers moved, taking the road to the station.

"That's the way the lieutenant looked, boys," he said, "when he was laying for them Apaches that raided Lonas ranch, and killed the women and little children.

In a short time the officer looked at his watch, formed his men and directed them to take their places on the seats of the car, and they had hardly done so when the whistle of the approaching train was heard. When it came up the conductor, who had his instructions from Sinclair, had the engine detached and backed on the siding for the soldiers' use, which thus came between the and the forward baggage car when the train was again made up. As arranged, it was announced that the troops were to be taken a certain distance to open a scouting party, and the curiosity of the passengers was but slightly roused. The officers sat quietly in their seats, their repeating rifles held between their knees, and the officer in front. Sinclair joined the latter and had a few words with him as the train moved on. A little later, when the stars were shining brightly overhead, they passed into the express car, and saw Foster, the conductor and other train-men, and for Foster in a few words, Sinclair explained the position of affairs. His statement was received with perfect confidence, and the men only asked what they were to do.

Conductor, give the train men the rifles from the baggage car, and let them act under Mr. Foster, said Sinclair "Now, boys, I am sure you will do your duty That is all."

From the next door the Sioux telegraph

Fiat Justitia Ruat Cœlum

Leaders of the Monitor may be enough to know the meaning of the Latin adage which we place at the head Justice. And for the information of people who may not know that it is

THE BUSINESS M

SBARBORO & C

Umbrella in every Lion Option of FAMILY

GROCERIE

And the translation of it is

"Let Justice be D
though Heave
Should Fall,"

Acting on this Sound Princi

SBARBORO & C

At their old established stand

531 Washington

(Between Montgomery and Sansome

TWENTY SIX YEARS

the principle of giving to each of the

Thousands of Custo

JUSTICE IN WEIGHT,
JUSTICE IN MEAS
JUSTICE IN QU

In Every Article of

FAMILY GROCER

In this way

SBARBORO & C

Have established a popularity and reputa which is the envy of other houses in the
Have established and adopted that Sim

The Best Grocer
AT THE CHEAPEST P

REMEMBER THE PLA
SBARBORO & C
531 WASHINGTON ST
(Between Montgomery and Sansome

THEY READ THESE PR
And Call and Exam

OUR GOO

20 lbs. Very Light-brown S
16 pounds White Sugar,
20 pounds Table Rice,
10 pounds Tapioca,
25 pounds Sago,
25 pounds Codfish,
14 pounds Prunes,
14 pounds Dried Pears,
10 pounds Green Coffee,
Star Ground Coffee,
Fine Tea, (No Homing)
Fine Jar Tea,
Family Mixed Tea,
Sealed can water-while
Coal Oil,
31 pounds P. White Beans,
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs,
Family Flour, per barrel,

And all other Goods
Cheap.

WINES AND LIQUORS.
Claret, Zinfandel, Port,
Sherry, Port, Madeira,
Hock, Port, Port,
Port Wine, Port,
Port Port, Port,

The Manager of the Monitor

26 YEARS EXPERIE
IN THE
GROCERY BUSIN

In this city, and being an Expert
Large Stocks of Go

GROCERIE
CHEAPER

Than any other house on the

All orders promptly att fully filled and delivered to any part city, Oakland or Alameda free of Country orders solicited and sati fully and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchange

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LI

SPRECKELS & CO.
E. FEARBORO, Manag

THE MONITOR.

OES OF THE FAITH.

Joseph the Model Christian Knight.

before the C. K. of A., by the Rev. M. Fitzgerald, of Co

following are the extracts from the address before the Catholic Knights of America, on the occasion of the anniversary of the establishment of the order in Providence, Rhode Hail the faithful and the prudent whom the Lord hath set over His household, to give them their meat in season! All honor to honest laborers! Blessed are those whom the Lord, when He comes, shall find so doing! Blessed are the active agents in the economy of His Church! Blessed are they who are faithful to the general good of the household!

Active does, noble does, strong behavior, sure to conquer.

If, like St. Joseph, you are the head of a family, endeavor to form your family after the model of the Holy Family. Be chaste, fearless, e her, steady, persevering, lovers of truth, of honor, of honesty. Guard the sanctity of your home. Be generous and tender to mother, wife and sister. Be manly, be sympathetic, be a gentleman. Be sympathetic, like our divine Lord's are always with the poor and the afflicted, and the Bishops of a people who have suffered so much for their faith the first Christians under Nero.

The great duty of the Bishops will be to present what are called "relations," which are detailed statements of the conditions of their respective dioceses. The Sacred Congregation of the propaganda will first address the Holy Father, who will first address the Bishops, who will send his "relation." This "relation" of the "relations" will be a defined table of the condition of the Church in Ireland. The Rome correspondent of the London Times telegraphs that from some accounts widely indicate their needs. He was followed by Mr. John O'Connell, who drew a lively picture of the duty of Loyalty to the Church, and the necessity of vigorous efforts in promoting Catholic interests. Mr. Maguire, M.P., referred to his connection with the Union of Young Men's Societies, and alluded to the Tears Club, of London, as an organization that had exercised a beneficial influence on the clergy and the influence

Farm and Home.

What the Farmers Must Lose by Clinging to Wheat.

The low price of wheat, taken with the poor crop this year, ought to awaken the attention of land owners to the fact that an immediate change is necessary in the growing of wheat.

The days of high prices for wheat are gone by and farmers must be willing to grow wheat at a cent a pound or change to other crops. What these crops shall be we are not prepared to say, nor do we believe they can be told by any one without a series of experiments.

A small piece of land ought to be set aside by farmers and experiments made with a variety of crops. We can do better than grow wheat at a cent a pound, but what crops shall take the place of wheat remains to be proved by trial.

We believe a variety of crops must be grown, for no one plant is equally adapted to the heavy black adobe lands, the rich heavy river bottoms and the red gravelly soil of the foothills.

Our advice is to plant and experiment. The potato, beet, onion, carrot, corn, alfalfa, rye, as well as others. Keep a careful record of the area sown, the cost of tillage and the return from the crops.

Study the question carefully and thoroughly. Don't give up the land and say you can't make it pay. You can much adaptedly grow a crop of one particular piece of land will produce best and give you the largest returns. Nothing is to be lost by study should cease, and the sooner the better for every farmer in the State, as long as that cent remains at its present price.

We have a farm of 160 acres in the old home, inside down fences, poor stolen and medium debt. It produces a very fair living, land hard work, no vacation and a mortgage on the farm at 10 per cent. interest.

Desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and wheat at a cent a pound is as bad an as heartrendingly sincere or a bad case of consumption.

Don't wait a single week, but subscribe for a good agricultural paper and see what has been done somewhere and then make some trials of your own. Try something, try anything, try everything, but don't remain slave to grain prices and poverty by growing wheat at a cent a pound.—Oroville Register.

Valuable Interest Rules.

1 Rule, Commercial year of 360 days, or 30 days per month.

4 per cent.—Multiply the principal by the required number of days, divide by 9 and point off.

5 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 72.

6 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 6, and point off three places from the right.

7 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 6, and point off three places from the right.

8 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 45.

9 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 4, and point off three places from the right.

10 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 36.

12 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 3, and point off three places from the right.

15 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 24.

18 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, divide by 2, and point off three places from the right.

20 per cent.—Multiply by the number of days, and divide by 18.

The interest in each case will be in dollars and cents.

A Remedy Worth Knowing.

A number of persons engaged in fruit-drying and raisin-making complain bitterly of destruction and damage wrought by the insects. Thousands of these little birds come to congregate about some orchards and vineyards and prove quite a nuisance. Some parties find it necessary to stand guard over the ripening grapes daytime in the sun, in order to keep the linnets away. While speaking on this subject to day, a well-known fruit grower suggested a remedy—one that he had tried successfully. He takes a watermelon, of which birds are very fond, cuts it into halves, with smooth surfaces, and then sprinkle strychnine over the surface. It is a good plan to rub the surfaces together, in order to distribute the poison. There is no danger from this remedy providing the dead birds are promptly buried. Our informant killed eighty in less than an hour by this method. The same remedy is suggested in the case of rabbits and other small game that annoy the vineyardist.

Read What You Sign.

The newest swindle on farmers is operated by a man who travels the country claiming to represent a large provision house in one of the leading cities, and to be desirous of learning from farmers their opinion of the crops. The observer produces a note book, questions the agriculturist closely and carefully takes down his answers. The examination completed the inquirer induces the farmer to sign his name to the report to give it due weight and appearance of accuracy. In a few months aforesaid note signed by the farmer turns up in the hands of an innocent purchaser, and he hikes himself merily for his home across the mountains of warrants the farmer is to be careful where he puts his signature.

Late Hours.

There is nothing more unfavorable to female beauty than late hours. Women who spend most of the day in bed, and the night at work or dissipation, have always a pale, wearied countenance, and dark-rimmed, wearied eyes. Too much sleep is almost as baneful as too little, and is sure to blunt the person with a pallid and unwholesome hue. A prompt and economic indulgence in eating and drinking is fatal to the female charms. The appetite should never be wasted during the intervals between meals on pastry, confectionery, or any other trifles of the epicure which gratifies the taste but does not support the system. Exercise is, of course, essential to female beauty.

Successful Farming in Napa Valley.

Thomas Walsh, who lives a short distance from Calistoga, has 175 acres of land, 45 acres of which are used for pasture. Of the 130 acres under cultivation 20 compose a young vineyard set out two years ago, and seized by his two sons—young men who are workers and who have done the lion's share with little if any outside assistance. This year he sold 20 tons of grapes at $20 per ton, or $2,600; 120 tons of hay for $10 per ton, amounting to $1,200; and the value of other produce and stock sold increases the amount of his income the present year to nearly or fully $4,000. This is accomplished by schools very rapidly these days on a 175-acre farm, and should be very satisfactory to Mr. Walsh.—Calistogian.

— Pain itself is not without its alleviations. It may be violent and frequent, but it is seldom both violent and long continued, and its pauses and intermissions bestow positive pleasure. It has the power of shedding a satisfaction over intervals of ease, which few enjoyments exceed.

Family Fun.

"By Gum and Tim."

The City of Cleveland was just casting off the pier when a man in citizen's clothes who appeared to be greatly excited rushed up the gang plank, and shouted to the captain to wait. There or four minutes later it was understood that a desperate character was on board, and that the excited man was his victim. None of us unmanned or seeing "a ragged, desperate-looking chap" some on board, but the man was sure of it, and we began to search. Nobody wanted a robber and desperado aboard, and the search went on with a will. After about ten minutes the man who had rushed aboard uttered shouts of exclamation. He had discovered the arch villain hidden under some furniture on the lower deck, and the mate produced a revolver, and ordered the fellow to come out or take the consequences. "Be prepared—look out for him!" cautioned the excited individual, and three or four more pistols came into view, and others secured bolts and bars.

The desperado came forth. He was a boy of fifteen, ragged, dirty and frightened. He had something wrapped up in a newspaper, but he had no weapon.

"Who's the one who robbed me—there's his pocket!" shouted the victim, and three or four men closed in on the lad.

The package was taken from him and opened.

"We wanted to see bonds or money or jewelry, but instead of that our eyes rested on a half-eaten loaf of bread."

"I haven't anything to eat for two days!" said the boy as he looked from face to face, and the big blue eyes filled with tears and his chin quivered.

"Hain't robber, and I'll send him to the State prison!" exclaimed the man, as he seized the boy by the collar.

"Let go!" growled a voice from the gang way, and a fetter-faced man who had armed himself with a heavy stick, threw it down with a crash and pushed into the crowd and asked—

"Boy, who are you?"

"Tim Williams."

"Where's you home?"

"Nowhere!"

"Did you rob this man of that loaf of bread?"

"Yes, sir; but I was starving."

"Um! you young villain, I'll stop your thieving and robbing!" shouted the loser of the bread. "Some one help me to get him ashore!"

"By gum!" said the fat man, as he felt in his pocket.

He fished up a nickel, handed it to the baker, and continued—

"By gum! I guess not! There's your money, and I stand by the boy! I—we are a man, sir!"

"He's a thief!"

"Can't help that, sir! He's a boy, and he was hungry and had no other means to get bread. I'm his friend, sir—my name is Anybody who lays a hand on that boy has got to climb over me, by gum!"

Fifteen men cheered the fat man and groaned the baker, and the latter gripped his nickel and walked ashore.

"Captain," said the fat man, "give this boy a chance to work his passage, and I'll bust him up some clothes. I'm going to give him a show, sir—by gum, sir! I was locked and coffed and stowed on myself when I was a boy, and I can feel for this chap, sir—by gum, sir, yes, sir, and I'll probably take him with me. Come, Tim—by gum—but there's nothing dangerous about you, you will have a talk and see how we can better your fortunes. Yes, sir—by gum, sir!"

And as the boat moved away everybody gave three cheers for "By Gum!" and Tim.

How Some Married Women Go to Sleep.

There is an article going the rounds entitled "How the Girls Go to Sleep. The manner in which they go to sleep, according to the article, can't hold a candle to the way married women go to sleep.

Instead of thinking what she should have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while snoring lustily in her bed, the cat has overturning her bowl in front of the fire and wondering how he will pay the rent month's rent. Suddenly she exclaims:

"James, did you lock the door!"

"What, eh?" says James.

"The collar door," says she.

"No," says James.

"Well, you had better go down and look it, for I heard some one in the back yard last night."

Accordingly James paddles down the stairs and looks the door. About the time James returns and is going to bed she remarks:

"Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," says James.

"Well, if it is not shut the cat will get up into the chamber."

"Let her come up, then," says James, illustatedly.

"My goodness, no!" returns his wife; "she'd suck the baby's breath."

Then James paddles down stairs again and stops on a lark, and closes the stair door, and curses the cat, and returns to the bedroom. Just as he begins to climb into his nouch his wife observes:

"I forgot to bring up some water. Suppose you bring up some in the big tin."

And so James, with a muttered curse goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair and rips all the skin off his shin! In search of the "tin," and then jerks the stair door open and howls. "Where the dickens are the matches?"

She gives him minute directions where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the whole neighborhood roused above it; after which James finds the matches, pronounces the water, and comes up stairs on plunges into bed.

Presently his wife says "James, is a horse understanding about money matters? Now, neat week I've got to pay——"

"I know what you'll have to pay and don't care," shouts James as he tosses around and jams his face against the wall.

"But I want to sleep."

"That's all very well for you," snaps his wife, as she pulls the covers viciously, "you have think of the worry and trouble I have, and there is Jennie, she I believe is taking the measles."

"Let her take 'em," says James.

Meanwhile she begins to cry softly, but about the time James is falling into a gentle sleep she pinches him in the ribs with her elbows and says:

"Did you hear the scandal about Mrs. Jones?"

"Where?" says James sleepily.

"Why, Mrs. Jones."

"Who are?" inquires James.

"I declare," said his wife, "you are getting more stupid every day. You know Mrs. Jones that lives at 211! Well, day before yesterday Simon Smith told Mrs. Jones Thompson that Sam Barker had said that Mrs. Jones had——"

Here she paused and listened. James is snoring in profound slumber. With a snort of rage she gets all the covers of him, wraps up in them, and lies awake until 2 a. m., thinking how badly used she is.

And this is the way some married women go to sleep.

"Bout as Bad as Bad."

An old colored man of Wings, Ky., had procured some one to write a letter for him to one of his friends in Tennessee. In due course of time he expected an answer to his letter and made frequent inquiries of the Postmaster. One day Uncle Lucas looked in as usual, and was told by the Postmaster that a letter had come for him, but it was "bout as bad as bad." The old darky's face changed to a sad expression as she stepped his hands together and exclaimed: "Just 'bout as I spected; some of them would be dead when I heard from them."

Why the Dog Failed.

"Papa, what made you untie the dog last night?" asked Edith timidly at the breakfast table.

"To protect the gate," replied the old gentleman sternly.

"I—I—don't believe he succeeded in doing it," she returned.

"Hey?" asked the gentleman, as a savage glare darted over the coffee pot.

"Why, the act tims I saw Harry he was sitting somewhere on the outside of the gate, and I thought perhaps——" The old men's groan was so deep that she desisted.

He Practiced.

Mrs. Eccleston had been making an earnest effort to have her son Johnny taught to play on the piano. A few days ago Mrs. Eccleston called up stairs:

"Why aren't you practicing your piece, Johnny?"

"I am."

"You are not. "You haven't touched the piano for the last half hour."

"I've been practicing all the same. There are pennies in the march and I am practicing them over and over until I know them perfectly."

They Can Do It.

The girls in some parts of Africa have to be sold to the men before they can marry. The Africans probably think that a small woman cannot manage a husband. A brief residence in this country would soon teach them better.

A Countryman's Explanation.

Country yokel to his son at a concert during the performance of a duet "Love me, love me!" "Hey, Bill, listen! Jim, they're singing two at a time, so as to get done sooner."

How He was Bought.

"Say, papa," queried a little boy, "I thought you told me they couldn't buy people here in America?"

"They can't my child," replied the father. "The last Civil War settled that forever."

"Before, the people of the South owned slaves, but the war liberated them and an amendment to the Constitution made it impossible to hold the colored people as slaves in the United States."

"I don't mean colored people," continued the boy, "I mean white gentlemen like you. Was you ever bought or sold?"

"What a question! What put that idea into your head?"

"I heard Mrs. Gossip talking to a caller when she didn't think I was around. They got to talking about you and mamma. She said mamma was so homely she would stop a clock, and that her money bought you, body and soul."

She was Fly.

"Dearest, I love you. Fly with me, said a base ball player to his best girl.

"I would," said the fair one, "only it would be a foul."

"Why not!"

"Why, you know you are always caught on the fly, and——"

But he rang her gong, and fled.

"I think the New York Yacht Club are a bunch of Jesse's Jesters," said Robinson, discussing the yacht race with a friend.

"Why do you think so?"

"Because it appears almost impossible to make them give up the cup."

Trimmings on the Coffin.

Undertaker.—"And what kind of trimmings will you have on the casket?"

Widow.—"None whatever; it looks cheap enough without the plain coffin."

Undertaker.—"What killed him."

Widow.—"Yes. Delirium trimmins."

Her Offer.

"I have ventured," he said, "to lay this diamond ring, lightly hoping that you would allow me to slip it on your finger, as token of our engagement."

"I am sorry, Mr. Smith, but you are too late. I am already engaged; but if you will have it altered to fit my little finger, I will shower upon you the wealth of a sister's affection."

A New Use for Niagara.

Husband—"Let us go to Niagara next week."

Wife—"Niagara! Why, what put that into your head? I think I should enjoy it very much."

Husband—"It is very unusual for you to be so considerate towards me. Why, do you want to take us to Niagara Falls?"

Husband—"Smith took his wife there last week, and he said she was speechless with awe, and I just thought perhaps—I think I'ld go my hair."

Stampeding the Congregation.

A Baptist minister in Sheffield, England, was speaking of a certain young man living in his place.

"No," said the divine, "I don't like him at all. He's a low, worthless fellow, and I don't want anything to do with him under any circumstances.

"My dear," interjected his wife, "isn't it right to talk that way about any man who is young yet and may reform."

"No, he never will.

"But you mustn't be so severe on him. If you would try you might possibly help him in the place."

"I shall never try. If he should come into my church I would consider it a duty to order him out."

"Don't talk that way! What has he done to cause you to have such unchristian feelings against him?"

"What has he done? Well, he's done enough. He's got a trick of rushing a class like two dogs fighting, and for the last two Sabbaths he's got under one of the church windows and run out the whole congregation."

I tell you it would make you have unchristian feelings to look up from your prayer and see your congregation falling over one another in getting out the door as if there had been the hottest dissolve shouting that hell let two pound tin on either dog.

They Let Him Skirmish.

The striking music reached a colored preacher in a town in Mississippi the other day, and he arose before his congregation and said:

"Chilun, I've been tryin' hard to preach de Gospel on dis week, an' I've got discouraged. You has been glad to raise de salary to $5 or I'ge gwine to get out wid skirmish for hogs an' chickens long ob de rest ob you, an' take my chance ob gettin' to Heaven." By a unanimous vote the congregation was decided to continue the salary at $2, and let him skirmish.

Cholera Cramps Colic and all Summer Complaints and all Bowel Troubles are cured by Perry Davis' Pain Killer. All druggists sell it.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. Splendid set of Teeth, only $6. THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 862 Market street.

DANIEL SHEERIN, STONE AND MARBLE YARD, Cor. Broderick and Ellis Sts. Entrance to Catholic Cemetery. SAN FRANCISCO.

JUST RECEIVED A Large Assortment of Monuments direct from Italian Shops. ☞ All kinds of Monuments and Granite Work done to short notice. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

WESTERN HOTEL, 212-14 Broadway Street. JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor (Late Sheriff City and County.)

ROBERT F. HAY, TINTYPE GALLERY 801 Market St., bet. 4th & 5th.

G. ORSI, HOUSE, Sign and Ornamental Painter and Paper Hanger. 1 PALMER PLACE, OFF 1 PALMER STREET, Between Montgomery Avenue and Sansome, and Bet. Jackson and Pacific Streets. SAN FRANCISCO. Orders promptly attended to. Calcimining, Whitewashing, Glazing, Paper Hanging, Kalsomining. American, French and English paper hangings.

RAZORS, $1,000 WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND HONE ON 3 inches than any razor in the world. Warranted. Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1. Address, GEO. W. BRAGG, Box 1, Ansonia, Conn.

WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK Every Lady should buy one piece. Sent to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Address, WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK CO., 1 Maiden Lane, Room 3, New York. Agents Wanted. ☞ Mention this paper when you write.

WARD & CO.'S Male and Female EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, 608 and 610 Clay Street, S. F. Telephone No. 717.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS HOTEL Cards, Page Marks, Transparent Window Signs, Hotel Hands, Dinner Gongs, Call Bells, Door Bells, Door Plates, Door Knobs, Door Knockers, Door Springs, Door Stops, Door Locks, Door Latches, Door Bolts, Door Hinges

OUR BOOK TABLE.

VUIBERT'S ANCIENT HISTORY.

(Lawrence Hanson, from the Creation to the Fall of the Western Empire (a.n. 476). With numerous maps and plans of cities, by Professor Ramsay, M.A., F.S.S., Professor of Humanity, Glasgow University. Blackie & Son, London, Glasgow, Edinburgh, New York, 1886.

The entirety of the present century not only in the field of science, but in almost every branch of study in which research and investigation play a part, has made it necessary to rewrite those studies, so that there is now no dreary dwell.

This is beautifully and keenly appreciated by the learned author in his preface to the work before us: "The deciphering of the Egyptian hieroglyphics; the recent discovery and interpretation of the cuneiform records of Assyria; the excavations made in Troas, Greece and elsewhere; finally a more critical study of Greek and Latin authors, have thrown on many points of ancient history—both moral and profane—an entirely new light." And the aggregate of knowledge increasing with the increase of age, though garnered in books and stored away in libraries, is daily growing to such proportions that, from sheer necessity, the mass of the learned themselves are becoming more specialists. Life is too short to master perfectly, and the mind is becoming too practical to master, but impatiently, the many branches of human knowledge. He who, therefore, in the shortest space and yet with the most judicious criticism, gets the greatest amount of knowledge within easy reach of the student, is the man to whom the student himself and the age he lives in, owes a debt of varying gratitude. Whilst this is true of every study it is doubly true in the great world of history, and not less so in ancient than in modern history.

But, as every student of history knows, the mere marshalling of facts and a just criticism are not all that he needs. The manner and form of narrating and of grouping these facts, not merely appealing to the intellect, but making the narrative of nearly which between the sight, and all the memory, impact to the study of history one of the greatest pleasures, whilst effectuating it easier and more profitable. We believe that Father Vulbert is the work in question, has combined all these in a degree not yet reached by any other that we have read. And we cannot explain that it is not too much to say that in this age of steam and electricity, when there is a sort of trial of speed in nearly every thing, even school books are too frequently dashed off for the market to meet a pressing want—and by those who have had no experience in the high vocation of teachers.

Father Vulbert is not only a ripe scholar, but when many ripe scholars are most—and the best educators in the land. A member of the same religious body that gave us Father Perbet, Father Vulbert, a worthy son of his society Office, using where he could the work of his predecessor and others, without following or colored in the form of any, has stamped upon his history the experience of nearly twenty years spent in the professor's Chair at St. Charles' College, Ellicott City, Maryland. He has seen and felt the wants of the student in his arduous labors, and whatever he has supplied them; and he (perhaps) has not yet mastered into his book that which reading he has found that he is doing it the feet of the Professor of Rhetoric.

We find the author has not sacrificed not only to students and teachers, but to the general reader, in adding extensive and yet concise notes to the text, which characterize the book that appears on comparing the table of contents with that of other of the work. A feature of inestimable value is that the tables of contents, not only in a large, minute, but in a degree the general arrangement of the matter as regards the chronological antiquity and the special history of each—together with the chief events and substitutions of each period, deeply pressed. In the study of Ancient History, the student has before him in a few pages, all the most interesting details concerning the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Phoenicians, Egyptians, Jews, Greeks, Romans, Gauls, Britons, Germans, Scythians, Scythians, Arabs, Carthaginians, Gaul, Britons, Germans noted the proceedings of the meeting. Commoners Maurice Healy, Hooper, Lane, and Shea spoke at a meeting at Kilough. They all declared that the Government could not justify them, but their speeches were generally moderate and guarded.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM IRELAND.

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

The Nationalists Pleased with the Present Situation.

NEW YORK, November 29.—T. P. O'Connor's cable special to the Star from London says: The Tories are ashamed at the criminal state of affairs in Ireland and the astounding growth of popular organization against unfair rents. Their press with one voice is calling on the Ministry to avoid coercion and drop further prosecutions and other repressive measures for the sake of keeping the country quiet. The National leaders have received, whether the advice is heeded by the Ministry or not, to proceed with their plans for forcing the hands of the Government without further delay. The prosecution of John Dillon has caused considerable excitement. It has not yet been decided what course he will elect to follow after the decision, which is known beforehand. His conviction is looked for as a matter of course. Dillon may decide to go to prison immediately, in preference to giving bail, but it is hoped in some quarters that he will adopt the alternative course of giving bail and afterward repeating the offense with which he is charged and trying the issue in that form. From that the Parnellite standpoint this situation is better now than at any time since Gladstone's defeat at his polls.

Great Meeting Held at Sligo.

NEW YORK, November 30.—The Tribune's Dublin cable special says that the 29th was how the Nationalists, by amazing strategems, managed to hold a down meeting in Sligo nominally on Sunday in spite of the horse, foot and cavalry concentrated in the county by the Government. One of the measures devised to prevent the meeting was the proclamation of a hired special train to run between Carrick and Sligo. It took no chances on every station till it came to Ballymote, where a large body of police were drawn up on the platform. The Nationalists certainly bought tickets for Sligo and when the train drew up made a bonnie to board it. Seeing this the police jumped aboard also and forthwith threatened to clear the carriages, where they were locked in by the guard, whereupon the Nationalists, at a signal from McGann, their leader, jumped from the train, which moved on with scows but the police on board. The officers pulled frantically to stop, but the engineer, obeying the orders of McGann, never halted until he landed them at Sligo. A great meeting was then held in Sligo, more, and when it was all over the police were seen returning from Sligo on a special train. Meanwhile Dr. Tanner, M. P., in Sligo, finding the situation of the police and military extremely ridiculous, managed to hold a meeting in the center of the town, and when this was interrupted he led the police a dance across the hills and down to the shores of Lough Gill, where he entered a boat and was pulled a few feet from shore. From that platform and from reach of the police, he addressed the enthusiastic crowds that followed him.

What John Dillon Said.

According to the Tribune's cable special from London Dillon said in a speech at Ballymoe on Sunday: "This Government, it would appear, have made up their minds to try a little coercion again, but I am very poor, they hope that I spe of it, that it is a very poor, shaky kind of coercion. The charge against me amounts to this, that I had incited the tenantry of coercion landlords of a combination against them and refuse to pay their rents. I am going to appear before the Court of Queen's Bench and tell them that is exactly what I did do and what I mean to go on doing, and they may make the most of my case of the situation." He will probably give bail.

Preparing Against Government Tyranny.

DUBLIN, November 27.—Lord Mayor Sullivan has summoned a meeting of the citizens of Dublin to assemble next Friday to protest against the Government's tyrannical measure in Irish Nationalists. John Dillon will defend himself in the case brought against him by the Government. Eight Hon. Hugh Holmes, Attorney General of Ireland, and John O. Gibson, Solicitor-General, will conduct the prosecution against Dillon.

Prison is Imprisonment!

LONDON, November 30.—The Standard's Dublin correspondent says that a warrant will be issued for the arrest of O'Brien.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach has had a conference with the magistrates from all parts of the north and west of Ireland.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Chief Secretary for Ireland, is formulating a scheme for the reform of the Irish administration. He has offered the post of Under-Secretary to General Buller as a provincial matter and the latter has accepted.

Monsignore Cheered by a Crowd.

Fifty prisoners, charged with being implicated in "moonlighting" in Kerry and Clare, arrived to day at Cork, escorted by a large force of police. They will be tried at the Munster assizes. Upon their arrival at the railway station in Cork the alleged moonlighters received a grand ovation from an enthusiastic crowd that had assembled there. Monsignor O'Connor, who acted for others for the prisoners and they were cheered with a will. Monsignor Redmond, speaking in Dublin to night, said that if one hair of Dillon's or O'Brien's head was injured the Irish people would know how to avenge themselves for the outrage.

Gladstone's Parliamentary Plans.

LONDON, November 29.—Gladstone yesterday refused to speak until Parliament reassembles. He has sent letters to several of his late colleagues, stating his programme for the coming session. He approves an immediate challenge to the Government to state its Irish policy in the debate upon the address, although he expects that the Unionists will maintain their adhesion to the Government. A Gurrard will assist in the effective settlement of the procedure question.

YESTERDAY'S CABLEGRAMS.

Parliament Likely to be Called Together for Special Purpose.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—T. P. O'Connor sends the following subjectgram from London to the Star: "All well-informed members of the Lower House believe that a meeting of Parliament will take place. In spite of the opposition of some of the leading supporters of the Government, the Cabinet are drifting as rapidly down the road to a more modern policy, and are subject to such a heavy pressure, that old parliamentary hands say it is difficult to see how they can avoid calling Parliament together to amend special powers. In doing so they will be backed by the entire landed interest, English and Scotch, as well as Irish, and an overwhelming majority of decided Liberals. In the meantime the Tory leaders, led by the Standard, are opposed to the meeting of Parliament earlier than usual, and are working hard to induce the Ministry to reverse their decision, drop coercion and shelve the Irish question, leaving the Irish Administration to carry on the Government of the country as well as they can without repressive measures and keep quieter quiet at almost any cost.

SULLOR SUPERSEDES HAMILTON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The Post's London special says: General Buller has been appointed provisional successor to Sir Robert Hamilton in Dublin after all, notwithstanding use will be made of his discretionary powers to place the bailiffs and the Tories, whose views are expressed by the Times this morning, in charge of the city, the appointment a permanent one, it would be open to grave objections on several grounds—his military occupation, want of official Irish experience, etc., but when the Government have not got the men they want they must do what they can with the man they have."

California's Catholic Missionaries.

HISTORICAL TRUTHS WORTH REMEMBERING.

PIONEERS OF THE CROSS AND CIVILIZATION.

Men of whom all Catholics may be Proud.

The following article is from the pen of a MONITOR contributor from whom we hope to have many more interesting historical sketches:

Animated with the zeal and charity of her divine founder, and ever mindful of his heavenly mission, the Catholic Church in every age, sent forth her missionaries to teach, to succine and to sanctify the benighted savage. Far in advance of their secular brethren, surpassing in their zeal for the salvation of souls the reckless daring of the warrior panting for temporal glory, they have planted the banner of the Redeemer amid the wildest of our forests, and amid the most desolate regions by their labors and with their blood. Whether amid the snows of Canada, on the boundless plains of South America, toiling on the banks of the Mississippi, or contending with the pestilence of Mexico, their heroism has displayed itself; but nowhere have they proved themselves more zealous or more self sacrificing than among the hills and valleys of California.

THE MISSIONARIES OF THE STATE

have been the pioneers of civilization. Scarcely was it known that a new land had been explored, that there wafa yet more gold to be wrung, than those daring men left their own countries and pushed into the interior. Members of the same order who had labored long on the peninsula, but it was not till 1769 that the first mission was established within the present limits of this State. The task of reclaiming and converting the wandering Indian was intrusted to Father Junipero Serra, and under his guidance the glorious emblem of man's salvation was reared in Alta California. But it was not the land as we now see it that witnessed the heroic exertions of the saintly Franciscans and their brethren of other orders. Untrodden by civilized man, apparently barren and unpredictable, was the soil upon which they erected the rude cross that took root and grew into a vast expanse peopled only by pagan savages.

The mission prospered but this success of their pious labors did not satisfy the zeal of the missionaries, and in less than a year, in San Antonio, with tears and lamentations, gathered round the little band of heroes our half of whom, bidding farewell to the friends of their youth, departed for their Provincial Superior, who, in the company with Robert Walker, making ingress to his mines, when suddenly the opening fell in, crushing Russell and Walker in a shocking manner. When the debris was removed the former was discovered dead, his body being brightly mangled, and Walker was alive but seriously injured.

O'Tare.—Mr. Timothy Moplan, C. E., died, on October 29th. He was a native of Tralee, and for a period of thirty-six years was engaged in the service of the Government. Mr. Moplan was a man of great ability, and he has been identified with the young Ulster as leading officer in the various undoes of the country, he defended which he discharged in an impartial and painstaking manner as to win the esteem of the landed and ratepayers, rich and all of the county.

Crime.—A desperate attempt at murder has been committed in Carne, the victim being a young man named Quinn, who was the chief support of an aged mother. Both resided in the village of Ballycroy, distance of four miles from the town of Carne. Nov. 23rd being observed by Quinn, a large number of people gathered in the town, and the country bands paraded from the street. They labored fearly for several hours. When they came on the scene of the intended outrageous act, Quinn was in their company for some time, and when he left for home, he was followed by a man with a knife in the shoulder. Four stroke were made.

Cavan.—The sullen, Tim Harley, who made a gloomy stand against eviction at Shoreville, and who was conspicuous for the charge of having dynamite for an unlawful purpose, was brought up at Limerick, on November 1, and formally charged under the Explosives Act, with having in his possession, also, dynamite, having found Harley secreting the dynamite, having been taken, he was committed for trial but bail was accepted, the sum for £100, and the surety in £50 each. The fact show to what light the Crown regards the charge.

Sligo.—Mr. Dillon, who was to stay in Cork in the person of Mr. William Redmond, M. P., was expected to arrive in Sligo. Mr. Dillon's visit to Sligo is for the purpose of the nomination, and that is a deed a political opponent, a certain Mr. Jones, who was on the 30th of December, 1885, in Cork Guardhall he gave up the "code of honor" in his fashion, and he was shot down after a battle O'Connell; he took no further part in public life. There can be no doubt that Mr. Hayes always left most acutely the fatal conflict of Nov. 30th, and it is said that for many years he imposed a sort of public penance on himself. He was most charitable, and participated some of the public institutions including the Christian Brothers, Sisters of Charity, and the Hospital. Mr. Hayes died a wealthy man. He was one of the largest shareholders in some of the public companies, and had a great deal of other property. It is said the bulk of his property goes to his nephew, Mr. Hayes, of Limerick, now aged eighty, and some of his relatives in the city of Cork have not been forgotten.

Mr. Abraham Sutton, an old and esteemed citizen of Cork, died on Nov. 4. Mr. Sutton had passed the age of 80 years, but was hale and hearty up to a short time ago, and for the last seventy years he was a member of the Society of Friends. The Society of Friends in Cork numbers about 200 persons, and before steam was developed to its present extent, it was a flourishing body of sailing colliers, which trades from Cork to the Mediterranean.

The Rev. William McCarthy died on Nov. 31, in the 80th year of his age. He was ordained at St. Colman's College, where he signalized himself by his extremely amiable and docile disposition. From thence he secured a place at the Cork Mission, and ministered ten years ago in the Clonpa diocese. His first and only mission was in Enagh, one of the large manufacturing districts.

Capt. D. Burke, died on Oct. 29th. He was the second son of the late Lieutenant-General Burke, of Ballyhooly, Kilbrittain, county Cork, and was, at one time, well known as most zealous and active in the Cork Militia, being a sharp bowler and owner of thoroughbreds. For many years he resided in Bandon, and for the last two years in Cork. In his demise he will least excite shock.

The funeral took place on behalf of the widow of the late Mr. Charles McCarthy, of Cork. The deceased was one of the most popular of Cork citizens, and had for many years been Vice-President of the Cork Harbor Society, an organization which with Mr. John George McCarthy, he assisted to found. The society has its wards for Life Guard.

Buckley.—Mr. Buckley, the journal publishes a series of special articles entitled: "The Ethics of Ireland." Mr. Buckley has the system of stealing and perverting Catholic children, procured by the Protestant Missionaries, and placed in Protestant boarding-schools in Dublin; but, as the Freeman says, whose contribution appeared in one of the parts of the country where a Bible reader is also a land commissioner, and where the Bible is found willing to sell the bible of himself, or the land commissioner, to sell the land of himself, Dublin is a place where, when the Freeman's Journal, and they regularly visit the slums and scanned into the soil of Catholic children of the offspring of mixed marriages, place them in Protestant schools, and then the Protestantism, Sometimes parents, stricken with remorse, demand their children, and their children, too, are unable to obtain possession of them without a writ of habeas corpus, which is dearer, slow and expensive. Whenever such claims are made the Protestant Missionaries generally make for England or Ireland, or even sent abroad. Mr. Buckley, in one case, had a Catholic child from Ireland to Liverpool, and Scotland, and even to Canada. Lord Plunket, Protestant archbishop of Dublin, Lord Ashbourne, a leading Orange supporter, and Archbishop Walsh has published a letter in the Freeman's Journal on the subject.

The Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Plunket, has been desperately trying to outdrive his predecessor, Dr. Whately, in whimsical ness. The Superior sees of the Plunket maintained in a vitiation cheque to his clergy, Nov. 25, that it is a monstrous falsity to say that Ireland was governed by England. The Dublin Bishop, in his cheque, says that the Parliament of Dublin, Ireland governed Ireland, and more than her legitimate influence in Parliament. Mr. Gladstone's Bill passed into law. Ireland would have forfeited her nationality, and the Irish would have been a race. These forgeries, we presume, would be demonstrated to the saints Irish, and all Irish men friendly to native autonomy. The true theological doctrine, then, are the parents, the parents, the spirituality, the shamocracy, the Orange Catch-locks, and West Britons.

Galway.—On Nov. 4, the Most Rev. Dr. Duggan, Bishop of Galway, received his Grace after a brief illness. He is quite vigorous and his admirably preserved. He was amongst them with notable manifestations of their joy and satisfaction. In the Bishop's arrival at Ballinasloe he was presented with an address by the inhabitants.

We regret to have to record the unexpected death of the wife of the Rev. Michael Lynch, assistant Athenry, on Monday 29th. Feeling the sad bereavement of her husband, the deceased lady was a pious, practical and fervent adhering member of Holy Church.

Kilkenny.—The two priests who are awaiting eviction at the hands of Lord Clonmore this week have thrown into a state of bewilderment, on October 29, by the sudden arrival in the country of Archbishop Croke, who spoke and offered prayers unknown to anyone, and presenting the consolation of offering of Mass. The report is now spread around that the evictions were to be postponed, and it is telegraphically stated replied that the stranger entirely was a recommendation, for they dies take a cordial survey of the locality. Mr. James M'Carey has admitted one family into an uncomplete farm house on his holding in Ardaloman. By throwing up the house he has saved the family from being thrown out on the roadside, and has given to the evicted land home and land. All had regular employment and Lord Clonmore interfered and dispossed them out their employer.

Limerick.—Mr. Thomas Ryan, J. P., died on Nov. 1, at his residence in the upper Newcastle road.

The Earl of Dunraven has agreed to give his adhesion to the proposed Irish Exhibition in Cork.

In Ponderosa, son of Capt. Prendergast of Newbrook, near Limerick, has been elected to the Hurley, England. He left Limerick three years ago, after graduating at the Royal University, and is now president of the National Club, Ponderosa. Mr. Prendergast is a nephew of the defeated candidate here in 1885 for the Mayoralty, Mr. Prendergast, and a cousin of the Chairman in the Hurley Corporation.

Mr. Arthur Hillard, proprietor of the A. Russell, Kilkenny, county Limerick, of the well known Hillard and Hanford, Cork, died on Nov. 3, in the 80th year of his age. Mr. Hillard was a young gentleman extremely popular with all classes, and he was the last of a number of measures followed his remains to the grave.

At the opening meeting for the session of the Cork University Club, the capital, Cork, on November 6th, Mr. F. J. Nolan, B.L., was presented with the medal for the year.

On November 31, at the Convent of the Good Shepherd, the profession of a religious and the reception of two novices took place. The religious who made their vows were Sister Mary Mary Kennedy (in religion Sister Mary of the Good Shepherd), daughter of Mr. Patrick Kennedy, Esq., Clonbiffe House, Dublin. The novices were Miss Ellen Ryan, daughter of the late Mr. Peter Ryan, of Mount Jane Frances, and Miss Ellen Ryan, daughter of Mr. Patrick Ryan, of Ballyhooly, Co. Cork.

Dr. Healey, having taken possession of his diocese, Dr. Lynch, Bishop, now more, is lately to bring them up in quality to the old standard of "50," when they were acknowledged to be the first fifteen sort made in this State or in any other State; in fact, sort of "Ireland's Own." You must bear in mind that there is one gallon more to every case of I. X. L. Bitters than there is in other bitters that are selling at the same price.

"CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL!"

(TRADE MARK.)

THIS REMARKABLE AND NOW FAMOUS REMEDY "CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL" HAS BEEN USED IN THE EASTERN AND WESTERN STATES WITH THE MOST gratifying results. It will be a doubtful proposition if any other remedy has ever been sold on its merits, for there is no doubt but that every one that has used it is more than pleased.

Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, Bronchitis, Neuralgia, Headache, Croup, Sore Throat, Deafness, Weak Eyes, Granulated Lids, Ulceration of the Lungs, Sporing, Cold in the Chest, etc.

This "CARBOLIC SMOKE" dissolves the poisons in the unseen membranes of the Head, Throat, Bronchial Tubes and Lungs upon the same principle as vinegar would act upon the diamond and preserves us from suffering from a pestilent as a sick room. It is pleasant to inhale, entirely harmless, and can be used anywhere.

It is put up in "little pills" that can be used at home, on the cars, in the office or sitting room at any time with perfect ease.

A single application to your druggists relief in Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Diphtheria, Croup, Neuralgia, Deafness, and Headache, and a few days use of one of the Head, Throat and Lungs. If a cure will the last of expense be refunded to you.

CATARRH—Cured in three months—SYMPTOMS.

ASTHMA—Relief in nearly every case—relieved in five minutes—no interference with business or pleasure.

CRAY FEVER—A cure guaranteed if taken in time. No symptoms of the disease returning. The "Dr. Dennison Carbolic Smoke Ball" is a sure cure.

BRONCHITIS—Cured in a very few days.

CROUP—Immediate relief and cure.

THE "Dr. Dennison Carbolic Smoke Ball" is the genuine of the one are not genuine.

EYES—Granulated lids, weakness, inflammation, etc., cured in from five to six weeks. Relieved in from one to three days.

DEAFNESS—Relief in three minutes and cured in from a few days.

ULCERATION of the Lungs—Relief in five minutes, and cure in a few weeks. The "Dr. Dennison Carbolic Smoke Ball" is the only one that will do this.

SPORING—Cured in three weeks and relief in one day.

COLD IN THE HEAD—Relief in three minutes and cured in from one to three days.

SMOKE BALL—Cured effectually in three days.

DIPHTHERIA—Relief in twenty-four minutes and cure in a few days.

SORE THROAT—Relief in five minutes and cure in from one to three days.

EYES—Granulated lids, weakness, inflammation, etc., cured in from five to six weeks. Relieved in from one to three days.

DEAFNESS—Relief in three minutes and cured in from a few days.

ULCERATION of the Lungs—Relief in five minutes, and cure in a few weeks. The "Dr. Dennison Carbolic Smoke Ball" is the only one that will do this.

SPORING—Cured in three weeks and relief in one day.

COLD IN THE HEAD—Relief in three minutes and cured in from one to three days.

SMOKE BALL—Cured effectually in three days.

DIPHTHERIA—Relief in twenty-four minutes and cure in a few days.

SORE THROAT—Relief in five minutes and cure in from one to three days.

These are noble statements, and to convince you that the above assertions are true we offer to do what will take the trouble to call at our Ladies' and Gents' Parlors

A FREE TEST. A FREE TEST.

THE FAMOUS "CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL"

Sent, with full directions to any address on receipt of price, $3, and two postage stamps, "Debellator" package, $2 additional. Delivered to any part of this city upon written request.

OFFICE HOURS Week days, from 9 A. M. to 8 P. M. Sundays, from 10 A. M. to 2 P. M.

CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL CO.

Rooms 9 and 10, second floor, corner Market and Kearny Sts.

Entrance, 632 MARKET STREET, Opposite Lotin Fountain. San Francisco, Cal., U. S. A.

Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE,
636 Clay St, Tuesday Evening, Nov. 30, 1886.

WHEAT—No. 1, ... $1 65
Extra—Superior ... 1.37½@1.40
Cornmeal ... 2 00
Oats ... 1 37
Barley, feed ... 1 00
Beans, Pinto, wholesale ... 3 00@3 25
Ground Barley, F.O.B. ... 20 00@21 50
Middlings ... 20 00@21 50
Bran ... 17 00@17 50
Hay ... 17 00@18 00
Wheat ... 1 30@1 35
POULTRY:
Hens, P. P. doz, wholesale ... 1 00@5 00
Turkeys, P. P. lb wholesale ... 15@18
Ducks, P. P. doz ... 5 00@6 00
Geese, P. pair ... 1 50@1 75
Chickens ... 5 00@6 00
Young Hens ... 5 00@6 00
Young Roosters ... 5 00@6 00
EGGS:
Choice, P. doz ... 32@37½
BUTTER:
Choice Fresh roll ... 20@30
Fresh Pickled ... 20@25
Firkin ... 19@21
CHEESE:
Domestic ... 11@12
Eastern ... 14
FRUIT:
Apples ... 1 00@1 50
Wood ... 9 00@11 00

DR. LANE'S WINE TONIC!

A Nervine and Blood Invigorator.

KING B BITTERS.

THE GREAT VEGETABLE LIVER REMEDY.

OAKLAND, CAL., November 12, 1886.

HALL BROS., GENTS: Have had some valuable remedies "King B Bitters" and "Dr. Lane's Wine Tonic," for some time, and find them very beneficial. Have recommended them to many friends, who have also found them very beneficial. Yours truly, E. C. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

Also personal experience and the above testimony, recommend Dr. Lane's Wine Tonic to those who wish to take a tonic.

Sold by all druggists in California, Paris, Texas, 1116 Polk, Hon. M. T. Tetlock, 1325 Sacramento, and E. C. Dennison, 1116 Polk Sts., San Francisco. Price, $1 per bottle, or 6 bottles for $5. Dr. Lane's Wine Tonic is also sold by the wholesale druggists of this city.

HALL BROTHERS

Laboratory, 324 Clay St., San Francisco.

Again in the Field.

Dr. Healey, having taken possession of his diocese, Dr. Lynch, Bishop, now more, is lately to bring them up in quality to the old standard of "50," when they were acknowledged to be the first fifteen sort made in this State or in any other State; in fact, sort of "Ireland's Own." You must bear in mind that there is one gallon more to every case of I. X. L. Bitters than there is in other bitters that are selling at the same price.

THE ONLY COMPLETE, CORRECT AND AUTHORIZED EDITION.

SADLIERS' Catholic Directory,

Almanac and Ordo for 1887

Fifty-fourth Annual Publication.

This is the most complete work of the kind published, containing, besides the Ordo, a great variety of matter not to be found in any other work. Among the contents are the following, which will be found very valuable:

Ordo for the Dioceses of Baltimore, Boston, Brooklyn, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit, Dubuque, Fort Wayne, Grand Rapids, Green Bay, Hartford, Indianapolis, Jersey City, Kansas, Leavenworth, Lincoln, Louisville, Manchester, Marquette, Memphis, Milwaukee, Nashville, Newark, New Orleans, New York, Northern California, Nesqualy, Oregon City, Peoria, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, Providence, Quebec, Richmond, Rochester, Sacramento, St. Augustine, St. Cloud, St. Louis, St. Paul, St. Thomas, Salt Lake, San Antonio, San Diego, San Francisco, Santa Fe, Savannah, Scranton, Seattle, Sioux City, Springfield, Stockton, Toronto, Trenton, Vancouver, Vicariate of Brownsville, Vicariate of Indian Territory, Vicariate of Nebraska, Vicariate of Northern Minnesota, Vicariate of Northern Wisconsin, Vicariate of Oregon, Vicariate of Pembina, Vicariate of Sandwich Islands, Vicariate of Scotland, Vicariate of Western Wisconsin, Vicariate of Wyoming, Vicariate of Zanzibar, Vicariate of Zululand, Prefecture Apostolic of Alaska, Prefecture Apostolic of Brunswick, Prefecture Apostolic of Cape Fear, Prefecture Apostolic of Colorado, Prefecture Apostolic of Dakota, Prefecture Apostolic of Duluth, Prefecture Apostolic of Idaho, Prefecture Apostolic of Indian Territory, Prefecture Apostolic of Montana, Prefecture Apostolic of Northern Texas, Prefecture Apostolic of Oklahoma, Prefecture Apostolic of Southern Texas, Prefecture Apostolic of Wyoming, Prefecture Apostolic of Yukon, Mission of Alaska, Mission of Athabasca, Mission of Mackenzie, Mission of Saskatchewan, Mission of Yukon, Mission of Zululand, Mission of Mexico, Mission of Central America, Mission of Cuba, Mission of Porto Rico, Mission of Santo Domingo, Mission of Haiti, Mission of Jamaica, Mission of Nassau, Mission of Trinidad, Mission of Tobago, Mission of Demerara, Mission of Antigua, Mission of Dominica, Mission of Montserrat, Mission of St. Vincent, Mission of St. Lucia, Mission of Grenada, Mission of Tortola, Mission of Anguilla, Mission of St. Thomas, Mission of St. Kitts, Mission of Nevis, Mission of Barbados, Mission of Sandwich Islands, Mission of Scotland

Poetry.

LIFE AND DEATH.

I passed through a forest of trees,
And lo! the woodman was there
Swinging his axe in the morning brown,
And Life was on his cheek.
And ever he sang as he swung,
And the echoes rang out clear and high
As the tree falls, as the tree falls,
"He is life, he lives!"

I passed through a forest of men,
And lo! the Woodman was there
The Woodman, Death, with his weapon keen Falling a life most fair,
And ever he sang as he wrought,
And his song echoed to the sky:
"As a man lives, as a man dies,
"He shall be life, yes, he!"

O fate of the falling tree!
O doom of the dying life!
This was the moral he brought to me,
With blue or bitterness rife.
As the tree of the forest fertile
So shall it fall and lie,
And the evil or good of this life of mine
Must end my fate when I die!

ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

REVERIE.

How sweet, how hopeless, in the cloistered life,
Far from the world, the struggles and its strife;
To pass beneath the shadow of the pile
Dedicey the capteiro in that sacred lane;
Then all its triumphs and its pleasures have
That sacred lane, for God is here the slave.

LIZA ALLSOP.

LOVE AT THE TOMB.

Beneath the shade of a shattered oak,
Midst rank of rose and dahlia fair,
I knelt, in the sunset gold,
A whisper fell from the tree's moan,
A sigh came over the distant sea,
But the only response I felt was true,
And the pulse of memory.

Velomi tears from the tiddles sea,
Velomi leaves from the golden shore,
Were present, yes, and were the
Not lost, but gone before!

A response confessed, I lifted the feet
Of a mortal cross where an infant slept,
And a garden of lilies, gaudy rose,
Gave out of the inner dew myst
A bland song out of the darkened grave,
A letter of rosen kin'd the stone—
O much love! O! look, and the heaven
Do they long, as we long for them!

"They have they buried my beast one day,
They shut love's door and closed the gate;
Our treasure are over, the treasured gray
At the shill of the hand of fate!
And here in a garden of rose and yew
They'll whisper prayers and shed the hymns,
And love still lingers in faithful love,
And love I shall rest with him!

HELP YOUR MOTHER.

The old mother, with her knitting
Sat in the sunshine, while her mother grows old,
And ceaseless toil, from day to day
To lighten her cares and to sweeten life's way.

Sweeter far than piano or organ's sweet notes,
Is the music that comes from the kitchen that cheerfully hums
As the patter of dishes keeps time with a song,
While the daughter is helping her mother along.

Sweeter far than the music of the world's great throng
Is the music of the little one's footsteps, hurrying along
To help her mother, who, poor in her strength,
Has to do the work of two lengths.

Ye who have left your home for the world's great throng
Hear the music of the little one's footsteps, hurrying along
To help her mother, who, poor in her strength,
Has to do the work of two lengths.

A SONG FOR THE GIRLS I LOVE.

A song for the girl I love—
Out love her!
A song for the eyes that tender shine,
And the fragrant mouth that smiles for mine,
The alluring tresses so controlled,
Which may be seen with freedom of gold,
And the dimpled mouth and the dainty chin,
And the pride displayed out and in—
The girl I love—
Out love her!

A song for the girl I loved—
Out love her!
A song for the eyes of faded light,
And the cheek whose red soon vanished in white,
And the quiet brow with its shadow and gleam,
And the dark lashes dropped in a long calm dream,
And the small hands crossed for their church-yard rest,
And the lilies dead on her sweet dead breast—
The girl I loved—
Out love her!

Literary Miscellany.

How the Ship was Saved.

The fog was heavy on the Baltic that sea son—it was in the latter part of 1864, and we expected to be in England by Christmas —but the weather was clear and fine, and the old boatswain found time that Sunday morning to drop his whistle to the end of his lanyard, and step into the gallery with his wife and the little one, and lift his pipe with a red coal, and turning to the skipper, said:

"You was saym' last night, sir, that you hadn't gone so faith in stowaways. Well, be more have I, generally speakin'; but I once ran foul of one that wasn't so bad as the rest. It's nigh on to six years ago, when I was a quarter-master in a steamer—the Zebra—plyin' at her wharf in Calcutta, and loadin' up for Glasgow. The Hooghly was crowded with sailin' vessels that couldn't get no crews, and most of their men had deserted, and shipped in steamers, that was goin' through the Suez Canal, that had just opened. They all wanted to go home quick, you see, and go by the navigated route,
and not to make a four months' route around the Cape.

"The steamers had all the men they wanted, and a sight more down from good, able-bodied seamen then they could take.
The Zebra was to touch at Londonderry on her way home, and the night, that we cast loose at Calcutta, with the pilot on board, and dropped down the river with the tide,
the skipper was grumblin' like a bear, be cause, more or other, he had shipped five men more than he wanted. Three of them were Irishmen, and, like the rest of the crew, they had got advance notes for a month's pay on them; so, to say the truth, he was afraid they'd take French leave at Londonderry.

"The pilot had gone over the side the watch had been set, and the steamer was driven down the Bay of Bengal, and settlin' well out toward the Indian Ocean, when there was a cry of 'fire!' and the boatswain sent me aft to where the skipper was standin' on the poop. He was draggin' a youngster, about 16 years old, by the collar of the jacket with him.

"'I hooked him out of the fore hatch,
your honor,' he says. 'I heard him scratch in' around, and I raised the hatch-way, and there he was.'

"'I was lyin' to get out, sir,' said the lad, very bold and pertin. 'I suppose I'm a stowaway, but I'm a sailor, and willin' to work. I asked for a berth aboard the Zebra, and couldn't get it; so when ship dropped
I was goin' ashore in the dinger I slipped on the freeboard, and I'm bound to Magherafelt, Londonderry, where my mother lives.
I don't want say pay, but if you'll let me work my passage you won't be sorry for it.'

"Our skipper was a terrible rough man.
He swore a great oath, and turnin' to me
he said:

"'Quartermaster, put the young imp in irons for to night. I'll see what it's best to do with him in the morning.' I had a cabin go overboard, it's Glasgow he'll land at,
and not Londonderry.'

"I was sorry for the poor lad, but I had to obey orders, and the irons went soon on his wrists and ankles in the fo'c'sle, and he was terribly upset, and when I was on the watch that night I used to kim, and tried to cheer him up.

"I was getting on for four bells when the mate and he'd like to see the boy, and he went with me to the fo'c'sle.

"'Hey, my lad,' he says, stoopin' over him him with a lantern, 'tell us all about it.
Did you dive down and stow yourself in the pipe ship in a sullin' vessel if you wanted to come to one port and another?'

"'Oh, sir, says the youngster, with the tears in his eyes, as he sat up and looked at the mate, 'I'm an idiot, I'm a fool, I'm a—I'm—I'm—I'm

THE MONITOR.
OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.
THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1886.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

On and after this issue, the several offices and editorial rooms of the MONITOR will be at 526 KEARNY STREET, (first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

Editorial Notes.

—Cardinal Haynald has initiated a subscription at Vienna for removing the remains of the late Abbé Liszt to the vault of the Franciscan Friars at Pesth.

—A Committee of sympathy with Mr. Parnell in his political labors is being formed at Catalonia. It has already received some 3000 signatures.

—A marriage is about to take place between Mlle Marie de MacMahon, only daughter of the Marshal, and Count de Pienson, son of the Marquis de Pienson, a former Signory in Waiting to the Empress Eugenie.

—It is stated that the use of the Presentation Order at Mitchelstown, Cork, have offered their estates for sale to the tenants under Lord Ashbourne's Act, at a seventeen and a half years' purchase, based on the valuation.

—It is rumored in the West that Rev. Father Fanning, of Ohio, Bureau county, Ill., is to be the first Bishop of Lincoln, Nebraska. He was a classmate of Archbishop Riordan, of this Diocese, and Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, at Louvain.

—We already anticipate the great pleasure which our readers will experience when they receive the forthcoming CARDINAL MOORTON which will be issued on Wednesday next. For the table of contents we refer our readers to the eighth page, where find a variety of titles which will contribute to make the best and brightest Christmas paper issued by the Catholic press of America.

—We thank our numerous contributors in advance for the taste and talent they have displayed in the several departments to which they have contributed, and we hope that the literary bread that cast upon the waters of the pure stream of Catholic literature may bring blessings a hundred fold upon each of them.

—The Nationalists have put forward Mr. Thomas Barry, of Kilmallock, and Mr. John Mandeville, of Cross of the Mitchelstown Board of Guardians, as available candidates for the Parliament of Queen's Northeast Cork, subject to Mr. Parnell's sanction.

—In a letter to Bishop Reynolds, of Adelaide, South Australia, His Eminence Cardinal Manning says: "You will be glad to hear that Ireland, in some form, will before long administer its own local affairs. I hope I may live to see it." Every friend of Ireland will heartily respond "Amen" to the great Cardinal's prayer.

—The next Consistory of Cardinals in Rome which was to have taken place this month, has been postponed until January, so that the Cardinal Archbishops of Quebec and Baltimore may be able to attend. At this Consistory Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau will receive their "red hats" from the hands of His Holiness himself, and the last ceremony attending their elevation to the Cardinalate will be ended.

—Pope Leo XIII. has charged Father Grisar of the University of Innsbruck, to write a history of Rome, chiefly with the object of confuting various assertions contained in the history of Gregorovius, with regard to the influence the temporal power exercised in the Middle Ages. All the literary treasures contained in the Vatican Library have been put at the disposal of the learned professor.

—The rapid increase in the value of land in the West may be illustrated by the fact that Creighton Catholic University at Omaha, Nebraska, has sold its property in Park place, adjacent to the Sacred Heart Academy for a consideration of $30,000. The rapid growth of the city may be judged from the fact that this property, when bought about six years ago by Rev. R. A. Shadlé, then President of the College, cost about $1,500.

—Some idea of the depopulation caused in Ireland by bad laws and British injustice, may be gleaned from the fact that in the year 1804, when the recently-deceased Bishop Delaney of Cork was born in Bandon, it was a prosperous city of 13,000 inhabitants, who were industriously employed, prosperous and happy. Now Bandon has hardly 6,000 inhabitants, and both people and property are going to decay together.

—A colloquoun from Ireland conveys the pleasing intelligence that Timothy D. Sullivan has been re-elected Lord Mayor of Dublin. O'Keefe, a solicitor, has been elected Mayor of Limerick. Both Sullivan and O'Keefe have pledged themselves to refuse any honors which may be offered by the Queen during the Jubilee year. John Dillon heads the list of candidates for the office of High Sheriff of Dublin. Alderman Richard Power has been re-elected Mayor of Waterford.

—We are glad to learn from our Irish exchanges that preparations have commenced in different parts of Ireland to have representatives selected to come to Dublin at the unveiling of the statue of the distinguished Dr. Cahill, the fearless champion, at home and abroad, of the religion and rights of the Irish people. We have no doubt that due honor will be done to the memory of that learned ecclesiastic, gifted scientific scholar, true patriot and brilliant orator of whom Ireland may well be proud.

—A very important Papal Commission has recently been added to the Papal Ecclesiastical Corps in Rome. His Holiness has formed a Commission consisting of Cardinals Darboichi, Schiaffino, Simeoni, Laurenzi and Cascchi, for the purpose of studying all questions relating to the Vatican policy. This Commission is to make a daily report to the Cardinal Secretary of State on all current matters, and to address a special report to the Pope himself should any very important question arise. Monsignor Agliardi is at the point of departure to China.

—Cabling from Ireland to the New York Herald, Mr. James O'Kelly makes this prediction: "Within a few weeks we shall be in the midst of conflict, for the Nationalist battle-cry will be 'This winter landlordism must die,' while the landlords will try with bayonet and bullet to collect their rack rents. On this occasion the Irish tenants will have behind them the sympathy and help of half the English people, and there is little cause to doubt that when the struggle closes Irish landlordism will have come to an end. The next three days will shape great events."

—The negroes of Georgia are not satisfied with having Justice blindfolded and prepare to put her eyes out altogether. The other day the son of a colored woman was before the Police Court for some trifling offence—probably hunting in the wrong apple Thanksgiving chicken. The old lady, in a humorous mood, scattered a quantity of cayenne pepper about the room. The judge adjourned the court in just five minutes, usually remarking as he did so, "Tchu, tchu, tchew!"

—A gentleman who has recently visited Germany says that the majority of the Bremen workmen are open socialists, but only a small majority are organized socialists, while a smaller but interesting fraction though they aim at social reform, are distinctly anti-socialists. Germany to-day has 11,000,000 workingmen, women and children struggling or longing to improve their not over blissful condition. Of this enormous mass hardly 200,000 are organized. Nearly half of these are or were affiliated with socialist societies. Bismarck takes a lively interest in German workmen, but he rules them with a rod of iron.

—Michael Davitt seems to be impressed with the hopeful idea that Ireland's freedom is nearer consummation than most people imagine. Speaking at Columbus, Ohio, recently, he said: "Mark my words, the next election will set Ireland free. Previous to the election, Lord Randolph Churchill intimated that the first movement of a Tory government would be the introduction of a measure to suppress the Irish organization. There has been no such measure, and he has also weakened in other candidates for the Parliament of Queen's Northeast Cork, subject to Mr. Parnell's sanction.

—In a letter to Bishop Reynolds, of Adelaide, South Australia, His Eminence Cardinal Manning says: "You will be glad to hear that Ireland, in some form, will before long administer its own local affairs. I hope I may live to see it." Every friend of Ireland will heartily respond "Amen" to the great Cardinal's prayer.

—The next Consistory of Cardinals in Rome which was to have taken place this month, has been postponed until January, so that the Cardinal Archbishops of Quebec and Baltimore may be able to attend. At this Consistory Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau will receive their "red hats" from the hands of His Holiness himself, and the last ceremony attending their elevation to the Cardinalate will be ended.

—Pope Leo XIII. has charged Father Grisar of the University of Innsbruck, to write a history of Rome, chiefly with the object of confuting various assertions contained in the history of Gregorovius, with regard to the influence the temporal power exercised in the Middle Ages. All the literary treasures contained in the Vatican Library have been put at the disposal of the learned professor.

—The rapid increase in the value of land in the West may be illustrated by the fact that Creighton Catholic University at Omaha, Nebraska, has sold its property in Park place, adjacent to the Sacred Heart Academy for a consideration of $30,000. The rapid growth of the city may be judged from the fact that this property, when bought about six years ago by Rev. R. A. Shadlé, then President of the College, cost about $1,500.

—Some idea of the depopulation caused in Ireland by bad laws and British injustice, may be gleaned from the fact that in the year 1804, when the recently-deceased Bishop Delaney of Cork was born in Bandon, it was a prosperous city of 13,000 inhabitants, who were industriously employed, prosperous and happy. Now Bandon has hardly 6,000 inhabitants, and both people and property are going to decay together.

—A colloquoun from Ireland conveys the pleasing intelligence that Timothy D. Sullivan has been re-elected Lord Mayor of Dublin. O'Keefe, a solicitor, has been elected Mayor of Limerick. Both Sullivan and O'Keefe have pledged themselves to refuse any honors which may be offered by the Queen during the Jubilee year. John Dillon heads the list of candidates for the office of High Sheriff of Dublin. Alderman Richard Power has been re-elected Mayor of Waterford.

—We are glad to learn from our Irish exchanges that preparations have commenced in different parts of Ireland to have representatives selected to come to Dublin at the unveiling of the statue of the distinguished Dr. Cahill, the fearless champion, at home and abroad, of the religion and rights of the Irish people. We have no doubt that due honor will be done to the memory of that learned ecclesiastic, gifted

THE MONITOR.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

On and after this issue, the several offices and editorial rooms of the MONITOR will be at 526 KEARNY STREET, (first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sep. 12—Third Sunday in Advent.
" 13—Monday—St. Lucy, Virgin and Mar.
" 14—Tuesday—Of the Octave. Cons. of Blessed Benedict, Monk, 480.
" 15—Ember Day, Fast.
" 16—Thursday—St. Eusebius, Bishop and Martyr.
" 17—Ember Day, Fast.
" 18—Expectation of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Ember Day, Fast.

CONFIRMATION NEXT SUNDAY.

The Sacrament of Confirmation will be administered in St. Peter's Church, Alabama st. near 19th, by His Grace the Archbishop, at half-past 3 o'clock sup p. Immediately after the Blessed Sacrament will be given to the Holy Ghost.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL SOCIETY.

Next Sunday will be the regular quarterly Communion day for the members of the City Conferences of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. The members of St. Joseph's Hall, St. Joseph's Hall, corner of Howard and Tenth Streets, at 7 a. m., and will meet at 7 o'clock in St. Joseph's Church in order to attend the 8 o'clock Mass in a body and receive Holy Communion. The members of the Conferences of St. Mary's Cathedral, St. Ignatius, St. Mary's, St. Peter's, St. Patrick's, St. Francis, St. Joseph's, Visitation, Mission and Star of the Sea are also invited to attend the 8 o'clock Mass and receive Holy Communion in a body. The members of the Conferences of St. Boniface and Holy Cross will meet at 8 o'clock Mass and receive Holy Communion in a body. The members of the Conferences of St. Peter's, Bernard's, Ignatius, Mary's, Mission and Star of the Sea are requested to be present at the Sunday School Entertainment.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT.

The annual Festival of St. Mary's Sunday school will take place in the Cathedral hall, on the afternoon and evening of the 21st inst., and from the interesting programme hitherto announced by the talented people of the Cathedral parish, we can assure all who patronize the Sunday School that they will spend an evening of pleasure and profit by witnessing the different tableaux and listening to the Literary and Musical exercises prepared for that occasion.

OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE.

The feast of Our Lady of Guadalupe next Monday will be celebrated in the Spanish Church, Bowlsay street, with the greatest solemnity.

There will be masses for Vespers on Sunday at 7 o'clock; on the Sunday Masses will be at 7 and 10.30 a. m., with sermons in Spanish by Father Gorrigo. For the evening at 7 p. m. Vespers, sermon and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

SODALITY ENTERTAINMENT.

The Young Men's Sodality and Library Association of St. Francis de Sales Parish, (Ind. Ind. not Ind Friday evening at St. Francis de Sales Hall on Sun Pablo avenue, and the following, performed by Thomas Hogan, Frank Pope, Nicholas Wheeler, Sergeant at-Arms, Jos. Dwyer, Sentinel, Jno. Mooney.

AND STILL ANOTHER PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

The Young Men's Sodality and Library Association of St. Francis de Sales Parish, (Ind. Ind. not Ind Friday evening at St. Francis de Sales Hall on Sun Pablo avenue, and the following, performed by Thomas Hogan, Frank Pope, Nicholas Wheeler, Sergeant-at-Arms, Jos. Dwyer, Sentinel, Jno. Mooney.

A SALUTATORY.

A salutatory from Dublin, Ireland to Mr. R. E. White of this city, conveys this intelligence: "Dublin's loss is San Francisco's gain. With all my respect due to them by a Committee of the Dail and Dublin Institution."

FATHER HENNEBERRY.

His Crowded Mission for Men at St Francis Church.

A very large congregation of Catholic men from all parts of the city were in attendance at the Mission which commenced last Sunday evening at St. Francis Church, Bowlsay street, Father Henneberry, opened with a sermon on the Sacrament of the Holy Ghost in San Francisco.

The speaking of Father Henneberry was merely devoted to an explanation of the great Infallibility of the Holy Ghost, and he exhorted those who heard him to continue in regular attendance during the mission. It made the good Father's heart and to see the vast number of people, all Catholics, who had neglect their spiritual training to pursue the ways and delights of the world. Man, he said, was not destined for this earth to spend his time in pursuit of pleasure, but was destined for a more exalted opposition. He was created in God's image and resemblance, and he was to be good and holy and to try to live like God, and his life, "Man has an right to be happy and his creator. Man has an right to be happy and his creator. Man has an right to be happy and his creator." Man has an right to be happy and his creator." Man has an right to be happy and his creator."

Family Fun.

Ready Retorts.

It is not given to everyone, perhaps fortunately for the general peace, to be as ready at retort, for instantly replied the grocer, when the following question is addressed by an artist:

"Don't you think it is about time I exhibited something?"

"Yes, a little talent, for instance," was the reply.

To a grocer who had retired from business it was said:

"My dear fellow, you are looking thinner; idleness does not agree with you."

"Well, no," instantly replied the grocer; "I don't weigh as much as I did."

Equally pertinent was the answer given by a great musical composer to a remark. When a youth he was a clerk in a very rich but exceedingly common place—in fact simply employer. One day an acquaintance commiserated the clerk upon his poor position, saying:

"What a pity it is you are not the master, and he your clerk."

"Oh, the master," returned the youth, "do not say that. If he were my clerk, when on earth could I do with him?"

"Did you get her photo when you were away? said one freshman to another.

"Well—oh—the fact is, "returned his companion, "she gave me her negative."

"How did you learn that graceful attitude?" said a gentleman to an intoxicated fellow lolling in a marble fashion against a post.

"I have been practicing at a glass," was the reply.

Why Doesn't He.

Arabella—Here he is, just where he's been for six weeks; why doesn't he speak? I'm sure I encourage him enough.

George—Here she is, as usual, wearing a costume which cost more than I can make in six weeks. How can I ask her to marry me, as it would be impossible for me to suggest her in the same language in which she now lives!

He Couldn't Have Done It.

At one time the Hon. Charles Thompson, the celebrated stammering barrister, had for a client a man who was accused of selling liquor unlawfully. The prisoner was on an opposite bank described as alcoholic, and his nose might have served as a beacon on Eddystone Lodge on the darkest night. The testimony was taken, and the case went to mail Mr. Thompson rose to make his plea.

"Y-y-your Honor," he began, "I l-look at the j-j-jury. G-gentlemen of the j-jury, l-look at his Honor. Y-your Honor, l-look at the p-p-prisoner. P-p-prisoner, look at his Honor. G-gentlemen of the j-jury, l-look at the p-p-prisoner. D-d-does he look as if he'd s-s-sell a p-p-p-pint of liquor to anybody?"

The argument was irresistible. The case of the second cotyledon of the Cedar tree! and Mr. Thompson triumphantly won his case.

The Naughty Wife.

In one of the cities that lie over against Boston there is a family whose musician head is a man who has won considerable wealth from humble beginnings not within those of Commodore Vanderbilt, with the difference that while he, like Vanderbilt, began at a business, he has expanded into the banking business instead of into the railroad business. Ever since he became a banker his manner with his boss matter with the past Washtaw of her husband's new occupation, and has advertised it on every possible occasion. The boss has seen features on the line which cross into her with all heart here, and smile when she enters the car and greatly utters her complaint:

"Conductor, let me of at my husband's bank!"

One day lately a tramplish-looking gill fellow with a red nose got on the car just as the banker's wife desired the signal order to the conductor. The old man watched her performance curiously, and then arose, pulled himself together, and called out with an imperiousness air that was irresistible:

"Conductor, let me of at my old woman's present coach!"

A roar went through the car, and "my husband's bank" has been alluded to more than ever since that time.

A Warning to Smokers.

A member of the Texas Legislature engaged the services of a colored man named Cook. It was not long before the legislator had occasion to remark:

"Look, it's very singular that I miss so many of my cigars."

"Korrect, yer honorable dat I tole yer when yer fust hired me dat I smoked, and you said I wouldn't smoke in de house?"

"But, great Cæsar! you didn't suppose I gave you permission to smoke up my cigars?"

"Whom sigars did you reckon I'd smoke? Dat's sigars, did yer say? Dat I set permission for smokin my own sigars?"

He Wept Scalding Tears.

Arabel Blank in Philadelphia born, and has been educated in a very select school for young ladies.

Last week Arabel's dear papa took her to Cape May point and while there he pointed out to her a flock of birds on the beach.

"There," said the old gentleman, as the flock rose in the air, "look at those birds, Arabel. They are curlews."

"Oh," cooed the maiden, opening her big, innocent blue eyes, "how lovely! how splendid! Just to think, pa! It was only yesterday that I was reading that dear delightful poem of Mr. Cray's which begins, 'The curlew tolls the knell of parting day' Only imagine those tiny creatures, pa, tolling a great bell. How very strange."

Then the old gentleman sat down on the damp, damp sand and wept sudden tears and howled until the people thought he had the cholera.

The Latest Proverb.

"Never put off till to-morrow what you can get your neighbor to do to-day, a lazy, fashionable young lady was heard to say recently.

What He Worked at During Summer.

"Say, Mister, don't you want a boy?"

"Are you out of work?"

"Yes."

"What did you do during the summer?"

"I took five onto fly-paper in druggists' windows; but fly time's over now."

Adventures of a Connecticut Parson.

An Essex clergyman recently attempted to enter his house late at night, having arrived home the only by green twenty by hour, without the knowledge of his family. A barrel under the pantry window offered him an easy mode of entering, and he sprang upon it. His foot had hardly touched at the head before it caved in, and he found himself plunged in a bath of soft soap. To extricate himself from his unpleasant predicament he was obliged to call for assistance, but before it was rendered he had a narrow escape from being shot for a burglar by a neighbor.

Farm and Home.

PACIFIC COAST CROPS.

Synopsis of Reports to the Department of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, November 20.—The Agricultural Bureau has received the following report from its agent in California as to the condition of the crops in that State. The conditions for the growth of corn have been favorable this season and a fair crop was made, with the quality a full average. Grapes are a fair average crop throughout the State as compared with a full crop. They have been favored with fair weather and the quality is very good. A few sections were visited by a light frost early in October, but no serious damage was done. Apples are not an average crop. Serious damage has been done in some sections by the codlin moth and stringent measures are needed for its extermination. Pears are a fair crop. They also were considerably damaged by the codlin moth. County correspondents in California, Oregon and Washington Territory report as follows respecting the corn crop in the counties named: California—San Luis Obispo—Corn is grown to some extent, but usually in mere fodder. Placer—An average crop. Butte—A poor yield, but good quality. San Benito—Very little raised, and that on low lands bordering the streams. San Mateo—Very little raised, except for green feed for milch cows. Tehama—Very little raised. Yuba—Crop not yet gathered.

In Oregon, Lane county reports an average crop. Douglas—Yield reduced, owing to drought. Linn—Short crop, owing to drought. Columbia—Crop somewhat affected by drought. Coos—Above an average crop. Yamhill—Average crop.

Washington Territory reports as follows: Skamania—The yellow dent corn "Pride of the North," received from the department was planted the 21 of June, and grew rapidly and formed fine large ears and matured before the rains set in this fall. Garfield—Very little corn is raised, but it is of five quality. Skaii—A good crop.

Returns have been received from the following counties: Alameda—Slightly damaged by the codlin moth. Contra Costa—Injured by the codlin moth. San Mateo—Good on the coast, but in the valleys damaged by the codlin moth. El Dorado—The fruit was badly worm-eaten and fell off before ripe.

On the subject of sorghum a correspondent in Sonoma county, W. T., says: "Seed sent by the department was planted on June 2nd, and it grew finely and matured, so we shall succeed in saving seed to plant another year."

Hop is thus spoken of by the county correspondents in California, Oregon and Washington Territory: California—San Luis Obispo—The crop is much larger than usual, and the quality is above the average. Fresno—There was a good crop, owing to the late rains in the spring, and it was cut and housed in fine condition. Fresno—The crop was of average quality, mainly alfalfa, and yielded from four to eight tonnes per acre in from three to five cuttings. Grass has yielded from one to two and one-half tons per acre. Humboldt—There was a lighter crop than was expected, but it was of fair quality. Alpine—The crop was damaged by too much rain in July. Butte—Good yield. Contra Costa—There was an unusual quantity secured and in good condition, the surveying indicate values of grain into hay. Kern—Alfalfa is the principal crop hay.

Oregon—Columbia—The crop was somewhat affected by drought. Lane—There was a poor crop, owing to drought. Yamhill—Only half a crop, owing to drought.

Washington Territory—Garfield—Very little tame hay is raised; wheat and barley are cut for hay. Walla Walla—Good crop. Skagit—Short crop, owing to drought.

A Terrible Punishment.

There is no lower pain or misery in life than that caused the parental heart by the ingratitude and crimes of bad sons and ugly daughters. The daily records of police courts show an appalling increase in juvenile crime, and in many cases the culprits are not the children of poverty, but the sons and daughters of parents who are intimate with the world and "fashionable society," as the saying is. Many children are brought to the theatre and sent to dancing school, and yet their parents wonder at their straying from the paths of virtue. These little children become "young ladies and gentlemen" sooner than readers and writers, and are accomplished in all the precious and vague of "polite and respectable society." They know the latest style of dress or the latest set of a dress coat. They can go through the most intricate figure of the latest dance, but ask them to recite the Apostles's Creed, or to make an Act of Faith, and they are astonished. It is true that they are sent to church on Sundays and holidays, but only to barely comply with the obligation of hearing Mass. Parents have a terrible responsibility. In the words of the patriot-pontiff, Archbishop Croke, "there are three things in particular which parents are bound to give their children—good example, wholesome admonition; or correction when they need it, and sound, reliable instruction in religious and secular matters," and if they do not discharge their duty they must not complain if a terrible punishment is their lot.

How Children Grow Good.

Good children are the greatest blessing which parents can have in this life, but they cannot hope to have them good unless they have been instructed in some goodness. The first and highest aim of Catholic parochial schools is to teach children true goodness.

It would appear surprising that after the Church of God declares Catholic children must attend Catholic schools, Catholic parents would refuse to obey the commandment in not that God Himself has given The Commandments to be kept and people refuse to keep them.

A benefit of Catholic parochial schools which cannot be overlooked is that pupils are obliged to go to confession and receive Holy Communion once a month. It may be said that parents who send their children to non-Catholic schools can send their children to receive these sacraments monthly, but the fact is they do not do so.

If parents were to turn their children out into the solid of winter without furnishing them with proper clothing, the world would denounce them as monsters of cruelty, but parents send their children out into the storm of life with their souls bare and naked of every virtue—without a vestige of Christian instruction to protect them, and the world never notices the injustice.

Remarkable Recovery of Treasure

The English divers did Capt. R. F. Stevens, Lloyd's surveyor, have recovered from Grand Canary river running a cargo of no less than £90,000. This amount was lying buried in 15 feet deep about a mile from the southernmost limit of the island, and went down about two years ago in the steamer Alphonse XII. The steamer had on board £100,000 worth of Spanish dollars on their way to Cuba. They were 80 gold pieces, and were specially mined for the long voyage, being the only £. pieces bearing the year 1881. The insurance on the money was effected at Lloyd's, and was paid over to the insurers after the vessel foundered. After a lapse of over a year Capt. R. F. Stevens and three English divers were sent out to try and recover the precious treasure. They succeeded in bringing up nine boxes containing specie of the value of £19,000 such, but the bags had could not be found, and the divers had to come away without it.

SCIENTIFIC TRUTH

Regarding the Functions of an Important Organ.

Of Which the Public Know But Little—Worthy Careful Consideration.

To the Editor of the Scientific American:—Will you permit me to make a few remarks in the public ear, facts we have learned during the past 8 years, concerning disorders of the kidneys and the urinary organs, which we have found always to rarely break down. You are conducting a scientific journal and no superfluous except in favor of Truth. It is useless to say an unauthorized journal of "Code" speaking would admit these facts for very obvious reasons.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Proprietors of "Warner's Safe Cure."

That we may emphasize and clearly explain the relation the kidneys sustain to the general health, and how much dependent upon them, we propose, metaphorically speaking, to take one from the human body, place in this washbowl before you, and examine it for the public benefit.

You will imagine that we have before us a body shaped like a bean, smooth and glistening, about four inches in length, two in width and one in thickness, and that it weighs in the adult male about five ounces, but is somewhat lighter in the female. A small organ? you say. But understand, the body of man at his best state, must contain about ten quarts of blood, of which every drop must pass through these organs every day, they may be called, many times a day, and when in a healthy state, it is purified, strong and fruitful; from apparent "fresh blood" to the jugular.

But the medical profession, learned and dignified, tell us that nine-tenths of all sickness and premature disease, by high sounding name, treat them alone, and patients die, for the actual cause was carrying also death to the affected parts, constantly, adding fuel to each fire, thus engorging, pouring, pelting kidneys which were in capacity, under very contraction itself, and which should have been cured first. But this is what all the kidneys have to do; for you must remember that each adult takes about seven pounds of nourishment every twenty-four hours to supply the waste of the body which is constantly going on, a waste equal to the quantity lifted. This too, the kidneys have to separate from the blood with all other decomposing matter.

But you say, "My kidneys are all right. I have no pain in the back." Mistake most. People die of kidney disease of so bad a character that the organs are rotten, and yet they have never have had a pain or an ache!

Why? Because the disease begins, as we have shown, in the interior of the kidneys, where there are few nerves to feeling to convey the sensation of pain. Why this is so we may never know.

When you consider their great work, the delicacy of their structure, the ease with which they are deranged, can you wonder that the ill health of our men and women? Health and long life cannot be expected when so vital an organ is impaired. No wonder sexes writers say we are degenerating. Don't you see the great, the extreme importance of keeping this machinery in working order? Could the finest engine with even a fractional part of this work, without attention from the engineer? Don't you see how dangerous this hidden disease is? It is lurking about us constantly, without giving any indication of its presence.

The en si skilled physicians cannot detect it in time. Before the disease, advanceness is examined by any means which we have at our command. Even an analysis of the water, chemically and microscopically, reveals nothing definite in many cases, even when the kidneys are nearly broken down.

Then look out for them, as disease, no matter how obscure, is fatal, to life, and as slow in its very death examinations, has its origin in the breaking down of those secretive values in the interior of the kidney.

As you value health, as you desire long life free from sickness and suffering, give those organs some attention. Keep them in good condition and thus prevent the usually dreaded disease.

Warner's Safe Cure, as it becomes you some year must known for its wonderful cures and its power over the kidneys, has done and is doing more to increase the average duration of life than all the physicians and medicines known. Warner's Safe Cure is a true specific, mild but certain, harmless but energetic and agreeable in the taste.

Take it when sick as a cure, and never let a month go by if you read it, without taking a few bottles as a preventive, that the kidneys may be kept in proper order, the blood pure, that health and long life may be your blessing.

H. H. WARNER & CO.

A Child's Banners at the Table.

Nothing attracts attention so much as a child's behavior. And good manners are so easily cultivated as bad ones, if parents will only begin right. Especially accepting as a child's bad manners at the table. As an adequate adverting to this subject truly says:

"There is no excuse for it. It is the parent's fault always. Children will behave in a quiet and pleasant manner if they are taught to do so from first. It is the little sinful must be present, in order that his mother may come to the table, for like have a neat piece of cut cloth under his plate and napkin, and be furnished with a napkin of large bib handiez. Every child likes to sit at the table, but he should be made to understand from the beginning that his behavior inevitably insures his removal to nurse. Nurse with the privilege of finishing his meal alone afterward when no one is present to be annoyed. An environment in of this kind will effectually produce a quiet, obedient and delightful child, leaving parents for his turn to be served and taking care of when in a proper for him to do so. Nurse must remember that each child's taste about seven pounds of nourishment every twenty-four hours to supply the waste of the body which is constantly going on, a waste equal to the quantity lifted. This too, the kidneys have to separate from the blood with all other decomposing matter.

But you say, "My kidneys are all right. I have no pain in the back." Mistake most. People die of kidney disease of so bad a character that the organs are rotten, and yet they have never have had a pain or an ache!

Why? Because the disease begins, as we have shown, in the interior of the kidneys, where there are few nerves to feeling to convey the sensation of pain. Why this is so we may never know.

When you consider their great work, the delicacy of their structure, the ease with which they are deranged, can you wonder that the ill health of our men and women? Health and long life cannot be expected when so vital an organ is impaired. No wonder sexes writers say we are degenerating. Don't you see the great, the extreme importance of keeping this machinery in working order? Could the finest engine with even a fractional part of this work, without attention from the engineer? Don't you see how dangerous this hidden disease is? It is lurking about us constantly, without giving any indication of its presence.

The en si skilled physicians cannot detect it in time. Before the disease, advanceness is examined by any means which we have at our command. Even an analysis of the water, chemically and microscopically, reveals nothing definite in many cases, even when the kidneys are nearly broken down.

Then look out for them, as disease, no matter how obscure, is fatal, to life, and as slow in its very death examinations, has its origin in the breaking down of those secretive values in the interior of the kidney.

As you value health, as you desire long life free from sickness and suffering, give those organs some attention. Keep them in good condition and thus prevent the usually dreaded disease.

Warner's Safe Cure, as it becomes

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRICE'S Famous California-Made CARYBE

For Christmas Presents.

From $7.50 to $45.00 For Sale

M. PRICE, Pioneer Cutler, Cutlery and Repository 411 Kearny St.

BUTTERICK'S PATTERNS.

Winter Styles.

CATALOGUE FREE. STAMPING PATTERNS Thus always, without charge. Call or send for a stamping outfit, stamping one to order.

H. A. DEMING, 114 Post Street, S. F.

MUNN & CO. PATENTS

After Prosecuting Over Twenty Years, Over 50,000 Patents have been obtained by this Firm. Hundreds of Patents are now being prosecuted in the Patent Office by this Firm. Patents are obtained on the best terms. Patents are obtained in less time than those who do not advertise. Inventors who are in doubt about the patentability of their inventions should write to us for our Pamphlet, which is sent free. It contains the Patent Law and Rules and Forms for obtaining Patents, and the cost of Patents in all countries. Information about Patents and Inventions is given in the Weekly Issue of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which is the largest and most widely circulated Scientific Journal in the world. Illustrated with splendid engravings, and published weekly. Terms, $3.20 a year. Specimen copies sent free. Address, MUNN & CO., Publishers of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, New York. Branch Office, Corner F and Seventh Streets, Washington, D. C. Hundreds of patents are allowed every week. Hundreds of inventions patented by us are announced in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK

Fabric Pads, as shown in the cut, are stamped with the Patterns of Flowers, Leaves, Scrolls, etc., and are ready for the Silk. Any Lady can do the work. Full Instructions, Stamping Outfit, Pattern Book, Silk, Fabric Pads, Needles, Thimble, Scissors, Embroidery Hoop, Frame, Etc., Etc., Sent Free to any address on receipt of 25 cents. Address, WASTE EMBROIDERY SILK CO., Boston, Mass. Mention this paper when you write.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, - - Proprietor

(Late Sonoma Hotel)

An Extraordinary Razor!

HAS BEEN INVENTED BY THE QUEEN'S CUTLERS, and is called the "QUEEN'S DELIGHT." It will last a lifetime, and shave (WITHOUT STROPPING and hone) any willing. It glides over the face like a feather, and shaves the most wiry beard. IT IS CREATING A GREAT SENSATION in Europe and America. Price, $1 50 each. Sent free by mail to any address on receipt of price. Address, JOHN ROGERS, 320 Kearny St., S. F. Agents wanted. Liberal discount to the trade. Mention this paper.

THE Queen's Own Company having enlarged their premises, are now making THE BEST CARVING KNIFE, TABLE and POCKET KNIVES at the price of $1.00 each. Ask for the make-mark "Q" on their manufacturer's celebrated Razor.

WARD & CO.'S

Male and Female

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE.

606 and 610 Clay Street, S. F.

ALWAYS TO BE HAD—FIRST-CLASS BOYS & Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Barnyard Hands, Gardeners, Cooks, Cooks, and Married Couples for private families and farms. Also, good reliable Female Help, without any charge to employers. Situations Wanted—Male and Female—Office Free.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

THE CELEBRATED SOHMER PIANOS

Are Unequalled in Tone, Touch and Durability.

Opera Piano—Best made, with metallic or wood frame.

Upright Pianos—Full Iron Frame, Overstrung Scale, Best Material and Workmanship.

Parlor Pianos—Full Iron Frame, Overstrung Scale, Best Material and Workmanship.

Sohmer & Co. are the largest manufacturers of Pianos in the United States, and have been for the past 15 years.

Warerooms, 308 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Factory, Cor. 3rd Avenue and 127th Street.

Pianos Tuned, Repaired and Exchanged.

Pianos Rented, Monthly Payments Received.

Pianos Boxed and Shipped to Any Part of the Country.

Pianos Sold for Cash or Easy Payments.

Pianos Sold Cheaper than Any Other Manufacturer.

Pianos Sent on Trial, Freight Paid.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Inspection.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Exchange.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Rent.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Sale.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Cash.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country on Easy Terms.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country on Trial.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Tuning.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Repairing.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Boxing.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Shipping.

Pianos Sent to Any Part of the Country for Delivery

POWER OF RELIGION AND PATRIOTISM.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

ing a political speech in the guise of a pastoral address to his clergy assembled in his cathedral, no more than I should be prepared to follow the example of that other eminent dignitary of the same church who regardless of the feelings of, at all events, some individual members, whether by accident, of his flock, embodied a denunciation of his own political views in the form of a prayer to the Almighty, which he publicly read for use in the churches of his diocese.

Politicians are very out in their place, but a church, whether cathedral or parochial, is not the place for them; and I trust that the day is far distant when we at all events shall be found thus acting, regardless of the impropriety of such a lowering of the pulpit or the altar to the level of a political platform (cheers).

FAITH AND FATHERLAND.

But here in this hall, and especially on this day, this feast of our saintly Archbishop, I should feel it hard indeed to conceive of any address that I would regard as more thoroughly in place than yours (loud cheers) You very promise here is a public and an emphatic expression of that combined sentiment of Irish faith and Irish nationality which, thank God, is as vigorous and as active amongst us now as it has ever been at any period in the history of the past. That we have to-day to give thanks for this—let us make unreadjustment of it—is no small degree due to the watchful prayers and intercession for us of St. Lawrence, our special patron, and of the other minted patrons of the Irish Church.

IRELAND AND ROME.

It is owing also to the constant unswerving fidelity of your attachment to the centre of Catholic unity, the holy See of Rome (cheers). That fidelity you have preserved without a rupture or a flaw, despite the efforts of those enemies of our nation, if not of our faith, who have not scrupled, sometimes by bold misleading statements, sometimes by the omission of a single item of action, to sow in your minds the seeds of suspicion, and of loss of confidence in the Holy See. In speaking to you then I have especially in mind a speech or statement which I have recently met with in a newspaper. It was delivered not many days ago by

A CERTAIN PROMINENT ENGLISH NOBLEMAN,

OUR ON OUR OWN FAITH.

In it he managed to convey, though he did not dare openly to assert, that the influence of the Holy See could now be secured for the advancement of English interests in Ireland (cries of Never). I am glad to hear that confident cry, for, believe me, it can never be; that is to say, it can never be secured by any effort to crush out a movement such as that of which the organization from which this address has been presented is here the local representative, in one, of course, the constitutional effort in which you are engaged for the restoration of your rights legislative (cheers). The nobleman to whom I thus refer seems to have conveyed to his hearers that the faithful of the Holy See is adverse to this national movement, and that the influence of that see, through the Sovereign Pontiff may soon be exercised, at the suggestion of an English Minister, to wither from all further expression of sympathy with that movement myself and other prominent ecclesiastics whom it is unnecessary for me to name. Now, of course, to constitute such ridiculous fictions. But is, I think, of course important that they should not be allowed to pass altogether without notice, and I have thought it my well to refer to the matter here to-day (cheers). I have brought here with me, as a human newspaper, the Monitor de Rome, which, I believe, is the Papal organ, and I have brought it that I may read for you a short article in reference to the political address of the Home Rule cause. It may be well to say to you that although it would be an exaggeration to speak of this paper as being exactly the "organ" of the Holy See, yet it is well known throughout Europe that no view is likely to be put forward in it of which His Holiness disapproves. For this article which I am about to quote has reference to the present convention of the English Liberal party at Leeds—the convention that was presided over by our late Secretary, Mr. John Morley (loud cheers). What, then, does the article say? I will read it for you.

THE HOLY SEE CANNOT CONTEMPLATE

"As we yesterday announced (it says) to the public that the Liberal party in the English Liberals has adopted a resolution pledging the Liberal party to make up whatever Ministry shall propose Home Rule for Ireland—to maintain that Ministry without finding until the question is finally settled" (renewed cheers).

"We congratulate the English Liberals on their fidelity to the programme of the party and of nationality, in view of the inability of the new Government to find a satisfactory solution of the problem, the Home of Home Rule is sources. The people of Ireland have shown that they can be patient and persevere in their present peaceful attitude without even their political representatives are now constrained to speak with respect."

(Loud and prolonged cheering). May I not (cheers) that you will totally fail (cheers) and be seen to fail (cheers) and be seen to fail (cheers). Fulfilling it, that is to say, maintaining your present attitude, and allowing yourselves to be driven one inch from your position, you will secure, remain for yourselves that sympathy which you now hold in such abundant measure, not only from all parts of Europe as well as America, the sympathy especially of the Holy See, the sympathy of the Holy See, the sympathy which necessarily cannot be regarded as throughout which it has been given to a people who, when forming to themselves their ideals of the proper type of Irish patriotism, have intended one from the line of Archbishops of this See, and in doing so have relied on the Holy See. In speaking to you then I have especially in mind a speech or statement which I have recently met with in a newspaper. It was delivered not many days ago by

A CERTAIN PROMINENT ENGLISH NOBLEMAN,

OUR ON OUR OWN FAITH.

In it he managed to convey, though he did not dare openly to assert, that the influence of the Holy See could now be secured for the advancement of English interests in Ireland (cries of Never). I am glad to hear that confident cry, for, believe me, it can never be; that is to say, it can never be secured by any effort to crush out a movement such as that of which the organization from which this address has been presented is here the local representative, in one, of course, the constitutional effort in which you are engaged for the restoration of your rights legislative (cheers). The nobleman to whom I thus refer seems to have conveyed to his hearers that the faithful of the Holy See is adverse to this national movement, and that the influence of that see, through the Sovereign Pontiff may soon be exercised, at the suggestion of an English Minister, to wither from all further expression of sympathy with that movement myself and other prominent ecclesiastics whom it is unnecessary for me to name. Now, of course,

THE HOLY SEE CANNOT CONTEMPLATE

to constitute such ridiculous fictions. But is, I think, of course important that they should not be allowed to pass altogether without notice, and I have thought it my well to refer to the matter here to-day (cheers). I have brought here with me, as a human newspaper, the Monitor de Rome, which, I believe, is the Papal organ, and I have brought it that I may read for you a short article in reference

Farm and Home.

California Raisins.

California is rapidly gaining first rank as a raisin producing country. It was reduced to a certainty that raisin grapes can be produced here with profit to the vineyardist at one and one-half cents per pound. It has been demonstrated that three pounds of Muscat grapes will make a pound of raisins. The cost of curing and boxing is estimated at one and one-half cents per pound, one cent per pound is allowed for freight, commission, etc., giving as the total cost of producing and marketing raisin grapes, one cent. This would pay all expenses and leave the producer $30 per ton for his grapes. At five tons per acre, an ordinary yield in Yolo county, it would give the producer a return of $150 per acre. It is estimated that the annual requirements of this market are 20,000 tons. It is also estimated that the production of this year will amount to 60,000 tons, leaving 40,000 for Eastern shipment. That there is no danger of overstocking the market may be gathered from the annual importation of foreign raisins into this country, which, for several years, have ranged from 1,000,000 to 1,300,000 packages, valued at 1,500,000 to 2,500,000 at New York alone. Here, then, would appear to be at least one branch of the fruit industry open to our farmers that has not been overdone, and is not likely to be for years to come. The curing of raisins, unless wine-making, requires no costly appliances. A piece of ground with a south surface, sloping to the south, and provided with movable covering to keep off rains and showers, is all that is required. Indeed, some of the finest raisins ever brought to this market have been cured upon the ground between the rows of vines upon which the grapes were grown. It is well settled that among the most experienced producers in the State that however superior machine-dried fruit of other varieties may be, the best raisin raisins are cured by sunshine.—Yolo Mail.

Healthy Underclothing.

In the choice of woolen underclothing Perkins says: The touch is a great guide. There should be smoothness and great softness of texture; to the eye the texture should be close, the hairs standing out from the surface of equal length, not long and straggling. The heavier the substance, is, in a given bulk, the better. In the case of blankets, the softness, thickness and closeness of the pile, the closeness of the texture and the weight of the blanket are the best guides. The non-conducting power of woolen fabrics insures under continual washing, the soft fibres shrink, become harder and less absorbent. In washing woolen articles they should never be rubbed or wrung. They should be immersed in hot soap suds, moved about, and then plunged into cold water; when the soap is entirely removed they should be hung up to dry without wringing. Nightdresses made of cotton are preferable. In manner a thin material may be chosen; for winter the so-called "cotton flannel" is the most comfortable. The night-dress should be long, loosely fitted and bottom easily about the neck. Those people who are habituated to sleeping with the arms uncovered (and in cold weather to be secured against chills by thick under flannels. All undergarments ought to be changed at night, and the under vest for night wear should be as warm as that employed during the day. The one removed on rising should be carefully aired with the bed clothing; during the night the other should hang over a chair near a window. To dress and undress in an intensely cold room is a hardship which should, if possible, be escaped. Wool does, so rapidly heating, are far better for chambers than those in which coal are burned; light kindlings soon warm them sufficiently, and the temperature quickly falls after the sleeper has enjoyed his sponge bath and is comfortably nuzzoned in bed.

The Largest Farm in the World.

In the extreme southwest corner of Louisiana lies the largest, paying farm in the world. It runs 100 miles north and south and twenty-five miles east and west, is owned and operated by a syndicate of Northern capitalists. Their general manager, J. B. Watkins, gives an interesting account of this gigantic plantation, which throws the great Dalrymple farm of Dakota into the shade completely. He was recently by a reporter at the St. James Hotel last night and asked to give the particulars of his gigantic enterprise. "The million and a half acres of land in our tract," Mr. Watkins said, was purchased in 1885 from the State of Louisiana and from the United States Government. At that time it was a vast grazing land for the cattle of the lumbermen of the neighborhood. When I took possession I found over 50,000 head of half wild bronco and cattle. My first work was to divide the immense tract into convenient pastures, establishing stations or ranches every six miles, the farm is alone root in the neighborhood of $50,000. The land I find to be best adapted to rice, sugar, corn, and cotton.

"All our cultivating, ditching, &c., is done by steam power. We have a track, my half a mile wide for instance, and place an engine at each side. These engines are portable, and operate a cable attached to four plowgs, and under this arrangement we are enabled to plow thirty acres a day with only the labor of three men. Our harrowing, planting, and other cultivating is done in a like manner. In fact, there is not a draught-horse on the entire place. We have, of course, horses for the breeders of cattle, of which we now have 18,000 head. The Southern Pacific Railroad runs for thirty-six miles through our farm. We have three steamboats operating on the waters of our own estate, upon which there are 300 miles of navigable waters. We have an ice factory, a bank, a ship yard and a rice mill."

Incubators a Failure.

So far as raising broilers and chickens for roasting is concerned, the incubator is emphatically a failure. The sale of incubators is principally confined now to the the new crop of experimenters that is always appearing in the community, who amuse themselves by figuring out on paper a short cut to fortune through raising chickens at wholesale, ignoring the mother hen, accepting only the egg, she lays. We can scarcely find a practical farmer who has purchased and used an incubator, who is satisfied with the system. A. C. Hawkins, of Lansdowne, the most extensive poultry raiser in the country, has no fault in incubators, but condemned their use as entirely entirely for his success upon the natural ways of the hen.

One of the most observant and most experienced dealers in poultry at Quincy market informs us that broiler chickens are decidedly inferior to those reared in a natural way. Their meat has an insipid flavor. It has a pale, sickly, unnatural appearance. The flesh is soft, like putty. Their physique may be likened to flowers and vegetables grown in the shade and artificially forced in the house. They lack keeping quality when dressed and placed on the market and will not command the highest price. Many first-class hotels will not buy them, though the chickens retain a good size. They seem to get a false start at birth, and always retain the artificial character so unfavorable in contrast with the strong, rugged, spontaneous hatched and reared in the natural way.—American Cultivator.

Family Fun.

Afraid He Doesn't Love Her.

Mrs. McSpillikins' mother is stopping with the family, and there is some little feeling. Johnny McSpillikins was reading a Texas paper about a man who had killed his brother. Johnny asked:

"Pa, is a man who kills his brother a fratricide?"

"Yes," responded Mr. McSpillikins.

"What is a man who kills his father?"

"A patricide."

"And when he kills his wife?"

"Uxoricide."

"And when he kills his wife's mother?"

"Justifiable homicide," replied McSpillikins, glaring at the old lady.

In Innocent Abroad.

It doesn't make any difference what his other name was, but he was a Congressman in Paris and he had never been there before. It is the custom in the city when a stage is full to put up the sign "Complet" and no more passengers can get in. Our Congressman wanted to see everything, and as these labled stages would pass him he would try to stop them; but this driver would shake his head and drive on.

"You can't get in any of those," said an English-speaking citizen who had watched his vain attempts.

"But I was one of them," he pointed.

"Take one of the other with fewer people in it. There's plenty of them," urged the citizen.

"You go to thunder," he said angrily, "I guess I know what I want. I'm in this town to see the sights. Everybody seems to go to Compiet, and I'm going too. If I have to wait a week to catch a 'bus with room in for me. That's the kind of American citizen I am, and don't you forget it."

The President's Favorite Song.

Since his marriage Mr. Cleveland has not worked so incessantly as his wont, and often nowadays spends his evenings in the drawing-room with the ladies, sometimes joining them in a song. His favorite air is "Will The Circle Be Unbroken?" "Home and be roses out a base when his wife sings it that as first made the doorkeeper in the vestibule think some bagpipes had come to the yard. A couple of Senators called the other evening when Le was hum-ing an unusually good time, and as they entered the vestibule he was on some very high notes. They looked at each other in alarm and then at the doorkeeper, who, amused at the expression on their faces, laughed outright.

"What on earth is that horrible noise?" exclaimed the one who first recovered his presence of mind.

"It's only the President singing, sir," replied the doorkeeper.

"Is he often taken that way?"

"Pretty near every night of late, sir."

"Then I reckon we'd better call during the day," observed the Senator, as they started toward John Chamberlain's club house to tone down their amazement.

Haw She Gathered George in.

"You look very much excited, dear," he said when she entered the parlor where he was waiting for her.

"Well, I should think I ought to look excited," she answered.

"Why, what is the matter, my darling?" he inquired as he did his arm around her waist and pressed a kiss on her lips. "Has anything happened?"

"Yes, I guess I tell you! She said you were only trifling with me, and that you would never pop the question; and I told her she did you a great injustice, for I believe that you would pop the question tonight. She said you would laugh at me, and you would, and we had it hot and heavy. Dear George, you will not let her triumph over me, will you?"

"Why, certainly not," answered George.

"I knew it, my darling," the dear girl exclaimed; "come, let us go to sis and tell her how much mistaken she was!"

And they did, and sis didn't seem to be very much broken down over the affair after all.

How Hoosiers Spark.

In the early times there lived in Indiana a man by the name of George Boone, a descendant of the celebrated Daniel Boone. He would have stood well in those days if there were giants in the land. If there were over such. He was near seven feet high, with large bones and muscles; his feet were large and his feet were of extreme size in length, breadth and depth. The following anecdote was one Boone used to relate himself with evident relish, after he became one of the State Senators:

I was about eighteen years of age when, for the first time, I took it into my head to go a-courting. One of my neighbors a few miles off had a pretty daughter that I thought would just suit me.

It was late in the Fall, and the weather pretty cold, still, it was too early to put on stoves for those primitive times. When the Sunday afternoon came I dressed in my best butternut-colored suit, made some six months before, but was sorry to find that the pantaloons reached only just below my knees and my coat stretched over me as tight as an eel skin dried on a hop pole.

I started barefooted, wading the creeks and muddy bottoms till I reached the house.

The family were about sitting down to supper and invited me to eat. Sally sat by my side. They had musk and milk and plenty of it. The old lady, who was doling out the pudding, told me to pass the bowl. I reached out my hand with the bowl, but I had made no calculation of the size of the table, the space between the big milk pitcher and the bowl, nor the width of my hand. With all my embarrassment I struck the milk pitcher in some way up upset it, and out when the milk over the table, Sally and myself. She jumped up and went shaking with laughter into the other room. I saw all was lost. I saw nothing more of her.

When the clock struck ten, the old lady said: "Mr. Boone, won't you wash your feet and go to bed?"

"Yes, ma'am," said I.

"Here is an old iron pot—all I've got that's fit," said the old lady.

I took the pot and found it so small that I could not get my feet in by sliding them in sideways. But I got them in. The water was hot and I soon found them swelling tighter and tighter; I couldn't get them out.

I said nothing, though the pain and agony was so great that the sweat rolled down my face. The clock struck eleven.

"Mr. Boone, are you done washing your feet?" sleepily inquired the old lady.

"What did this pot cost? I've got to break it, I ignorant.

"A dollar."

"Bring me the axe."

She brought it. I took the axe, broke the pot in pieces, handed the old lady $1, opened the door and started for home.

I never went there again.

CATHOLIC TEACHERS

Any institution or family in the city or country requiring a Catholic teacher can have their wants supplied free by sending to this office. We had over thirty young lady applicants for the position advertised last week, and twenty-one of them still remain unemployed.

THE GIANT OF MEDICINES.

The Most Effective and Popular Remedy Ever Discovered.

WHY IS IT SO EFFECTIVE IN SO MANY DIFFERENT DISEASES?

WHY one remedy can effect so many cases is this: The diseases have a common origin. Nine-tenths of all the human miseries, permanent and acute, all the diseases, Unlike any other organ in the body, the kidneys when diseased, must be free from pain, and the very fact that it is not painful leads many people to deny that it can be diseased. But Medical Authorities now know that it can gnaw with disease and yet give forth no pain, because it has few if any nerves of sensation, and these are the only means of conveying the sense of pain; thus unconsciously diseased it affects the entire system. We do not open a watch to see if it is going or is in good order. We look at the hands, note the accuracy of its time. So we need not open the kidneys to see if it is diseased. We study the condition of the system. Now then, KIDNEY DISEASE produces Any of the following Common and Unexpected SYMPTOMS: Back ache; Unusual desire to urinate at night; Flutterings; Dreary Death in water; Irritated, hot and dry skin; Pickle Appetite; Scalding sensations; Acid, bitter taste, with furred tongue in the Morning; Headache and Neuralgia; Abundance of pale, or scanty flow of like-colored water; Sour Stomach; Heartburn with Dyspepsia; Intense pain, upon sudden excitement, in the Small of the Back; Deposit of mucous same time after urination; Loss of Memory; Rheumatism, chills and fever and Pneumonia; Dropsical Swellings; Red or white brick dust, oftentimes not tube casts in the urine! Constipation, alternating with Looseness; Sleet breath, Pleurisy and Bronchial affections; Yellowish pale skin, etc.

Those are only the chief disorders or symptoms caused by a diseased condition of the kidneys. Now then, isn't it clear to you that the kidneys, being the cause of all these disagreements, if they are restored to health by the great specific "Warner's SAFE Cure," the majority of the above symptoms will disappear? There is NO MISTAKE ABOUT IT. It does cure many bad states of the system, especially as we have indicated. Now when the kidneys are diseased, the albumen, the life property of the blood, escapes through their walls and passes away in the water. Hence, when the kidneys are diseased, the life-giving albumen in the blood, that, circulating throughout the entire body, affects every organ, and produces all the diseases of the system.

Therefore, we say confidently that "Warner's SAFE Cure," THE MOST EFFECTIVE MEDICINE OVER DISCOVERED the human race. His the common remedy which, overcoming the common causes, cures the greatest possible number of evil effects from the system. Let us note a few of these diseases and how they are caused by kidney poison, and cured by

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

CONSUMPTION: In a great many cases Consumption is only the effect of a diseased condition of the kidneys. A diseased condition of the kidneys, if of long standing, causes the lungs to become diseased, and the tissues of the lungs are destroyed. Day your finger in acid and it is burned. Wash the finger every day in acid and it soon becomes a festering sore and is completely destroyed. The kidney poison acid in the blood has the same destructive effect upon the lungs. For this reason a great many persons who have been given up by the Physicians and have taken a journey in the Spring of the year, long fevers, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, etc., all seasons of the year, finally the action of the kidneys by "Warner's SAFE Cure," so many hundreds of thousands have recovered, and you will be surprised at the improvement in the condition of the lungs.

IMPAIRED EYE-SIGHT: Kidney poison with some persons has an especial tendency to affect the eyes, causing a slightly for the optic nerve, and through neglect or improper treatment, the eyes have become diseased, many persons have written us expressing their gratitude that after a thorough course of treatment with "Warner's SAFE Cure," their eye-sight has been vastly improved. In fact, one of the best scholars in the country says that half the pitiful that comes to him with bad eyes, upon examination he discovers are victims of kidney disorder. We have no doubt that the reason why so many people complain of failing eye-sight early in life, is that, all unconscious to themselves, their kidneys have been out of order for years, and the kidney poison is gradually ruining the eyes.

OPIUM HABITS: It is a well-known fact recently shown anew, that opium, ability to supplant morphine, cocaine, whisky, tobacco and other enslaving habits supplant morphine, cocaine, whisky, tobacco and other enslaving habits. In these organs the appetite is developed and unslaved, and the best authorities state, that the habits cannot be gotten rid of until the kidneys and liver are restored to perfect health. For this purpose, leading medical authorities, after a thorough examination of all claimants for the honor of being the only specific for those organs, have awarded the prize to "Warner's SAFE Cure."

RHEUMATISM: Every vegetable physician will tell you that rheumatism is caused by an excess of lactic acid in the system. With some it is lactic acid, or lithic acid, or liver poison. This acid condition is caused by inactivity of the kidneys, which should remove the poisons of the blood and excrementing organs. It affects the people more than any other disease, and the reason why it has been so baffling to cure is because the acid has been collecting in the system for years and finally the system becomes entirely acidified. These acids produce all the various forms of rheumatism. "Warner's SAFE Cure" has cured rheumatism by restoring the kidneys and liver, neutralizing the acid and correcting their false action, since many years of rheumatism. "Warner's SAFE Cure" has cured rheumatism, alternating with the use of "Warner's Safe Cure" complained the work.

BLADDER DISORDERS: that most of the bladder diseases originate in the false action of the kidneys, causing them to secrete a gritty deposit, running through those organs inflamed and eventually destroyed the inner membrane, producing the intense agonies of the bladder, and infinite pains in the kidney in the form of travail, which is to descend to the bladder producing kidney colic. Almost all these ailments, with the use of "Warner's SAFE Cure" have proved thousands entirely free from all of these ailments.

WEAK BACKS: Kidney Weakness and other Diseases of the kidneys and liver, strengthen the back, and relieve the tenderness in the loins, the pain of aches and stiffness. It challenges comparison with all other remedies in this work. Buy to-day.

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

CONGESTION: Congestion is a collecting together of blood in any one organ or part of the body. Congestion is a form of nervous action in any organ the blood vessels constrict, the blood flows to the place. Hence congestion of the kidneys very long the collecting blood clots and eventually destroys the organs. Many persons are unconscious sufferers of this very common common cause, and have determined as it is to force blood into every part of the system, has in work harder to get it through the diseased kidneys than to force it everywhere in the heart beats. Congestion and palpitation, excessive action, rush of blood to the head, distressing headaches, delirium tremens, Congestion has become chronic and is doing cause to the entire system. Congestion of the kidneys is one of the commonest of complaints and is the beginning of much chronic misery. "Warner's SAFE Cure" is all removed.

FEMALE COMPLAINTS. What we have said about Congestion applies to Kidney Diseases, and Prolapsus Uterus, Inflammation and Ulceration, Leucorrhœa, Irregularity, Painful and Suppressed Menstruation, Dragging Pains, Flatulence, Dizziness, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability, Hot Flashes

IRELAND'S PATRIOT DEAD.

Beautiful Letter from Archbishop Croke.

Mr. John O'Brien, Hon. Secretary of the "National Monument's Committee," 41 York street, Dublin, has received the following important letter from his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel:

THE PALACE, THURLES, Dec. 2.

"My Dear Sir:—I agree fully with you in thinking that it is not at all to the credit of the Irish Nationalists to have suffered the remains of Ireland's patriots whom you name in your letter, just recalled, to be so long in Glasnevin Cemetery without some suitable monumental over them—express or limit, some token for the dead and some public acknowledgment for their self-sacrificing devotion to their native land.

"I am well aware, to be sure, that it has been said of them (as it has been repeatedly said and written of the Young Irelanders of 48—and of all who sympathized with them—) that their mission was a Quixotic one—a dead and discredited failure; that, however personally brave and gifted, their prudence and judgment as a party were wofully at fault; that there was no proportion, whatever, between the end they aimed at, and the means at their disposal to attain it; and, that, therefore, the very best which even Irish patriots could reasonably vouchsafe to them would be—not, indeed, a movement in bronze or marble—but simply the charitable silence of posterity.

"I yield, I think, to no one in my admiration of the men who are fighting in the battle of our country—who have suffered, and are prepared to suffer, obloquy and misjudgement in her cause; whose consolers opportunities for the last forty years, (very constitutional ones) have unhinked within the bound of sanity in Irish hearts, the spirit and aspirations that are thought to be alien to the free; who have preached and propagated the unpopular doctrine, that the land of Ireland belongs to the whole Irish nation, for the Irish people, and not a paltry and pampered few; and that in his the first claim to the soil when he laboriously tilled it and made it fruitful.

"But, at the same time, no one who was a full sympathy with that earlier generation of patriots, whose youthful enthusiasm triumphed them, where there was a quarter of a century ago,—to risk life and liberty in the hallowed name of Ireland, will be most grateful to me, on reflection, to know and feel that even the most damaging defeats of the epoch in a nation's life have often been the incentive to many an ample, and that too sentimental and—even unphap in sorrow,—but frequently matured into a harvest of plenty and delight.

"Then, I believe it has come to pass that Mitchell's Jail Journal, Duffy's deep historic research and organizing skill, the lethal poetry of Thomas Davis, the sympathy poem, and Meagher's entrancing oratory—to say nothing of the sad-starring, yet eminently instructive lessons that were really imparted to us by our fathers, through the columns of the old Nation, though they failed to arouse into needful activity the slumbers to which they were addressed,—far from being lost on succeeding generations of Irishmen, they have, silently, but effectively led up to the conscious of our own days, and that at last, have borne ample and most valuable fruit.

"It is like summer, the buds, blossoms and deeds of daring so conspicuously associated with the abortive rising of 67 (though in many respects be deplorable) will yet be being barren, in lasting or beneficial results; and the school of the men who chiefly figured in the memorable scenes of that eventful year should not, therefore, be allowed to remain unhonored, any longer, on Irish earth.

"I am glad, then, to learn that your committee is about to erect a monument in Glasnevin Cemetery, over the remains of Thomas Francis Meagher, Kickham, Luby, and others, and I pray you to accept the subscription of £5 from me as my subscription towards it.

"I am, my dear sir,

"Your very faithful servant,

"+ T. W. CROKE,

"Archbishop of Cashel.

A Champion of Catholic Education

New that Catholic schools are springing up all over the country and that the Catholicity of school-rooms is considered as many as our schooltime, even among the non-Catholics, is so greatly indebted to many those who labored in the cause when labor-ers were few and prospects dark, it is meet at once renew to the minds of all who have benefited by the development of the school question during the past half-century the memory of the Rt. Rev. Bernard J. McQuaid, Bishop of Rochester N. Y.

Over 30 years ago he was in pastoral charge of the Catholic congregation of Utica, N. Y. They were mainly poor and without influence. The anti-Catholic element was strong, fierce and active. Any priest in his place, even at this late day, would certainly be excused from the decree of the Baltimore Council concerning school-building. The young priest was the head of a school, through school-building and teachers were a first cost of the premium. He turned the priest's house into a school and himself became the teacher. Later he was called to the hand of Bishop Bayley in founding a complete system of religious teachers and establishing a diocesan school system for the new diocese of Newark, which then included the whole State of New Jersey. He was also founder and first president of the Seton Hall College.

There are now nearly 30,000 children in the Christian free schools in the dioceses of Newark and Trenton; and a few weeks ago Bishop McQuaid presented at the laying of the cornerstone of a new and magnificent school in Morristown, where long ago he gave an important address of his earnest zeal in the cause to which his whole life has been devoted.

Appointed Bishop of Rochester in 1868, he found the new diocese, except for a few little confessions in his episcopal city, destitute of schools. In the face of difficulties which would have deterred even a lofty resolute spirit, he set at repeating on a new field the work he had done so successfully in New Jersey; and in little more than ten years the entire diocese was provided with a free schools, which magnificent judges have pronounced unsurpassed in America.

During this time his articles in the North American Review, the Journal of Education, the New York Independent, etc., attracted wide attention. He was looked to as the foremost champion of Catholic education from the Catholic standpoint, and in recognition of many and urgent invitations he curved on this theme in the principal cities of the Union.

Readers of the Pilot will remember his lecture, ten years ago, in Boston, at the invitation of the Free Religious Association (Free Thinkers). He then expressed his conviction that the equitable settlement of the school question would come from Boston and Massachusetts, which in the very outset of their history made religion the cornerstone of education. The recent eminent utterance of President Eliot, of Harvard University, and a prominent Boston newspaper's acknowledgment—quoted in a late issue of the Pilot—of reason in Catholic demands, and the wisdom of concceding something to them, begin to give to the Bishop's words the prophetic aspect.—Pilot.

Sermons.

If success be the true test of merit, it is a settled fact "Brown's Bronchial Troche have attained for the prompt relief of Coughs, Colds and Throat troubles. Sold only in boxes. Price 25 cents.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ARMAGH.—As from Lisburn to Lurgan and Armagh and around the eastern side of Lough Neagh, so from Armagh to Monaghan and Omagh, and from Cookstown to Bangsacon, and to Lough Neagh's western shores, the same sad story, with slight,—very slight, variation indeed, greets the wearied and worried inquirer's ear. Agricultural depression is in every possible phase, without a solitary redeeming feature or a single countervailing circumstance, in the exceptionless rule. One hears of Russian mains driving out Canadian and American maize or making them cheap, or Indian wheat of unsurpassed quality arriving in increasing volumes of money-lenders, mortgagees, arrears of rent, unsalable farms; withheld credit on the part of large farmers, towards small ones, and flour-shopkeepers towards large and small alike. There is, unhappily, a further element of moderness, which, some two months ago, could hardly be expected, and of which there were then few indicatiqns, but which of late has assumed increasingly alarming dimensions. The potato crop is universally admitted, even strongly, to be short, half the value of the crop for 1885. This is understood to be the result of the very unfavorable weather and the backward season, but especially of the disastrous floods of the last three or four weeks throughout the entire valley of the Black water, and the valley of the Gallan, the potato crop is either lying under water or canned beneath the soil, in a quantity recently dug out turned out to be utterly rotten, and in a state in which an even pigs would eat them.

Mrs. Garrett, of Annaglanaon, attempted, last month, to sell her farm of 60 acres, with efficient grazing, at a solitary offer. The farm could easily have been sold for £800 about six years ago, and for half as much again seven years before that. Two years ago the tenant-right on land, of much the same quality, in the same neighborhood, was sold at £25 per acre. On an estate immediately adjoining Colonel Waring's, about three miles from Banbridge, and on the lowland of Clara, fair farmers, natives of English, Murray, Dickson, and Urry, attempted to dispose of their tenant-right. Their farms are all good ones, varying from 18 to 25 acres, and therefore within the purchasing power of comparatively poor men. Yet, not as much as an offer was made for either of them. And, it is remembered, there is no so called illegal combination of farmers, the district being thoroughly Orange, Protestant, landlord-loving, and loyal.

CORK.—At the Conskilty Convent, on Nov. 30, the solemn ceremony of profession took place, when Mary Ignatius, Religious Sister M. Ganley, daughter of the late Dr. Curran, of Youghal, made her solemn vows.

The tenants of the Blennerhasset estate have adopted the "Plan of Campaign," and removed all their rents and property off the lands.

The Mallow Board of Guardians have adopted a resolution to extend the "boycott" to evicted tenants and destitute landlords."

The usual monthly meeting of the Cork diocesan Clergy, took place on Dec. 13, in the Cathedral. The Bishop, the Dean, and all the members were present, with the exception of Canon Barry, P. P., Glounthane, who was absent through illness. The meeting was signalized by the formal installation of Dr. O'Callaghan as Bishop of Cork. The Papal Bull authorizing his consecration as Coadjutor Bishop of Cork, with right of succession to Dr. Delaney, was read to the assembled Canons and Rev. Rochfort, Dean of Cork, who presided, which was signed by the Pope, and bearing the seal of the Vatican, of the Diocese of Cork. The Bishop, robed in full canonicals, was then conducted to the throne, where, for the first time, he took his seat.

On Nov. 27th, the memorial to the late Very Rev. Canon Buckley, P. P., that had been designed and wrought by Mr. John Davis—a rising young sculptor of College Street, Cork,—was erected and unveiled in the church recitunce at Bottlevaul. The memorial in question has taken the form of a double-faced Celtic cross, one side of which over the church where the departed priest had ministered so zealously. The other looks out upon the street, as once attending attention by his graceful and stately appearance, and by the rich carving and pointed beauty, rendered a memento wrought with finished touch by the deft and cunning chisel of the artist. The cross upon a double limestone bloth, on which rests a well-cut base of Beaumont granite, in which are inserted one front and two side panels of white Carrara marble.

Mr. James Elvin Flynn, J. P., Kilmine, Cork, died suddenly on Nov. 25th. Mr. Flyn contested the representation of Cork at the general election of 1874.

The residence of the Irish Capuchin province has been removed from Rochestown, County Cork, to Kilkenny, and has the parsistery school, in the latter city, under the direction of Father John Sexe, has transferred to Rochestown.

Alderman John O'Brien, who has been selected as National candidate for the Mayoralty of Cork, for 1887, was sent to gaol for three months with hard labor a few years ago for an inflammatory speech delivered at a National League meeting in Bantry.

DONEGAL.—General James Trodine, who has granted Creely a reduction of 30 per cent. in the rents in his estate at Ardara, County Donegal, has for great popularity with the parish priest with the foregoing result.

DOWN.—Sir Richard Wallace is announced to have given £10,000 towards the erection of an Episcopalian church in Paris The Belfast Echo reminds Sir Richard Wallace that charity begins at home.

On the Downshire estate, where the tenant-right used to fetch from £30 to £40 per acre, the tenantry have just applied for a rent reduction, and been refused. "We are paying for our loyalty," said one old fellow. "We may get tired of doing so one of these days."

DUNGANNON.—Mr. Thomas Dickson, Dungannon, has received a letter from the Estate of Lord Dunraven, and held a meeting on Nov. 30th, and resolved to ask the landlord for a reduction of 25 per cent. The tenants on the estate of Captain Douglas are having political issues with their landlord, and asked a reduction on the rent-day. The tenants' request was refused, and they left without paying anything.

MAYO.—On Nov. 26th, Mr John Dillon and Mr. Wm. O'Brien, attended at Ballinglosheen the day having been appointed by Mr Hinnes for the collection of the rents by Mr M P. Hussey, on land Dillon's property. Nearly 6000 people were present to meet the popular leaders. The rent-collector, introducing a number of clergymen, waited on the agent and demanded a reduction of 25 per cent, which was refused. The tenants then begged to pay; but helped it in the hands of trustees. The result being that, while the agent did not get one shilling, the popular leaders received over £6,000.

The work of reconstructing the bridge at Moinvaine (Angelica) the ratios of this town on the road between Glenamay and Portarlin—the latter, one of the finest fishing stations in Mayo—is progressing satisfactorily. In the midst of a populous district where the swelling of the mountain streams frequently interrupted traffic and communication, seriously inconvenience the poor inhabitants, the work will prove one of very great utility and a worthy monument of the kind-hearted lady who originated it. The bridge will be a white marble slab with the following inscription: "Annie Brady Bridge. Erected by public subscription, A. D., 1886. Through the exertions of the lady whose name it bears, Annie, wife of Sir Thos. Brady, J. P., her Majesty's Inspector of Irish Fisheries, the bridge was erected. The idea occurred of her first crossing this ford she felt for the sufferings of the poor Irish in when her heart was ever open, and determined to procure the requisite funds to carry out the work. It pleased the Almighty to take her to Himself before this, her labor of love, was completed. She died on the 17 of June, 1886, beloved by all who knew her. Her husband, who undertook to complete the work, and it is thought it will be more than £100 more to complete it. Excavations had to be made to a depth of fourteen feet in order to find a suitable foundation. The design of the bridge is by Mr. Glover, late County Surveyor for South Mayo.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.—The solemn ceremony of the profession of Nun of Charity took place at St. Brigid's Convent, Abbeyleix, on Nov. 30th. The young lady professed was Miss Anastasia Kinsella (in religion Sister Mary Lesetan), daughter of the late Patrick Kinsella, Leighlin.

BOROKMORE.—Mrs. M. Magann, of Kilnaboy, Lanigbel, has given a reduction of 30 per cent. to the tenants on her property, near Lanesboro, County Roscommon, which is considered satisfactory, as the grass could not be valued in the ordinary manner, and she has also offered to accept the amount of the rent in three years, reducing the present rent to £50 in 30 per cent., and which most of the tenants are willing to pay.

On Nov. the 28th, the remains of the late Rev. Wm. Magrath, P. P., Killoyer were removed to the parish chapel, Killoyer, the following clergymen were at assisting at High Mass—Celebrant, Rev. Michael O'Connor, Ballyfarnon; Deacon, Lynch, C. C.; sub-deacon, Rev. J. Neary, C. C.; master of ceremonies, Rev. M. McKeogh, C. C. The mass was sung by the parish priest, Rev. Wm. Magrath.

MAYO.—A valuable and elegant vase was won in the West Ward of Sligo Bor. on Nov. 30th. Two Nationalists not hold the places, in the Municipal representation of that Ward, which were lost for the last three years by Parnell. Three latest accession to the National Party in the Sligo Corporation, gave that party a decided preponderance. Of the 18 burgesses who came to the polls beneath 50 were Nationalists and 47 were Tories. The Nationalists were Mr. Kenton 56; Mr Chrystal 5; for Mr. McHugh mayor, 47 for Mr. Nolan; and voted for Mr. Chrystal, 52 for Mr. McHugh, and 5 for Mr. Fenton. All the Tories voted for Mr. Fenton; 7 for Mr. Chrystal and 1 for Mr. McHugh.

The Hon. Evelyn Ashley, the proprietor of the Palmerston estate in the county Sligo, and which is situated along the coast between Sligo and Ballyshannon, was lately waited on by his tenants to request a reduction in the rents due on the 1st of Nov. Mr Ashley has been for some time residing at Classybawn, and a deputation of some of the leading tenants waited on him, and asked him for a reduction of rent. They received their representations with attention, and promised to give a reduction of 5s on all judicial rents fixed by the Sub-Land Commissioners, and to the greater part of tenants who did not go into the Land Court.

WATERFORD.—The tenants on the property of the Hon. Maurice Smith, Ballycarry, co. Waterford, have adopted the "Plan of Campaign" in good earnest. Some years ago, on the Ballycarry estate, which is very extensive, quite half a dozen tenants who have not adopted the "plan" have left the place, and the rents of those who have hitherto held aloof will fall into arrears with their fellows, if they do so.

SYSTEMATIC.—Miss Beckett, of Sidebrook, Rathfarnham, in the county Wicklow, widow, was, on the 23rd of Nov. 1886, married.

Mr. James Tuite, M. P., writes as follows of the Birthwalk Tenants to the Editor of the Dublin Freeman:—In the year 1881, I addressed a letter to the Lord Lieutenant asking an inquiry into the case of the Birthwalk tenants. After the lapse of three weeks I have received a reply in the usual Castle phraseology—that Mr. Excellency, having given the matter his most attentive consideration, and carefully which he had received from the preceding Viceroys—namely, that the law must take its course." Injury is again aggravated, but the facts upon which I based my claims to an inquiry remain unrefuted. However, my constituents and the friends of the primary may rest assured that the case of these cruelly wronged men shall not rest here, and that I shall take the earliest opportunity of again exposing in the House of Commons the treatment of these unfortunate men.

WEXFORD.—The following clerical changes have been made in the diocese of Ferns—Rev. T. Sparkes, C. C., Enniscorthy, to be P. P., Tullycanor; Rev. T. Fallon, to be C. C. Enniscorthy; Rev. Hanlon Walsh, to be P. P. Ballyragget; Rev. Jas. Byrne, C. C. Ballyragget, to be C. C. Enniscorthy; Rev. Henry Cleary, C. C. Enniscorthy, to be C. C. Ballyragget.

On Nov. 26th, the large tannery establishment of Messrs. Thomas Doran and Co., Priary street, New Ross, was burned down, involving a loss of £3,000.

The project of erecting a parochial house for the Parish Priest and Curates of St. Mary's, New Ross, being seen started under ecclesiastical auspices in a manner to be carried out cheerfully and promptly by the laity.

On Nov. 9, the Most Rev. Dr. Browne, Bishop of the diocese, received into the Community of the Christian Brothers, Brangane, Miss Isabella Morris, of Sacrries, in the Archdiocese of Dublin.

Fleets Gifts

Fleets medicine with equal caution. Fleets Bottles for Fleets Gifts Fleets Gifts Fleets Gifts

Poetry.

THE PRICELESS THINGS.

These are valgar things we pay for, be they cheap (or or of terms of sleep;
While the precious and the peerless are neglected symbolic things

Gentle deeds are scorned and cancelled, weighed and measured out for gold;
But the debts from man to man, their account is never told.

Always, see, the noblest actions keep their highest price unknown;
Cheapness's dandelion lion frowned above unlettered stone.

Ah, the Greeks knew; Come their victors honored from the sacred games,
Under orchos red with roses, flushed to hear their shouted names;

See their native cities take them, broach the wall to make a gate!
What expense reward is theirs who bring such honors to their Thebes!

In the forum stand they proudly, take their prize from the priest;
Little crowsfoot pine and parsley on their sacred temples press!

We in later days are lower! When a manful stroke is made,
We must make a price to pay it—making manhood a trade.

Sacrifice Swift grows venal—surely Midas will shortly
And the shallow souls are gratified when worth scoops the bribe.

But s'en here amidst the markets, there are things they does not price,
Dollars hide their useful faces when they meet anointed eyes.

Lovers do not speak with jewels—flowers alone are plied for them
And our frequent memory cherished is far dearer than a gem.

Statesmen owe the nation safety; artists pass the bowing test;
And their country pays them proudly with a ribbon at the breast.

When the soldier wins the battle, wraps the flag around his heart;
Who shall discourse his honor with the values of the market?

From his gaze of honor we how a piece, and carry in a rolm,
For the pale he gave who provokes, as napoleon with those to a magnet yet ornamental.

When the poet sings the love song, or the song of life and death,
Till the workers come their toiling with abated, wondering breath;

When he stirs the mill and mine, inspires the slave to rise and dare;
Lights with love the obscure garret, bids the tyrant be beware;

When he stands the pang from poverty with the local Nationalist newspaper, and, ending his eye over the column, stopped at one particular paragraph, to which he invited the attention of his guest.

"Major," he inquired, "is there any truth in this story headed 'The Dunmoon Warrior and the Jackass'?"

"Not that I know of," replied the major, as his steady, filmy eyeballs lodged out in anticipation of a suspected unpleasant revelation. "I don't know who the blackguards can mean by a Dunmoon warrior. Of course I have to attend drill at the fort whenever that measly scum of papist rebels styled the Wexford militia are called out for their annual training.

"Listen to this," said Macalister, adjusting his spectacles and beginning to read.

"A few nights ago, as a will lonely man, a common major was returning home at a rather advanced hour after paying a visit to a sympathetic Shoneen, one of Shawn Fadhem's mob-lawyers insisted upon entering into a practical discussion with this gallant son of Mars on the much-talked-of subject of physical force. After a few brilliant rounds in the dark the barbeen or the unshod heels of the jackass proved too mighty for his military opponent, and had not the brave scuffle attracted the attention of a Sub-Constabular, who came quickly on the scene, consequences might have proved fatal. We understand the cover of this bloodthirsty quadruped will be remanded to allow of the next Petty Sessions at Enniscorthy for allowing his donkeys to wander, unguarded, on the public road."

"Don't believe one word of it, sir," cried the major in a violent burst of simulated indignation. "I can't guess who it is the rascals intend to lampoon; but, at the same time, I think it only right that I should tell you I shall be seriously compliant with my friend Captain Caldicott against the vile rebel Shawn to prosecute for allowing those lazy, starved, wicked-looking brutes of his to wander at large on the public roads. There's one friend of yours," continued the major, "who wouldn't have the time to see the rascals turned out on the roadside."

"Who's that?"

"Our new rector, the Reverend Silas Lawson."

"Why, what did he do to him?"

"Oh! nothing very much," replied the major, as he rumbled out for the major-lounge and dropped a white lump into his tumbler of toddy. "I know he meant to act the guided but still well-meaning curate to bring the light of the Gospel into the hovels of those benighted, priest-ridden papists. Well, sir," continued, the major, as he proceeded to crush the face-disentangling sugar lump, "the rector had the misfortune to meet this lazy rascal Shawn Fadhem on his rounds, and from his unkempt and forbidding appearance, it struck the innocent clergyman that he would be a good subject to make a commencement on for the spread of Evangelical Truth. He stopped the blackguard and inquired if he had any family dependent on him. 'I have, yer riverence,' said the low scoundrel in a whining, hypocritical tone. 'I have nine in family, sir'—Alluding, we and I, Sandy, knew the rascal hasn't wife or child save his infernal donkeys. 'Do you ever read the Bible, my good man?' inquired Mr. Lawson.

"'The divil ever—'

"'I beg your pardon, major, broke in the host. 'Speak easy. The last word of oyours, if it caught Mrs. Macalister's ears, might not be very pleasant. You know this is the Sabbath evening.'

"'Excuse me, Sandy. I was, perhaps, carried a bit away by the thought of that low villain's cursing, and you know, I was quoting the exact words of Mr. Lawson himself, who told me the story.'

"'All right; go on.'

"'Well, the rector asked him why his family never read the Bible. Dickens, said the double-distilled ruffian, 'they can't read, yer riverence. They don't know it from a bull's-fut.' So, to make a long story short, after further questions on the part of the misguided, unsuspecting rector, and further lying answers on the part of this knowing, deep-plotting villain, Mr. Lawson made an appointment to make a morning call at the rascal's cabin.

"'Rather foolish of the reverend gentleman, I should say,' said Macalister. 'He should have asked some of us about the fellow's character.'

"'That's just what I said to Sandy—my very words. But, as Mr. Lawson told me, the low impostor looked as simple as he scratched his scrubby, foxy poll and asked the reverend gentleman if he knew of any chapter on industry—on industry, as he called it—in the Bible, that the innocent clergyman was fairly taken in. As Mr. Lawson told me, quoting the impostor's own identical words, 'it would look a charity for you, yer riverence, to read a chapter or two on industry to those lazy allyamus o' mine, to try an' induce them to do a stroke or two o' work, for they'll do nothin' for me,' says the low villain, 'but set their mudcaps on their theeves fa in the dirt from morsun till night.'

"Well, major," interrupted the host, "your friend was caught in the trap. I presume he visited the cabin prepared to read the lecture?"

"Not only that, Sandy, but he actually did read a large portion of a suitable epistle from Paul; and as his sight is naturally weak and the cabin was so dark, he actually have probably gone on reading, I do not know how long, were it not that one of the donkeys indulged in that illt of braying."

"You don't want to say he actually read the Bible to the donkeys?"

"I regret to say that he did. They were inside a kind of few partitions, over which their heads alone protruded; and as it was very dark and Mr. Lawson was very anxious to get in some Scripture reading, he did not perceive the deception which had been practised on him until he heard the first roar of his jackass!"

"I am sorry for the reverend gentleman, major, that it ended so unfortunately," said Sandy, with a smile he won't be other himself much further with fellows of this type."

"You may bet your life he won't, Sandy. All the benefit he got of the affair was to go to—well, they may go to Hong Kong, or any other place of warming, before Mr. Lawson will ever again make a single endeavor to effect their salvation. But here is Mrs. Macalister, I declare. Her coming is my signal. Tis high time I should be moving for home."

"You seem to have had a very interesting discussion, whatever may have been about, remarked the lady who had just entered the room.

"Merely a little story I was telling, madam," answered the major, rising and bowing towards the hall rack, from which he took his overcoat. "Just an end usual story to wile away the time. I'm off.

"Good-night, major," responded the host, as he followed his guest out to the hall door. "'Tis a dark night. Take care you don't stumble up against Shawn Faddher on your way."

"The low, dirty scoundrel will keep clear of me, Sandy," replied the major with a hollow laugh, "as long as I carry this loaded stick in my hand. I will light my pipe now 'twill keep me company on the road."

The major struck a match, and, having ignited his pipe, puffed it into a blaze, and with the burning bit cast up to his chin, started out on his homeward journey.

CHAPTER II.

When Macalister heard his guest shaving the street door after him he turned sitting in the house, and barred and bolted the outer door. Then he returned to the sitting room he had just quitted, and, throwing himself into the easy-chair lately occupied by his friend, proceeded to how himself another number of whiskey-toddy.

His wife sits sat moodily by the chimney corner, gazing into the embers of the now smouldering fire, and occasionally heaving a kind of long-drawn sigh which caused her husband to turn his eyes slowly in her direction.

"Heigho!" she ejaculated, "what a weary, weary world this is when the pocket is as full as the dickens."

"Do you want money, Susan?" inquired her husband languidly.

"Do I want money! Good gracious! Sandy Macalister, do you see a pair of horns growing out over my ears? Of course I want money. I always want money, and that is the very reason why I wished to speak to you about getting further time to pay Mr. Gilmore's bill."

"What can I do about it?" replied her husband, as he drained down the glass of punch. "It is in the hands of that young fire-brand lawyer O Donoghue. He would not allow my brother to do anything for his yourself; he ought not have the courtesy to refuse you."

"I have been thinking over that plan, Sandy, and on reflection I deem it safer to send him a note asking him to come out and have a talk with you. We shant and do an evening of amicable arbitration, or failing for a bit of sake to secure the current with Mr. Gilmore, and the accompanying costs. Fancy a young lawyer—we introduced to him at the last fancy fair held in Gorey—and her presence will assist me in the arbitration."

"Very good, Susan," replied Macalister thoughtfully. "I have no objection to your sending a note to Mr. O Donoghue, and his proposition to you with regard to the bill of sale, and if you please we can now begin and make an inventory for the schedule my daughter will assist me."

"Well, Mrs. Macalister," began the lawyer, as he cast his gaze in the direction of the cross-legged, high-toed, high-waisted, "my client, Mr. Malone, has been conferring with me on the matter since I read your offer of security to him, and has come to the conclusion that an unregistered bill of sale on his effects would be safer for him than that which he has at present: therefore—

"He refuses to accede to our offer," interrupted the lady, as a hectic flush mantled her cheek, and she cast a sidelong look in the direction of her daughter.

"Oh! no, madam—you mistake," replied the lawyer, slightly elevating his voice. "Mr. Malone does not intend to direct us to make a proposal; on the contrary, he is willing to give you all further reasonable time you may require to liquidate his demand."

"This is really very kind of Mr. Malone—very kind indeed," said her Mrs. Mrs. Macalister turned and bowed towards the self-lauded, well-paid creditor, who twirled his hat between his hands and seemed anything but at his ease at the lady's courtly politeness.

"The times have been so very bad of late, Mr. O'Donoghue,' she continued "owing to foreign competition in food products and the unfortunate political disturbances, that my husband has not been able to collect his rents and, therefore, our circumstances have been so straitened that we really have not been able to keep our engagements.

"Indeed! he all right' ma'am," broke in Malone, to the evident astonishment of the auditors, "shin we'll ov Home Rule.

"Oh, I really," replied Mrs. Macalister, turning around and darting a sharp glance at her unexpected creditor, "it may be so, sir; but we indeed do not presume to undertake a prophecy."

"Av course not, ma'am. But how are the country be ever well off one class of people—the landlords—are kept bleeding in the poor tenant in the bad times, an the Protestant Ascendancy make war on his Catholic fellow-countrymen! For my part, ma'am, although I am a Catholic, I have no regard for my own—an what I blame not—I wouldn't mind seeing Home Rule, even a Protestant, if I thought it would stand in need of it.

"Silence! Dan," exclaimed the lawyer, with a jocular air, seeking by his simulated anger to divert the rude remarks of his client. "Your want of bigotry does honor to your head and heart. But we will be going now. Mrs. Macalister, my client, Mr. Malone, is a little outspoken in his language, but I assure you it is the liberality of his Irish heart which sets his tongue in motion. You need not further trouble yourself about that accident of his, but be sincere—as usual—in your offer to him. Good-night, Mrs. Dan."

The client rose, and, with a kind of half apologetic bow, moved towards the door. The lawyer followed his case upon a pretty little water-colour sketch which adorned the room, and the lady of the house, preserving the station, moved up towards him, and, affecting a pair of gold spectacles, proceeded in her turn to study the picture.

"That is one of my daughter Fleora's sketches," she said. "She has a delicate taste for art, and I regret here, in this country place, she can find no perfect model to study. Fleorry," she called out, turning towards her daughter, "let you not Mr. O'Donoghue? I think you told me you had been introduced to him."

"Oh yes, mamma," replied the blushing disciple of Blackstone. "I have had the pleasure."

The young lady now advanced, and, lifting the picture from the wall, cast a rapt gaze from the depth of her violet orbs which as his heart beating beneath mamma, and tremulously, stammering and perfect equal to the occasion, the young disciple, in quiet and sympathetic quietly, of a client, Mr. Malone, and the lawyer, Mr. Dan Macalister, and the lady of the house, Mrs. Macalister, and

Poetry.

NEW YEAR'S ABSOLVE.

As the year's dead sine which your dead days lie.
A new life is yours, and a new hope! Redeem her.
We build our own ladders to climb to the sky,
Blessed and in the multitude of promise, forgetting
Whatever your past hold of sorrow or wrong.
We repose half our strength in a useless regret:
We lift up old tombs in the dark too long.

Have you missed your aim? "Well, the mark is still shining!
Did you falter in the race? well, take breath for the home!
Did the clouds drive you back? but see yonder their lining!
Were you tempted and fell? let it serve for a warning!
As dark, now, smoke to lay in it into that grown fire!
With your eyes on the heaven, your face to the battle!
I tell you the future can hold no terrors
For any soul which the stars overlook,
If he will but stand firm on the grave of his sorrow,
And instead of regretting, resolve, resolve!
It is never too late to begin nobleness, noble
Though all life have gone by in sin and folly.
For both have the chance of the future glittering
The years, was lost of the bruised old world!

ELLA WHEELER-WILCOX.

THE DOWRY OF MARY.

(Lines suggested by the praises of the Virgin Mother found in the daily poem of the last century.)

They parted Thy dowry, my Mother,
Yes, s'an as a bride,
In the hour of your betrothal
Led darkly aside;
Despoiled of the brides wealth and jewels,
And, weeping, sent forth
From a home of luxurious splendor
To unendeared earth.

From the one thing that I have, my Mother;
They allowed the prayer,
And the Lily of Nazareth
Thy name through the air.
To the heaven and hallow the wave they were singing
The flowers of Thy choice;
But the harp and the lute of the minstrel,
My Mother! were Thine.

Then your dowry, my Mother,
Yes, s'an as a bride,
Put the lovely and lone
The strength of their hand,
Hushed their hearts to the Angel's sweet strain
Awake to unmeasured prayers
Again and again.

For soon, when the storm-sounds were raging
Up sweep, as the wave of the sea bird,
And the soul, from its temporary dwelling,
Scaled sweetness divine;
For the harp and the lute of the minstrel,
My Mother! are Thine.

Though the hands of the minstrel may never
Be folded in prayer,
Yet whenever the harp chords are sickened,
Thy dowry is there.
Thou gave of the minstrel unseen over
Thy lone and the heart of the minstrel,
My Mother! are Thine.

M. G. M.

MARTIN THE MONK.

The Sim Cathedral echoes o'er my head,
Twelve o'clock has sounded, the vespers play,
Gold-lustered by sunbeams, through the cum-
Why do they seem less calm and sweet? he said,
Martin the Monk, as I knelt on the stil.
Martin the Monk, as I knelt on the stil.

"The sun shine on the lowly cottage
The trefoil nidus where the long shadows play,
Gold-lustered by sunbeams, through the cum-
Why do they seem less calm and sweet? he said,
For up the column sounding nave at will,
Where my soul sighs for our strength in vain regret:
We lift up old tombs in the dark too long.

Have you missed your aim? "Well, the mark is still shining!
Did you falter in the race? well, take breath for the home!
Did the clouds drive you back? but see yonder their lining!
Were you tempted and fell? let it serve for a warning!
As dark, now, smoke to lay in it into that grown fire!
With your eyes on the heaven, your face to the battle!
I tell you the future can hold no terrors
For any soul which the stars overlook,
If he will but stand firm on the grave of his sorrow,
And instead of regretting, resolve, resolve!
It is never too late to begin nobleness, noble
Though all life have gone by in sin and folly.
For both have the chance of the future glittering
The years, was lost of the bruised old world!

ELLA WHEELER-WILCOX.

THE DOWRY OF MARY.

(Lines suggested by the praises of the Virgin Mother found in the daily poem of the last century.)

They parted Thy dowry, my Mother,
Yes, s'an as a bride,
In the hour of your betrothal
Led darkly aside;
Despoiled of the brides wealth and jewels,
And, weeping, sent forth
From a home of luxurious splendor
To unendeared earth.

From the one thing that I have, my Mother;
They allowed the prayer,
And the Lily of Nazareth
Thy name through the air.
To the heaven and hallow the wave they were singing
The flowers of Thy choice;
But the harp and the lute of the minstrel,
My Mother! were Thine.

Then your dowry, my Mother,
Yes, s'an as a bride,
Put the lovely and lone
The strength of their hand,
Hushed their hearts to the Angel's sweet strain
Awake to unmeasured prayers
Again and again.

For soon, when the storm-sounds were raging
Up sweep, as the wave of the sea bird,
And the soul, from its temporary dwelling,
Scaled sweetness divine;
For the harp and the lute of the minstrel,
My Mother! are Thine.

Though the hands of the minstrel may never
Be folded in prayer,
Yet whenever the harp chords are sickened,
Thy dowry is there.
Thou gave of the minstrel unseen over
To the heart that knows naught of true beauty
And, when I sent Mia Macallister on her Jenkie!

Something seemed to interfere with the sight of one of Father Tom's eyes, as he closed it into wrinkled rightness, while the open one glossed with a sort of funny knowingness at his young parishioner.

"I think, Desmond," said he, as he pointed towards a pathway a short distance from him, "this passage leads straight up to Miss Macallister's house.

"Yes, sir," replied the young lady in a meek, bashful tone. "I fear I have delayed long, Cousin Jenkie, Mr. O'Donoghue."

"Tut, tut, Mr. O'Donoghue. Sure I am obliged to you for your kindness in accompanying me so far."

Then she turned her eyes towards the priest, and, stretching out her hand to meet his said: "Good-by, sir."

"Good-by, Miss Macallister," said Father Tom. "I am very happy, I assure you, to have made your acquaintance."

At this moment Flora's attention was attracted by the sound of approaching footsteps, and, looking towards in a frightened manner, to her horror she perceived Mayor Brown, who had evidently been a witness to her handshaking familiarity with the priest. Instantaneously the thought flashed through her mind, with rapid strides, raise up some her and called out:

"Mr. Flory, you seem to be in a great hurry. I am going up to the house to see my father, and I will accompany you. It ought to be as well pleased to walk and talk with me as to be alone. Mr. Macallister's pupil priest you have just left. I intend telling your father all about your doings.

"You are a mean, low man to do so," retorted the girl, glaring fiercely at her companion. "An accident caused me to meet that gentleman whom you call a priest, and I, the meek, not to exchange kind words with him. As a lady I could not insult him when I found myself respectfully addressed. You know my father's fierce antipathy to priests, and the misery you may entail will in our family by your officious, tell-tale interference. It is therefore that I am forced to stoop, very low, of you not to make any allusion of this purely accidental occurrence."

"The answer you gave me when I proposed my suit, and the sight of the man whom I have just found in your company, and who has lost me your affection, preclude the possibility of my an infringement of my duty. You have had your moment of triumph, Miss Macallister; it may have mine. As an officer in her most gracious majesty's service, and a Protestant gentleman, I cannot consentiously refrain from informing your father of all I have seen this evening. These rebellious priests, with their communistic cries of Home Rule and abolition of the landed interests, are now our bitterest foes. Am I, then, to see the daughter of my friend and brother Mason degrade herself by giving her hand to a vile political blackleg?"

Flora Macallister felt a choking sensation in her throat. It was useless to argue further with this incredible bigot, this discarded suitor for her hand. So without another word or comment, she proceeded on her way, and on arriving at the hall door dashed her ready sob-stuff to her own room. Meanwhile the mayor, with his own additions and innuendoes, was telling his story to his "brother Orangeman"; and after a few moments Flora heard a terrible voice, which she dreaded, calling her at the foot of the stairs.

"Flory, Flory, come here at once."

With trembling and trepidation she crept down the stairs and entered the parlor, where her father and Mayor Brown now sat together.

"Flory," began the new excited head of the family, "what is this I hear about your conduct? Have you determined on disgracing me?

"I did not disgrace you, father; I could not do so."

"You lie, girl! You did. Has not Mayor Brown seen you hand-in-hand, with a popish priest—the arch-fiend, and one who is not all unlawful meetings in the country?"

"I may have conversed with a priest, and I could not avoid returning a bare salute when it was given to me in common courtesy."

"And is it not a fact that that blasphemed Home Rule attorney, O'Donoghue, introduced you to him?"

"Yes, father, I was introduced to the priest by Mr. O'Donoghue. On his visit to this house yesterday you know he did not give himself a blackguard, and he is not one either, but a gentleman and a son of honor."

All this while Mayor Brown was snuffing and sniffing uneasily in his chair, evidently delighted at the domestic storm which his revenge had been the means of arousing. He looked for a moment at the girl, who, without entering boldness or defiance, still displayed no palpable demonstration of fear.

"You should make her solemnly promise, Sandy," he chimed in, "that she will never speak to her jilted lawyer again.

"Sho shall do so," roared Macallister, as he reached up to his mantlepiece and grasped a large riding-whip. "I will see to it that my orders are obeyed. Do you promise, girl, that you will never again speak or exchange a word with this lawyer fellow with whom you were twice this evening?"

"Father," cried the now terrified Flora, throwing herself upon her knees, and with tearful, imploring gaze looking into her parent's face, now wrinkled and distorted with passion, "forgive me if I seem to be disobedient, but at another time, when we are alone, I will give you satisfactory reasons."

"I want none of your reasons, you young Jezebel! Do you promise?"

With tears scared every the weeping girl muttered: "I promise."

"Then by the contents of this I will make you." And before his affrighted daughter had time to life her hands on guard, the heavy whip descended with terrific force across her face and neck, and with a wild cry of pain she fell upon the floor.

CHAPTER IV.

When Mrs. Macallister arrived home she found her husband and Major Brown seated in the front parlor. Their noticeable silence and moody abstraction instantly suggested to her the idea that something had gone wrong in her absence; so, suspecting possibly the quarter from which the trouble might have arisen, she eagerly inquired for her daughter Flora.

"If you know where she is," replied her husband gruffly, without even lifting his eye to look at his wife, "and, furthermore, I don't care. Possibly she has some popish priest keeping her company."

"Popish priest," exclaimed Mrs. Macallister. "Why, Sandy, what do you mean?

"I mean," replied her husband, rising from his chair, and elevating his voice so that he might be heard by all the minstrels of the house—"I mean that if my daughter is some wishes to cultivate the acquaintance of Hannah Mason, the mayor of rebellious Hinton, she had better quit my house forever.

"This is a most unpleasant, Sandy, I cannot understand you. Tell me what has happened to Flora?"

"Go and ask her," retorted the husband with a sneer, as he pointed towards the stairs—"your pet daughter. I have given her a lesson she won't forget for some time, and if I ever catch her again disobeying me I will turn her out from home-and-home-and-home."

"It is unfortunately too true, Mrs. Macallister," broke in Mayor Brown, rising from his chair and moving towards the door, as if to take his leave. "There is no doubt about the matter. I saw her myself shaking hands with that old hen-hussy, priest Doyle, and smiling at him as if she were one of his most devoted friends."

"And you carried the pleasant news, dad you," imparted the lady, with a tone of voice and a scornful glance at the informant which did not look well for his future welcome at the Sunday dinner-table at Harmonor.

"I considered it my duty, madam," replied the mayor, with a profound bow.

"Then allow me, sir, to offer you my thanks for your condescension.

"How madam? I do not clearly understand."

"Perhaps not. Was it not a condescension that you should lower yourself from your high military position to become a little tale-bearing domestic disturber?

"Madam, interrupted the husband, "you must not talk in that manner to Mayor Brown. I think he deserves our best thanks for his friendly interference."

"It was one, sir, which was unsought, and which I hope will never be repeated.

"Then, madam, I presume I had better my good-evening."

"Good-evening, sir," was the disdainful reply. "You have given me the greatest enjoyment enough to incapacitate me from entertaining you any further."

Mayor Brown bowed coveringly before the irate mistress of Harmonor, and quickly passed out of the room.

After a few ineffectual inquiries to her husband Mrs. Macallister instantly quitted the parlor and proceeded towards the bedroom of her offending daughter. The door was bolted from the inside, and it was not without considerable knocking and calling that it was opened by the far recipient herself, who presented a frightful and disheveled appearance, after her terrible ordeal of grief and tears, that her aunt, as she entered, was at first terrified at the sight.

"My own dear, darling Flory, what has happened to you? Has your aunt or daughter's neck and kissed her fervently on the forehead. "What, in Heaven's name, has happened since I left here this morning? Tell me, Flory, tell your mother, and you my dear—you frighten me with the appearance you present. But stay, what is this? My God! you have been cut upon the cheek, such a blow, too! Tell me quickly how it all occurred."

Though her sobs the girl told her the whole story—of her dismissal by her quondam lawyer and his reciprocal feelings of the appointment in the Long Lane, the walk home, the accidental meeting with Father Doyle, and the unfortunate appearance of Mayor Brown.

"O that contemptible little tell-tale! This is all revenge at your refusal of his suit. But, Flory, my dear, wipe your eyes and bathe your face, and come down with me to supper. You know it will be all right when your father and the mayor have left. Sit down

THE MONITOR.

TWENTIETH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1887.

MONITOR OFFICE REMOVAL.

The offices of the MONITOR are now located at

826 KEARNY STREET,

(first-floor, east side,) between California and Sacramento Sts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—At a meeting of the Geographical Society in Paris M. de Lesseps declared that the Panama Canal would be open for traffic in 1889.

—The Catholic College, Kalvedon, Essex, England, was destroyed by fire last month. The damage, which is estimated at $60,000, is partly covered by insurance.

—The Vatican recently received a communication from the Spanish Government accepting the Pope's proposal regarding civil marriage, which is not to be considered valid unless preceded by the religious ceremony.

—The number of idle farms thrown on the hands of the beggared and bankrupted landlords of Ireland may be surmised from the fact that within a radius of twelve miles round Lorrah there are now 22,400 acres of land without tenants. Similar "barren wastes" are beginning to exist in every Province.

—Father Damien, the leper martyr, announces that a cure has been found for leprosy. The missionary priest has introduced it into the leper settlement at Molokai, and with the aid of a band of Franciscan Sisters the system of treatment is becoming used successfully. It is a Japanese discovery of a hydrocyanic character.

—We specially commend to the careful perusal of our readers this week the fervid and eloquent oration delivered by Mr. Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, before the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is a masterly production, and, as a plea for justice to the New South, it is one of the most eloquent and enthusiastic displays of word painting we have had before our readers for many a day.

—There is a possibility in England of the imposition of a tax for a thing almost unknown. It is to impose a tax of £5 a year on all foreigners working in England, which would increase the revenue half a million sterling. The tax would be aimed principally at the Germans, who are becoming popular as servants, and have quite supplanted the English in large hotels.

—Light seems to be dawning upon the Protestant laymen of Ulster, who are wasting their unquestionable loyalty. Proposals that the real reductions do not average 25 per cent., whereas in Munster and Connaught they average at least 30 per cent. Meanwhile, the Land League keeps up a rent sufficient to keep the pot boiling. The thorns have commenced to sprout in the beds of roses of Upper Sandringham.

—The Italian Chambers have voted that the remains of Romini, who died in Paris on November 17th, 1868, are to be brought from the cemetery of Pere Lachaise to Florence, and deposited in the historical church of Santa Croce, where the remains of Machiavelli, Michael Angelo, Galileo and Alfieri are buried. This has been done in accordance with a clause in the will of Romini's widow, Mdme. Olympia Pelasier.

—A recent announcement in the Quebec Ferule chronicles the death of Father Felix Martin. G. J. Father Martin died in Paris, aged 84. The worthy religious was well known in Canada where he long labored. He came to Montreal in 1842, when Bishop Bourget invited the Jesuits into his diocese. He was the twelfth Superior of the Jesuits at Montreal and founded St. Mary's College. After having been Superior of the Jesuits in Quebec in 1856; he returned to France in 1862. Father Martin was the author of several works highly esteemed in Canada and the missions. R. I. P.

—More misleading information has been published in the daily press dispatches regarding Dr. McGlynn, of New York, than any matter that has come under our notice in a long life of journalistic experience. The latest "news" is that Dr. McGlynn "has resolved practically to leave the Church" sooner than "adjure his opinions on land tenure." Those who know Dr. McGlynn will be both incensed and amused at such a report, but the readers of the daily press must have "news," hence such reports are published regardless entirely of personal character or public good.

—A Pastoral by the Archbishop of Paris, read in the churches on a recent Sunday says that this year, the Jubilee of the Pope's ordination as a priest, shall be specially devoted to prayers for him. Special offerings to the Peter's Pence fund are invited, and a book containing the list of donors is to be offered to the Pope, so that on his fiftieth anniversary of his first Mass he may in celebrating Mass have the recollection of those thousands of the faithful. Medals and other objects are to be presented to him which will benefit missions and poor churches. Clothing for the poor of Rome is also requested, and a loan, as the special homage of Paris, is to be subscribed for, in which, the Archbishop suggests, jewels now only ministering to vanity may find a noble use.

—A recent subagenas from Vienna, alluding to the prospects of a European war, says: "M. Clemenceau, the French statesman who is visiting Vienna, and to-day to an interviewer: "There can be no war between France and Germany unless Germany makes the first attack, because every responsible Frenchman is determined that France shall offer no provocation. Even if Russia and Germany should fight, France would remain passive. It would require gross provocation, indeed, to rouse France to war. Of course, Frenchmen will resent disaster. It must be admitted that France has been cuspectting with Russia, but this was intended merely to frighten Germany."

—News from Florence announces the decrease in that city of Dwell Nerus, an illustrious citizen of Mantua, an Israelite by birth: who, after prolonged travels in the East, embraced the true faith in Rome in the early years of the Pontificate of Pius IX., and was well known as the author of the Pandect di un Pattofico, a salve of free Catholic philosophy. He was seventy-nine years old at the time of his death.

—Commenting upon the rumored re-establishment of diplomatic relations between England and the Holy See, in order to crush out the present agitation in Ireland, a London paper enumerates the plain truth when it asks: "Is it necessary to remind our readers that the Roman correspondents of London papers are not the accredited mouthpieces of the Vatican? When Rome speaks it will not speak against Ireland."

—Rev. Wm. M. Gilbert, for many years a Methodist preacher in a Pennsylvania town, announced to his congregation last Sunday that he did not believe in the divinity of the Bible and did not know anything about immortality or whether there was a God. There are hundreds of heretical preachers in the same predicament. It is the magnet of a good fat salary and an easy life that keeps them in the pulpit far more steadfastly than any principle of trying to save other men's souls.

—Herr Schaepman, a Catholic member of the Parliament of the Netherlands, has brought forward a most important measure. The object is to amend the constitution in such a way as to permit the endowment by the State of primary denominational schools in which children of poor parents may be instructed by teachers belonging to their own religious creed. The conciliatory disposition shown of recent years by the Dutch Government towards the Catholic authorities affords good ground for the hope that Herr Schaepman's bill will be supported by the Ministry.

—December 29th was the seventy-seventh anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's birth. In reply to the chairman of one of the numerous banquets given in his honor, he thus alludes to his recent labors in the House Irish cause: "The strain of the last year has been considerable, but never during my half century of labor have I more clearly seen that I was at work in behalf of my countrymen in all parts of the three kingdoms, and in behalf of the true union and greatness of the empire, which in this year of her Majesty's jubilee we ought to cherish more warmly and loyally than ever. In this conviction the recent progress of events confirms me daily."

—We learn from the Ave Maria that M. Louis Baillarge, a prize lawyer of Quebec, while residing a number of Catholic Missions conceived the noble idea of rendering honor to the Five Wounds of our Saviour by raising five altars, one in each of the five parts of the world—Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and America. The first, already erected, is at Hai Men, or Amoy, in the district of Fo Kien in China; it is dedicated to St. Francis Xavier. The second has been given to the missions of Cardinal Lavigerie in the north of Africa; the third to Father Strela, S. J., for his mission to the Aborigines of Northern Australia; the fourth to Mgr. Rosse, Prefect-Apostolic of San Salvador in South America; and the last to a poor mission in Scotland.

—A lady who had been cured at Lourdes thirteen years ago of a fearful cancer in the breast, recently submitted to a fresh examination by Dr. de St. Maclon, the physician stationed at the Grotto. He found no trace of the malady save a large scar. In 1873 her condition was such that it was judged useless to employ remedies; and on learning her resolution of going to Lourdes, her physician, one of renowned skill, declared that if she returned well, he would recognize a supernatural power. She was instantly cured, and in a few days he saw her absolutely healed. The man of science acknowledged himself vanquished, and became a fervent Catholic. He has since died, but the patient whose case he declared hopless thirteen years ago lives on in good health.

—Californians who complain of the present "cold snap," may have their feelings for suffering humanity somewhat aroused by a very sad occurrence which took place on Monday last in New York State, where the bodies of a blind man and his wife were found frozen. A dispatch tells this harrowing tale: "The pormaster, Herrick, today found the frozen body of "Blind Cooper" in a field near his home six miles north of Elmyra, N. Y. The story of his death is very painful. The blind old man was given to his home, and by chance turned into a dog road. Here he lost his way. The large field in which he was found was crossed time and again by the blind man's tracks, showing that he had struggled long and desperately to find his way out, but befell exhausted in the snow, quickly freezing in the bitter air within a few rods of his farmhouse. Apparently his wife, whose frozen body was found in their humble home yesterday, perished the same night, as the rats had been feasting several days on her body.

—At the last Monday meeting of Protestant preachers in this city, Rev. W. H. Pearce, the new chaplain at Alcatraz, was introduced and asked to speak. He said that "on Sunday he had attended two of the city churches—the Howard Presbyterian in the forenoon and the Trinity Episcopal in the evening. The first was about only one third full and the last had not half as many as the other. He concluded that it was not a good day for church attendance in San Francisco." South facts—candidly admitted by Protestant preachers—show should be lessonlicked by either the bigotry or the blundering of newspapers whose highest ambition seems to be to pander to the lowest intellectual instincts if degraded human nature.

—We learn from the Ave Maria that M. Louis Baillarge, a prize lawyer of Quebec, while residing a number of Catholic Missions conceived the noble idea of rendering honor to the Five Wounds of our Saviour by raising five altars, one in each of the five parts of the world—Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and America. The first, already erected, is at Hai Men, or Amoy, in the district of Fo Kien in China; it is dedicated to St. Francis Xavier. The second has been given to the missions of Cardinal Lavigerie in the north of Africa; the third to Father Strela, S. J., for his mission to the Aborigines of Northern Australia; the fourth to Mgr. Rosse, Prefect-Apostolic of San Salvador in South America; and the last to a poor mission in Scotland.

—A lady who had been cured at Lourdes thirteen years ago of a fearful cancer in the breast, recently submitted to a fresh examination by Dr. de St. Maclon, the physician stationed at the Grotto. He found no trace of the malady save a large scar. In 1873 her condition was such that it was judged useless to employ remedies; and on learning her resolution of going to Lourdes, her physician, one of renowned skill, declared that if she returned well, he would recognize a supernatural power. She was instantly cured, and in a few days he saw her absolutely healed. The man of science acknowledged himself vanquished, and became a fervent Catholic. He has since died, but the patient whose case he declared hopless thirteen years ago lives on in good health.

—Californians who complain of the present "cold snap," may have their feelings for suffering humanity somewhat aroused by a very sad occurrence which took place on Monday last in New York State, where the bodies of a blind man and his wife were found frozen. A dispatch tells this harrowing tale: "The pormaster, Herrick, today found the frozen body of "Blind Cooper" in a field near his home six miles north of Elmyra, N. Y. The story of his death is very painful. The blind old man was given to his home, and by chance turned into a dog road. Here he lost his way. The large field in which he was found was crossed time and again by the blind man's tracks, showing that he had struggled long and desperately to find his way out, but befell exhausted in the snow, quickly freezing in the bitter air within a few rods of his farmhouse. Apparently his wife, whose frozen body was found in their humble home yesterday, perished the same night, as the rats had been feasting several days on her body.

—At the last Monday meeting of Protestant preachers in this city, Rev. W. H. Pearce, the new chaplain at Alcatraz, was introduced and asked to speak. He said that "on Sunday he had attended two of the city churches—the Howard Presbyterian in the forenoon and the Trinity Episcopal in the evening. The first was about only one third full and the last had not half as many as the other. He concluded that it was not a good day for church attendance in San Francisco." South facts—candidly admitted by Protestant preachers—show should be lessonlicked by either the bigotry or the blundering of newspapers whose highest ambition seems to be to pander to the lowest intellectual instincts if degraded human nature.

—Light seems to be dawning upon the Protestant laymen of Ulster, who are wasting their unquestionable loyalty. Proposals that the real reductions do not average 25 per cent., whereas in Munster and Connaught they average at least 30 per cent. Meanwhile, the Land League keeps up a rent sufficient to keep the pot boiling. The thorns have commenced to sprout in the beds of roses of Upper Sandringham.

—The Italian Chambers have voted that the remains of Romini, who died in Paris on November 17th, 1868, are to be brought from the cemetery of Pere Lachaise to Florence, and deposited in the historical church of Santa Croce, where the remains of Machiavelli, Michael Angelo, Galileo and Alfieri are buried. This has been done in accordance with a clause in the will of Romini's widow, Mdme. Olympia Pelasier.

—A recent announcement in the Quebec Ferule chronicles the death of Father Felix Martin, G. J. Father Martin died in Paris, aged 84. The worthy religious was well known in Canada where he long labored. He came to Montreal in 1842, when Bishop Bourget invited the Jesuits into his diocese. He was the twelfth Superior of the Jesuits at Montreal and founded St. Mary's College. After having been Superior of the Jesuits in Quebec in 1856; he returned to France in 1862. Father Martin was the author of several works highly esteemed in Canada and the missions. R. I. P.

—More misleading information has been published in the daily press dispatches regarding Dr. McGlynn, of New York, than any matter that has come under our notice in a long life of journalistic experience. The latest "news" is that Dr. McGlynn "has resolved practically to leave the Church" sooner than "adjure his opinions on land tenure." Those who know Dr. McGlynn will be both incensed and amused at such a report, but the readers of the daily press must have "news," hence such reports are published regardless entirely of personal character or public good.

—A Pastoral by the Archbishop of Paris, read in the churches on a recent Sunday says that this year, the Jubilee of the Pope's ordination as a priest, shall be specially devoted to prayers for him. Special offerings to the Peter's Pence fund are invited, and a book containing the list of donors is to be offered to the Pope, so that on his fiftieth anniversary of his first Mass he may in celebrating Mass have the recollection of those thousands of the faithful. Medals and other objects are to be presented to him which will benefit missions and poor churches. Clothing for the poor of Rome is also requested, and a loan, as the special homage of Paris, is to be subscribed for, in which, the Archbishop suggests, jewels now only ministering to vanity may find a noble use.

—A recent subagenas from Vienna, alluding to the prospects of a European war, says: "M. Clemenceau, the French statesman who is visiting Vienna, and to-day to an interviewer: "There can be no war between France and Germany unless Germany makes the first attack, because every responsible Frenchman is determined that France shall offer no provocation. Even if Russia and Germany should fight, France would remain passive. It would require Marriage Without Priest, Parson or Public Official!

"Marriage Made Easy" ought to be the title of a new law which the learned Solons of the Pennsylvania legislature recently passed: not certainly for the public good. By this "hitching" process any male and female of marrying age may go to Heaven from the Clerk of the Courts and then they can marry themselves without the aid of priest, parson or public official of any kind!

The motive prompted by which this new system of "hitching" human beings together in matrimonial harness is evidently, to say simple. The Clerk of the Courts administers an oath to each of the parties, puts certain interrogatories to them, and then—if he is satisfied—he issues a certificate setting forth the fact that there exists no legal impediment to the parties joining themselves in matrimony. The unions so effected are immediately pledge themselves—before two witnesses—to live as man and wife, and the mockery of holy matrimony is finished!

What is the world coming to, anyhow, when such an important factor in the happiness and virtue of the human family—as marriage certainly is—can be thus treated by the laws of the land! This "great sacrament" stripped of every vestige of religious blessing or solemn rite, left to the momentary whim of inexperienced youth or to the designing diabolism of every crime-steeped rake who desires to conjure the ruin of innocent virtue. It is a burning shame that such a law should burden the statute books of any State in this Christian land which boasts of its "enlightenment."

The result of such hastily constructed marriages will tend to a vast increase in the number of divorces, a greater amount of wrangling in all classes of society, and a visible deterioration in the social status of the people in general. When children arrive at the age when they are by law entitled to marry, they will pay no deference whatever to those parents whom Almighty God commanded them to obey, but they will marry up to the devil without gathering the legal formula, and then enter on a life for which they may not be physically or mentally prepared. What will be the consequence? Separation in a few months, second marriage in a few years, and thus the society will be kept stirred up like—the destruction of the home, the family, and society in general.

Wisely, indeed, has the Catholic Church cast around the sacrament of matrimony binding obligations which neither when nor wealth can break. To her alone does the world look when it desires to find the most perfect ideal true womanhood in maid, wife or mother. The Immaculate Mother of God is the base ideal of all that is beautiful and perfect in the eyes of Catholic female. She is their model, their mirror in youth and their mother in love. To the Blessed Virgin, then, does the world owe a deep debt of gratitude for having led by her exalted virtues, her holy humility, and her radiant purity, to honor in the Christian family, and to place in the hearts of American children by Christian parents.

—Henry George has started a new paper in New York entirely devoted to his journalistic career by violently attacking the Catholic Church. The action will deprive him of fully three fourths of his followers and leave him with but a vorporal guard of communists and anarchists. The Catholic Union and Times certly states the whole case in this paragraph: "Henry George has been for the past few months an apparition. The movement he crystallized by his potent personality has borne as the first fruits two apostates. The first, of the order of the unstable, unsettled and least of men is clouded as a priest, the career of Henry George is ended, as a public man, by his own hand. The career of Henry George is ended."

—The English Times, who feel that Gladstone, if he got another chance, would give Ireland her rights, are telling each other that if he can only be kept out of power another two years old age will cut his claws and he will cease to be dangerous. In the first place, it does not look as though Gladstone meant to stay out of power for any such time, and even if he did, judging from recent appearances, he would be quite able two years hence to go in and clear out his opponents. At the celebration of his 77th birthday he looked as young and vigorous as at any time those ten years past, and he seems to have plenty of strength and energy left to do good work for Home Rule. All kinds of presents were sent him, including socks, fowls, butter, honey, Banbury cakes, cream, jam, and blankets, and he looked, if possible, one degree happier than when glutting over Churchill's smash.

—Alluding to Mr. Parnell's recent severe and protracted illness, the London Universe says: "Some time ago Mr. Parnell will again be heard before long in no equivocal tones. The honorable gentleman has been suffering from a severe attack of gastric fever, but is now on the fair way to recovery, and will be ready to take his place in the House, like a giant refreshed, in the ensuing session. We hasten to say that this Irish question is no longer dependent on the guidance of any one mind, the plan of campaign, which has been so successful, was adopted while he lay on a sick bed. It may be safely assumed that when Mr. Parnell speaks he will range himself on the side of his colleagues. The impetus has been given, and Ireland, like the altered avalanche, turns and will move and gather strength as it advances. Leaders are but mortal—Grattan, O'Connell, Davis, O'Brien, all are dead, but the cause is everlasting and indestructible."

A Vile Calumny Contradicted.

It is surprising with what avidity the daily press publishes every atom of information which is detrimental to Catholicity and damaging to Catholic Religious Orders. Last week a dead woman committed suicide in Oakland, and, on the rumor of some irresponsible party, the daily press if this city forthwith broadcast the event in large display type as "The Sorrowful Death of a Former Sister of Mercy."

The same spirit of evil is then employed to give "full details" of how the unfortunate woman took vows, how she labored for Christ's cause in reforming others, and how at last "she gave way to the impulses of a woman's heart," and married. Then her downward career is depicted and Christian or male to the "gentlemen" she acquired from her "earlier associates" as a Sister of Mercy.

Now the whole story—from beginning to end—is a baseless falsehood. The unfortunate woman never was a Sister of Mercy, she never took vows, and never labored as one of the Sisters in charge of the Magdalen Asylum in this city. These are facts which any reporter in this city could have learned in five minutes by telephoning to St. Mary's Hospital or to the Magdalen Asylum. But the Scandal and sensationalism is the most profitable pabulum of the daily press, and no matter how high or how lady the parties may be who are thus publicly allied to an infamous woman, the "news" must be promulgated even if the reputation of a Catholic Religious Order is damaged by the practice.

Now what are the true facts of this sunken woman whom the daily papers represent as her suicide fellow? Who is the "Sister of Mercy" Many years ago the Sisters of Mercy received into the Magdalen Asylum a young woman who had fallen a victim to man's vicious wiles. The Sisters did all that daily example, prayer and patience could accomplish to confirm her in the penitential spirit of a Magdalen. She persevered for several years, but at last the demon of pride asserted her and she demanded to be set free so she could enjoy society in the world. The Sisters of Mercy—who know the danger she contrived—tried to dissuade her from that dangerous experiment, but their pleadings were in vain. With regret they saw her turn her back upon a life of peace and piety in order to plunge into the vortex of vice which exists in the world. In a short time she went through a sneak marriage; deserted by her husband, and then the sinking scale of sin was traversed until despair ended in a self inflicted death.

And it is such an unfortunate creature—this that the daily press designates "a Sister of Mercy." Every educated Catholic knows that no female is received into the Sisterhood of Mercy or other Religious Orders of the Church without undergoing the most rigid scrutiny as to character. Every postulant must be pure and unblemished. Almighty God wants no second-hand material to carry on His works of Charity and Mercy. Hence, Magdalen cases never be received into the Order of the Sisters of Mercy, no matter if they lived in the Magdalen Asylum until they arrived at the age of Methusalah.

We earnestly hope this explanation will cause the daily press to hint in its future editorials "whenever irresponsible "rumor" is the only foundation for a fiendish which especially reflects directly upon those holy virgins who are doing God's work in our midst, and who have sacrificed love should be beamicked by either the bigotry or the blundering of newspapers whose highest ambition seems to be to pander to the lowest intellectual instincts if degraded human nature.

Poems of Marcella A. Fitzgerald.

The name of Marcella Agnes Fitzgerald is most familiar to readers of the Monitor from and admired her many excellent contributions to the Monitor during several years past. The pure pathos has collected her numerous poems and issued them in a neatly bound, clearly printed and tasty volume of 300 pages. We cannot not refined to any one line of thought, but ranges through almost every passion and sentiment with equal ease and through mastery of subject.

A series of her poems which another page we have tendered reveals the fact that the gifted sufferer has lost a rare command of language, a striking purity of diction, a correctness of metre and—what is to be most prized and praised—a pure, through Christ-like tone. He trochaic octosyllabics are peculiarly musical and she is at her best when using this metre, as may be seen by perusal of her poems entitled "Applied Pictures," "A Message from Heaven," "Dunnie Lake," "Baby Jumpers Moonment," and "Two Pictures."

There is not a poor poem in the whole collection. Every one is a gem containing some hidden beauty or some well expressed thought. The volume is divided into Miscellaneous, Sacred, Legendary and Ballads, and Dedicatory Poems. The "Lord's Day" is a happy pastoral exposition of that prayer of prayers. Among the miscellaneous poems "The Sower," we think, is the best. It is made realistic by an appropriate and masterly word painting and a splendid metaphor. The concluding stanza is:

> Thus I sow the seed of kindness
> Where the sunlight falls the most,
> Where the shadows lie the deepest,
> Where the soil is rocky, cold,
> Till the written of rain shows
> Where the desert shall be fruitful
> Where the desert shall be fruitful
> Till the written of rain shows
> Where the desert shall be fruitful
> Till the written of rain shows
> Where the desert shall be fruitful
> Till the written of rain shows

THE BLUE AND THE GREY

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

New South," as in no sense disparaging to the Old. Dear to me, sir, is the home of my childhood and the traditions of my people. There in a New South, not through present regimet the Old, but because of new conditions, new adjustments, and, if you please, new ideas and aspirations. It is to this that I address myself. I ask you, gentlemen, to pledge if you can, the foster soldier, who, buttoning up in his faded gray jacket the passion which was taken, testimony to his children of his fidelity and faith, turned his face southward from Appomattox in April, 1865. Think of him as tragic, but manful, face downward, shoulder to shoulder and muscle, having fought to exhaustion, he surrenders his gun, wringe the hands of his comrades, and lifting his tear-stained and pallid face for the last time to the grave that did the old Virginia hills, pulls his gray cap over his brow and begins the slow and painful journey. What does he find—let me ask you, who justly earned, full payment for your four years' sacrifice—what does he find, when he reaches the home he left four years before? He finds his home in ruins, his farm devastated, his slaves freed, his stock killed, his barns empty, his trade destroyed, his money worthless, his social system—found in its magnificent—except grey, his people without law or legal status, his comrades shot, and the survivors of others bary on his shoulders. Crushed by defeat, his very traditions gone. Without money, credit, employment, material—of trading, and, beside all this, confronted with the gravest problem that ever met human intelligence—the establishing of a status for the vast body of his liberated slaves.

What does he do—this hero in gray with a heart of gold—close he sat down in sullen mass and despair? Not for a day. Surely God, who has ever tempered the wind to the shorn lamb in his adversity! As rain was never before so overwhelming, never was restoration more. The soldier stepped from the trenches into the furrow; horses that had charged Pickett plow now hitched to face the plough, and fields that red with human blood in June were green with the harvest in June; women reared in luxury now to their dresses and washed to feed their husbands, and with a patience and heroism that few woman always as a gentleman, gave their hands to work. There was little bitterness in all this. Cheerfulness and fearlessness prevailed. And Arp, struck the key note when he said: "Well, I killed as many of them as they did of me, and now I am going to work" (laughter and applause), as the soldier returned home after defeat and rousting some corn on the roadside, she made the remark to his mate: "You may leave the South if you want to, but I am going to Sandersville, kiss my wife, and raise a crop, and if the Yankees fool with me any more I will whip 'em again."

I now want to say to General Shermen, who is sensitive, I am also sure in our south, though some people think he is a fiend of another name, that the people that make up the South are broadminded, the first time to the grave that did the old Virginia hills, pulls his gray cap over his brow and begins the slow and painful journey. What does he find—let me ask you, who justly earned, full payment for your four years' sacrifice—what does he find, when he reaches the home he left four years before? He finds his home in ruins, his farm devastated, his slaves freed, his stock killed, his barns empty, his trade destroyed, his money worthless, his social system—found in its magnificent—except grey, his people without law or legal status, his comrades shot, and the survivors of others bary on his shoulders. Crushed by defeat, his very traditions gone. Without money, credit, employment, material—of trading, and, beside all this, confronted with the gravest problem that ever met human intelligence—the establishing of a status for the vast body of his liberated slaves.

What does he do—this hero in gray with a heart of gold—close he sat down in sullen mass and despair? Not for a day. Surely God, who has ever tempered the wind to the shorn lamb in his adversity! As rain was never before so overwhelming, never was restoration more. The soldier stepped from the trenches into the furrow; horses that had charged Pickett plow now hitched to face the plough, and fields that red with human blood in June were green with the harvest in June; women reared in luxury now to their dresses and washed to feed their husbands, and with a patience and heroism that few woman always as a gentleman, gave their hands to work. There was little bitterness in all this. Cheerfulness and fearlessness prevailed. And Arp struck the key note when he said: "Well, I killed as many of them as they did of me, and now I am going to work" (laughter and applause), as the soldier returned home after defeat and rousting some corn on the roadside, she made the remark to his mate: "You may leave the South if you want to, but I am going to Sandersville, kiss my wife, and raise a crop, and if the Yankees fool with me any more I will whip 'em again."

I now want to say to General Sherman

SOCIAL INEQUALITIES AND THEIR REMEDIES.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

of the nineteenth century, after theories innumerable had been promulgated, after education—which had been counted the panacea for all evils—had failed simply because it was a godless education, we find that the countries where the rules of poverty and labor in the freshest are those in which it is stifled by force, hence we see that after all those plausible theories this question should finally appear to be resolving itself to a mere question of brute force. Continuing, the speaker condemned the pride, the avarice and want of charity on the part of the rich, which made such discontent among the poor possible. Incidentally he referred to the doctrine inculcated by language, that it was natural within of such theories as good living, comfort and plenty, so lauded by him, to satisfy the poor man endeavoring

TO FEED AND CLOTHE A LARGE FAMILY ON 90 CENTS A DAY.

In suggesting the remedies for such social inequalities, Father Keeling claimed that education alone could not accomplish the desired result, Religion without religion would prove ineffectual, because the heart would not respond to the dictates of the mind. Man, without faith, was a creature of clay and a mass of sorrows. Christianity offers the only effectual solution of this great problem. It teaches justice. It teaches that God intended this world only as a means of attaining perfection in the next, and with the view life was worth living. It shows that God sends some persons into the world, who, by their genius, may win their way to heaven, and others who, because of the high position they occupy in life, might succeed the poor, and by their charities might likewise obtain eternal life. Poverty had not been made to serve as a background for wealth. The speaker saw no solution of these difficulties either in repression or in a godless education.

CHRISTIANITY ALONE IS THE SOLUTION.

There was no very willingness to hear or consider. None in the means suggested in President Cleveland's message, in arbitration or legislation or combination. He was so hope in the present civilization or in the principles of equality. He saw it only in that Christianity which redeemed society 1,800 years ago, and which, if the Church could remove the modern paganism, now infesting the world. What society needed was more of the Gospel of Christ and less of the theories of modern empiricism.

COING FOR THE MORMONS.

Passage of the Bill to Disfranchise Them and Seize their Property.

The Utah bill came up last week in Congress and after some hours debate was passed unanimously and without a division, only eight members rising to demand the yeas and nays. The bill now goes to the Lower House, and unless the Senate votes to defer the consideration, it will become a law at this session.

Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, who opposed the bill, wished to add the following as a final section to the amendment, however, was not admitted:

And be it further enacted that this act shall not be in force until it shall be duly approved by the President.

And there shall be an election held in the several precincts of said Territory on the third Monday in March, 1887, upon a ticket qualified electors of said Territory may elect from such legislative ticket such number of delegates they are now entitled under the Constitution and Representatives to the legislative assembly of said Territory, and the delegates so elected shall meet at Salt Lake City on the second Monday in April, 1887, at twelve o'clock noon, and shall form a Constitutional Convention.

And said Convention shall form and adopt a constitution republican in form and when shall publish proposed to said Mormons, and the same shall be ratified by a majority of the votes cast at the election to be held for that purpose in the proclamation of the President, which shall be issued on the first Monday of June, 1887, then the provisions of this act shall continue to remain operative until such such constitution shall be presented in the usual manner to and adopted by Congress.

The elections herein provided for to be held, conducted and returns made in the manner now provided by law for the holding of elections for county and precinct officers in said Territory, and all property rights of acts to conflict with the provisions of this section shall be and hereby are repealed, and the expiration of said six months shall be and the same is hereby declared to be the time for the commencement of said constitution as herein provided, then this section shall cease to remain inoperative until action on said constitution by Congress.

Bogus Set to Catch Rogues.

Two ingenious crooks who were employed by the Law and Order Society and other prohibitionists in Rhode Island, to convict those violating liquor dealers, have been exposed and driven from the State. They testified at various trials and secured convictions, but a jealous and thorough investigation into their operations has discovered the fact that they were nothing but a pair of the most consummate and blood sucking rogues. What strange machinery some advocates of temperance principles employ to correct the evil which they claim have crept into our social system!

DR. PARSTICK.

He has been good enough to send us a letter to all the reading public. Some of his friends have seen fit to make a big fuss about the question of how they shall things are in Ireland, and he has been under Dr. Freeman's treatment for only two months. He will have the nose taken from his face. He is not only delighted but greatly astonished at the helpful perfect results of Dr. Freeman's treatment. The doctor says the cause of the disease was catarrh of the Internal ear. Mrs. Hansen left her present to answer any questions regarding her case at 22 Fourth, Nine Fifteen, City.

FILES.

To whom It may concern:

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are fast taking the place of all other cathartic pills. They are a perfect remedy for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Biliousness, and all derangements of liver, stomach and bowels. Sold by all druggists.

FILES.

David Keene, of Colorado City, Texas, suffered many years from piles and been cut out and burned out, and yet was not cured. Dr. Pierce's cured him in a few months. Unknown, and removed the cause.

CHOICE GIFTS.

I have been cross-eyed twenty-nine years. I went to see Dr. Pierce two weeks ago, and in less than three one minute he made my eyes perfectly straight, and they have remained so since. Myself and family are delighted with the result. I can also see much better than ever before.

L. FRUCHAY,

Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La.

Offices, 663 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. Telephone 3614. Send stamp for Dr. Pierce's Journal.

FATHER McGLYNN'S CASE.

Public Explanation Made by Archbishop Corrigan.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Archbishop Corrigan tonight makes public a long written statement in regard to Dr. McGlynn's case. It goes back to 1882, when Dr. McGlynn is declared to have disobeyed the mandate of Rome against making political speeches by priests, and when under correspondence he used to refrain from further offending, but had to be called to account again in 1883. His made a public statement then and promised to obey. Again he transgressed by having renounced political speaking, to repeat the offence. The speech condemned the pride, the avarice and want of charity on the part of the rich, which made such discontent among the poor possible. Incidentally he referred to the doctrine inculcated by language, that it was natural within of such theories as good living, comfort and plenty, so lauded by him, to satisfy the poor man endeavoring

TO FEED AND CLOTHE A LARGE FAMILY ON 90 CENTS A DAY.

In suggesting the remedies for such social inequalities, Father Keeling claimed that education alone could not accomplish the desired result, Religion without religion would prove ineffectual, because the heart would not respond to the dictates of the mind. Man, without faith, was a creature of clay and a mass of sorrows. Christianity offers the only effectual solution of this great problem. It teaches justice. It teaches that God intended this world only as a means of attaining perfection in the next, and with the view life was worth living. It shows that God sends some persons into the world, who, by their genius, may win their way to heaven, and others who, because of the high position they occupy in life, might succeed the poor, and by their charities might likewise obtain eternal life. Poverty had not been made to serve as a background for wealth. The speaker saw no solution of these difficulties either in repression or in a godless education.

CHRISTIANITY ALONE IS THE SOLUTION.

There was no very willingness to hear or consider. None in the means suggested in President Cleveland's message, in arbitration or legislation or combination. He was so hope in the present civilization or in the principles of equality. He saw it only in that Christianity which redeemed society 1,800 years ago, and which, if the Church could remove the modern paganism, now infesting the world. What society needed was more of the Gospel of Christ and less of the theories of modern empiricism.

COING FOR THE MORMONS.

Passage of the Bill to Disfranchise Them and Seize their Property.

The Utah bill came up last week in Congress and after some hours debate was passed unanimously and without a division, only eight members rising to demand the yeas and nays. The bill now goes to the Lower House, and unless the Senate votes to defer the consideration, it will become a law at this session.

Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, who opposed the bill, wished to add the following as a final section to the amendment, however, was not admitted:

And be it further enacted that this act shall not be in force until it shall be duly approved by the President.

And there shall be an election held in the several precincts of said Territory on the third Monday in March, 1887, upon a ticket qualified electors of said Territory may elect from such legislative ticket such number of delegates they are now entitled under the Constitution and Representatives to the legislative assembly of said Territory, and the delegates so elected shall meet at Salt Lake City on the second Monday in April, 1887, at twelve o'clock noon, and shall form a Constitutional Convention.

And said Convention shall form and adopt a constitution republican in form and when shall publish proposed to said Mormons, and the same shall be ratified by a majority of the votes cast at the election to be held for that purpose in the proclamation of the President, which shall be issued on the first Monday of June, 1887, then the provisions of this act shall continue to remain operative until such such constitution shall be presented in the usual manner to and adopted by Congress.

The elections herein provided for to be held, conducted and returns made in the manner now provided by law for the holding of elections for county and precinct officers in said Territory, and all property rights of acts to conflict with the provisions of this section shall be and hereby are repealed, and the expiration of said six months shall be and the same is hereby declared to be the time for the commencement of said constitution as herein provided, then this section shall cease to remain inoperative until action on said constitution by Congress.

Bogus Set to Catch Rogues.

Two ingenious crooks who were employed by the Law and Order Society and other prohibitionists in Rhode Island, to convict those violating liquor dealers, have been exposed and driven from the State. They testified at various trials and secured convictions, but a jealous and thorough investigation into their operations has discovered the fact that they were nothing but a pair of the most consummate and blood sucking rogues. What strange machinery some advocates of temperance principles employ to correct the evil which they claim have crept into our social system!

DR. PARSTICK.

He has been good enough to send us a letter to all the reading public. Some of his friends have seen fit to make a big fuss about the question of how they shall things are in Ireland, and he has been under Dr. Freeman's treatment for only two months. He will have the nose taken from his face. He is not only delighted but greatly astonished at the helpful perfect results of Dr. Freeman's treatment. The doctor says the cause of the disease was catarrh of the Internal ear. Mrs. Hansen left her present to answer any questions regarding her case at 22 Fourth, Nine Fifteen, City.

FILES.

To whom It may concern:

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are fast taking the place of all other cathartic pills. They are a perfect remedy for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Biliousness, and all derangements of liver, stomach and bowels. Sold by all druggists.

FILES.

David Keene, of Colorado City, Texas, suffered many years from piles and been cut out and burned out, and yet was not cured. Dr. Pierce's cured him in a few months. Unknown, and removed the cause.

CHOICE GIFTS.

I have been cross-eyed twenty-nine years. I went to see Dr. Pierce two weeks ago, and in less than three one minute he made my eyes perfectly straight, and they have remained so since. Myself and family are delighted with the result. I can also see much better than ever before.

L. FRUCHAY,

Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La.

Offices, 663 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. Telephone 3614. Send stamp for Dr. Pierce's Journal.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ARMAGH.—John P. Hulme, Dublin, has given a reduction of 30 per cent. on judicial rents in the Kilmore district, which was fixed in 1881. Mr. Hulme's reduction is the 40th, and the 30 per cent. reduction is the 39th. The tenants on the Hulme estate, numbering 1,500, are all satisfied with the reductions, and hoping for more. In 4th case fairness seems to be shown by Mr. Hulme, Navan, and he property in Meath, Navan, 30 per cent. on his property in Meath; 10 per cent. on his property in Meath, Navan, and 10 per cent. on his property in Meath, Navan, and 10 per cent. on his property in Meath, Navan, and

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

JUST FOR TO-DAY.

Naught I ask for narrow's need,
Just for to-day,
Doubtful Father, Thy child feed
Only for to-day;
Lead Thy strong grace to me,
Help Me Only one to see,
From temptation's path to flee,
Only for to-day.

Guide this wayward will of mine,
Only for to-day,
Fill my heart with love divine,
Only for to-day;
Still this storm, repel the tempter's lure,
Help me, for Thou knowest best
What I need of all the rest,
Only for to-day.

Let my thoughts be good and pure,
Only for to-day,
Let no demon them allure,
Only for to-day;
Let me always see Thy face,
Father, lead Thy unruly race
To me, in this dreary place,
Only for to-day.

Father, help me when I speak,
Only for to-day,
To be gentle, kind, and meek,
Only for to-day;
Let me say no cruel thing,
Grant I may Thy patience sing,
And my words with love to fling
Only for to-day.

All my actions, Father, guide,
Only for to-day,
Keep me from sin's dismal tide,
Only for to-day;
Let each demeanor, and word, and deed,
Always yesterday's second,
And no memory to Thee, lead,
Only for to-day.

Be Thou all the world to me,
Only for to-day,
Thy glory my mission be,
Only for to-day;
Every movement of mind I make,
May it be for Thy dear sake,
And my feeble efforts take,
Only for to-day.

Help me fight the battle well,
Only for to-day,
What though yesterday I fell,
Only for to-day;
Help me take my cross anew,
And forget how hard it is to bear,
Thy dear steps once more pursue,
Only for to-day.

Grant each need of wisdom's love,
Only for to-day,
Thou request to my heart to prove,
Only for to-day;
May it grow, and leaves exhale,
As the mustard seed of old,
Bring forth grace a hundred fold,
Only for to-day.

Help me tread the narrow path,
Only for to-day,
Let me never stray from that,
Only for to-day;
Resist and drown clamorous the road,
Virtue's way with thorns is sewed,
Lead me onward with my load,
Only for to-day.

Lead my faltering steps aright,
Only for to-day,
Through earth's darkness like Thy light
Only for to-day;
Lead me through the shadowy gate,
Let no Malice grasp the mate,
There the Bridegroom is awaik,
Only for to-day.

San Francisco, Jan. 30, 1887.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

FAITH.

Dost weep because thy life is lone,
And empty which lay long in bloom?
Because thy dreary pathway leads
Away from mirth and song?
Dost sigh because sore chilled doubts
Are bearing out thy heart—
Because the hedgehog, fashion, denies
With vainglory proud decorat?

Before the grim stern face of Fate
None can unscathed or free,
For sorrow, pain, and death are sent
To each she doth decree.
The crowned pride, the peasant's cote,
Are mixed with tears of bliss,
And poorher shadows crouch and hide
Within the hooded vice.

She mixes all her creature sips
At streams of livier pain,
And from the sunny ways of bliss
She sends the wintry rain.
Then cease thy useless murmuring,
And, cast thine idle lyre,
Some lives are doomed to loneliness
And some are doomed to tears.

M. L.

Puck's Circle.

There are now eight cables between North America and Europe. They average three thousand miles long, and in the world there are something like one thousand miles of submarine telegraph line. South America connected with Europe by a cable from Lisbon, Portugal, to Pernambuco, Brazil, a distance of 2,335 nautical miles. This is the longest cable.

Two cables connect Florida with the Island of Cuba, and one extends from Cuba to Aspinwall on the Isthmus and another to Rio Janeiro.

From Trinidad, the most southerly of the West Indies, a cable follows the coast line of Brazil, clear down to Montevideo, in Uruguay, touching at many ports.

There are sixteen cables crossing the North Sea and the Straits of Dover. Two cables connect England and Spain.

Nearly a score of cables lie beneath the Mediterranean.

One cable extends the entire length of the Red Sea from Suez to Aden, thence under the Arabian Sea to Bombay across India, under the Bay of Bengal to Penang and Singapore, under the Gulf of Siam and thence north under the Gulf of Siam and China Sea to Hongkong and Canton. This is known as the Indo-route to the Indian, and Australian Colonies and Yeddo, Japan.

A cable under the sea of Japan connects Nagasaki with Vladivostok, one of the most remote points of Siberia. Another connects Singapore a cable touches Java and Sumatra and reaches Australia.

From the Island of Tasmania, lying south of Australia, is stretched a cable clear around the world by cable, and so is New Zealand.

The great African cable, completed some years ago, extends from Aden, Arabia, to Natal, one of the extreme southern ports of Africa.

So, you see, the four corners of the earth have been brought pretty close together by the great cables which lie, some of them, nearly four miles beneath the surface of the ocean.

The only thing now necessary to complete the electric circuit of the world is to lay a cable under the Pacific Ocean, and a project is on foot to connect Japan and San Francisco via the Sandwich Islands.

Literary Miscellany.

The Golden Bound of Grief.

A Beautiful Catholic Story in Two Chapters

CHAPTER I.

In the churchyard of P——, there is a plot, single in form and of modest materials. But everyone who wanders curiously about this quiet resting place of those who have entered the land of the dead before them is read the inscription it bears.

The inscription is as follows:

"Here rests Catherine C——, widow. She gave four sons to the world, and four died these daughters, and brought up and married the survivor. She was not rich, but she could love, and she could work. She was always cheerful and healthy. She slept in the Lord without sickness or suffering in the seventieth year of her age."

On each side of this tomb is a grave, one exactly like the other. At the head of each is a stone with a name and date. Both were for many years kept so carefully covered with turf, and shaded from flowering plants, and the approach to them was always in such good order that there was every evidence not only of love and gratitude towards the woman who rested there, but tender recollections were connected with those hillocks, to which there were hearts dearly attached. Flowers were planted in graceful clusters of the old person whose life and blessed end were so pitilessly expressed by it. Then kind and with surprise at the exact resemblance and careful tending of the two neighboring graves, and sought to learn who rested there, and who it was that so treasured and preserved them.

And a fortunate chance, the particulars of which are unnecessary to detail, led me to the discovery of this little story.

In the beginning of December, 18—, died a respectable widow, whose only son, Michael, though only twenty years of age, already had an important situation.

She was buried in the churchyard of P——, and on the right of the above mentioned tomb. Michael, who had always had an irreparable love for his mother, on the day of the funeral watered her coffin with tears of gratitude, and threw on to its hard full of frozen earth. When the grave was covered in, and everyone had departed, he remain behind, and kneeling by the fresh earth, prayed earnestly for the soul of her who had not only kept his body in health and strength, but his soul in the fear and love of God, and formed it to what was good and noble.

He deeply regretted that the winter did not permit him to erect any memorial as a proof of his gratitude, and the more as his duty obliged him to leave the place; for during his mother's illness, and a week before her death, he had received his promotion to a situation in another town.

He determined, therefore, to leave the grave in such a condition that if he could obtain leave to come to Warsaw next April, he would hasten thither to fulfil this holy duty; and that he might know exactly where the dear remains were resting he carefully observed the side paths which led to it through the labyrinth of grave mounds around.

He remarked also the inscription on the gravestone, and the graves of the two women so similar to each other, and endeavored to impress their remembrance so deeply on his return to find his mother's grave without making any inquiries.

In the January of the following year, 18—, another woman died in Warsaw, Helena C——, the wife of an official in the town, and the youngest daughter of the old lady whose tomb is described above. Two or three weeks later he promised Anna he would fulfill her wish, for he hoped for help from his brother; first, however, he would put the grave in order. The delay troubled the poor girl; but when she had learned the true reason for it and thought that she had herself in a great measure been the cause of the expense which had so exhausted her father's means and placed him in debt, she wept and prayed for her mother's soul in the neighboring church, and determined to wait.

She also bethought herself to go and visit her neighbors and acquaintances by whom she was much beloved, in order to thank them for their kind sympathy with her during her mother's illness.

Her friends were well pleased to see her again in health, with a fresh color on her cheeks, and the expression of life and interest in her eyes which was their want. They thought themselves to be a well-known establishment which was in want of a teacher of music and languages for a few hours each day.

Anna felt that she was quite able to undertake this duty, and longed to be able to help her father by this means.

She was kindly received there, and with the full consent of her father entered upon her new occupation.

A fortnight had hardly passed when the young pupils were so much attached to their teacher, and her superiors were so pleased with her, that as soon as they heard of her need they offered her twenty pounds in advance of her quarter's salary.

Anna was only too happy to close with this proposal, and at once determined to make a surprise for her father, and to spend her first instalment of salary upon a gravestone for her mother.

This was towards the end of April. The grave mound was covered with fresh green, the trees began to put forth their young leaves, and the churchyard at P—— looked beautiful, if anything was at it seemed, as if to keep up at least the appearance of life.

On the following morning, when her father had gone to his office and the house had been put in order, Anna took with her the old servant who had attended the fun eral, that he might show her her mother's grave, and proceeded to the churchyard.

She knew her mother lay very near her grandmother. The servant, too, knew that, but as during the interment he had, as in duty bound, been in the lower class of people, taken little heed of what was going on, he did not observe on which side his mistress had been laid, and led Anna to the wrong one.

The poor girl was filled with sorrow when she looked upon the neglected hillock covered with weeds and the fallen leaves of the past year, not even a slate bending with the mass and date, by which every other grave was adorned one whence from the dead.

At the thought that such a mother mother's grave should be neglected, she burst into tears.

The servant, meanwhile, to the arrival of the churchyard of P——, near to her grand mother, but whether the grave lay to the right or left of that tomb, it did not occur to her to inquire.

The whole of March passed. When Anna felt well and the order of parish and health returned to her beautiful features, she regret her father to take her to her mother's grave.

Mr. H——, of course, postponed this from day to day, under the pretext that it was still too cold and the ground too damp for them to kneel and pray. It would bring her little consolation, and on the other side, it might cost her harm and occasion a relapse. In any case, he did not wish to trouble his daughter by the sight of the bare grave, and at present he could not find money for a gravestone, his expenses during the last winter having been very considerable.

Two or three weeks later he promised Anna he would fulfill her wish, for he hoped for help from his brother; first, however, he would put the grave in order. The delay troubled the poor girl; but when she had learned the true reason for it and thought that she had herself in a great measure been the cause of the expense which had so exhausted her father's means and placed him in debt, she wept and prayed for her mother's soul in the neighboring church, and determined to wait.

She also bethought herself to go and visit her neighbors and acquaintances by whom she was much beloved, in order to thank them for their kind sympathy with her during her mother's illness.

Her friends were well pleased to see her again in health, with a fresh color on her cheeks, and the expression of life and interest in her eyes which was their want. They thought themselves to be a well-known establishment which was in want of a teacher of music and languages for a few hours each day.

Anna felt that she was quite able to undertake this duty, and longed to be able to help her father by this means.

She was kindly received there, and with the full consent of her father entered upon her new occupation.

A fortnight had hardly passed when the young pupils were so much attached to their teacher, and her superiors were so pleased with her, that as soon as they heard of her need they offered her twenty pounds in advance of her quarter's salary.

Anna was only too happy to close with this proposal, and at once determined to make a surprise for her father, and to spend her first instalment of salary upon a gravestone for her mother.

This was towards the end of April. The grave mound was covered with fresh green, the trees began to put forth their young leaves, and the churchyard at P—— looked beautiful, if anything was at it seemed, as if to keep up at least the appearance of life.

On the following morning, when her father had gone to his office and the house had been put in order, Anna took with her the old servant who had attended the funeral, that he might show her her mother's grave, and proceeded to the churchyard.

She knew her mother lay very near her grandmother. The servant, too, knew that, but as during the interment he had, as in duty bound, been in the lower class of people, taken little heed of what was going on, he did not observe on which side his mistress had been laid, and led Anna to the wrong one.

The poor girl was filled with sorrow when she looked upon the neglected hillock covered with weeds and the fallen leaves of the past year, not even a slate bending with the mass and date, by which every other grave was adorned one whence from the dead.

At the thought that such a mother mother's grave should be neglected, she burst into tears.

The servant, meanwhile, to the arrival of the churchyard of P——, near to her grand mother, but whether the grave lay to the right or left of that tomb, it did not occur to her to inquire.

The whole of March passed. When Anna felt well and the order of parish and health returned to her beautiful features, she regret her father to take her to her mother's grave.

Mr. H——, of course, postponed this from day to day, under the pretext that it was still too cold and the ground too damp for them to kneel and pray. It would bring her little consolation, and on the other side, it might cost her harm and occasion a relapse. In any case, he did not wish to trouble his daughter by the sight of the bare grave, and at present he could not find money for a gravestone, his expenses during

THE HOME OF THE POPES.

Wonders of the Vatican Described by a Non-Catholic.

A newspaper correspondent declares that the Vatican is not so much a palace as a group of palaces, and he describes it very pleasantly and as gaily and as highly cultivated as Paris and more so than Rome. Its regularity of the pile of buildings composing the Vatican it is difficult to obtain a correct estimate of the area of ground it covers. One writer ventures the assertion that it corresponds an area equal to that of ancient Turin, the capital of Piedmont, and is regularly laid out, with streets and squares, and the Pope's palace is said to be able to Turin of two decades ago. He, however, does not mention the fact that in more satisfactory conclusion on this point—beyond the gross rock of the gentle looks—that the Vatican covers an area equal to a city. To the student of architecture, the Vatican affords endless opportunity. Its form is irregular, and there is an entire absence of any symmetry in its design, for it is the heterogeneous work of all the schools of all the known masters. Each period of art has bore its impress. There is the marble severity of the Sangallo, the decorations of Raphael, the sculpture of Bernacci of Fontana, the classical groupings of Michael Angelo, the frescos of Raphael, the drawings of Carlo Moderno and the fanciful groupings of Vignola. The palace have flights of apartments and whole dependencies of them. There are chapels, halls, hundreds of corridors and 11,000 rooms, and this was called by the Catholic press the prison of Pius IX. Another writer says the word it may be of interest to note a few facts about the Vatican. It has 22 chief courts, 8 principal stairways, 200 minor stairways, and 20 elevators, and 1,000 bells. Its chapel, The temple of St. Peter is the greatest monument left by the Popes.

AND BY FAR THE LARGEST

and most imposing basilica in the world. Michael Angelo, who superintended its erection, said it was a fitting tomb for the greatest of Popes." It occupies the place of a temple dedicated to Jupiter, and it has hundreds of corridors and 11,000 rooms, and this was called by the Catholic press the prison of Pius IX. Another writer says the word it may be of interest to note a few facts about the Vatican. It has 22 chief courts, 8 principal stairways, 200 minor stairways, and 20 elevators, and 1,000 bells. Its chapel, The temple of St. Peter is the greatest monument left by the Popes.

AND BY FAR THE LARGEST

and most imposing basilica in the world. Michael Angelo, who superintended its erection, said it was a fitting tomb for the greatest of Popes." It occupies the place of a temple dedicated to Jupiter, and it has hundreds of corridors and 11,000 rooms, and this was called by the Catholic press the prison of Pius IX. Another writer says the word it may be of interest to note a few facts about the Vatican. It has 22 chief courts, 8 principal stairways, 200 minor stairways, and 20 elevators, and 1,000 bells. Its chapel, The temple of St. Peter is the greatest monument left by the Popes.

There is no State in the Union where people can live better or cheaper than in

OUR OWN CALIFORNIA

—WHICH IS A VERITABLE—

HORN OF PLENTY

So far as Edibles and Fruits are concerned.

THE SECRET

Of living cheaply and well a secret discovered by all MONITOR readers if they will purchase their household supplies at

FAMILY GROCERIES

From the well-known firm of

S. BARBORO & CO.,

At their Old established place of business,

531 Washington St.,

The Old House Still Stands

Where—for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of Saving, Prudent and

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS

HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

THE SECRET

BY WHICH

S. BARBORO & CO.,

Can sell Groceries &c., cheaper than other dealers can simply formed on these eight Business Propositions:

1 We buy all our goods for Cash.
2 We buy in large quantity at Bed-Rock Rates.
3 We sell to Cash Customers only.
4 We have no Bad Debts on our Books.
5 We buy cheap and can sell cheap.
6 Having no Bad Debts we require less profit.
7 We can give better goods than our competitors.
8 Our customers get the benefit of our cash purchase.

THEY ALL SAY

"The Good Poured into the Box by Weeks.

The Best Groceries

AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES

The proper place to purchase them is at

S. BARBORO & CO'S.

531 WASHINGTON STREET

(Between Montgomery and Sansome.)

READ THESE PRICES

And Call and Examine

OUR GOODS

SUGARS

Greatly Reduced.

20 pounds Dried Apples, 1$
18 pounds Tapioca, 1$
18 pounds Sago, 1$
20 pounds Codfish, 1$
14 pounds Prunes, 1$
10 pounds Dried Pears, 1$
Star Ground Coffee, 20c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug) 50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea, 50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea, 25c per lb
5-gallon can Star Light Coal Oil, $1.75
40 pounds P. White Beans, $1
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs, $1.75
Flour from Old Wheat at Greatly Reduced Reduction.

And all other Goods Equally Cheap.

WINES AND LIQUORS.

Claret, Zinfandel, per gallon.....
Claret, French, per gallon.....
Sherry, Old, per gallon.....
Port, Old, per gallon.....
Old Time Bourbon, per gallon.....
Old Time Bourbon, per gallon.....
Irish Whiskey, per gallon.....
Jamaica Rum, per gallon.....

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of the City, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made carefully and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

S. BARBORO & CO.

S. BARBORO, Manager.

MONITOR MENTION.

Chas. D. Gaston, Carriages, Buggies, Cabs, Office Stores & Models, 1,207 City street, San Francisco.

Wm. Ewing & Co., Importers of Fine Wines and Liquors, West End Grocery, corner of Fillmore and Ellis sts.

Wm. Ewing & Co., Importers of Fine Wines and Liquors, office and warehouse of Hibernia Factory, Sansome st.

Chas. Lonergan, Fine Tailoring, 1,017 Market st., opp. Mason, Mrs. Mulvey.

Lonergan & Mulvey, Fine Tailoring, 1,017 Market st., opp. Mason.

Wm. Cluff, Undertaker, 1,127 Market st., near Seventh. Lady assistant. Tel. 803, at Tucy's, Market st. Telephone 803.

—See Parchemin, the Blanket Store. Money saving prices in Blankets, Comfortables, Flannels, Linseys, Bedding and all Household Articles. Business private.

Cut this out and bring it with you. Ladies' Fine Shoes, $1.50. Tuck Bling, 31, Ellis st.

Get 837 Market street, for Dressing Jacks, Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats, Caps, Boots and Shoes.

—See my gilt parlor suite for $65. Walnut chamber suite, $22. Parlor suites, $15. Marble st. opposite Dupont.

—If a set for teeth—warranted as good as can be made—costs you $15. Dr. Simms, Dentist, 767 Market st., cor. Stockton.

—Ladies' Fine Shoes, Sign of Fine Shoes, opposite Mechanics' Pavilion.

—For fashionable tailoring at reasonable rates, call on Jos. Poheim, Merchant Tailor, 1,004 Market st., Nos. 5 Third street, near Market.

—Miss Kate Plunkett—New Female Employment Office, 1,017 Market street, between Stockton and Powell; country orders solicited; 3 stamps.

—John Foster, the old proprietor of the New Front Clothing Store, 1,000 Market st., has removed from Mission to Third street, between Mission and Market. Boys' Clothing a specialty. Boys' Suits, 3 to 15 years, $3 and $4; every one warranted to give satisfaction. Men's Fine Suits, $15 and upwards. Fine Pantaloons, $4 and upwards. Fine Overcoats, $15 and upwards. Boys' Overcoats, $3 and upwards. Fine Hats, $2 and upwards. Boots and Shoes, $1 and upwards. Fine Shirts, $1 and upwards. Fine Underwear, $1 and upwards. Fine Neckwear, 25c and upwards. Fine Gloves, 25c and upwards. Fine Suspenders, 25c and upwards. Fine Hosiery, 25c and upwards. Fine Handkerchiefs, 25c and upwards. Fine Umbrellas, $1 and upwards. Fine Trunks, $3 and upwards. Fine Valises, $1 and upwards. Fine Carpet Sacks, $1 and upwards. Fine Robes, $3 and upwards. Fine Blankets, $3 and upwards. Fine Comfortables, $1 and upwards. Fine Flannels, 25c and upwards. Fine Linseys, 25c and upwards. Fine Bedding, 25c and upwards. Fine Ticks, 25c and upwards. Fine Cottons, 25c and upwards. Fine Jeans, 25c and upwards. Fine Cassimeres, 25c and upwards. Fine Doeskins, 25c and upwards. Fine Tweeds, 25c and upwards. Fine Cheviots, 25c and upwards. Fine Worsteds, 25c and upwards. Fine Silks, 25c and upwards. Fine Satins, 25c and upwards. Fine Velvets, 25c and upwards. Fine Velveteens, 25c and upwards. Fine Corduroys, 25c

THE MONITOR.
OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.
THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published in the Pacific Coast.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—After Cardinal Gibbons receives the red hat in Rome next month, he will make a tour of Northern Europe. Upon his return to America his Eminence will visit Oregon, where he will invest Archbishop Gross with the Pallium.

—In 1886 the death of four Cardinals were recorded. In the United States three Bishops passed to their eternal reward and 107 priests ended their earthly labors. Fifty-two Sisters and eleven Brothers also passed away.

—In the coming Consistory, the twin brother of Cardinal Mazzella, Canon Henry Mazzella, Rector of the Seminary of Benevento, will, it is said, be promoted to the Archiepiscopic of Bari. He was born at Vitulano, near Benevento, and is about fifty years of age.

—A cablegram from Rome states that the next Consistory for the elevation of Cardinals and the nomination of Bishops to vacant Sees, will take place on March 7th. The Pope, it is alleged, is preparing an Allocution affirming with increased emphasis, the principle of the temporal power of the Church which has been so ruthlessly ignored by the Italian and other European governments.

—The large number of immigrants coming into California seems to have aroused a spirit of laudable rivalry between different sections of the State and led to the foundation of Immigration Societies. At a recent meeting of the citizens of Bakersfield, it was determined to make the same effort to induce such desirable immigrants and capital into Kern county that is now making, with such marked success, in other parts of the State.

—We regret to learn from a New York paper that James Redpath, the well-known advocate of Ireland's rights, is dangerously ill in that city. Mr. Redpath, although an Englishman, did valorous deeds for the Irish people during the Land League campaign. With voice and pen he persistently pleaded for Home Rule, and his writings brought the cause of Irish grievances prominently before the people of all civilized lands. We hope he may live to see the results of his patriotic efforts crowned with success.

—We learn from a Dublin paper that on a recent occasion bands of music and crowds of people assembled outside of Kilmainham Jail and serenaded the Nationalist Mooney, who was imprisoned for refusing to testify in his bankruptcy case arising out of the adoption of the plan of campaign. Mooney, it is a speech referring to Mr. Chamberlain's condemnation of the plan of campaign, said that Mr. Chamberlain's fate, during the past year had been a big, and that his turning against his friends made him equal to an assassin.

—Some time ago the Mormons urged the necessity of the Government erecting a decent place of worship on the Presidio for Catholic soldiers. But the reply came from the Secretary of War that no funds could be appropriated for such a purpose. Now we learn from a Kansas paper that Congress has appropriated $11,000 for a Catholic Church, a Catholic school-house and a priest's house at Fort Leavenworth. From this it would seem that Secretary of War Lincoln's objection was not based either on good will or good law.

—One of the strangest of Protestant religious sects is that which calls itself the New and Latter House of Israel. Its headquarters is in Chatham, England, in which town its devotees are building an immense temple which will cost $250,000. They believe that they will not die and that they are the remnant of true Israelites who will reign with Christ for a thousand years. Their founder was a man named Jarrel, who is now dead. His death was a great shock to the believers, but his wife claimed that it was an ancient and well-known herself to be his successor. View in hospitals!

—On Quadragesima Sunday—the Sunday after Ash Wednesday—which falls this year on the 27th inst., a collection will be taken up in all the Catholic churches in the United States for the benefit of the Catholic and Indian missions under the jurisdiction of Cardinal Gibbons. The Rev. Father Burke, of the Church of St. Benedict the Moor, the colored church in New York City, has applied to the commission, which consists of Cardinal Gibbons, Bishop Kain, of Wheeling, and Bishop Curtis, of Wilmington, for the relief of his church and St. Benedict's House for Destitute Children.

—An Eastern paper reports that when in New York recently Cardinal Taschereau of Canada made an important statement regarding the Knights of Labor. Cardinal Taschereau was asked whether he would move, at the meeting of the Consistory which he will attend at Rome, to consider the Knights of Labor. "Yes," the Cardinal replied, "and I will try to get a specific declaration from Pope Leo not only regarding the Knights of Labor, but also as to the theories concerning property in land as advocated by Henry George." It will be remembered that Cardinal Taschereau at Montreal had summary condemned the Knights of Labor.

—Mr. Chamberlain the prominent English politician, has so much love for the Orangemen in the North of Ireland that he has hatched out a novel scheme for the amelioration of Ireland by barring Irish Parliaments—one in Belfast for the Protestant section of the people, and another in Dublin for the Catholic Irish. Such a scheme is ridiculous in its very conception and could not in any possibility be carried out. Mr. Gladstone, on the other hand, was very justly that whatever scheme is sanctioned must be approved by the Irish people, and he knows nothing short of a Legislature with a responsible Executive, which would give the Irish people power to execute as well as to make laws, would satisfy their national aspirations.

—A cablegram from London brings the sad news that Mr. Parnell's health is so badly shattered that it is considered almost impossible for him long to sustain the position he occupies at present as leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party. His malady is reported to be a very serious attack of Bright's disease which has for years defied the best medical skill. In casting around for a successor as leader of the Irish Parliamentary ensemble, the name of T. M. Healy stands first on the list. We sincerely hope the news by cable is exaggerated.

—It is generally conceded that one of the most effective natural agents for shaking up the consciences of alcohol-fuddled drinkers is a regular series of earthquake shocks of short intervals. Attach a time thousands of people flock to the confessionals, approach the Sacraments and generally make their peace with God. We see by a Charleston paper that the same cause created the same results in that city, both the Catholic and Protestant congregations having been greatly enlarged since the earthquake scare which reminded the people of that well-shaken section of the South that in the midst of life we are in death.

—The progress of the Church in Cleveland, Ohio, is well demonstrated by the fact that it is but 47 years since the first Catholic Church was erected in that city. When the first small church was consecrated there were but five Catholic families in that city. Now there are 50,000 Catholics in Cleveland, with 20 churches and congregations (besides old St. Patrick's and St. Columbkill's), with schools attached, educating nearly 10,000 children; with 22 secular priests and 14 regulars; 2 hospitals, 3 orphan asylums (going for about 400 orphans (boarding orphans, home for the aged, reformatory for girls and fallen women; and in short, a community of women number some 300 members.

—At the session of the National Woman Suffrage Association held in Washington last week, resolutions were adopted demanding the passage of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, which shall secure the right of suffrage to the women of the United States. An appeal is made to the working women to strive for the right of suffrage, upon the ground that a disfranchised class will always be an oppressed class. Reference is made to the fact that in New York a woman is under arrest for casting a ballot, an act held to be criminable when performed by a man, which is declared to be proof of the inconsistency and injustice of the present position of woman. The endorsement of woman suffrage by the United Labor party and by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is recognized as a hopeful sign of the times.

—Recent advices from Europe state that despite the peaceful reaction war is seriously considered there as among the possibilities. The general opinion of the chances is generally against the Powers. Wars lands say the preparations are quite insufficient, notwithstanding the 400,000 guns ordered by Gen. Boulanger to be ready for April 15th. The artillery has all been sent from Vincennes to Lunville and Vernon, and it really seems to be a foregal movement of reserve strength in both men and arms. No one appears to have much illusion about the risks. A cutting up of France is openly talked of, and, as the penalty of defeat, the feeling that a crushing indemnity would be demanded is universal. For the very reason on the French would fight this time, if war it must be, with a savage determination not to survive a defeat.

—Germany evidently believes in the prudent maxim: "In time of peace prepare for war," as the Berlin papers announce the purchase of large school buildings at Zillichau, near Cobnar, for barracks for the German troops. Reinforcements have arrived at Donne, Hagenau, and other frontier towns. An Alsace journal also reports that the French are building wooden barracks at Gerardmer to accommodate 3,000 men and at Corcina for 3000 more, and that at other places in Vosges smaller barracks are being erected. The garrisons at Epinal, Bruyeres and St. Die have been reinforced with 5,000 troops. The National Zeitung says it seems that France is preparing for immediate war. The Germans need not disturb the truth of the assertion that France is only defending herself against possible assault.

—Rev. A. J. Cantwell, who ministers to the poor lodgers and other platoerats in the church of Our Father, Brooklyn, N. Y., is a preacher who has the courage to tell the truth about Protestantism and its failure as a religious system. In the course of a recent sermon, Dr. Cantwell was not afraid to tell his aristocratic hearers that "the Protestant Church has failed to preach the Gospel to the poor. Athens, in its palmy days, was a trifle smaller than Brooklyn is to-day, and it had 600,000 slaves. The Catholic Church abolished slavery and took the side of the poor as against the rich. Protestantism claimed to be an advance on Catholicism, but it had failed to ameliorate the condition of the poor. The formal Protestant only one-tenth of the soil product as rent. Now the landlord is not satisfied unless he gets from one-third to one-half."

—The peace of the Church in China is assured for some time, if we may judge from the fact that the authorities of several of the Chinese nations have issued proclamations calling on the people to live in peace with the Christian missionaries and converts, and explaining that the Christian religion teaches men to do right and should therefore be respected. The proclamation reminds them that by honoring converts to Christianity they do not cease to be Chinese. "Know, therefore," says one of the proclamations, "all sort of whatever sort or condition that the sole object of establishing chapels is to exhort men to do right; those who embrace Christianity do not cease to be Chinese, and both sides, therefore, should continue to live in peace and not let mutual jealousies be the cause of strife between them." This change has been brought about without any outside pressure.

Closing Calvary Cemetery.

In consequence of the great number of interments daily in Calvary Cemetery in this city, it is possible that all the land available for burial purposes will be occupied in the course of a couple of months, and then Calvary Cemetery will be closed against all further burials except for the interment of persons who have already secured plots therein. Simultaneously with the closing of Calvary Cemetery, the new Cemetery in San Mateo county will be dedicated and opened. The present cemetery will be scrupulously kept sacred for the repose of the ashes of all who repose therein, and no remains will be disturbed, and no portion of the land appropriated to any purpose whatever save for interment in graves or tombs already owned by individuals.

Calvary Cemetery was blessed by Most Rev. Alemany, D. D., O. P., on Sunday August 17th, 1862, in presence of a large concourse of people, who joined in the ceremonies on that occasion by Rt. Rev. Doctor Lons, Bishop of Seattle, from whence he had arrived the year previous, arriving in this city where he was tendered a public reception and a handsome sum of money. The priests present were Very Rev. James Croke, Rev. John McGinnis (Lt. P.), Rev. J. F. Harrington, Rev. Michael King, Fathers Alfarachias and Mazzetta, S. J.

The sermon on the occasion was preached by the Most Rev. Archbishop, in front of the vault at the summit of the hill, in the center of the grounds, the text being the words inscribed over the door of the vault: "Yesterday for me, to-day for thee." At the conclusion of this sermon, the great cross in front of the vault was sprinkled in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and the Litany of the Saints repeated. The long procession then moved down the main avenue to the Chapel, on the right, which was in like manner sprinkled, and the Litany repeated, then the entire circuit of the grounds, something like a mile in extent, was made, the chanting and sprinkling of the earth being kept up throughout, and on resuming the ceremony of blessing was taken up the procession. The procession then made the entire circuit of the grounds, sprinkling the earth and then moved back to the central cross in front of the vault, where prayers were said, and the ceremonies were concluded. It was half-past six o'clock before the ceremonies were finished, and the vast concourse of people returned to the city.

Calvary Cemetery originally contained one hundred acres, which was laid out by Mr. W. O'Donnell of San José, and improved at an expense of some $50,000. This was the first work of this character ever undertaken in California. The cemetery commands one of the finest views of the neighborhood. It overlooks the city and the bay, beyond Hunter's Point, and to the Alameda shores, away to the north of the Sacramento, the shores of Marin, the Presidio, Golden Gate Heads and the Pacific Ocean. Indeed, it possessed but few attractions of these scenes of panoramic views, but once its adornment, its attractions to the living have been greatly enhanced. What more appropriate site for the last earthly resting place of the dead—whose sings is the never-ceasing roar of the waters of the Pacific, accompanied by the wail of the west-wind? May all whose ashes repose in Calvary's sacred soil reap the reward of Calvary's sacrifice!

Authority in the Church.

"What has the Pope to do with an American citizen?" asks the Colorado Catholic, and it gives the following precise and pertinent answer: "Nothing. What has the Pope to do with a Catholic priest? A great deal. The Pope has to see that priests do not imitate the Protestant ministers in uttering every foolish doctrine that diseased brains can germinate; he has to see that priests respect constituted authority, and, if they do not, he has to see that the interests of Christian human nature benefited by less fault-oppressor and unjust.

Bishop Ryan on Labor.

The Right Rev. Stephen Vincent Ryan, Bishop of Buffalo, has written a very strong Pastoral Letter, which was read in all the churches of the Diocese last Sunday week.

"Labor is not capital," says the Bishop, "the working masses are not capitalists, nor may look for even hundred and proper treatment at the hands of God's Church unless they do their duty. The Church is not yet so one can fail to see where sympathy lies or to whom her heart goes out. It is the desert affection. False sons desert her; some among her children, misled or faithless, may now, as in days past, rise up against her and make shipwreck of the faith. The loss is all theirs. Like a true and tender mother, she will mourn over the lost sheep, and without intermission the fold, alarming as lots of her divine message. * * * Honest and industrious workingmen, the hope and sinew of the nation, the Church knows you; owes your right to combine peaceably to secure the amelioration of your condition, the equitable share of the profits of your hard labor, a just compensation for your daily toil, to maintain yourselves and families in decency and reasonable competency, in homes where cheerful children will be your delight and your leisure hours. * * * If there shall be any condemnation it will come through your own unfaithfulness, because of the sound principles you adopt, the unlawful aims you propose to yourselves, or the unnatural means you use to attain your object. But should you, in spite of her warning voice fly in the face of divine law, sins against society, be carried away by social, moral, and political influences, the Church will not cease to be your mother, to plead for your rights, to sympathize with your sufferings, to offer you her consolations, and to use every means in her power to bring you back to the fold of your Catholic children."

The Bishop then proceeds to show how Catholic loyalty to this city, in order to save the faith of homeless boys, many of whom are enticed away from the Church every month through just such "subtle and specious arrangements" as those practiced by the proselyting tactics so ably described by the writer whose article we have quoted.

The Evils of Brain Forcing.

Dr. William A. Hammond lectured recently in New York on "Brain Forcing in the education of children," and in the course of his talk he told some truths which may be heeded with profit by the parents and teachers who think their children or pupils are not "up with the age" unless they can name twenty different studies during school hours.

Dr. Hammond mentioned the case of a child patient who was brought to him jumping and yelling with St Vitus' dance. He found that her parents had sent her through three a geography, an arithmetic a History of the United States, a "Primary Astronomy," a French grammar and Hygiene—whatever that may be—and no end of other text books. He only wonder, then, that the poor little girl had lost their brains instead of St Vitus dance.

"She was using her brain capital and not her interest," said the Dr. "Intellectual bankruptcy was staring her in the face, and she was insane. Any man master who forgets that children become thinner fatigued from slight causes even when they are not overworked, and who, from of intense mental exertion will weary in a different way from an adult, is a physical labor How much more, then, will it wear upon the nervous system, if it be sought to prevent the physical overstraining of the brain by overcrowding their mental apparatus. From the very earliest period of birth an infant's mind is in pursuit of knowledge. Its senses are constantly drawing into play are the perceptive organs, and its phenomena, which are first observed through the perceptive organs for the first ten or twelve years of life. The child who does not look and listen could be in no condition to learn. It is the duty of parents and teachers to see that the child has the habits of the state of Illinois or Vermont, and very possibly of the state of Texas or Oregon, and that the child's mind is not crowded together. The population in all the city banks now amount to $61,875,631. Only three of the banks show a decrease in deposits, and these are the National Savings Bank on Pine has only about $43,000,000 on deposit, and the Bank of Commerce and Trust Company represents the savings of all France.

The complete will of the late Mortimer Plu Nunn has just been published. The Holy Father dead poor as become a Pontiff, and he left no will, the evidence that the residue of his inherited fortune. He has no relatives, but Hebrews belonged to an immense and wide family of Sinnagalis, that of the Conte Mosini. He did not forget his servants nor yet the associations of his years gone, having bequeathed a royalty to the Cathedral of San Giacomo, in Chili, where he once ministered. The provisions are so his tomb were simple and touching. It was not to cost more than five hundred scudi, and was to be adorned with a shaft for coat of arms. The inscription in Latin was: "The Lord and salvation of Pius the Ninth, lived—years and religned—years Pray for him."

High income as a remedy for the evil intemperance seems to be growing in favor whenever it has been tried. The St. Louis Republican says there are reasons for believing that high income and land option are the best means to promote sobriety and reduce the consumption of spirits in the country than prohibition. It would be interesting to have official statistics bearing on this point. We know that the number of saloons has been reduced in Missouri and the drink bills largely diminished since the Dowling law went into effect—and that these good results have been brought about without the harassing strife and litigation that mark the history of prohibition in Kansas and Iowa; and it is believed that there is to-day less liquor consumed per capita in Missouri than in either of those States. The Missouri system has certainly proved itself an agent of temperance, and it has far from being clear that so much can be said of prohibition in Kansas.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—The St. Patrick's Day parade, which has been abandoned in Boston during the past two or three years, was visited to be held this year by the morning of the Irish societies on January 17th.

With the announcement of the appointment of Father Power, S. J., as Archbishop of Bombay, comes the news that his Holiness the Pope has appointed another member of the Society of Jesus—Father Bernard Berdenhofer—Bishop of Patna.

Berlin journals state that Prince Bismarck will publish a document from the Pope favoring the government in the Prussian contest. It is expected that this will induce Catholics not to oppose the government candidates.

Mr. Gladstone, writing to a Glasgow paper, says that there are many circumstances of difference between the cases of Canada and Ireland, but within and under them there is a strong analogy. In the main and so long as he lived, "Ireland had a right to the property of the people in common, and to the ownership of the land of a large and natural portion, no matter by what evil or wrong it had come into the hands of landlords? To this he added that he would "continue to pray for the Queen and her ministers" for some compensation to the miscalled owners, and that a few weeks after, the Archbishop invited him to call and consult with him. Cardinal Simeoni, he responded with a flat refusal, saying, "I will not go to see you", and when the letter was sent to him by the Cardinal Secretary of State, he refused to answer or to his photo, he replied with like firmness, "I will not go to Rome."

Of all the indications of a very pronounced reaction in favor of the Church of Rome, perhaps the most significant is the fact that the Church is now in a position to demand of any ecclesiastical authority, that it should cease to interfere with the consequences of such a defiance, which, in the case of Dr. Mc Glynn, "I will not go to Rome," he says. That means he will not obey the Pope, and he will turn there to give account as to his opinions, and the Church is powerless to compel him to go. The Church is powerless, not as Rome pleases, and will suffer no more to the tribunal of his own conscience only.

Even his parishioners, whose affection for him is so strong, will there force be compelled to go to Rome, and in now is a situation which he himself has taken pains to make, and that they have no cause for complaint against the Archbishop. The Pope has not substantially declared that some of the Knights of Labor are guilty of grave heresy in all situation his priestly functions, and that, at a moment's notice, he will not offer obedience to Rome in the matter, and that he will not do so, and that he knows it, thus, that they must either stand by the Church and go with Dr Mc Glynn—N. Y. Sun.

Swinton on George.

Before the star of Henry George rose above the eastern horizon John Swinton was the champion of the labor movement in this country. He was the author of "Swinton's Catechism." We are of opinion the labor organizations blundered when they allowed Henry George to take the place of Swinton in the attack of Henry George on the Church, Swinton writes

"Henry George was a religiously against the Church, and the next speech the destroyers of the people's homes would lose a good friend in the people's cause. A government reporter was present and it is surmounted that Mr. O'Brien will be arrested for uttering seditious.

A private London cablegram states that England's extreme measures against are made more with a view of protecting India next spring than to expectation of any immediate trouble in Ireland. Ireland is the most formidable and will assume wages on the opening of spring. Russia is said to be concentrating a large force of troops on the Afghanistan frontier. The accurate allusions of St. Petersburg journals to Ireland are very speedy, stating that England's foreign policy is regarded as an infringement of treaties by Russia and Germany.

A very paper has made the calculation that the increase in the amount on hand in the credits of depositors in the San Francisco banks during the last year has been over $1,000,000 and shows a gain much greater than the entire amount in the savings banks of nearly all the States—notably Illinois and Minnesota. The Bank of Commerce has more money on hand than all the banks of the State of Illinois or Vermont, and very nearly as much as all the banks of Texas or Oregon. The deposits in the banks of California together. The deposits in all the city banks now amount to $61,875,631. Only three of the banks show a decrease in deposits, and these are the National Savings Bank on Pine has only about $43,000,000 on deposit, and the Bank of Commerce and Trust Company represents the savings of all France.

The complete will of the late Mortimer Plu Nunn has just been published. The Holy Father died poor as become a Pontiff, and he left no will, the evidence that the residue of his inherited fortune.

Save the Catholic Children.

In a recent issue of the Dublin Review there appears a very startling and suggestive article concerning the manner in which the children of the Church are stolen from their Spiritual Mother through the proselyting influences and exertions of the different Protestant sects.

The dangers in this direction pointed out by Mr. Dutton, the writer in question, are not confined to Protestant Ireland, but they are just as universal in America as they are in the region of the best-quarters of heresy in the middle Eastern Ireland.

Mr. Dutton justly calls for "prayer and the exercise of Catholic energy in order to stay the attacks of wolves in sheep's clothing upon the lambs of the flock of Christ, and he states an undeniable truth—applicable to this country as well as to England—when he says "that Catholics themselves have to bear the reproach consequent upon the loss of thousands and thousands of our children, lambs stolen from the wolves and have saved had we possessed an organization capable of concerted action.

The writer of the article in the Dublin Review laying the Secretary of the Catholic Children's Protection Society, speaks from his and experience he has had in trying to save Catholic children, when he says that proselytism "exercises a subtle and superficial influence, which is in operation in at once unknown and easily, unabated yet crawing and hyperbrical; it can be winning and threatening, gentle and swaggering, all according to the case it has to deal with."

"So long," says Mr. Dutton, "as Catholic children are uncared for and unprotected, so long will the Protestant Proselytizing Society flourish. Its agents are numerous. Their willing workers are never in want of symbols and have always funds in abundance. Their tactics must be delicately and energetically and mutual support on the part of the Catholic body. Catholics should need few inventions to action in Catholic cases. They must all feel with Mr. Dutton, that no nobler cause exists, and that none can have more pressing claims upon them than that of helping, protecting and rescuing the lost, strayed and stolen sheep of Catholic children."

Mr. Dutton's article also suggests that Catholic body in this city, in order to save the faith of homeless boys, many of whom are enticed away from the Church every month through just such "subtle and specious arrangements" as those practiced by the proselyting tactics so ably described by the writer whose article we have quoted.

The Pope's Jubilee.

Dr William A Hammond lectured recently in New York on "Brain Forcing in the education of children," and in the course of his talk he told some truths which may be heeded with profit by the parents and teachers who think their children or pupils are not "up with the age" unless they can name twenty different studies during school hours.

Dr. Hammond mentioned the case of a child patient who was brought to him jumping and yelling with St Vitus' dance. He found that her parents had sent her through three a geography, an arithmetic a History of the United States, a "Primary Astronomy," a French grammar and Hygiene—whatever that may be—and no end of other text books. He only wonder, then, that the poor little girl had lost their brains instead of St Vitus dance.

"She was using her brain capital and not her interest," said the Dr. "Intellectual bankruptcy was staring her in the face, and she was insane. Any man master who forgets that children become thinner fatigued from slight causes even when they are not overworked, and who, from of intense mental exertion will weary in a different way from an adult, is a physical labor How much more, then, will it wear upon the nervous system, if it be sought to prevent the physical overstraining of the brain by overcrowding their mental apparatus. From the very earliest period of birth an infant's mind is in pursuit of knowledge. Its senses are constantly drawing into play are the perceptive organs, and its phenomena, which are first observed through the perceptive organs for the first ten or twelve years of life. The child who does not look and listen could be in no condition to learn. It is the duty of parents and teachers to see that the child has the habits of the state of Illinois or Vermont, and very possibly of the state of Texas or Oregon, and that the child's mind is not crowded together. The population in all the city banks now amount to $61,875,631. Only three of the banks show a decrease in deposits, and these are the National Savings Bank on Pine has only about $43,000,000 on deposit, and the Bank of Commerce and Trust Company represents the savings of all France.

The complete will of the late Mortimer Plu Nunn has just been published. The Holy Father died poor as become a Pontiff, and he left no will, the evidence that the residue of his inherited fortune.

His Career Probably Over.

Archbishop Corrigan's pallid and frank statement of the case of Rev. Dr. McGlynn effectually disposes of Mr. George's assumption that the priest was undeservedly put to stay at the hands of his ecclesiastical superiors.

Instead of pursuing him in a vindictive spirit, both Archbishop Corrigan and Cardinal Simeoni seem to have treated Dr. McGlynn throughout with great and even tender consideration, only taking decisive action when his refractory tone and side-tracking could not longer be tolerated. He stands from the first their anxiety has been to keep the priest in the ranks of the Church and the will of the priest, which seemed to be determined to sever himself from the security of the Catholic household. But Dr. McGlynn, on his part, has no reason to be afraid pretty convincing evidence that he was desirous of precipitating just such a conflict.

In the close of the George campaign, Dr. McGlynn seems to have lately taken up his mind to break with the Church of Rome rather than submit to its judgment his opinions touching the ownership of land. In the 26th of last month he wrote to the Archbishop that he had tonight and should continue to hold, in speeches and writings, the opinion that land is not a right of individuals in the full sense of the word, and that the land belongs to the people in common, and that the ownership of land is a usurpation, no matter by what evil or wrong it may have come into the hands of individuals? To this he added that he would "continue to pray for the Queen and her ministers" for some compensation to the miscalled owners, and that a few weeks after, the Archbishop invited him to call and consult with him. Cardinal Simeoni, he responded with a flat refusal, saying, "I will not go to see you", and when the letter was sent to him by the Cardinal Secretary of State, he refused to answer or to his photo, he replied with like firmness, "I will not go to Rome."

Of all the indications of a very pronounced reaction in favor of the Church of Rome, perhaps the most significant is the fact that the Church is now in a position to demand of any ecclesiastical authority, that it should cease to interfere with the consequences of such a defiance, which, in the case of Dr. Mc Glynn, "I will not go to Rome," he says. That means he will not obey the Pope, and he will turn there to give account as to his opinions, and the Church is powerless to compel him to go. That means he will not be a pleasing, not as Rome pleases, and will suffer no more to the tribunal of his own conscience only.

Even his parishioners, whose affection for him is so strong, will there force be compelled to go to Rome, and in now is a situation which he himself has taken pains to make, and that they have no cause for complaint against the Archbishop. The Pope has not substantially declared that some of the Knights of Labor are guilty of grave heresy in all situation his priestly functions, and that, at a moment's notice, he will not offer obedience to Rome in the matter, and that he will not do so, and that he knows it, thus, that they must either stand by the Church and go with Dr Mc Glynn—N. Y. Sun.

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1887.

SEND US CATHOLIC NEWS.

We would most respectfully ask the Rev. Clergy, or any of our readers of the Catholic Faith, to send us local items of general interest. We wish to make this Monitor a chronicle of all Diocesan happenings relating to the progress of religion, but we cannot do our mission we are asked by those who have the knowledge of the facts to that happy end. Pain facts as they are, we want. Will our friends please furnish us with them?

FORTY HOURS DEVOTION.

Order of the Forty Hours Devotion in the Churches and Chapels of the Diocese of San Francisco, for the Year 1887.

FEBRUARY.

13. Sexagesima. Mission Dolores Church, San Francisco.
20. Quinquagesima. St. Ignatius, San Francisco; Santa Clara.
27. First Sunday in Lent. Brooklyn; St. Mary's College, San Francisco.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Feb. 13—Sunday—Sexagesima Sunday.
" 14—Monday—St. Valentine, Martyr.
" 15—Tuesday—St. Faustinus and Jovita, Martyrs.
" 16—Wednesday—Feria.
" 17—Thursday—Office of the Blessed Sacrament.
" 18—Friday—St. Simeon, Bishop and Martyr.
" 19—Saturday—Office of the Immaculate Conception.

LECTURE AT SAN JOSE BY ARCHBISHOP RIORDAN.

Archbishop Riordan delivered an interesting lecture on "Catholicism" at San Jose, the night of the 31st ult., his discourse being preceded by the following introductory paragraphs: "We come to the Most Reverend Archbishop, Adolphe Andre Sanchez, Mr. Hammond's social sole, "Tita Apparatus," J. B. Pinard's flute duet, Professor Leo's violin solo, Mrs. Chase, solo, and chorus, by the Sodality choir.

BISHOP MORA IN ROME.

Footing the week ending January 15th, flight Rio, Francisco Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles was received in private audience by the Holy Father.

ST. DOMINICS CHURCH BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

The monthly Requiem Mass for the deceased members of the above association, and also for deceased parents and relatives of all the members will be celebrated in St. Dominic's Church, on Sunday at Sixteenth street, on Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. Members are invited to attend.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A subscriber asks the following questions: When and where was Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's husband born? He was born in England, Nov. 1, 1819. In what county in Ireland is Mount Hillary? County Wexford. In what county is Maynooth College? County Meath.

CHARITY FUNDS FOR IRELAND

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 1, 1887.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—The bearer of this will give you five dollars for the Irish Relief Fund, and I shall pay you this it is most needed.

AN IRISHMAN.

[We gratefully acknowledge the receipt of the funds accruing from this spontaneous act of charity on behalf of the Irish poor. We have been forwarded the amount to Rev. P. Egan, Bishop Lonsdale, who presides over destitution exists.—ED. MONITOR.]

DEATH OF A PRESENTATION SISTER.

Sister Mary Vincent Joyce, sister of the Presentation Convent, Sacramento, died on Tuesday, after a protracted illness. Deceased was a native of Ireland, in 1845, and left Ireland when quite young. The deceased was a sister of Rev. Bernard the Holy Habits July 31, 1879, and was professed August 15, 1881. She was the latter part of January, 1886, and was professed August 15, 1881. She was the latter part of January, 1886, and was professed August 15, 1881. She was the latter part of January, 1886 yet is a scandalous slight and slander put upon these ill-treated people. The outrage upon the Catholic body has been committed in the name of the Queen. It is all the more reprehensible when perpetrated under the high sounding forms of law.

INIQUITY OF ENGLISH LAW.

[CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

Every one familiar with Irish history knows what meaning for Irish Catholics—for the poor Irish peasants in particular—the words words "Government," "law," and "justice" necessarily have. Who knows not directly opposed to what we Americans at back to the words government, justice, and law, and you have exactly the sense which sentiment of scrupulous honesty burnt in the minds, the memories, and the hearts of the Irish people. What this ultra-religious, ultra-conservative, and exceedingly high-toned Government has done, is still doing, and threatens to do for the next twenty years," is not likely to change the convictions of sentiments of the priests and people of Ireland.

Law here is a delusion and a snare. Justice means injustice. Trial by jury, so far as a long experience goes, signifies a cunningly-devised scheme for certainly placing the lives and liberties of the Catholic majority at the mercy of the pitiless Orange faction. Listen to Dr. MacCormack:

"I MAKE BOLD TO ARRAIGN THE CROWN before the bar of public opinion. Does the Crown think that much to a creed can make the pa ple of Ireland feel loyal to the Crown? It is now fashionable to talk of agitators as setting class against class. Does not the Crown attempt to set class against creed? Woodford Catholic prisoner in Sligo dock convicted his Catholic co-religionist jurors set aside by the Crown, and twelve non-Catholics sitting by his side, and the Crown prosecutor's the case. Now how could Sligo Catholic jurors have any confidence in the administration of such forms of law? With the prosecutor's selection of the majority of juries, how could he possibly feel that his liberty was safe in the hands of twelve picked Protestant jurors? What are the records of jury packing in Dungle? Were twelve Catholic jurors picked out of the Tyrone panel to try the Coalisland jurors? Were twelve men by the unlikeliest taking their family sam at the head constable and soldier? No, no! An overwhelmingly Protestant jury—say, an Orange jury was selected. That jury refused to convict, in the very teeth of the clearest and most conclusive evidence! Surely, to plain Catholic jurors in Sligo for some of the same true bias bread, is as unshaking a fund of authority as any Crown official could propertes.

But, one may ask, is there on earth one the rulers of this country be so blind as to look for loyalty among a people so sent upon?

Aye, indeed, and that is one of the mysteries of British miracle in Ireland, which Americans seem not to understand or to think of otherwise than imaginary. This miracle has produced by a gift between the original Celtic inhabitants and their Anglo-Saxon raiser; and, as if the passions and prejudices of long years not powerful enough to separate them, the still more baleful and more powerful passions and prejudices of a second race have been used to antiunion in

THE MIDDLE WEST OF IRELAND.

We, who in America live and work together in every walk of life, and even in the turbulent towns of Lancashire, without ever invoking the name of religion as a party cry or a political pretension, cannot understand the intense bitterness which Orange fanaticism is officially encouraged to feel against, spite, oppress, and degrade the Catholic Celt of Ireland.

Think God there does not exist in the land of St. Patrick a single Bishop, a single priest, a single true-hearted and enlightened Catholic man or woman, who is not ready at any moment and in all emergencies to unite to the non-Catholic neighbor not only the most unprincipled toleration, the spirit dictated by the deepest piety, but a full and sentimental participation in all the blessings of Christian independence and a common equality and brotherhood.

The Dublin Spectator has spoken what lies deepest in the heart of Catholic Ireland. And looking to the long hopeless past, and future, I know that the Irish heart, like the

OUR PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

January Rolls of Honor.

OUR LADY OF MERCY'S ACADEMY.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT.—Maggie Ballin, Mary Bolin, Agnes Ward, Agnes Fallon, Nellie Wallin, Nellie McDonald, Sada Murphy, Clara McWilliams, Sarah Sullivan, Florence Gallagher, Mary McCarthy.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT.—Sadie Hicks, Katie Sloan, Alice O'Connor, Nellie Hanley, Mary Cassidy, Annie Bolin, Bridie Ward, Jude Crowley, Lena Dwyer, Lottie Brady, Lottie Blanchfield.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.—Maggie Kinsley, Maggie Redmond, Maggie Hynes, Susan Sidner, Minnie O'Connor, Minnie O'Donnell, Maude Whalen, Bessie Dwyer, Jennie O'Connor, Jessie Sullivan, Anna Wren, Annie Sullivan.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.—Maude O'Connor, Minnie Hooker, May Gray, Mamie Casey, Lovella Powers, Josephine Kearney, Minnie Gallagher, Hannah Ash, Annie Maddden, Minnie Phoel, Lizzie Hanley, Angela Blanchfield, Helen Stone, Lizzie Casey, Maggie Strong, Lillie Wilson, Mamie Gilmartin.

KINDERGARTEN DEPARTMENT.—Alice Keegan, Aggie Keegan, Annie Keegan, Annie Cronin, Cecily O'Connor, Katie Madden, Eva Gray, Lillie Crosson, Lizzie Redmond, Mamie Redmond.

GRAMMAR CLASSES PARCHIAL SCHOOL.—L. Madden 96, N. Kenny, 94, M. O'Connor 92, A. McInerney 91, L. Hughes 90, M. Kelly 90, M. Gallon 91, A. Broderick 90, M. Collins 90, M. Hanley 90, M. Ward 90, M. Ryan 90, M. Donnelly 90, M. O'Connor 90, M. Collins 90, A. Hudson 91, J. Campbell 90, K. Ryan 90, C. O'Brien 90, T. Murphy 90, J. Cummings 74, N. Slattery 73, M. Hagerty 73, J. Tomey 73, M. Ryan 73, J. Ryan 73, L. Morgan 97, M. Lagsley 95, M. Cragin 95, J. Miller 95, T. Madden 95, M. Hynes 95, J. Broderick 95, J. Connell 96, F. Hardwick 96, E. Higgins 96, J. Dwyer 96, M. Ward 96, J. Gallagher 96, N. Cranner 96, K. Butler 96, M. Cornell, 96, L. Maloney 96, N. Pillmee 96, M. Walsh 96, L. Fogarty 96.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

The promotions allowed to the pupils of the College of Notre Dame, San Francisco, during the month of January, is as follows:

FIRST COLLEGE CLASS.—A. Philbrick 98, M. Warde 98, M. Geary 98, M. Lynch 98, C. Lynch 94, M. F. O'Neil 94, L. Breen 92, M. Malone 92, T. Cleary 92, M. Mitchell 92, M. Ryan 90, A. Wynne 89, M. E. McRae 89, A. Smith 89, M. Kennedy 87, M. Shannon 87, M. Dwanan 86, A. Duncan 86, M. Marks 85, M. Cronin 85.

SECOND COLLEGE CLASS.—M. Bennett 98, L. F. O'Neil 98, F. Sullivan 94, M. A. O'Neil 94, A. McCormick 94, J. Quinn 87, J. Donnelly 94, M. Mather 87.

THIRD COLLEGE CLASS.—Mary Zane 97, Mary Flood 96, Jude Healey 93, Annie Sullivan 93, Agnes O'Neil 93, Katie Bluhm 93, Maude Mitchell 93, Phillis McRae 93, Marie Ryan 93, Blanche Lonergan 93.

FOURTH COLLEGE CLASS.—Nellie Jones 98, Agnes O'Neil 98, Katie Bluhm 98, Maude McCluskey 97, Claire O'Brien 93, Katie Healy 93, Annie Regan 90, May Somers 79, Pulcheria Hilmer 75.

PREPARATORY CLASS.—C. Fitzpatrick 96, J. Chase 91, M. Walsh 90, E. Hinkel 90, M. Kessler 90, A. Albert 89, K. O'Neill 89, A. Gardner 81, H. Sullivan 80, M. Kessler 80, A. Brennan 78, M. Brennan 78, M. Eakins 78, J. Ryan 78, M. Ryan 78, M. Bluhm 78, M. Holden 77, K. McGinn 77, L. Kickich 76, E. Albert 74, K. Gardner 74, M. McCluskey 73, M. Riley 63, M. Tyther 63, N. Ahern 63.

SECOND CLASS.—A. Hinkel 98, A. Hinkel 98, Dexter 98, M. Zikins 97, F. Gilbert 97, J. Baker 96, M. Downes 95, M. Bluhm 95, M. Darling 93, E. O'Brien 93, M. Sullivan 93, E. Sullivan 93, M. Albert 93, M. Kickich 93, M. Ryan 93, M. Walsh 93, M. Gallagher 93, M. Hayward 73, M. Cunningham 73, N. White 73, M. Zikins 73, M. Sullivan 71, M. Dwyer 69.

E. Aldridge 97, L. Harder 91, M. Lynett 90, K. Bluhm 90, M. Somers 83.

THIRD GRAMMAR CLASS.—F. Kenny 97, M. Allen 96, J. O'Neil 96, M. Ryan 96, M. Ward 96, L. Brandt 91, L. Johnston 77, E. Maguire 76, E. Robinson 76, L. Baker 76, L. Sullivan 76, M. Dodson 97, D. Tuohey 97, M. Donohoe 93, M. Ahern 93, M. Ryan 93, M. Sullivan 93, M. Gallagher 93, M. Wilkes 92, M. McGuire 91.

Frances Hynes 97, E. Fitzgerald 97, M. Lynch 97, M. Lynch 97, E. Spillane 97, M. Kenny 97, M. Lynch 97, M. Ryan 97, M. Ryan 97, M. Ryan

INIQUITY OF ENGLISH LAW.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

it as a scandalous slight and slander put upon those ill-treated jurors. This outrage upon the Catholic body has been committed in the name of the Crown. It is all the more reprehensible when perpetrated under the high sounding forms of law.

Every one familiar with Irish history knows what meaning for Irish Catholics—for the poor Irish peasants in particular—the words words "government," "law" and "justice" necessarily have. Take the notions diffently opposed to what we Americans attach to the words government, justice, and law, and you have exactly the sense which contains of wrongdoing have burnt on the minds, the memories, and the hearts of the Irish people. What that ultra-religious, ultra-conservative, and exceedingly high-toned Government has done, in evil doing, and threatens to do for the next twenty years," is not likely to change the convictions of sentiments of the priests and people of Ireland.

Law here is a delusion and a snare. Justice means iniquity. Trial by jury, as far as a long experience goes, signifies a cunningly-devised scheme for securely placing the lives and liberties of the Catholic majority at the mercy of the jetsiom Orange Junto. Listen to Dr. MacCormack:—

"I MAKE BOLD TO ARRAIGN THE CROWN before the bar of public opinion. Does the Crown think that impunity is a code and has the people of that creed loyal to the Crown? It is now fashionable to talk of agitators as setting class against class. But what about the Crown setting creed against creed? A Woodford Catholic prisoner in Sligo does seem all his Catholic co-religionist jurors are stable by the Crown, and twelve non-Catholics called to try him. I say try, when the Crown is concerned. Now how could that poor Papist prisoner have any confidence in the administration of such forms of law? With the prisoner's recollections of the recent history of Belfast, how could he possibly feel that his liberty was safe in the hands of twelve picked Protestant jurors. Had not the records of jury packing in Orangeland been notorious? Had not Protestant jurors picked out of the Protestant Orange Junto, sober and junior Walkers, who were seen by the Catholics to be their deadly foes at the bond constable and soldier? No, no! An overwhelmingly Protestant jury—say an Orange jury was selected. That jury refused to convict, in the very teeth of the clearest and most conclusive evidence. Surely, to reject Catholic jurors in Sligo for men of the same true blue hend, is an unblushing proof of antipathy as any Crown official could possibly evince.

But, one may ask, how on earth can the rulers of this country be so blind as to look for loyalty among a people so spat upon?—A people, indeed, that is one of the survivors of British misrule in Ireland, which Americans seem not to understand or to think of otherwise than as a myth. This misrule has opened up a gulf between the original Celtic inhabitants and their Anglo-Saxon rulers; and, as if the passions and prejudices of race were not powerful enough to separate them, he still more hateful and not less powerful passions and prejudices of creed have been used as auxiliaries in

THE BELLISH WORK OF DIVISION.

We who in America live and work together in every walk of life, and even in the turbulent arena of party politics, without ever involving the issues of religion as a party or a political pretense, cannot understand the intense bitterness which the Irish Question is officially encouraged to use to employers, agents, spies, and despite the Catholic Cell of Ireland.

Thank God there does not exist in the land of St. Patrick a single Bishop, a single priest, a single true-hearted and enlightened Catholic man or woman, who would not at any moment and in all emergencies to express his or her Catholicism more not only the most unhonoured toleration, the charities dictated by the deepest piety, but a full and unstinted participation in all the blessings of national independence and civil and religious and brotherhood.

Dr. MacCormack has spoken what lies uppermost in the heart of Catholic Ireland. And looking to the long hoped-for glorious future, I know that the Irish people, like the Americans, loves freedom for all men and for their own. It has loved liberty for more than a thousand years. It has suffered for it, struggled for it, bleed for it, and earned the reward for all!

BERNARD O'REILLY.

OUR PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

January Roll of Honor.

OUR LADY OF MERCY'S ACADEMY.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT.—Maggie Bailie, Mary Bailie, Agnes Ward, Agnes Fallon, Kate Wall, Lulu McDonnell, Sarah Sullivan, Fleurette McWilliams, Sarah Sullivan, Florence O'Connor, Mary McCarthy.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT.—Nellie Hickey, Kate Dunn, Alice O'Connor, Nellie Healy, Stella Connolly, Alice Bailie, Elizabeth Outside, Mamie Wheeler, Lizzie Fogarty, Louie Ward, Mary Healy, Nellie Blanchfield.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.—Maggie Kinslow, Maggie Redmond, Mamie Dwyer, Lizzie Ward, Annie Ward, Annie Mullin, Annie Mamie Wheeler, Emma Greaney, Lizzie Culhane, Rose Kelleher, Annie Wren, Tessie Keegan, Josephine Sommers.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.—Maggie Carlin, Maggie Hocky, May Grey, Maggie Cassidy, Mamie Powers, Josephine Kearney, Mamie Kearney, Hannah Jude, Annie Madden, Maggie Hovel, Lizzie Hanson, Angie Slattery, Hattie Stone, Lizzie Casey, Maggie Strong, Lizzie Wilson, Maggie Gilmartin.

KINDERGARTEN DEPARTMENT.—Alice Keegan, Angie Keegan, Annie Kearney, Annie Green, Daisy O'Connor, Katie Madden, Ida Green, Lillie Crosin, Dixie Redmond, Mamie Redmond.

GRAMMAR CLASSES PRINCIPAL FLORAL.

Senior Class.—Lizzie Ward 98, Mary Bailie 97, A. Mahoney 96, L. Dolan 95, M. Kelly 93, E. Collins 91, A. Broderick 92, M. Cullen 90, M. Mason 89, J. O'Brien 88, M. Fallon 87, M. Cornelius 85, M. O'Leary 85, K. Golden 85, T. Collins 85, A. Mason 84, J. Campbell 83, E. Burke 78, K. O'Toole 75, M. Murphy 76, K. Cunningham 76, N. Steiner 75, M. Hanley 75, S. Tessier 71, K. Malone 69, M. Tessier 68, L. Morgan 67, M. Lagoe 66, M. Lawlor 65, A. Miles 63, C. Madden 60, M. Costello 59, J. Lawlor 59, Tessie Cole 58, Annie Cole 58, E. Hughes 55, A. Halpin 53, M. Kelly 50, M. Gallagher 50, M. Lynch 50, M. Ward 50, M. Crawford 50, E. Mahoney 50, N. Pilliod 50, M. Walsh 50, L. Dwyer 50.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.

The convention obtained by the pupils of the College of Notre Dame, Santa Clara, during the month of January, is as follows.

First Grammar Class.—A. Pulcher 98, M. Whole 96, M. Geary 96, J. Crowley 95, F. Barron 94, M. Regan 94, M. Bell 94, L. Breen 94, M. Sullivan 92, T. Cheney 92, M. Moriarty 92, M. Sullivan 91, M. Lynch 91, M. Lynch 91, M. Lynch 90, L. Smith 90, M. A. Kennedy 90, V. Vallerino 90, M. Duncan 89, M. Dunne 89, M. Marks 89, V. Reynolds 89.

Second Class.—M. Pierce 97, D. Bernhard 96, M. Bailey 96, Julie Hanks 95, Ada Sullivan 95, M. A. McCormick 93, J. Quinn 87, J. Stanley 87, M. Mahoney 87.

Third Class.—Lizzie Fitzgerald 97, Mary Fleed 96, Julie Hanks 95, Ada Sullivan 95, Mabel Greer 95, Sarah F. Berry 94, Marion Fitzsimmons 94, Minnie Mahoney 94, Mamie Bisbee Lonergan 93.

Fourth Class.—Lizzie Kane—Nellie Jones 98, Lizzie O'Neill 98, Nellie Mulcahy 98, Mary McCloskey 93, Charles O'Brien 90, Kelly Sheridan 90, Annie Jayne 90, Mary Donovan 90, Lizzie Hallinan 78.

First Grammar Class.—C. Fitzpatrick 98, C. Cusack 97, M. Walsh 96, K. Hudnall 95, M. Lynch 95, M. Hart 95, A. Lynch 95, M. Gardner 91, H. Sullivan 89, Mg. McGrath 79, A. Brennan 78, M. Brennan 78, M. Kelly 78, Ag. Noon 78, P. Clotte 77, A. Sheard 76, Bridget 75, K. Hallinan 75, A. McKeever 75, Lelibert 71, M. Mooney 69, R. McCloskey 66, A. Miller 65, L. Fitzpatrick 65, M. Ryan 65.

Second Grammar Class.—J. Hickey 99, M. Lynch 98, Charles O'Brien 95, Kelly Sheridan 95, Annie Jayne 95, Mary Donovan 95, Lizzie Hallinan 95, Lizzie Hallinan 95, Lizzie Hallin

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE UNFORGOTTEN ONE.

("Blessed are they who have passed over the great and wide sea to the eternal shore, and who are blessed in their dotted rest."—St. Ayrenaus.)

Our Father, when Thy Angel Death
Down-winging from Heaven's golden dome,
Received the sufferer's latest breath
And bore the faithful spirit home,
Love still with hand and silent smile
Closed the pale form, the empty shrine,
Whence mount in fair angelic pride
The soul sealed with Thy seal divine.
And let that hour of woe suppose,
While bitter tears of anguish flow,
When mortly smitten it is thine,
To Thee the stricken mourners call;
For one to every wounded heart
Thy Angel Pity bending stands,
And Faith and Hope their balm impart,
And heavenward point with lifted hands.
To Thee through yonder sunset glow
What pleading prayer as incense rise
Pure wreaths of bright celestial flowers
Entwined with the dark cypress
The Mourner's potent sublime,
Thy resplendent grand and silent strain
And comfort in that dreary time,
The Zion fall in silvery rain.
Then when with grief beyond control,
Their bosoms unto earth they yield,
Thy joy is to raise the downcast soul
Dwelt each beneath Thy mercy's shield.
So have by hour, and day by day,
Thy Angel Pity, Love, Faith, Hope
As friends and kindred fondly pray—
Have many mourn, many lament.

Then when hath come of sorrow true,
The first and month is told and o'er,
With fervent zeal doth love renew
To Thee their pleading petitions send more.
For let from many an altar fair,
Incense up to Thee by Angel hands,
Thy Gift to man, Love's Treasure rare,
Offered by consecrated hands.
Accepted in Thee, O God,
In suffrage for the soul so dear,
Thy sacred Spirit, Thy Son crucified
The guardian of her labors here—
The garden of her years of toil
And sunshine rare, and tempest fierce
Which when spirits' fortitle rail
Has moved the pulsions unto of Truth.

And they who, as a true friend's love,
Who prized her friendship, knew her core,
Who bear hearth parting's cruel Cross,
As day follows, in daily prayer,
Will lift their voices unto Thee
For her whose name their memories keep;
O thou would she remembered be
In their affection warm and deep.
Thou love unless shall hand
Their hearts in bonds whose blest contrition
Thy Angel, Michael hurried away
In the "Communion of the Saints,"
Till by Thy home of joy above
Thy patient sorrowing mourners are one.
Where all is joy and peace and love
On Heaven's ever bright eternal sun.

MARCELLA A. PROTHEROE.

Mossy Woodland, 1887.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE BEAUTIFUL DEAD.

Oh! Emerald Isle, ever green,
Nature's conservatory there is seen—
Everywhere!
Some deep in tourists grand,
Some are near a fairer hand,
Some are near a lower hand,
In the ocean of right,
In a place of light
Against the midst
Of the beetling lord
Who sets shade, lovely
Of everything that's there.

Oh! blighted land, your misery extends,
Your misery, your misery, your misery—
Everywhere!
Your sigh is like unto a funeral dirge,
Your cry is heard in sickliest earth,
Your reply is a moor of English mirth
At people grouned down
In parlors and town,
To satisfy the crown
That the crown is dead
Of the Lagos they dread—
Everywhere!

But be of good cheer and never fear,
Your day of deliverance will soon be here;
We're lighten abroad, if few of us there;
We're united by the whatever's our fare;
We're unlike, perhaps, but in one spare
For countrymen in distress,
Europe's people in prayers,
And trusty to release
That for hundreds of years
Have sun no never and issue
Everywhere!

Lishman forward—man to a man,
Sympathetic thy spirit of help in a clan.
Send forth life's sustenance from your plentiful land,
And help to relieve Erin of this tyrannical hand.

T. P. D.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MOTHER'S TRUST.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
There's a door little one—so sharp—
Comes to bid Mamma—"Good Night."

As she neither her fair face under
The overfill, white, and warm,
I pray God to watch over her
And keep her from all harm.

And I ask, and tremble to think
That in years that are to come
Pain, and the sudden bend,
Will more brighten our home.

It may be, I will be sleeping
My last long quiet sleep,
And she may be giving another
Her dear love, warm and deep.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
Mine may be burning above;
My God let it shine, a guiding star,
To lead her to His love.

Whatever of storms or thunder
Are found in the path she will tread,
Mother up there would be gathering
Flowers for her when she is dead.

Sweet flowers to bind in a chaplet,
Glorious and fair to see,
To crown my darling's golden head,
In Heaven eternally.

So, whenever the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
In the future years, my darling,
Breathe a prayer for mamma's "good night."

TERESE.

A Poetical Loop

Into the abyss of poverty, over the precipice of short-sightedness is taken by thousands, who might become wealthy, if they availed themselves of their opportunities. Those who write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will receive, free, a box that can make them from $5 to $25 in a day. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are located. Both sexes; all ages. All is new. You can start free. Capital not needed. Now is the time. Better not delay. Every worker can secure a very little fortune.

Literary Miscellany.

The Golden Bond of Grief.

A Beautiful Catholic Story in Two Chapters.

CHAPTER II.

When Anna had left the churchyard, and Mrs. B——— remained behind to arrange the flower vases, and put the shrubs in order, Michael stood by his bride and in order to silence the reproaches of his conscience, asked her how long the grave had been made and before which the lady had been buried.

The woman told him that the mother of that lady had been buried there a short time before Christmas last year. The winter had prevented anything being done to the grave. The young lady first came home a few week ago, had wept bitterly that the grave should have been neglected, and have so fallen to decay, and had left orders that it should be restored as it is now.

Michael sighed a deep sigh of relief when he found that he had nothing to reproach himself with, and again asked who the young lady was.

Upon this the woman told him the young lady's name, and where she lived, and believing great pains upon her, observed what a good daughter she must have been, since she was so bitterly by her mother's grave, and that though she had a father she look the trouble and expense of the restoration of the grave upon herself.

When the woman had left him, Michael remained behind, and kneeling in the same place where Anna had knelt, sighed after the soul of his mother. In spite of his haste, and his fervent prayers, the image of his mother would intrude itself upon him and more. For let from many an altar fair,

Incense up to Thee by Angel hands,
Thy Gift to man, Love's Treasure rare,
Offered by consecrated hands.

Accepted in Thee, O God,
In suffrage for the soul so dear,
Thy sacred Spirit, Thy Son crucified
The guardian of her labors here—
The garden of her years of toil
And sunshine rare, and tempest fierce
Which when spirits' fortitle rail
Has moved the pulsions unto of Truth.

And they who, as a true friend's love,
Who prized her friendship, knew her core,
Who bear hearth parting's cruel Cross,
As day follows, in daily prayer,
Will lift their voices unto Thee
For her whose name their memories keep;
O thou would she remembered be
In their affection warm and deep.
Thou love unless shall hand
Their hearts in bonds whose blest contrition
Thy Angel, Michael hurried away
In the "Communion of the Saints,"
Till by Thy home of joy above
Thy patient sorrowing mourners are one.
Where all is joy and peace and love
On Heaven's ever bright eternal sun.

MARCELLA A. PROTHEROE.

Mossy Woodland, 1887.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE BEAUTIFUL DEAD.

Oh! Emerald Isle, ever green,
Nature's conservatory there is seen—
Everywhere!
Some deep in tourists grand,
Some are near a fairer hand,
Some are near a lower hand,
In the ocean of right,
In a place of light
Against the midst
Of the beetling lord
Who sets shade, lovely
Of everything that's there.

Oh! blighted land, your misery extends,
Your misery, your misery, your misery—
Everywhere!
Your sigh is like unto a funeral dirge,
Your cry is heard in sickliest earth,
Your reply is a moor of English mirth
At people grouned down
In parlors and town,
To satisfy the crown
That the crown is dead
Of the Lagos they dread—
Everywhere!

But be of good cheer and never fear,
Your day of deliverance will soon be here;
We're lighten abroad, if few of us there;
We're united by the whatever's our fare;
We're unlike, perhaps, but in one spare
For countrymen in distress,
Europe's people in prayers,
And trusty to release
That for hundreds of years
Have sun no never and issue
Everywhere!

Lishman forward—man to a man,
Sympathetic thy spirit of help in a clan.
Send forth life's sustenance from your plentiful land,
And help to relieve Erin of this tyrannical hand.

T. P. D.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MOTHER'S TRUST.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
There's a door little one—so sharp—
Comes to bid Mamma—"Good Night."

As she neither her fair face under
The overfill, white, and warm,
I pray God to watch over her
And keep her from all harm.

And I ask, and tremble to think
That in years that are to come
Pain, and the sudden bend,
Will more brighten our home.

It may be, I will be sleeping
My last long quiet sleep,
And she may be giving another
Her dear love, warm and deep.

At night when the lamps are lighted,
Mine may be burning above;
My God let it shine, a guiding star,
To lead her to His love.

Whatever of storms or thunder
Are found in the path she will tread,
Mother up there would be gathering
Flowers for her when she is dead.

Sweet flowers to bind in a chaplet,
Glorious and fair to see,
To crown my darling's golden head,
In Heaven eternally.

So, whenever the lamps are lighted,
And the fire burns cheery and bright,
In the future years, my darling,
Breathe a prayer for mamma's "good night."

TERESE.

A Poetical Loop

Into the abyss of poverty, over the precipice of short-sightedness is taken by thousands, who might become wealthy, if they availed themselves of their opportunities. Those who write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will receive, free, a box that can make them from $5 to $25 in a day. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are located. Both sexes; all ages. All is new. You can start free. Capital not needed. Now is the time. Better not delay. Every worker can secure a very little fortune.

BEDS OF ALL NATIONS.

Some of the Peculiarities in Former Times.

The beds of the ancients had in general few peculiarities to distinguish them from those of modern times. Pliny tells us that the Romans had their beds supported on frames that resembled our modern bedsteads; further and more particularly were common, and the bed-clothing, in the Italian climate, of a simple character, and decorated with elaborate needle work. The Persian, when conquered by Alexander, slept on skins, after the manner of our North American Indians, but with a spread, arranged here yesterday. She is about twenty-five years of age, Describing the incidents, the details of which have not before been printed, she says:

"At daybreak on the morning of December 16th, I was awakened at my hotel in Louisville and informed that the Aspen stage coach was waiting for me. It was bitter cold and I was so stiff and sore that the driver had to pilot me to the coach. I had on a heavy, double fold velvet dress, a sealskin sacque, a fur cape, and a fur hood on my shoulders, my head covered by a fur cap, and my face enveloped in a shawl, allowing an aperture for my eyes. Despite all these protections I was frightfully cold. The coach was drawn by six horses and was on wheels. We were provided with the circular robes, which also on runners. The road over Ute Mountain is a natural one that will be made into a wagon road. Continue:

"At the top of the mountain the frame work of the coach was transferred from the rock and allowed us to go school, and the descent began. The road at that point declines at an angle of 45°. The driver put on his lock-chain to the wheels, thus virtually converting them into runners. The vehicle, despite these precautions and by its own weight, was forced rapidly forward. We were carried at a speed we could not control from the trunk and through the box of the coach. It was impossible to stop the vehicle at the king-pin. I clung to this and managed to keep my seat, but my feet, on the narrow path in the right side of the mountain was wet with the lichens in a mad gallop. Our speed was terrible, and I was paralyzed. Its electric like cross ground, and gone to sleep in its rest bed of Heaven fathers, but the first sun of April will awake it again, and it will come forth with a richer and more lovely robe, and the silver rings will again drink the silver singing rays of the young year, and its sweet eye will greet the everlasting light once more. Thus God renews the youth of the world, that he renews it with the incarnation of the same religion and faith. How then shall matter rot man and mind perish!

Yonder star that wanders in its ellipse, tracing a periodic of hundreds of years, the astronomers cannot solve the equation of its own bright curve, but my geometry can solve it, and weigh that star in scales, and determine the exact centrifugal force of its thousands of years to come. And for thee, my soul, there is a mind that can look down upon "the new heavens and the new earth, for the Creator is not like a child to lord up and tear down each of its playthings and all that while the science of the eternal mathematics shall be the study of the child, who can comprehend its sublime problems and solve them, and measure and measure the sun, and balance all the stars, and weigh thought into sensible through immensity and sound the echoes of all space, forming with innumerable worlds, and planning with galaxies, like Amoras in the gardens of an Arctic sky—shall I despair and rest, and say, Faith and Nature still live on!

"A sensitive woman, children and old people, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Mary Ann Wright, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Mary Ann Wright, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Mary Ann

THE CROSS IN AFRICA.

[DISTILLED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

the old country alone bears now the weight of these missions we may not say for a certainty that old Europe can go on and bear the expense almost alone, for the number of missions are increasing and each mission grows more and more extended. If A-ocrica would send a willing hand and lighten the example set by France in respect to contributions, even the activity of the Catholic missions could be doubled. If America had only organizations as "The Holy Child," and "The Annals of the Faith," then our Catholic priest ought to come from the distant mission on a special call for charity from America. But as it is now you must understand that from time to time a missionary must come. This is what I have done." The reverend father stated that Pius IX. had divided Africa into twenty-eight missions, and that in 1879 there was not one Bishop in Africa—that is, not one to a mission, and that was the important Sambori mission. In the year 1879, the speaker, with five other priests and five lay brothers, was sent to South Africa to establish the mission, which extends several hundred miles along the Zambesi river.

SOUTH OF THE ZAMBESI

the people are idolatrous and adore cut images. South of the Zambesi there is no military, less simply passions or barbarism. They know there is but one God, but this God they do not adore. They don't adore him as a personal God. They have no idea of creation, or hell or of heaven, much less of purgatory. They don't know what is sin and have no idea what is a crime. They know that something is against the law, that something is wrong. They know what public morality is, what family morality is what justice is, but they don't know what sin is, so that it makes no table to punishment by God. They have no idea of a soul and no idea of prayer. No one can say "Our Father, Thy art in heaven." They don't know that God is a father. They have a veneration for spirits, good and bad. The good spirits are personified in the king and ancestors and the bad spirits in persons called sorcerers. All crimes against law are punished under the name of sorcery by death. Manslaughter only is not a case of sorcery is punished by death. In the year 1879 we made 1,000 baptisms, in the year 1880, 2,000. They made 2500 converts and the number of baptisms increased from 2,000 to 10,000, and the name of God, known all over, pass from 10,000 to 100,000 people. What is needed in the assistance of men in our hospitals and schools on the coast. It is impossible to do what should be as near the colonies as possible where the good promises and results can be instructed and afterwards sent back to the missions. The speaker has already found two-thirds of the necessary means needed for bringing the land into Africa, and he hopes are pursued though unselfish plea for further assistance.

THE SACRED COLLEGE.

Number of Cardinals and their Sidenam Grades.

The Rome correspondent of a New York paper thus describes the Sacred College as it stands at present:

It is interesting to note some facts concerning the number and the curiosities of the present Sacred College. It numbers 61 cardinals, divided as follows: Cardinal Bishops, 6; Cardinal Priests, Thirty-eight Cardinal Deacons, 17—Cardinal Deacons; so that there are twelve vacancies in the Cardinal Deacons. Cardinals Tarchiernan and Chigiano are the only Italians, the rest are Cardinal Manning, Archbishop of Westminster, Cardinal Moran, Archbishop of Sidney, Australia. Outside that political disquiet which Cardinal Newman and Howard are simply priests; but in the Sacred College, Cardinal Howard is of Cardinal rank, the Cardinal Bishop of Frascati, while Cardinal Newman is simply a deacon. Cardinal Howard has lately been appointed "Protector of the Cardinal Nuns in Texas." He is also the protector in Rome of English-speaking Catholics. The other cardinals are Cardinal Bishops, Vallela, Sadeos, and Martinelli—the only name among these at all known being that of Vallela, and that only from his long service office he holds, but because of his great learning. Cardinal Bonnechose, Pecci and Simeoni, the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, the two best and oldest known member of the Sacred College.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—The purchase of John Dinsley, linen and weaver, Antrim, on the 26th, and Donegal street, Belfast, have been secured by the sale which took place early on the 19th. The damage is estimated at £7,000. Four firemen were injured, one, the fire plug principally.

Poole's shop underneath, held by a man named Andrews, has also been burnt.

ARMAGH.—On January 19th, the anniversary of the Bishop's Annual Sermon in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, the Bishop's chancellor in his library the Right Hon. Hugh Maxwell, Q.C., M.P., Q.C., Dublin, Rev. R. McMore, Archdeacon Lee, Rev. Canon Lee, Rev. Canon Stewart, Rev. Canon Ellis

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

Heaven the Crown, the coarse Heaven,
No cross—no crown, no God obtain!
Death, Judgment from the heart are driven
Amid the world's false glare and din;
Oh! happy he, with all his loss,
Whom God hath set beneath the Cross.

Heaven the Crown, the stepper faith!
The loaded tree stoops under Scripture fruit;
The vine yoke sweetly breath
When man bows pressed the chastened footfall
And outrage grows where dangers come,
Like pearls beneath Australian foam.

Heaviler the crown the heavier prayer:
The weakest heels must toughest sole;
If sky and wind were always fair
The sailor would not watch the star;
And Davids Lodge would scarce be sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

Heavier the Cross, the more aspiring:
From realm to realm is there that the hour had
The action of Old Rule rising,
Long for the Canaan of their rest;
Thus Wild Geese have no rest in sight,
And to the Ark they wing their flight.

Heavier the Cross the easier dying!
Death is a welcome friend face to face
To Me's decay one bids darling,
Thus Mr's distress one then is free;
The Cross sublimely lifts our faith
To Him who triumphed over death.

Then Crucified! the Cross I carry,
The longer may it dearer be;
And lest I faint while here I tarry,
Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, help me!
Till little, lapse, love may Scarlet there
Yet for the Cross let me severe I wear.

Oh, human hearts! how strange it seems,
With so much woe, and want and need,
That ye gather strength in the trial hour,
And grow Cutcrazy! Oh, what a power
Is there nobler work in Heaven above,
Than all in labor and joy and love,
Then earth born spirits do and dare
In faith and hope, trusting His care

Who bore His Cross!
Then, Christian friends, fresh courage take!
Your crosses are but for a moment;
Soon the Cross, the Crown, the Rest
Will be open wide, and God's own hand
Will lead you home to that blest land
To crown for ever.

P. McGINN McHALE.

THE WIDOW'S SITE.

From a list of sentiments previous to the load of grape shot.

When, with unfeigned loveliness, the golden Unknown silent
Where thrown of human beauty and rich colors
Neat our planet,
Owing with blue, bright azure sky—the sunny
Idol of France,

Came an humble peasant woman, dressed in Bearing something which the guarded as a dear
And valued gifts
All the savings of her lifetime, of her life of Lady and Lord.

Lady and Lord! Oh! she labored hard upon her native soil.

Now, she brings her little savings to a pilgrim bound for Jerusalem,
To present the Holy Father, or her loving gift
Hoping humbly, as she gave it, with a child-like That her poor and humble offering be accepted by the Pope.

She may look some few small comforts in her
Yet to barter that she had helped him would be Poverty not poverty, poverty superstition,
She had always worked with strangers, and that work she still would do;
As a bond and loving Providence so said distressed the hour.

Thus she spoke, as to the pilgrim she consigned
her hard own gift,
With no care about her future, the' not a sent remaining.
In deed this Widow's tribute was presented without fail,
Ere the Pontiff touched with tenderness to the tale.

Unnoticed and unknown, said barrow, had remained that noble hour,
And yet was large hearted tear-drops are glisten lay on a new,
The noble, pure devotion of that honest, fervent soul,
Ascending in him feelings which he could not then control.

Pope Pius, with emotion, took the Frenchwoman's hand, and said,
And blessed, in the name, as the' it were a hallowed thing,
The Widow's living offering, the' a simple and small,
Christ's Vicar, prized, for well he knew she ribed her all.

A holy alms—too sacred for—the saintly Pontiff
For his poor, humble giver's Pope should pray for him,
Not of the richest treasures which from affluence
to him
Have been lavished, but in prodigious his gift bestowed.

MONROE.

TRUTH AND LOVE.

The works of man shall crumble and decay,
His boast in brass and iron shall pass away,
The mighty empires, the Golden Cross

LETTER FROM VIRGINIA CITY.

Catholic Affairs on the Comstock—Bright Shining Prospects this Year—Distinguished Doors from President Cleveland's Letter to Catholic Citizens.—Father John Stolle's Labors in Nevada.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nevada, March 5, 1887.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:—

Dear Sir—A few sallings from this silver region may not prove uninteresting to your numerous readers. Owing to the great amount of snow which has recently fallen in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and which is now safely stored away in the winding ravines, gulches and canyons, the people of Virginia City have every cause to hope for good times all through the coming summer. The snow, melting under the hot sun, forms numerous rills and streams which flow into the Carson River, and, in the mad rush, thus supplying ample motive power to the mills for crushing and pulverizing the rock which contains the precious ore. The miners and citizens of the famous Comstock lode, feel happy in view of such bright prospects of continued prosperity.

BUT WHILE THE MATERIAL INTERESTS of our city are so hopeful, while a better era has already dawned upon our battle born State, the far more important affairs of Catholicity claim at this present time a great deal of attention. Realizing the absolute necessity of having the growing and impressible mind and faculties of the young to bloom and expand beneath the salutary influence of religion, and knowing from past experience, the ruinous effects the unchristian, godless have of the public schools generally produce, the Catholic parents here have labored with a commendable zeal, to have their children properly educated in Catholic schools. This is only as it ought to be, for the Church, the Ark of salvation, alone should be the first body, promulgating the demands of every Christian who hopes to enter a happy hereafter—a lasting enlightenment of every virtue and an utter abomination of every vice. This sure, this unremitting attention to the paramount interests of man's spiritual being is a manly obligation on the parts of tender parents as it is on the aged and feeble. All must admit that a child who spends six days of the week in the atmosphere from which the Connecticut Faithful comes, have completely eliminated from their minds all the Apostles and Creeds, of Jesus Christ, and the Catechism, and the Church, the exclusive plan that is possess the Shorter and to render more secure the infatuation of the American people, the rising generation must be brought up under a non-sectarian system of education, must have a very clear idea of the obligation towards God, or of the unerring account of their lives and actions, all human students must render on the day of judgment.

EXCEPT A PRIMER REALIZES THE FACT that he is strictly accountable to God for every act his performer, what is there to restrain him from the commission of the most dreadful crimes? The assassin, robber, highwayman or any of the shameful deeds daily written of even in your own city are in a certain manner, or indirectly, the result of banishing Christian morality and its restraining influences from the schooling of the young. If the State wishes to have good, law abiding citizens it must, or at least establish a well grounded system it must the various denominations, religious societies, parents and citizens with unique adaptation. We need no better illustration of this proposition, than the sterling words of President Cleveland recently published in the MONITOR. "A whole some religious belief, says this wise statesman, "insures to the purposing, the safety and prosperity of our Republic, by rendering the citizens of civil law, the preservation of public order and a proper regard for the rights of all; and then are the adherents better fitted for good citizenship," and adds, "It will be fortunate for the country when every citizen feels that he has received a training in his youth in the Divine Law which he cannot evade by reason of his ignorance of it, or neglect without being false to his religious belief and to the Divine Sanctions." The learned jurist and statesman wrote the Chief Magistrate of this nation such a most sensible and sensible.

THAT THE CATHOLICS OF THE COMSTOCK are awake to the vital importance of this great question of Christian education, and that they are determined to have the children of the entire Church, and centring within the entire Church, and centring within the entire Church, and centring within Erin's Place in America's Prosperity.

SPLENDID SKETCH BY SENATOR ROAR.

NATIONAL INGREDIENTS OF IMMIGRATION.

Irish Blood in Native Americans.

The following is the full text of the Hon. George F. Hoar's reference to Irish-Americans in his oration at the Worcester Bicentennial:

[illegible] faster to our history, whose influences has been already very great, and must be largely taken into account in our anticipation of the future. I mean the immigration, within the last half century, of our brethren of foreign birth, especially of the Irish race. Mr. Webster, at Plymouth, in 1820, said, with just pride, that in the villages and farmhouses of New England, there was still undisturbed sleep within unbarred doors. New England, and Ancients, so far as it has obeyed her teaching, has ever kept her doors unbarred. The great immigration, which began about 1830, has enriched Worcester with its abundant gifts. Of our whole population in 1850 of 58,291, there were of foreign birth 15,024. Of this number the principal ingredients were contributed as follows:

Ireland	9329
British Americas	2227
England	1577
Prussia	546
German States	276

The number of persons having one parent or both of foreign birth was 32,064.

Allowing for the very large number of the grandchildren of emigrants, it seems reasonably certain that of our present population of 70,000, quite 30,000 are of Irish descent. To many good men this fact is a source of alarm. But to me, much meditating on this matter, considering it in those large and permanent relations which belong to an occasion like this, it seems cause for both for what it has done for us in the past, and for what we may hope from it in the future. Say nothing now of the benefit we have been able to confer on them. Leave out of view the blessings of justice, freedom, employment, self-government, education, to those who have withdrawn their necks from under the heel of England, a boon which a tenant and peasant people would stain and peril their own institutions to the extent in order. Think of what this has done for us.

THANKS—HARTFORD TO YOU,

Without the foreign immigration to this country the building of our railroads would have been impracticable, or must have been delayed for a generation. That, in the truth, would have postponed the settlement of the West, would have made the suppression of the rebellion impossible, and would have prevented the creation of that western market, and access to that western agriculture, which, in their turn, have created, supported and fed the industrial system of the East.

[illegible] OWES ITS GROWTH,

in its manufacturing supremacy, to [illegible] around the Atlantic, which these men created. The Railroad Bill of the Union was made in America and by Irish men and Irishmen, and by Irish men and Irishmen alone. The problem of their part in it was to be wrought out, on a new field, where equal justice prevails, where there is no land, and no church.

We dwell, with an honest pride, on the great qualities of our ancestors. We hope to trace unit them to our children. In that mighty national life, the Anglo-Saxon, without account of many, one; of many states, one nation; of many, one people; of many creeds, one faith; the Scandinavian, the Celt, has contributed—his courage, his constancy, his love of God, his sensuous poetic fancy, his zeal for liberty, his serene and lofty hope—all the elements of peopling and power.

But see what this Irishman brings, also, as a dowry to this marriage which the centuries are to wed.

THE IRISH RACE IS CONSPICUOUS

among great men for great traits. No people that possessed them ever failed to achieve a high rank among nations, on a fair field. These qualities are the capacity to produce great men under the most adverse conditions; the capacity for rapid elevation, when conditions are favorable; courage; solidarity qualities; the gift of eloquence; the power of severe and patient labor; the capacity for patriotism and strong domestic affection; chastity; deep religious feeling.

The most English of English historians has drawn a picture of England's rule over Ireland, whose dark and terrible shadows the other hand can despair. Six hundred and fifty years of the most terrible form of tyranny, that of a race by a race, government by bayonet, artillery, and intrenched camp; the greatest English champion of civil and spiritual liberty denying even toleration to Ireland; whatever is associated with daily deliverance and dignity to the Englishman is associated with bondage and ruin to the Irishman; of the two greatest English sovereigns—Cromwell and William—the Irish policy of one extinction, of the other, degradation; the most odious laws, aggravated by odious administration; poverty, produced by millions as the only authorized agent of Christian church, and the only authorized dispensers of the Christian Scriptures; and yet no decent man would trust the most abject beggar.

THEME ARE LORD MACAULAY'S VOCUMS.

His authority needs no confirmation. If it is the Creed, the creed of a people brave, [illegible] and in spite that this state of things continued, without intermission or improvement, down to the time when the great emigration from Ireland was at its height. Yet what eight millions of men on earth produce more great men than Ireland during the last half of the last century? Swift and Goldsmith and Burke and Sheridan, and the foremost name in a great department in English literature; Wellington, the first soldier of his time, were Irishmen. It may be said that they belonged to the dominant race. But take the men whom Ireland claims as her own, all on the stage within a period of 60 years—Emmet.

The noblest star of Fame,
Thus ever in Mel's young glory set.

Grattan, whose genius gave Ireland her brief taste of national life.—

Flood, who stood behind, matched from the grave,
And the madness of zeal, when filled with his [illegible]

A union arranged the dark bounds of her doom,
And, for one moment lonest, touched Liberty's plume!

Plunkett, greatest of the great orators of the House of Commons in its greatest period.

To whom with one accent,
All jaded the ear in the high argument:

Father Mathew, whose inspired word accelerated the descent of intemperance from the homes of hundreds of thousands of my countrymen; O'Connell, before whom England trembled; Curran, Shiel, Bushe, are but a few of the great names which have adorned the annals of this downtrodden people.

—Mr. Jeffrey Peterson, of Chicago, the [illegible] has just arrived from the "village" of nearly 1,500,000 inhabitants, with a stock of goods amounting to the price thousands of all sizes, colors, styles, and qualities. Mr. Peterson's stock of clothing, boots and shoes, hats and furnishing goods, is the largest in the Pacific Coast, and is the cheapest, as he is a practical shoemaker, and manufacturer of boots and shoes, and can sell at the lowest figure. Call and inspect for yourselves, at the Boston Boot and Shoe Store, 1 Kearny street, corner of Dupont street.

Selecting a Jury in Ireland.

An Irish journal gives the following graphic sketch of how jurors are selected in Ireland whenever any Nationalist prisoners are to be put on trial:

"What sort of a man is Paddy Murphy?" queries the Crown solicitor. "Is he a Land Leaguer? Does he attend their meetings? Is he a Home Ruler?" "Begorra, I don't think he is," exclaims the constabulary. "He's a quiet, decent man, who minds his own business." "If he is a Catholic name, observes the Crown official, as he confers with himself. "Oh, yes sir, he is a Catholic." "Well, now, constable, what about his sons and daughters? Do they take any active part in politics?" "Yes," says the constable, "I remember that his youngest daughter, Mary, was a member of the 'Ladies' Land League' when that institution was flourishing some years ago." "Well, constable, I think we can safely leave the Crown solicitor, and accordingly Paddy's name is marked for challenge, but not on account of the patriotism of his daughter, but simply because he belongs to the prescribed class.

Now here it will be observed that although a multiplicity of questions are asked, the only real fact of which the Crown Solicitor wants to assure him is whether the man is a Catholic or Nationalist or not.

"No doubt there are a certain class of cases in which the religious question is not raised. For instance, Catholics are permitted to serve on juries before which policemen, burglars and other notorious Protestant offenders are to be tried. But in all questions of an agrarian character, or in which the national sentiment is in any way involved, the sole end and object of the Crown Officers is to secure an exclusively Protestant jury.

It is a very remarkable thing, and may be accepted as indicating the base, under-hand and unscrupulous methods by which English law is enforced in Ireland, that while the directions which Mr. Adams, the Crown Solicitor, read in the House of Commons specifically assume a number of grounds upon which a challenge may be made, there is no allusion to the subject of religion, which is the only reason in ninety nine cases out of a hundred for which Roman Catholics are ordered to stand by.

Catholic Statistics from Rome.

The Rome correspondent of the Boston Pilot, gives the following interesting extracts from the "Pontifical Annual" issued from the Vatican press. The Dean of the Sacred College, by age, is Cardinal John Henry Newman, aged 86 years; the Dean by date of creation is Cardinal Mertel, who is 29 years in the Sacred College. The Dean of the Sacred College, however, is Cardinal Sacconi, first Cardinal of the Order of Bishops by the date of his creation in 1861. He is Cardinal during 36 years. The Cardinals of the Order of the Bishops are all of the Order of Priests, 42; of the Order of Deacons, 15. Of the Cardinals created by Pius IX., 23 are still living; Leo XIII. has created 26 Cardinals, and five who have received the red hat, elevation to the Sacred College at the next Consistory, after which date the Sacred College will have 67 members. In relation to age there are, in the Senate of the Church, five octogenarians, 29 septuagenarians, 16 over the age of 60, and 16 over the age of 50. The youngest member of the College is Cardinal Sebastian Neto, Patriarch of Lisbon, 47 years of age. With regard to Italians and foreigners, there are at present five Roman Cardinals and 25 Italians, which gives Italy 30 hats. The Italian Cardinals have 37 members of the Sacred College. According to the list appearing in this new year, there are 13 Parisians, 2 Genoa, 1 Ferrara, and 1 Bologna, and 127 Episcopal Sees. The Patriarchates of the Oriental Rite are Antioch (Maronites, Syrians), Babylon, of the Chaldeans, Cilicia of the Armenians, Alexandria of the Copts, Jerusalem, Venice, Lisbon, Lisbon, West Indies and Lisbon. The Archbishoprics are 49, and those of the Bishoprics are 49, of which who derive their titles from Sees Bond, 847; Archbishops and Bishops of the Oriental Rite, 77; Bishops and Bishops, known formerly as in partibus infidelium, who do not exercise Episcopal Sees properly speaking, 315; Archbishops and Bishops no longer having titles, 21; Prelates nullius diocesse first, 1 total of 1321 titles actually existing. Leo XIII. has created one Patriarchate, 16 Archbishoprics, 49 Dioceses, 27 Vicariates and one Apostolic Delegation, nine Prefectures Apostolic—all of new sees, which remark the happy development of the Hierarchy under the present Pontiff.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

When Erin lay a dreary child,
Upon Atlantic's wary shore,
Her hills, and valleys, lone and wild,
Her moats but the breakers roar.
The green turf, smiling at her feet,
Seemed beckoning to some elfish band
Her fortune then, it was to meet
A maiden Saint of Church and land.

He sought to life until the poor,
As if to modest virtue love,
And planed upon each cottage door
A blessed for the coming morn.
He gave a promise to stir rue,
Of wit and joy, in word or one,
And hade them wear a smiling face
Though storm by days might come or go.

There slowly marching o'er the ground,
He called the great and bid them heed
The work of love, that might be found,
In acting man by noble deed.
The Faith of old he freely taught
To rich and poor, 'mid gale and sun,
"The Christ, the Crucified," she brought Their pardoned souls upon the Cross.

Oh! Saint! In those lone days,
Forget not him who brought you life,
The world's red banner bade of fray,
He knelt—you gave, act was and strife.
Try good St. Patrick's simple plan,
In this your hour of grief and pain,
Be true to God, and just to man,
Then Erin's exists shall live again.

San Francisco. THOMAS CURTIS.

ROLL OF HONOR.

OUR LADY OF MERCY'S SCHOOL.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT—Maggie Ballin, Mary Cahill, Agnes Fanning, Bridie Walsh, May Ballin, Agnes Ward, Maggie Joyce, Cecilia Kelly, Fannie O'Brien.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT—Hattie Healy, Bridie Hyde, Annie Healy, Katie Shea, Mary Brady, Jude Crowley, Lizzie Dwyer.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT—Mary Whalen, Rosie Lenihan, Katie Daly, Tessie Keegan, Adelina Benedetti, Maria Hayes, Sarah O'Donnell.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT—Mary Grey, Judith Gerardo, Minnie Flood, Agnie Slattery, Annie Madden, Mary Cross, Christina Bagnet, Rosie Stone, Louise Casey, Ida Bernard, Annie Kearn.

SITUATIONS WANTED

By a middle-aged widow lady as housekeeper or to do some light work. Apply at this office.

A Sudden Change of Weather

Will often bring on a cough. The irritation which follows remains to quickly subdued by "Brown's Bronchial Troches," a simple and effective cure for all throat troubles. Price, 25 cents per box.

—French S. Kelly, Druggist, 102 Eddy st., opposite Fancisco Building. Prescriptions specialty. Complete assortment of fancy goods and toilet articles always on hand.

—The oldest reliable optical establishment, C. Muller the leading optician 136 Montgomery street.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—Captain McHardy's report on the fishery district of Ballycastle represents more rapid convergence for the protection of the fishery, and the prosecution of plain clothes constables, with most powerful effect.

CARLOW.—Mr. F. McGuagan, schoolmaster, Native Island, has received an appointment to a National school in the county Down.

CORK.—A very extraordinary moonlight affair occurred from Bantry. On February 11, about 12 o'clock, a house in the possession of a widow named Mrs. Ross, who was rendered by three policemen, was surrounded by about one hundred men, who demanded that the inmates should leave. The urgent in charter attempted to get in the door, and barred the door against the men. They answered by attacking the walls with sledge hammers, and threatened to pull down the house if it was not given up. The police, believing that it would be impossible to deal with such a large body of men, consented to leave. Mrs. Ross and some other inmates, together with the three policemen, then left for Bantry, some three miles distant. What makes the affair more extraordinary is that the dispute about the farm is confined to the Ross family, the National League not interfering.

On February 17th, the remains of Slater Philbin, who died in Boston, were interred in the Catholic cemetery of the Kilmale convent. The news of the death of the young man caused considerable feeling in the neighborhood. The inhabitants of Kilmale, who are betached for the most part to the memory of the blighted prospects and manner, were justly mentioned on account of her sad death. Young Philbin left Kilmale for America by way of Liverpool. Nearly the entire relatives of the boys were closely sheltered as a token of respect, and several other similar demonstrations of a kind were manifested in by the Catholics of the town.

The ceremony of tacking the first rail of the Bantry and Cork Railway took place on February 16, at Bloomfield, and was celebrated by a breakfast at St. Anne's.

CLARE.—The Government, it is said, has experienced considerable difficulty in inducing a sufficient number of policemen to join the 19 for Clare. Lieutenant-Colonel Turner, R.E., Major Cullen, Co. Clare, is, however, consented to take office. The resignation of his sub-Sheriff, Mr. Charles Henry Hubbett, tendered some months ago, has been accepted, and it is stated that he will be succeeded by Mr. Pulliner Dawson, at present Petty Sessions Clerk for the Navenaby West (County Limerick) Division. Mr. Pulliner Dawson is the son of Richard Dawson, J.P., Deputy Lieutenant of Clare, and if he succeeds as well in his new office as he has done in his old, he will be proud to become that singular anomaly, a popular sheriff.

DUBLIN.—On February 16th, a servant girl named Mary O'Neill, aged 30 years, residing in the house of Mr. Devlin, 30 Grafton-street, Dublin, was sent to post some letters. When opposite the house, 49 Rathgar road, a boy rushed to a drug house opposite and ran into the footway, and the woman was crushed between the horse and cart and a carden wall. She was killed instantly.

DONEGAL.—Mr. Sergeant has appointed Wm. Moore Lee of Bridge-street, Donegal, and 20 South Frederick street, to be Clerk of the Peace for the Borough of Dublin.

DONEGAL.—Prof. Seely McKnight, of Pa., speaking at a meeting of the Presbyterian Historical Society, on Feb. 14th, said the election of himself, a Presbyterian, the son of a Presbyterian—and shown the English public that Irish Protestants, if they were only left to their country, had anything to hope for from their Catholic fellow-countrymen. The Catholic priest of Donegal had in (Mr. McNally) had gone about the county working for emigration, and had gone to go to the English market, and had carried the hearts of the Irish and Catholic people with him. The Catholic priests of Donegal, Protestants and Catholics would fly at each other's throats but for their immediate interposition.

DOWN.—Dairy the week ending the last partisans made use of a bonfire to celebrate the anniversary of Orange. It was given out by the rotters of Mr. Lewis would be maintained by the Orange Lodge, and the bonfire was to be lighted at 8 o'clock. The people refused their use for the occasion. The Orangemen then made a bonfire of their own field, and set on some rotten. The bridge continued for two days, and the people the city of Portadown, the police did not interfere.

DOWN.—The Lord Lieutenant's twenty-first Lodge, Ballyroney, and Tullylish Orangemen have received a reply stating—"As time is so short, we have not had a meeting of the Lodge, but we hold the old of March, 1887, and the hall was in the hands of the Nationalists on the night of the 17th. After these respectable dates cannot be given."

GALWAY.—The town of Loughrea continues in a state of great excitement, and in a state of siege. The houses of those who have taken farms from the Land Leagues are all boycotted by their neighbors. Notices have been posted, calling upon people not to have any dealings with the obnoxious people in the town. All the extra police drafted into town have been sent back to their stations, as the land owners refused to convoy them. Mounted police under arms are in the town.

Upwards of a thousand people assembled in Clifden on Feb. 20th, to welcome home their parish priest, the Very Rev. Patrick Lynskey, P.P., V.F., who arrived from Dublin, at a p. m. Ere the public car, by which the very reverend gentleman travelled from Galway had reached the town, the inhabitants, at McHenry's Hotel, had assembled in great force. The reverend gentleman was obliged to alight at the head of the vast crowd of people, who, with the Rev. Mr. Lynskey, and preceded by O'Kelly, in his way he was triumphantly borne to the Presbytery. A large bonfire had been lighted at the entrance to the town, which we (Clifden) Nationalist, Father Lynskey addressed a few words to the people from the steps of the Presbytery door.

On Feb. 17th, Mr. Michael Walsh, teacher of the National School, Sylton, Tuam, died, deeply regretted by all who knew his worth and amiable character.

KILKENNY.—On Feb. 9, a sheriff sale of estate for rent was held at the Bank's Pound, Ballyragget, on the 4th ult. of Mr. Edward Hogan, which landlord, at last Mr. Michael Holohan, Ballyragget, for payment of rent due was £30. Mr. Hogan, J.P., was present on the occasion. The tenant had paid the rent due, and the sheriff's expenses. A final and complete settlement was jointly mentioned on account of his arrears, which he had been unable to pay during the last year in Kinnale. Nearly the entire stubble of the town were slowly shattered as a token of respect, and several other similar demonstrations of a kind were manifested in by the Catholics of the town.

The ceremony of tacking the first rail of the Bantry and Cork Railway took place on February 16, at Bloomfield, and was celebrated by a breakfast at St. Anne's.

KERRY.—Mr. Pat Cronin, aged 30 years, residing at Ballyrahan, Ballyrahan, died on the 17th, leaving a widow and three children. Deceased was a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and was buried with the full honors of the Order. The funeral was very large, and the cortege was a long one. The deceased was a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and was buried with the full honors of the Order. The funeral was very large, and the cortege was a long one.

KILDARE.—Mr. Michael Fitzgerald, Ballyragget, Ballyragget, has received his commission as Clerk of the Peace for the County Kildare, in place of Mr. James Barry, who has resigned. Mr. Barry has been a very popular officer of the county, stated to Mr. Hall, the chairman of the county, and he has always sought to be on terms either on its own order or on the order of the magistrates, and his resignation has caused a great sensation, and highly honorable and permitted to retire when the victory of the same party, which he has served so well, is at last assured. Mr. Barry's successor, Mr. Hall, is a gentleman of great ability, and it is to be hoped he will be only temporary that his loss of Mr. Barry.

KILKENNY.—Captain Henry Moore, J.P., Castlecomer, Kilkenny, has been sworn in High-Sheriff of the county Wicklow. Mr. C. H. Davidson, of Rath, was the same time sworn in as Sub-Sheriff.

LIMERICK.—Captain Henry Moore, J.P., Castlecomer, Kilkenny, has been sworn in High-Sheriff of the county Wicklow. Mr. C. H. Davidson, of Rath, was the same time sworn in as Sub-Sheriff.

LONDONDERRY.—On Feb. 9, a sheriff sale of estate for rent was held at the Bank's Pound, Ballyragget, on the 4th ult. of Mr. Edward Hogan, which landlord, at last Mr. Michael Holohan, Ballyragget, for payment of rent due was £30. Mr. Hogan, J.P., was present on the occasion. The tenant had paid the rent due, and the sheriff's expenses. A final and complete settlement was jointly mentioned on account of his arrears, which he had been unable to pay during the last year in Kinnale. Nearly the entire stubble of the town were slowly shattered as a token of respect, and several other similar demonstrations of a kind were manifested in by the Catholics of the town.

The ceremony of tacking the first rail of the Bantry and Cork Railway took place on February 16, at Bloomfield, and was celebrated by a breakfast at St. Anne's to carry on his work. Such is the complaint of the suffering Catholic poor, silently addressed to God, and we in their name and the name of God hereby invite the wall-to-do Catholics of every mission to lend them all the assistance that they can.

THE DUTY OF CATHOLICS TO THE POOR.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

HOW TO SET TO WORK.

We ought to have societies or organizations of men and of women who, under the general direction of the clergy should visit the sick and the poor, either in their own homes, or in hospitals, workhouses, and other institutions. Where these societies exist the work will be done more thoroughly and with a far greater economy of time, labor, and means, than where individuals are left to themselves and lose a great deal of time and labor. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul has once might be far more widely extended that it is. And quite as important as a society for men, would be the establishment of a society for women to visit the poor in their homes and public institutions. No words can say how valuable is the influence of devout women; how noiselessly, quietly, and deeply it penetrates where the voice of no man will reach and persuade. We do not hesitate to declare our firmest judgment that thousands of souls, among the poorest and the old, would have been saved to the Church and have been developed the early traditions of the Apostolic Church, which tends to wide a use of the religious activity and influence of devout Christian women living in the world. It may be said, HERE WE not communities of religious women! We have; and they render invaluable service, which no gold can purchase; but there is not one of them which is not already overtaxed. Have we not clergy! Yes, but their number is far below the needs of their pastoral work. You of the laity who, though not rich are well-to-do, who could find time for a little charity towards your neighbor—you cannot discharge your duty by merely abandoning the poor to the care of others. You cannot claim love for the poor without good works of your own. Be well persuaded that the Catholic Church in this country will never acquit herself of her great Christian obligations until the multitude of her well-to-do children are in some way or other really engaged in the love and service of her poor. Though St. Vincent de Paul founded a congregation of Priests and another of Sisters of Charity to serve the poor, though, then always numerous in the life day, he felt the absolute need of the co-operation of ladies living in the world. He therefore established the "Confraternity of Charity," which was composed of married and single women. He drew up admirable rules for their guidance which bound them together, and he has left his plan as a legacy to all who will. In Manchester and Salford something has been made in this direction. The Lady Associates of the Catholic Girls' Mental Aid Society, and the ladies who visit the hospitals and workhouses and the poor in their homes, are already walking in the glorious footsteps of St. Vincent de Paul. Our most earnest desire is to see their work developed, extended and consolidated in connection with St. Vincent de Paul through the Diocese of Charleston.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. W. B. DOLAN.

DOLAN—In this city, March 19, 1887, Julia Jane Dolan, aged 21 years, 3 months and 17 days. Native of Boston, Mass. Funeral this (Sunday) afternoon, at 2 o'clock, from her late residence, 1 Sixth street.

Only a little confession, in the memory of those who knew her, perhaps not meaning to be so, but strong in its simplicity and truthfulness, that "she was a good girl, to be with us so soon in life life. But it has a world of meaning to the broken hearted, sitting in the lonely home, children, widows and alone. Husband and wife were so devoted to each other that their sorrow were always mutual. For more than twenty years, they had joined hand in hand, walked, sat, and slept without some of the cares and sorrows that are the common lot of humanity. Death was the sharpest and most sudden, and most great bereavement. Death was the sharpest and most sudden, and most great bereavement. For more than twenty years, they had joined hand in hand, walked, sat, and slept without some of the cares and sorrows of life, a load of bread, or other necessities, which the children would not have to carry, or have to earn bread. She seemed to realize in its fullest sense the meaning of the words of the Master to my friend "Little Children to some note Mr." Sympathy and lovely kindness was not strange, but rather, all were the recipients of her sweet kindness. Her sympathy was so deep, so big in the world, that it was a great loss to her home and home circle. Her death was so sudden, so unexpected, so heavy the sorrow to be parted and blanched and have nothing but Mrs. Dolan's sweet graciousness in short and good deed, exploding in what she was pleased to which was distinctly marked. Mary's great family to the city she referred in her own quiet way, and based her on Heaven man and woman she found work for through her own earnest personal attention at all with which they could be called upon to deal." A disgraceful outrage has been reported from Athlone, Nawassila West. It appears that on Sunday night, March 6, the Methodist Church, some distance from the village, which was erected about twenty years ago by the late Archbishop Gould, and who was a Protestant, the Illinois Boler and Nationalist, was attached by some rufians, and the stained glass windows were completely wrecked. The sum were knocked down, and the bible and prayer book were discovered lying outside the building in a shockery. Mike Gould (The Archbishop's daughter) established a lasting industry at Athlone, and her efforts in developing the cottage industries of Ireland are well known. No protest can be assigned for this outrage except some unknown.

The Most Rev. Dr. O'Dwyer, Bishop of Limerick, has made the following appeals to the diocese: Rev. Jas. Cowan, C. C., transferred to Gilin; Rev. Mortimer McCoy, Fedamore to Doneale; and the Rev. Michael O'Donnell, C. C., Gilin to Fedamore.

KILKENNY.—The Kilmanah I. N. L. has subscribed the sum of £10 toward the Parliamentary expenses of Mr. E. M. Murphy, M. P. At a recent meeting of the branch a resolution was passed condemning the conduct of James Quirk, of Portlarnia, in grabbing the land of Michael Dalton, after the latter had been accordered by a Protestant neighbor, at the request of the local branch of the League.

LEITRIM.—The Carrigallen I. N. L. recently elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Rev. T. Gilfoyle, President; Rev. J. Fitzpatrick, Vice-President; James Foley, Treasurer; J. Brady, Secretary; James Carney, Assistant Secretary.

MEATH.—Judge Monroe has refused the application for a reduction of rents on the Wade estate.

MAYO.—The Belmar I. N. L. recently adopted as candidates for P. L. G's, Mr. Lavin for the Langhanbay Division, and Mr. John Delany for Knock South.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.—There were only four cases to go before the Queen's County Assizes at Maryborough.

ROSCOMMON.—At the Roscommon Assizes an old man named John Crary was indicted for attempting to kill and murder Elizabeth Hegarty at Scahkrotary, on December 5th, by hitting her on the head with a hammer. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

SLIGO.—At the Sligo Assizes a young man named William Armstrong was indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Dwiner, in the town of Sligo, on Christmas evening, stabbing him in the abdomen with a bayonet's knife. The Crown agreed to a verdict of manslaughter on the plea of the prisoner's counsel, and Mr. Justice Lawson imposed a sentence of twenty years' penal servitude.

TIPPERARY.—On March 7th, Deputy Sheriff Quinn, with two bailiffs, attended at Donaghmore—accompanying a city—attending in the case of John Walsh, of Moohtar's Hill, Fethard, against Philip Dwyer of Liscreagh, for possession of a small farm. A half year's rent and running gale were claimed. About 40 armed police constables attended under District Inspector Hamilton and County Inspector Stephens. The chapel bells had been ringing in Fethard and Liscreagh during the morning, and a considerable crowd collected. The tenant's premises were strongly barricaded, but the bailiffs, under the protection of the police, forced an entrance and took possession. The crowd got excited, and under the order of the County Inspector they were driven back with batons—who, on splitting were armed and pelted with stones. Sgt. Mr. Stephens ordered another charge, and the retiring party then made their way to the police barracks. Here the crowd rallied and demonstrated. Six were charged with assault.

ATHLONE.—On March 8th, Bryce Dowes opened the Assizes, observing to the grand jury that it was glad to be able to inform them that the business of the assizes was very light. The number of cases to be prosecuted was very small, none of which required any detailed mention from him.

TIRRONE.—It is stated that at May fair last week there was an extraordinary rush of war troopers, and prices were considerably increased, ranging from £20 to £50 (one buyer for the French army brought upwards of 80 horses, all of which he sent by rail from Armagh in the evening. Other buyers had turned out, as its custom is, to secure numbers of this class of horses, and business was over so brisk for a long time past.

WESTMEATH.—There was only one case to be submitted to the Westmeath Assizes, namely, a crime committed by an English soldier.

A second Nationalist candidate has taken the field in the person of Dr. Whyte. Dr. Kerrigan's candidature has the endorsement of J. D. Sullivan, T. Harrington and Dr. J. E. Kenny, M. P.

WICKLOW.—At the Wicklow petty sessions on March 7th, Mr. Tankson Edwards, J. P., a well-known timber and general merchant of Wicklow, was committed for trial to the assizes, bail being refused, charged of the business of the National Bank with having forged several acceptances to bills of exchange.

—Frank A. Houghton, well and favorably known in this city, has opened a new stationery and printing establishment at 22½ California st. His stock in stationery is extensive, new and varied, taking in all the latest designs and novelties, as well as the standard articles. He has equipped the printing department with new presses and type and all the latest improvements for doing work fine and rapidly. In both branches of the establishment he prices will be found to be consistent with good value and fair work.

—Mr. John A. Lennon, the old-established wholesale grocer, has just received from importations of English, French and Italian Grocery. Also the Celebrated Brand of "L' Japan and China tea and other Beauty Pure Olive Oil for Table and Sanctuary Lamp use; Italian Macaroni and Rice; Colonial Hearth, Hearthed and Extra Weight Oysters and other goods in line. Mr. Lennon's advertisement will be found on the third page.

Market Report.

MONTHLY OFFICIAL.

136 Kearny St., Tuesday Evening, April 5, 1887.

WHEAT—No. 1	$1 55@$1 47½
FLOUR—Superfine	$ 2 25@3 00
Corn	1 00@1 07½
Oats	1 00@1 37½
Barley, feed, whitened	1 00@1 37½
Ground Barley, ℔ ton	20 00@22 00
Middlings	22 00@25 00
Oats No. 1 feed	1 37½@1 75
Bran, ℔ ton	17 00@17 50
Buckwheat	1 00@1 37½
POTATOES—
Hens, ℔ ton, wholesale	6 00@7 50
Sweet Potatoes, ℔ lb wholesale	2 00@2 50
Onions, ℔ cwt	2 00@2 50
Hydiers ℔ ton	8 00@7 00
Hay, Wheat	8 00@10 00
Hay, Alfalfa	8 00@9 00
Hay, Wild Oats	8 00@9 00
Hay, Barley	8 00@9 00
Hay, Stock	8 00@9 00
Hay, Southern Coast	10@12
Straw, ℔ bale	1 00@1 50
Hops	16@18
Wool, Southern Coast	10@12
Wool, Mountain	17@19
Honeybell	17@19
BEANS—
Bayo, wholesale	2 75@2 85
Mottos, wholesale	2 75@2 85
Red, wholesale	2 75@2 85
Pink, wholesale	2 75@2 85
Pink, Stage-coated Hayes	1 75@1 85
California Hayes	1 75@1 85
Lady, ℔ lb wholesale	2 00@2 25
Lady, ℔ lb wholesale in bags	2 00@2 25
VEGETABLES—
Beans, white	1 50@1 60
Asparagus, ℔ box	1 50@2 00
Turnips, ℔ 100	2 50@3 00
Turnips, California	2 75@3 50
Carrots, ℔ 100	1 75@1 50
Green Peppers	1 50@2 00
Garlic, ℔ ton	10 00@12 00
Squash	1 00@1 50
Cabbage, ℔ doz	1 00@1 50
Cabbage, ℔ 100	1 00@1 50
Cauliflower, ℔ doz	1 00@1 50
Celery, ℔ doz	1 00@1 50
Beets, ℔ 100	1 00@1 50
Turnips, ℔ 100	1 00@1 50
Parsnips, ℔ 100	1 00@1 50
Green Apples, ℔ box	75@1 75

DYSPEPSIA.

The Symptoms: Loss of Appetite, Bloated Stomach, Dizziness of the Stomach, Headache, Bad Breath, Sleeplessness, Low Spirits and general prostration. Dyspepsia is frequently attended with Constipation, but sometimes with Diarrhoea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

NOW CURED:

I suffered intensely with Pain Stomach, Headache, and Constipation, and was so low that I could not walk. I tried your Regulator and it was a sure cure for me in a month. Yet does I feel as strong and hearty as ever. I am a hearty eater, and can digest anything. Yours truly, J. G. CARTER, Richmond, Va.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

ANTRIM.—The tenants of Sir Richard Wallace have decided to accept the miserable reduction of 10 per cent. which is offered.

The tenants in the townland of Gortacgorogh, about eight miles from Ballymena, have just concluded arrangements for the purchase of their farms from the Misses Martin, Ballymena, at sixteen years' purchase of the judicial rents.

CAVAN.—There were only three bills, and these were of an unimportant character—to go before judge Fullas at the Cavan assizes.

CLARE.—Mr. David Sheehy, M. P., who has been assisting the tenantry on the Gritfith estate at Mullingh, West Clare, in getting in operation the "Plan of Campaign," was present on Sunday, March 6, at a demonstration on the farm of a man named Mc Mahon, who was evicted by his landlord, also named McMahon. The meeting was held at Kilmurry, about a mile from Mullingh. No public advertisement was issued, and, as usual, the police were outnumbered. The attendance was very large, consisting of men, with heads and banners, being pre-ceded by a fife and drum band. Speeches were delivered by Messrs. Sheehy, Kilbride, and other districts. Kilbihi was further represented by about 200 horsemen. The authorities were represented by six policemen. There was no disturbance, although the proceedings lasted from 2 to 5 o'clock. Mr. Sheehy delivered a manly address, and the "Plan of Campaign" was endorsed.

The tenants on the property of Mr. R. W. C. Keeves, D. L., Boxborough House, Killrush, have been granted a reduction of 20 per cent. in their rents.

CORK.—The work of tilling the farms of those tenants on the Ponsonby estate who have been singled out for law proceedings, has been completed.

A meeting convened to express condemnation of a landlord (Captain Leonard, of Lisbalinbaha) was supposed to Mossons, on Sunday, March 6. In the evening the town band turned out, as its custom is, to salute the population with a few brisk tunes; as its custom was formerly in days gone by, when the band magistrates. This reminds one of the played-out Russian system in Warsaw. It is improper, however, to blame a clarinet or the trombone as a terrible instrument of tyranny. Yet the Salvation Army bands and wheeds away opposite our windows every Sunday morning, and

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE SONG.

Like the music of a star—
Low shall I and sad be,
As the wind soke o'er the deep,
Pale-breathing moonlight, weep
The woe of the Utahs.

Within me sob—and low,
As—telling long ago
Its sorrows—sad shall
The wind of the Utahs.

I hear it as I was heard,
In the piping of a bird;
As moaned the ex-equal heart,
With gallopine and grief,
I hear the Utahs.

And darkly telling still—
Our good and ill,
Of many week'd by and
With glory week'd and dead,
I hear the Utahs.

From hearts forever hush'd,
By strength and triumph crush'd—
Spirits sensible and
Wing'd from pure and down,
To sing the Utahs.

And now I hearth again,
The woe of the Utahs.

In a weary there's hale,
And month'ly a pulse beat,
Blazed as a tuneful chain,
And lead in epsilon grand,
I hear the Utahs.

In thunder in the sky,
That wake and speak and die,
And I wake again—and still
Cloud-enchaled like a child,
I hear the Utahs.

In blame and in fange,
Of a weary, weary pang,
In sorrow and in joy,
In the maiden and the boy,
I hear the Utahs.

In the present and the past,
In have hearts down-cast,
In the future—and I pray,
In the solid with mother's tongue,
I hear the Utahs.

In the household and the tomb,
In mansions and in gloom,
In poverty and pall,
And the Utahs myself,
I hear the Utahs.

With streaming eyes and hair—
The bondage of'r yrsbrow,
For all my blood and me
Shun eternally—
The woe of the Utahs.

P. S. DORSEY.

"Death sting of the accident tries.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

GOOD FRIDAY.

To-day the Saviour died—suffered the Crucifixion, Yet could His falling eyes see the repentant tear, Saying: "In Paradise thou shalt with Me appear."

"Forgiveness" He prayed; such blessed words He said, "They know not what they do." This is the foes Of Christ.

This for His enemies, asked with His latest breath

Yet do His children now turn from His face and hear,

Not to lonely one down to strange gods beside,

And in their lust and pride, still is He crucified.

How long will they profane His pure and sacred

Pleading His holy sign, His emblems so divine,

In midst of mockery, on such sacred days as this?

"I thirst!"—to each poor heart, stretch, by the pierced dart,

Thus the narrow way—ready to faint and fall,

To the pointed tips that cry, earth given with his.

Jesus, "the Prince of Peace," when shall the stirring cease?

Tempt the waves of death; can we the current stem?

Oh, let us hasten to day! hand in the dust and pray,

Christ, His bleeding feet; nothing our souls' rivalled.

In deep repentance—Christ, the dying Jesus

Pardon such life wind Thy outspread arms have hoped,

Each doubt not forgive into Thy hands receive At death our souvenirs rests, that they may live.

Today the Saviour died—suffered the Crucified, Yet His, the suppliant, heard, and His could pity.

Saying: "In Paradise, to-day, then shalt be with Me."

ANNA MONNINGER BERG.

Friday, April 8, 1887.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

CAPTIVE.

A Tale of the Cross and Crescent.

The life course glide around,
The sweet but dalliled o'er the ground—
Ever changeable, nothing pure,
Tempts the to touch the shore,
They hope'd and laughed on other side,
And smoked me with a blast of sad.
A resolution of the power to serve,
Yet lent the strength to catch the wave
To bear me safely from the stormed—
(Alas! there ever no helpine hand!)
Wer hath not, e'er the' covered at last,
Been in some fatal moment past,
Left with no light to guide the way,
A midnight hope, 'twixt night and day—
A feeble star in shooting sky,
An moonlight glow or shower on high
Before a storm, whose darkening cloud
Impends, threatens—"You look as though
Not valued its efforts to be free,
And not be brightness on the other sea.
Be best or other, the sleep deep,
Propitious have alone on it at
Cloud-bound star to captive bent.

TRUMAN.

A Gleam

In a night, but solid reality will be known by those who visit Bauman & Co., Portland, Mich., Saturday, Sunday, Jan. 1887, when they will offer and lot Jewelry, wholesale only, at a profit of from 5% to 25% and upwards. Only. Some have spent over $50 in a day. Capital not needed. Habit & Co will start you. All is new. Delay not. Pay absolutely nothing from start. Wealth awaits every worker. Both sexes. All ages.

A perfect cure for Piles, Fistula, Fissure, Ulcers, Wounds, Sores, Bruises, Cuts, Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Sore Eyes, Sore Throat, Sore Breasts, Sore Nipples, Sore Feet, Sore Legs, Old Sores, Chronic Sores, Sore Heads, Sore Backs, Sore Joints, Sore Muscles, Sore Chests, Sore Stomach, Sore Bowels, Sore Kidneys, Sore Bladder, Sore Rectum, Sore Nostrils, Sore Ears, Sore Mouth

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

CALIFORNIA.

Ours is a wonderous land so strongly bleat
With ancient relics and historic name,
With dreamy grandeur of the Orient—
Young in its beauty, elder in its fame.

Southward the realm of Montezuma lies,
But stripped of former Aztec pomp and show;
Northward Siberia's crushing yoke rises,
Crowned with eternal coronals of snow.

Whilst at our feet is unimpeded give
The broad Pacific shores our sandy strand,
Bearing the freightful dower of the sea
To deck the glory of our sea-set land.

How deeply bright Eureka's golden day,
When gleam yonder temple the truth Divine,
Ruling the Redman with a peaceful sway,
And subduing his heart within some forest shrine.

Leading his steps on paths they humbly tred,
Turning the land to plenty and increase,
While o'er it all a pleasant and loving God
Smiled—and His smile was Joy and Peace.

That youngest-born is gone—and now no more
The Indian' rude wisdom fill the air,
But in their place another race adore
The beneficent Giver of a clime so fair.

It's calm clear lake reflecting Heaven's light,
Its pebbles sands richer than Janus's Pactolus,
Its stately mountains distant to the sight,
Its lowlier passes of pure emerald.

This was the prized Utopia—so famed,
And here the pledging Pilgrim's march was lost;
"Eureka!" "I have found it," he exclaimed,
Before his eyes the Land of Promise shone.

C. A. D.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MONTH OF MAY.

Year after year, great May,
The rose their homes bring;
O'er the earth—mantle of the glowing—
The language that speaketh—Spring.

Year after year, dear Mother,
Bears thee the month of love,
In bonnet of perfume and sweetness,
In rosary of Vesper hours.

The blossoms, like interpreting words,
Unfolding truth and love,
Not with the Rose of burning faith,
And white—as is this purity
Upon its wings in the zenithet
Be the leaves in the hallowed air,
Distinct their fragrant offering
As tender and silent prayer.

But the roses have thorns—sweet Mother,
Smite them on our nurture, lest
For the sake of the sweet which pierced the heart,
Lesser than angelish know.

THESIS.

San Francisco, May 24, 1887.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

As recited by Baron F. Ward at the Bachelor's Reunion, Metropolitan Hall.

The eye has lacked its lustre and the colors left the cheek,
The hair, thick blackly clustered now is neither thick nor black;
The minutes have grown rigid and the steps are short and slow,
I feel which I would come to this some forty years ago.

I'm immeasurably advanced himself, yet I do not feel that I am the same boy of forty years ago.

Then I was the life of the party, and the merry laugh, Rang out your's and mine, and echoed to Chione's cave,
Where unknown parcelid did sunshine rule as pure as virgin snows,
Would I be in purpose and worldly those same forty years ago.

What joy to join the dancers or to pass the cup and chaff,
And to mingle with the athletics on the dainty leveled green,
Then to listen to the skylark and hear his music flow,
And if to show as strain there some forty years ago.

Now at Thrush nor Blackbird nor smoking of the dell,
Nor anchorel's warbling gentle one some's'ar the summer dale,
Is number equal one wild mint nor thorn in full blow
More charmed with me their fragrance than fell forty years ago.

Its note to Temple cattle or to view the pile,
Its cave my Bonds I'll see at the holy Bon-
Its nook I'll climb the mountain or view the vale below,
Or mingle with my sweet hearts of some forty years ago.

Its now we hear O'Connell, O'Bradley or the Dean,
Nor a Scott from Charley Fermoss, the last is not the best
Its note the village piper beside down the sun-shine day,
Its blow his blasts the very last, full forty years ago.

Those golden days of sunlight have taken wing
Then I thought it was but morning, alas, it's after noon,
The thoughts recall both joy and grief, and the tears and heart-throb flow,
For those that wept or laughed with me some forty years ago.

No sense of action rhyming nor power of life-like lays,
Nor sensitously replying can recall those hoyous days;
But in the faith that I was born I'll abide the fate of fate,
And show more lasting happiness than forty years ago.

"The Pen."

IMPRESSIONS ON VISITING HILLSBORO.

Where, under Heaven's high vaulted dome,
Will peer or pensiest find a home,
Where nature with or profusion hand,
Has strewn her treasures o'er the land,
Art, nature's handmaid has combined
To cater to the human mind.

Rain, mighty monument of art,
Of ages past the counterpart,
Towering o'er the lake by night,
Mirror'd by the moon's away light
The season's rear, the winter's blast,
Have not contained then to the past,
But in colossal might yet stand,
A silent history of the land.

To reach thy summit, Asheville,
Let rhyme in mundane sense believe;
As beneath thy lush untrodden air,
Lie thy graveyard, say "be sure,"
Carry not in the mind where tried
Can doubt a God so wise, so kind,
Who gave us life and light to see
In one swift glance such mystery.

Yore, thy sunshine rude, crude sublime,
In sublimate vying with first time,
Rear present, rear pastoral,
As if greater love commanded,
Till in earth's great home choosing,
Pardoned absent, life including.

Mashoney, thy hallowed rule so quaint,
Thy oasis place for one who faint,
When I am called on to say
From this footing home I stay,
I hope would in thy home lay
My home till the Eternal Day,
Sustained by thy raine gay.

W. H. G. N.

For sarcastic, Impersonated Based and General Debility.

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, Recommended by the whole tribe of Medicine Men. Based the Emulsion "I gave some to my Grandfather, and the effect was marvellous"—G. F. Gray, M.D., White Hall, Ind.

Literary Miscellany.

A Charming Legend.

The Story of the Giant Who Staggered Under a Child's Weight.

The popular legend of St. Christopher has been told in prose by the poet Longfellow, in "Kavanagh," the sweetest and pleasantest of all his works—and also in verse by Lowell. But it has been told better and more fully by Miss Rosa Mulholland. Those who possess that daintiest of fairy tales "Puck and Blossom," which is now out of print, will find the story of St. Christopher told about the hundredth page, by the "Boy who lived on the Dom." But the same pen has written out the legend somewhat earlier in a slightly different form, which in certain parts is best suited to our purpose. We shall therefore skip sometimes from one version to the other, but the narrator shall still be the author of "Marcella Grace."

I will tell you the story of the mighty St. Christopher, who is too little known in our country. The name Christopher is derived from two classical words which means a bearer, or carrier, of Christ. When travelling in foreign lands, many of us are greatly surprised to see a giant with a benevolent face and a little child perched on his shoulder, looking down on us from pillars and nooks of the great cathedrals. Sometimes he is made of stone, standing under the light of some jewelled window; a huge form, rough and bearded, leaning on a club, with face upturned to the grace of the infant, who peers into his face with a tender musical smile. He is also to be found in rare old pictures, struggling through heavy waters in the dim twilight, only lighted on his way by the radiance of the little face above his shoulder. I have met him where rude but loving hands had made a coarse image of him on the corner of a street or over some humble doorway.

On a cornerstone of the quaint old German town of Trier. I found him striding along through grass-green waves, and dressed out in all the colors of the rainbow. Again by stood the Rhenish gates, black and grim with age, and streaked with tawny stains like rust, but the golden sunlight clothed him with warm blood against their sides. The hot sun shone on the frowning arches of the gates, and on the grotesque image of St. Christopher; on the monument of the past, which had remained through so many ages, and the picture sprang from a legend which had remained almost as long in the people's heart. At such a time I should have been sorry not to know the story of the giant, the good and mighty Christopher, who carried the Lord of the world upon his shoulders.

He lived in very old times, belonged to the land of Canaan, and his name was Offero. People feared and wondered at him because he was such a giant, and he grew so proud of his strength that he would serve no master but the greatest king that lived. And he set out to seek for the king's king of the greatest king.

After travelling a long, long way, he arrived at last at the gates of a palace, which he was told belonged to the greatest king on earth; and he knocked upon the gate with a great, loud knock, which aroused the king and his friends, who were at supper.

The servants were greatly astonished when they opened the gates and saw the visitor.

"Tall your master," said Christopher, "that Offero, the giant, has come to serve him."

The king was delighted to hear this, and invited his retainer to sit beside him. In the course of the conversation somebody came to mention the name of Satan, which

THE MONITOR.

the voice of a little child crying out to him in the storm

"Offero! Offero! Come and carry me across!"

He got up and went out but could see nothing. He had hardly laid down again when he heard the same little infantile voice crying out to him again. Once more he went out and searched, and made sure that he must have been dreaming, when, louder and clearer than ever the voice wailed forth again:

"Offero! Offero! Come forth and carry me across the flood this night!"

And going out a third time, there he found a very tiny, quaint looking child crying aloud upon the rock above the tide.

Offero was greatly surprised, as you may imagine, to see such a young child out alone in such a place on such a night; but he said nothing, only lifted little Christopher upon his shoulders and waded out into the stream as he was bidden. But he soon found he had taken way across the stream than his felt that he was carrying the most terrible load that ever pressed upon his shoulders. He staggered under it, and almost lost his senses, and it was only by the greatest effort that he was able to keep his feet and arrive safely on the opposite bank with his burden. Then he placed the strange infant on his feet on the bank and looked upon him with amazement.

"Who art thou, O child! that has been able to place me in such peril! Had I carried the whole world, the burden had not been heavier."

The child replied, "Wonder not, O Christopher, for thou hast borne not the world only, but Him who made the world, upon thy shoulders. Thou hast bravely served to serve Me, and I have sought thee here that thou mayest do yet greater things for Me. Plant thy staff in the earth, and truly, plant thy staff in the earth, and it shall put forth blossoms and fruit in thy sight."

Christopher did as was desired, and immediately leaves covered the dry staff, flowers sprang among the leaves, and clusters of dates hung ripely down from its branches. When Christopher could remove his eyes from the wonderful sight, he saw that the Child had vanished.

Then the strong man knew that the Lord had come out of heaven to call him into His service, addressing him not as Offero, but as Christopher, "bearer of Christ." He fell down on his face and worshipped the Saviour of the world.

After this he left his hut beside the ferry, and he went out into the world to teach and preach the Saviour crucified. He made converts everywhere and stood by many martyrs, comforting and strengthening them in their last struggle for God. He spent many years in bringing souls to the kingdom of Christ and spreading the love of the Saviour of men; and in the end he had the glory of dying for God, and went to heaven to receive his reward.

This is the legend of St. Christopher, and in countries where it is known, people call upon him to carry them through the waters of their affliction. They believe that the very sight of his image gives them strength and as they listen to hear it in their churches, or meet it over their doors, and cut in their streets, let us, too, call upon him for help, and let us also try to assume in raising whatever little faculty we may be possessed of for the greater glory of God!

Gen. Connor and the Mormons.

Gen. Patrick Edward Conner, who is well known in San Francisco, says the Call, has returned from his mine in the Tintic district in Utah. He is an Irishman, and has had an adventurous career. In 1862, when only 19 years of age, he enlisted in the army and took part in the Florida war. After that he removed to Texas, and when the rebellion broke out he enlisted in the Union army. He was in the battle of Bull Run, and was chosen colonel of the regiment upon its organization. The outbreak of the Civil War found him in California, and he was among the first to offer his services to the national government, and was appointed colonel of the Third California infantry. In 1862 the Mormons (claiming themselves on the intermediate struggle, grew bold, and Col. Connor was ordered to take a regiment to Salt Lake, which he did, encamping there where they could command the city. Brigham Young objected to the presence of the "boys in blue," and sent an envoy to Col. Connor, asking him to remove his camp outside of the city limits. The reply was characteristic of the man: "Tell Brigham Young," said the commander of the Third California Infantry, "that I have marched my men over eight hundred miles, and they are too tired to think a new camp unless it is completely; but if I have to change my camp, my west headquarters will be in Brigham Young's house." The Mormon leaders made no further objection to the presence of the United States volunteers.

Bishop Gilmour Explains.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 23.—Bishop Gilmour was seen this afternoon by the Herald correspondent in reference to the statement of Dr. McGlynn to Pulsburg last night that "a certain old gentleman in Rome had told him that he was mistaken, and he would be excommunicated." Bishop Gilmour explained that he meant by saying "a certain old gentleman in Rome and whom I allude, was not my own Archbishop, Cardinal McCabey, who never discussed me, but Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, who is so far in sympathy with the people that after a tour in Great Britian and Ireland, he returned to the extraordinary statement that he had not found anybody—bishop, priest or layman—who was able to tell him what was the matter with Ireland anyhow

Bishop Gilmour furnished the following statement to the Herald:

I never uttered those or any words of similar import.

Second—I denounced Dr. McGlynn at Home for having come to Cleveland in 1892, in defiance of authority, and lecturing before a number of excommunicated women.

Third—I never denounced Dr. McGlynn for any one due because of their views upon the Land League question, for the simplest of all reasons, that I believe and maintain publicly that I have a right to do so.

Bishop Gilmour, who is a Scotchman, has always of hatred toward Ireland, and of being opposed to Irish liberty. The Bishop's private and public utterances since the time have displayed these statements, and he has at all times been an earnest champion of oppressed Ireland, and but a few weeks ago delivered a powerful address at an anti-coercion meeting held in this city.

Bishop Gilmour says he did not formally denounce Dr. McGlynn at Home, but that he did complain of his conduct, and then the Doctors own Archbishop took up the matter and he (Bishop Gilmour) had subsequent himself in the affair until election day, and was some years before Dr. McGlynn expressed Henry Georgeism cause and the complaint would have had no connection with the recent acts.

—The detention in the convention of the Catholic Young Men's National Union held in New York represented seventy four societies in the principal towns north of Hudson and east of Chicago, and there aggregate membership and Mass Daily Communion, and the Catholic Young Men's Institute and Catholic Ladies' Total Abstinence Society numbers in the cities of Paris, Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Nantes, Lille, Angers, Rouen, Toulouse, Montpellier, Nancy, Dijon, Reims, Saint Etienne, Tours, Caen, Le Havre, Versailles, Orleans, Amiens, Clermont, Besançon, Bourges, Limoges, Nancy, Angers, Caen, Le Mans, Nantes, Rouen

THE MONITOR.

TRIBUNE FREE OF PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The priests of the dioceses of Fores preached Bishop Spalding with a purse containing $5,100 during the celebration of his tenth anniversary late a few weeks ago.

—The death is announced of the distinguished Catholic journalist, Don Giacomo Margotti, editor of the Unità Cattolica. The paper will continue to be conducted on the same lines by his brother, Commendatore Stefano Margotti.

—The Sacred Congregation of Rites has ratified the office and Mass proper with its section in the Martyrology of the Blessed John of Rochester (Cardinal Fisher), the Blessed Thomas More, and the other English martyrs recently beatified.

—The Christian Brothers, who preside over the Catholic schools of Ireland, teach their pupils to say the Hail Mary whenever the clock strikes. The pious observance is generally carried out through life by those who have been under care of the Brothers.

—Mayor Roche, the newly-elected municipal representative of Chicago did a graceful act when he decided that Mr. Onahan should continue in office as City Collector. He is one of the very best representatives of an Irish-American Catholic gentleman in the United States.

—We cannot imagine a more thick-headed, tainless and dogged exception to Gladstone's Home Rule policy than that made by Chamberlain, whom a recent dispatch credits with saying: "The success of Gladstone's policy would destroy the country and ruin the working classes."

—The St. Louis Western Watchman, edited by Father Phelan, gives this sensible advice to all men who employ trusty clerks and agents; "Don't employ a Catholic who does not go to Confession. He is either immoral, and you have to take care of your wives and daughters; or he is dishonest, and you had better look after your cash balance. Every priest will vouch for what he says."

—News has reached Rome that in Spain, prominent Catholics under direction of the Bishops, are actively engaged in organizing a great pilgrimage which will be one of the first to arrive in Rome for the Sacerdotal Jubilee of Leo XIII. On account of the difficulty of communication between Spain, the vicinity of the Pyrenees and the Alps during the winter, the Spanish pilgrimage will arrive in Rome next September, leaving the first offerings of the Catholic world to the Pope on his jubilee.

—Cardinal Manning is described by a recent visitor as "wardly impressive at sight." Weighing but about seven stones, sitting by a blazing fire in his study, he Eminence will discuss any subject from the Decrees of the Council of Trent to the cultivation of the soil. Now and then he will converse upon. He is a textbook—has been one for years—at all hour; and ask just as much as will keep the machinery of the body properly lubricated and no more.

—Some recent statistics compiled from authentic sources prove that there are at present in England no less than 67,719 people who are classified as belonging to the criminal classes in Great Britain. Of this number 20,565 belong to the class designated as "known thieves, receivers and suspected large." Then there were 26,154 persons in convict and local prisons. From these figures it would seem that some more missionary labor is required in order to Christianize the horde of dangerous people among a nation that needs "missionaries" to all parts of the globe.

—It is a cheering bit of intelligence for all good Catholics to learn that our Holy Church is prospering in Palestine, the primitive habitation of the Faith. Dom Hanel Amaun, Vicar-General of the Greek Patriarch, writes from Jerusalem to the editor of the Missions Catholiques to announce the progress of the Church in the Holy Land. The maintenance of the Greek rite prescribed by Leo XIII. contributes much to this rapprochement. Two new Greek Catholic missions are about to be opened at Bethlehem and Beit-Jalla. In the latter place 300 persons have demanded reception into the Church. The Latin parish church has been placed provisionally at their disposal.

France Foiled.

The correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says: "The Chinese have, I am informed, acted with great promptitude the question as to a Papal representative at Pekin. It will be remembered that on account of the threats of the French Government, the Pope was compelled to withdraw the nomination of Mgr. Agliardi as his legate at Pekin. The Government of Pekin has just conferred upon Bishop Taglibue, of Pekin, the rank of mandarin, donated by a red button, which will enable him to confer with other mandarins over through he may have no other official rank whatever. By that means the Pope is provided with a legate on the spot, through whom he can communicate his views to the Chinese Government, and carry on negotiations if necessary. The action, in fact, is as a commission from the Pope would have done. The bearer has the official right of communicating with the authorities. The ostensible ground for this device is that the Bishop has rendered services in connection with the transfer of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Pekin which the Chinese Government desires to recognize. Diplomatic relations between Pekin and the Vatican have thus actually, though nominally been established just at the moment when the French were congratulating themselves on having effectually prevented them."

The Church in the Sandwich Islands.

Catholic Missionaries first visited the Sandwich Islands in 1827, landing in Honolulu from a French vessel. But eight years prior to that period, King Kamehameha II., his brother Boki, and his Prime Minister all received the Sacrament of Baptism at their own abdication, on board the French corvette Uranie, according to the rites of the Catholic Church. So the first Christian sovereign of the Sandwich Islands was a Catholic.

In the fall of the year 1853 the King, his consort and suite, embarked on board the British whaleship Lady, Captain Starbuck, with the intention of visiting England, where they landed in 1824, but a fatal disease which baffled the skill of the most eminent physicians carried off both Kamehameha and his consort.

Among the suite of the King was his Prime Minister Boki, who faithfully lived up to his religion and who—while in England—had communicated with some French Bishops, requesting them to send out Catholic missionaries to Christianize the native, promising such as visited the Islands a cordial reception and ample protection.

In accordance with this request, Rev. John Alexius Augustine Bachelot sailed from Bordeaux on the 17th of November, 1826, in the French ship Comet, in company with two other Catholic priests, Rev. Father Arnaud, of France, Rev. Father Short, of England and four laymen. The Comet arrived at Honolulu, after an eight months passage, July 7th, 1827.

Immediately on landing, the three missionaries had a long interview with Governor Boki, who received them with every manifestation of delight, and had a house prepared for their permanent residence.

On the 14th of July, 1827, the pioneer missionaries of God's Church had the happiness of offering up the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for the first time upon the Pagan soil of Polynesia, the service being attended by a vast throng of natives, among whom were many chiefs. This fact was signifying to the preachers of politics and Protestantism combined, so they set to work to cause the expulsion of the Catholic missionaries in order that to them alone might be left the field which they proposed to plant with the tares of fanatical hatred, prejudice and persecution.

By a species of sectarian chicanery which has already been related in these columns, the Calvinistic conquerors succeeded in expelling the Catholic priests from the Islands, but though they sent adrift the agents of God's truth, they have never been able to root out of the soil of the Sandwich Islands the seeds of God's truth so contained in the divinely-created Faith of the Catholic Church.

During the long years through which the Puritanical spirit of persecution was waged against Catholic faith, the conversion of the native population was necessarily suspended, as it was death by torture to every native who dared to differ in religious views with the fanatically sectarian ordinances which were poisoning the souls of the Polynesians. Persecution, however, has always been prolific of good to the Church, and we have learn that from the year 1827 to 1832, the Catholics among the Kanakas numbered over 5,000 souls, and in the year 1837 there were in the hearts of the Catholic native that they taught their children secretly to bless themselves and to pray, so that the living waters thus secretly transmitted from generation to generation—even whilst the sectarian soldiers of Satan were watching from the ramparts of religious error for any sign of "Popery" among the Polynesians.

In 1836, the brig Gazelle arrived at Honolulu from Valparaiso, having on board Rev. Robert Walsh, a Catholic priest; and no sooner was this fact learned by the sectarian firebrands who formed Luther's league on shore, than they determined to protect which any "Popish priest" from setting foot on the Sandwich Islands. Fortunately, however, Father Walsh was protected by the British Consul, and his sent on shore, only to suffer untold annoyance through the calumnies of the Calvinistic preachers of persecution for conscience sake. Father Walsh, therefore was permitted to remain in Honolulu, provided he did not teach his religion. Such is a sample of sectarian "liberty" understood by the Puritanical Governors who first scowed a crop of "cockle" in the Sandwich Islands.

Notwithstanding the unjust and illiberal conditions which the Protestant preachers imposed upon Father Walsh, he must have accomplished some glory for God's cause during his stay at Honolulu, as we are reliably informed that in the year 1839 the number of Catholics had increased to 222, and, in 1840, the faithful Catholic band had grown to 1,097 souls.

Finding the number of Catholics increasing—despite their despicable designs—the Protestant preachers abandoned their open hostility and persecution of priests in 1840, directing their attention more particularly to calumniating the Church of God in every sermon they preached to the natives. In the latter year, therefore, the children of the Church had grown so numerous as to suggest to the Catholic missionaries the propriety of erecting a permanent edifice for Almighty God's perpetual adoration. With this grand object in view, the first Catholic dinal in Polynesia was commenced, and the faith began to spread with miraculous rapidity among the native population.

Intolerance still continued to be poured forth from Protestant pulpits and from lecture platforms, but, as Catholics well understand, "when God is with us we care not who is against us." The Church continued to grow in an atmosphere of continually and increasing persecution, and when at last an commission from the Pope would have done. The bearer has the official right of communicating with the authorities. The ostensible ground for this device is that the Bishop has rendered services in connection with the transfer of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Pekin which the Chinese Government desires to recognize. Diplomatic relations between Pekin and the Vatican have thus actually, though nominally been established just at the moment when the French were congratulating themselves on having effectually prevented them."

The Erections at Bodyke.

It is actually pitiful to read of the inhuman cruelty of British landlords to their impoverished Irish tenantry. Our pen trembles, our eyes moisten, our lips relax, and the flush of indignant anger suffuses our cheeks as we endeavor to express our utter condemnation of the relentless tyranny of a foreign and ruinous horde of landlords who unconscionably practice their Holy accursed brutality in the light of our 19th century, and with the civilized nations of the whole world as witnesses of their wretched crimes which cry to Heaven for vengeance. The transactions at the Bodyke Island eviction will remain on the record as a damaging evidence of English morals in Ireland. Amidst all the exciting and sorrowful scenes that were enacted at Bodyke, we manage to find some gratification in knowing that the brave tenantry, led by the patriot Dwyer, resisted determinedly and with more than partial success the unjust invasion of their rights by beating back the bailiffs of British bailiffs with boiling water, and by knocking some into the sentence of the red coat soldiery with bats and stones. We are also proud and gratified to learn that the Sergeant Arms was on hand to assuage in some degree the sorrows of his persecuted flock, and stood side by side with hospitals and cater his solemn protest against the heartless cruelty and open outrage perpetrated under the mask of legal sanction by the native and imported ruffian retainers of Irish landlords. The spirit of the Irish people cannot be broken by starvation, persecution or eviction. It will live and widen and grow stronger as England's Tory tyranny grows apparently more relentless and blood-thirsty. And when England finally exhausts her resources and recalls such proof from the combat with a great principle; the will, the genius, the valor and the manhood of Erin will unite in sweeping the peaceful dawn of Freedom and Home Rule. God grant that the time for such a glorious consummation is not far off.

The Pope and the Powers.

A cablegram from Rome, under date of the 25th ult., says that the Pope, in an address delivered yesterday, referred to the religious peace with Prussia, which the Pope said he had made every effort to attain. Continuing the Pope said: "Thanks to the equitable and pacific sentiments of Emperor William and his counselors, the Prussian Government removed the more serious inconveniences and then accepted the various practical conditions of peace by which some of the former laws against the Church have been repealed and others mitigated. Something remains to be done, but we must rejoice at what we have obtained, and above all in regard to the free action of the Pope in the government of the Church in Prussia. God grant that Italy, which is peculiarly the seat of the Papacy, share the spirit of peace with which we are animated towards all nations. We earnestly desire that Italy may not add to her unhappy differences with the Papacy, whose dignity is violated chiefly by the conspiracy of sects. The Italian people and Government would be object to by no power in the enjoyment of full and real liberty, while, far from injuring Italy, it would be a

O'Brien and the Canadian Press.

It is a mistaken idea for persons to have that because a few bigoted Orange papers have shown their inherent and unmeasurable hatred of Catholicity by coining flagrant falsehoods about the questionable utility of Catholic schools, the representative, respectable press of Canada is with them. The honest, fair-minded, lying section who draw a small money from a parcel of native and imported bigots by catering to their Irish Catholic hatred, represent a very little of it. Here are a few samples of the manner in which the press of Canada speaks of Mr. O'Brien and his mission to Canada on the disease. The Montreal True Witness says:

"As the chairman of less speech, Mr. O'Brien is perfectly sympathy with the press toward Canadians. The man who advocated violent opposition have determined the Irishmen of their cause, for some time past, and have themselves made and incapable of meeting an opponent's argument either by fair blows, or, seek to drive a lie by threats of violence.

La Justice, a French paper of Toronto, has this to say:

"If Mr. William O'Brien committed an error in coming to Canada to fulfill his known calling, the Dominion of Canada has committed a much greater one in disturbing his meeting at Toronto.

"Since the Governor-General has his duty and does it in Canada, we do not need an executive or equivalent of the friends of ex-Premier Gladstone, who, if not need of Canada, have at least enough of the Irish Land Question to treat the Immortal O'Brien in Toronto, is not surprised that he is there looked upon as a tyrant and as ordering bullies.

"This morning the loyal French population of our province congratulate the City of Toronto Orangemen with the spontaneous cry of Long live O'Brien! Long live the Irish Nation!"

"Mr. O'Brien came to Quebec to-day fifteen thousand people would meet him and salute and applaud him.

"Long with the Orangemen, and the enemies of Ireland, and of the Catholics, the enemies of liberty of conscience!"

Another French journal, Le Progrès du Lac speaks thus:

"O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, is now visiting Canada. He is to address the Montreal Irish Catholics, and the Quebec Irish Catholics, and perhaps the former towards the former towards the former towards

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—It is ten years since James Lick, the millionaire of this city, died, leaving the bulk of his large fortune for charitable and scientific purposes, yet the most practical of his bequests—the training school in the trades for young lads—has never been begun. In their first ten years of management the Lick trustees spent $150,000 for legal fees.

—Readers of the MONITOR will be no doubt much gratified to learn that a New York publisher is about to issue a Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum. We hope, however, that none of our readers will try to pronounce this word at first sight, as it may result in serious dislocation of the vocal organs!

—Mr. Parnell's habit of extreme caution—we mean all the more forcible the words of encouragement which he uttered at the National Liberal Club's banquet last month. He went so far as to predict that before many months the Liberal policy of Gladstone would prevail in Parliament, and that Gladstone would be recognized as the only great man in British politics. That is a prediction of victory as far earlier date than Mr. Parnell has heretofore made.

—A Rome correspondent of the MONITOR sends us the welcome intelligence that Rev. Gregory Antonucci, who for several years had charge of the Italian church in this city, has been nominated Vicar-Apostolic of the Diocese of Chen-Si, in China. Bishop Antonucci will be consecrated in Rome at the hands of the Cardinal Prefect of the Propaganda.

—Readers of the Washington City Church News must have been astonished to find a poem in its pages recently under the title of "The Alameda," which must have sounded strangely to ears unaccustomed to such a Spanish phrase. The poem in question was written for the MONITOR by Miss Coolidge, and stolen from us without credit. This style of appropriating poetry is neither churchly nor Catholic.

—A meeting of the parish priests of the diocese of Raphoe was held at Letterkenny recently in order to nominate a successor to the Most Rev. Dr. Logue, recently elevated to the Primacy of Armagh. The Most Rev. Dr. Logue presided. The result of the voting was Very Rev. Dr. O'Donnell, Rector Dunboyne Establishment, Dignissimus, 14; Very Rev. Hugh McFadden, P. P., V. G., Donegal, Dignior, 4; Rev. Charles McGlynn, P. P., Dungloe, Dignus, 2.

—We are in receipt of last week's issue of the American, a kind of a tail to Pixley's Knowsothing "American" party l.t.a. A double-page engraving in the current issue represents the "assassination of the relations of Pixley, Horack, Wigginton and other sycophants in this spoils-seeking society, just as they landed on American soil a few days ago. They are, indeed, a sorry looking lot, and the American has hurt its party's prospects by printing such a procession of Flikermaniacs in its pages!

—We publish on an inside page this week, a very interesting account of the Centenarity of the Church of St. Thomas, in which every Catholic who desires to preserve the grace of virtue should join. Any Dominican Father in this city, Benicia, Vallejo or Sacramento will receive numbers or impart any information desired. The sins from which people are saved by means of this Confraternity are those which during the faith account in the souls of otherwise pure and good Catholics.

—The Dublin Freeman's Journal, in announcing the return of Peter Gilpen, O.S.A. of St. Patrick's Church, Rome, says: "The corner-stone will be laid on December 23, the feast of the Pope's Jubilee, when the Most Rev. Dr. Croke, Archbishop of Cashel and the Most Rev. Dr P. J. Ryan, of Philadelphia, the most eloquent Prelate and the most renowned Irishman in the United States, will preach." One feels like uttering the prayer of the Roman Halleluiah, in the "Lays of Ancient Rome": "Heaven send Rome such a day, and send us there to see!"

—When "the hat" was passed around among the ladies of the British possessions in Bermuda, in order to receive their rupees as a jubilee offering to England's Royal Majesty recently, the Bermuda ladies were naturally disgusted at the idea of such a grand lady begging coin from them as her subjects. "Why should their sovereign want money," they inquired, "especially so soon after the annexation of Burmah?" "Has she no rice?" and "can it be that she has no tobacco?" were frequent queries. For, as all Bermuda ladies smoke several cheroots daily, they because deeply sympathetic at the idea their Queen should be without the solace of tobacco could her State cares, but they never once imagined that no woman in England loves the British "average" better than Victoria loves the so-called coin of her realm.

—The penny-whistle party organs of the anti-called "American" political anti-Catholic organization, are endeavoring to convince their dupes that their platform is not proscriptive against Catholics. That will do to tell to "the marines," but when such a trio of true blue bigots as Pixley, Wigginton and Horack stand sponsors for such a combination, the word "anti-Catholic" is branded on the party with the red-hot branding iron of the "Boss" of the bottom-less pit! We hope no Catholic citizen will become a "fly" in the Know-nothing web constructed by the three American "spiders" who were just such wolves every time there is a presidential election coming, so as to put money in their own purses through the foolishness of men who are led to follow them in their un-American aristocracy against Catholics and adopted Catholic citizens—"the latchet of whose shoes" these political lepers are unworthy to unloose.

Black Stains on Our National Character.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 29th, 1887.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir: I have read with pleasure and, I think, with profit, the articles in your paper on the French Revolution, and I take the liberty to address these few lines to you, not to criticise the articles, but merely to make a few remarks regarding the thoughts which presented themselves to my mind while reading the valuable history of the French revolution.

I have often asked myself: Are we not in America, today in a state of affairs very similar to the one in which the French people were in before the French revolution? Are we not, at the same time, more difficult for a large majority of the working people to make a living for themselves or to raise a family? Is we not in spite of the approach of a revolution, as terrible and bloody perhaps as the one which came across the ocean, or graphically? Do not our poor get poorer and our rich get richer every day? Is not disconsolateness and a spirit of rebellion growing right along in intensity and magnitude? Your esteemed writer says at the conclusion "that all the then existing abuses and wrongs could have been better righted and with more lasting effect by a peaceful and legal reformation than by the terrible means." Why was it not done? I think for the same reason it is and does today. You are certainly aware that the people are losing their liberty taken from them step by step, that they are getting more and more enslaved, that they have to work harder and longer and earn less and less every year.

By what means are these wrongs to righted? Why, you will probably say, "have we not the ballot?" But, in the case of much treasured—as we were brought to light lately in the Sullivan Pelton contesting case, where it was shown that the "purchasing of the ballot" and also the "selling of the ballot" had taken place—we have a ballot or what our much prized ballot is the exponent of the will of the people, but it is not a fact that the seats in our legislative halls are held to the highest bidder? Do our "representatives" not show that we are made in the idea of corporations as we are in the image of God? Were before the fall of their mighty angelic, or rather Divine, power, which consisted in, if not one of military always ready to take the side of the weaker against the strong, in the spirit of the "Dollar" the god of the American people? And is not that power which could do so much towards remedying these evils—the working man's ballot—lost to them through the "purchasing" and the "selling" of it? Is it not lost because too lazy to maintain those things in its colonies and to direct its influence for the betterment of these affairs? And, if the poorer classes, the working people, contain the majority of voters, being the fullest, independent of the old parties which have bondslaved them so often, is it not true that the spirit of "socialism," "dynamiters," "communists," "anarchists," prevailing among the whole poor, secular and religious? Is not almost the whole poor in the service of capital, of the god Mammon, and against the honest poor? Is not the spirit of the poor, the spirit of those who the fathers of the Republic gave them the ballot—the use of which alone gave them the right—revolutionary?

But why are all these forces combined against the working people? Is it not because ignorance and its offsprings and worshipers are today just as blind as they were before the French revolution? And is it not the duty of the press—the world's tribune of the people, and especially of the religious press—to sound a note of warning to the rich and the powerful who brought under lost the rights of the poor, of the creature of God, made in His image?

The press is the tribune which allows every my mind and probably cross the minds of thousands of people, and which were carried again while reading your "French revolution." Hoping to have the pleasure to write you soon,

I remain, yours respectfully,

OTTO SEIS.

We are glad this correspondent put his thoughts on paper and sent them to the MONITOR, as it affords us an opportunity of bringing forward some interesting facts concerning the attitude always maintained by the Catholic Church towards the laboring classes, which despite its best efforts, at this time when certain demagogues are trying to persuade the working classes that the amelioration of their condition can only be achieved by means of Socialism, Communism or Anarchy.

To the different [illegible] affirmative answers may be given. But the cause which create in our day a state of society similar to that which existed before the French revolution, and which are widely different in many material points. In France the king ruled the people, while with us we never tire of boasting that every man is his own monarch in America, yet, at the same time, facts and political statistics prove that a large mass of them "consider" are open-handed bettetakers at every election, and many of them wish they had a dozen votes to dispose of! Who is to correct this evil? A corrupt body politic, as the foundation of a nation, will disseminate the same corruption throughout every story of the Temple of Liberty they erect. And so we see in this country many voters bought openly on the streets on election day, and the officials thus elected growing rich on bribes received for their votes in favor of rich clients or corporations who freeze the people! This is the state of affairs from the source of power to the topmost pinnacle of the American political pyramid. Corruption, bribery and dishonesty are characteristic of politics ever since "Boss" rule has been inaugurated.

It may be asked what is the remedy for such a state of affairs, and we candidly admit that it is difficult to give a definite answer. The pagnitising education of the day has contributed largely towards this corruption of public morals by inculcating in the minds of the young their right to "rise" in the world by any means they see fit to adopt. A corrupt people can never be a free people, heroes politicians and their dupes—the voters—are merely small and smaller satellites who move in regular motion round the great "Boss" orb—the political sun—whose light shines only for those who worship him truly and divide with him the spoils of office.

No physical revolution like that horrible example in France, can ever cure the evils that exist in America. Not did the French revolution affect any good for France, as we have it on the testimony of the eminent statesman Edmond Burke, that the French people merely "made their way to the disgrace and the destruction of their country to a bad constitution when they were absolutely in possession of a good one. The sacrifice they made of the peace and power of their country was not made on the altar of freedom."

What American most needs in order to cure the evils complained of by our correspondent is a moral revolution among the people. A revolution which will make men see God, know Him and serve Him, just as the Church Catholic requires upon those who are among the faithful in her fold. Yet such a moral revolution is impossible so long as the people of the land are kept under a pagnizing system; so long as wealth is worshiped and poverty is considered a crime; so long as every public position of honor or emolument is sold to the highest bidder; so long as a venal press pours the daily deluge of filth, falsehood and foolishness before every community, and the priesthood—their shepherds—are led to follow in their un-American aristocracy against Catholics and adopted Catholic citizens—"the latchet of whose shoes" these political lepers are unworthy to unloose.

More Misery in Store for Ireland.

Letters from Ireland convey the sad intelligence that Coercion is not the only evil the Irish people willingly to contend against during the present year. It is predicted that gaunt famine will again visit Erin and the land in consequence of the almost certain failure of the crops.

The present season has been the driest season ever known in Ireland, and the result is that only in a few places did the crops ripen. The spring crops in Ireland are extremely hardy and cold, and as a consequence the planting and seed-sowing were greatly delayed. Towards the end of April came a change. Summer set in vehemently as well as prematurely, and, wanting the necessary rain, the crops were forced into unnatural growth. The heat during the entire month of June was well-nigh tropical, the thermometer frequently recording 91° in the shade, and 120° in the full blaze of the sun. Such a high temperature has very rarely been recorded in either England or Ireland. Still no rain came, and the very dews ceased to fall. As a natural result, the earth was baked as if in an oven, and the growth of grass, green crops and cereals at the usually period was completely arrested. Nature is the only crop that could possibly stand such dry and scorching weather, but where is the hope even in that? The oats and barley crops are described as promising completely blighted appearance, the straw being five inches in length, unnourished by a head miserably small and shriveled. The potato crop, with the exception of what is planted in sandy or peaty soils, is not expected to produce more than half an average yield; while the green crops, after being three weeks sown, have been pronounced utter failures. Naturally the hay crop will be the greatest sufferer, and it is scarcely possible that more than one-third of the average hay-making can be expected.

The reliable source from which we derive our information also states that the wells throughout the country have become dry, that the rivulets have ceased to run, and that the springs, large numbers of cattle have perished, and are perishing, from mere exhaustion. The intensity of the drought may be imagined from the fact that at Limerick, the bed of the Shannon, the largest river in the British Isles, which takes its rise in the extreme north and receives the drainage of over two-thirds of the Irish counties, may be crossed almost dryshod. Anticipating a scarcity of fodder for the coming winter, the graziers and dairymen have been for sometime past driving their stock to the scored fairs, with the intention of disposing of them at whatever they would bring. The fairs are thinly attended with stock of all kinds, and there are no buyers except for "finished" animals. Unless an almost miraculous change takes place, and that immediately, no more awful forecast of coming events has been presented since the terrible period—now exactly forty years ago—when the land was smitten by a famine whose horrors will never be obliterated from the world's memory.

In some sad sense [illegible] was soon duly appreciated by the Irish people, who engaged in Ireland during June and July, we append an extract from a letter recently received from that land. The writer says:

"The atmosphere appears like a furnace, for there is no wind, and the thermometer on the 23d of the current month stood at 97 degrees in the shade, the average height being 86 degrees for several weeks. In the shade of the house it ranges from 80 to 90 degrees in the shade, the average height being 86 degrees for several weeks. In the shade of the house it ranges from 80 to 90 degrees. The country is actually unprecedented in Ireland, and the result is that the fine pastures looking so green in Galway, Clare and Clare are completely burned up, and the cattle in some places actually starving. As a result, the holding of the cattle and sheep fairs is a sore trial, every one seeking to dispose of his stock, and no one willing to buy. Stock auctions have also been completely expunged, so that there is but little sale; but the barley and oat crops most certainly prove compatible for the production of a very miserably lost, and if the coming winter proves a severe one, there will be neither turnips, mangolds nor hay to feed cattle on. Such an outlook is terrible to contemplate, and should the fears which at present universally prevail be realized, the result will be calamity added to calamity."

—A correspondent describing the Boston Fourth of July celebration, in which all the prominent participants were Irish, in the Times Democrat, of New Orleans, La., says: "Boston is peculiarly an Irish city, but I am not sure that the infusion of the race characteristics of the Irish is not an exceedingly good thing. They bring a generous enthusiasm, an energy, a tenacity of purpose and a rich and keen vitality—adding good elements to the general life. The Irish are far more patriotic for America than Americans are for it themselves." The latter remark is as solid a truth as ever found utterance in print, and it truth may be established on every occasion when an American celebration takes place in any of the large cities of the Union. The Irish-American race is the back bone of liberty in this land, and if ever an occasion offers for proving it, they will be found foremost in the fight, while many persons whose pulpit jeremiads themselves as "Americans," will fly over to England and desert their country like the cowardly Sunkies that they are.

—We frequently notice in the columns of the daily Protestant press of the Pacific coast of some "smart" reporter's failure in his effort to portray the "brogue" of some Irish, Irish-German or Irish-American, introduced into court for trial. And what a mess the literary cobbler makes of it! Let work, however, a case occurred in Judge Brown's Lower Court, when a certain Michael O'Brien was on the stand in order to prove his name condition. Michael did so very creditably, clinching his evidence with this proof: "Sir, the powers say," said he "my mind is as clear as yours. I can tell as as when I see one" and then he looked steadily at the Phonetic reporter forfeitly a minute! Judge Hardy—lower by-the-and-bye—laughed, and when he got over the joke he decided that Michael O'Brien was "a solid man" in sense!

Which is Correct?

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir: I am a graduate of a Sisters' Catholic school and in conversation with a non-Catholic young lady the other day she inferred at me when I pronounced the word "neither" with the long "e" saying it was something that the proper pronunciation is "either." As the MONITOR is my mentor in other matters, I write for information on this point, so that I may defend my Catholic pronunciation against Protestant aggression.

Yours truly, NANCY NURSING.

For the information of this young lady we think it proper to intimate her that the Sisters from whom she received her education were eminently sensible in teaching her pronunciation of the word "either" and "neither" with the long "e" sound, instead of the modern foppish, mincing mode of "either" and "nither." It is true that some fashionables give both pronunciation as correct, but this proves nothing over centuries of precedent in favor of the general mode of pronouncing these words with the long "e" sound. Webster says that the best speakers in England and American elegant society pronounce the long "e" and not in the flippant fashion which has been recently introduced into this country by some Cockney-Bostonese. These two words were everywhere pronounced "either" and "neither" until the time of George I. of England, who, being a German, gave the German pronunciation to these words. Court parasites are like monkeys, inasmuch as they ape the manners of their masters, and in this way the Saxon pronunciation of "either" for "either" and "nither" for "neither" was introduced into England among the courtly parasites by a man whose imperfect English gave rise to the ridiculous fashion.

In your lady correspondent, therefore, will readily understand the she should not laugh at those who say "nither" and "either" as that would be a piece of rudeness not allowing such a lady to be guilty of, but she should pity such affectation on the part of people who are ever ready to adopt any ridiculous fashion so as to obtain a place in the world, or some way from their more sensible neighbors. The best speakers in England and Boston—educated and established courses for centuries, are on the side of the Sisters who taught our correspondent the right pronunciation of these words, and we hope she will adhere to them, let those who will, follow the false pronunciation of a drunken Dublin man—who was notorious for his love for whiskey punch and fat women—and who could not speak a dozen English words correctly—drunk or sober!

An Enemy's Opinion.

Perhaps in the whole range of the American press there is not a single journal that has maintained such bitterness against the Church than Harper's Weekly of New York. In season and out of season it has been ever silent in its attacks on the Holy Catholic Church. The Popes of the past, the Cardinals of the present, and the doctrines of the Church have been the subjects of bitter and unpleasant jeers, pen and pencil, and sneers and jeers. Yet, in the passing bits the hands of men who fought harder for the cause of Henry George than they did for that of the Church. The Herald comments on this from the day it struck its "Catholic" colors.

The School Question Solved.

Alluding to the way in which the School Question is solved in Canada, the Boston Pilot says: "Out of a total population of 1,200,000, the province of Quebec, Canada, has nearly 1,000,000 Catholics. Two thirds of those are French-Canadian, the rest Irish. This fact may solve the school question. The overwhelming majority accord to the Protestants all the rights they would in like case demand for themselves. When the Catholics outnumber the Protestants the latter elect their own school trustees independently of the Catholics, collect their own school taxes, build their schools and teach these their own teachers, and conduct the methods of instruction. There is a council of public instruction for the province, divided into two committees, one Protestant and the other Catholic. And still we hear of Religious Intolerance! Truly, the Catholic majority in those United States, who are so fearful about religious freedom, should, if they would secure their own religious rights in the schools rather than allow their Catholic fellow-citizens to enjoy theirs, have much to learn from a province which they are wont to decry as Romish, backward and unenlightened."

Ireland's Crimeless Condition.

Last week we presented our readers with a comprehensive review of the speech of the Marquis of Ripon, on the subject of the Land Bill, and the declaration of the Marquis of Ripon, concerning the crimeless condition of Ireland, which, we are happy to add, is still the same. We have pleasure in presenting our readers with the following additional evidence confirming the fact that there is actually less crime in Ireland today than there is in the single city of London, and that there is a period of which the Irish people may well be proud:

On Tuesday, July 5th, Baron Howse opened the Assizes at Ennis, County Clare. Addressing the grand jury, he said: "It is a matter of the highest satisfaction to me to be informed it was a very usual announcement that their labors at the present assizes would not be very much. There were only two unimportant bills to go before them.

On July 6th, the County Court Judge of the West Riding of Cork, was presented at Bandon Quarter Sessions, with white gloves, there being no criminal business for trial. The Grand Jury, on the following day, sent in but one light case on the list.

On Tuesday, July 12th, Justice Murphy, and Justice Lawson arrived at Longford and opened the sessions for the county of Longford. The grand jury having been sworn, Justice Murphy, in addressing them, said there were only two cases to go before them; and they were so trivial they did not call for any comment.

On Wednesday, July 6th, the Assizes for county of Leitrim were opened in Carrick-on-Shannon, by the Lord Chief Justice, in the Civil Court, and the Lord Chief Baron in the Criminal Court. The Chief Baron the Grand Jury he said there were not any cases to go before them, and none of them required any observations from him.

On Wednesday, July 13th, the Assizes were opened in Dundalk. Judge Andrews, addressing the Grand Jury, said: "Gentlemen of the Grand Jury that there were only four bills to go before them, only six—of which four were for trial.

On July 7th, Mr. Justice Lawson opened the Assizes for the County of Kilkenny. Addressing the grand jury, he said: "I believe my duties so far as they are of a criminal nature have been performed. There are no cases to go before you, and there are no cases for your inquiry.

These facts cannot be gainsaid, and they naturally give direct contradiction to the falsehoods hatched for effect to American, but Irish-hating journals, and circulated by the cable. Ireland is not the place it was when Lord Cardigan, Lord Clare, Lord Lucan, Lord Clare and Clare are completely burned up, and the cattle in some places actually starving. As a result, the holding of the cattle and sheep fairs is a sore trial, every one seeking to dispose of his stock, and no one willing to buy. Stock auctions have also been completely expunged, so that there is but little sale; but the barley and oat crops most certainly prove compatible for the production of a very miserably lost, and if the coming winter proves a severe one, there will be neither turnips, mangolds nor hay to feed cattle on. Such an outlook is terrible to contemplate, and should the fears which at present universally prevail be realized, the result will be calamity added to calamity."

The Pastoral Letter.

Last week we presented our readers with the pastoral letter of the Archbishop of Cashel, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the Holy Father. We now present our readers with the following pastoral letter issued by the Archbishop of Tuam, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the Holy Father. The letter is a gem of its kind, and we hope they will read it with the same pleasure we have experienced in perusing it:

PATRICK, by the Grace of God and the Holy See, Archbishop of Tuam, Primate of all Ireland, and Administrator of the Diocese of Ardagh, to the Most Reverend, the Archbishops, Bishops, Prelates, Clergy and Faithful of the Province of Tuam, Health and Benediction in the Lord.

Dearly beloved Brethren in Christ—Our Holy Father, Leo XIII., has ordained that the fiftieth year of his priesthood should be celebrated throughout the world as a year of Jubilee, and has given us, his Bishops, the power to grant to our people the spiritual benefits of the Jubilee, on the conditions which we shall now set forth.

The Jubilee is a time of joy, of thanksgiving, of mutual congratulation, of forgiveness of sins, of reconciliation with God and man, of fervent prayer for the Pastor of the Church, and for the spiritual needs of his flock. It is a time for the Pastor to bless his people, and for the people to bless their Pastor, and to pray for each other, that they may be strengthened in the grace of God, and be fellow-heirs with the Saints in the kingdom of heaven.

The Jubilee is a time for the Pastor to bless his people, because it is a time for the people to bless their Pastor, because it is a time for the people

SYMPATHY FOR ERIN.

[SPECIALLY FROM FIRST PAGE.]

tads tha dawn of better and brighter days for their beloved country (applause).

SERMON BY REV. MILLS.

Mrs. Mills said—Whilst this message has been in course of signature, we have sometimes been asked, what is the ultimate end? "What is the use of all this waste of time and effort? It will do no good. And even from others, who, whilst they sympathize with our views, seem to have the power of grasping only the material side of things, has come the question, "What is the good of it? If you want to have anything in real money and clothing, not nasmus. Well, we have done the one, and, if needful, tried to do the other, as well. We have, in our conviction is that not charity but justice is at this moment Ireland's deepest need. To this questioning I should like to reply in the words of a letter lately received from Frederick Douglass, an escaped slave, who forty years ago from not only in England but in Ireland, and especially in Dublin, great sympathy and help, and is now visiting his old friends in Europe. He writes—"I have just read your message of sympathy to Ireland, and have been moved by it. It carries me back to those dark days in my history when every honest word of sympathy with me and my oppressed brethren was worth more than silver and gold. Such words saved me from despair, were a consolation in sorrow, and a harbinger of hope for the future. Your words will be a balm to every honest heart. Keep on, keep on, madam, have read a tome of the hundreds of earnest hearted letters we have received on this subject, and we would have that she has been a spontaneous labor of love for which she concerned will feel richly repaid, and, if it ever so small a degree, our message of sympathy should also prove to be a "memorialism in sorrow, a harbinger of hope for the future." It gives me great pleasure to be half of nearly forty thousand of my fellow countrywomen, to present to you, the Lady Mayoress of Dublin, and through her, to our Irish sisters, this address (applause.)

THE ADDRESS.

Mrs. Mills then read the address as follows:

"TO OUR IRISH SISTERS.

Force is no remedy.

Force is not Christian and unstatesmanlike.

"We, the undersigned women of England, Scotland, and Wales send loving and sympathetic greeting to our suffering sisters in Ireland, and declare that we utterly condemn the course that has led to such a fearful influence we may have to urge the giving of such measures of Home Rule as will satisfy the just demands of the Irish people as made through the representatives in Parliament assembled. Meanwhile, we entreat these for their own sakes to endure as patiently as they can the wrong of eviction, and other wrongs now bearing so hardly upon every class, but which still, we are convinced, have not yet an end to by the voice of the indignant and justice-loving women of Britain.

Miss Cobden, daughter of Mr. Richard Cobden, said it was with the deepest sense of gratitude that she formed one of the deputation who brought this message of sympathy to their suffering sisters in Ireland. This was only one of the many marks of sympathy for the Irish people, and the women in their sufferings in consequence of the land measures. The painful accounts of the evictions occurring in the different parts of Ireland had filled them with the deepest abhorrence for the regime under which such things should be perpetrated. That the present system of government could not last was plain to any reader of English history, and would soon be replaced by the government of the country by the people themselves (hear, hear)

Mrs. Sidwanna, who was much affected, said—Madam, whilst it is a source of satisfaction to us to have been allowed, to express to you our sympathy with your fellow-country women in this time of national crisis at the same time we cannot help feeling shame and sorrow that this expression is necessary—alas! there has not always been in the past that natural sympathy between us which you might have claimed as a sacred heritage. Ireland has proved to us that our countrymen have taken a large share in building up the greatness of our commonwealth (applause) and we pray in the name of Swift, Grattan, Goldsmith, Burke and others have been forgotten of our country, have proofs of your generous willingness to forget the past and to clasp the hand of friendship, of affection, sincerely, though tardily offered. We hope much from your generosity which is a noble instinct of your people; and we feel that our countrywomen learn more fully all that you have suffered, are now called upon to suffer, all that you have to forgive, they will realize as they have never done before, the sacred obligation that we believe now rests upon us to fulfill your national demand (applause).

THE LADY MAYORESS, IN REPLY, said—

Irish Mills and ladies—Speak for the sentiments of millions of patriotic Irishwomen, I give a hearty welcome to Ireland, and tender you thanks for the beautiful message of sisterly love and sympathy of which you are the bearers. I thank each and everyone of the kind hearted women who have taken this noble address to the women of Ireland, and I am confident that the grateful feeling which you endeavor to express will be shared by my countrywomen, not only throughout the country of this island, but wherever Irish women have homes on the earth, and I am sure that the manner appointed to this address are several which I am happy and honored throughout the kingdoms in connection with works of benevolence and humanity; and it is with delight I notice at the head of the list that of the wife of the great statesman, the true friend of the Irish people and Right Hon. Ewart Gladstone. There, too, I am happy to see represented the towns of Oldham and Bright. So far as I know, nothing like the presentation of this message ever before occurred in the long history of the connection between Ireland and England; and I regard the incident as one of the many signs that we are even now at the commencement of happier relations between the two countries.

AN FOR FREE NEW CORRIGON HALL, which in a few days will be opened for lady teachers. We doubt that, if worked as originally intended by it authors, it will inflict injustice and misery on hundreds upon thousands of innocent men; and when the man are struck down women and children suffer with them; but we have great hopes that the prosecution of this great measure will be deferred from energy it as they would wish by the resent indignation that the heart and conscience of England are revolting against the hateful policy. I feel confident that the women of Ireland will act in the spirit of the wise and kindly counsel given them in the last address we message. They will believe with you that while the Coercion Act will not long be allowed to stain the pages of the statute-book, opportunities of a Christian character, if we shall have a measure of Home Rule which will allow the Irish people to manage the local affairs, as they consider necessary. When that right shall have been conceded peace and friendship will take the place of angry strife, and both England and Ireland will be stronger and better than ever they were before. I believe that all who help to bring about that better state of things take part in a holy work, and I feel sure that your share in it, ladies, will have a place in history, and will never be forgotten by the Irish people (applause).

—Negotiations will be opened in November between the Vatican and Portugal, with a view to the establishment of a Catholic hierarchy on the Congo.

Correspondence.

We respectfully solicit correspondence from all parts of the Archdiocese of San Francisco, and from other parts of the Union the Church or the spread of the Faith.

All communications should reach this office, by Tuesday morning, to be insert in the ensuing issue.

A ZEALOUS PRIEST REWARDED.

Father Blanco's Departure from Utah.—The Faculty of All Hallows College Presented With with a Beautiful Gold Watch.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 27, 1887.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir:—Father Blake, who came to Utah in 1884, left for San Francisco on Tuesday morning. Before his departure, his friends took him by surprise by presenting a giant tribute to his honor, and presenting him with a beautiful gold watch. Father Blanco's departure from the Church in Utah he worked faithfully and zealously, and in all his arduous labors evinced no lukewarm. After his activity in Utah he was appointed Pastor of Park City. He was only twenty days in that place when the Irish church was burned. Encouraged by the good Catholics of the place, he immediately began to rebuild, and in less than six months succeeded not only in replacing the old church by a fine rock church 75x30, but also in erecting a school of the same material and dimensions. He was also able to build a pastoral residence. In connection and in addition to the church and school, he purchased from Jews from Israelitehaven, the work house he has completed, instead of making that out to which he was originally intended, he yielded to the suggestion of Bishop Scanlan, and came to Salt Lake to take charge of All Hallows College. There he worked during the year just ending. In his management he was pre-eminently successful, especially when the many disastrous legislation to contend against, he succeeded in keeping the institution from the ruin which threatened it. Its success in this respect was due to the great zeal and ability with which he worked for the institution. Its success in this respect was due to the great zeal and ability with which he worked for the institution. Its success in this respect was due to the great zeal and ability with which he worked for the institution tuals the dark of better and happier days for their beloved country (applause).

SYMPATHY FOR ERIN.

[DEMONSTRATED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

SPEECH BY MRS. MILLS.

Mrs. Mills said—Whilst this message has been in course of signature, we have sometimes been asked, with a doubting smile, "What is the use of all this waste of time and effort? It will do no good. And even from others, who, while they sympathize with our views, seem to have the power of grasping only the material side of things, has come the question, "What is the good of it? If you want to raise sympathy and money and clothing, not nonsense. Well, we have done the one, and, if needful, trust we shall not have the other unduly. Our conviction is that not charity but justice is at this moment Ireland's deepest need. To this questioning I should like to reply in the words of a letter lately received from Frederick Douglass, an escaped slave, who forty years ago lived not only in England but in Ireland, and especially in Dublin, great sympathy and help, and is now visiting his old friends in Europe. He writes—"I have just read your message of sympathy to Ireland, and am deeply moved by it. It revives me back to those dark days in my history when every honest word of sympathy with me and my oppressed brethren was worth more than silver and gold. Those words moved me from despair, were a consolation in sorrow, and a harbinger of hope for the future. Your words will be a balm to every bruised Irish heart." Could you, madam, have spoken a word of this hundred-and-earnest hearted letter we have received on this subject, you would see how that she has been a spontaneous labor of love for which all concerned will feel deeply repaid, if in ever so small a degree, our message of sympathy should also prove to be a "consolation in sorrow, a harbinger of hope for the future." It gives me great happiness, on behalf of nearly forty thousand of my fellow countrywomen, to present to you, the Lady Mayoress of Dublin, and through you, to our Irish sisters, this address (applause.)

Mrs. Mills then read the address as follows:

"To Our Irish Sisters.

From be so remedy.

"Dear and beloved—and unseasonable.

"We, the undersigned women of England, Scotland, and Wales send loving and sympathetic greeting to our suffering sisters in Ireland, and declare that we utterly condemn that Coercion Bill, and will use all our influence we may have to urge the giving of such measures of Home Rule as will satisfy the just demands of the Irish people as made through their representatives in Parliament. Meanwhile, we entreat them for their sake, sake to endure as patiently as they can the wrong of coercion and other suffering now bearing so heavily upon every class, but which will, we are convinced, be soon put an end to by the voice of the intelligent and justice loving women of Britain.

Miss Cobden, daughter of Mr. Richard Cobden, said it was with the deepest sense of gratitude that she formed one of the deputation who brought this message of sympathy to their suffering sisters in Ireland. This was only one of the many marks of sympathy which they felt for the Irish women in their sufferings in consequence of political misunderstanding. They painful accounts of the evictions occurring in the different parts of Ireland had filled them with the deepest abhorrence for the regime under which such things should be perpetrated. They hoped and prayed that Parliament could not last was plain to any reader of English history, and would soon be replaced by the government of the country by the people themselves (hear, hear).

Mrs. Schwann, who was much affected, said—Madam, while it is a source of satisfaction to us to have been allowed to express to you our sympathy with your fellow-countrywomen in this time of national crisis at the same time we cannot help feeling shame and sorrow that this expression is necessary—shame that there has not always been in the past that natural sympathy between us which you might have claimed as a sacred birthright, and sorrow that this expression is necessary—also

Poetry.

[For the Monitor.]

PURE THOUGHT.

Only a beautiful lily,
Fresh with the morning dew,
Pure as the crystal water
That wends the valley through;
Robed in every whiteness
Not even a shadow to blight;
The fair, bright spotless creature,
Radiant in purity's light.

Into my soul stole its sweetness,
And a voice seemed to speak from my heart:
"The Artist who modeled the flower
Of his work, then, sir, formed a part;
Thy soul should be fair and lovely
Then this trifle of beauty you behold;
More treasured than gems of the rarest,
More precious than silver or gold.

Why, then, should you wilfully vandal
This mirror of God's holy love,
Wherein are reflected the graces
Which Heaven bestows from above;
Virtue's jewels gleam brightest when chastity
Reflects from a pure stainless soul,
And Purity's pearl lies the deepest,
In the waters of God's grace as they roll.

A pure thought is merely an echo
That rings from the depth in the heart;
And the mind is indeed truly noble
When Purity lands in a part;
Or like the flower, which, when it blooms,
Wafts a fragrance from its cup,
And God, his most beautiful image,
Engraves on Purity's form stands.

Let not a foul thought, then, rob you
Of a beauty of priceless worth:
Give not for a moment's pleasure
A soul of immortal birth:
Valiantly battle temptation,
For the virtue of purity
Is the glorious light of the sunset
That illumines life's setting sun."

Zita.

San Francisco, Cal.

[For the Monitor.]

ROBERT EMMETT'S ANNIVERSARY DAY.

We hold thy green memorial day,
Green Erin's brave and noble son,
Thy white moon at Mrs. Cassell's reception,
Thou thy life's blood for Erin ran!
Around the fee ye bladed then,
Are Erin's best and noblest men.

Thine eyes furnace beyond the time
That martial bodog could survive,
Thy manner bold thy mien sublime,
Where Liberty is kept alive;
The blushing spark thy genius gave,
In glory burns where'er it gives,
Taught by thy life and martyr'd death,
Patriot men on every shore,
Strews with the bounds of mighty Earth,
Still hold thy name in memory's store;
Thou—"what would my employer think of my wife wearing a $200 set of jewelry!
Some of your evening dresses have already excited comment; but no one knew I had walked to and from the office, denied myself
cigars, and even the daily papers, to pay for
your extravagance."

"My extravagance," cried Mrs. Morgan, with a subdued wail, as she put her handkerchief to her eyes and burst into childish
tears—a real woman's best defense. "That always the cry—my extravagance.

"No, Cecil," he said gently, as he laid his hand on her shoulder, "I did not mean that.
But I am tired of living on our poor farm,
and the everlasting pinching in everything
we do. You do not need this jewelry, and it would not be advisable to wear it if you had it; for man with only moderate income must pay up with moderate luxuries.
I will deny you nothing in reason, but you cannot have those sapphires."

There was a ring of unmistakable decision
in his voice. He slowly drew on his overcoat and gloves, evidently expecting some remonstrance of her thoughtless act, although she expected John would relenge her severely for spending the money; but she trusted to his leniency and her own powers of persuasion to soften his wrath. He had never, as he said, refused anything in reason,
and if this was an apparently useless purchase, she could easily turn the jewels into money, if the rainy day John was always predicting ever arrived.

As he left room from Baby & Co's. with
the jewel casket safely stowed away in her pocket, she was brought to a sudden standstill by meeting her husband coming out of the dining-room with a perturbed and anxious countenance. Her face flushed guiltily, for she knew, or imagined she did,
the cause of his agitation.

"Cecil," he said hurriedly, "I have lost
my pocket-book. Did you find it?"

"Lost your pocket-book!" echoed Mrs.
Morgan, feigning great surprise and sending his question—not that she meant to deny finding it, but the confession required more moral courage than she could muster at present.

"Yes, lost my pocket-book," repeated Mr.
Morgan in a troubled voice; "and the money in it belonged to the firm."

Mrs. Morgan's heart stood still with consternation, and she grew white toothe lips.

"Stolen, I also gasped, as if accepting was shocking; "tell me—how it was."

"It was this way. Macray gave me $500
as I was leaving the office yesterday evening to pay a bill we owed Heeby & Sons. But they were closed when I reached their office,
and I brought the money home with me, intending to pay it as I went down town this morning; but owing to a death in the family
the store was still closed, and I never knew
I had lost the money until I had reached our office this morning. Cecil, are you sure it's not in the house?"

"—I—I am sure I don't know," stammered
Cecil, too overwhelmed with fear and mortification to think seriously.

Not John's money! She felt dazed and crushed, and totally unable to confess her folly. She dropped into a hall chair, looking so weak and ill that John forgot his own trouble in anxiety for Cecil.

"You must not be so frightened, wife,"
he said kindly; "it may turn up in the house. Come, help me to search for it."

Cecil rose up mechanically, and followed
him from room to room, listening in mute
terror to his regrets when the pocket-book
could not be found. Involuntarily her hand went down into the pocket of her dress, and
as she clutched the jewel-case in her cold fingers a deadly faintness almost overcame
her, for, let as she would, she could not draw it forth, or force her lips to confess that to her awakened conscience seemed nothing less than theft. She knew her husband's indignation would be deep, although not loudly expressed, for dishonesty of any kind was contemptible in his eyes. Would he excuse it in his wife! Ah, no! and as she pictured the affair presented itself to
her mind, her shame and agitation increased,
and she found it still more difficult to confess her error.

Suddenly, as after thoroughly searching the rooms they stood in the hall; "I must have dropped it in the house, and it cannot be found. Or, could any one have picked up your purse, Cecil?" A startled expression flitted across her face, and he hastily examined
the inside pocket of his overcoat.

"No," he said, with a light laugh, "no
one could pick that pocket without my knowledge. It must have fallen out." He looked keenly—without any suspicion of the truth, however—at the lovely, downcast face
of his wife. "Cheer up, little wife, I'm fearfully affected guilty. "I must go to the office; but you keep a sharp look the money. It may have got knocked into some dark corner."

"How—does—" stammered Cecil, not with feverish anxiety; "does the firm know
it?"

"Murray does. I told him before I left
the office."

And John Morgan shut the door with a bang, an unusual roughness for him, leaving his wife standing in the dim light, as if stricken dumb.

* * * * *

The large, roomy office in the commission house of Macray & Co., was a blaze of golden spring sunshine, as John Morgan,
flushed with his walk through the crisp
morning air, entered it, after his fruitless
search. His face wore a troubled expression as he went up to Mr. Macray, a white-haired,
benevolent man.

"I have searched the house effectually for
that pocket-book, and—"

"You did not find it, John!" quickly interrupted Mr. Macray, with a curious smile.

"No, sir, I did not; and I cannot account
for its loss."

"Jobs"—Mr. Macray laid this morning paper across his knees, removed his gold eye-glasses, and locked up into the face of his faithful book-keeper—"I would never for one moment doubt your word. But did you ask your wife about it?"

"I did."

"And she denied all knowledge of it?"

"She did not find it"—John Morgan looked more troubled than ever—"and we went over the house together."

"Ah." Mr. Macray's fine old face flushed slightly, and he lowered his voice, as if fearful of being overheard by the clerks in the outer office.

"Listen to me a moment, John. To-day
is your wife's twenty-second birthday,
and I went down to Baby and Co.'s to buy
her a set of sapphires that have been on exhibition for a few days. They were just what I wanted for a birthday gift, and the price was two hundred dollars. This clerk fell of being overheard by the clerks in the
outer office.

"Two hundred dollars exactly," she ejaculated. "And such an amount would not spare
the money. Well, what belongs to my husband belongs to me, and I will have that set
of sapphires."

She laughed gleefully as she waltzed out
of the room to dress, for she impulsively determined to secure the sapphires before John would miss the money. Delight lent haste to her nimble fingers, and before many minutes she was in the street looking bright
as a June morning.

Poor, heedless Cecil never thought of the consequences of her thoughtless act, although she expected John would rebuke her severely for spending the money; but she trusted
to his leniency and her own powers of persuasion to soften his wrath. He had never, as he said, refused anything in reason,
and if this was an apparently useless purchase, she could easily turn the jewels into money, if the rainy day John was always predicting ever arrived.

As he left room from Baby & Co's. with
the jewel casket safely stowed away in her pocket, she was brought to a sudden standstill by meeting her husband coming out of the dining-room with a perturbed and anxious countenance. Her face flushed guiltily, for she knew, or imagined she did,
the cause of his agitation.

"Cecil," he said hurriedly, "I have lost
my pocket-book. Did you find it?"

"Lost your pocket-book!" echoed Mrs.
Morgan, feigning great surprise and sending
his question—not that she meant to deny finding it, but the confession required more moral courage than she could muster at
present.

"Yes, lost my pocket-book," repeated Mr.
Morgan in a troubled voice; "and the
money in it belonged to the firm."

Mrs. Morgan's heart stood still with consternation, and she grew white toothe lips.

"Stolen, I also gasped, as if accepting was shocking; "tell me—how it was."

"It was this way. Macray gave me $500
as I was leaving the office yesterday evening
to pay a bill we owed Heeby & Sons. But they were closed when I reached their office,
and I brought the money home with me, intending to pay it as I went down town this morning; but owing to a death in the family
the store was still closed, and I never knew
I had lost the money until I had reached our office this morning. Cecil, are you sure it's not in the house?"

"—I—I am sure I don't know," stammered
Cecil, too overwhelmed with fear and mortification to think seriously.

Not John's money! She felt dazed and crushed, and totally unable to confess her folly. She dropped into a hall chair, looking so weak and ill that John forgot his own
trouble in anxiety for Cecil.

"You must not be so frightened, wife,"
he said kindly; "it may turn up in the house. Come, help me to search for it."

Cecil rose up mechanically, and followed
him from room to room, listening in mute
terror to his regrets when the pocket-book
could not be found. Involuntarily her hand went down into the pocket of her dress, and
as she clutched the jewel-case in her cold
fingers a deadly faintness almost overcame
her, for, let as she would, she could not draw it forth, or force her lips to confess
that to her awakened conscience seemed nothing less than theft. She knew her husband's indignation would be deep, although not loudly expressed, for dishonesty of any kind was contemptible in his eyes. Would he excuse it in his wife! Ah, no! and as she pictured the affair presented itself to
her mind, her shame and agitation increased,
and she found it still more difficult to confess her error.

Suddenly, as after thoroughly searching the rooms they stood in the hall; "I must have dropped it in the house, and it cannot be found. Or, could any one have picked up your purse, Cecil?" A startled expression
flitted across her face, and he hastily examined
the inside pocket of his overcoat.

"No," he said, with a light laugh, "no
one could pick that pocket without my knowledge. It must have fallen out." He looked keenly—without any suspicion of the truth, however—at the lovely, downcast face
of his wife. "Cheer up, little wife, I'm fearfully affected guilty. "I must go to the office; but you keep a sharp look
the money. It may have got knocked into
some dark corner."

"How—does—" stammered Cecil, not
with feverish anxiety; "does the firm know
it?"

"Murray does. I told him before I left
the office."

And John Morgan shut the door with a bang, an unusual roughness for him, leaving
his wife standing in the dim light, as if stricken dumb.

* * * * *

The large, roomy office in the commission
house of Macray & Co., was a blaze of
golden spring sunshine, as John Morgan,
flushed with his walk through the crisp
morning air, entered it, after his fruitless
search. His face wore a troubled expression
as he went up to Mr. Macray, a white-haired,
benevolent man.

"I have searched the house effectually for
that pocket-book, and—"

"You did not find it, John!" quickly interrupted Mr. Macray, with a curious smile.

"No, sir, I did not; and I cannot account
for its loss."

"John"—Mr. Macray laid this morning paper across his knees, removed his gold
eye-glasses, and locked up into the face of his faithful book-keeper—"I would never
for one moment doubt your word. But did you ask your wife about it?"

"I did."

"And she denied all knowledge of it?"

"She did not find it"—John Morgan looked more troubled than ever—"and we went over the house together."

"Ah." Mr. Macray's fine old face flushed slightly, and he lowered his voice, as if fearful of being overheard by the clerks in the
outer office.

"Listen to me a moment, John. To-day
is your wife's twenty-second birthday,
and I went down to Baby and Co.'s to buy
her a set of sapphires that have been on exhibition for a few days. They were just what I wanted for a birthday gift, and the price was two hundred dollars. This clerk fell of being overheard by the clerks in the
outer office.

"Two hundred dollars exactly," she ejaculated. "And such an amount would not spare
the money. Well, what belongs to my husband belongs to me, and I will have that set
of sapphires."

She laughed gleefully as she waltzed out
of the room to dress, for she impulsively determined to secure the sapphires before John would miss the money. Delight lent haste
to her nimble fingers, and before many minutes she was in the street looking bright
as a June morning.

Poor, heedless Cecil never thought of the

Literary Miscellany.

A Set of Sapphires.

A Domestic Story with a Moral.

"John"—pretty Mrs. Cecil Morgan stood beside her husband's chair with a strange hesitancy of look and manner—"could you let me have a little money?"

John Morgan, head book-keeper in the commission house of Macray & Co., laid down his morning paper with a stifled sigh.
He looked up kindly into the fair, rose-tinted face of his young wife, whose sapphire-blue eyes were bent on his face expectantly.
She was a lovely, loving, but thoughtless little woman—she was his wife and he loved her devotedly—but sometimes, not I hon-her vanities jarred on his finer sensibilities;
for Cecil Morgan was not the woman to truly understand a man like her husband, whose worth, honesty, and stability of thought was simply, incomprehensible to her tender but shallow nature.

"So you want a little money. How much,
Cecil?"

He smiled as the dimples came and went in the smooth pink cheeks.

"Oh, ever so much, John."

Cecil's sapphire eyes as she uttered the jewelled diagnosis, and she laughed in a childish fashion.

"Well, out with it. How much? Tell me"—as she hesitated. "I must hurry to town, as we are unusually busy just now."

"You are always that when I want say-
thing," pouted Cecil.

"Business is business," he said, rather impatiently. "Tell me what you want."

"Why, you know that lovely set of
sapphires in Baby & Co.'s window—Mrs.
Morgan paused, and her spirits fell a trifle,
for John's face grew suddenly clouded;
"they are just perfect and would suit my style—and my eyes, you know—and they are only $200. I want them to wear with my white moire at Mrs. Cassell's reception."

"Indeed!" was John's comment, as he coughed slightly.

"Cecil, I am sorry to refuse you, but I cannot spare that amount of money at
present."

"But they are just lovely, John," persisted Mrs. Morgan, with heightened color,
"and so unique. The settings are peculiar in design—so chaste and delicate, and they are so cheap. Only $200! the complaint set."

"Cecil"—John Morgan looked as if he was about to tell some very unwholesome truths—"what would my employer think of
my wife wearing a $200 set of jewelry!
Some of your evening dresses have already excited comment; but no one knew I had walked to and from the office, denied myself
cigars, and even the daily papers, to pay for
your extravagance."

"My extravagance," cried Mrs. Morgan,
with a subdued wail, as she put her handkerchief to her eyes and burst into childish
tears—a real woman's best defense. "That always the cry—my extravagance.

"No, Cecil," he said gently, as he laid his hand on her shoulder, "I did not mean that.
But I am tired of living on our poor farm,
and the everlasting pinching in everything
we do. You do not need this jewelry,
and it would not be advisable to wear it if you had it; for man with only moderate
income must pay up with moderate luxuries.
I will deny you nothing in reason, but you
cannot have those sapphires."

There was a ring of unmistakable decision
in his voice. He slowly drew on his overcoat and gloves, evidently expecting some

AN ARTIST'S TROUBLES.

Some Comic Scenes in Real Life.

Reader, were you ever a photographer?
If so, then you need not scan the text part of this sketch, except it be to sympathize with the writer. If you never were, you will most likely smile over his troubles, and thank your good genius you are what you
are.

Looking over my diary the other day, I find some of the following little notes, while others the things I want. I can't find the diary, according one line to Joel Benson of St. Thomas, on the other to Gideon, Tennessee, and I don't know which of them
Milton was to say the reasons and affections of the Gentile Nations at Rome. This story about seventeen years ago, in entered the Gentile Nations at Rome. The tall and somewhat anguish look, the pleasant face and quick, flashing eye, attracted the notice and esteem of Father Jandel, the General of his Order. The genius of Aquinas naturally conjured a very high position in the seminary presided over by one who afterwards became known as Clementinus as Cardinal Pavel and Pope Leo XIII. These very first surprised on the coast of St. Thomas as devoted to an assertion of the claims over Christian thought of the system of the greatest of the scholmen Young Burke sustituted Aquinas not only with orthodoxy, but also with extraordinary relish. Before his entrance into Christianity he is reloaded unity from the strong, majestic conception of God, and the Fall of Man, and the Redem-ptor Salvatore of Salvatore Pirmapam de Burke to the Salvatore—the consolatrix remnant." To Burke those unterlegical constitutions of propositions, those apparently impenetrable mysteries of faith were transformed by lines of light with depths of glorious light. To Dominic Burke "Summa" appeared as vast territory of sandy desert, with occasional oases, and he had to drawn by fiats. Burke, like Zebulon of old, could "sit on the sea shores and sand." The notice starlike of Aquinas saying that "when one reads the 'Summa,' one feels as if one were in a cathedral with its constituent pillars and clear as a monument which, when the mind's eye could take in the all disposition of a vast number of topics capable of reference to a common centre, appears, as it were, in translucent certainty, and faith was almost lost in sight. When Burke was appointed the General of Dominican Order appointed Fathers Lacordaire and Jandel to assist the English novices at Woodchester. Burke was unspeakable happy in his English style. At first, every word, every sentence fell, every particle was rigorously committed to memory. Burke's English was the sonnier led trembling in every limb, and with nervous excitement, yet with eye shut, might well be astonished at the magnitude of his memory. In the first two years of preparation was one of the most delightful of his life.
Burke's English becomes the result eight or ten years later

The fitting moment for the sermon had arrived, when a large congregation, gathered in kneeling posture before the altar, and priests and novices standing in a semicircle place on the platform. The figure was tall and slender and black of the Dominican habit. The sanctuary was filled with a religious light, and the congregation was head fringed by a ring of thick, black locks that surmounted a dark and sun stained face, and in which the piercing eyes were lighted and power, and with eyes that kindled into the dreamy gaze peculiar to those who dreams of an unseen world. The speaker was Father Burke, and the sermon was dangerous life. The chapel was small, and the voice never rose above a whisper, but every whisper thrilled the nerves of his hearers. The sermon was a lyric, full of the beauty and purity and perfection of a lyric. Burke showed how it tended to raise man, even in the life here, almost to the level of the angels, how it tended to invest the unpolished with the beauty of the angelic life, and angels everything among on its irresistible tide-mission, and how it tended to the worldliness among them sent along in silence, and how it tended to the subjugation of the carnality. It was a sermon to make a softer man, to make a better man, to make that, being heard, must be imbedded in memory for a lifetime.

At the age of thirty-four Burke was made Prior of San Clemente in Rome, but after a few years found his way back to Ireland.
The annals of the past Apostolic Church in Ireland, in consequence, he undertook century to commence, and, judged at least by material tests, so successful. When the new Cathedral Armagh was opened Father Burke preached the sermon, 1874, to the Dublin Grand Jury, of Nay, to examine the place, and see if it were possible to restore it. Lord Lieutenant Wodehouse, in his favorable report, the Prelate demanded of Louis XIII, the authority to reconstruct the Lord Lieutenant Wodehouse, in his immediately to the gallant Knight of Cal-ches, and they had the decision passed with the Sovereign Council of Ricaus, almost exclusively composed of Protestants. The work of restoration commenced at once and was continued without cessation. The new church being completed the Heavens seemed to smile upon its consecration by daily wonders. The Bishop of Anak came to visit it, arriving on the 14th of July, 1616, accompanied by numerous clergy and carrying in his hand a vase of the Virgin with which he desired to adorn the chapel. Bewildering to the Abbey of Saint Pe, of Bagorre, not far from Bethanrun, he dished himself in his pontifical vestments and proceeded a pace formed by his clergy, the Religious of Saint Benoit, all the Catholic nobility of the country, and an immensable concourse from the neighboring parishes. Arriving at the chapel the Prelate celebrated the Holy Sacrifice and distributed the Bread of Life of magnificent music, and the pious treasures of a people filled with joyous fervor.
After the ceremonies the Prelate on the altar
the image of the Virgin which was to replace the one which had been carried to Spain. This religious festival left in the hearts of the inhabitants a deep remembrances and traces upon the ardent souls more to be effaced. Upon leaving the Instituon Prelate left as a testimonial, a lamp of silver with fonts to keep it burning night and day. But the pilgrimage of the Archbishop had still more important results.
Hugenot and mysterious manifestations, the holy Prelate was soon inspired to return and again sanctify it by the ceremonies Sanctuary with the primitive Church. To this effect he organized a procession for the purpose of planting a large cross of wood on the summit of the mountain which dominated the chapel and she-Bethanrun, Pierre de Marca, accompanied the cortege and thus recounts another astonishing miracle:

In the month of September, 1616, a few villagers of Montant (a small hamlet opposite Bethanrun), were seated in an ex-pierce arose from the mountain which cross looks down upon Bethanrun, when they were taking their frugal lunch, the lower ers were serene, the air calm and the horizon cloudless and free from. Suddenly they heard a noise as of a tempest from the side of Bethanrun. Oh, horror! The cross placed by the Archbishop seemed to be falling, but instantly the confidence ceased and the cross replaced itself, at the same time immersed by a bright hole and surmounted by a resplendent crown, while dazzled the eyes of the villagers. They ran, they cried out, their hearts beat wildly; and in the alternate fear and joy they hastened to tell the news to the faithful of the neighborhood.
This event so unprecedentable, created great excitement and fear; those who had hesiteed doubted—retracted their doubts. The population testified to their faith by proves of alms. The miracle of the cross is not now in the church. It has been transported erected by aims to encourage Christians to hope in moments of danger. Since the appearance on earth of the cross Christianity has been an object of disdain to philosophers, and the subject of cruel ferocity by tyrants. The faithful of Tarbe were denounced as malefactors and put to death persecuted relentlessly even to the catacombs.
Rome, which seemed bounded to the quick, lost human resources came to an end, and tied deeming the empire for His Son, avoke
the Christian characters of fire, the glorious cross, and conquered the world by the inscription "By this sign shalt thou conquer." Rome is much more to be held of Bethanrun—of its mountains, of its cross line paintings—with the names of many famous saints who have sanctified the ground in more celebrated spots of God's sanctuary.
There are the gifts from famous and royal personages; there are the pictures of Bethanrain, and illustrations with the sonnet the worlds in the quaint poetic or prosaic tongue of the Bearnese.

In conclusion, a quotation from the Rev.
Spencer Northcote, D. D., President of St.
Mary's College, Oscott, may not be out of place, for it adds the accounts just related appeal to the Catholic heart but make an indelible imprint of a deeper faith, as President Lincoln says: "To the great mass of the Protestant public I am afraid it may seem trifles in what style such narrations are written; their supernatural character is accepted as ordinary contemporary history truth; we are sure such persons say that the story must be false, because we are satisfied that such wonders cannot possibly true. I hope, however, that there are many who have other feelings instead on the subject and look on the modes and times of God's interference with the system of the world we live in."
Such persons will see wonder are not more extraordinary than those which centuries has made familiar every soul every thing is a mystery we cannot fathom.

THERESE.

A Recent Pilgrimage to Lourdes

Last September was signalized by the national pilgrimage to Lourdes, which was taken to this world famous shrine. A special service of trains had been organized to meet the requirements of the Paris pilgrims and a large number of devout Catholics left the Gare de Lyon, Paris, on Saturday for Lourdes by way of Poitiers, the halt taking place at Angoulême for the planting of the cross on the summit of Beaucaire, which was brought from Paris by a pilgrim, and carried by the Pilgrims of Poitiers, who had visited Rome, visited the Holy Land. At two o'clock in the morning the Pilgrims arrived and from seven o'clock the pedestrians taking part in the pilgrimage and Masses in the miraculous chapel, Penitential High Mass being celebrated at 10 o'clock. In the afternoon, at half past two, Vespers were sung the cross being afterwards carried in procession, the pilgrims walking bare-footed towards four o'clock, it was solemnly blessed by the Archbishop of Albi, Mgr. Freinesse, assisted by the Bishops of Angoulême,
them being Mgr. Gennarelas, Bishop
of Nice, Mgr. Lecot, Bishop of Clermont,
Mgr. Sourrieu, Bishop of Digne,
Mgr. Bellonin, Bishop of Perpignan, Mgr. Bellonin, Bishop of Perpignan, Mgr. Sourrieu, at the conclusion of which Benediction was given. In the evening the Pilgrims walking bare-footed
from four o'clock, it was solemnly blessed
by the Archbishop of Albi, Mgr. Freinesse,
assisted by the Bishops of Angoulême,
them being Mgr. Gennarelas, Bishop
of Nice, Mgr. Lecot, Bishop of Clermont,
Mgr. Sourrieu, Bishop
of Digne, Mgr. Bellonin, Bishop of Perpignan, Mgr. Sourrieu, at the conclusion of which Benediction was given. In the evening the Pilgrims walking bare-footed
from four o'clock, it was solemnly blessed
by the Archbishop of Albi, Mgr. Freinesse,
assisted by the Bishops of Angoulême,
them being Mgr. Gennarelas, Bishop
of Nice, Mgr. Lecot, Bishop of Clermont,
Mgr. Sourrieu, Bishop
of Digne, Mgr. Bellonin, Bishop of Perpignan, Mgr. Sourrieu, at the conclusion of which Benediction was given. In the evening the Pilgrims walking bare-footed

Our Blessed Mother.

AN UNKNOWN SHRINE.

A FAVORED PORTION OF FRANCE.

Our Lady and the Calvary of Betharram.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH FOR THE MONITOR.]

The Pantheist Spinoza, believed that "the unfailing laws of the universe left no room for miracles, and the query with him was,
Are miracles relatively possible?

The answer which most some at once to the mind of every true believer is to falling back to the grand refrain, "All things are possible to God." Many scientists, perhaps, are relatively wonderful or miraculous,
for, as a well known writer says, "We do not believe as the savage do, that the telescope has the power of bringing the far instantly near."

To us it is only extraordinary as the result of scientific discovery, the accomplishment and natural growth of systematic study and the evolving of experimentary research. We only realize that as time rolls on, we have a clearer and clearer outline of the immensity of the firmament and the humblest suggestions of the infinite. To doubt the possibility of God's power, therefore, is to deny the economic plan of the meaning of God's wisdom as regards mankind; for who is the great soul of eternity.

In attempting to give in abstract, an account of Notre Dame de Calvary at Betharram, the world of St. Augustine may be used as a preface, when he takes us back to the first creation of Paradise and tells us it pleased God to make faith unmoulding and blessing of the mind. St. Augustinus says, "Men introduced in any branch of a liberal elucation, without any of the rudiments of heathen learning, unskilled in grammar, not versed with dialect, nor adorned with rhetoric, but plain tabernacle, and very few in number, those were the men whom Christ sent with the news of faith to every part of world, and then took out of every race many fishes, and even the philosophers themselves wonderful as they are, were astonished at the wonders of Betharram. As we Christ still manifesting Himself to the innocent and humble.

Betharram is situated at the extremity of the diocese of Bayonne, between Tarbes and Lourdes. It had its origin says the French book, from which we learn these particulars,
and (which is endorsed by the Bishop of Bayonne), "in a wonder, unheard of since the days of Moses."

A few young shepherds guarding their flocks, one day suddenly perceived an extraordinary flame arising from a bush near a rocky ledge of the mountain—
the same spot where the cross now stands the high altar of the chapel. The young shepherds gazed in astonishment, and on approaching nearer to the wonderful bush discovered in the middle of the bush which seemed to burn without consuming, a beautiful figure of the Mother of Christ, holding in her arms the infant Jesus. Happy and rejoicing in so marvelous a discovery, they ran to tell their parents, who came to which was repeated spread quickly through the village, and was soon known to all near the neighborhood. The Bishop of Tarbes Pierre de Marca, the author of the Pilgrimage to the Mount Blessed Virgin
Lourdes, and the Bishop of Bayonne
Lacrosse, Vicar-General of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and Archbishop pro-tem., and Very Rev. Father Dupuisches Mignot, Pastor of St. Louis Cathedral.

Catarrh is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood and gives the whole system health and strength. Try this popular medicine. It is prepared by C. I.
Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Post-mortem conclusions and notices sent us for publication must be paid for in advance.

There is no State in the Union where people can live better or cheaper than in

OUROWN CALIFORNIA

—WHICH IS A VERITABLE—

HORN OF PLENTY

So far as Edibles and Fruits are concerned.

THE SECRET

Of living cheaply and well may be discovered by all Monitor readers if they will purchase their household supplies at

FAMILY GROCERIES

From the well-known firm of

SBARBORO & CO.,

At their Old-established place of business,

531 Washington St.,

The Old House Still Stands

Where—for more than a quarter of a Century—
Tens of Thousands of Savings, Prudent and

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS

HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

THE SECRET

BY WHICH

SBARBORO & CO.,

Can sell Groceries Rice, cheaper than other dealers is amply turned on these eight Business Propositions:

1—We buy all our goods for Cash.
2—We buy in large quantity at Bed-Rock Rates.
3—We sell to Cash Customers only.
4—We have no Bad Debts on our Books.
5—We buy cheap and can sell cheap.
6—Having no Bad Debts we require less profit.
7—We can give better goods than our competitors.
8—Our customers get the benefit of our cash purchases.

Remember—therefore—that if you want

The Best Groceries

AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES

The proper place to purchase them is at

SBARBORO & CO'S.,

531 WASHINGTON STREET

[Between Montgomery and Sansome.]

READ THESE PRICES

And Call and Examine

OUR GOODS.

SUGARS.

Greatly Reduced.

15 pounds Dried Apples,	$1
14 pounds Tapioca,	$1
14 pounds Sago,	$1
20 pounds Codfish,	$1
10 pounds Prunes,	$1
10 pounds Dried Pears,	$1
Star Ground Coffee,	25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug)	50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea,	50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea,	25c per lb
5-gallon can Banner Coal Oil,	$1.00
40 pounds P White Beans,	$1
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs,	$1.75
20 pounds Canary Seed,	$1
Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.

And all other Goods Equal ly Cheap.

WINES AND LIQUORS

Claret, Zinfandel, ¾ gallon, from	50 to 75c
Claret, French, ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Sherry, Cal. ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Port, Cal. ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Old Times Bourbon, ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Gold Dust Bourbon, ¾ gallon,	$1 50
Grape Brandy, ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Peach Brandy, ¾ gallon,	$1 00
Jamaica Rum, ¾ gallon,	$1 00

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made a sp cialty and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged!

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

R. SBARBORO, Manager.

DYSPEPSIA

Causes its victims to be miserable, hopeless, confused, and depressed in mind, weak, irritable, languid, and drowsy. It is a disease which does not get well itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy to overcome it. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters promptly relieves this fearful malady. It cures it, just the required remedy in hundreds of cases.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia from which I have suffered severely. I tried many other medicines, but none proved of any benefit. I can now eat anything." THOMAS COOK, Brush Electric Light Co., New York City.

Sick Headache

"For the past ten years I have been afflicted with severe headaches and dyspepsia, and have tried many remedies, but none could give me permanent relief. I now take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and have found great relief. I shall continue to use it." MRS. E. F. ANNAMA, New Haven, Conn.

Mrs. Mary E. Smith, Cambridgeport, Mass., was a sufferer from dyspepsia and sick headache. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla and found it the best remedy she ever used.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Made only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The Week's Happenings in the World.

Since 1890 drinking shops in Paris have increased from 14,000 to 21,000.

Phylloxera is reported spreading throughout the Mediterranean countries.

A New York colony has purchased 100 acres of land near Vacaville.

Bethlehem, Pa., has had fever and typhoid fever are reported at Salt Lake.

Increase for furnishing legal advice free to the poor is the latest thing in New York.

Unemployed in Paris are offered work in the country, and the event is to be marked by a celebration.

The business of exporting lumber to South America and the West Indies continues active in Portland, Maine.

Over one hundred thousand tons of ice have been taken out so far this year from the Kennebec River.

A new court house is being erected in Boston. Its site cost the city $900,000, while the building so far has only cost $200,000.

The Chinaman who wrote "Why I Am a Heathen," was recently taken down entering Canada, although he claimed to be a missionary.

Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, who has been about visit to her mother in this country, sailed for her home in Paris on Saturday.

The beach along San Luis Obispo bay, especially below Port Harford, and Cave Landing, is lined with dead fish. They are of the sardine species.

A fish hatchery is promised on Donner
Lake if the Sacramento Board of Trade will put up a $200 building, and subscriptions to that end are being made.

Hundreds of Boston girls are becoming so frequent in Montreal, Canada, that the Mayor has offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the culprits.

Mr. Hearn, of Quebec, has been the recipient of a diploma from the General at Rome of the Redemptorist Order, conferring him the dignity of its community.
The document was forwarded from Rome by the General to the Provincial at Baltimore.

The Eliseon Hotel and the cottage in which President Garfield died at Long Branch are owned by Charles Franklyn, who in Lockwood street Jail, New York, in default of $100,000 bail.

Herbert, the French Ambassador to Berlin, who was recently entertained by Prince Bismarck, says that he believes there will be no cause for war between France and Germany for many years.

Talk about a money panic in a country where the price of per cent. premium on its own four per cent. bonds, for the purpose of purchasing them and getting them out of the way.

Paris is to have a school for teaching book-binding—book-making, in fact—for engraving, typecasting, type-setting, printing, binding and gilding will be taught there. It will accommodate 300 pupils.

The ranges in Monterey county have suffered so heavily from the drought that sheep have to remove their stock from the devastated district. The farmers have suffered great damages.

Hey. Mr. Spurgeon, the famous English preacher, has refused the offer of $30,000 for delivering one hundred lectures in America. Mr. Spurgeon must be very unlike some other Englishmen.

The Parnell Sullivan-Dowlah gave a dinner recently at Brisbane to some Sydney guests. The wine in which coffee was served was the gift of Mr. Parnell.

Chicago policemen are now having a little "fun with the marauding Irish." They meet in squads every other day, and are instructed in the use of Winchester rifles, with which every policeman on the force is said to be supplied.

The appointment of all the leading prima on the Comstock lode are preparing a complete map of their underground workings through the various connections of accidents.

Among the gifts lately presented to
Pope Leo XIII. are a complete set of Sèvres porcelain, and an English advisory Bible, the Holy Bible, the Holy Bible ways as peacefully employed.

The British authorities on the West Africa coast have placed upon trial seven the King of Opobo for disregarding his treaty obligations to Great Britain. It is said that on one occasion, recently he beheaded 150 persons as a warning of the consequences of disregard of his orders.

Signor Serpieri, Prefect of Messina, lately fired on a victim to the cholera after devoting himself most heroically to

Poetry.

(For the MONITOR.)

POEM TWENTY.

Only a beautiful lily,
Fresh with the morning dew,
Place on the crystal water
That sends the valley through;
Robed in every whiteness
Not even a shadow to blight;
The lily, bright spotless garment,
Radiant in purity's light.

Into my soul stole the reverie—
Of life such, thou, am, because a sear;
Thy soul should be purer and fairer
Than this type of beauty you hold;
More measured than gems of the ocean,
More precious than silver or gold.

Why, then, should you wilfully tarnish
The mirror of God's holy love,
Upon you reflected the green
While Heaven hovers from above;
Virtue's jewels gleam brightest when chastity
Reflects from a pure stainless soul.
And Purity's pearl be the deepest,
In the waves of God's peace as they roll.

A pure thought is merely an echo
That rings from the depth in the heart;
And the child is indeed truly noble
When Purity leads it a part;
Or the life that knows not a blemish,
Whether it be high or low,
Whatever it may be, the purer shall reign,
And God, his most beautiful image,
Engraven on Heaven's fair face.

Let not a foul thought, then, rob you
Of a beauty of priceless worth;
Let not your purity's jewel
A seal of immortal birth;
Valiantly battle temptation,
For the virtue of purity is
Is the glorious light of the comet
That Illumines life's setting sun."

ZITA.

San Francisco, Oct.

(For the MONITOR.)

ROBERT BURNS'S CENTENNIAL DAY.

We hold the great memorial day,
Given Brin's brave and noble soul,
Who made the Scottish peasant
Since thy life's blood for Brin ran;
Blood the free pulsed then,
Are Brin's hearts and nobler man.

Take your honour beyond the time
That mortal being could survive,
The immortal spirit shall live,
Where Liberty is kept alive;
Where thinking spirit the spirit gave,
In glory burns above the grave.

Tought by thy life and martyr's death,
Thousands men on every clime,
Through all the bounds of mighty Earth,
Still hold thy name in memory's stores;
Because thou gave the power of song
Loved Freedom yet shall light thy home.

We pray that Heaven will hasten the day
When the bonds may be rights sundered
When the band in glow of May,
Shall see the bonds which hold them, by
When power of right through Earth's broad
Shall never there oppression's hands.

Farewell, young patriot, ever true,
Ye right fair Brin's many songs,
Through Heaven's fair Land, Brin's
Thy name shall live in deathless songs;

One day, young Bennet, o'er thy bones
A great marble tomb shall rise,
Then Brin shall ignore in its arms,
And live as pure as light of skies;
Ray of thy star's resplendent light,
Guide Brin's sons to paths of right.

Gold Hill, Nevada. Jerry F. McDonn.

FOR THE DOVE IN PURGATORY.

(As an enclosing of an old Latin hymn, translated by Mrs Sarah A. Fitzpatrick.)

In thy cold and great companion we lay of thee, O Mary!
To hasten with thee, O Mary!
Thy bitter cells
Thy bitter cells, inspiriting 'neath bunnest
Thy cells, inspiriting 'neath bunnest
Where the spinning fame of from every sh's de-Sing state.

To the souls of the departed, O Mary! for pr-
Their bitter cells of pure ecstatic is all-pure-Dwelling of the world's Creator, Mother of Its King and Saviour.
Ask that the bonds which hold them, by
Mr. Mary be undone.

The dead, O plous Mary! send up their sighs and Dwelling, all so fervently, that they may be set
From the bonds held upon them, and within Dwell with joys that are eternal for evermore with thee.

Oh! hasten, dear Mother Mary! show the depths Unto those who are immersing in the bitterness of pain
Obtain for them that Jesus by His Sacred
Wounds from which flowed forth the Precious
Blood that gladdens all labor.

Thou hope of those who cry to thee, O Mary!
Of the multitude of faithful who for their bodies pray.
Remember thou is mercy to oppose thy Son's was a rising, man, and appealed a partnership in the firm. But his wife's evident love of display weakened his chances of promotion,
and O Cecil recently fretted over the self-denial and economy her circumstances forced her to endure.

"I never wanted anything so bad in my life," she murmured, as she dried her eyes
and looked around the cosy breakfast-room,
with its warmth and sunlight, tasteful furniture, choice pictures, and blooming plants in the bay window, "and I think John might let me have them. That hateful Mrs. Payn will be sure to be out in something old in jewels. If I could only eclipse her! I must have them, somehow, for they would centrast beautifully with the snowy whiteness
of my dress."

She rose up with a languid yawn, and in stopping towards the window, tramped on some flat substance. She stooped down and picked up John's pocket-book.

"Bless me," she exclaimed, smiles dimpling her rosy cheeks, "what a lucky find! I wonder what's in it."

She smilingly unclasped it, and a roll of bank notes fell out which she counted with
a soft peculiar.

"Two hundred dollars exactly," she ejaculated. "And John never gives me a penny
the money. Well, what belongs to my husband belongs to me, and I will have that set
of sapphires."

She laughed gleefully as she waltzed out
of the room to dress, for she impulsively determined to secure the sapphires before John would miss the money. Delight lent haste
to her nimble fingers, and before many minutes she was in the street looking bright
in her walking suit.

Poor, heedless Cecil never thought of the consequences of her thoughtless act, although she expected John would rebuke her severely for spending the money; but she trusted to the influence that her own powers of persuasion to soften his wrath. He had never, as he said, refused anything in reason,
and if this was an apparently useless purchase, she could easily turn the jewels into money, if the rainy day John was always predicting ever arrived.

On her return from Baby & Co's, with
the jewel casket safely stowed away in her pocket, she was brought to a sudden standstill by meeting her husband coming out of the dining-room with a perturbed and anxious countenance. Her face flushed guilty, for she knew, or imagined she did,
the cause of his agitation.

"Cecil," he said hurriedly, "I have lost
my pocket-book. Did you find it?"

"Lost your pocket-book!" echoed Mrs.
Morgan, feigning great surprise and availing herself of the chance that she meant to delay
finding it, but the confession required more moral courage than she could muster at
present.

"Yes, lost my pocket-book," repeated Mr.
Morgan in a troubled voice; "and the money is it belonged to the firm."

Mrs. Morgan's heart stood still with consternation, and she grew white to the lips.

"Gone," she gasped, as if something was choking her, "all me—how it was."

"It was this way. Macray gave me $900
as I was leaving the office yesterday evening
to pay a bill we owed Hanby & Sons. But they were closed when I reached their office,
and I brought the money home with me, intending to pay it as I went down town this morning; but owing to a death in the family
the store was still closed, and I never knew
I had lost the money until I had reached our own office. Cecil, are you sure it's not in the house?"

"I—I am sure I don't know," stammered
Cecil, her conscience smitten with fear and merit-
fication to think rationally.

Not John's money! She felt dazed and troubled, and totally unable to confess her folly. She dropped into a ball chair, looking so weak and ill that John forgot his own
trouble in anxiety for Cecil.

"You must not be so frightened, wife,"
he said kindly; "it may turn up in the house. Come, help me to search for it."

Cecil rose up mechanically, and followed
him from room to room, listening in mute
terror to his regrets when the pocket-book
could not be found. Involuntarily her hand went down into the pocket of her dress, and
as she clutched the jewel-case in her cold
fingers a deadly faintness almost overcame
her, for, try as she would, she could not draw it forth, or force her lips to confess what to her awakened conscience seemed nothing less than theft. She knew her husband's indignation would be deep, although he boldly expressed, for dishonesty of any kind was contemptible in his eyes. Would he excuse it in his wife! Ah, no! and as the awful aspect of the affair presented itself to
her mind, her shame and agitation increased,
and she found it still more difficult to confess her error.

"Cecil, Cecil!" he called, as she hurried away, as after thoroughly ransacked the rooms they passed in the hall; "I must have dropped it in the house, and it cannot be found. Or, could any one have picked up your purse, Cecil? A startled expression came into his eyes, and he hastily examined
the inside pocket of his overcoat.

"No," he said, with a light laugh, "no
one could pick that pocket without my knowledge. It must have fallen out." He looked keenly—without any suspicion of the truth, however—at the lovely, drooping face
of his wife. "Cheer up, little wife," he said with affected gaiety. "I must go to the office; but you keep a sharp look for the money. It may have got knocked into
some dark corner."

"Yes—I—I—do," stammered Cecil, but
with feverish anxiety; "does the firm know
it?"

"Macray does. I told him before I left
the office."

And John Morgan shut the door with a bang, an unusual roughness for him; leaving
his wife standing in the dim light, as if stricken dumb.

* * *

The large, roomy office in the commission
house of Macray & Co., was a blaze of
golden spring sunshine, as John Morgan,
shouldering his way with that through the crisp
morning air, entered it, after his fruitless
search. His face wore a troubled expression as he met his mate Mr. Macray, a white-haired,
benevolent man.

"I have searched the house effectually for
that pocket-book, said——"

"You did not find it, John?" quickly interrupted Mr. Macray, with a curious smile.

"No, sir, I did not; and I cannot account
for its loss."

"John"—Mr. Macray laid his morning
paper across his knees, removed his gold spectacles, and looked up into the face of his faithful book-keeper—"I would never
for one moment doubt your word. But did you ask your wife about it?"

"I did."

"And she denied all knowledge of it?"

"She did not find it"—John Morgan looked more troubled than ever—"and we went over the house together."

"Ah." Mr. Macray's fine old face flushed slightly, and he lowered his voice, as if fearful of being overheard by the clerks in the
outer office.

"Listen to me a moment, John. To-day
is my daughter Sibyl's twentieth birthday,
and I went down to Baby and Co.'s to buy
her a set of sapphires that have been on exhibition for a long time. They were just what I wanted for a birthday gift, and the price was two hundred dollars. The clerk reputedly told me that they had been sold to Mrs. Morgan, the wife of my book-keeper,
but a few moments before."

"Cecil?"—John Morgan grasped the rail of the desk for support—"my wife. Where did she get the money?"

"That is just the question I want you to answer—where did she get it?" said Mr.
Macray, keenly watching the trembling face
of the young man. "I asked the clerk if they were paid for. Yes, he replied, in full,
and he opened the safe and showed me a roll of bank notes; and John, much as I regret to say it, it was the identical roll I gave you last evening to pay that bill at Hanby & Sons. Now, did your wife find the pocket-book, or was it ever lost, John?"

John Morgan dropped to the floor like
one stricken a heavy blow, and a slight
stream of blood issued from his pallid lips.
Mr. Macray hastily telephoned for a physician, and Mrs. Morgan.

"Don't be alarmed," he said, faintly;
"I have not been strong lately, and the shock was too much for me. O, Cecil,
Cecil."

Half an hour later Mrs. Morgan entered the office with a white, scared face. Her eyes were blinded by tears, and Mr. Macray and the physician were unnoticed as she hurried to her husband's side.

"John," she cried in agonized distress, "don't let this loss of that money kill you. I found it, and spent it—I didn't know it belonged to the firm—but the set of sapphires."

She threw the casket into his lap, and
John laid his hand against the carved back of his chair, his face slowly reddening with shame.

"Speak to me, John," she sobbed
hysterically, "I'll never be so wicked again
I never spend a dollar without your consent."

Mr. Macray stepped forward and laid his hand on her arm.

"Don't upbraid your husband, Mrs. Morgan;
he is faint yet. Settle this matter in the future."

But Cecil, in deep humility, went down on her knees and laid her face on her husband's breast, breathing words of contrition that melted and reassured the stricken man.

Mr. Macray, with a gentleness she could not repel, explained the sin of overreaching
her husband's salary, and his folly of useless display, ending the matter by placing the set of sapphires, and promising to keep the whole transaction a secret.

And John Morgan in the peaceful years
that followed, often blessed the day he lost
his employer's money, for it transformed
Cecil into a mate of noble worth. And Cecil —well—Cecil never saw a sapphire without
a sudden sensation of horror.

Converted through the Rosary.

A letter received recently informs us, says
the Ave Maria, of an instance of a remarkable conversion obtained by means of
that most salutary of all devotions in honor of the Mother of God, the Holy Rosary.
The father of the writer for upwards of twenty-three years had never approached
the Sacraments, or given the least thought to religion; though during that long time a favorite daughter prayed fervently for the Blessed Virgin, reciting daily the Salve Regina
to obtain his conversion. At last she had him enrolled in the Archconfraternity of the Holy Rosary, and commended him to the protection of our Blessed Mother.

A few months afterwards he was taken seriously ill, and the daughter sent for a priest. To her surprise her father consented to make a general confession, and received Holy Communion. He asked for a pair of beads, and during the four months of his illness recited them with great fervor and piety. In his last moments he was fortified by the sacraments of the Church, and died in the best disposition, just as his children, surrounding his bedside, concluded
the recitation of the Rosary.

This example is but one of the many that might be recorded of the power and patronage of the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary,
confraternity, and now at the commencement
of the month of October, is a fitting time
to call attention to the subject.

St. Luke, Evangelist.

St. Luke, a physician at Antioch, and a painter, became a convert of St Paul, and afterwards his fellow-labourer. He is known to us as the historian of the New Testament. Through his pen we learn of our Lord's life, the Evangelist diligently gathered information from the lips of the Apostles, and wrote, as he tells us, all things in order. The Acts of Apostles written by the great Evangelist as a sequel to the Gospel, bring the history of the Church down to the first imprisonment of St. Paul at Rome. The humble historian never name himself, but by his occasional use of "we
for "they" we can trace the hand of his presence in the scenes which he describes. We find that he sailed with St. Paul and Si-silas from Troas to Macedonia; stayed behind apparently for some years at Philippi,
and, lastly, shared the shipwreck and perils
of the memorable voyage to Rome. Hence his own narrative ends, but from St. Paul's Epistles we learn that St. Luke was his faithful companion to the end. He died a martyr's death some years afterwards in Achaia.
Let us pray to the Holy Evangelist that he obtain for us a share in those virtues which made him the worthy companion of the Apostles and which will fit us for the same blessed company in the future.

How Mr. George Travels.

Henry George, the friend of the workingmen, while on his way to Cobosa on
Monday, where he spoke in the afternoon,
occupied a whole section of a palace car
from New York on the train arriving in this city at 4:30 p. m. He sat in a beatific contemplation of the attractiveness of being a workingman and a bread-winner the while he partook of a quiet and consoled himself with the reflection that no millionaire, corporal
or other enemy of this Anti Poverty Society
could intrude upon him in his private version. He probably did not tell his auditors
last night, however, of the disagreeable
incident in palace cars, as now permitted to him through the successful abolition of poverty by taking upside of the workingman.—Albany Argus.

Archbishop Leray's Will.

The will of the Most Rev. Francis Xavier
Leray, who departed this life at his native
place in France, has been admitted to probate in New Orleans. He bequeaths all his property, movable and immovable, in France,
to his two sisters, Susanne Leray and Marie
Leray.

All properties held by him in Louisiana
he bequeaths Right Rev. Edward Fitzgerald,
Bishop of Little Rock; Right Rev. Antoine
Durieu, Bishop of Natchitoches, and Very
Rev. G. A. Rouxel, V. G., whom he appoints his universal legatees and executors of his estate.

It is the desire of the deceased Archbishop that all his personal property and debts be distributed as follows: Five hundred dollars each to his sisters Susanne and Marie;
five hundred dollars to each of his brothers and nieces; three hundred dollars to the priests of Natchitoches for Masses; two hundred dollars for a service and Masses in his native town, Saint-Genis-Laval. The sacred vessels used in the Diocese of New Orleans for Masses to be sold for his intentions.

The witnesses to the will are the Archbishop's will were Very Rev. Father G.
A. Rouxel, Vicar General of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and Archbishop pro-
tem., and Very Rev. Father Hyacinthe
Migriot, Pastor of St. Louis Cathedral.

—Catarrh is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood and gives the whole system health and strength. Try this "peculiar medicine." It is prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

—Patent medicines advertised and sold on a fair publication must be paid for in advance.

Literary Miscellany.

A Set of Sapphires.

A Domestic Story with a Moral.

"John"—pretty Mrs. Cecil Morgan stood beside her husband's chair with a strange hesitancy of look and manner—"could you
let me have a little money?"

John Morgan, head book-keeper in the commission-house of Macray & Co., laid down his morning paper with a stifled sigh.
He looked up kindly into the fair, pen-tinted face of his young wife, whose sapphire-blue eyes were bent on his face eagerly, as if she was a lovely, loving, but thoughtless
little woman—she was his wife and he loved her devotedly—but sometimes, not often,
her vanities jarred on his finer sensibilities;
for Cecil Morgan was not the woman to deeply understand a man like her husband, whose worth, honesty, and nobility of thought was simply, incomprehensible to her tender but shallow nature.

"So you want a little money. How much,
Cecil?"

He smiled as the dimples came and went
in the smooth pink cheeks.

"Oh, ever so much, John."

Cecil's spirits rose as she saw the jovialed degree, and she laughed in a childish fashion.

"Well, out with it. How much? Tell me—is she bankrupt? I must hurry to town, as we are unusually busy just now."

"You are always that when I want say-
thing," pouted Cecil.

"Business is business," he said, rather impatiently. "Tell me what you want."

"Why, you know that lovely set of sapphires in Baby & Co.'s window—" Mrs.
Morgan paused, and her spirits fell a trifle,
for John's face grew suddenly grave—
"they are just perfect and would suit my style—match my eyes, you know—and they are only $200. I want them to wear with my white moire at Mrs. Chassell's reception."

"Indeed!" was John's comment, as he
coughed slightly.

"Cecil, I am sorry to refuse you, but I cannot spare that amount of money at
present."

"But they are just lovely, John," persisted Mrs. Morgan, with heightened color,
"and so unique. The settings are peculiar in design—so chaste and delicate, and they are so cheap. Only $200 the complete set."

"Cecil"—John Morgan looked as if he was about to tell some very unpalatable truths—"what would my employer think of my wife running a $200 set of jewelry!
Some of your evening dresses have already excited comment; but no one knew I had walked to and from the office, denied myself
cigars, and even the daily papers, to pay for
your extravagance."

"My extravagance," echoed Mrs. Morgan,
with a subdued wail, as she put her handkerchief to her eyes and burst into childish tears—a weak woman's best defence. "That always the cry—my extravagance."

"Yes, Cecil," he said sadly, as he laid his hand upon her shoulder, "my extravagance.
But I am tired of living on your pace fare,
and the overbearing grinding in everything but dress. You do not need this jewelry, and it would not be advisable to wear it if you had it; for men with only moderate salaries must pay up with moderate incomes.
I will deny you nothing in reason, but you
cannot have those sapphires."

There was a ring of unmistakable decision
in his voice. He slowly drew on his overcoat and gloves, evidently expecting some reply from his wife. But she made none.

"Don't let an quarrel over such baubles, Cecil," he said gently. "Life is too short to be wasted in foolish bickerings."

"Then the door closed on him, and Mrs.
Morgan burst into a passion of angry tears.
For the last set her frivolous heart on the sapphires, and she not often she did not obtain her heart's desire. She was a blonde of the most attractive type—very lovely, with a dewy-pink face, and a graceful figure that she loved to array in costly raiment.
Her husband's forced economy was often a sore trial to her, and was the cause of many annoying differences. Had she possessed one atom of financial judgment she would have seen that their present style of living taxed her husband's salary to the utmost.
But she had been a spoiled and petted child, educated under fashionable influences, and when, by one of those strange freaks of fancy, John Morgan—grave, matter-of-fact John—proposed, Cecil, after the manner of too many of her sex, married him, with the expectation that her married life would be one long dream of satisfied wants, for John was a rising man, and accepted a partnership in the firm. But his wife's evident love of
display weakened his chances of promotion,
and O Cecil recently fretted over the self-denial and economy her circumstances forced
her to endure.

"I never wanted anything so bad in my life," she murmured, as she dried her eyes
and looked around the cosy breakfast-room,
with its warmth and sunlight, tasteful furniture, choice pictures, and blooming plants in the bay window, "and I think John might let me have them. That hateful Mrs. Payn
will be sure to be out in something old in jewels. If I could only eclipse her! I must have them, somehow, for they would cen-
trast beautifully with the snowy whiteness
of my dress."

She rose up with a languid yawn, and in stopping towards the window, tramped on some flat substance. She stooped down and picked up John's pocket-book.

"Bless me," she exclaimed, smiles dimpling
her rosy cheeks, "what a lucky find! I wonder what's in it."

She smilingly unclasped it, and a roll of bank notes fell out which she counted with
a soft peculiar.

"Two hundred dollars exactly," she ejaculated. "And John never gives me a penny
the money. Well, what belongs to my husband belongs to me, and I will have that set
of sapphires."

She laughed gleefully as she waltzed out
of the room to dress, for she impulsively determined to secure the sapphires before John would miss the money. Delight lent haste
to her nimble fingers, and before many minutes she was in the street looking bright
in her walking suit.

Poor, heedless Cecil never thought of the

Our Blessed Mother.

AN UNKNOWN SHRINE.

A FAVORED PORTION OF FRANCE.

Our Lady and the Calvary of Hetherram.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH FOR THE MONITOR]

The Pantheist Spinoza, believed that "the everlasting laws of the universe left no room for miracles, and the prayer with him was
Are miracles relatively possible?"

The answer which most come at once to the mind of every true believer is falling back to the grand refrain, "All things are possible to God." Many occurrences may be only relatively wonderful—miracles proper for, as a well known writer says, "We do not believe as the savages do, that the telescope has the power of bringing the far instantly near."

To us it is only extraordinary as the result of scientific discovery, the accumulat-ment and natural grouping of systematic study and the evolving of experimentary research. We only realize that we thus catch a mere glimpse and shadowy outline of the immensity of the firmament and the humblest magnifying of the infinite. To doubt the possibility of what we call miracles therefore, is to deny the economic plan and the measure of God's wisdom as regards mankind—He who is Infinite and God of infinity.

In attempting to give in abstract, an account of Notre Dame and the Calvary at Betharram, the words of St. Augustine may be used as a preface. "Men who have taken to the first miracles and have recorded them phased God to make faith annoyedunary possessing of the miracle, St. Augustine says, "Min unmistrusted in any branched a liberal of vention, without any of the refinement of leaden learning, unskilled in grammar, not armed with dialectic, not adorned with rhetoric, but plain fisherman, and very few uneducated, these were the men whom Christ sent with the note of faith to the sea of this world, and then took out of every sea so many fishes, and even the philosophers themselves wondered as they are rare." So in the wonders of Betharram, we see Christ still manifesting Himself to the innocent and humble.

Betharram is situated at the extremity of the diocese of Bayonne, between Pau and Lourdes. It had its origin, says the French
book, from which we learn these particulars,
and (which is endorsed by the Bishop of Bayonne), "in a number of the darkest days of the year." A few young shepherds guarding their flocks, one day suddenly perceived an extraordinary flame arising from a bush near a rocky ledge of the mountain—
the same spot where was afterwards erected the high altar of the chapel. The young shepherds approached, wondered, and on approaching nearer to this flaming bush they discovered in the midst of the bush which seemed to burn without consuming, a beautiful figure of the Most Blessed Virgin looking in her arms the infant Jesus. Happy and rejoicing in this wonderful discovery, they ran to tell their parents, and the news
which was repeated spread quickly through the village. The news was soon all near the mountain. Clothed in his sacerdotal robes, the Curé took the image with great ceremonies and placed it in a niche which had been hurriedly prepared for it, and which was near the river Gave; but it seemed that was not the spot intended for it, as it was miraculously transported back to the rocky ledge where it had first been found.
It was afterwards carried in honor to the parish church, and it was presently deposited, to be better able to understand what it was counsel as miraculous more than the ordinary occurrences of a religious people, or whether it was an especial blessing bestowed by Providence on these participants of simple and primitive faith. The Curé had the doors of the chapel securely closed and a guard placed over it lest a third night, notwithstanding the strictest surveillance, and that the doors of the church were still closed, the image returned miraculously to the rock where the young shepherds had first found it. This forbidding prodigy, but nevertheless true, happened in the Bastide de Betharram in the year 1614, to the simple tants of the immediate neighborhood who had no other interest to insure upon the story there was an agreement in the reflection that no millionaire, corporal
or other enemy of this Anti Poverty Society
could intrude upon him in his private version. He probably did not tell his auditors
last night, however, of the disagreeable
incident in palace cars, as now permitted to him
through the successful abolition of poverty by taking upside of the workingman.—Albany Argus.

Converted through the Rosary.

A letter received recently informs us, says
the Ave Maria, of an instance of a remarkable conversion obtained by means of
that most salutary of all devotions in honor
of the Mother of God, the Holy Rosary.
The father of the writer for upwards of twenty-three years had never approached
the Sacraments, or given the least thought
to religion; though during that long time a favorite daughter prayed fervently for the Blessed Virgin, reciting daily the Salve Regina
to obtain his conversion. At last she had him enrolled in the Archconfraternity of the Holy Rosary, and commended him to the protection of our Blessed Mother.

A few months afterwards he was taken seriously ill, and the daughter sent for a priest. To her surprise her father consented to make a general confession, and received Holy Communion. He asked for a pair of beads, and during the four months of his illness recited them with great fervor and piety. In his last moments he was fortified by the sacraments of the Church, and
died in the best disposition, just as his children, surrounding his bedside, concluded
the recitation of the Rosary.

This example is but one of the many that might be recorded of the power and patronage of the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary,
confraternity, and now at the commencement
of the month of October, is a fitting time
to call attention to the subject.

St. Luke, Evangelist.

St. Luke, a physician at Antioch, and a painter, became a convert of St Paul, and afterwards his fellow-labourer. He is best known to us as the historian of the New Testament. Through his pen we learn of our Lord's life, the Evangelist diligently gathered information from the lips of the Apostles, and wrote, as he tells us, all things
in order. The Acts of Apostles written by the great Evangelist as a sequel to the Gospel, bring the history of the Church
down to the first imprisonment of St. Paul at Rome. The humble historian never name himself, but by his occasional use of "we
for "they" we can trace the hand of his presence in the scenes which he describes. We find that he sailed with St. Paul and Si-
silas from Troas to Macedonia; stayed behind apparently for some years at Philippi,
and, lastly, shared the shipwreck and perils
of the memorable voyage to Rome. Hence
his own narrative ends, but from St. Paul's Epistles we learn that St. Luke was his faithful companion to the end. He died a mar-
tyr's death some years afterwards in Achaia.
Let us pray to the Holy Evangelist that he obtain for us a share in those virtues which made him the worthy companion of the Apostles and which will fit us for the same
blessed company in the future.

How Mr. George Travels.

Henry George, the friend of the workingmen, while on his way to Cobosa on
Monday, where he spoke in the afternoon,
occupied a whole section of a palace car
from New York on the train arriving in this city at 4:30 p. m. He sat in a beatific contemplation of the attractiveness of being a workingman and a bread-winner the while
he partook of a quiet and consoled himself with
the reflection that no millionaire, corporal
or other enemy of this Anti Poverty Society
could intrude upon him in his private version. He probably did not tell his auditors
last night, however, of the disagreeable
incident in palace cars, as now permitted to him
through the successful abolition of poverty by taking upside of the workingman.—Albany Argus.

Archbishop Leray's Will.

The will of the Most Rev. Francis Xavier
Leray, who departed this life at his native
place in France, has been admitted to probate in New Orleans. He bequeaths all his property, movable and immovable, in France,
to his two sisters, Susanne Leray and Marie
Leray.

All properties held by him in Louisiana
he bequeaths Right Rev. Edward Fitzgerald,
Bishop of Little Rock; Right Rev. Antoine
Durieu, Bishop of Natchitoches, and Very
Rev. G. A. Rouxel, V. G., whom he appoints
his universal legatees and executors of his estate.

It is the desire of the deceased Archbishop that all his personal property and debts be distributed as follows: Five hundred dollars each to his sisters Susanne and Marie;
five hundred dollars to each of his brothers
and nieces; three hundred dollars to the priests of Natchitoches for Masses; two hundred dollars for a service and Masses in his native town, Saint-Genis-Laval. The sacred vessels used in the Diocese of New Orleans for Masses to be sold for his intentions.

The witnesses to the will are the
Archbishop's will were Very Rev. Father G.
A. Rouxel, Vicar General of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and Archbishop pro-
tem., and Very Rev. Father Hyacinthe
Migriot, Pastor of St. Louis Cathedral.

—Catarrh is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood and gives the whole system health and strength. Try this "peculiar medicine." It is prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

—Patent medicines advertised and sold on a fair publication must be paid for in advance.

AN ARTIST'S TROUBLES.

Some Comic Scenes in Real Life.

Reader, were you ever a photographer?
If so, then you need not scan the first part of the sketch, except it be to sympathize with the writer. If you never were, you will most likely never be any trouble, and thank your good genius you are what you
are.

Looking over my diary the other day, I find some of the following little notes, while I was in the first flush of my photographic fever.

July 1.—Innocent looking old lady in bid check drove came in today; after jeeping around her every conceivable angle, she said:

"Do you the man who takes daguerreotypes?"

"Yes, ma'am," I said; "I am the photographer."

"Oh, yes!" said she. "Portugeratype that's the thing I want. I didn't find for it too day, but I just thought I'd kinder step in—not that I was meant to delay
finding it, but the confession required more moral courage than she could muster at
present.

"Yes, lost my pocket-book," repeated Mr.
Morgan in a troubled voice; "and the
money is it belonged to the firm."

Mrs. Morgan's heart stood still with consternation, and she grew white to the lips.

"Gone," she gasped, as if something was choking her, "all me—how it was."

"It was this way. Macray gave me $900
as I was leaving the office yesterday evening
to pay a bill we owed Hanby & Sons. But they were closed when I reached their office,
and I brought the money home with me, intending to pay it as I went down town this morning; but owing to a death in the family
the store was still closed, and I never knew
I had lost the money until I had reached our own office. Cecil, are you sure it's not in
the house?"

"I—I am sure I don't know," stammered
Cecil, her conscience smitten with fear and merit-
fication to think rationally.

Not John's money! She felt dazed and troubled, and totally unable to confess her folly. She dropped into a ball chair, looking so weak and ill that John forgot his own
trouble in anxiety for Cecil.

"You must not be so frightened, wife,"
he said kindly; "it may turn up in the house. Come, help me to search for it."

Cecil rose up mechanically, and followed
him from room to room, listening in mute
terror to his regrets when the pocket-book
could not be found. Involuntarily her hand went down into the pocket of her dress, and
as she clutched the jewel-case in her cold
fingers a deadly faintness almost overcame
her, for, try as she would, she could not draw it forth, or force her lips to confess
what to her awakened conscience seemed nothing less than theft. She knew her husband's indignation would be deep, although he boldly expressed, for dishonesty of any kind was contemptible in his eyes. Would he excuse it in his wife! Ah, no! and as the awful aspect of the affair presented itself to
her mind, her shame and agitation increased,
and she found it still more difficult to confess her error.

"Cecil, Cecil!" he called, as she hurried away, as after thoroughly ransacked the rooms they passed in the hall; "I must have dropped it in the house, and it cannot be found. Or, could any one have picked up your purse, Cecil? A startled expression came into his eyes, and he hastily examined
the inside pocket of his overcoat.

"No," he said, with a light laugh, "no
one could pick that pocket without my knowledge. It must have fallen out." He looked keenly—without any suspicion of the truth, however—at the lovely, drooping face
of his wife. "Cheer up, little wife," he said
with affected gaiety. "I must go to the office; but you keep a sharp look for the money. It may have got knocked into
some dark corner."

"Yes—I—I—do," stammered Cecil, but with feverish anxiety; "does the firm know
it?"

"Macray does. I told him before I left
the office."

And John Morgan shut the door with a bang, an unusual roughness for him; leaving
his wife standing in the dim light, as if stricken dumb.

* * *

The large, roomy office in the commission
house of Macray & Co., was a blaze of
golden spring sunshine, as John Morgan,
shouldering his way with that through the crisp
morning air, entered it, after his fruitless
search. His face wore a troubled expression
as he met his mate Mr. Macray, a white-haired,
benevolent man.

"I have searched the house effectually for
that pocket-book, said——"

"You did not find it, John?" quickly interrupted Mr. Macray, with a curious smile.

"No, sir, I did not; and I cannot account
for its loss."

"John"—Mr. Macray laid his morning
paper across his knees, removed his gold spectacles, and looked up into the face of his faithful book-keeper—"I would never
for one moment doubt your word. But did you ask your wife about it?"

"I did."

"And she denied all knowledge of it?"

"She did not find it"—John Morgan looked more troubled than ever—"and we went over the house together."

"Ah." Mr. Macray's fine old face flushed slightly, and he lowered his voice, as if fearful of being overheard by the clerks in the
outer office.

"Listen to me a moment, John. To-day
is my daughter Sibyl's twentieth birthday,
and I went down to Baby and Co.'s to buy
her a set of sapphires that have been on exhibition for a long time. They were just what I wanted for a birthday gift, and the price was two hundred dollars. The clerk
reputedly told me that they had been sold
to Mrs. Morgan, the wife of my book-keeper,
but a few moments before."

"Cecil?"—John Morgan grasped the rail
of the desk for support—"my wife. Where did she get the money?"

"That is just the question I want you to answer—where did she get it?" said Mr.
Macray, keenly watching the trembling face
of the young man. "I asked the clerk if they were paid for. Yes, he replied, in full,
and he opened the safe and showed me a
roll of bank notes; and John, much as I regret to say it, it was the identical roll I gave
you last evening to pay that bill at Hanby & Sons. Now, did your wife find the pocket-book, or was it ever lost, John?"

John Morgan dropped to the floor like
one stricken a heavy blow, and a slight
stream of blood issued from his pallid lips.
Mr. Macray hastily telephoned for a physician, and Mrs. Morgan.

"Don't be alarmed," he said, faintly;
"I have not been strong lately, and the shock was too much for me. O, Cecil,
Cecil."

Half an hour later Mrs. Morgan entered the office with a white, scared face. Her eyes were blinded by tears, and Mr. Macray
and the physician were unnoticed as she hurried to her husband's side.

"John," she cried in agonized distress, "don't let this loss of that money kill you. I found it, and spent it—I didn't know it belonged to the firm—but the set of sapphires."

She threw the casket into his lap, and
John laid his hand against the carved back
of his chair, his face slowly reddening with
shame.

"Speak to me, John," she sobbed
hysterically, "I'll never be so wicked again
I never spend a dollar without your consent."

Mr. Macray stepped forward and laid his hand on her arm.

"Don't upbraid your husband, Mrs. Morgan;
he is faint yet. Settle this matter in
the future."

But Cecil, in deep humility, went down on
her knees and laid her face on her husband's breast, breathing words of contrition that melted and reassured the stricken man.

Mr. Macray, with a gentleness she could not repel, explained the sin of overreaching
her husband's salary, and the folly of useless display, ending the matter by placing the set of sapphires, and promising to keep the
whole transaction a secret.

And John Morgan in the peaceful years
that followed, often blessed the day he lost
his employer's money, for it transformed
Cecil into a mate of noble worth. And Cecil
—well—Cecil never saw a sapphire without
a sudden sensation of horror.

Converted through the Rosary.

A letter received recently informs us, says
the Ave Maria, of an instance of a remarkable conversion obtained by means of
that most salutary of all devotions in honor
of the Mother of God, the Holy Rosary.
The father of the writer for upwards of twenty-three years had never approached
the Sacraments, or given the least thought
to religion; though during that long time a favorite daughter prayed fervently for the Blessed Virgin, reciting daily the Salve Regina
to obtain his conversion. At last she had him enrolled in the Archconfraternity of the Holy Rosary, and commended him to the protection of our Blessed Mother.

A few months afterwards he was taken seriously ill, and the daughter sent for a priest. To her surprise her father consented to make a general confession, and received Holy Communion. He asked for a pair of beads, and during the four months of his illness recited them with great fervor and piety. In his last moments he was fortified by the sacraments of the Church, and
died in the best disposition, just as his children, surrounding his bedside, concluded
the recitation of the Rosary.

This example is but one of the many that might be recorded of the power and patronage of the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary,
confraternity, and now at the commencement
of the month of October, is a fitting time
to call attention to the subject.

St. Luke, Evangelist.

St. Luke, a physician at Antioch, and a painter, became a convert of St Paul, and afterwards his f

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

A VESPER PRAYER.

[FROM THE STANDARD.]

Life is fragile, oh! I know it,
And temptation is the foe,
Jesu Christ!
Jesu Christ!
Wish the water of Thy grace,
Turn our hearts and make us pure,
Pure as angels, oh! assist us,
Dulce Sanctæ Jesu Christus!

Then, O Mary pure and sinless,
Mother of Jesu's holy Child!
Jesu Christ!
Jesu Christ!
Speak with Him who knows our soul,
Lead us to the Heaven great;
Cease us, lest we stand not,
Mirdre del Infante Christus!

Seraphs of sweet Heaven, hear
The fine plaudits of our prayer—
"Jesu Christ!
Jesu Christ!"
Quoting Mercy's holiest lore,
Oh! with Christ defend our souls;
Be our vow of pale amber on,
Angels del Infante Christus!

—ST. ANTHONY DELTA.

THE SUN UNDERMINED BY TIME.

O glorious, bright, transcendent orb,
Champion, immortal, fabulous light of Day—
Thou, whose fair face, in beauty ever new,
Thou hast gazed upon creation's dawn, and
With why day hence hoarded the first man
Of Time; History's pages thou hast made
With thy quadrilateral form of Time's wealth
The Ganges crawls from the Great Creator's
Hand, fresh and new, whilst the progenitor
Of man, before the fall—Adam and Eve—
With glad hearts walked beneath thy kindlier Smile.
Without change of Time, see fall of Empires
Can ever complain to the home of thy Palace at the breakfast table, after first baby
Ing her grandfather to his own special corner, where he sat comfortably enough in a roomy paddle arm chair.
Their talk ran principally on the prospects of a good "catch," on the return of the men, on gratitude for the fine weather, and kindred topics. There was a marked absence of anything like gossip or malicious accounts of their neighbors' lives and actions.
Breakfast over, Katie rose and took down from a peg two little brown straw hats.
"Don't lose your time, dears, on the road,"
she said, as she lifted the hats on the fair, curly heads of her young sisters. "Here are your aloes of bread. Have you your books all right? There, kiss me and run away.
Tall Sister Ellen! shall be up to-morrow at the convent. It is the anniversary of my First Communion.
"Is it indeed, Katie?" asked Clary, the youngest, with an expression of pleased wonder.
"Of course it is, you little goose; don't you remember?
Again, the second sister, exclaimed with a laugh: "Yes, we'll tell her, Katie, and maybe next year we'll be able to say the same ourselves."
"Why, how are we?" argued Clary, with blue, wide opened eyes.
"Don't stand talking, children, or you'll
be late," urged Katie.
So, still arguing the point, they walked away, and at first, but presently coming to an agreement. Her grandfather Philip Dwyer, was the only one who remained the loving eyes that watched them from the room doorway.
"Don't stand talking, children, or you'll
be late," urged Katie.
So, still arguing the point, they walked away, and at first, but presently coming
to an agreement. Her grandfather Philip
Dwyer, was the only one who remained
the loving eyes that watched them from the
room doorway.

Literary Miscellany.

The Ocean's Prey.

A SEXTOR.

BY A. O'NEILL DAUNT.

CHAPTER I.

The Sun was
Calm as the cloudless heaven, the heaven clearest;
So blue, so pure, so cloudless, so fair,
Far down within the watery sky repose.
The mighty mass she shove
Enrobed with a zone of love—
A zone of life and bright light.
That makes her wakeful eye more bright.
—WILSON.

One lovely, breezy, sunshiny morning in June, about an twelve years ago, a young girl might have been described standing in the small garden that fronted her grandfather's cottage, which was situated, adjoining the village, in a southern English shire. Very sweet and pretty Katie Winthrop looked as she stood among the bright flowers still bathed in dew, and with one hand shading her eyes, gazed out to seaward. Her most prist dress showed off her slender figure to advantage, unrelieved though it was by trimming or ornament. Her dark wavy hair was caught up in a low coil at the back of her head, and it from divided over a white, open brow. Her eyes were gray, with a clear, frank, trustful expression, and looking into them one seemed to read the innocence and within.

So far as instant or two did she stay to inhale the fragrance of the morning and the flowers; then, as if impatiens to call from the house, she re-entered the little porch all surrounded with honeysuckle and with rose just bursting into bloom.

Katie was the sole nurse and attendant of her old grandfather, who besides her, was all of her sisters, sole and undisputed mistress of the cottage. Her mother had died a long time previously, with her last breath entreating Katie to fill her place to her sisters with the other.

Tom Winthrop, the father, was a fisher man, and seldom at home, and for a few months back the only brother, Dick, had joined his father in his fishing expeditions. They were absent now, as Katie took her place at the breakfast table, after first bidding her grandfather to his own special corner, where he sat comfortably enough in a roomy paddle arm chair.

Their talk ran principally on the prospects of a good "catch," on the return of the men, on gratitude for the fine weather, and kindred topics. There was a marked absence of anything like gossip or malicious accounts of their neighbors' lives and actions.

Breakfast over, Katie rose and took down from a peg two little brown straw hats.

"Don't lose your time, dears, on the road, she said, as she lifted the hats on the fair, curly heads of her young sisters. "Here are your aloes of bread. Have you your books all right? There, kiss me and run away. Tall Sister Ellen I shall be up to-morrow at the convent. It is the anniversary of my First Communion.

"Is it indeed, Katie?" asked Clary, the youngest, with an expression of pleased wonder.

"Of course it is, you little goose; don't you remember?

Again, the second sister, exclaimed with a laugh: "Yes, we'll tell her, Katie, and maybe next year we'll be able to say the same ourselves."

"Why, how are we?" argued Clary, with blue, wide opened eyes.

"Don't stand talking, children, or you'll be late," urged Katie.

So, still arguing the point, they walked away, and at first, but presently coming to an agreement. Her grandfather Philip Dwyer, was the only one who remained from the room doorway.

THE ALTAR BOY.

It was in fair old Zeln,
Where the Rhine flows by,
In dark days of oppression
Of the Church of Christ;
That priests were hunted down like wolves,
Or hanged upon the gibbet
Or hanged upon—the like proclaimed
For such—alive and still the dear one So anxiously looked for had not made their appearance.

That day closed like many another. Some neighbors, young girls for the most part, came over in the twilight, and chatted with Katie in the garden as they worked, while one or two old men, as old as himself, and discussing politics and the chances of the fishing with Tom Winthrop.

The dusk grew deeper, and all departed to their homes. Then the little family sat down to supper, after which Katie saw her sisters to bed, first making them say their prayers and watching with tender eyes their reverent attitudes and clasped hands.

But long after the old man had gone to bed, long after the children slept and dreamed happy dreams, Katie remained kneeling at the unshuttered window, looking out with wistful eyes upon the waters of the ocean that hoved and glistened in the calm, soft moonlight. Her thoughts were not so freely with the father and brother who pursued their avocations on its treacherous shore for her, but another dearer still.

She wondered what the future had in store for her, and if it would always thus lead a peaceful life in the little seaside cottage.

"Shall I still marry," she thought with a sigh, "and I may have to find out my own living."

Then she dropped her head on her hands, and prayed for resignation to whatever trials
God might have in store for her.

"I have something else to do," she thought again, "than speculate about what may happen; I have to prepare for Communion to-morrow," and fervently making the sign of the cross, Katie gave herself up for the next half hour to her prayers. These finished she went to bed, after ascertaining by another glance through the window that the night was calm, and that the wavelets danced and sparkled as the tide moved out. The noise of a cuckoo from a distant wood crooned blind with the splash of waters in scoring Katie fell asleep, and her head had been three minutes on the pillow.

CHAPTER II.

For her it sorrow lay in wait,
She saw not he wait nigh,
And if a smile could dazzle Fate,
He might have passed her by;
Oh, would that Time's powerful hand had been
Then had that smile been lasting's fetter!
HENRY TAYLOR.

—Ode rate the will,
Fill thy wind passions all be still,
Know God—and bring thy heart to know
The joys which Religion bestows.
THOMAS PARNELL.

The next morning was bright and cool, less; but as the day went on the heat became more and more intense. The cattle stood panting in the fields, the birds ceased to sing, the glare from the sea became painful to the sight. Katie had attended the Mass at the convent where she had learned her lessons as a child.

At a cloister window stood a nun absorbed in the reading of a letter, from which she scarcely raised her eyes, when a lay Sister approached her with the words:

"Katie Winthrop would like to see you for a few minutes, Sister Ellen.

"Yes, in a moment," she answered.

But not for many moments did she stir from her place at the window, and there were tears in her eyes as she finally folded the letter and turned away.

"My poor sister," she murmured; "would to God I could bring you back to the faith and love of your mother years. And yet what would that wish be worth?

She sighed, and again the tears fell from her eyes as blindingly that she found it necessary to enter the chapel, there to grow composed before presenting herself to Katie.

"Did you think I never was coming?" she asked, with so bright a smile that no one could imagine sorrow hidden behind it.

"Indeed, I thought you never would yesterday. Come with me and we shall have a little chat before we part.

Sister Ellen led the way by a shaded door into the garden.

"How are you getting on, dear child?
This, I know, is the anniversary of your
First Communion, is it not, how long ago?

"Five years ago, Katie hastened to say,
"So long! But its memory abide with you. So let it be to the end. Each returning anniversary brings us nearer and nearer to the Eternal Communion in heaven. I may see you a picture before you go as a souvenir. And let me tell you how pleased we are to hear such constant good accounts of you. You are an example not only to your own family but to your Protestant neighbors, and that reminds to the glory of our holy religion.

Sister Ellen paused a moment, looking at Katie, whose downcast eyes and blushing cheek bespoke at once her joy and her humility.

"I shall see you a nun," she went on,
after that scarcely perceptible pause during which she had prayed for strength to preserve her composure.

"There were once two sisters whose mother was dead, the oldest was nine years old and the youngest three.

"Child, the eldest, was fortunate to have been in a great measure formed and trained by that pious, loving mother, by her old grandfather, who neither cared little sisters, sole and undisputed mistress of the cottage. Her mother had died a long time previously, with her last breath entreating Katie to fill her place to her sisters with the other daughter; for although so young a child when her mother died, she had lived that mother dearly, and finally received on copying her example in all respects.

"But it was otherwise with Yaolte the youngest. Scarcely was there ever seen so lovely, so willful a creature. She enchanted every one with the magic of her beauty and her cleverness. Her father was her slave the servants feared and adored her; for,
with a sharp, biting, clever tongue, she had also great openness and generosity of disposition.

"Her sister loved her—oh, so dearly! But she was powerless to curb the willful child who had only to carry her complaints to her father to be made certain of obtaining her own way in all things.

"Clotilde made her First Communion, and Yaolte, then five years old, and more clever than many a child of twice her age, was greatly interested in the various preparations for the happy event—the wreath, the veil, the white dress.

"Perhaps, Katie, suggested the Mother Superior, Lucrin's sister was married the other day, she said, 'and Marguerite
Lucrin, who wore white things like yours.
Are you going to be married?

"Yaolte hesitated before answering.

"Yes, Yaolte, she said finally. "I am to be married to the Lord tomorrow, and I will pray to him for you.

"And will you also go away from home?

"Yes, I shall be a nun, too.

"Take me with you, interrupted Yaolte, with sudden vehemence.

"The First Communion made a strong impression on Yaolte's mind—the altar, the procession, the candles. She told her father that she would also get married like Clotilde Lucrin.

"Child, child, said the Mother Superior,
First Communion did not take place. Dear Clotilde's mother watched care seeds of infidelity had been sown in the young mind.

"Papa, she said tenderly, 'I wish I could give my life for you, could I thereby purchase you length of days!

"Her manner more than her words startled him.

"Clotilde,' he said, 'what do you say? I have no fear. I am not dying yet.

"He sank back exhausted. His daughter came to stroke back from his pale face the silver hair.

"But not now reconciled to our Lord, she whispered. 'You will stand in His presence before very long.

"Then she laid the crucifix on his breast, and with her face hidden in her hands she knelt down beside her father.

"Unbroken silence reigned in the room for some minutes, the fan cool of which a handsome lad on her head, and her father's voice said:

"Send for M. le Cure, and may God bless you, my child!

"Yaolte had conquered. The priest arrived and saw the sick man, spent a considerable time with him, while Yaolte wandered to and fro, with a pale and troubled face, restless and unhappy.

"The next day the priest came and remained some time in private with his patient. Then Clotilde prepared a temporary altar in the sick room, and the Blessed Sacrament being laid thereon, Yaolte and the household were summoned to witness the giving of the last Sacraments.

"Yaolte's face cannot be described. Disappointment, fear, rebellion, and remorse in turn. The dying man received a short prepassin of faith before his departure. Its silence was profound, when Yaolte broke it in a startling manner.

"Papa, she said—do you believe in that?
she said, stepping forward and pointing to the crucifix upon the priest's hand.

"He believes! she said passionately; 'and yet owing to his words and example I do not believe and not even when I preached the altar for the first time.

"Child, you have left your father! the priest said, as he laid aside the pyx and stepped up hastily to the bed.

"Then the flush died out of Yaolte's face,
and they saw for a deadly paleness.
The angel sideways and would have fallen had not one or two of the servants caught her up and carried her from the room.

"Her father recovered, however, and when left alone with his confessor and Clotilde the last Sacraments were administered, after such a fit of weeping as neither of the bystanders had before seen a man indulge in.

"He sent for his younger daughter, the Clotilde left them for awhile. Presently there was a scream from Yaolte, and Clotilde and the Cure ran to find that death had called her its victim. Barely was there time to pronounce the final absolution.

"Sister Ellen's voice faltered for a moment.

"And what became of the younger sister?
Katie asked breathlessly.

"She fell a weakly life—and positively bad—but was thoroughly unspiritual; she was married to a man much her senior, who was a good man, having her sole interest in his large fortune. She went to India, for she loved travel and adventure and when last heard of she had married a Mohammedan gentleman.

"But," Katie said in a horrified tone,
"she belonged to the Church.

"No, they are not. But which is worse, a believing Turk or an unbelieving Christian?
Which is the more hopeless? Child, I have seen much more resented, rising from the beach on which they had been seated, and walked down to the sea. You all left to your little children now that they are helpless and motherless. Child, I have confidence.
Let them make it with faith, and I know you will. Come, I must return.

"She led the way to the chapel, where they knelt in silent prayer.

Then Sister Ellen beckoned Katie out,
"Here is the picture I promised you,
she said. "Did you make many resolutions for the anniversary of your day?

"I don't know, Sister," answered Katie, smiling. "I almost think I made only one.

"May I ask, she said, what it was?
Sister Ellen.

"I'd do everything as well as I could to please God, no matter what it cost.

"Child, said the Sister, looking at her child, and the courage that springs from it. Your prayer has invested everything!

"I don't know, Katie said again. "It didn't seem to want faith. I felt quite sure God would, just as I felt how grateful I was to Him, and how much I loved Him.

"Then, said the nun, smiling her,
"The bell rings, and I must go. Pray for me, and continue to keep your resolution.

So they parted—Katie to her cottage home and Sister Ellen to her own daily employments.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE HOLY FACE.

Wonders Worked through This Devotion

On the authority of the Dean of Lignell, Belgium, we publish the following, which indicates at once a spiritual and physical miracle through the Holy Face.

The Rev. Dean says that in the year 1856, a stranger of sunday called upon him and told him that he desired to go to confession. The stranger then told him that happening in passing at Tilburg, he boarded a neighboring street to the railroad, a large crowd pressing around the entrance to a certain house. On inquiring as to the cause of the excitement, he was informed that the gentleman residing there was a worker of miracles. He then went in with the crowd, where Mr. Dupont received him very politely, and wanted to know what he could do for him. The stranger frankly told him what he had heard. Mr. Dupont promptly replied that he had not been aware of it, and that miracles, through the mercy of God, were an everyday occurrence at his house. He then remarked to the visitor that if he was necessary was ready to aid, and he would receive. Mr. Dupont pointed to a woman then present, who had nearly lost her sight and said that prayers would be offered up for her, and that he had hopes that she would be cured.

The stranger stated that he had joined in the prayers, although for ten years he had not performed a single act of religion. The next day he was cured, and, at the end, she said that she could not read a single word from the book that was presented to her. However, after repeated prayers she began to distinguish the persons around her; at last, she received her sight entirely and read without any trouble from the book that had been first handed to her.

In consequence of this extraordinary circumstance, the stranger could not be satisfied with his spiritual condition. He not only became converted, but persevered in his good resolutions.

All books, medals, scapulars, gospels and everything relating to the Holy Face of Jesus Face can be obtained by mail from the Mother Superior, at the Monastery 134 Bauer street, New Orleans.

—A restaurant has been opened in London for the exclusive patronage of people who are afflicted with corpulence, the food being entirely anti-fat.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

For Long Troubles and Wasting Diseases Dr. J. Bennett, New Orleans, La., says: "Scott's Emulsion is the finest product of the kind. In affections of the lungs and other wasting diseases, we may consider it our best remedy. It is perfectly elegant and agreeable form."

FUNERAL FRAUDS.

Women who Make Money by Them.

"No, madame, you cannot enter," said the other gently but firmly. "The funeral is strictly private, and no one without a card can be admitted.

"She was a dear friend of mine," said the woman, and a dainty white handkerchief with a broad band of black was slowly raised to wipe away the teary mist that obscured her sight. "Can I not see her once more?"

The man was evidently moved by the pleasing tone of the voice, and the pleasing face, which a tear drop slowly coursed down her cheek.

The heart of the usher softened. He was only a young man, and she looked almost charming in her apparent distress, so he allowed her to enter. Tiptoeing softly into the parlor where no one but an aged lady sat weeping, she knelt over the open casket as if to take one long last look of the departed. Then, while ceremonies also shook her form, and a few pieces with the lady sitting by the casket, upon which was placed a large amount of valuable lace trimmed. She remained for a moment with a look of sadness upon her countenance betitling the occasion, while her lips trembled with suppressed grief. The old lady was intently studying the pattern of the carpet, and when the visitor left the room with lowered head under cover of her glasses, then cast aside and away from the house, her steps quickened, and an unnoticed black silken piece of lace was handed over a pawnbroker's counter, and the money hastily counted out the requisite change.

When the funeral was over and the lassity once more alone, the loss was discovered only to be charged against some one of the servants, or, perhaps, kept a secret through fear of offending some of those present by a suspicion.

"Funeral sneak thieves are becoming more and more numerous, and a well known private detective yesterday. "They are a class of people who make a very fine thing of stealing affords ample opportunity for concealing small articles. They scan the obituary notices in the morning papers for deaths, and when the time arrives play off the "dear friend" racket to perfection. As they are generally quite pretty, and the beauty they (apparently) possess is counterbalanced by the sombreness of their attire, they succeed in nine cases out of ten in securing admission no matter how private the funeral services may be. Once inside, they are a little of necessity, and would their chance of stealing anything of value in the room. Having succeeded, they make their departure as quickly yet decorously as possible, and without attracting the notice of possible detection and pursuit, pawn the stolen article.

"When the room is full of people the weak thief proceeds very cautiously, for fear of being caught in the act, and, after embezzling, to secure anything. None of the present, joy any attention to her actions, thinking that she is a friend of the deceased. In some cases she is allowed to linger about the upper rooms have been taken by three women.

"An uptown lady recently placed a valuable ring upon the finger of her dead daughter, and, as she thought, kept her eyes from the lid was screwed down that it was not. But, in this instance, a detective quietly attached to a woman whom no one present knew, but who had been invited lingering over the casket a few minutes before. She followed them to their rooms, rising from the beach on which they had been seated, and walked down to the sea. You all left to your little children now that they are helpless and motherless. Child, I have confidence. Let them make it with faith, and I know you will. Come, I must return.

"She led the way to the chapel, where they knelt in silent prayer.

Then Sister Ellen beckoned Katie out, "Here is the picture I promised you, she said. "Did you make many resolutions for the anniversary of your day?

"I don't know, Sister," answered Katie, smiling. "I almost think I made only one.

"May I ask, she said, what it was? Sister Ellen.

"I'd do everything as well as I could to please God, no matter what it cost.

"Child, said the Sister, looking at her child, and the courage that springs from it. Your prayer has invested everything!

"I don't know, Katie said again. "It didn't seem to want faith. I felt quite sure God would, just as I felt how grateful I was to Him, and how much I loved Him.

"Then, said the nun, smiling her, "The bell rings, and I must go. Pray for me, and continue to keep your resolution.

So they parted—Katie to her cottage home and Sister Ellen to her own daily employments.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE HOLY FACE.

Wonders Worked through This Devotion

On the authority of the Dean of Lignell, Belgium, we publish the following, which indicates at once a spiritual and physical miracle through the Holy Face.

The Rev. Dean says that in the year 1856, a stranger of sunday called upon him and told him that he desired to go to confession. The stranger then told him that happening in passing at Tilburg, he boarded a neighboring street to the railroad, a large crowd pressing around the entrance to a certain house. On inquiring as to the cause of the excitement, he was informed that the gentleman residing there was a worker of miracles. He then went in with the crowd, where Mr. Dupont received him very politely, and wanted to know what he could do for him. The stranger frankly told him what he had heard. Mr. Dupont promptly replied that he had not been aware of it, and that miracles, through the mercy of God, were an everyday occurrence at his house. He then remarked to the visitor that if was necessary was ready to aid, and he would receive. Mr. Dupont pointed to a woman then present, who had nearly lost her sight and said that prayers would be offered up for her, and that he had hopes that she would be cured.

The stranger stated that he had joined in the prayers, although for ten years he had not performed a single act of religion. The next day he was cured, and, at the end, she said that she could not read a single word from the book that was presented to her. However, after repeated prayers she began to distinguish the persons around her; at last, she received her sight entirely and read without any trouble from the book that had been first handed to her.

In consequence of this extraordinary circumstance, the stranger could not be satisfied with his spiritual condition. He not only became converted, but persevered in his good resolutions.

All books, medals, scapulars, gospels and everything relating to the Holy Face of Jesus Face can be obtained by mail from the Mother Superior, at the Monastery 134 Bauer street, New Orleans.

—A restaurant has been opened in London for the exclusive patronage of people who are afflicted with corpulence, the food being entirely anti-fat.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

For Long Troubles and Wasting Diseases Dr. J. Bennett, New Orleans, La., says: "Scott's Emulsion is the finest product of the kind. In affections of the lungs and other wasting diseases, we may consider it our best remedy. It is perfectly elegant and agreeable form."

WOMEN'S NICKNAMES.

Odd Ways in Which the Idiots of Saratoga Address Their Wives.

A wide awake correspondent of the New York Sun writes from Saratoga. When a lounger on the veranda of one of the big hotels at this place hears a man say, "Mary Ann, I want you," or "Sarah, come here," he may be sure that it is a husband addressing his wife, and that she is unusually old.

Apparently all husbands of 1st women address their wives with commanding or nickname terms, or with pet names or little girls. "Daisy," "Birdie" and "Baby" appear to be the pet names most favored by the husbands of mammoth women. In the latter case, however, the marriage is distinctively for married couples and has less conveniences and extras. Tiptoeing softly into the parlor where no one but an aged lady sitting, she bent over the open casket as if to take one long last look of the departed. Then, while ceremonies also shook her form, and a few pieces with the lady sitting by the casket, upon which was placed a large amount of valuable lace trimmed. She remained for a moment with a look of sadness upon her countenance betitling the occasion, while her lips trembled with suppressed grief. The old lady was intently studying the pattern of the carpet, and when the visitor left the room with lowered head under cover of her glasses, then cast aside and away from the house, her steps quickened, and an unnoticed black silken piece of lace was handed over a pawnbroker's counter, and the money hastily counted out the requisite change.

When the funeral was over and the lassity once more alone, the loss was discovered only to be charged against some one of the servants, or, perhaps, kept a secret through fear of offending some of those present by a suspicion.

"Funeral sneak thieves are becoming more and more numerous, and a well known private detective yesterday. "They are a class of people who make a very fine thing of stealing affords ample opportunity for concealing small articles. They scan the obituary notices in the morning papers for deaths, and when the time arrives play off the "dear friend" racket to perfection. As they are generally quite pretty, and the beauty they (apparently) possess is counterbalanced by the sombreness of their attire, they succeed in nine cases out of ten in securing admission no matter how private the funeral services may be. Once inside, they are a little of necessity, and would their chance of stealing anything of value in the room. Having succeeded, they make their departure as quickly yet decorously as possible, and without attracting the notice of possible detection and pursuit, pawn the stolen article.

"When the room is full of people the weak thief proceeds very cautiously, for fear of being caught in the act, and, after embezzling, to secure anything. None of the present, joy any attention to her actions, thinking that she is a friend of the deceased. In some cases she is allowed to linger about the upper rooms have been taken by three women.

"An uptown lady recently placed a valuable ring upon the finger of her dead daughter, and, as she thought, kept her eyes from the lid was screwed down that it was not. But, in this instance, a detective quietly attached to a woman whom no one present knew, but who had been invited lingering over the casket a few minutes before. She followed them to their rooms, rising from the beach on which they had been seated, and walked down to the sea. You all left to your little children now that they are helpless and motherless. Child, I have confidence. Let them make it with faith, and I know you will. Come, I must return.

"She led the way to the chapel, where they knelt in silent prayer.

Then Sister Ellen beckoned Katie out, "Here is the picture I promised you, she said. "Did you make many resolutions for the anniversary of your day?

"I don't know, Sister," answered Katie, smiling. "I almost think I made only one.

"May I ask, she said, what it was? Sister Ellen.

"I'd do everything as well as I could to please God, no matter what it cost.

"Child, said the Sister, looking at her child, and the courage that springs from it. Your prayer has invested everything!

"I don't know, Katie said again. "It didn't seem to want faith. I felt quite sure God would, just as I felt how grateful I was to Him, and how much I loved Him.

"Then, said the nun, smiling her, "The bell rings, and I must go. Pray for me, and continue to keep your resolution.

So they parted—Katie to her cottage home and Sister Ellen to her own daily employments.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

There is no State in the Union where people can live better or cheaper than in

OUR OWN CALIFORNIA

—WHICH IS A VERITABLE—

HORN OF PLENTY

So far as Million and Trills are concerned.

THE SECRET

Of living cheaply and well may be discovered by all Monitor readers if they will purchase their household supplies at

FAMILY GROCERIES

From the well-known firm of

SBARBORO & CO.,

At their Old established place of Business,

531 Washington St.

The Old House Still Stands

Where—for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of Satisfied Customers

ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS

HAVE SAVED

Hundreds of Dollars Yearly

BY JUST KNOWING

Where to Buy their Groceries.

THE SECRET

AT WHICH

SBARBORO & CO.,

Can sell Groceries &c., cheaper than other dealers is simply formed on these eight Business Propositions:

1—We buy all our goods for Cash.
2—We buy in large quantity at Bed-Rock Rates.
3—We sell to Cash Customers only.
4—We have no Bad Debts on our Books.
5—We buy cheap and can sell cheap.
6—Having no Bad Debts we require less profit.
7—We can give better goods then our competitors.
8—Our customers share the benefit of our cash purchases.

Remember—that we—that if you want

The Best Groceries

AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES

The proper place to purchase them is at

SBARBORO & CO'S.,

531 WASHINGTON STREET

[Between Montgomery and Sansome.]

READ THESE PRICES

And Call and Examine

OUR GOODS.

SUGARS

Greatly Reduced.

15 pounds Dried Apples,	$1
14 pounds Tapioca,	$1
14 pounds Sago,	$1
20 pounds Codfish,	$1
10 pounds Prunes,	$1
10 pounds Dried Pears,	$1
Star Ground Coffee,	25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug)	50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea,	50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea,	25c per lb
5-gallon can Banner Coal Oil,	$1.00
40 pounds P White Beans,	$1
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs,	$3.75
20 pounds Canary Seed,	$1

Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.

And all other Goods Equally Cheap.

WINE AND LIQUORS

Claret, Zinfandel, per gallon, from,	35 to 75c
Port, Old, per gallon,	$1 00
Sherry, Old, per gallon,	$1 00
Port, Old, per gallon,	$1 00
Old Tunic Bourbon, per gallon,	$2 00
Old Tunic Bourbon, per gallon,	$2 00
Grape Brandy, per gallon,	$2 00
Peach Brandy, per gallon,	$2 00
Jamaica Rum, per gallon,	$2

All orders promptly and carefully filled and delivered to any part of city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge.

Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.

Country Produce Exchanged!

SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST

SBARBORO & CO.

S. SBARBORO, Manager.

DEATH OF JENNY LIND.

The Musical Prodigy of this Century.

A cablegram from London on Wednesday last announced the death of the wonderful "Swedish Nightingale," Jenny Lind—Goldschmidt. She was a Swede, born at Stockholm, Oct. 6, 1821. Her parents were in humble circumstances, but the remarkable power and pathos of her voice attracted attention when she was only a tiny tot in a child, and she was only nine years of age when, owing to the kind interest of a friend, she was admitted to the Conservatory of Stockholm. Her progress was wonderful, and it was greatly promoted after she had left the conservatory by her association with the family of the popular Swedish composer, Adolph Lindblad, who became her teacher. Two years of age where, after brilliant successes in private entertainments and in court concerts, she made her first appearance in opera as Agatha in "Der Freischutz." This was the beginning of a total fame that eclipsed that of all Swedish singers. In 1841 she placed herself under the tuition of Garcia at Paris. She was engaged at Berlin in 1844, at the instance of Meyerbeer, who had met her in Paris, and her "period of glory" as an enthusiastic admirer puts it, began in that city in "Norma." Her impersonation of the Prussian capital ended in April 1845, after which she visited Vienna and Prague, including Vienna. The great singer made her debut in London, in 1847, with a very marked success. It was followed by a tour in England, Ireland and Scotland, and Stockholm, where tickets entitling the fortunate holders to seats where she sang were sold by auction, and realized the sum of 16,000 rix dollars from the stage in May of that year. Her marriage came from the objection of a gentleman to whom she was engaged to be married, to her leaving the home her husband.

Jenny Lind was formed the project to devote herself to oratorio and concert singing, and to "Sacred Music." Her last appearance in Europe was at Vienna, in 1851. Her tour in America, extending through the United States, Brazil, Cuba, Mexico and the West Indies. Her first appearance in New York will be remembered by many, as it created unusual event that has ever taken place in the history of the metropolis of this tour were $651,000, of which her share amounted to $262,000. Her last concert, February 5, 1852, that she became the wife of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, who accompanied her tour. In 1862 Madame Goldschmidt and her husband returned to Europe. She visited her native city, and then made her residence at Dresden. Some of her greatest triumphs were achieved in Germany, on her return to that country in 1856. In 1857 she was appointed Professor of the Art of Singing at the Berlin Academy of Music in Westminster Abbey. Some of late years has been in London, where her chief place of departure as quickly yet decorously as possible, and without attracting the notice of possible detection and pursuit, pawn the stolen article.

"When the room is full of people the weak thief proceeds very cautiously, for fear of being caught in the act, and, after embezzling, to secure anything. None of the present, joy any attention to her actions, thinking that she is a friend of the deceased. In some cases she is allowed to linger about the upper rooms have been taken by three women.

"An uptown lady recently placed a valuable ring upon the finger of her dead daughter, and, as she thought, kept her eyes from the lid was screwed down that it was not. But, in this instance, a detective quietly attached to a woman whom no one present knew, but who had been invited lingering over the casket a few minutes before. She followed them to their rooms, rising from the beach on which they had been seated, and walked down to the sea. You all left to your little children now that they are helpless and motherless. Child, I have confidence. Let them make it with faith, and I know you will. Come, I must return.

"She led the way to the chapel, where they knelt in silent prayer.

Then Sister Ellen beckoned Katie out, "Here is the picture I promised you, she said. "Did you make many resolutions for the anniversary of your day?

"I don't know, Sister," answered Katie, smiling. "I almost think I made only one.

"May I ask, she said, what it was? Sister Ellen.

"I'd do everything as well as I could to please God, no matter what it cost.

"Child, said the Sister, looking at her child, and the courage that springs from it. Your prayer has invested everything!

"I don't know, Katie said again. "It didn't seem to want faith. I felt quite sure God would, just as I felt how grateful I was to Him, and how much I loved Him.

"Then, said the nun, smiling her, "The bell rings, and I must go. Pray for me, and continue to keep your resolution.

So they parted—Katie to her cottage home and Sister Ellen to her own daily employments.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE HOLY FACE.

Wonders Worked through This Devotion

On the authority of the Dean of Lignell, Belgium, we publish the following, which indicates at once a spiritual and physical miracle through the Holy Face.

The Rev. Dean says that in the year 1856, a stranger of sunday called upon him and told him that he desired to go to confession. The stranger then told him that happening in passing at Tilburg, he boarded a neighboring street to the railroad, a large crowd pressing around the entrance to a certain house. On inquiring as to the cause of the excitement, he was informed that the gentleman residing there was a worker of miracles. He then went in with the crowd, where Mr. Dupont received him very politely, and wanted to know what he could do for him. The stranger frankly told him what he had heard. Mr. Dupont promptly replied that he had not been aware of it, and that miracles, through the mercy of God, were an everyday occurrence at his house. He then remarked to the visitor that if was necessary was ready to aid, and he would receive. Mr. Dupont pointed to a woman then present, who had nearly lost her sight and said that prayers would be offered up for her, and that he had hopes that she would be cured.

The stranger stated that he had joined in the prayers, although for ten years he had not performed a single act of religion. The next day he was cured, and, at the end, she said that she could not read a single word from the book that was presented to her. However, after repeated prayers she began to distinguish the persons around her; at last, she received her sight entirely and read without any trouble from the book that had been first handed to her.

In consequence of this extraordinary circumstance, the stranger could not be satisfied with his spiritual condition. He not only became converted, but persevered in his good resolutions.

All books, medals, scapulars, gospels and everything relating to the Holy Face of Jesus Face can be obtained by mail from the Mother Superior, at the Monastery 134 Bauer street, New Orleans.

—A restaurant has been opened in London for the exclusive patronage of people who are afflicted with corpulence, the food being entirely anti-fat.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

For Long Troubles and Wasting Diseases Dr. J. Bennett, New Orleans, La., says: "Scott's Emulsion is the finest product of the kind. In affections of the lungs and other wasting diseases, we may consider it our best remedy. It is perfectly elegant and agreeable form."

SAVED BY THE ROSARY.

A Remarkable Incident of the Franco-Prussian War.

The following incident took place during the siege of Paris. The writer had been ordered out as a picket sentinel, to try and with others, to put a stop to the German sharpshooters, who had been both bold and troublesome.

I came to a large tree, the trunk of which was surrounded with underbrush. Here I stopped, and close this point for my look out. I dug away the earth with my bayonet and made a kind of rampart at the top of the little slope, covering it with dry grass and leaves. I then made openings in this rampart, so as to see without being seen. The whole occupied so little space as possible, and kept passed away, this accident, and I began despairing of my mission, when I saw the bushes at a point, behind a tree, a hand appearing and disappearing. Soon I had no doubt about it; the enemy was there near me. I had recourse to my field glass and saw, not without emotion, the head and hands of a man so near me that I instinctively made what we call a bodily movement. The man did not see me, but was carelessly digging up the earth with a piece of wood. Sitting on the ground, his head leaning on his left arm and his right hand at his side, he remained quiet as the duty as well as of keeping watch. His body was stretched out, and his knees and feet appeared again. He was dressed in a long black frock coat, with buttons down the front, and a black cap. It was easy to discover, under his uniform, a priest, perhaps a Jesuit, or a member of his cottage house. I really regretted the sight of a priest, because I felt a kind of sympathy for the unfortunate to whom he was engaged to be married. Yes, I did not let come her husband.

Jenny Lind was formed the project to devote herself to oratorio and concert singing, and to "Sacred Music." Her last appearance in Europe was at Vienna, in 1851. Her tour in America, extending through the United States, Brazil, Cuba, Mexico and the West Indies. Her first appearance in New York will be remembered by many, as it created unusual event that has ever taken place in the history of the metropolis of this tour were $651,000, of which her share amounted to $262,000. Her last concert, February 5, 1852, that she became the wife of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, who accompanied her tour. In 1862 Madame Goldschmidt and her husband returned to Europe. She visited her native city, and then made her residence at Dresden. Some of her greatest triumphs were achieved in Germany, on her return to that country in 1856. In 1857 she was appointed Professor of the Art of Singing at the Berlin Academy of Music in Westminster Abbey. Some of late years has been in London, where her chief place of departure as quickly yet decorously as possible, and without attracting the notice of possible detection and pursuit, pawn the stolen article.

"When the room is full of people the weak thief proceeds very cautiously, for fear of being

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE YEARS OF LONG AGO.

AN OLD MAN'S TROUGHT.

I.

Oh! the old years! the fair years!
The years of the long ago!
When our steps were light,
And our hearts were bright,
With never a care nor sighing!
When joy was nought
But a name to sought
Of a future rain weaving!

(Ah! they were greener than now!)
When we slept unscathed for the hunter's aim
In the year-tree's pleiting bough!
When we lounged the dinth and will to grow,
And "followed my leader" straight!
When we trembingly ventured the ripe fruit trees,
In some glorious Lord's estate!
They were good days—the old days!
(Why, we laid our children out!)
Than the years of the present were never so fair
As the years of the long ago!

II.

Ah! the old years! the dear years!
The years of the long ago!
When a smile's caution,
Like a fairy's wand,
Threw into our hearts a spell;
When to the pulse of the world
Till school was out,
For Norah or Mabie or Nell!

And, oh! the flowers we used to pick
For our bright-eyed sweet heart!
How we blushed when she took them from our hand
Shy and coy!
And pied-eyed them in her hair.
Years, love and loss in the one lear of them,
And hearts were tossed then.
For willows and willowers ever thought
Of loving and wedding again.
In the old days! the young days!
(Now, children, don't laugh so!)
For the years of the present were never so dear
As the years of the long ago!

III.

Oh! the old years! the dear years!
No longer for us they glow,
And they only beam
In a wishing dream,
As we speak to our children here
Of the dear old days
And the fair old ways,
On the dawn of some fair New Year.

And we read aloud as they nestle round
Our chair in the song fireplace;
Why, our voices tremble as we speak
And the tears will come our face.
But they do not know that in time to come,
When they are aged and grey,
Like us they will gather their children round
On some New Year's eve, and say:
"They were good days—the old days,
(Oh, children, believe the)
Afterwise rendering joy or cries
As the years of the long ago!

May friendship's ivy, bright New Year, twine
Around the homes of all our race,
And all thy days in sunbeam shine
Upon the Earth with God's best grace.

Pass on to the storied goal
Fair years; may peace be still thy dower,
May Truth, immortal as the soul,
Ascend above all Falsehood's power.

Then hail to thee, new ushered year!
May all thy days be ever bright,
May none be mired by sigh or tear,
As all sink down in silent sight.

JOHN P. MCDONALD.

Virginia City, Nev., January 1, 1888.

A Home Across the Ocean.

Rose Rubaiiane to the "Catholic Home Almanac."

The autumn tints were coloring the Bandsheidlen, a beauty hollow among the jutting Kerry mountains. The heather were its rubiant crimson, the gray moss were blue about the clumps of fir and oakwood, long flaxen streamed and curled in the waters of the river at sunset, and even the rugged crevices and dows of the cabin thatches and walls were in unison harmony with the landscape.

For the cabins were still standing, the people still passing in and out over their threshholds, and sleeping in their shelter. The little children and the old women, and the young mothers, and girls just flowering into womanhood, barefooted, scantily fed, poorly clad as they might be, they had still the lot of a home to hold to, the roof over their heads, the heartfelt care earned by the turf fire under their feet. The cottage hut not yet made its appearance in the Bandsheen Glen.

In another week, however, all that was to be changed, for every soul in the valley had received notice to quit. If times were bad, and rents which had been gradually rising were hopeless to pay, these circumstances gave the landlord an excellent opportunity for clearing the land of the "vermin," as he considered them, that encumbered it.

Dave Dermott Reilly, or Davy Dermott as he was called, stood in his cottage door, gazing across the glen at the cabin of the man which was rising from behind the ridge of the opposite hills, and his Celtic eye saw all the beauty of the whirling browns and purples of the landscape, the flood of glory in the river, the crimson and scarlet clouds streaming above the mountain tops like outstretched flags upon a captured banner, the triumph of his long struggle for liberty to stay and live his life in this land of his love, this island of beauty and blight, and of woe, after all, he was bound by the act of tyrant, to leave it and go into exile. Next week would see him on board ship bound for America, for, resolved not to wait to see the great landlord in his turn, whose, not to see and his father before him had toiled to maintain, he was about to turn his back on an unhappy country, and seek his fortune in a more prosperous world.

Having made up his mind to depart he was impatient to be gone, for as to it Maureen with the time heart and the tenter were going with him! Maureen whom he had loved from his boyhood, and who never could be his wife so long as they hoped in this atmosphere of hunger and oppression.

Yes, he had resolved that they should be gone before the valley was to be seen lying desolate. Maureen, poor thing, had suffered enough. She should not wait to hear the groans of the old people, the weeping of the children, should not see the despair of full-grown men, and the anguish of young mothers. They would be out on the broad sea, man and wife together, before the dawning of the day of destruction in the Bandsheen Glen.

It wanted but two days of their wedding day, and as Owen stood watching the sunrise, hope rose high in his heart, while he remembered that any spot on earth must become home where Maureen would dwell with him, love him, serve him, and honour him. With God's good gifts of youth and health in his possession, no tyrant could rob him of a home and Maureen.

He finished his meditation and stepped out to go about his work, when his foot touched a slip of paper which the opening door had scarcely displaced on the threshold. Picking it up he glanced at it carelessly and his heart trembled and then stood still. On the paper were a few hieroglyphics scrawled which only the initiated could understand, but which Owen Dermott read only too readily. This was a noon bidding him to a meeting of a secret society to be held that night, a society to which he had belonged from his boyhood, to which he was bound by oath, but from which he had long held himself entirely aloof.

"And now, my love, I must bid you good-night, for I have many things to do, and I have no more time to spare. Good night, good bye, my only dear on earth."

Maureen's fling herself weeping into his arms. He pressed her to his heart, stroked her hair, as if she had been a child, and kissed her once. And then he suddenly put her from him and was gone.

Maureen threw herself on her face in the stubble and wept till she was blind. The sun had sinked ere she was able to compose herself. After a time she became better able to think, and, having a good intelligence, she gave it all to the consideration of his unexplained and unexpected manifestos. Some terrible mystery had suddenly surrounded him. If she could only discover the nature of it, might she not be able to help him out of a difficulty? Twilight gathered and night came, and she sat on the mountain side still, and threw herself under the shelter of a hedge, from which, for spreading bushes dropped and entered her. When it had long been quite dark, and she had made up her mind that at all events she must force herself to get up and go home, she was stayed by hearing the sound of footsteps at the other side of the hedge, and of voices that spoke in strangely distinct whispers.

At first she did not attend to the meaning of the words that came to her, but gradually the sign grew to her mind that a plot was on foot to end the life of the landlord, whose cruelty was act for the destruction of the people of the Bandsheen Glen. But even this horror she did not connect in any way with her lover's tribulation, till she heard one voice say, "Another, which instantly put her in possession of the truth.

"There is the beast, fire this shot," said one of the whispering voices, "though he has only commited because he dare not be free. He is leaving the country in any case.

She lay still behind the hedge afraid to breathe till the sound of footsteps moving away assured her that the night venture to creep homeward. All that night she thought over the terrible revelation that had been made to her, and before morning came she had made up her mind that she should not be driven to do this murder, even if she were to give her life to prevent it. She prayed to God fervently all day while she worked among the corn, and when labouring hours were over she went to her lonely dark cabin and set out across the valley for Dan Dermott's house.

She passed the latch and went in, and said that he was not there she sat down to wait for him.

There was no hasp, no fire on the hearth, but the plate was family lit up by the usual whole and rough bread and milk—oat bread and meal—of Maureen baked round the place and saw the old straw chair in which Dan's mother had died of age and activity, a few months before, and the large crucifix which hung on the wall close by the seat. She sat down in the chair, and looked at the crucifix, and watched and prayed and waited.

At last she heard a step coming and then walked into the house, like the ghost of himself, his tall figure looking gaunt, his face dark and rigid with trouble. He was staring straight before him as if seeing nothing, and did not perceive Maureen till she placed herself right before him, and put her hands on his arms.

"Owen, in God's name, what are you going to do?"

He shook himself up as if out of a long dream.

"What do you doing here at this hour of the night, Maureen? Run away home with you at once. I would go with you, only—

"Only for what, Owen?

"I have other business to attend to."

"Let me go with you, let me go home, and dropped her hands, and would not look at her where she stood, silently, her arms hanging by her side, all her soul in her eyes, that he could not avoid meeting.

"I know what your business is," she said with a long sigh, "it is none after your own heart."

"And know—if I dare speak of God now, it is none after my own heart. But I am bound by my oath and the lot was fairly drawn. It had been decided that a tyrant should be killed to save the lives of the people, before my opinion was asked in the matter, and I was sworn to do the deed, they say, the lots were drawn, and I am the man.

"Oh, Owen, you are the man; you were never born to be a murderer. God can save His people without help from crime. Come with me, Owen, and, if I come Blood-stained wretch do this deed, if the deed must be done, I am here away, and get out to the sea, before any one knows we are gone."

"Hush, Maureen, rush out of danger, lest some one else to take the penalty and the sin on his hand! Maureen, you know I am coward. Time to go, and I must start. Go home and pray for me if you love me; pray for me, for I am unable to pray for himself."

"I will pray, I am praying for you; but I will not go home."

She made a swift movement and stood the door and closed with her back to it, facing the room.

"This will save my sin," said Owen, gloomily, "for I will be two lives lost instead of one. Would you doom me to the death of a coward?

"No, I would save you from it. Oh, my love, when we die let us go with clean souls before God. Other people's crimes are not our crimes. Owen.

She snatched the crucifix which hung within reach of her hand on the wall, a rugged stone-carved image belonging to pallerie story, all the more sincerely and tragically for its opposite redemption of form and expression. Holding it as a bar across the door she spoke to her lover with eyes in which their usual sweet benevolence had given place to a look of agonized resolution.

"Maureen, do you pray me too far. The very last moment has come. Let me make my way out."

"You cannot," she said faintly, "you will never dare to pass that bar—

He had taken up his gun in preparation for his distant journey, but now put it down again on the table. Approaching the girl he lifted her from her feet in a determined grasp, and removed her from the doorway. Finding herself powerless to struggle further, Maureen uttered a moan of anguish and slipped from his arms in a swoon across his feet. With an exclamation of horror Owen raised her tenderly to his bosom.

"My darling," he murmured, "and is this the ending of all our faithful love! Cruelly from me to you, sin and horror, death and parting! Life, may God who created us, have mercy on us!

He laid her on an old "settee" in the corner, bathed her hands and face with cold water, and then seeing signs of returning life, he kissed her over, turned away hastily to the door, and slowly and reverently replaced the crucifix from the spot where it had been fixed as a bar. Holding the hard image in his hand for a moment he gazed at it with eyes full of agony, then endowed it mechanically in its time honoured place on the wall. The dear instant he had laid hold of his gun and was gone.

Maureen's two friends helped her to stand before Maureen was on her feet and fled, fearing this swiftly. The moon had set, the night was dark, he never turned his head to look backward, while the girl, wrapped in her cloak, kept within a few paces he had lead on over bog and heather, hill and dale, road and moorland, till after an hour's swift travel, Owen Dermott paused to look round him in the darkness on which his eyes had become accustomed. No sound but he as some to a halt, than three men with blackened faces stepped out from behind a hedge, and striking him suddenly upon the head, stabbed him in one of his hands, and took possession of it.

"You have let your man go, past. You have broken your oath and shirked your duty. Coward and traitor, take the punishment that is due to you.

Owen fabbled his arms and stood up straight and faced the guns that were levelled at him. With a wild cry, Maureen sprang forward out of the darkness, and threw herself on his neck in time to receive the effect of the bullets that were showered upon his bosom.

They fell together in each other's arms. Maureen clung to him more closely for a moment and was dead. Owen lived long enough for one keen and living prayer, which passed swiftly through his soul, and send before him to his Maker.

"My darling, my love, you were right. May God, my Judge, forgive me! O Christ, give me a home together in Thee, other world; beyond this better ocean of death which together we are crossing."

CATHOLIC NEWS NOTES.

Church Colleges in Many Countries

— Lent begins this year on February 15.

— Easter Sunday this year falls on All Fools' day.

— St. Patrick's day falls on Saturday this year.

— Septuagesima Sunday comes on the 29th of this month, there being only three Sundays after Epiphany this year.

— Rev. Abbe Martineau of the Seminary of St. Sulpice, Montreal, a great advocate of temperance, died recently in that city, aged 57.

— The Advent death is announced of Rev. James H. Halton of Preston, Minn., one of the much esteemed priests of the St. Paul diocese, and brother to Rev. L. M Halton, pastor of Stacy, Cal.

— Rev. E. V. Lebreton of Philadelphia, will hereafter visit Baltimore once a month for the purpose of narrating the dead masses of that city, Cardinal Gibbons having authorized him to that effect.

— It is something new for an ecclesiastic of an English see to be found studying man's business, seamanship. The Bishop of Salford only discussed St. Mary's Baltimore, Md., Rev. Thomas Lee, of the Archdiocese of Westminster, Eng., Cardinal Manning's see.

— Rev. F. A. Fingadlirth, pastor of St. Jakob's, Quincy, Mass., returned a donation of $20, with the message that he was not in Paris, the seat of propaganda, and hoping that the donor would find another priest.

— Rev. Father Fenton, who was ordained at Troy last week for the New York archdiocese, was formerly a minister of the Episcopal church, and was for two or two years stationed at Peekskill. He was received into the church some years ago by Rev. John Edwards, pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church, New York, and a student of the Paulist.

— A special reception was made to the Rt. Rev. Ireland, Bishop of St. Paul, Bishop of the new See of Concordia, Kansas, on his recent arrival in that city. The Mayor presided, and the non Catholic citizens were well represented. All the prominent Catholics, headed by the venerable Father Pierron, were there, even present to welcome their new spiritual chief.

— The death is announced from Ireland of the Most Rev. Thomas Kirby, who with Father "Tom" O'Hea, started the famous fight against eviction at Gallen, county Kilkenny, in 1862. He was born in the county of Kilkenny, in 1811, and was ordained priest in 1836. He was a singularly gifted speaker, and his sermons had a wide hold on his people. He was exceedingly popular with the priests, and in 1872 he was consecrated by the prelates of Dublin for the position of Coadjutor Bishop of that diocese. He was an active member of the Irish Parliamentary party, and in 1882 was appointed by the Holy Father, Bishop of Limerick, in succession to Bishop Ryan, who died in the same year. He was a strong advocate of the Home Rule advocate and a popular supporter of the Land League movement, and the national cause in Ireland.

— The late Dr. Cockey of Hamilton, Ont., was born at Mullinger, Westmeath, in 1809, and was a cousin of the celebrated Jesuit, Father Cockey, who was a professor of Greek in the Jesuit College, Clongowes Wood, Kildare, for many years. He was educated at Maynooth, and was ordained priest in 1836. He was a singularly gifted speaker, and his sermons had a wide hold on his people. He was exceedingly popular with the priests, and in 1872 he was consecrated by the prelates of Dublin for the position of Coadjutor Bishop of that diocese. He was an active member of the Irish Parliamentary party, and in 1882 was appointed by the Holy Father, Bishop of Limerick, in succession to Bishop Ryan, who died in the same year. He was a strong advocate of the Home Rule advocate and a popular supporter of the national cause in Ireland.

— The late Dr. Cockey of Hamilton, Ont., was born at Mullinger, Westmeath, in 1809, and was a cousin of the celebrated Jesuit, Father Cockey, who was a professor of Greek in the Jesuit College, Clongowes Wood, Kildare, for many years. He was educated at Maynooth, and was ordained priest in 1836. He was a singularly gifted speaker, and his sermons had a wide hold on his people. He was exceedingly popular with the priests, and in 1872 he was consecrated by the prelates of Dublin for the position of Coadjutor Bishop of that diocese. He was an active member of the Irish Parliamentary party, and in 1882 was appointed by the Holy Father, Bishop of Limerick, in succession to Bishop Ryan, who died in the same year. He was a strong advocate of the Home Rule advocate and a popular supporter of the national cause in Ireland.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The Week's Happenings in the World.

— Diphtheria is dying out in Montreal.

— Organized self 28,923 catches in Japan in 1888.

— Last year England paid £1,000,000 to the Irish farmers for eviction.

— The German Crown Prince shows much improvement.

— The mother of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Meiningen is dead.

— The Leopold frescoes are to be uncovered with solemn cloth.

— The public debt was diminished during the past year, $117,000,000.

— The President is to name the Home Commission on Pacific Railroads.

— Steps have been taken to protest the importation of diseased pork from Denmark into this country.

— A flying machine invented by two New York electricians is to be exhibited at the Paris Exhibition.

— Landslides and washouts are greatly interfering with the operations of the Southern Pacific Railroad in Mexico.

— Florida is complaining too much cold weather, and Texas of too much snow. California has nothing to complain of.

— The City of Mexico received $60,000 in licenses on half-lights last year. The license is 75 per cent of the gross receipts.

— Richard H. Barringer died at Troy, N. Y., December 28th, from measles passing, caused by excessive smoking of cigarettes.

— A monument to the late Earl Shaftesbury is about to be placed in Westminster Abbey.

— M. de Villars claims to have invented a balloon which will reach the Pole. The Government alone will utilize the invention.

— A law has been passed in Waldeck, Germany, forbidding the granting of a marriage license to a person addicted to the use of tobacco.

— Deputients of the press ring in Eng land prospects of a long and bitter struggle, land. Unfolding the publication in newspapers of a "Parliamentary Sketch."

— In May next there will be a great musical exhibition at Brussels, and to celebrate the occasion a grand opera will be produced in Paris, the work of prominent composers.

— Four-and-twenty years ago Leo XIII. made Cardinals of three priests, the bishops and Hermes were present at the Provincial Mass at Rome, Spain, and the Archbishop of Toledo was among the number.

— Mary Dean Smith, in Boston, they have been having astonishing an extraordinary time. Mrs. Smith is a well-known spiritualist, Miss "the heaviest mediums ever experienced."

— Prof. Mann, now claims a population of 200,000, and it is suspected she can count 200,000 of her followers, who are in readiness to bring forward as soon as Mormonism is taken from her hands.

— A valuable find of coal has been discovered east of Homer, in Dakota County, Neb. The vein is 4 feet 6 inches in the thickest place, and is 3 feet thick, and active operations in some are to commence at once.

— By his will filed December 29th for probate, the late William Hilton of Boston left about $4 million dollars to public institutions, ranging from $50,000 down to $10,000.

— A Louisville, Ky., land agent has been appointed by the Government to look into matters concerning Texas lands, as the company claims to purchase 1,000,000 acres of agricultural lands for colonization.

— Louisville is suffering from a coal famine. The railroads cannot supply the demand and the river is falling and freezing. A number of manufactories have shut down and much suffering is anticipated among the poor.

— It is understood that a bill providing for the printing and preparation of the ballots by each county, and containing many other provisions, will be reported to the Legislature at Sacramento. The Bill is drawn by Senator Stanford states there is nothing now in the way of the Governor's return to the Stanford University. He has no one in particular under consideration, but is looking for the right man.

— Some six inch deep was reported at Menominee, Mich., on Christmas morning, and as cold was the weather that Monday night, which was the three days before Christmas, had to bring a tin around as elephant to prevent the animal from freezing.

— Sarah A. Bonner of Pittsburg treated to a "faith cure" physician, lost she died of cancer of the breast. The case has caused much mass happening here and there is likely to be made the evidence of a section of the believers in the new fangled theory.

— Hobert Trent Paine says that there are 9,000 Catholic priests in America, 6,000 Associated Churches of Boston, or some 2,729 ministers. The Catholic priests are in every hundred of the city's population, entered help from sources outside of their own knows.

— The Mayor of Harrisburg, Penn., utilizes the tramps and bums of his city in run into the police stations during the night, by setting them to work the next morning sweeping up the streets and cleaning up the alleys. He makes them earn their lodgings and breakfast.

— The King of the Apostles' Islands, Lake Superior, is dead. For twenty years only Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, the Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., he has lived for forty four years, the oldest living pioneer of the historic spot where Father Marquette built the first mission 200 years ago.

— The rabbits are again becoming a plague in many portions of Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming, writes from Boise Idaho to the New York World. "These little bunnies feel free to do as much damage in our country as they have any novelty, unless timely steps are taken for their extermination.

— San Francisco has more representation in the United States Senate than any other two cities in the country. The Calif-ornia Senators, Stanford and Hearst, have resided in San Francisco, as have also the Nevada Senators, Stewart and Jones. Stewart practised law at the San Francisco Bar and Jones is a member of the San Francisco Exchange.

— Tourists now in California have made a curious discovery. They are travelling on the road and meeting on the road, and finding of which discloses the fact that they are not alone. Some of the tourists have been there before, and have come back to see the old scenes and to be appreciated by the hotel keepers and merchants than by the tourists and pleasure seekers.

— Bishop Gilmore of Cleveland, Ohio, Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, Archbishop Williams, of Boston, and other seemingly the heavy lefts a blank and sorrowful "A merry Christmas to you. The Lord bless a cheerful giver."

Many People Prize to take Cod liver oil on account of its unpleasant taste, the difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk, and the most sensitive stomach can take it. It is a complete emulsion, Scott's and Bowne's. Physicians report our little pellets take the place of Cod Liver Oil. Scott's Emulsion and its continued.

OUR CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

Roll of Honor for December.

ST. ROSE'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

Boys Department. Third Class: E Finger, Jos. Gallagher, Geo. Wm. Wright, J. Moore, J. Mahony, F. Buckley, E. Barry, W. Gallagher, Jas. Mahony, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Ryan, Jas. Cahill, J. Dolan, F. Mahony, D. Martin, H. O'Connor, E. Shaffer, J. Gogel, F. Hancock, W. Dunovan, J. McGarry, P. McGrath, J. Cusack, E. Ryan, J. Lindsay, F. Russell, J. Ryan, J. Ryan, J. Ryan, J. Ryan, J. Ryan, J. Ryan, J. McNerney, Sixth Class: E Foley, W Burk, Joseph J. Bell, W Brown, F Finger, E. Miles, E. O'Neill, W. Flynn, J Hanahr, F. Young, J. McGarry, W Hamilton, E. Dalton, J. Brown, J. Buckley, F. Horn, B. Fahy, J Thomson, Michael J. Ryan, E. Fitzgerald, J. Moran, M. Hehl, M. McGinnis, E. Fitzgerald, Fifth Class: Jas. Ryan, Richard Lynch, Mossy, R. Duffy, J. Donohahan, Fourth Class: M. Crosk, T. Duffy, A. Mooney, Fifth Class, S. Chambers, M. Lynch, A. Kirk, W. McGarvie, L. Dunlop, A. Kirkpatrick, Keating, M. Mack, S. Sullivan, M. Donoghue, L. Thomson, M. O'Dunn, M. McGinnis, S. Sneddon, R. Hammond, M. McKenna, H. McDonald, E. Finchman, M. Mulligan, M. Wren, J. Cunningham, M. Smith, N. McHugh, J. Langley, Third Class M. Mooney, L. Burns, L. Jude, E. Dempsey, E. Cassidy, C. Ryan, M. Ryan, M. Ryan, M

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE YEARS OF LONG AGO.

AN OLD MAN'S THOUGHT.

Oh! the old years! the fair years!
The years of the long ago!
When our steps were light,
And our hearts were bright,
With never a care nor a woe!
When joy was sweet!
With never a thought
Of a future rude awaking
When our hopes were crushed, and our souls were broken,
Ah! they were greener then than now!
When we slept unscathed for the tempest's rent
In the yesterday's rushing heart!
When we loaded the ditch and will he go-row,
And "full-orbed my locks" strength!
When we trembingly pilfered the ripe fruit trees,
In some gloomy field's solace!
They were good days the old days!
(Why, we tell our children so).
Than the years of the present were never so fair
As the years of the long ago!

II.

Ah! the old years! the dear years!
The years of the long ago!
When a lassie's smile,
Like a fairy's wine,
Threw upon our life a spell
When we lingered about.
Till we saw her
For Norah or Mollie or Nell!

And, oh! the days we used to pick
For our hearts spread colors fair;
When we blushed over the vows taken from hands,
And pied used them in her hair.
Sure, love was love in the fair old days,
And hearts were honest then,
For all vowed alike we ever thought
Of living and we-lilting arms.
In the old days! the young days!
(Now, children, don't laugh so),
For the years of the present were never so dear
As the years of the long ago!

III.

Oh! the old years! the dear years!
No longer for us they give,
And tony only been
In a waking dream.
Are so, yet, in the window here
Of the dear old days
And the fair old years.
On the down of some fair New Year,
And they matter much as they settle round
Our chair in the cozy fireplace;
Why, our colors tremble as we speak,
And the tears roll down our face,
But they do not know that it is time to come,
When they are aged and gray,
Like to will gather made children round
On some New Year's eve, and say:
They were good days—the old days,
(Oh, children, believe the self)
The present years can never be fair
As the years of the long ago!

C. ANTHONY DOYLE.

San Francisco, 1888.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

LOOK DOWN, MY DEAREST MOTHER, LOOK.

Look down, my dearest Mother, look!
Upon thy wandering child;
And touch me to be holy!
O Maiden Mother mild.

I know another year is past,
To bring me nearer home;
But, oh! how and my heart shall be—
No matter where I roam;

However sweet the flowery paths,
Or soft the azure skies,
Or mild the fragrant, starry nights,
Or rich Aurora's dyes,

If thou dost not look sweetly down
From thy bright throne above,
And chase this storm-beset of mine
With thy sweet smile and love.

Oh! I know, as St. Bernard has said,
In years long, long ago,
That thou with them "to the prayers
Of children here below."

O Mother, cheered by blessed hopes,
Before thine Child I pray,
To think how thou hast led me on
Through slippery ways and steep.

O Mother, I feel gladdened now,
To tend the thorny vale—
To pour over such coming day,
My pain shall be herself.

Oh! then I'll rap naught is so sweet
As Virgo's lovely ways,
While through each passing month in prayer,
My soul is then I raise.

And then, within thy tender care,
I'll rest the heavenly above,
And those sweet Child thy infant Jesus,
Will live forever more.

JNO. J. FAUST.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE NEW YEAR OF 1888.

O hail, first month of the year,
Thy storkend course has now begun!
Say, wilt thou bring us joy or fear,
Or bear us o'er the river's span.

We'd ease fair years like the sentinel,
In bright relief below the lake,
And all our dreams of heart and mind
Sink down beneath Time's cruel shoals.

We count thee now, fair opening day,
With gladsome heart and dulled song,
And trust thoughts all thy varied array
That Hight may triumph over Wrong.

A firm resolve, oh, let us make,
As thy bright pinions down we hail,
That man's dissentions may not wake,
To mar our lives on Earth's dark vale.

On life's relentless fry tests,
With beauty let us wage the strife,
And trust that we may may be safe
Over the thorny paths of life.

Kaskaskia's breezes be hopeful sigh
Around thy new propitious ray,
That honest toil may long stand by
With due reward for every day.

But, oh, how brief our passing year,
Yet each day marks a notch in life,
One may below hope, the other fear,
Alternate rendering joy or strife.

May friendship's fay, bright New Year, infuse
Around the home of all our race,
And all thy days be radiance shine
Upon the Earth with God's best grace.

Pass on to the eternal goal
Fair year; may you be still thy dower,
May Truth, man vital as the soul,
Ascend above all Falsehood's power.

Then hail to thee, new ushered year;
May all thy days be star bright,
May none be marred by dark or fear,
As all dark days in school night.

JOSE F. MCINNIS.

Virginia City, Nev., January 1, 1888.

A Home Across the Ocean.

Rose Rubellion in the "Catholic Home Almanac."

The autumn trees were coloring the Bandshire'illin, a lonely hollow among the purple Kerry mountains. The weather was in perfect crimson, the grey cotes were blue about the chimneys of fat an' cakes'ed, long flowers strewed' and curled on the windings of the river at sunset, and over the ragged crowns and knees of the cabin thatches and walls were in gracious harmony with the landscape.

For the cabins were still standing, the people still passing to and fro in the Bandshire, and sleeping in their beds. The little children and the old women, and the missing mothers, and girls just flowering into womanhood, barefooted, scarcely feel, poorly clad as they might be, by a bad still the lot of a home to belong, the free over their hands, the fourth alone caused by the turf fire to their feet. The cottar lad not yet made its appearance in the Bandshere's cities.

In another week, however, all that was to be changed, for every and in the valley had received notice to quit. If times were bad, and rents which had been gradually rising ever hopeless to pay, those circumstances gave the landlord an excellent opportunity for clearing the land of the "vermin," as he considered them, that encumbered it.

Dan Dermot Reilly, or Dan D. as it he was called, stood in his cottage door, say gazing towards the golden ruin of the sun which was raised from behind the ridge of the opposite hills, and his Celtic eye saw all the beauty of the infinite brown and purples of the landscape, the flood of glory on the river, the crimson and scarlet clouds remaining above the mountain tops like statuaria flying upon a captured fortress. He thought of his long struggle for liberty and say now for his life in this land. He saw, this island of Nature's and Man's love, after all, he was bound by the will of a tyrant, to leave it and go—where? Ah! a sick would see him on heart sleep bound to America, but, touched not to start to see his cottage and his fields, his home and his fathers' before him but indeed—memories, he was about to turn his back on an unhappy country, and seek his fortune in a more prosperous world.

Having made up his mind to depart he was impatient to be gone, for he was in Mayo with the true heart and the tears of young girl, his Mary Maureen, whom he had loved from his boyhood, and she would could be his wife so long as they lingered in this atmosphere of hunger and oppression.

Jim, the boy, twelve time years, stood, one hidden the valley sent to be sent by Sinclair. Maureen, poor darling, but suffered enough. She should not wait to hear the groans of the old people, the weeping of the children, should not see the despair of full grown men, and the anguish of young parents. They would be out on the broad air, near and wife together, before the dawn of the day of destruction in the Bandshere illin.

It wanted but two days of their wedding day, and as Owen stood watching the sun rise, hope rose high in his heart, while he remembered that any spot on earth must become home where Maureen would dwell with him, love him, serve him, welcome him. With God's good gifts of youth and health in his possession, to tyrant could rob him of a home and Maureen.

He finished his meditation and stepped out to go about his work, when his foot touched a slip of paper which the opening door had scarcely displaced on the threshold. Picking it up he glanced at it carelessly and his heart bounded and then stood still. On the paper were a few lines in pencil, in a hand which the initiated could understand, but which Owen Dermot had only too recently learnt. It was a note binding him to a meeting of a secret society to be held that night, a society to which he had belonged from his boyhood, to which he was bound by oath, but from which he had long held himself entirely aloof.

What did they want with him now, asked Owen of himself. What commands were they about to lay on him, in what way might they not possibly interfere with the future life he had laid out for himself and Mary? He had marked out for himself, to part him forever from Maureen; hands of union coming at this moment of the wholesale tribulation of the people, stretch him as something ominous. He shuddered, remembering the oath by which he was bound. All that day he went about his affairs like a man in a dream, and when sunset came he sat out across the valley towards the mountains, and was lost among the shadows on the hillside.

There stands a pair of wistful dark eyes above long at an open door in the head of the valley, and only his themselves from the moon's gaze when midnight came without bringing a satisfied for figure into view in the lonesome high road. Maureen was an orphan girl who had all her life toiled for the bread she ate from house to house of the mountain people who had charitably reared her. She had a sweet gypsy face, brown eyes, and dark hair that gave forth a sheen of gold in the sun, a strong heart, a cheerful temper and a womanly soul. Having lived Owen faithfully through years of wait and sorrow, she would follow him gladly now across the ocean. Jim had been sent to warn for the friends of the stranger should have warn to depart for a long as she might take Owen's bread, mend his clothes, fix by her side, and keep his friends bright and warm.

Uneasy at Owen's absence that evening, seeing that they had many things to talk about in connection with their marriage and journey, Maureen yet did the next day work cheerfully and about sunset saw at last her lover coming across the hills to look for her. The girl had been working for hours, binding sheaves, and now made a picture standing in the sunlight with her arms full of the ripe corn, a bunch of the wild poppies that overran the hedge, in her hair.

After the first glance at his face the light of joy and welcome faded her eyes and lips. Owen was so changed she could scarcely recognize him. What could have happened within the space of a day and night to give his face that despite like pallor, his eyes that stony stare? Also had some little suffer many kinds of misfortunes and never with a complaint—for this. He looked like a man who had seen out of the carnage of a battle, and was still living in the horror of it.

"Owen, for God's sake tell me what is the matter with you!" faltered the girl.

"Darling," said Owen, hoarsely, "this day after to-morrow was to have been our wedding day. I've come to tell you now that it cannot be. A strange thing has happened that will prevent it."

Maureen dropped her sheaves and slowly lowered her face between her hands.

"Look at me, Maureen, I am in trouble."

"I am you are in trouble, Owen, but because you are afraid I shall be a burthen on you! Close up, then, and go without me. I would rather never see you again than think I could bring such a load to your fair, good heart, such trouble on your heart—"

"Oh, my dear, my dearest, as if you could ever bring trouble to my heart. Would to God I could make you lie in my arms this moment and fly with you. But this is something that you cannot understand and I must not explain. You must trust in me, Maureen, and believe in me, even if I am forced to behave like a villain—"

"That you will never do. And I will trust you, if you were to kill me."

"Hush! We spoke of killing!" said Dave, and a more distressing shadow crept into his eyes and settled about the lines of his mouth.

"And now my love, I must bid you good night, for I have many things to do, and I hite no more time to spare—I need light, good bye, my only darling on earth—"

Maureen flung herself weeping into his arms. He pressed her to his heart, stroked her hair, as if she had been a child, and kissed her once. And then he suddenly put her from him and was gone.

Maureen threw herself on her face in the middle and wept till she was blind. The world without there was as impenetrably to her as the night was to Owen. After a time she became better able to think, and, having a good intelligence, she gave it all to the consideration of the unexplained and unexpected misfortune. Something terrible must had suddenly surrounded him. If she could only discover the nature of it, might she not be able to help him out of difficulty? Twilight gathered and night came, and she was still there, her head hidden under the shelter of a hedge, from which a few sprouting bushes thrust out and covered her. When it had long been quite dark, and she had made up her mind that at all events she would force herself to get up and go home, she was startled by hearing the sound of footsteps at the other side of the hedge, and of voices that spoke in strangely distinct whispers.

At first she did not attend to the meaning of the words that came to her, but gradually the idea grew in her mind that a plot was on foot to end the life of the landlord, whose cruelty was set for the destruction of the people of the Bandshere illin. But even this horror she did not connect in any way with her lover's tribulation, till she heard one terrible sentence, which instantly put her in possession of the truth.

"Owen is the man to fire the shot," said one of the whispering voices. "Since he joined the society he certainly became he dare not retract. He is leaving the country in any case.

She lay still behind the hedge afraid to breathe till the sound of footsteps moving away assured her that she might venture to stand upon her feet. All that night she thought over the terrible revelation that had been made to her, and before morning came she was resolved that Owen should not be driven to do a deed of crime, even if she were to get her life sacrificed. She prayed to God for strength to carry out her determination, and when Saturday morning came she was ready. Owen was to be married at 10 o'clock, and a little after 9 she was on her way to the cottage of Dan Dermot's father.

She raised the latch and went in, and found he was not there she sat down to wait for him.

There was no sleep, no time to think, but, just as the clock struck 10 Owen came in, which had been brown and mellow every day for years, and which looked round the place and saw the old straw chair in which Dan Dermot had died of fever years before, and the large crucifix in its nail on the wall close by the door. She sat down in the chair, and looked at the crucifix, and watched and prayed and waited.

At last she heard a step on the pavement, and Owen walked into the house, like the ghost of himself. He had been looking giant, his face dark and aged with trouble. He was stating that before leaving the society, and that she must prevent Maureen till she placed herself right before him, and put her hands on his arms.

"Owen, in God's name, what are you doing to do?"

He shook himself up as if out of a long dream.

"What are you doing here at this hour? Is anything wrong? Has anything happened to you at once. I would go with you, only—

"Only for what, Owen?"

"I have other business to attend to."

He turned away his head as he spoke, and she knew he was lying, and would not look at her where she stood, silently, her arms hanging down by her side, all her soul in her eyes, that followed his every movement.

"Owen, I am your betrothed wife," she said with a long sigh, "tell us true after your own fashion."

"God knows—if I dare speak of God now, it is more after my own heart. But I am bound by my oath and the lot was fairly drawn. It had been decided that a tyrant must be put out of the way for the sake of the people, before my opinion was asked in the matter. Somebody must do the deed, they say the lots were drawn, and I am the man.

"Oh, my poor man, you were never born to be a murderer. God can save Ireland without your help. Remember, Owen, dear, and let some thoughts of God, and let your thoughts of God insist be done. Let us hurry away, and get out on the sea, before anyone knows we are gone."

"Break my oath—break out of danger, leave some one else to take the penalty and the sin—no! Maureen, you know I am no coward. Time is up, and I must start. Go home and pray for me if you love me, pray for a man who cannot pray for himself. I will pray, I am praying for you, but I will not go home.

She made a swift movement and stood with her hand on the door, and looked at her lover with a long sigh, "God is true after your own fashion."

"And thou—if I dare speak of God now, it is more after my own heart. But I am bound by my oath and the lot was fairly drawn. It had been decided that a tyrant must be put out of the way for the sake of the people, before my opinion was asked in the matter. Somebody must do the deed, they say the lots were drawn, and I am the man.

"Oh, my poor man, you were never born to be a murderer. God can save Ireland without your help. Remember, Owen, dear, and let some thoughts of God, and let your thoughts of God insist be done. Let us hurry away, and get out on the sea, before anyone knows we are gone."

"Break my oath—break out of danger, leave some one else to take the penalty and the sin—no! Maureen, you know I am no coward. Time is up, and I must start. Go home and pray for me if you love me, pray for a man who cannot pray for himself. I will pray, I am praying for you, but I will not go home.

She made a swift movement and stood with her hand on the door, and looked at her lover with a long sigh, "God is true after your own fashion."

"God knows

THE MONITOR.

THIRTY-FIRST YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

EDNESDAY, JANUARY 11 1899

THANKS FROM ARCHBISHOP RIORDAN.

I beg leave through the MONITOR to express my thanks to the Ladies and Gentlemen of the parishes of the city for their bounty and active interest in the Cathedral Bazaar. The result will materially aid those who have charge of the building to bring it to a speedy completion.

+P. W. RIORDAN,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The English pilgrims were received by the Pope yesterday.

—Three remarkably good original poems will be found on the second page, and three very interesting original prose articles on the third page of this issue of the MONITOR.

—Mr. Gladstone will stay abroad for five weeks, spending the time between Naples, Sorrento, and Amalfi. He will return home two days before the meeting of Parliament.

—The Holy Father proposes to send twelve million francs (about $2,240,000) to various charitable institutions scattered all over the Christian world.

—The Irish pilgrims to Rome will be received in audience by the Holy Father between the 5th and 10th of next month. It is expected that fully a thousand persons will join in the pilgrimage.

—The N. Y. Freeman's Journal makes a good point in a late issue, which might be profitably studied by the same class on this coast. It says: "Young men who cheerfully pay a dollar or two for seats at the theatre ought to reflect when the plate approaches them how little the Church cuts them in comparison with their amusements."

—The esteemed contemporary, the Monitor of Brooklyn, N. Y., Old Country, in one splendid double [illegible] number, the Feast of Christmas and the Golden Jubilee of Leo XIII. Success to the Monitor, which is doing noble work for religion and education and the success of the Irish national movement." Thus speaks our respectable and rigorous contemporary, the Boston Pilot, whose position is foremost among the Catholic press of this country.

—The Church News, published in Washington, D. C., is not only a good Catholic paper but it is also generous as it is just in the following editorial paragraph: "The handsomest Christmas supplements we have seen are those issued by the San Francisco Monitor and the Catholic Citizen. The publishers of these journals deserve much praise for their taste and enterprise." Thanks, gentlemen, on behalf of ourselves and our highly-esteemed contemporary of Columbus, Ohio.

—The large sums of money, reported by cable as having been given at Jubilee offerings to the Holy Father are all turned over to the Treasury of the Church and used to open up new missions in pagan lands, to assist needy missions all over the world, to help distressed Communities, and to relieve Indian missionaries. Not one cent is reserved for the Holy Father's personal use, as he has no need for Census's tribute nor to dispense it in charity and in promoting good works.

—It is estimated that the value of the gifts to Pope Leo XIII., will amount to $10,000,000. The will include 20,000 churches, 12,000 chalices, 8,000 crucifixes and an immense number of vestments, ostensoriums, etc. All these are now on exhibition and the pilgrims and visitors have an opportunity of seeing something from every nation in the world. The space originally intended for the display of the presents had to be greatly extended, such was the desire of the people to honor the Vicar of Christ.

—The number of divorces applied for through the courts of this city during the past year, aggregated 542. Of these 413 have already been granted, as against 417 in the year 1898 and 391 in the year 1897, and 382 in the year 1896. From these figures it will be seen that "divorce," like all other baneful influences, is progressing too rapidly to be healthy for the moral condition of society. Divorce is one of the many bad things introduced into the world by Protestantism.

—"Last year the MONITOR published a very interesting biographical sketch of the venerable Rev. Louis J. Heyrie, who has for some years been residing at Notre Dame University, where he died last Sunday in the 88th year of his age. Father Neyron was a valiant Frenchman who fought under Napoleon all through the Russian campaign and also at Waterloo. He subsequently resigned his position, studied for the priesthood, received Holy Orders, and served for years as a missionary, but when he became expensioned he retired to Notre Dame and was professor of physiology up to within a month ago. R. I. P.

—Such of our readers as have the happiness of being infused with the beautiful devotion of the Sacred Heart, will superintend a great joy in reading Father Deforest's contribution "The Miracle of Cangas," on the third page. Every Catholic home should have an image or a picture of the Sacred Heart for personal and family devotion, and the home where such objects of devotion are not found, can never be as perfectly happy as those wherein both the temporal and spiritual blessings promised by our Sacred Redeemer to Blessed Margaret Mary are daily and hourly procured for all the household, through devotion to the Sacred Heart.

A Public School Superintendent's Mistaken Ideas.

At the recent Convention of the California School Teachers held in this city addresses on various subjects were delivered by its members, and, among others, Hon. Ira G. Hoitt, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, undertook the difficult task of enlightening the educational world on "What to Do and How to Do It." According to a city daily Mr. Hoitt commenced by saying:

"The safe and sane order of the various communities in any country must depend upon the intelligence and self-control of the people, or on a despotic government by armed force."

It is hardly necessary to say to Catholic readers, or, in fact, readers of any Christian denomination, that Hon. Ira G. Hoitt's declaration is widely at variance with truth. Religion is the main dependence upon which rests the purity of the people, the morality of society and the safety of the State. That system of miscalled education to which Mr. Hoitt attributes such potency is far better qualified to make the men of the future destructive Anarchists than true Americans. George Washington, properly styled "the Father of his country," never spoke truer words than when he said: "Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."

Such are the words of Washington, and they have successfully stood the test of critics and cavillers during the past century, nor does the unusual declaration of Mr. Hoitt in any way weaken them. It is simply an example in which George Washington is, was, and always will be right, and the Honorable Ira G. Hoitt is now and ever will be wrong.

The Anarchists of Chicago were all educated men, yet we fail to find any restraining influences exercised upon them through their educational advantages. Men may be educated to the sages of Sparta, yet like the Spartans they may be the veriest slaves of passion. The knowledge of God is the beginning of wisdom, and when education is divorced from God it is like a branch torn from the mother tree trunk—a fruitless limb which only encumbers the ground upon which it has fallen.

Every pill, prison and penitentiary in the land is filled with educated convicts. Canada is the chosen paradise of the Bank Presidents and other financiering frauds, many of whom graduated from the highest schools [illegible] to that system of education which our State Superintendent says—in opposition to George Washington—is a panacea for all public calamities. It is hardly necessary, therefore, to say that Mr. Hoitt's expressions upon this point are absurd and actually criminal.

Let us now follow the State Superintendent through other sections of his speech.

"Every child," said the speaker, "has a right to an education in the general sense of the public. Education must be universal, as free to the child of the laborer as to the child of Croesus. Education should not be a matter of charity, but a right to all alike for the purpose of making the State a great concern in the State so can be found in the State. Education results do not come to us like high manna in heaven. Our liberality would appear to demand the State should take the children out early intellectually, physically, morally and industrially." So far, so good, Mr. Hoitt.

"The State," says the Superintendent, "should train its children not only intellectually, physically, morally and industrially, but also in patriotism." These sentiments are second-hand thoughts which our State Superintendent has purloined from some equally illogical predecessor.

In the first place, the State has no children. Mr. Hoitt would have us believe that every child born in California comes under the direct control of the State Superintendent of Education for its literary, moral, physical and industrial acquirements. But, thank God! the American people have not as yet advanced far on the road towards adopting the State slavery established under the pagan code of Sparta.

Published statistics will bear us out in the declaration that in every country where education has been divorced from religion, crimes of the worst character have increased. It is so in Germany, in Saxony and in our own country, as instanced by the records of divorces, the private peculations of educated officials, the corrupt literature which floods the land, the obscene pictures which are spread broadcast for the corruption of youth, and the filth which pollutes the pulpits of every town, city and State in the Union.

Did Hon. Ira G. Hoitt reflect when he said "the State should educate its children" that he was advocating Communism? If, as Herbert Spencer says, "the mental wants of the rising generation ought to be satisfied by the State, why not their physical ones?" The reasoning, therefore, which is held to establish the right of children to intellectual food will equally as well establish their right to material food and all the concomitants that appertain to their existence, and when such a scheme is perfected it will annul all parental rights and make each infant a mere chattel of the State.

Does this Hon. Ira G. Hoitt know anything of the existence of an Omnipotent Being whom Christians call God? Or does the State Superintendent imagine that the State can supplant God in spiritual supremacy? His language would lead us to suppose that in his view at least the State is the very highest authority California Christians should recognize. But, think Heaven, there is a higher few even than that recognized by Hon. Ira G. Hoitt, and next to the authority of God over every Christian child, there comes in the parental right to educate children through an unchangeable and inalienable right given to every father and mother by the code of the Divine Creator.

Hon. Ira G. Hoitt would assignee both Almighty God and parental authority from State education, and make all children grow up a similar growth without the wisdom necessary to save their morals. The attempt to teach morality without religion would be as great a failure as to attempt to teach a man to walk straight when blindfolded. The eyes of every child must be open to see God in his works and then learn to love Him and to hope through faith to see Him hereafter. It is for this great and that every human being is born, and the education which does not lead youth to the attainment of these ends and saving souls of God's commandments is false in its conception and dangerous to society and the State in its results.

Christians have always and everywhere made the best citizens under every form of government. It was so under the pagan emperors and it is so under modern systems of government. Christianity is the mother of civilization, and when State Superintendents like Hon. Ira G. Hoitt propose to educate youth without Christianity, they attempt an impossibility and will inevitably lead to national destruction.

As the Prelates of the Third Plenary Council have well said, the three great educational agencies are the House, the Church and the School. They mould men and shape society, and any education which ignores parental rights, excludes religion, and plants itself upon the quicksand foundation recommended by Hon. Ira G. Hoitt, will inevitably lead to the destruction of any nation that follows it out to its legitimate results.

So apparent is the danger which Christians realize from State education based upon Hon. Ira G. Hoitt's theory, that Protestants of every denomination are crying aloud for the establishment of schools which will save Christianity in the souls of their children. The State cannot teach religion, hence it is folly to expect that morality can exist among a people educated without a knowledge of God and their obligation to love and dependence upon Him, and the sooner this fact dawns upon the intellect of Hon. Ira G. Hoitt, the better will it be for the future of the children of California who are to be educated under a system that makes God nothing in the murky darkness of irreligion instead of opening it up to the grandeur, the glory, the goodness, and the power of that God to whom the people of this great land are indebted for every breath they draw, for every favor they enjoy, and for the general peace and prosperity which make this Republic a veritable paradise for those who have the good fortune to exist beneath its beneficent skies.

A Tribute our Readers will Appreciate.

The following tribute to the MONITOR's worth comes from one of Ireland's most distinguished ecclesiastics, whose name stands foremost in the ranks of her holy and patriotic priesthood. We know that all MONITOR readers will experience joyful pride in the sentiments expressed by our sacerdotal patron and they will also rejoice to know the high appreciation accorded the MONITOR when placed in contrast with its numerous contemporaries:

DECEMBER 15, 1898.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

My Dear Sir:—I have great pleasure in forwarding you the enclosed cheque of one pound—one year's subscription for your admirable and well conducted journal, the MONITOR. I read a number of newspapers published both in this country and America, and none of them with as much profit and pleasure as the MONITOR. I have only to wish it "Prosper, prosper, Bonsoir."

—A cablegram of Friday last says that Mgr. Persico is engaged in an intrigue with the Tories to compel the Bishops and priests of Ireland to surrender their Home Rule principles. It is scarcely worth while to pay much attention to lies of a malicious enemy as old as England is in antagonism to Ireland. Here is what the London Daily News said of the coward when it was first mentioned: "The supposition that even the present Ministers, feeble as they are, have been trying to prun Monsignor Persico into their service passes our powers of credulity. It is believed or put about that Monsignor Persico can work upon the Irish priesthood through anti-Nationalist ecclesiastics like Dr. Higgins, Bishop of Kerry, and Dr. O'Dwyer, Bishop of Limerick; but the idea that Monsignor Persico can work upon the Irish Bishops as a whole is absurd."

Correspondence.

We originally made it our rule to confine our Roman Letter to matters pertaining to the progress of Religion in the Eternal City. We have, however, of late been so crowded with matter of a secular character that we shall now depart from our rule for a few weeks, or as long as it may be found necessary.

OUR TRAVELING CORRESPONDENT.

Catholic Affairs in Northern Capitals.

STOCKHOLM, Sunday, Jan. 1, 1899.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Since my last letter from Christiania I have visited Stockholm, which deserves fully obedience, be reminded time to time by the Lutheran clergy that their power over their flock died myself and the post-worthy effort to establish the "Faith of our Fathers, living still," in the face of great difficulties and drawbacks. During the administration of Rev. Father Coleman, who is the present pastor at Woodland, Yolo County, a branch of the V. M. I. was established under favorable auspices, but since he was called away the efforts of the society have been neglected for want of proper direction and interest in their meetings. As stated before, however, the parish is visited by Rev. P. McDonald, of Grass Valley, who attends to the spiritual wants of the people as far as under the circumstances is possible. Young in years and of kindly, unassuming manner, towards all, he is a general favorite and a zealous member of the sacred Priesthood.

FROM OUR LONDON LETTER.

Above Smaterdalia and further North, where the Reindeer Herd comes through a rich belt of fruit and agricultural land, is Overtio, celebrated as one of the best fruit-raising sections of the State. Overtio's population is selfish if fruit production is creditable to her people and cannot fail to exert great importance in establishing her claims distinctly in the future.

Colton, the county of one of the best wheat-growing portions of California, is reached by stage from several points, as well as by a branch railway connecting some with the Southern Pacific at Tilton, and others with Stockton, among the most thrifty and prosperous in the country, and the intelligence of the population in its unsettled state well represented by such men as Mr. Ostrander, of Hawkins, McGinnis, Murphy, Fitz-Gerald, Valles, Sweeney, Gallery, etc., who hold forth in fine style at Masonic gatherings in that place. Here the main street was unusually of north and south, was bearing the Xmas 1897, and the other 1898. The daily pilgrims of church were wrestled with for hours of conversation, and gratefully paid to low and white colors hung from the gallery. In the rear of the church was erected a large Xmas tree dressed in 1898, and the altars were adorned with the usual Xmas decorations. Rev. Father Mooney, of Stockton, was present at the Xmas Mass, and made an eloquent address on the Christ-Child, Christmas, Holy Mass, and Holy Communion, and a sweet sermon, which I shall be glad to publish, if it be not too lengthy for the MONITOR. Rev. Father Mooney is a zealous and energetic pastor, and deservedly popular with his flock. Where he is well known and his sermons and lectures are well appreciated, he is a Master Superior to whom their hearts and personal attachment are given, and he is a man who sympathizes with which they are received into the communion of Christ in the same order in which they entered.

The Lenten pastoral were Rev. Fathers Grace and Hickey, accompanied by Father Blanchard, S.J., San Francisco; Rev. Fathers McMenamy and Ryan, Vicars of Auburn, Lee of Boston, Coleman of Woodland, Rev. Father Mooney, Lady of Lockford, Walsh of San Francisco, and others whose names we did not learn. The audience was large and seemed much pleased with the ceremonies.

Your truly,

THE NEW CATHEDRAL BAZAAR.

Financial Results of the Several Booths.

As it would be inconsistent in publishing the results of the Bazaar, we have left the names of the ladies and gentlemen whose sales are not sufficiently important to the reading by a successful enumeration, the booths, in the following order, as they were left by parties, and, in the case of the Bazaar, in the order in which they were opened:

Fancy Goods, Mrs. Mary Ryan, $1,000.00; Fancy Goods, Mrs. Mary Ryan, $1,000.00; Fancy Goods, Mrs. Mary Ryan, $1,000.00;

HOME RULERS.

Ireland's Friends in England.

AN APPEAL FOR FAIR PLAY.

Address to Mgr. Persico.

The following petition is being circulated among English Catholics:

We venture to bring before your notice the accompanying address to Monsignor Persico, and to express a hope that you will allow your signature to be attached to it.

RIPON — J. W. BERNARD, Lieut.-Col.
OXFORD — GEORGE BLOUNT
JAS. MARSHALL — SIDNEY SCHOPS
HENRY BEDINFELD, Bart. — S. N. STEELE
— JOHN O. RANKING, K.S.G.

You are requested to direct your reply to George Blount, Esq., 28, Old Burlington Street, W.

To the Most Rev. Monsignor Persico, O. S. F. O., Archbishop of Damietta, Commissary Apostolic.

MOST REV. Lord—We, the undersigned, desire respectfully to approach your Grace upon your return from Ireland, and offer to you the assurance of our loyalty and devotion to the Holy See, together with our congratulations upon the accomplishment of your important mission.

As Catholics, we feel specially bound to express our gratitude to the Chosen Representative of the Catholic solicitude displayed by him, as our common father, for our suffering brethren in Ireland; remembering as we do that it is to them, under Divine Providence, that we owe the liberties we enjoy at present in our country after centuries of persecution.

As Englishmen, bitterly conscious of the opprobrium—especially in the Sister Isle—heaped on the past, we hailed with pleasure the advent of your Grace, believing that it would materially assist and morally encourage our efforts, or by back another, for peace and to obtain justice in the future. We cannot doubt that the result of your prolonged stay in Ireland will have been to reserve you completely as to the legitimate and reasonable aspirations of the national spirit, the denial of which we hold to be the main cause of all the misery and distress which cannot have failed to strike your Grace painfully, as the chief characteristic of the country. You will at the same time have been enabled by observing the apostolic wisdom which characterizes the episcopate, the zeal which animates the clergy, and the piety which distinguishes the whole people.

Your Grace will have noticed and appreciated the remarkable fact that, in the present struggle for constitutional changes, constitutional methods of agitation are recommended by the leaders and accepted by the people with a practical meaning which some are exceptions here and there only proves the rule. Under the influence of this happy sympathy between hierarchy, clergy, and people, not only have secret societies—always, if not entirely, disappeared, but the bitter and not unreasonable enmity and suspicion which have for centuries arisen in Ireland against our government are rapidly giving way to affection and confidence.

Englishmen who visit Ireland to express sympathy with the people, or even to meet Ministers impartially as to the state of the country, are met they with an enthusiastic welcome which a few years ago would have seemed impossible.

Just amid these general signs of improvement in the relations between the two countries, we have to deplore the action of certain by member of the Catholic Church in England—men of high position and honorable character—who, for reasons assumably worthy of them but incomprehensible to us, have adopted a course of bitter and uncompromising hostility towards Ireland. Disparaging and disrespectful observations concerning the conduct of priests and even of the Bishops of Ireland have been made, and the latter especially have been publicly censured in speeches made in England, and even as we have reason to believe, in private representations made to authorities, seemingly but too intimately to the Holy See itself.

We desire most emphatically to repudiate the action. The age is too advanced, and we protest against it as insulting to that venerable hierarchy and venerable priesthood which have been the main safeguards of the faith in Ireland in the past, and which are still among the chief glories of Christendom.

Finally, Most Reverend Lord, while we abstain from making needless appeals or offering unjustified counsels to the Holy See, we desire to express our firm conviction, that no misrepresentations, however consistently made, or from however distinguished a quarter they may proceed, will ever be answered in inducing the Holy Father to withhold his countenance and confidence from his faithful people of Ireland, who, constant to the noble traditions of their past, and adhering as they do as ever to the faith of their fathers, deserve only to secure for themselves and their children the power to enhance their temporal affairs, under the shelter of the British Crown, in accordance with their wants, the feelings, and the history of their race.

ARCHBISHOP CASANOVA.

His Course Approved in Rome.

The Most Reverend Ricardo Casanova, Archbishop of Guatemala, who was tried by that Government, and now residing at Santa Clara, in this State, wrote to Rome, setting forth to the Pontiff a full statement of the case. He has received in reply the following letter, in which the Holy See approves the conduct of the banished Archbishop:

Most Reverend and Dear Sir.—The letter in which your Grace informs me of your exile was a cause of intense grief, both to me and His Holiness, whom I was obliged to acquaint with the sad intelligence.

His Holiness deeply deplores the measures taken by the Government of Guatemala against your worthy person, and he deplores it still more since you are only punished for fulfilling the duties inherent to your pastoral charge.

However, the consideration of the motives of your persecution, knowing as you do that "Blessed is he that suffers persecution for justice sake," and that the transitory tribulation here below assures you of an everlasting reward.

So with these considerations, sufficient to cheer any sorrowful heart, the Holy Father vouchsafes to pour consolation to your large and blessing to your Grace, and I on my part will earnestly pray that this blessing may obtain from our Lord the grace to shorten the time of your exile.

Meanwhile I have the pleasure of signifying to your Grace that the dispositions taken by your Grace for the administration of the diocese, from which you have been so suddenly separated, have been found prudent and praiseworthy.

Hoping soon to receive more favorable news, I remain, my Lord, with sentiments of profound esteem your Grace's servant in Christ.

M. CARDINAL RAMPOLLA,
Secretary of State.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Heartless, Headless, Godless.

SOME VERY STERLING TRUTHS WORTH STUDYING.

Three Fatal Defects in Public Education.

Rev. P. F. McGinnis has an article on Public School Education in the January Catholic World from which we make the following forcible extracts:

This, then, O critic, "is the writing that is written," Heartless, Headless, Godless. "And this is the interpretation of the word" "Heartless."

Your public school system is one which ignores "the heart"—it has the effect of dying it up, as it is its end rationalism and science on which it develops and ruins of heavenly religion do not fall. Consequently is not calculated to bring forth Christian men and women who will believe in God and His commandments, and in future rewards and punishments, and who will value right and honesty above temporal advantages, and who will be spiritually strong enough to conquer their sensual passions. Man has affection as well as intelligence, and if he is to be ennobled it does not do to train his head only. Inside the family no father would ever think of bringing up his boy in that way. He is even more solicitous to make his children God and his parents, to make him honest and pure, than he is to provide him with a trick or craft by which to earn his bread. Catholics believe that the branch of religion is no more difficult to impart than, far from requiring less time than the other, it needs more, and so they think that it ought not to be relegated to the Sunday or to the hours—especially when there is none, no home worthy of the name—but should have its place daily, and hourly—and in the school. It cannot be taught by mercenary teachers, or by hook another, but by every word that proceeds from the parent and teacher. Like the salt which seasons our food, it may not be taken by doses once a week, nor even every night, but must be in the food at every meal. It must be in history, in geography, in reading lessons, in the manners and examples of the teacher, age, in his or her very eyes

The child learns as much, perhaps more, from the teacher by sight than by hearing. Now, in your common schools the Catholic child has a teacher who may be a pagan, infidel, or at least may have no belief in the doctrines of the Church; and even where an opposite doctrine are taught openly, or by the many secret ways which can be imagined and shut off by no inspectors, since to do so it would be necessary to annihilate all character in the teacher, even then there is a wide negative and neutral tone in the most important of all branches of education, which must produce on the child's party and faith a blighting influence, and, as we aim not at men and women who are graduates of this system, the effect is apparentness of indifferentism to all religious belief, which is faded as noble charity and loud brotherly love by those who do not understand it rightly. Let those who are not Christians, whether Jews or Protestants, and who still believe and practice as their parents did before them, look back for a moment to their youth, and they will perceive that it was not then that they were brought up, and that what kept them in their Church was not the formal lessons learnt, but all the unseen age of apparent nothings in which they lived in an atmosphere of their parents or relatives, the little events of their every-day life, and as they grew into years, their minds, and gradually and imperceptibly made them what they are to-day. We would place a child in a Jewish home and in another in Mormon. We would keep polling it up and transferring it from place to place, now at home, now at school, then to a cold one, now in the sun and then in the shade. We would place it now for six days or parts of days in the week in a home of the faith and in a home where its labor would not be a healthy tree but a dwarfed and sickly one, if not a mere dry stick. So in education, man is left to himself, the child advances "in wisdom, in age, and in grace." The age increases by days and days and weeks, and so its wisdom. Grace is an unknown quantity in its growth. Where a halting plan is in use the child is an unknown quantity in its moral, ethic, and another at school which is Protestant or agnostic. It looks up to the teacher and is molded and form her; and it also looks up to the mother and loves her too. Will it ever have the same stand in the neutral or common ground of indifference and doubt? Catholics say it will, and so they are not satisfied with the public school system. They want unity and sympathy between the home and the teacher and the natural mother.

We have no objection to make to the individual teachers, many of whom are good Catholics, who would be glad to teach their children, but for Catholics it is not the law. Neither do we care so much about the faults of the system as regards such teachers, although, in the opinion of most people when we have said, "the system is of practical common sense displayed, at least in some place, in giving the public a prime training which will not let the children of the toilers at manual labor for their prosperous occupations. This great work what was meant by Mr. Mill in the writing in the wall. Sometimes we have thought that commissioners of education are worldly, they are so fascinated in their mission. Possibly it has occurred sometimes that a price child was picked up and given opportunities which developed in him such spirit and genius, that he ended by becoming President or something like it. But in more than ninety-nine cases in a hundred, we shall have reason to regret if the system out as well as his father. We say let the commissioners look only the common branches—reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and history, leaving out the "opinions and the dogmas. If it happens that a poor man should have a child of extraordinary ability, in most cases he will himself be able to push him forward, or if not, the philanthropists who are willing to do it are as numerous as such children, and the worst that will happen is the loss of an occasional great man, which we can better afford than all this expense. "Great men" are not scarce.

The system is also headless from the very fact of its being headless, and so, since it proposes to get along without guidance, it also Godless. We would be far from saying that communities, teachers or scholars are worthy of such a title, but if the last, through extremely favorable circumstances, example and example, continue to fear and hope in and love God, they have not the school to thank for it. They will not, generally speaking, be Christians, and if they are good Protestants—which we do not believe—we cannot be expected to lead it as satisfactory result.

Hence this system, not approving itself to Christians, ought to be changed, or its days are numbered.

More, Hard, places is also written in the wall by the hand of God.

Mene—"God hath numbered thy days and shall finish it."

Thecel—"Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting."

Phares—"Things will never work well till the system is divided and diversified to suit different interests, and made broader, so that all concerned may be able to adopt it, in way may be found where there is a will. Let us make the public schools more American.

ST. IGNATIUS SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Christmas-Tree Festival of the Female Classes.

Under the auspices of St. Aloysius Circle the annual Christmas Tree Festival of the girl pupils of the Sunday School of St. Ignatius, took place in the College Hall, last Sunday afternoon. A large and fashionable audience was in attendance. Upon a splendid Christmas Tree was placed and its base, green branches bent with a weight of good things. The exercises opened with a very nicely rendered by the Sunday School Choir. Miss Josephine Stanley delivered (Symphonia) address of Welcome. A beautiful and touching address was given with exquisite elocution. Misses Eugenia Gonzales, Teresa Kelly and Mary Boyle then recited the "Messages of Faith, Hope, and Love to the Children of Bethlehem," a clever composition from the facile pen of Miss Harriet M. Skill. Miss Mary Cronin delivered "Thanksgiving Song," was well sung and recited by a select band of the Kolpians. The choir sang a very sweetly heard voices "The Child of Bethlehem." Miss Mary Cronin, who has, by the way, an excellent voice and fine delivery, gave the closing address. The distribution of extra presents and Christmas gifts was the last and to the members of the Sunday-school—probably the most interesting item of the programme. The exercises passed off very nicely and were highly commended by the pleased audience. Miss I. M. Hedges had charge of the Christmas Tree, the decorations and the entertainment, and deserves great praise for her success. Miss Mary Thomson ably assisted in the arrangements. Miss Mary Mooney presided with much ease and grace at the piano, and well in fact—every thing that said and nothing was pleasant and perfect as it was possible to be.

The following list embodies the names of the teachers and also the names of the girl pupils who by their teachers were pronounced to be such non-for regular attendance, good deportment and good lessons:

TEACHERS. — PREMIUM WINNERS.

Miss Stillmore, 1—M. Hughes, 2—M. Cronin.
Miss Thompson, 1—M. Guay, 2—A. McCarthy, 3—M. Foley.
Miss Brooks, 1—M. Jennings, 2—I. Kennedy.
Miss Casey, 1—J. Stanley, 2—H. Nolan.
Miss Dunn, 1—M. Kelly, 2—M. Boyle.
Miss Brady, 1—E. Farrell, 2—M. Morgan.
Miss Wallace, 1—M. Lane, 2—A. Lane.
Miss Lane, 1—E. Lane, 2—H. Fagan, H. Mooney.
Miss McCarthy, 1—T. Kelly, 2—M. Bolerice.
Miss Kearney, 1—B. Hallinan, 2—M. Lynch.
Miss Geraghty, 1—M. Gilbert, 2—M. Burke.
Miss Hayes, 1—K. McCann, 2—E. Wade.
Miss Butler, 1—J. Donnelly, 2—K. Kearney.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Dunne, 2—M. Mahoney.
Miss Walker, 1—K. Lynch, 2—N. Gilbert.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—G. Morrell, M. Burke.
Miss Fitzsimmons, 1—G. Banks, 2—F. Ryan.
Miss McCormick, 1—M. Feeney, 2—E. Lynch.
Miss Shortlinal, 1—M. Stapleton, 2—A. Burke.
Miss Thomas, 1—M. Walsh, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss O'Malley, 1—K. Sesson, 2—A. Martin.
Miss Thomas, 1—M. McNally, 2—J. O'Neill.
Miss Roche, 1—M. Sweeny, 2—E. Byrne.
Miss Ward, 1—K. Kelly, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Collins, 1—C. Ford, 2—E. Dowdee.
Miss Ward, 1—M. Hackett, 2—J. Preston.
Miss O'Connell, 1—M. Conner, 2—J. Dodge.
Miss Ward, 1—M. Mooney, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Mack, 1—M. Baker, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Hawkes, 1—F. McCarthy, 2—S. Cher.
Miss O'Dea, 1—M. Walsh, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Leffert, 1—E. Belger, 2—M. McCaffery.
Miss Nolan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Nolan, 1—M. Campbell, 2—J. Hayes.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—E. Hanlon.
Miss Burke, 1—Emma Kelly, 2—M. Madden.
Miss Kelly, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss O'Malley, 1—M. Walsh, 2—M. Lahan.
Miss Kelly, 1—M. Corbett, 2—J. Ryan.
Miss Kelly, 1—M. Morgan, 2—L. Morgan.
Miss Boylan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Boylan, 1—M. Murphy, 2—M. Kelly.
Miss Hayes, 1—G. Lange, 2—A. Ganey.
Miss M'Donald, 1—M. Dwyer, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss M. Brennan, 1—L. O'Hara, 2—N. Kearney.
Miss Geraghty, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Kearney, 1—M. Carthy, 2—M. McCarthy.

CASUAL.

Miss O'Neill, 1—M. Corbett, 2—L. Carroll.
Miss Callaghan, 1—A. Kelcher, 2—C. Brown.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss M. Kelly, 1—M. Kelly, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Ryan, 1—M. Ryan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Mitchell, 1—M. Gessler, 2—J. Harriger.
Miss Hopkins, 1—G. Gilbert, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Hopkins, 1—G. Gilbert, 2—A. Kenny.
Miss Gibbons, 1—M. Geraghty, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Gibbons, 1—M. Linehan, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Gibbons, 1—A. Lydon, 2—A. O'Brien.
Miss McLaughlin, 1—A. Roche, 2—M. Ryan.
Miss Fitzpatrick, 1—M. Dunne, 2—M. Gessler.
Miss Brady, 1—M. Sullivan, 2—D. Heath.

PREMIUMS WITHOUT LESSONS.

First class—Silver medal, 1st prize, N. Dwyer. Second class—1st prize, J. Smith; 2nd prize, B. Hallinan. Third class 1st prize, L. Taylor; 2nd prize, E. Hallinan.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Pure Milk Put to the Test.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Jan. 2, 1888.

L. J. Smith & Co., Providence, R. I.

Gentlemen: Your Infant Food, Crème Ice and Pulmon stands, one, I remember, the highest in the estimation of the public. Yours, etc.

EDWIN W. JOY,
Chemist and Analyst.

Pure Milk Test.

San Francisco, Cal., 1888.

Gentlemen: I have tested your Infant Food, Crème Ice and Pulmon stands, one, I remember, the highest in the estimation of the public. Yours, etc.

EDWIN W. JOY,
Chemist and Analyst.

San Francisco.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—On Dec. 12th, at Belfast, the house of Patrick Kelly, Crumlin Road, was found to be on fire. Mrs. Kelly, who discovered the fire, was broken into, when it was discovered that the second story was enveloped in flames. The brigade was soon on the spot, and, after doing an entrance, found the body of Mrs. Quinn in the front bedroom. Life was extinct, and the body burned in a frightful manner. On the bed by the dead body of one of her daughters, aged about five years, was also discovered. Another of the children who slept in the same apartment, was rescued with difficulty. These were the only occupants of the house.

Cavan.—Lord Caran died at the Lodge, Westminster Mass, on December 16. He had been in delicate health for some time. The immediate cause of his death was bronchitis.

On Dec. 16th, the Month's memory of the Most Rev. Dr. Finnegan, late Bishop of Kilmore, was observed in the Cathedral, in the presence of a large number of the clergy and laity of the diocese.

Carlow.—Rev. Patrick F. Nolan, P.P., Rathoe, Fallon, county Carlow, the 25th inst., to bring brother of the late John (Annaly) Nolan, the writer expressing his gratitude to Michael Davitt for the honor done to the memory of his deceased brother, and the world and Dail Eireann. "It is a peculiar, if pure and disinterested friendship," Father Nolan says, "that Mr. Davitt should have erected that monument of his wide sympathy, and unknown to all except the sculptor.

Clare.—Mr. McNamara, who was sent to Dublin to offer a Christmas dinner on Christmas Day, 6th, and has again been served with a summons for a breach of the Land Act.

On Dec. 25th, a great demonstration took place in Kilrush, which was participated in by over two thousand persons, bewildered some of the Christmas visitors to Kilrush. The purpose of the return home from Limerick jail of Thomas Cleary, who was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, in connection with the outbreak in Vandeleur street. The prisoner arrived at Kilrush in the afternoon by the boat of the steamer, and "Old Sixty Ireland" and other Clubs were formed in the town and the people through the town. The police were unable to make any interference with the proceedings, which were most enthusiastic.

Cork.—On Dec 16th, intelligence reached Fermoy that the Rev. T. Forrest, P.P., of Carrigtwohill, was officiated action at the bands of his parishioners. Mr. Forrest is a native of Fermoy and who had impressed himself in a manner that near his chapel, had been selected to be holiday.

On the 22nd Rev. Dr. O'Callaghan left Cork for Rome, to attend the Jubilee of his Holiness, Leo XIII.

The Christmas Week passed off very quietly in Cork, but to attend the Jubilee of his Holiness, Leo XIII.

The child learns as much, perhaps more, from the teacher by sight than by hearing. Now, in your common schools the Catholic child has a teacher who may be a pagan, infidel, or at least may have no belief in the doctrines of the Church; and even where an opposite doctrine are taught openly, or by the many secret ways which can be imagined and shut off by no inspectors, since to do so it would be necessary to annihilate all character in the teacher, even then there is a wide negative and neutral tone in the most important of all branches of education, which must produce on the child's party and faith a blighting influence, and, as we aim not at men and women who are graduates of this system, the effect is apparentness of indifferentism to all religious belief, which is faded as noble charity and loud brotherly love by those who do not understand it rightly. Let those who are not Christians, whether Jews or Protestants, and who still believe and practice as their parents did before them, look back for a moment to their youth, and they will perceive that it was not then that they were brought up, and that what kept them in their Church was not the formal lessons learnt, but all the unseen age of apparent nothings in which they lived in an atmosphere of their parents or relatives, the little events of their every-day life, and as they grew into years, their minds, and gradually and imperceptibly made them what they are to-day. We would place a child in a Jewish home and in another in Mormon. We would keep polling it up and transferring it from place to place, now at home, now at school, then to a cold one, now in the sun and then in the shade. We would place it now for six days or parts of days in the week in a home of the faith and in a home where its labor would not be a healthy tree but a dwarfed and sickly one, if not a mere dry stick. So in education, man is left to himself, the child advances "in wisdom, in age, and in grace." The age increases by days and days and weeks, and so its wisdom. Grace is an unknown quantity in its growth. Where a halting plan is in use the child is an unknown quantity in its moral, ethic, and another at school which is Protestant or agnostic. It looks up to the teacher and is molded and form her; and it also looks up to the mother and loves her too. Will it ever have the same stand in the neutral or common ground of indifference and doubt? Catholics say it will, and so they are not satisfied with the public school system. They want unity and sympathy between the home and the teacher and the natural mother.

We have no objection to make to the individual teachers, many of whom are good Catholics, who would be glad to teach their children, but for Catholics it is not the law. Neither do we care so much about the faults of the system as regards such teachers, although, in the opinion of most people when we have said, "the system is of practical common sense displayed, at least in some place, in giving the public a prime training which will not let the children of the toilers at manual labor for their prosperous occupations. This great work what was meant by Mr. Mill in the writing on the wall. Sometimes we have thought that commissioners of education are worldly, they are so fascinated in their mission. Possibly it has occurred sometimes that a poor child was picked up and given opportunities which developed in him such spirit and genius, that he ended by becoming President or something like it. But in more than ninety-nine cases in a hundred, we shall have reason to regret if the system out as well as his father. We say let the commissioners look only the common branches—reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and history, leaving out the "opinions and the dogmas. If it happens that a poor man should have a child of extraordinary ability, in most cases he will himself be able to push him forward, or if not, the philanthropists who are willing to do it are as numerous as such children, and the worst that will happen is the loss of an occasional great man, which we can better afford than all this expense. "Great men" are not scarce.

The system is also headless from the very fact of its being headless, and so, since it proposes to get along without guidance, it also Godless. We would be far from saying that communities, teachers or scholars are worthy of such a title, but if the last, through extremely favorable circumstances, example and example, continue to fear and hope in and love God, they have not the school to thank for it. They will not, generally speaking, be Christians, and if they are good Protestants—which we do not believe—we cannot be expected to lead it as satisfactory result.

Hence this system, not approving itself to Christians, ought to be changed, or its days are numbered.

Mene, Hard, places is also written on the wall by the hand of God.

Mene—"God hath numbered thy days and shall finish it."

Thecel—"Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting."

Phares—Things will never work well till the system is divided and diversified to suit different interests, and made broader, so that all concerned may be able to adopt it, way may be found where there is a will. Let us make the public schools more American.

Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE,
536 Kearny St., Tuesday Evening, Jan. 16, 1888.

WHEAT—No. 1 ..... 1 35@1 36
FLOUR—Superfine ..... 3 00@3 25
Unwashed, ... 14@ 20
Long ..... 1 25@1 30
Barley, local ..... 80@ 87½
Barley, f. o. b. wholesale ..... 1 05@1 07 50
Shipping Barley, f. o. b. ..... 1 00@1 05
Oats ..... 1 40@1 60
Rolled Oats ..... 4 00@4 50
Rye ..... 1 40@1 60
Corn ..... 1 00@1 05

POULTRY—
Chickens, per dozen ..... 7 50@9 00
Turkeys, per lb. wholesale ..... 20@ 25
Geese, per dozen ..... 2 00@3 00
Ducks, per pair ..... 1 00@2 50
Hens, per dozen ..... 5 00@7 00
Old Roosters ..... 5 00@6 00

Butter, per lb. ..... 22@ 35
Cheese ..... 10@14
Cheese fresh roll ..... 40@44
Eggs ..... 35@ 40
Eggs, Eastern ..... 25@ 30
Onions ..... 1 00@1 50
Potatoes ..... 1 00@1 50
Hay ..... 12@16
Wool, Southern Coast ..... 7@ 9
Wool, Oregon ..... 12@14
Honey ..... 14@15
Beans, small ..... 4@5
Beans, Lima ..... 4@5
Beans, Pinkeye ..... 4@5
Beans, Bayo ..... 4@5
Beans, Pink ..... 4@5
Beans, Red ..... 4@5
Beans, Mexican ..... 4@5
Beans, Garbanzos

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE ARCHDIOCESE.

The Monitor has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1888

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—The value of real estate in New York may be appreciated from the fact that the building operations for last year, in the city, foot up $56,000,000, as against $42,000,000 for the same time last year, and $36,000,000 for the same time in 1885.

—It was a queer coincidence that the venerable Dr. John Ogilvie, of New York, should have died on the night before Christmas. He was twice married, both his wives being the daughters of Clement C. Moore, the author of the poem "The Night Before Christmas."

—We spoke the other day papers that the wife of Mr. Harper, of whom the Harpers a few years ago employed to draw disgusting caricatures of the Pope, the Prelates, the priests and the Irish people, is about to lecture in this city. Half respect may be preserved by all Catholics and Irish-Americans who studiously avoid attending these lectures.

—On the third page of the present issue we print a very interesting condensed biography of St. Peter Claver, one of the Jesuits canonized recently by the Vicar of Christ. It will be concluded next week. We will also print for the edification of all Catholics a brief sketch of the life and labors of Blessed Louis Grignon de Montfort, of the Order of St. Dominic, who was Beatified by the Holy Father last Sunday.

—February 1st, the feast of St. Bridget, has been selected as the day upon which the receptacles of St. Patrick's Church will be laid in Rome by Most Rev. William J. Walsh, Archbishop of Dublin. Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia will preach the sermon, and the same day the Irish pilgrims will be received in special audience by the Pope. Many visitors are expected from Ireland and other countries, and the ceremony will be a memorable event in the history of the Eternal City.

—Mr. Arthur O'Connor, M. P., who arrived at Queenstown last week, was welcomed by a great crowd and escorted to his hotel. In an interview he said that the reception accorded Sir Thomas Grattan Esmonde and himself throughout the United States had exceeded their most sanguine hopes. He said that the feeling among Americans, from the President downward, was in favor of Home Rule for Ireland, and that the people were shocked at the manner in which the Tories were enforcing the Coercion law.

—The Presbyterian preachers, recently assembled at St. John's, New Brunswick, agreed to strike out the Confession of Faith, by a vote of 70 to 4, the clause forbidding a man to marry his deceased wife's sister. It is not unreasonable to conjecture that this special legislation was brought about by the fact that some of the goodly good parsons of Presbyterianism had "a widow" in his house. Ah! those parsonages! they are the unholiest set of bombups in the whole wicked world!

—The Pope in his Encyclical just issued to the Bavarian Bishops says: "secular schools are a menace to the State itself." President Cleveland uttered the same sentiment when he said to the members of the Evangelical Alliance which met recently in Washington "all must admit that the acceptance of the teachings of Christianity enrolled in the Great patriotism." Or, in other words, that citizens educated without Christianity were not as good as those imbued with Christian principles—from which true patriotism always springs.

—Mr. Cronauer, the defaulting ex-Mayor of Hackettstown, N. J., it is discovered, was engaged to marry three women in his borough and twelve others elsewhere. A Schooley's Mountain woman says he had been engaged to marry her for fifteen years. Mr. Cronauer was thrifty and turned his engagements into financial profit, but it must have kept him busy trying to remember the names and residences of the numerous maids and widows he promised to marry. And then to think of the deceitful manner keeping up a marriage engagement for sixteen years, and finally leaving the lady in lurch! A jury of women would hang, draw and quarter such a scalawag!

—A great effort is just now being made to place Catholic parochial schools under the jurisdiction of the State. A telegram from Boston says that a great sensation has been created there by the report of a special committee of the Legislature which recommends that private schools be required to register and return lists of pupils; that the School Committee be required to visit and examine private schools and to report annually approving or refusing to approve of such schools; that after September 1, 1889, no private schools be approved unless taught by teachers holding certificates of qualification from the School Committee, as is required in the public schools. These recommendations will, if adopted, place all the parochial schools under charge of a school committee of almost certain Protestant complexion. This system of espionage over education is, however, too utterly opposed to the spirit of the Constitution ever to be adopted, hence the cranks who concocted the scheme, will find it only another burn freak of intolerant fanaticism which has few followers in free America.

Look Out for Him!

We learn from the Nevada City Transcript that a desolate individual representing himself as a Catholic priest, recently imposed upon the charitable Catholics of both Nevada City and Grass Valley, and as he is an itinerant tramp who loves whiskey not wisely but too well, we are asked to caution the Rev. Clergy and Catholics all over the coast to regard the advance of a dark-toned stranger who begs for coin only to disgrace the clerical calling to which he pretends to belong.

Beatification of the English Martyrs.

The highest honors bestowed upon the servants of God by the militant Church are those of Canonization—for which the process of Beatification is a necessary condition and a remote preparation. To state in one briefly, the stages of the whole process ending in the canonization are eleven three. First the servant of God is declared a Venerable, that is worthy of the love and veneration of the Faithful, as has been previously discussed on the testimony of sworn witnesses in the Diocesan Court, has been deemed worthy of being introduced and made the subject of the Church's deliberations. Such title has been given, conferred by the Holy See on 293 English Martyrs, including 25 members of the Society of Jesus, 128 secular priests, and also the entered martyr Oliver Plunkett, Archbishop of Armagh. The next step is when the Venerables are declared Blessed, which constitutes the process of their Beatification. By the decree of the Congregation of Rites, issued December 20th, 1886, and signed by his Holiness Pope Leo XIII., 64 English Martyrs have been beatified, including Cardinal John Fisher, Thomas More Chancellor of England, Margaret Pole the Countess of Salisbury, 20 secular priests, 18 Carthusians, 3 other Religious, 5 Jesuit priests, and 5 laymen, among whom the Blessed Sherwood, a boy only fourteen years of age. The first stage is when the Blessed is declared to be a Saint—this is called his canonization in virtue of which his or her name is inserted in the roll of the Saints, and proposed to the veneration of the Universal Church. This highest honor has been lately conferred by his Holiness Pope Leo XIII. among others, on three members of the Society of Jesus, Blessed Peter Claver, Blessed John Berchmans, and Blessed Alfonso Rodriguez, a down we now venerate as Saints, and the Feast of whose Canonization already celebrated in Rome, will be commemorated with appropriate solemnity in St. Ignatius Church of this city sometime during the present year, to be duly announced in the MONITOR.

As Cardinal Manning well says that the sentence of the Church does not make the servant of God to be blessed a saint, nor does it, as objectors foolishly suppose, transfer him to heaven and place him before the throne of God, but it only declares him to be what God has already made him and publishes it to the faithful, just as she does not create a new dogma by her definitions, but she declares that such or such doctrine is contained in the deposit of revealed truth and should be believed by all. The Church is profoundly conscious that without holiness no man shall see the Lord, and hence she pronounces those only to be Blessed or to be saints, in whom are found evident signs of eminent grace and sanctity of life. She requires, therefore, a protracted and exact proof of the virtues—cardinal and theological—in a heroic degree, and well established miracles as the countersigns of the Divine favor, and of their intercession before the throne of God. But on the process of a Martyr for his beatification, no proof is required either of virtue or of miracles. All that is necessary is to show on unimpeachable authority the fact of his martyrdom or death for the Faith. Benedict XIV. refers to martyrdom as "the ordinary entrance of death for the Faith, or some other act of virtue relating to God." A martyr, he says, may not die for the Faith chiefly, but also to preserve some virtue—as justice, obedience, charity, or the like—or joined or counselled by the Faith. For martyrdom is a baptism of blood which effaces all sin—both original and venial—brings him that endures it to the immediate possession of the vision of God in his heavenly kingdom: "Greater love," says Jesus Christ, "no man hath than this that he lay down his life for his friends."—St. John xv., 13.

Comparative Catholic Statistics.

There is something radically wrong in the statistical summaries published in the Catholic Directories issued in this country, and the difference in very many instances is so great as to show palpable carelessness on the part of those entrusted with the compilation of matters of such importance. Here are a few samples hurriedly selected from the Ecclesiastical Summaries of the issues of 1888 before us

	1887	1888
Priests in S. Francisco Diocese	105	111
Churches in do do	97	104
Priests in Monterey and Los Angeles	37	51
Churches in Monterey and Los Angeles	26	41
Priests in Dubuque Diocese	36	35
Churches in do do	36	35
Priests in Diocese of Charleston	36	43
Churches " " "	36	43
" " Detroit	64	105
" " Cincinnati	67	113
" " Little Rock	41	50
" " Oregon	120	48
" " Erie	111	108
" " Nesqualy	57	60

These discrepancies are sufficient to show how erroneously each statistical summary is compiled, and we may add that there is scarcely a diocese in the Union where there is not some disagreement between the Sadlier and the Hoffman Directories.

We might go even further and say that in several instances the figures in the body of the work giving Diocesan statistics, do not agree with the totals given in the Summary, showing that no statistician (in the true meaning of the term) has charge of that department of almost every Diocese.

In the Diocese of San Francisco there are actually 95 churches, whilst Sadlier's summary returns 87 and Hoffman's summary reports 124. There are fifty six colleges, academies and parochial schools in this Diocese, whilst Sadlier's Directory returns thirty-six and Hoffman's Directory gives forty-eight. Such figures are worse than useless so far as being a source whereform statistics concerning the Church may be considered.

Again, the correct number of churches in Sacramento Diocese is seventy six; the proper number of stations is one hundred. Sadlier's Directory gives them as fifty-seven churches and ninety stations, Hoffman's figures being the same. The correct number of parochial schools in this Diocese is thirty, whilst Hoffman's Directory returns seventeen—and Sadlier's publication returns thirteen.

Nothing is more valuable than correct statistics, but when figures are thrown together in a haphazard fashion, they become merely a meaningless mass of ciphers, and useless to the public at large, and deceiving when they ought to be thoroughly reliable. We hope, therefore, that the compilers of both publications will hereafter give more attention to this evidently neglected portion of their work.

Brother McCrary on the Pope's Jubilee.

It would be just as unnatural for a leopard to change his spots as it would be for a Methodist preacher to tell the truth about the Pope. Notwithstanding all the pains the MONITOR has been at to educate Brother McCrary out of his ignorance and bigotry combined, he seems determined to keep on in his sinful course to the great scandal of saints and sinners alike. Of course he had to allude to the Papal Jubilee, and in doing so after the usual manner way which all Methodist preachers adopt whenever they desire to distract from the glorious dignity of the Vicar of Christ. Alluding to President Cleveland's gift to the Holy Father, Brother McCrary says

"All the papers sent presents, and President Cleveland as a grim joke, sent an exact copy of the Constitution of the United States which, we have no doubt, the Pope accepted, but its tenderness have cursed all of its history and its activities ever since."

So far from the Pope "detesting the principles of the American Constitution," they have his heartiest approval. And so far from his predecessors having "cursed all its leading principles in all possible ways" they have gloried in seeing freedom so firmly established in this fair land. So thinks the predecessors of Pope Leo XIII. blessed very materially from the founder of Methodism, John Wesley, who during our Revolutionary period—offered to raise a regiment of soldiers in England in order to help the American "rebels" into subjection!

The War of Independence was fought upon the same ideas as the struggle for life, liberty and happiness, which Cardinal Langton and the Catholic Barons of England wrung from King John on the plains of Runymede. Catholics fought for the liberty Americans enjoy under the Constitution, Catholics helped to frame that Constitution and some of its most important amendments, giving liberty of conscience to all men, were suggested by a Catholic prelate and introduced by leading Catholic laymen! And yet—in the face of such well known historical facts—the spirit of fanatical falsehood which seems to have made its dwelling place in the darkest corner of Brother McCrary's mental regions—makes him pour a plain, palpable lie, as he does in a blight upon even that small potato upon the subject of ecumenical evangelism in whose culture and chase he seems to glory.

Why will men who call themselves "preachers" thus persevere so perversely in indulging before the world merely to gratify their hellish hatred against the Church of Christ? Brother McCrary says the present Pope "mentally detests the American Constitution, and that his predecessors have cursed its principles in all possible ways." Such assertions are disreputable to him who gives them currency as they are abominable in the eyes of that God who loves truth in every man. So far from the ordinary courtesy of Christian religion "hailing" the American Constitution, it will be clear to all impartial minds that he is more than likely detesting its principles in detaining his own liberty than are those few preachers of Methodism who transgress God's laws by telling false witness against him!

We demand from Brother McCrary the evidence he possesses that any Pontiff ever cursed any principles embodied in the American Constitution! Give us names, dates and documents, so we may dest the calumny of bigotry's blindness from your mental organs, or—failing to prove the assertion true—Brother McCrary will have to re-occupy that penitential pillory assigned to all calumniators of the Catholic Church, and to which the MONITOR has hitherto frequently consigned the Methodist undertaker at present under indictment.

Catholic Progress Since 1852.

We have before us the Metropolitan Catholic Almanac for 1853, and it may be interesting to Monitor readers to draw a few comparisons between the condition of the Church in America at that period and its present status. In 1853 there were 1,546 Catholic churches in the country; there now are 6,629—an increase of 5,274 churches in 35 years. In 1853 there were 1,405 priests in America, today there are fully 6,000—an increase of 6,595 in a third of a century. In 1853 there were only 102 Catholic colleges, now there are 568. In 1853 there were only 106 charitable institutions, now there are 472. There were then but 2,000,000 Catholics, now there are fully five or six million more members of the Church of Christ, and their number is annually increasing.

From the statistics before us we learn that the following Dioceses have increased their respective number of Catholics in the following proportions since 1853: Baltimore, 100,000; Philadelphia, 225,000; Wheeling, 14,000; Savannah, 13,500; New York, 520,000; Cincinnati, 70,000; Louisville, 70,000; Detroit, 36,000; Vincennes, 30,000; Chicago, 354,000; Boston 192,000. The boundary lines of other Dioceses having been materially changed by the creation of new Sees, it is not possible to note their increase with accuracy. San Francisco was not mentioned in the Directory for 1853, Monterey then including both Californias. The returns give this Diocese, with its priests, thirty institutions 5, female academies 2, and a Catholic population of 40,000. Out of the 38 priests named there are but three of them still on the coast—three are Rt. Rev. Eugene O Connell, D. D., Rev. Sadoc Vilarrasa, O. S. B., Rev. Anthony Langlois, at present Chaplain for the Christian Brothers at Martinez.

CONVERTED TO THE TRUE FAITH.

Hon. Walter M. Gibson, for many years Premier of the Hawaiian Islands, died in Honolulu. He had been in the Hospital since July instant, by himself to the Catholic religion, and died a Catholic. The funeral took place this morning in St. Mary's Cathedral. His remains will be sent to Honolulu by next steamer. R. I. P.

The Catholic Church in the United States.

SADLIER'S CATHOLIC DIRECTORY, ALMANAC AND LIST OF CLERGY for the year of our Lord 1888, with lists of the Archbishops, Bishops, Colleges, Religious Orders and Societies, Churches, Catholic Societies and Institutions in Rome, England, Scotland and Ireland, Statistics of Missions, Dioceses and Seminaries in Europe and the United States. New York: D. & J. Sadlier & Co., Publishers.

One of the most interesting topics which is worthy of attracting the attention of Catholics is the progress of the Church from year to year in the United States. The Creed, the Church and the Country, seem to keep pace, step by step, in that true progress which prompts the intelligent through the Divine influence of Christianity as represented in all the authority, unity and truth which the hand of God could implant in the Catholic Church.

The material prosperity of the Catholic church is one of the most favorable signs of the future stability of this great republic. Where Christ's faithful flock abound in lands blessed with liberal laws like those which so lightly rest upon the freedom of every American citizen—there is, there is order, there is good will—there is, in a word, the existence and influence of a work of Almighty God which "shall never pass away," and which—in the future as in the past—will be the one solid rock against whose stalwart arrais ebbs the angry wave of Atheistic Socialism, Communism and Error—under all its styles, headed cognomens—will lash themselves in vain.

A century is but a rubb's length in the history of the Church of God. It is now a little over a century since a small and scattered band of twenty-five priests represented the sacerdotal strength of an American Church body which has swelled to 1 Cardinal, 11 Archbishops, 62 Bishops, and 7,206 priests. It is only a century ago since Archbishop Carroll, writing of the non-Catholic element in Baltimore, said: "It is wonderful to tell what great civilities have been done to me in this town, where, a few years ago, a Popish priest was thought to be the greatest monster in creation. Many here, even of their principal people, have asked leave of me to me that they would have crossed to the other side of the street rather than meet a Roman Catholic some time ago. The horror which was associated with the idea of a Papist is incredible, and the scandalous misrepresentations by their ministers increased the horror every Sunday. If all the Catholics here were united, they would form a very considerable body."

From this language Catholics of the present day can easily realize some of the trials which the Church and the Catholic pioneers in this land of Promise underwent even at the very introduction of Catholicity into Maryland.

Scandalous misrepresentation" was then as it is now—the favorite weapon which bigotry wielded unsparingly against the Church of God. Sunday after Sunday the Protestant pulpits resounded against the "miracle of Romanism," as portrayed by ignorant preachers who knew not the Church they revile, and whose faith was fashioned by Fathers of Lies. Such a baneful influence had those "Popish Plots" exercised, that even the poor dupes who demanded and received Catholic emancipation in Maryland, felt that they could not—in the face of such a bigoted public opinion—be thus stigmatized. We give also the figures for Catholics in Maryland, in which does some singular discrepancies appear.

DIOCESANS.	1887	1888
Archbishops	11	11
Bishops	62	62
Priests	7,206	7,206
Ecclesiastical students	1,203	1,203
Brothers	1,000	1,000
Church and vicariates	1,000	1,000
Churches	6,629	6,629
Academies	1,000	1,000
Colleges	1,000	1,000
Pupils	1,000	1,000
Parishes	1,000	1,000

The new astonishing, as well as the most annoying, mistakes in the foregoing table are the figures placed opposite the Parochial Schools. Of all the analysis of statistics with the singular information given, we have never seen schools and less scholars attributed to any Diocese than to those in two years previous. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that here are the coordinates of a Diocese by Inventory figures where are engaged in the work of Christ's Church 2,661 Parochial Schools, attended by 496,103 pupils. In 1887 there were 2,667 schools attended by 527,525 pupils—an increase of 254 schools and of pupils of 47,422 pupils. These figures look right and reasonable, but when we come to the Summary of 1888, we find 2,666 Parochial Schools are reported and 31,063 pupils—a loss of 1 school and of pupils of 496,462 pupils—a loss of 496,462 pupils!

What make these incongruities all the more singular and puzzling arises from the fact that in the returns the returns from the several Dioceses are given in nearly every case an increase of schools and scholars. Thus, for instance, in Chicago, Fort Wayne, Newark, Buffalo, New York, and a large number of other Dioceses, the summary in Sadlier's Directory for 1888 shows an increase of eighty-six schools over the returns for 1887, and an increase of scholars amounting to the gratifying figures representing more than thirty thousand!

We peruse our many Catholic papers published in this country, every week, and in all of them we constantly notice references made to the opening of new Parochial Schools, which are well attended, and we cannot call to mind any one having read during the past year that any Parochial School has closed for want of pupils, hence the figures for 1888 lately fact and are not worth a farce farthing as an index of the progress or for there has been undoubtedly progress in the direction of Christian education in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

The Directory for 1887 gives the figures Sadlier's as representing the number of Catholic children at the end of the opening of the year. By some hocus pocus process known only to Eastern compilers, there were now replaced by purchases made from Protestant sects—and what makes the matter worse—we learn from Sadlier's "Catholic Almanac" in the present issue, that the consecrations of 80 Catholic schools were laid in 1887, and also that 124 new churches were dedicated during the same year! Somebody has blundered, therefore, and we cite these facts in order to bring vividly before the minds of our present Directory makers some important facts which they have evidently overlooked—to the great detriment of the books which they annually

	1887	1888
Archbishops	11	11
Bishops	62	62
Priests	7,206	7,206
Ecclesiastical students	1,203	1,203
Brothers	1,000	1,000
Church and vicariates	1,000	1,000
Churches	6,629	6,629
Academies	1,000	1,000
Colleges	1,000	1,000
Pupils	1,000	1,000
Parishes	1,000	1,000

The new astonishing, as well as the most annoying, mistakes in the foregoing table are the figures placed opposite the Parochial Schools. Of all the analysis of statistics with the singular information given, we have never seen schools and less scholars attributed to any Diocese than to those in two years previous. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that here are the coordinates of a Diocese by Inventory figures where are engaged in the work of Christ's Church 2,661 Parochial Schools, attended by 496,103 pupils. In 1887 there were 2,667 schools attended by 527,525 pupils—an increase of 254 schools and of pupils of 47,422 pupils. These figures look right and reasonable, but when we come to the Summary of 1888, we find 2,666 Parochial Schools are reported and 31,063 pupils—a loss of 1 school and of pupils of 496,462 pupils—a loss of 496,462 pupils!

What make these incongruities all the more singular and puzzling arises from the fact that in the returns the returns from the several Dioceses are given in nearly every case an increase of schools and scholars. Thus, for instance, in Chicago, Fort Wayne, Newark, Buffalo, New York, and a large number of other Dioceses, the summary in Sadlier's Directory for 1888 shows an increase of eighty-six schools over the returns for 1887, and an increase of scholars amounting to the gratifying figures representing more than thirty thousand!

We peruse our many Catholic papers published in this country, every week, and in all of them we constantly notice references made to the opening of new Parochial Schools, which are well attended, and we cannot call to mind any one having read during the past year that any Parochial School closed for want of pupils, hence the figures for 1888 lately fact and are not worth a farce farthing as an index of the progress or for there has been undoubtedly progress in the direction of Christian education in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

The Directory for 1887 gives the figures Sadlier's as representing the number of Catholic children at the end of the opening of the year. By some hocus pocus process known only to Eastern compilers, there were now replaced by purchases made from Protestant sects—and what makes the matter worse—we learn from Sadlier's "Catholic Almanac" in the present issue, that the consecrations of 80 Catholic schools were laid in 1887, and also that 124 new churches were dedicated during the same year! Somebody has blundered, therefore, and we cite these facts in order to bring vividly before the minds of our present Directory makers some important facts which they have evidently overlooked—to the great detriment of the books which they annually

DIOCESANS.	1887	1888
Archbishops	11	11
Bishops	62	62
Priests	7,206	7,206
Ecclesiastical students	1,203	1,203
Brothers	1,000	1,000
Church and vicariates	1,000	1,000
Churches	6,629	6,629
Academies	1,000	1,000
Colleges	1,000	1,000
Pupils	1,000	1,000
Parishes	1,000	1,000

The new astonishing, as well as the most annoying, mistakes in the foregoing table are the figures placed opposite the Parochial Schools. Of all the analysis of statistics with the singular information given, we have never seen schools and less scholars attributed to any Diocese than to those in two years previous. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that here are the coordinates of a Diocese by Inventory figures where are engaged in the work of Christ's Church 2,661 Parochial Schools, attended by 496,103 pupils. In 1887 there were 2,667 schools attended by 527,525 pupils—an increase of 254 schools and of pupils of 47,422 pupils. These figures look right and reasonable, but when we come to the Summary of 1888, we find 2,666 Parochial Schools are reported and 31,063 pupils—a loss of 1 school and of pupils of 496,462 pupils—a loss of 496,462 pupils!

What make these incongruities all the more singular and puzzling arises from the fact that in the returns the returns from the several Dioceses are given in nearly every case an increase of schools and scholars. Thus, for instance, in Chicago, Fort Wayne, Newark, Buffalo, New York, and a large number of other Dioceses, the summary in Sadlier's Directory for 1888 shows an increase of eighty-six schools over the returns for 1887, and an increase of scholars amounting to the gratifying figures representing more than thirty thousand!

We peruse our many Catholic papers published in this country, every week, and in all of them we constantly notice references made to the opening of new Parochial Schools, which are well attended, and we cannot call to mind any one having read during the past year that any Parochial School closed for want of pupils, hence the figures for 1888 lately fact and are not worth a farce farthing as an index of the progress or for there has been undoubtedly progress in the direction of Christian education in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

The Directory for 1887 gives the figures Sadlier's as representing the number of Catholic children at the end of the opening of the year. By some hocus pocus process known only to Eastern compilers, there were now replaced by purchases made from Protestant sects—and what makes the matter worse—we learn from Sadlier's "Catholic Almanac" in the present issue, that the consecrations of 80 Catholic schools were laid in 1887, and also that 124 new churches were dedicated during the same year! Somebody has blundered, therefore, and we cite these facts in order to bring vividly before the minds of our present Directory makers some important facts which they have evidently overlooked—to the great detriment of the books which they annually

51,000; Helena, Montana, 29,000; Kansas City, 40,000; Leavenworth, 75,000; Lincoln, Nebraska, 23,000; Omaha, 11,300; Dubuque 40,000; Brownsville, 42,000. The smallest number of Catholics are found in North Carolina, where only 2,500 are returned.

PRIESTS. There are 7,206 priests in the United States, distributed throughout the different Dioceses in the following proportions: New York, 437; Boston, 323; Baltimore, 307; Philadelphia, 271; St. Louis, 254; Milwaukee, 237; Cincinnati, 221; Chicago, 208; Pittsburg, 207, are the sees of Dioceses having less than 200.

CHURCHES. There are 6,629 churches scattered throughout the work before us, distributed throughout the several Dioceses in the following numerical order. Diocese of Milwaukee, 264; Cleveland, 225; New York, 198; St. Louis, 198; St. Paul, 199; Baltimore, 139; Hartford, 139; Peoria, 163; Cincinnati, 163; Vincennes, 152; Lacrosse, 163; Albany, 124; Brooklyn, 117; Buffalo, 147; Newark, 161; Erie, 111; Pittsburg, 133; Davenport, 143; Dubuque, 145; Leavenworth, 143; San Francisco, 87; Los Angeles, 36; Sacramento, 57. All the other Dioceses in proportionate rate.

PARACHIAL SCHOOLS. It is stated in the work before us that there are 2,666 Parochial Schools in the United States, which is evidently an error, as Sadlier's Directory for last year returned 2,667, and it is to be hoped that so far from there being any decrease in the number of Parochial Schools, there has been a very appreciable increase in almost every Diocese throughout the Union. Here the statistics are so shiftly by at fault again. In the Parochial Schools reported, New York leads all with 146, and the other largely-populated Dioceses follow in the following order:

Baltimore	87	Newark	77
Boston	112	Philadelphia	92
Chicago	100	Erie	56
Cincinnati	75	St. Louis	58
Cleveland	75	Dubuque	58
Detroit	75	Milwaukee	58
Hartford	75	Green Bay	58
Louisville	75	Peoria	58
New York	146	Sacramento	58
Brooklyn	95	Green Bay	58
Buffalo	77	Peoria	58
Albany	56

All the rest have less than 58 each.

PUPILS ATTENDING PARACHIAL SCHOOL. The following figures represent the number of pupils attending Parochial Schools in the more thickly populated Dioceses:

New York	41,129	Vincennes	14,000
Boston	19,000	Chicago	14,000
Baltimore	16,000	Albany	15,000
Buffalo	16,000	Cleveland	15,000
Cincinnati	17,000	Detroit	15,000
Hartford	17,000	Newark	15,000
Louisville	17,000	Erie	15,000
Brooklyn	17,000	Philadelphia	20,000
Buffalo	17,000	St. Louis	20,000
Albany	17,000	Dubuque	20,000

The new astonishing, as well as the most annoying, mistakes in the foregoing table are the figures placed opposite the Parochial Schools. Of all the analysis of statistics with the singular information given, we have never seen schools and less scholars attributed to any Diocese than to those in two years previous. Everybody knows, or ought to know, that here are the coordinates of a Diocese by Inventory figures where are engaged in the work of Christ's Church 2,661 Parochial Schools, attended by 496,103 pupils. In 1887 there were 2,667 schools attended by 527,525 pupils—an increase of 254 schools and of pupils of 47,422 pupils. These figures look right and reasonable, but when we come to the Summary of 1888, we find 2,666 Parochial Schools are reported and 31,063 pupils—a loss of 1 school and of pupils of 496,462 pupils—a loss of 496,462 pupils!

What make these incongruities all the more singular and puzzling arises from the fact that in the returns the returns from the several Dioceses are given in nearly every case an increase of schools and scholars. Thus, for instance, in Chicago, Fort Wayne, Newark, Buffalo, New York, and a large number of other Dioceses, the summary in Sadlier's Directory for 1888 shows an increase of eighty-six schools over the returns for 1887, and an increase of scholars amounting to the gratifying figures representing more than thirty thousand!

We peruse our many Catholic papers published in this country, every week, and in all of them we constantly notice references made to the opening of new Parochial Schools, which are well attended, and we cannot call to mind any one having read during the past year that any Parochial School closed for want of pupils, hence the figures for 1888 lately fact and are not worth a farce farthing as an index of the progress or for there has been undoubtedly progress in the direction of Christian education in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

The Directory for 1887 gives the figures Sadlier's as representing the number of Catholic children at the end of the opening of the year. By some hocus pocus process known only to Eastern compilers, there were now replaced by purchases made from Protestant sects—and what makes the matter worse—we learn from Sadlier's "Catholic Almanac" in the present issue, that the consecrations of 80 Catholic schools were laid in 1887, and also that 124 new churches were dedicated during the same year! Somebody has blundered, therefore, and we cite these facts in order to bring vividly before the minds of our present Directory makers some important facts which they have evidently overlooked—to the great detriment of the books which they annually

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

LINES

Suggested by the Recent Beatification of the English Martyrs.

New gems adorn thy stainless brow,
O, Bride of Truth Divine!
New names upon thine altars now,
Fair, O Church, shine!
And, lo! at last, from land to land
The call To Jesus ring,
Echo the cry—Hosanna!
Who finally proved their martyr-blood
At home's Shrine fire
Or in England's sad—O, holiness!
O, cleansing Crimson Tide!
Priests of the Rock-built Church were they—
"Of Westminster" crowd—
And, with their brethren Master's away
With changeless love they bound.
And, falling in His sacred cause,
The injured will detail;
Unmindful of the threatening law
Of rebel hate and pride,
And treasured still that determine strong
Of Faith's mass martyrdom.
Still stood her sangaard, firm and strong—
Jesus's chosen band;
They, to the field Jesus's call,
Thorough God their "Lord were free!"
And "mid the surging, fiercest strife
"Stood, Lord! to pain for Thee!"
And when, like Love Divine,
The felons death of shame,
And treasured to Jesus's side
Each consecrated frame,
Oh, with the revered head was raised,
Yet, in the sacred name,
Of that calm brow the murderers cured
With mock, Jesus's fear,
For, ere it shone the mystery crown
Bedewed by Heathen Love,
While yet—the Cross—the Cross
The cross—spread skies above,
Triumphant—a mighty gliding sun
Hath sought the skies—Jesus's
Faith sublime upon her regalia—pure
Their ability means at hell;
And so, now gems behold the new,
Bride of Truth Divine!
And, treasured on thine altars, now,
Now names, in glory shine!
Oh, thou, thou whole-hearted to land,
May glad To Jesus sing,
In best to sanctuary—
Of Heaven's Immortal King,
And, fertile England! let the blood
Of martyrs, ever
Be seed to fair Bethsaida flood,
Thy Love, Jesus's Heart.

HARRIET M. SHEWAN (Marie).

San Francisco.

Justice and Injustice.

Doubtless many readers of the MONITOR have perused the president-as language used recently by Mr. Mulvey, in his reference to the Holy Father, and, as they read, no doubt in their charity they inwardly exclaimed, "Poor man! he knows not what he says! Poor, poor, he knows not what he says! What a state of an most not that soul be in—when—out of the whole world—he alone is found to cast the foulness of his hate against the person of the Vicar of Christ, to whom, in spiritual matters, all men, great and potentate in power, rich and poor, and to whose virtues and exalted character even Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis are publicly giving the highest praise which they are supposedly deserved!

Doubtless, however, to show our readers the honorable character of Mr. Mulvey since he was dismissed out of the Mayoralty, we cannot do better than quote from his superior officer, as appeared the opinion of Mr. Mulvey's character from his superior officer, as appeared the opinion of Mr. Mulvey's character was held by the Council of Mr. Mulvey's character was held by the Council of Mr. Mulvey's character was held by the Council diocese of Santa Fé. This is not quite correct, and the facts are contrary to it. The saintly Bishop of Durango, Dr. Zubiria, had been advised in time, and had immediately set out for New Mexico, visiting every mission of the diocese, and confirming everywhere his episcopal duties. But he had not been consulted in the dismemberment of his diocese, and he felt quite sensibly, to quote his own words, that he was slighted, or reason, they had been living at ease, twelve hundred miles from their Bishop, and they dreaded the presence of the new Prelate among them; I ought add, that many of them were utterly opposed to American rule, either civil or ecclesiastical.

ARCHBISHOP LAMY.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

The land-supply is a horseback, with a solitary guide, for the city of Durango. He had an interview with its Bishop and everything was settled amicably. Without taking time for rest he returned, having performed a journey of three thousand miles on horseback!

In his new diocese he found but few priests, and it was destitute of educational establishments of any kind. The young Bishop put his hand to the grand work of building up Catholicity with an energy that cannot be overpraised. His adventures and long journeys over the vast plains extending from Kansas City to Fort Union, plains with no inhabitants, then, save wild bonds and roving Indian hordes are romantic. Though about nine hundred miles in extent, Dr. Lamy crossed those plains twelve times for the welfare of his vast diocese.

THE SISTERS OF LORETTO—THEIR ARRIVAL AT SANTA FE.

Bishop Lamy, ever anxious for the good of his diocese, determined to search in wild the rotted Sisters, to teach the young, knowing well that this was the best way to reach the people. Having heard of the self-denial of Father Pandosy among the Indians, and of the severe training they had gone through, he concluded that they were the very ones whom Divine Providence had destined for the laborious mission which the Holy See had confided to his care. He applied for a colony of Sisters and his request was cheerfully granted, Father Pandosy joining and to the injunctions of its founder, Loretto could not refuse a mission that promised to promise nothing but hardships and privations.

Early in the Spring of 1852, the unsuspecting Bishop left Santa Fé to assist at the First Plenary Council of Baltimore, crossing for the first time the dreary waste called with reason, the "American Desert." In this commencement of June he reached Hardtown, and the preparations were soon made. But before returning to New Mexico, the Bishop went to New Orleans to visit his niece who was still at the Ursuline Convent since his departure for Santa Fé.

On Sunday, May 30, Mother Magdalen in her "Annals of Our Lady of Light," June 7th, 1852, after Mass, the Sisters footsteps of Mexico, left the Mother house of Loretto; Mother Mathilda Mills and Sisters Catherine, Mary Magdalen, Monica, Hilaria and Rosalina. The same day they arrived at Bardstown, and on Thursday morning, July 1st, they reached St. Louis and were kindly received by Archbishop Kenrick. In the meanwhile they visited the Convent of St. Ferdinand, at Florissant, and spent a few days with their own Sisters. As soon as they heard of the Bishop's return from New Orleans, they joined him at St. Louis, and on the 10th of July left by the steamer Kansas, which was to convey them as far as Independence. With them traveled a family, and some other persons belonging to the Bishop's suite.

The Sisters had accepted the mission in a true spirit of self-sacrifice, as they little dreamed, as the spires of the city receded from view, how soon Providence was going to put their virtue to a test. There had already been some of cholera on board, when, on Friday, the 16th, at 2 a. m. Mother Mathilda was attacked. After a sufferings lasted till about two o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, when the gay barque sent into the hands of her Maker, after having received the Sacraments of Penance and Extreme Unction at the hands of the Bishop. Two hours later the steamer landed at Todd's Warehouse, six miles from Independence. In the meantime Sister Morlen had also contracted the cholera, and the illness was truly affecting, the Sisters following the death of their dying Sister and the coffin of their dear Mother. The inhabitants stood in such dread of the cholera that the Sisters were unable to enter their houses, and were therefore obliged to remain in the warehouse.

The next morning, July 17th, three of the Sisters with the Bishop and some other persons, accompanied the carriage which conveyed the corpse of Mother Mathilda to the last resting place, in the graveyard of Independence. But on the way they were met by a Sheriff who had been deputed by the authorities to forbid the interment in the town, for fear of contagion. However, the Bishop's firm attitude, and perhaps, a compassion for the sad spectacle, caused this official to relent. They continued their way to the graveyard, and there they saw the cold earth receive into its bosom the remains of her whom they had loved and venerated.

"The Bishop," continues Mother Magdalen, quoting Bishop Mass, "now took the three Sisters, Catherine, Hilaria and Rosalina, to be lowered left them here, while Sister Magdalen remained in the warehouse with Sister Morlen. But on the night of the following Monday, July 19th, Sister Magdalen herself was attacked with the cholera, and much what she followed to be her last confession. The place was ill-suited for Christian, especially religious one, sick unto death, and Bishop, unable to make better arrangements, had the two dying Sisters removed to tents about two miles from the town. The poor Sisters were much better off than in the warehouse, although they had many inconveniences to bear, and had nothing but the canvas tent to screen them from the heat of July."

After a few days Sister Magdalen began to recover. On Sunday, July 25th, the three Sisters came from Independence, and heard Mass said by Bishop Lamy in a tent. It was impossible for Sister Morlen to proceed any further, her recovery being doubtful, and in spite of her desire to pursue the journey to New Mexico, she returned to Independence until her health should be sufficiently restored to return to the convent in Loretto. As Sister Magdalen could travel in a carriage, although very weak, they left Independence on Saturday, July 31st, to go into camp, some four miles distant, where the Bishop and part of his suite (for the others were waiting at Wilburn Springs) had already marched. Then the Sisters went to Confession, and the next morning received Holy Communion at the hands of the Bishop.

After the death of Mother Mathilda, Sister Magdalen was chosen to fill the office of Superior, and the election was promptly approved and confirmed at Loretto. Mother Magdalen, after thirty years of untold toils and privations, has been stricken down by palsy, but her head and her heart are as warm and as sound as ever, and although she gave up the charge of the flourishing community over the hands of another, Mother Francisca Lamy, she is still the guiding spirit of the institution.

"On the evening of August 1st, they reached Wilburn Springs, a fine watering place a few miles from Westport, and there found the other party ready to start. So they lost no time, and started all together, but they had proceeded only a few miles when one of the wagons broke down, and there they were obliged to camp in order to repair the wagon.

Some time was spent the next day in repair damages. On the following Sunday, the 8th, the Bishop and Mass near an Indian hut on the banks of the Hundred and Ten creek. There they pitched Tabernacle, and on the eve of the Assumption reached Council Grove. All confessed that morning, and on the next morning received Communion at the hand of the Bishop. The Sisters, according to their rules, crowned their vows at the time of Mass. Next day the march was resumed, and no Mass was celebrated until they reached Pawnee Fork, on the spot where now stands the town of Larned, at the junction of the Pawnee river and the Arkansas. For the rest time, Mass was celebrated by the party, and fresh meat prepared.

Resuming their march on the 12th of September, they passed the then existing Fort Atkinson, and encamped some miles beyond, but still in Kansas, when a party of Indian warriors, four hundred strong, fell upon them and attacked the camp. In this occasion they seemed peaceable; the Bishop was even invited to baptize the child of a young Indian woman. Still as their intentions were not known, and the Indian is often treacherous, the Bishop thought it prudent to make any move, hoping they would rest on but as they seemed disposed to remain, he ordered his company to march in the evening, and the caravan traversed all night, as the Indians do not generally make their attacks in the dark.

Las Vegas was reached on the 18th. Thus was the first Mexican town reached. The next morning the Bishop and Mass in a private dwelling no far from the town. There he stopped for a time, and visited the Sisters of Charity, who had followed the Sisters to what was then called the Bishop's ranche. To show the zeal of the Bishop for the spiritual welfare of the souls of her his care, I must say that during the journey he said Mass and preached every Sunday but one, when it was absolutely impossible; still prayers were said in common.

The Bishop set out from Las Vegas on Wednesday, and on Thursday, 23 of September, quietly entered his episcopal city to prepare the way for the mission, entirely unannounced of his coming. On the evening, 26th, the party left the ranchos at starting for Santa Fé, where they arrived at p. m. The people, led by Father Gravier and other Mexican priests, went several miles to meet them as they approached the city, and the crowd increased so much that the carriage could scarcely pass through the streets of the northern metropolis. Triumphal arches had been erected, and the bells of the different churches were pealing. They were received at the door of the cathedral presented with holy water, and had to the foot of the altar. The Te Deum was sung, accompanied by Mexican music, indeed, grotesque, etc.; and the ceremony terminated with the episcopal benediction. Thus the Sisters were conducted by the Bishop, Vicar General and the clergy to the house prepared for them, and the priests who had accompanied the party were lodged in the house of the Bishop, and thus ended the long and painful journey, full of difficulties and dangers, all felt glad at having finally at home at Santa Fé.

BISHOP LAMY GOES TO LORETTO—THE FIRST BRIGADE OF MISSIONARIES.

The Mexican Government did not strictly speaking protect the church, but its suits of care for both church and state, and it was paradoxable. Dr. Lamy, ably seconded by his Vicar-General and been friend, Father Machebeuf, went every where to see for himself, and set to work to correct abuses, to establish schools, to form religious associations; and thus they were employed during the winter and spring of 1852. In the fall of 1853 the energetic, zeal Bishop set out from Santa Fé with a caravan to go to the formidable plains, the American Desert, the home of the Indian warriors, the graves extending nearly one hundred miles in breadth, from New Mexico to the Mississippi river. He rested only a short time at Lucas, Cincinnati and Bardstown, from where he paid a flying visit to Loretto to give news of the family colony at Santa Fé and to petition for more Sisters. At the time she his request was readily granted, and arrangements were made to start for Santa Fé the following spring. The Bishop, in the meantime, embarked at New York, sailed for France, and at once made his friend, Father Jean, the old Bishop of Clermont, acquainted with the project and obtained his recommendation to the missions of Clermont. From him also he received warm and fair promises to permit young apostles from his diocese to help him in his missions of New Mexico.

In the meanwhile, the Bishop, having had a flying visit to his brother Bishop of Rome, where he was kindly received by Pius IX, and Cardinal Barnabo, Prefect of the Propaganda. He received words of and encouragement and also directions from the Holy See. He soon afterward left Rome, visiting several remote, and, by the his route, and early in the spring of 1854, reached Clermont. A number of young ladies presented themselves to him, and to his expressed their willingness to cross the ocean and work under his careful direction. Without regret they were seen to leave the fair shores of their beloved France to come to the almost distinct place part of the old of the father of the family. Not a single word crossed their minds but the thoughts of the future beyond up their spirits.

Among the saintly men who heard the voice of God in their hearts was the venerable Talard, a priest from Madrid, Spain; Martin, of the diocese of St. Flour, France; Anthony Gobard from Clermont; Stephen Lafond, of Clermont; Peter Epailliu, the actual Vicar General of Santa Fé and parish priest of the cathedral, also a priest from the diocese of Clermont.

Among the Seminarians were the Brothers Joseph Gouin, who was then deacon and was ordained priest on the 23d of December of the 2nd year, at Santa Fé, by Bishop Lamy; Eugene Pallet, parish priest of Iodon, then a Subdeacon, and N. Lamy, a clerge in minor orders, who died on the day of their arrival at Santa Fé.

Forming the caravan were also the Reverend Eulogio Ortiz, a priest from New Mexico, who had accompanied the Bishop to Europe; Messrs. Jonas M Orez and Florentino Gonzales, who had been sent previously to France for a course in the Seminary of Clermont, Joseph, the family named Covington, and Mr. Moarty, a Irish, who acted as major domo for the Bishop on the journey.

Dr Lamy and his band of priests and Sisters arrived at Lexington, Kentucky, towards the end of May, 1854. Without going to Loretto they reached Cincinnati, thence by boat to St Louis, and in the month of June arrived at Kansas City and Westport, leaving thence directly for camp at Wilburn Spring, a romantic spot, with a flowing river of very water gushing from under a huge hill, and surrounded by trees, particularly willows of good size, with an abundance of grass for the animals. There they remained for six weeks waiting for the colony of Sisters who were to come and join them. In the meantime, the Bishop was disappointed, as the Sisters were unable to send any of their number to the missions of New Mexico. The Bishop had barely full time for provisions, wagons and provisions, and perfecting arrangements for a speedy departure.

Hardly had Bishop Lamy arrived at Wilburn Spring, after completing his preparations, and laying sure that the Sisters would come, than, although late in the afternoon, he resolved to move the camp. An order was given to that effect. All was hustle in the camp. Messrs. Gouin and Machebeuf and hitched them to the wagons, and after a short delay all together took the road toward Santa Fe, their destination. But they had proceeded but a short distance when one of the wagons broke down, and they were obliged to stop within a mile of the place of the Sisters.

Mass was said, and the party consisted of four wagons and three carriages, and strange to say, as soon as the Bishop left Wilburn Springs, Father Gravier, who was very sick, and who afterwards had been in such a terrible condition that the Sisters were already to bid him a last adieu, felt all cure better. He had proceeded to stop within Kansas City, performing should such be the case, to during the night, and the next day, to the surprise of the Sisters, he was able to be up. Meanwhile, the Bishop, who had left his camp, was taken sick, and was obliged to stop at Westport, where he was kindly received by the family of Mr. Lucas, Sanguinet and Edwards, and he was soon well enough to be able to continue his journey. The Sisters, who had left Wilburn Springs, were delayed by the breaking down of a wagon, and they had to stop at Westport, where they had the pleasure of meeting the Bishop, who was now well enough to be able to continue his journey. The Sisters were conducted by the Bishop, Vicar General and the clergy to the house prepared for them, and the priests who had accompanied the party were lodged in the house of the Bishop, and thus ended the long and painful journey, full of difficulties and dangers, all felt glad at having finally at home at Santa Fé.

BISHOP LAMY GOES TO ROME—THE FIRST BRIGADE OF MISSIONARIES.

The Mexican Government did not strictly speaking protect the church, but its suits of care for both church and state, and it was paradoxable. Dr. Lamy, ably seconded by his Vicar-General and been friend, Father Machebeuf, went every where to see for himself, and set to work to correct abuses, to establish schools, to form religious associations; and thus they were employed during the winter and spring of 1852. In the fall of 1853 the energetic, zeal Bishop set out from Santa Fé with a caravan to go to the formidable plains, the American Desert, the home of the Indian warriors, the graves extending nearly one hundred miles in breadth, from New Mexico to the Mississippi river. He rested only a short time at Lucas, Cincinnati and Bardstown, from where he paid a flying visit to Loretto to give news of the family colony at Santa Fé and to petition for more Sisters. At the time she his request was readily granted, and arrangements were made to start for Santa Fé the following spring. The Bishop, in the meantime, embarked at New York, sailed for France, and at once made his friend, Father Jean, the old Bishop of Clermont, acquainted with the project and obtained his recommendation to the missions of Clermont. From him also he received warm and fair promises to permit young apostles from his diocese to help him in his missions of New Mexico.

In the meanwhile, the Bishop, having had a flying visit to his brother Bishop of Rome, where he was kindly received by Pius IX, and Cardinal Barnabo, Prefect of the Propaganda. He received words of and encouragement and also directions from the Holy See. He soon afterward left Rome, visiting several remote, and, by the his route, and early in the spring of 1854, reached Clermont. A number of young ladies presented themselves to him, and to his expressed their willingness to cross the ocean and work under his careful direction. Without regret they were seen to leave the fair shores of their beloved France to come to the almost distinct place part of the old of the father of the family. Not a single word crossed their minds but the thoughts of the future beyond up their spirits.

Among the saintly men who heard the voice of God in their hearts was the venerable Talard, a priest from Madrid, Spain; Martin, of the diocese of St. Flour, France; Anthony Gobard from Clermont; Stephen Lafond, of Clermont; Peter Epailliu, the actual Vicar General of Santa Fé and parish priest of the cathedral, also a priest from the diocese of Clermont.

Among the Seminarians were the Brothers Joseph Gouin, who was then deacon and was ordained priest on the 23d of December of the 2nd year, at Santa Fé, by Bishop Lamy; Eugene Pallet, parish priest of Iodon, then a Subdeacon, and N. Lamy, a clerge in minor orders, who died on the day of their arrival at Santa Fé.

Forming the caravan were also the Reverend Eulogio Ortiz, a priest from New Mexico, who had accompanied the Bishop to Europe; Messrs. Jonas M Orez and Florentino Gonzales, who had been sent previously to France for a course in the Seminary of Clermont, Joseph, the family named Covington, and Mr. Moarty, a Irish, who acted as major domo for the Bishop on the journey.

Dr Lamy and his band of priests and Sisters arrived at Lexington, Kentucky, towards the end of May, 1854. Without going to Loretto they reached Cincinnati, thence by boat to St Louis, and in the month of June arrived at Kansas City and Westport, leaving thence directly for camp at Wilburn Spring, a romantic spot, with a flowing river of very water gushing from under a huge hill, and surrounded by trees, particularly willows of good size, with an abundance of grass for the animals. There they remained for six weeks waiting for the colony of Sisters who were to come and join them. In the meantime, the Bishop was disappointed, as the Sisters were unable to send any of their number to the missions of New Mexico. The Bishop had barely full time for provisions, wagons and provisions, and perfecting arrangements for a speedy departure.

Hardly had Bishop Lamy arrived at Wilburn Spring, after completing his preparations, and laying sure that the Sisters would come, than, although late in the afternoon, he resolved to move the camp. An order was given to that effect. All was hustle in the camp. Messrs. Gouin and Machebeuf and hitched them to the wagons, and after a short delay all together took the road toward Santa Fe, their destination. But they had proceeded but a short distance when one of the wagons broke down, and they were obliged to stop within a mile of the place of the Sisters.

Mass was said, and the party consisted of four wagons and three carriages, and strange to say, as soon as the Bishop left Wilburn Springs, Father Gravier, who was very sick, and who afterwards had been in such a terrible condition that the Sisters were already to bid him a last adieu, felt all cure better. He had proceeded to stop within Kansas City, performing should such be the case, to during the night, and the next day, to the surprise of the Sisters, he was able to be up. Meanwhile, the Bishop, who had left his camp, was taken sick, and was obliged to stop at Westport, where he was kindly received by the family of Mr. Lucas, Sanguinet and Edwards, and he was soon well enough to be able to continue his journey. The Sisters, who had left Wilburn Springs, were delayed by the breaking down of a wagon, and they had to stop at Westport, where they had the pleasure of meeting the Bishop, who was now well enough to be able to continue his journey. The Sisters were conducted by the Bishop, Vicar General and the clergy to the house prepared for them, and the priests who had accompanied the party were lodged in the house of the Bishop, and thus ended the long and painful journey, full of difficulties and dangers, all felt glad at having finally at home at Santa Fé.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.
IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.

It is intended to erect a memorial to the late Most Rev. Dr. McGettigan, of Armagh. A meeting in furtherance of that object was held in the Palace, Armagh, on Friday, after the obsequies of the late Primate. Rent for the late Prelate. His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Logue, who presided, said the best way the Catholic people could perpetuate his memory would be by a fund which would be a fitting one in the dignity and benevolence. The Very Rev. Dean Dillon, P.P., Dungannon, and Sir Edward Bellew, Bart., Barmeath, gave a handsome to an address in support of the proposal. Mr. Bellew, M.P., said he was sure that the proposed memorial would be a fitting one, and he was sure that the proposal would be carried out. The proposal was carried unanimously. The Very Rev. Dean Dillon, P.P., Dungannon, said the Very Rev. Dr. Gallagher, P.P., Donaghmore, and Mr. Cullen, Dungannon, had promised to give £100 and the debt of the Primate had cleared off. Mr. Bellew, M.P., said Mr. Hope expressed his sympathy with the proposed memorial and had promised to give £100 towards it. He was sure the Protestant people, who had worked in the minister's cause, would be willing to do the same. A Protestant clergyman. It was also suggested to establish an annual prize in the Diocesan College in the late Primate's name. It was also suggested that a fund should be raised for the memorial that would be a useful one, and that it would be carried out

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 1888.

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

MUSINGS OF A PATIENT IN THE GREAT ST. HELENA.

I revelled long in life's young dream,
When youthful ardor fired my soul;
Was lured by war's alluring theme,
Unmindful how sweets night roll;
I tasted all the shams of life,
That Fame and Fortune's power could bestow;
Pro fusion waged the martial strife
When fame lured on the valiant throng.

The battle clang, the clash of arms,
The deadly lance, the cannon's roar,
Could give me more of Glory's charms
Than acts of peace or golden store;
The contented hand and regal crown,
From she to one ordained to reign,
Clasped my best and feared my frown,
Her dread to my my power was vain.

Surplus and opulence at my beck,
In helpless rain crumbled down,
And long proud Europe failed to check
The power of my Gallic Eagle wings;
I deemed a power akin to God,
Was vested all in me alone,
And underneath my feet I trod
The Temple of His Holy One.

Oh what is glory, wealth or fame,
Or all the pomp of Empire?
His proudest deeds in empty name,
His hall mutatedly sine;
Yet who that saw me on the day
The diadem had crowned my brow,
Could think I should be cast away
A captive king unbonored now.

My shattered life was fanned in war—
My joy power passed away; bring to me;
On martial fields a conqueror,
Smile was to me country.
Hell prowling, yet, pushed aside
Keep pace with Time's relentless sway,
The results as sunshine and rain,
Compared to those that e'er we array.

Fair Josephine! my heart is vain
Who sate a fond regard for you!
Oh, could I but recall the pain
I vanten caused your heart so true.
My sorrows all would have no sting
And pensive as sweet summer showers,
Had I but given a husband's hate.
Of love to soothe your dusky hours.

On St. Helena's barren shore
I taste the hemlock of despair,
My tongue I will hold no more,
Weak captive in the lonesome lair;
As the sky with thick fog's mass,
I hourly feel a deep remorse
I had parted Josephine,
Or took away every caress.

Fond mother, sisters dear, farewell;
Or brothers, son, God's blessing pour
Heaven grant you mercy where angels dwell—
Where sorrow's tide parted friends no more.
I find sweet Heavenly peace at last
In that solitude taught to me
By my dear mother in the past—
To me a child hands her knee.

Nought can, calm sorrow's sombre sway,
The peace is sealed beyond recall;
The veteran hands that crowned my bow,
The Bonds's moves are near their pall!
No earthly power can change, O Christ,
Thy mercy's decree.

JOHN F. MCDONNEL.

Virginia City, Nevada.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE WARRIOR MOTHER'S GRAVE.

Oh! pretty pansies, dear Christina sod,
Amid them mom-gray tombs,
And wand your aclean way to where
You lonely flower blooms;
For far below the cold green sod,
In mortal clay that hides from
The body of a woman kind
Whose soul has left the shore,
To swell the volume of the choirs,
That radiant band the Icon
Before the pearl-hued throne where God
Sits in His majesty.

But, ah! you little know the worth
To which that flower
Its sweet and softly trembling bid,
As o'er the tomb it bends.
Of all I have that mourn woman's heart,
So tender and so true!
Her noble soul is garlan rare,
Where virtue's flower grew.
Yet sooner drear, oh, Christian soul,
And pitiful for mere,
And gives pursue my mother's name
In lingering hope and dear.

Where had I my dear dear dead first
Times filled with looks of love,
When I marched with the "boys in blue,"
Home twenty years ago.
In youth I was her only baby,
Her Father our Blessed Lady, who had
Ever been—and now 'neath shamrocks green,
In Erin's red death lie;
And in the dull, sunless grave,
I've lost an arm and leg,
Which I gladly would give to prove,
And for a pitiness hop.

But let us kneel and say a prayer
Upon my mother's grave,
That she may land from Heaven above,
A hand her son to save;
For still I have the home we now,
And guides my tottering way,
As at the dell in the sapphire youth
And holy-souls young day.
Oh! may she ever intercede
With the Queen of Irish Erin,
Through Mary's prayers my soul to join
Her soul in Heaven above.

JNO. J. FARR.

THE POPE TO THE PERSIGNOT.

(On receiving a copy of the United States Constitution.)

Oh! offering helpful from a Nation grand—
The written law of a people brave,
Where hand in hand in unison stand
Where the bonnies of law and religion wave.

Beautiful gift from beyond the tide—
A heaven-sent gift with a heavenly spell—
From a land exultant in freedom's pride,
Yon city sentinel of freedom dwell.

Land of light, where the Church's mission
Is to bless the people, and to free,
Where the President ruler—the humble wall—
Are all consecrated to God's arm.

From every Rhine of this sun-bright world,
I honor the gifts of the hand and free,
Where the fag of the Cross is fully unfurled,
I welcome the message of Liberty.

Friendly, gentle rule is a great boon—
And proper shall minge for its fair land,
That the Pontiff, laden with years and sorrow,
Extends his blessing with outstretched hand.

Oh! whisper my blessing to that rich clime
Where the flower of freedom spontaneous springs;
Where the light of the true and faithful shine
The songs of hope which the angels sing.

CHARLES J. SHAPTER.

—Post-mortem revelation and notices sent to us for publication must be paid for in advance.

Literary Miscellany.

Rose M'Donnell.

A True Story of the Fortunes of an Emigrant.

Some years ago, while traveling from Cork to Dublin, I got into conversation with a quiet, ladylike person, who travelled in the same carriage. She informed me that she had returned from America to her friends with whom she intended to remain for a few months. By degrees we came to be on friendly terms. She told me several amusing anecdotes of her time in America, and sev-eral more pathetic ones, which I can in possession of her entire history, which was, indeed, an interesting one.

Her father had been a tenant-farmer, who, being hearily sick rented, had a hard struggle for existence, particularly as he had a large family to support.

As soon as the eldest girl had reached the age of eighteen years her parents decided on sending her to America, thinking it the easiest way of providing for her; and also hoping that she would send them by her earnings in providing for some of the younger members of the family.

She was a handsome, intelligent girl, and rather liked the idea of going to America; and many were the protestations she made that she would send all the money she earned, except barely what she required for clothing. On reaching the "Land of Promise" she wrote astonishing her dad arrival, and after an interval of about two months a second letter came, enclosing a cheque for a small amount, and saying that she had got a good situation attending an invalid lady, and after that all correspondence ceased.

Three years passed away, and as no tidings of their absent child reached the anxious parents, they should be not sure any. A captive king unbonored now.

My shattered life was fanned in war—
My joy power passed away; bring to me;
On martial fields a conqueror,
Smile was to me country.
Hell prowling, yet, pushed aside
Keep pace with Time's relentless sway,
The results as sunshine and rain,
Compared to those that e'er we array.

Fair Josephine! my heart is vain
Who sate a fond regard for you!
Oh, could I but recall the pain
I vanten caused your heart so true.
My sorrows all would have no sting
And pensive as sweet summer showers,
Had I but given a husband's hate.
Of love to soothe your dusky hours.

On St. Helena's barren shore
I taste the hemlock of despair,
My tongue I will hold no more,
Weak captive in the lonesome lair;
As the sky with thick fog's mass,
I hourly feel a deep remorse
I had parted Josephine,
Or took away every caress.

Fond mother, sisters dear, farewell;
Or brothers, son, God's blessing pour
Heaven grant you mercy where angels dwell—
Where sorrow's tide parted friends no more.
I find sweet Heavenly peace at last
In that solitude taught to me
By my dear mother in the past—
To me a child hands her knee.

Nought can, calm sorrow's sombre sway,
The peace is sealed beyond recall;
The veteran hands that crowned my bow,
The Bonds's moves are near their pall!
No earthly power can change, O Christ,
Thy mercy's decree.

JOHN F. MCDONNEL.

Virginia City, Nevada.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE WARRIOR MOTHER'S GRAVE.

Oh! pretty pansies, dear Christina sod,
Amid them mom-gray tombs,
And wand your aclean way to where
You lonely flower blooms;
For far below the cold green sod,
In mortal clay that hides from
The body of a woman kind
Whose soul has left the shore,
To swell the volume of the choirs,
That radiant band the Icon
Before the pearl-hued throne where God
Sits in His majesty.

But, ah! you little know the worth
To which that flower
Its sweet and softly trembling bid,
As o'er the tomb it bends.
Of all I have that mourn woman's heart,
So tender and so true!
Her noble soul is garlan rare,
Where virtue's flower grew.
Yet sooner drear, oh, Christian soul,
And pitiful for mere,
And gives pursue my mother's name
In lingering hope and dear.

Where had I my dear dear dead first
Times filled with looks of love,
When I marched with the "boys in blue,"
Home twenty years ago.
In youth I was her only baby,
Her Father our Blessed Lady, who had
Ever been—and now 'neath shamrocks green,
In Erin's red death lie;
And in the dull, sunless grave,
I've lost an arm and leg,
Which I gladly would give to prove,
And for a pitiness hop.

But let us kneel and say a prayer
Upon my mother's grave,
That she may land from Heaven above,
A hand her son to save;
For still I have the home we now,
And guides my tottering way,
As at the dell in the sapphire youth
And holy-souls young day.
Oh! may she ever intercede
With the Queen of Irish Erin,
Through Mary's prayers my soul to join
Her soul in Heaven above.

JNO. J. FARR.

THE POPE TO THE PERSIGNOT.

(On receiving a copy of the United States Constitution.)

Oh! offering helpful from a Nation grand—
The written law of a people brave,
Where hand in hand in unison stand
Where the bonnies of law and religion wave.

Beautiful gift from beyond the tide—
A heaven-sent gift with a heavenly spell—
From a land exultant in freedom's pride,
Yon city sentinel of freedom dwell.

Land of light, where the Church's mission
Is to bless the people, and to free,
Where the President ruler—the humble wall—
Are all consecrated to God's arm.

From every Rhine of this sun-bright world,
I honor the gifts of the hand and free,
Where the fag of the Cross is fully unfurled,
I welcome the message of Liberty.

Friendly, gentle rule is a great boon—
And proper shall minge for its fair land,
That the Pontiff, laden with years and sorrow,
Extends his blessing with outstretched hand.

Oh! whisper my blessing to that rich clime
Where the flower of freedom spontaneous springs;
Where the light of the true and faithful shine
The songs of hope which the angels sing.

CHARLES J. SHAPTER.

—Post-mortem revelation and notices sent to us for publication must be paid for in advance.

Miscellaneous.

A Woman Made Over.

A Funny Incident in Real Life.

"Hannah," said Farmer Hull, as he, having just ate the farm-house kitchen, "be you expectin' a letter?"

"No," answered his wife promptly, "who's a-writin' to me?"

"I dunno, unless it's that high-kyin' sister of yours in Philadelphia. What's her name. I snuff she's tired of livin' stuck up in the city, and wants a place for real human folks, eh?"

"Do she say so?"

"Law sakes, no. Et wasn't put in the letter, leastways I didn't see it, but I guessed that she wrote to open my letters, and I guessed she wrote to see how you liked it."

So Mrs. Hull opened the letter and read aloud:

"No, ma! Mrs. Hull, standing him on the floor, "I'm sure I don't know what better I'm to do. I'm sick of it, it's just the other way. Juliet wants us to go out yer her. She says she'll stan' the expense, an pay us wages, if we'd only consent to make over, now, what does she mean?

"The letter goes on the letter with much care and painstaking.

"Well, ma, I guess I'm a-thinkin' what they eat breakfast in the middle of the day, and what their Sunday clothes all the week? Fraycher goes out. But, another, if you want to go, write another thing. You kin her she mean by the letter? Maybe you kin guess, and raised Bet anyway. I'll give yer the."

"Here's a letter, ma!" said Mrs. Hull thoughtfully. "It's as shiny as silk. But I don't know what to make of it. I guessed that the ship-girls there wear real silk and satin, ma."

"Poor things," and her husband: "it must be dreful to her to dress to death all the time, saying that he would get a lodging for her. She chiped, and he let the way into a comfortable kitchen, where two or three female servants were sitting at a table having their tea.

In a few words he explained to them that he wished them to provide a bed for the girl and to provide her wants in every way; and then, saying he would speak to her in the morning and see what he could do for her, he left the kitchen.

The servants were very kind, and made her quite comfortable for the night. One can more easily imagine than describe the feelings of the poor girlon finding herself so unlady-lodged, and ferment were the thanks she offered to the Blessed Lady, who had so visibly protected her.

Next morning, after breakfast, the gentleman, whose name the servants informed her, was Mr. Lloyd, came out to speak to her, as he had promised.

"Well, my good girl," said he, "what are you able to do?"

"I will try to do anything you set me at, sir," replied she.

"Can you ship a hedge?" said he.

"Well, I never did anything in that line, sir," was the reply. "I think I will try if you will be so kind as to show me how."

He seemed pleased with her answer and said:

"Very well, come out into the garden, and I will show you how to set about it."

She went out with him into a beautifully kept garden, and while she was admiring the flowers he went into a shed in which the gardener's tools were kept and presently appeared again, bearing a large hedge-clipper. He then took her to one end of a line hedge which surrounded the garden and showed her how to set about clipping it. He stood watching her for a few minutes, and then, saying she was getting on very well with it he left the garden.

She worked away for about half an hour, and was beginning to get interested in her occupation when the hall-door opened and two servants came out, bearing an armchair and the other a foot-stool, which they placed on the terrace in front of the house, and then stood by respectfully while a beautifully-dressed lady moved gracefully forward and took possession of the arm-chair.

She dismissed the servants after giving them a few directions, and then sat for some time looking at the girl clipping the hedge.

The latter continued to work away diligently, pausing from time to time to gaze at the lady from time to time.

At length the lady beckoned to her to come near, saying she wished to speak to her.

"I heard from my husband," said she, "how he found you in the porch last night. I suppose you have no friends in New York or they would have met you on your landing."

"I have not a single friend here, ma'am," replied the girl. "A sister of mine came out some years ago, but we have not heard from her for nearly three years, so, of course, she may be dead."

"She may not be dead," said Mrs. Lloyd, "but she may have grown careless about her family."

"Ah, ma'am," said the girl, while her eyes filled with tears, "I was sure she must be dead. I don't believe she could forget those who loved her so much, and when she loved in return while at home. I'm sure she was in the poor-sister's heart to leave. She is always fretting, day and night."

Mrs. Lloyd had turned very pale.

"What part of Ireland did you come from," said she, "and what is your name?"

"I was born at a place called Ballinamore, four miles from the town of M——, in the County Cork," was the reply, and my name is Rose M'Donnell."

Mrs. Lloyd started from her seat, falling into tears, and threw her arms round the astonished girl, exclaiming—

"My sister! my sister! oh, what a shame it was for me to neglect you all so long! But you know I wrote that I have given her; but I will try to make up for it now."

"Oh, ma'am, I knew she would! I'm sure she thought good enough for the Proprietor's wife."

"In the chaset upstairs."

"Get inter it and wash the paller outer yer gray hair, and the real silk yer cheeks, an' kim home! Oh, Lana! kin yer see aloon yer face at Gleftcrow sneetin again?"

"That's a crack," said Juliette, as her weeping sister upstairs as she tried to soothe her.

"No, he ain't an' I was a fool to think I could be made over! Sakes alive, how glad I am to get home! I'm so homesick."

When Hannah entered the parlor again she was dressed and in her right mind. Her husband beamed upon her.

"Ha! ha! ha! Hannah, I've got her back! It's the old gal herself this time as natral as life as a party as a picture! It's the old drive's mother, I'll bet a pin down yet! I left. I shan't take a spec of comfort till I see you safe down from agin on the old farm."

THE LENTEN SEASON.

How the Great Feast of the Church Originated.

Interesting Information Concerning its Observance in Past Ages.

The word Lent—comes from the Anglo-Saxon, Lenten, meaning (German, Lenz, Dutch, Lente, Spring), and is the Spring fast of forty days preceding Easter, kept after the example of Moses, Elias and of our Lord Himself, as a means of advancing in holiness and acquiring spiritual fruit. There is no mention in the Scriptures of the observance of Lent, or of any determined time for fasting among the Christians, but it is spoken of so often, and in words so clear, in the writings of the Apostolic Fathers, in the sermons of the early Fathers of the Church, in the letters of the Saints, in the homilies of the Bishops, in the decrees of Councils and in the teachings of the Popes, that there can be no doubt that the fast, as the general season in which it is now accepted, has been with us from the Apostolic times. From the days of the Apostles the members of the Church always fasted after the manner they had learned from the Jews, when they asked such a favor of them. The instances of fasting in the Old Testament are numerous. The Pharisees were noted for their fasting. Saul ordered that no person should taste food until the Philistines. David fasted at the death of his child, and when Jezebel, Ahab's wife, fasted to hasten the return of the Jews from Babylon. Daniel fasted when the angels of Bethsaida to be delivered from the lions' den. Esther fasted when the angel of the Lord appeared to her. Jonas fasted when he was in the whale's belly. Judith IRELAND'S APOSTLE.

[DEPOSITED FROM THIRTY PARK.]

yes, the very words which Patrick and his Saxe disciple Bechnall heard the angels singing; so that from the time of Patrick to our own, these blessed words have been sung; and in Erin they were accustomed to sing them when the people received the body of Christ in the Holy Communion. The hymn of Saint Bechnall, which he learned from the angels when in company with Saint Patrick, translated, reads thus:

Oh! come, ye holy men,
Christ's holy prophets;
Come, drink the Sacred Blood,
For this is will give,
Saved by Christ's body,
And saved by His Blood,
Refreshed now and strengthened,
Sing praises to God.
He comes, the first, the last,
Himself, the Christ our Lord,
He who shall come to judge us
For every sin and word.

THE ANCIENT METROSAIM TELL US

of the work done for Ireland by Saint Patrick: the great work done for America and the United States, through Saint Patrick, by the faithful priests and laity of Ireland, is still to be written. But the sweet burden of this debt of gratitude will come into many a prayer, and many a hymn of praise, and many a deed of charity in honor of Saint Patrick; and on that last day, when not only the evil deeds of men will be manifested to the world and their authors punished, but the good deeds of men will be seen in all their beauty, measured in all their greatness, and only valued for their exceeding worth, then will the fulness of glory come to Patrick. Then will be crowned before angels and men, not only for his apostleship in Ireland, but for his apostleship in America, the most remote corner of the world; in the most deserted wilderness, or the lonesome rock and hill top of the Rocky Mountains, as well as in the populous cities which stand in their beauty on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. From city and country, town and hamlet, from the miner's cabin and the hall of legislation, as well as from parish churches and cathedrals, there will go up to Heaven, so long as time endures, a hymn of praise to God for the blessings that have come to us in America, from the Apostle of Ireland, and the father of the Irish people.—[From Patrick Sheehy, by ELIZA ALLEN STARR.]

The New Bishop of Achonry.

As already announced in the MONITOR, the Vatican has at length pronounced its decision in an ecclesiastic matter of some what long standing, and a successor has been found for the Most Rev. Dr. McCormack, the assistant Bishop of Achonry. The new coadjutor of St. Stephen's parish who up hold Dr McGlynn in his disobedience to the head of the Church. Under late legal decisions, the trustees of Calvary Cemetery cannot be forced to admit Mr. McGlynn's body into consecrated ground, if he be brought in a Catholic coffin, or be buried subject to the rules of the Church.

Corcoran's Charity.

Mr. W. W. Corcoran bequeathed to St. Vincent's and St. Joseph's Orphan Asylums $2 000 each; to the little Sisters of the Poor, $5,000, and to the St. Ann's Infant Asylum, $2,000. These gifts are to be held and invested by the institutions to which they are severally given, and a sufficient part of the income therefrom used to furnish the inmates with the usual meat and strawberry festivals and feasts commonly kept by Mr. Corcoran a daughter about forty years ago, and continued by him to the present time.

—Among the bills which received the attention of Congress on Saturday, was one for the relief of the Catholic church of SS. Peter and Paul, Chattanooga, Tenn., and provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to pay to Most Rev. Patrick A. Feehan, of Nashville, $15,720 00, for stone and other building materials taken during the war. Portion This time the above claim was instructed. Archbishop Feehan had charge of the Nashville Diocese. When the money comes into his possession it will be turned over to Bishop Gallergher, and by him to Rev. Father Walsh, and applied to the construction of a beautiful new church soon to be built in that city.

ERIN'S ENVOYS.

Parnell and His Compatriots.

PEN PORTRAITS OF IRELAND'S FRIENDS.

Character Sketches of Notable Men.

BY JOSEPH SOHIER.

The personality of the public men of the Irish party may be of some interest to Americans. The personal idiosyncrasies of the professional politicians here are as sugary glossed over as are the peculiarities of the bosses of the United States at home. Him Butler's artful pen has its prototype in the squeak of Jo Biggar's voice. Biggar is regarded with an affection amounting almost to love by the majority of the Irish people. He is small and hump-backed, and is worth nearly a million of our dollars. He is a Member of Parliament, and his greatest ambition is his unsparing pertinacity. He has a voice that sets on the ear like a rusty bass saw, and for the whole of last session he was a flaming menace and terror to any and every British statesman who attempted to get a bill through Parliament. It was the curious spectacle when Jo Biggar was seen, and he objected to every possible measure that any man of British birth tried to pass. When all the other men of Irish descent, or Irish birth, were voting the usual Government majorities, Jo Biggar, as he is familiarly called, arose and began an elaborate and profound speech, which consisted mainly of statistics of the most amazing length, breadth, and thickness, based on the Exchequer report of the year 1841. He spoke in a hard, dry, nasal, and metallic voice for four solid hours, until the Speaker, in a fit of exhaustion, and fearful "I do not think I quite understand what the honorable gentleman was saying.

"Ah! that's too bad," said Mr. Biggar, half-pleased, half-sorry. "I have to begin all over again."

He turned back and began his hour's speech at the beginning, but before he had uttered three sentences the whole House arose in a body and rushed away.

Notwithstanding these habits Mr. Biggar seems to be as popular as any member of the House, for he will take any amount of chaff, and he has a tongue that is ready pointed and cutting.

BRAVE MICHAEL DAVITT.

Michael Davitt is too well known to need description. His strongly marked aquiline features, closely cropped head, and coarse black eyes are known from one end of America to the other. He is by far the most popular man of the Irish leaders at home. He is walks along the streets of Dublin, he is cheered, and the working people have more faith in him than in all the other leaders combined, not excepting Mr. Parnell.

Mr. Davitt is one of the people, and the risks he has run in the cause of Ireland, the punishment of such means as O'Brien and Biggar have sown propaganda, Davitt's life will make a wonderfully interesting book. He is a very young man yet, but his time is given up wholly to the cause.

MR. PARNELL AND DAVITT'S WORK.

Land League Cottage is a cosy, small house, with a nice, but by no means large, stand of green grass bordered by neat little walks and pretty trees such as a dozen other houses in Dublin possess, spreading away from it. The occupants are Mr. Parnell and Mr. Davitt, and the work done there is almost beyond belief. Mr. Parnell's interview with his rebellious lieutenants lasted exactly five minutes. He returned immediately to London, but before he had been a half hour on his journey Mr. Lynch's candidature was withdrawn. Messrs. Healy and Biggar hurried home to Dublin, and Capt. O'Shea was triumphantly elected to Parliament. There has been no talk of a split in the Irish party since that time, but the incident is an example of the remarkable influence a Dick Parnell has over the men who work with him in the cause of Home Rule. Finally, although, the manners and phraseology, is one of the best speakers in the House, and, since the time of the Falkner Lindsay, he is a middle aged man, with a straggling beard, warm spectacles, and is decidedly nervous.

TRUE AND TRIED BARRINGTON.

T. C. Harrington is a solid, plodding, steady, and methodical business man. He is the Secretary of the National League, and he keeps every one of the 1,800 branches of that remarkable organization under absolute control. His face is strongly marked. His speech is blunt.

We regret to have to announce the death at St. John's Orphan Asylum, on Sat. last, of the Rev. Peter O'Shea, brother of the Rev. Father O'Shea, of Dublin, brother of the Rev. Father O'Shea, of Dublin, Michael, Lincoln, The young clergyman had only attained his 30th year, and just two years ago he had been raised to the Priesthood by the Most Rev. Dr. Moran, Coadjutor Archbishop, in the Cathedral of Sydney. He died of a consumption, against which he had been struggling for many years. The deceased was a relative to the hope of proceeding his life and labors in the sacred ministry. He was the third of the sons of the late Mr. M. O'Shea, Kildoran, who died some years previously, and made his preparation for death in a manner worthy of the older brother—the Rev. Wm. O'Shea, of the Sacred Heart Dominican College, under Father Dominic.

Louth.

A painful case of sudden death occurred on Sunday morning, Feb. 19th, in the parish of Castlebellingham. Mr. Hyde, a respectable farmer, was in his usual good health on the evening of the 18th, and was able to walk from his seat, which was at the other side of the room, to the adjoining bedroom, Father Dowdy, who was officiating clergyman, Father Dowdy, attended the sick man for the last time. He died in a few minutes. Heart disease is said to have been the cause of his death.

Monaghan.

Mr. Parnell has received a quite a statement which has never been made before as to the conversation with the Prince of Wales, on special occasion of 1885. Lord Cornarvon had the last secretary of Ireland, Mr. Parnell said, and he was astonished at the manner in which the Prince of Wales, and intended to interest them, shortly afterwards Lord Cornarvon was dismissed, and the Crossmaglen prisoners are still in jail!

Queen's County.

On Feb 8th, a deputation of the Catholic inhabitants of Stiles waited on the Most Rev. Dr. Brown, Bishop of Kildare, at St. Mary's Cathedral, for the purpose of presenting him with an address on his return from Rome, and also to hand him a cheque for £863, to cover the expense of a new organ erected in Stiles, Kilkenny during his absence in Rome. The organ was erected by the Rev. Father Dowling, P.P., Stiles, and the Rev. Father Dowling, C.C., Stiles, and the Liverpool Exhibition. It is a three manual instrument, with 47 stops, and was bought at £700.

Tipperary.

Thomas Condon, M. P., on "Tipperary live yet," has said been bills, although he was not present at the meeting. He has done more for the tenant and noble service in my time, better than the number of Nelson's pillars in Dublin. Concessions of the original abominable rents have been made, and the tenants have been reinstated.

On Feb 5th, a very interesting ceremony of a religious character took place at the Convent of Mercy, Tipperary. The Rev. Mother Mary Ignatius, Superior of the Convent, presided. The Rev. Mother Margaret Bockley, in religious, made her final profession, and the Rev. Mother Mary Ignatius, Superior of the Convent of Mercy, Tipperary, Mr. Michael Murphy, Cty. Clerk, Barrington-hill.

Tyrone.

Upwards of 50 ejectment decrees for non payment of rent were recently obtained by Mr. Lyons, on the estate of the late Wm. E. Verner. Mr. Arthur Lyons, Mr. Lyons, Dungannon, Mr. Lyons, Mr. Lyons, Dungannon, agent, Mr. Lyons, Mr. Lyons, Dungannon, on the tenants in question whom ejectment decrees have not yet been obtained, are Mr. Lyons, Mr. Lyons, Mr. Lyons,

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1888.

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE ANNUNCIATION.

The time hath come for God to overpower
Dark sin's tyrannic sway!
The scheme of death and ruin that of man begun,
By Him be crush'd away!
And neather far fed Satan's winds that pour Sorrow on Life's short day.

The hour hath come for Him to open fling
The gates of Heaven ajar!
And to the world, the fond Redeemer bring Relentless, ceaseless war
Unled day, so that each sublime soul may wing
Its flight to heaven far.

As He hath said, when, in the olden time,
In anger at the Fall,
Primeval man by fatten hissed to crime,
Deep spurned his God and all—
Our world arise, who hearkening to His prayer
Would Satan's thralls, Death's gloomy thrall.

Long ages past, mankind lived heedless on,
Thoughtless of His to come;
Sunk in the pleasures of the Evil One
With Satan His Godless reign,
Unmindful of true joys so easily won
In their proclaimed Redeemer.

But now the time was fast approaching near,
For Heaven's redeeming fire
All hearts with sweet love to family cheer,
At Paradise soon run;
Yet some prophets bright dispels the clouds of fear,
Like stars by night from the sun.

While the century Mary prayed,
With soul prest as the mary;
Implorin God who all creation made,
That she in grace might grow,
That to bright garments bright array'd,
Shd'ly dead, and ever blest.

What light celestial broke upon her new,
Kneeling on humble there,
Pulsing a golden hale 'round her brow,
Glowing divinely fair?
Who sweeten, from pure essence manny throw
As heavenly fragrance rare.

"Hail! Mary, full of grace, the Lord's with thee,
Thou art the angel bright,
While wonder deep shone from our Mother's eye,
At the strange words and light;
Fain would she ask the angel messenger
He'er heard on human sight.

"Then set the Mother of the Eternal God,
Then Lord of all the world;
Thy Son, the Holy One, shall win one day in the Kingdom of Immortal Glory."
Clothed with humble bright;
Guard James till on shall Earth's abode,
Purpuled shines the Light."

Mary, clothed with a grace divine,
Meekly replied, "Behold,
"The order of Him," she said, "Is mine—
Which was—Mrs. Carolan listened to the
The angel vanished but behind left joy
That made her pure heart thrill.

Oh, Mother! guide our thorny path aright;
Thy hand, lo, was will being
To blended man, grace, purity and light,
And in our wandering,
Oh! lead us through the gloom of sin's dark night,
To Heaven's King of Kings.

J. T. COTTRORE.

Literary Miscellany.

The Conversion of the Carolans.

An Irish-American Story of Love, Sacrifice and Repentance.

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY MISS M. MULCAHY.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

CHAPTER IV.

"Oh, mother! Oh, father!" whispered Kathleen, in breathless wonder as the three paused before the great glass door that divided the vestibule of the church; and her wondering eyes turned to where myriads of chastened flames glowed in lines of beauty from innumerable candles. Like blocks of crystal the chandeliers swayed to the light touch of the sexton's taper, and such jet as it was lit, was reflected a thousand times and in a thousand colors in the clear glass pendants. The church was slowly filling with people who scarcely breathed as they passed to the high altar, for they knew the sanctuary is consumed, where Kathleen only saw in it a scene of chaste, artistic loveliness. Ah! to think of candles when the burning flame of love wished to enkindle hearts!

Mrs. Carolan awed by the hush which fell upon the worshippers knelt with a child sense of protection, filled with a sudden secret hope of good to come. Tears of yearning filled Kathleen's eyes, and she could not gaze at the stream of light which poured upon her from the altar throne.

A scene was to be enacted, and Mrs. Carolan waited with some curiosity the appearance of the preacher.

A young priest died in the white robes of a Dominican, ascended the pulpit. Mrs. Carolan started as she saw his dark head and graceful form that were so strangely like a picture in her heart; but there was something unlike her picture in his ascetic face and those thoughtful eyes, and she sank back, "Not him, not him, and he had seemed so near to me"

As the preacher began, Mrs. Carolan paid no attention to the words, but only to the rich voice that thrilled her and bore her back to other days and to the youth, who for the proud plaudits of his mother and sisters, would ambitiously sway oratory, and tell of the fame he would win one day in the House of Commons.

"Oh! that it might be that for this life lowly and hidden, that my darling had been saved," she murmured.

But the magic of eloquence had come upon the priest, and, startled into realization as to where he was, Mrs. Carolan listened to the fervid exhortation that mighty impressed her, and drew burning tears from the bursts of his people. As Mrs. Carolan listened she mans to God, by an unfathomable instinct, that this was John, her son, and calmly she drank in his words. It was her son, and he had authority and power to touch her, and then she said, bowing in spontaneous faith, "Not lowly this fate my God, for it is the will of God, and I am proud to accept it as his wife and daughters came in that evening.

"Go upstairs, now, my children," whisper ed Mrs. Carolan, with decision that left no room for hesitation, and the girls obeyed in thoughtful silence.

"Mother," said his wife, laying her hand on his shoulder, and with wonderful calmness, "I have reason to believe that I have found John, our boy."

Angry surprise passed over Mr. Carolan's face, and then he turned to his paper. "Well," he said curtly, but not without a subdued emotion.

"Richard," exclaimed his wife, with passionate pleading and pain, "you did not know this—did you know he was here?"

"No, madam, I did not. What does he want from us?"

"Oh! my husband, we should kneel and thank God for His great mercy in guiding us to our child. If you had seen him as I did to-night—my boy so gifted, so holy—you would think of other things than your consistency and your temper."

"What do you mean by saying he is holy? Assuming the father, after a pause.

"I mean he is a priest at the Catholic Church, here," and Catherine calmly raised her head.

"What do you talk such nonsense for? What! John turned Catholic and priest?" and Mr. Carolan started up and paced the room, and for awhile there was no sound but his quick tread and rapid breathing."

"You know, Richard," said his wife, as she turned to leave, "and God knows that I have little cause for jesting. Yes, he is a Catholic priest and would you scorn your son for his religion?"

"And I know, madam," answered her husband, stopping in his walk, "that you have to be mighty sure you're right, for if it is true, I will be tempted to shout him on sight."

"No, I do not think you would carry such a sweet into execution. Your fanaticism has caused bitterness enough; I have borne it all in silence, but I will not submit to it in this case."

"I have not seen John, yet," Richard, she continued in a softened pleading voice, "for God's sake remember he is our child, subdue your prejudice and let us go together to the Lord of Hosts, who has sent me he would my to-morrow morning.

"Then you are not sure," broke in Mr. Carolan, kindly, "now remember this Catharine, I will have no visits, no communication with any Popish priest, your son or not, and if I am disobeyed, I'll kill him," he shouted, as his wife closed the door.

CHAPTER V.

A cool, delicious morning with gray shadows melting from the narrowing avenues of shade, and sunshine glinting on the dewy leaves. Mrs. Carolan walked quickly to the Church where the Angelus bell rang for early Mass. A sense of awe weighed upon her, mingled with a nervous expectancy that caused her heart to flutter with the gladness of the birds that were singing their matin hymns overhead. She followed the Mass with a dreamy rapture born of the hour and her new found happiness, but the sight of the priest prostrated her with an abandon of anxiety.

After Mass she found her way to the Priest's house.

"Who do you wish to see, ma'am," said the little porter, answering her knock.

"Father Shirley, or ——"

"Father Carolan," ventured the mother, with pale face, "is he in?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the boy.

"Then I will wait," she replied, as she entered a room and sat down.

Then as the child disappeared, she burst into tears, but restrained herself and waited.

"No, I will—I must be calm."

What a dainty little parlor with its wealth of books, its Sacred Heart that thrilled one strangely with yearning and remorse. Photographs were there in plenty, but the one at which she instinctively sought was not to be seen. Then to the flower wreathed window she passed where the warm "sun-blooded roses" and faint magnolia breathed languor from their southern hearts.

The door opened behind her, and a kindly voice asked:

"You wish to see me, madam."

"Yes," murmured the lady faintly.

She turned towards the priest. His face expressed a wonderous astonishment; the tears started to his swimming eyes; and he staggered forward, meeting his mother half way with the cry of "My mother! my darling mother!" Ah! the happiness of that meeting!

In a long and oh! how delightful a conversation, it was decided between John and his mother that she would make no explicit explanation to his father. "He is quieter than of old, but his aversion to your religion is too strong, and he will never forgive what he calls your apostacy."

"Yes, mother, father will relent, but in God's own good time," and Father John's voice trembled yet with the glad surprise.

Kathleen and Imbel met their brother that evening, and another happy scene took place.

"How is it that we never caught a glimpse of you, I only saw a priest they call Father James," asked Kathleen.

"He is the pastor; I am only an assistant, and this is my first mission," said Father John.

Richard Carolan made no comment on the sudden flush of sunshine that streamed through his home, though his girls angered him by almost taking him into their secret. In their persistent discussion of it, boy after a time they grew more retired, for a brooding calm fell on their lives.

Mrs Carolan walked with joyous heart each morning to Mass, watched the evening twilight shadow the mellow light in the little Church, and when in thankful homage she prayed for the boon of Faith her prayer was answered, and Father John baptized her, with only her friends, the Carters, and the pastor present.

The girls were a little shy and did not at once yield, but each passed through her own sweet, and state of trial and faith.

Then Kathleen Carolan, a lovely Convent girl, full of the strange story of her new friends, took them to the Sisters. Convent doors she had passed many times, but never had she entered, than they had ever dreamed of, and ultimately they followed.

CHAPTER VI.

Two years more had gone by, and Richard Carolan was ill. Tenderly his wife and daughters nursed him, praying with nervous strength and hope for the final conversion of their stubborn member of the house of Carolan. And it was granted, for one day the sick man whispered, "send for John." Even then the waiting son was within the door, and before the father could draw back, he was in the arms of the boy whom he had years ago banished from his sight.

Strangely, he seemed to get better, and was soon able to sit up.

On a golden evening in July, propped up with pillows, he lay before the open door. Father John was with him and Mrs. Carolan, and they discussed a letter from the absent boys.

"I would like to see them before I go," the old man said, "Maurice and Owen, and my new daughter—she is not a Catholic, Catherine?"

"No—I should think not," hesitatingly, answered Mrs. Carolan.

"We will send for them, father, if you wish. They can soon be here," said Father John.

"Do; and tell them to come quickly. There is little time, and much to be undone," said the father, with an anxious sigh.

"Who is with the girls? he asked, looking up with a smile, as voices were heard in the garden.

"Gregory Searles," said Father John, smiling gravely at his mother. "He remains with us for his vacation."

"I have heard the name before," continued Mr. Carolan. "Who is he?"

"The brother and son of my two best friends. He is a Journalist, and lately likes to take frequent rests down at the house."

"Ah! I see I see," indolently assented the father. "Well, which one does he enjoy his rest with most—Kathleen or Isabel?"

"Isabel," said Mrs. Carolan, with a smile.

"Kathleen will have a nobler destiny."

And then they went back to the days they had spent apart.

"Gregory Searles is a Catholic, of course," said the father.

"Yes sir," and Father John told the story of his friend's life, which in a marked manner influenced his own.

"When I landed in New York, after seeking my way over, I started for fame and fortune in a large warehouse. Then I was promoted to the business office of Mr. Searles. He was poorer than I knew now—though he is not rich—but he employed several clerks. From the first a friendship formed between Gregory Searles and myself. We each had our pet ambitions, and were sailing for something better to turn up. Francis wanted to study for the priesthood, and I desired to study law. So constantly were we together, that I think both Mr. and Mrs. Searles became a little anxious, and not knowing what kind I might be, asked me to change my uncomfortable boarding house for her home."

"Now," continued Father John, with a smile, "I knew I was in probation. I was still a Protestant. That noble woman was my guardian angel, and almost made the place of my own dear mother. I could not see their lives of faith and duty, and not realize the grandeur of their religion. I became a Catholic in a short time and then God called me to the priesthood. Gregory Searles was a son of my friend and benefactor. He was a school-boy then." Here Father John stopped speaking, as Gregory Searles himself entered the room with Kathleen on his arm.

"Alas, my golden days," he sighed, as he took a chair near Mrs. Carolan. The two boys, as their mother called them, came at her bidding to see their father. Were it not for the sadness that pressed upon them, it would be a joyous band that gathered home, for the first time in many years.

All were curious to know Maurice's wife. They found her a lovely American girl, whose nature seemed speedily won their love.

She was a revelation to Mrs. Carolan and the girls with whom she became quite a favorite. She had studied and lived under a rigid course of hygiene, was enthusiastic for progress and reform, peculiar to American schools, and, at the conclusion of her bright, happy school days, she had hesitated between adopting one of two professions, literature or law; and then yielding to the persuasion of the handsome Irishman, she married him, and adored her husband.

But she was still a suffragist, and was enthusiastically devoted also to the cause of Temperance.

There little more for us to add, Richard Carolan died a hopeful Catholic, fortified by the Sacraments. "Ah, that I had known in time," he murmured to Catherine, as in his last agony, he looked on his three children who yet watched the Faith.

Before two more years were past, Kathleen had entered a Convent, under the name of Sister Xavier, and well did she deserve her title, for soul, and devotion, and meekness, the "Apostle of the Indies" sent to this faithful client. Isabel became Mrs. Searles, and were the purest crown of a wife's happiness—the free deep love of her husband unfettered, unsoiling and unalterel!

And Mrs. Carolan spends her time in visiting Isabel and Mary. So the dream of Faith kindled first in John, spread its sanctifying radiance into the hearts of a whole family, and brought happiness and prosperity, and—above these—the hope of eternal salvation, to the Carolans

[THE END.]

The House of the Twelve Apostles.

An excellent story is told by Father Demen, the Jesuit missionary, of an incident that occurred to him during his missionary labors. While given a mission once in Indiana, he invited any Protestant who desired to visit him after the instructions, and given them as they gone. Accordingly, a constant Indiana farmer called on Father Demen, and after the usual greetings and questions to him. The Father asked him was he a Protestant. "Well, yes." "To which church do you belong?" "Well, I belong to the Church of the Twelve Apostles." Father Demen immediately rose and shook hands with him. "Excellent. My Twelve Apostles. Stick to that. It is an excellent religion. But you must understand each other. Who are your Twelve Apostles?" "Well, sir, you know," they are twelve Indiana farmers and I am one of them." "Yes sir we were dissatisfied with our minister. We did not like the way we wanted him to. So we sent him about his business and set up a church of our own. There were twelve of us, so we called it the twelve apostles. We have a little church, where we go every Sunday to meeting, and where we pray and preaching and so is quite regular." Some time after Father Demen happened to be in the same place and he inquired of the pastor, "What has become of the Church of the Twelve Apostles?" The pastor took him over to a window, and pointed out a small building some short distance, and said, "Yonder is the church." "There is your Church of the Twelve Apostles." At the same time he showed him "Wines and Cigars." "Good Entertainment for Man and Beast." The Church of the Twelve Apostles had proved a failure, and the twelve apostles had turned it into a wine-shop.

A Penitent's Ride in Old West Virginia.

It was September of the year 1856. The early morning in Wythe county, Virginia, had its home at Wytheville, in the Great Valley. Here for months the sun rises behind a range of mountains, and his rays are in number, and seem to be in no hurry to dispel the shadows which were still to be heard from.

The Pilgrim in question, the Wytheville priest was in Tazewell county, trying the virtue of the White Sulphur Springs. With a place of resort for the fecal gentry and infirm. Around the hamlet, in the adjacent forest, was grouped a semi circle of hills, one, cosy and furnished with timely wood fires. In the other but meaning, that sacramental night, the convalescing priest, when he heard a knock, sharp, up, and for a call, and the opened door revealed the figure of a tall, commanding, and unknown stranger, dressed to the shoulders.

"Father—me, reverend sir," said the stranger. "I have just arrived—some hundred and ten miles on horseback—from Abingdon, my home, and I must be on my return by daylight in the early morning, after a brief stay for rain and food. When I reached Wytheville—sixty miles—I hoped to find you there, to make a request. But you had crossed the mountains fifty miles over here, and something still urged me to follow you. My name is Fitzgerald, a Maryland and a Catholic. I know my duties, but for years, among strangers, I have not heard them. With you, reverend sir, do me the favor to receive my confession. My health is not overstrong. "But you will wait and receive Communion at my early Mass?" asked the priest.

"Impossible, this trip," replied the stranger. "My business is suffering already because of this absence and I must be at home in Wytheville ferry. By taking another and shorter route, I hope to reach home to-morrow night."

He did, with a light heart, reach his home safely. But, without knowing it, this unknown guest had brought a healed by him was the priest's last. Wytheville was taken, quietly and without alarming symptoms, he passed from earth to his eternal reward.—Memoirs of the Sacred Heart.

The Value.

Those who consider the value to be gained by a pilgrimage will find "Ave Maria" Benedictine Tracts" exceedingly useful, enabling them to endure more than ordinary exertion with comparative ease, while they render attention—Ave Maria Pilgrimage and Tracts—Ave Maria Pilgrimage Tracts—Ave Maria Pilgrimage Tracts—Ave Maria Pilgrimage

THE MONITOR.

TRIBUNE OF THE PEOPLE OF PENINSULA

The MONITOR was the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1894.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—Leo XIII., is preparing an Encyclical to the Bishops of Read on slavery and freedom. It will mark the opening of a new era in that vast and sparsely populated empire. Another Encyclical on the social question will follow.

—A Toronto dispatch states that the Mowatt cabinet has refused a charter to the "Secular Publishing Company," a concern which purposed propagating infidelity. This official recognition of Christianity is highly creditable to our Ontario neighbors.

—Bishops Ireland and Keane recently had an interview with President Cleveland, and the Chief Magistrate took occasion to assure them of his warm sympathy in the projected Catholic University, and announced his intention of being present at the laying of the corner stone in May.

—The Catholic Voice is the name of a neatly printed Catholic weekly recently established in Los Angeles under the editorial supervision of Mr. Frank H. Robinson. Mr. W. D. S. Harrington has charge of the business department. We wish our new contemporary a prosperous career in the Southern Diocese.

—It is estimated that fully one hundred millions of dollars are drawn by English and Scotch investors as annual interest on their holdings of securities in the United States. Much the largest part of that investment is in railroad shares and bonds, but they have also placed a great deal in lands for farming and stock-raising. Their railroad investments are said to yield an average of about 4½ per cent. per annum, which is not far from twice as much as could be realized from the use of the same capital at home.

—On Sunday the 19th ult., was celebrated in the Hall of the Loggia of St. Peter's the last of the Beatifications to be celebrated during the Pope's Jubilee—that of the Venerable Servant of God Josephine Mary of Saint Agnes—commonly called Inez de Benigninis—professed religious of the Augustinian Order. The Spanish Ambassador to the Holy See, Senor Groizard y Gomez de la Serna, with the whole staff of his Embassy was present at the ceremony, as was also a numerous deputation, ecclesiastical and lay, from the city of Valencia in Spain.

—Rev. T. D. Phillips, an Episcopalian minister, was expelled from the British-American Association in Chicago last month for no other reason than because he did not follow the Public School System. From this latest phase of modern idolatry it would seem that the old-fashioned Episcopalian "Do unto others as you would be in a Public School?" The devil has many ways of trying to root Christianity out of the world, and the very fact that a Protestant preacher could be expelled from a Protestant society simply because he did not believe in Public Schools, shows plainly that Satan is not without satellites in Chicago.

—The famous Leo Taxil, who has had much experience of the schools of the Freemasons, in which Satan is worshipped to the last, of exposing the tactics of the sect. He has just brought out a new book which has caused a great sensation amongst the Freemasons. The title is Les Frères Kopsieux. In this work M. Taxil gives, in alphabetical order, a list of the sixteen thousand Freemasons in the country, with their names and addresses. It can be easily imagined what heroic labors M. Taxil must have undergone in compiling this book. The volume is the result of three years' patient researches amongst all kinds of Masonic documents.

—Commenting on the action of Mayor Hewitt in refusing to review the Irish procession in New York on St. Patrick's Day, the Catholic Review thus demonstrates the bigotry of this anti-Catholic official: "Last year when he had invited to witness the procession he requested to be excused on the ground that he was suffering from rheumatism. Since that time he gave his official presence to the demonstration of the Italians who celebrated the overthrow of the Pope's temporal power by the troops of Victor Emmanuel, and to other public gatherings not connected with his duty as Mayor. If Mr. Hewitt had always made it a rule to review no parades except those of the militia, the police and the firemen, no objection would be made, but when he views the line on the Irish, and in the most offensive manner of a gentleman who has cultivated rudeness as a fine art, he justifies the indignation which his snarling and discourteous refusal has excited."

—Last week we gave statistics showing that about one-third of the Protestant churches in Maine were closed up in consequence of their being no congregations to fill them. In consoling with this decay of Protestantism we are happy to say that the Catholic Church flourishes in Puritan Maine like a fair olive tree in Jerusalem! No Catholic Church has ever been closed in Maine for want of priest or congregation. There are at present 60 Catholic churches and chapels in that State, all of them prospering and with a priest to attend each. About thirty years ago—when the two States of Maine and New Hampshire formed the first diocese of Portland—there were in both States five priests to assist the first Bishop; now, there are in the same territory forming two dioceses—in Portland diocese, 65 priests, and in that of Manchester, 53—a total of 118 in both. In Portland, Maine, our churches, schools, homes for the aged, and asylums for orphans, are being constantly opened—to one there have of any Roman Church or Catholic institution being closed for want of priests or worshipers.

Calumnies Concerning California.

Rev. M. G. Jenkins is a Methodist preacher who recently came to this State for the purpose of "Christianizing" California according to the most modern improved methods of money getting Methodism. But when this wandering Wesleyan arrived in our beautiful State he discovered that he did not receive that degree of appreciation which his evangelical eminence deserved, hence he shook the dust of California from sectarian shoes and hurried away to Texas where he ventilated his venomous malice against this State and its people in the following fulmination of falsehood which he printed in the Fort Worth, Texas, Gazette:

Rev. M. J. Jenkins, of the Methodist Church, who has just returned from California, was met by a Gazette reporter yesterday to whom that gentleman said: "I am glad I went, for I wanted some means whereby I might give to the public an account of my experience on the Pacific slope, in the hope that I might be able to deter some others from venturing in a country so cheerless, comfortless, and utterly desolate as I found California. It is a Christian duty I feel bound to perform to warn all I can from going there. It is not right that people should be thus misled, as they will be if they go to the Pacific Northwest. The Methodist Church from Texas to Dakota did a small place in the Rock Island Conference, about 100 miles north of Los Angeles, and when reporting to find a country rich in all that goes to make life pleasant, but I found the whole country bleak, barren and desolate. In fact a great desert, one solid tract of sand, extending from New Mexico to Yuma; in fact I believe it to be the same desert that we cross by the Sierra Madre Mountains. It is the most desolate country I ever saw, and I have seen much as a traveling preacher. The Presbyterian Church in Pasadena, which is a small place, has had exceptional opportunities from the East. The people, as a whole, were intent on their worldly affairs than in the preaching of the Word. The only place in the whole country we found that it was when I had made up my mind to leave disgusted, was a gambler, who said he would contribute to my expenses if I would stay, but could not attend my services. This is a fair sample of a man of whatever occupation to go. It is impossible to live and thrive in such a place. The village of Bakersfield they had been long accursed (I will not name them), but they had at $750 and $300 per acre, but there were few people foolish enough to buy at such prices.

In order to expose the malignant falsehoods with which this Methodist preacher fed minutes in interlarded, it is only necessary to say that Kern County is not a desert, but is admitted—as has been the case the "arid waste" depicted by this revengeful parson. Wheat and barley average fifty bushels to the acre in the Kern river valley, whereas they be seen vast ranches and prolific crops of alfalfa, corn, hops, apples, pears, peaches, grapes, figs and sweet potatoes of large size and delicious quality. One ranch alone in Kern county occupies 7,000 acres of land which is planted in the crops we have already mentioned, as well as orange, lemon, lime and banana trees, all of which goes to prove that this Methodist preacher calumniated California simply because the people repudiated his religious vagaries.

The people of Bakersfield—against whom this premeditated jaunter seems to entertain a vicious unchristian prejudice, are among the most moral, industrious and orderly citizens of California. They are well supplied already with resident preachers of the different Protestant denominations, and they did not see fit to find a snug sinecure for this wandering Wesleyan refugee—unknown in Southern California and they are no sufferers to meet summary, and all of whom will greatly rejoice that Jenkins did not disgrace California by remaining within its boundaries.

Revivesing Irish Saints.

The Mountain Messenger, published in Downieville, Sierra county, has been forwarded to this office with an article of a most inexiting character to Catholics, marked thereon. The purpose of the paper evidently belong to that class of people who ignorantly imagine that they can burlesque St. Patrick and St. Bridget, by holding them up to ridicule, and yet retain their Irish and Catholic subscribers. The best way to touch such papers as the Mountaineer a salutary lesson is to refuse to receive into Catholic families any journal that tries to stir its own boy will by casting dirt upon Catholic Saints. This sort of procedure will touch the pockets of the proprietors and this is generally the most sensitive organ of organizations who think that anti-Catholic tomes may be played in order to gather in Catholic contributions.

We hope the "Long Tom Peg" will cease the Messenger to be "popped" out of the premises of every Catholic in Sierra county, so that its proprietors may learn a lesson in decency which will last them all their lives. The lascivious language which the conceptor of the bigoted balderdash in question puts into the mouths of both St. Patrick and St. Bridget, proves him to be most foul-minded malignor of two of the most honored Saints who are venerated in every land by the descendants of Irish Catholics.

—Brother Justin, who has recently returned from Rome, where he went to attend the canonization ceremonies of the saintly founder of the Order of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, told the reporter of a New York paper recently that Pope Leo XIII. asked him if any restriction to the teaching of religion was exercised by the American government. When Brother Justin answered the Holy Father that no restriction whatever was exercised by the authorities of the United States, the Holy Father delivered this important admonition: "It is your duty to teach the American youth that without God, man, His creature, cannot fulfill his duty to his fellowman, as true liberty is impossible without morality." This is a grand sentiment, and we only wish it may become the watchword of all Americans who believe in Almighty God so that by the union of all Christians in propagating morality, virtue and the immorality of the day, might be held in check and eventually eradicated from society.

—The Western Watchman, of St. Louis, Mo., commenting on the sudden disappearance of one of the Protestant ministers of that city, whose aberration was said to be due to overwork, facetiously says: "Rodsania! Four of them got similarly unhinged and disappeared last week. They turn up in some distant towns and say the intervening time is all a blank. The Ten Commandments should be revised, and the sixth read, 'Thou shalt not overwork.'"

CONTROVERTED POINTS ON CATHOLIC MATTERS.

3.—The Jesuits as Portrayed by Dr. Littledale in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Ninth Edition, Vol. XXIII., P. 645 ff.

By this time the readers of our two previous articles are prepared to hear something very startling concerning the Jesuits, whom our Ritualistic contributor to the New Edition of the Encyclopædia has undertaken to describe and paint in their true colors, at least from the standpoint of his thorough honesty, historical truthfulness and well known trustworthiness. But we think that what we are about to state in this number will even surpass their expectations, and make them cling more to the belief whether such stuff or garbage, as we are about to quote, could ever have found its way into the pages of any work claiming to respectability and honor before the reading public. However, facts are stubborn things and the passages that we will cite, and many more of similar character found there, are printed in black and white, sometimes in large, and sometimes in smaller type, but always very clearly and correctly—we mean, of course, grammatically so.

To begin with, on page 647, he charges the Jesuits with "hidden sinking and insatiably the whole principle of Probabilism, the special doctrine of the Society, which can attenuate and even defend any kind of sin." According to his view of the matter the Jesuits' moral system possesses great elasticity indeed, since it can be so far stretched, drawn and pulled, without snapping, as to justify any crime whatever. Now we offer the Rev. Doctor either side of the following alternative, which he may choose at will. When he penned those lines, either he knew what he was talking about, or he did not. If he knew what it really means by Probabilism, as a system of moral doctrine held by Catholic Theologians of the highest repute and approved by the Holy See, he evidently told his readers an untruth, for Probabilism has nothing to do with extenuating or defending any kind of sin, whether moral or venial. If, on the contrary, he did not know it, he again spoke falsely, for he gave out as a trustworthy and well-informed writer on the Jesuits, a man who, in his own confession, he entirely ignores. He, we were almost on the point of overlooking the fact that our Ritualistic friend, after all, not strictly logical, for besides the two members, a third might be suggested, and that is a supposition, which our Doctor would be ashamed of entering, if he wishes to keep up whatever little reputation may be left him. The supposition is that our conscientious and learned divine knew very well what Probabilism meant according to the authorities of Catholic Theologians, but he thought it more conducive to his purpose to insinuate just the opposite, thus again dispensing himself once more from the observance of the Eighth Commandment. It is enough to open any approved manual of Catholic Theology to see at once in what the true doctrine of Probabilism consists. It has reference exclusively to things not clearly and peremptorily decided by any Divine Law, or Ecclesiastical Ordinance, or even by the common practice of the Church, or by the decisions of Popes, or Councils, or other Ecclesiastical authorities, or even by the common opinion of the Fathers, or of the Doctors of the Church, or of other Theologians of the highest reputation, positive or ecclesiastical. Now, we ask, what has all this to do with the Jesuits, or their opinions, or their conduct? Nothing, absolutely nothing. Probabilism is a system of Moral Theology, which, if it be true, it is true, and, whatever may be thought of Catholics in general, is by reason of his orthodoxy, utterly incapable of rendering substantial to the evil power. To others, Dr. Littledale, for example, on the other hand, it is immaterial whether the Jesuits have taken a solemn oath of absolute allegiance to the Pope, or not, because if they have, they have never kept it, but in practice have been always sovereignly independent of him, and have in every case, when his will and their wills happened to clash, carried the day against him. From this it will be apparent that whilst most of the opponents of the Society are content to give one another the lie, one set, as the Jesuanists, asserting that in every instance the Jesuits were constantly at the beck and call of their superiors, and other represented by Gisbertti, affirming, with equal assurance, that they are beyond measure rebellious. Dr. Littledale reserves the accomplishment to the length of flatly contradicting himself, since in one and the same paragraph he boldly proclaims both the slavishness of their obedience, and the openness of their rebellion.

Though we are now prepared for almost anything bringing from the pen of author of our ritualistic scribe, yet we feel forced to admit that, whilst reading his article on the Jesuits, we were confronted with a phenomenon, that puzzles us considerably, and which, we sincerely confess, to be unable to solve. The problem is this: Whether it is possible, in the course of human history for a body or society of individuals—we mean, of course, genuine descendants of Adam and Eve—to beat the same time sets of irreproachable conduct, and of consummate malice; men leading lives of unimpeachable purity and of total depravity. Yet, strange to say, this is precisely the fact that, according to Dr. Littledale's statements, the crafty Jesuits have been able to achieve ever since the beginning of their existence. In fact, according to him, (for we quote his words not only substantially but even literally) they have been guilty of (page 619) embroiling cabinets, concocting conspiracies, kindling wars, procuring assassinations, (page 618) of poisoning Popes, (page 619) of always seeking their own aggrandisement, (page 646) of disobeying the Political authority (page 651) of teaching doctrines that justify every kind of sin. They had a large share as preachers of the Inquisition, (page 619) they were accused by the Huguenots; they were accused by the Jansenists, according to the charge imputed to Pascal, of being the Inquisitors Littledale, who does not seem to have much to recommend him in the estimation of his readers, says there is little ground for the charge.

—The preachers of Iowa have imposed the Iowa legislature because they have allowed priests to be prepared for the duties of their holy office. The preachers doubtless are mad because the prayers of priests are generally heard in heaven and granted by Almighty God. But nobody, either in heaven or on earth, ever pays any attention to the prayers of Protestant preachers!

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1894

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Mar. 25—Sunday—Palm Sunday, 27 Forty Hours Devotion, St. Catherine's, Martinez.
" 26—Monday—Feria.
" 27—Tuesday—Feria.
" 28—Wednesday—Feria.
" 29—Thursday—Holy Thursday.
" 30—Friday—Holy Friday.
" 31—Saturday—Holy Saturday.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

The Celebration in this City.

THE DAY ELSEWHERE.

Charity, Piety and Patriotism Combined.

It is creditable to our Catholic people that amidst all tribulations and clamorous efforts on St. Patrick's Day, they remember the land of St. Patrick's Patron Saint by attending the Indian Charities and by blessing with a liberal hand for the happiness of suffering Ireland. Charity and patriotism are the devotion of a people who are generally known to be the most charitable and patriotic people on the face of the earth. Charity and patriotism are the two great virtues of the Irish people, so that neither bow-legged Dutch nor red-headed Yankee, nor cold Scotchman can be charged with being the possessors of these virtues

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1888.

Poetry.

[For the Monitor.]

LOWER YOUR HEAD AND GOD WILL RAISE IT.

In my childhood's a memory
Of a word my mother said,
When some modest school-boy triumphs,
For a moment bared my head;
And the wisdom is apparent
To whoever rightly reads it,
Heaven helps the meek and humble—
Lower your head and God will raise it.

And since childhood's days have left me,
Since I've found the world and men,
That recent, simple Irish maxim
Often has recurred again;
For Humility proves virtue,
Though we seldom find one praise it.)
In the count of distinction—
Lower your head and God will raise it.

He will server who a battle
Who is heedless of defeat,
And his place will but to power,
Who conceived them of conceit;
Though intoxicated in his efforts,
Modest victor never says it,
For he guards him by the maxim—
Lower your head and God will raise it.

In the constant strife around us,
Satan plays a secret part,
Through the alcove of Pride he enters,
Subtly to the human heart;
And he fills it with delusions,
And he fondly whispers, "Raise it,
Let the beautiful on my moral—
Lower your head and God will raise it.

C. ANTHONY DUFFY.

A STUDENT'S SONG—FAREWELL.

The Spring has come, and clad sweet Inlah Green
With richer green and flowers,
And Phebus bright, doth rise each day more
With very happy hours.

It wakes the merry tuneful birds with song,
On every blossoming spray,
Your autumn will not come among the hills
Until the skies of day.

So, oh! I sing for me who soon will bid,
At dawn of cheerful Spring,
One dear, and oh, heart-rending and farewell,
To many a charming thing.

And for from Ulster and parents, sister dear,
In other lands I'll sway,
And shall no more beneath paternal walls,
Lend hour the distant day.

But, oh! my faith'ing soul is raised in prayer,
To father God's sweet call—
To give my heart alike to all mankind,
While country I shall.

But still within my breast, dear Inlah Creek,
Deep your shall you dwell,
For 'round your green remarable banks I've played
Until night's wings soft fall.

Then oft beneath the bright unclouded moon,
Oh, happy world I sweet,
And with my brothers hum a broken song
With calm enraptured soul.

To me in my Alma Mater do I goo
With fond and streaming eyes,
Where college days have ended fowed, more sweet
Than earthly symphonies.

But, oh! I been out my heart! I bid farewell
To all the hoods dear,
And when the next returning Spring shall come
To make the happy year,—

Oh! let them all within their homes's over,
Remember and kind
For in my prayers and tears I fondly cast
A thought to this dear day.

DAN COUGHLAN.

[For the Monitor.]

MOTHER OF SORROWS.

On Calvary's grey hill-top,
The Virgin-Mother stood,
Marking her Son's now anguish
As He hung upon the Rood.

So sigh, so tame, betokened
The Mother's wrung soul,
The' her heart was well-nigh broken
As she saw His life-blood flow.

Ah, who could paint her sorrow,
As He bowed His thorn-crowned head;
And from the blood-stained prince
His Blessed spirit fled.

Oh! Mary, queen of Mystery
By the pains and griefs you felt,
Help Mary human souls
Help Mary human souls.

Make us partaker in thy sorrow,
Make us stand mourn with
Till we find in blinded Eden,
Joy and pleasure unalloyed.

JOHN LANE BEAUMONT.

TRUE AND FALSE SORROW.

A lady child found a diamond in the sands,
And bore it, sparkling, to a fond mother,
Who, rather cross, and long, white, and hands
Folded in lilacum. "Hast what is that?"

She eager cried; then, still more eager, prayed
"Leave this with me, for my, sweet, and other glass;
And when that hast enough, there shall be made
A chain for thee fit for any queen."

The goldsmiths are believed. Where shone the gold
The glittering sands, she, consolate, sought and found
The precious gems, which, at the twilight cold,
The mother in a silver casket bound.

A priceless chaplet! As she brought the last,
Bright, crowning gem, "Tis mine!" the child
cried,
But, on the instant, while, with open casket,
Her cheeks, the very tinger, flick'ring flamed—

The woman made a dagger be her side,
And cried her cry—the diamonds in her hair,
And all she once her pain, admiring, cried,
"Here will the pearl-beaten a fan-tale!"

ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

QUEER VERBAL COMBINATIONS.

The principal food of the Sioux
Is Indian corn, which they bolsa,
Or hominy make,
Or mix in soup,
And eat it with pork, as they choose.

Now doesn't this spelling look epicurious!
To enough to make any one epicurious!
So a word to the wise,
Prey our language revise
With orthography not so injurious!

—Post-mortem resolutions and notices sent in for publication must be paid for in advance at the rate of ten cents a line. About eight words make a line.

Literary Miscellany.

True Till Death.

A Story of Ireland and Greece.

BY E. LYNCH.

CHAPTER III.

Donagh sat down to a hurried dinner, but wonder and distrust left him no appetite. His could only vaguely conjecture the motive of this unusual tyranny. He felt sorely tempted to rebel against it, but he did not see how a serious scene with his father would improve his position, and, after all, it was only anticipating his departure from Dublin by a day.

Still he would greatly have liked to bid pretty merry Mave "good bye" before was might prove a long absence, and he felt some parting instructions from Mave's father would have been an additional comfort to him.

Apparently Mr. Fitzgerald's business did not lie in London, for scarcely had they reached that city, than he announced his intention of proceeding at once to Paris.

Donagh was thoroughly taught, though it was impossible that his father should have discovered his mistake. In Paris, he was not allowed one instant's solitude. If he wanted to write a letter, his father sat near him and read dialogues; conviction even grew upon him that his correspondence was surreptitiously watched.

He chafed and fretted in this domestic bondage. It was not his fault if his opinions were diametrically opposed to those of his father, and he felt sorely hard that he should be treated as a fractious and irresponsible child. His nervous irritability became so marked that, on the second day of their stay in Paris, Mr. Fitzgerald said at breakfast:

"Now, look here, Donagh, you are bent on making a fool of yourself, and I am equally bent upon preventing you. I am stronger than you, and I will succeed. Struggling will do no good; it will only wear out your nervous system.

"I don't understand you," Donagh cried testily.

"Yes, you do. I know more of your movements than you imagine. You've got yourself mixed up in plots with every dangerous and foolish old firebrand—a man of the past, who believes in the possibilities of a war or a revolution, or the dear knows what. He has made you, if anything, sadder than himself. If present, remember, my dear boy, I am prepared to use the very strong set measures to restrain you from injuring yourself and your family. But I hope you will be reasonable and accede to my terms.

"What terms!"

"I offer you perfect liberty on condition you remain away from Ireland for a year. Travel about—go to the East—anywhere; you will have a reasonable allowance."

Donagh reflected. Travelling through Italy and Greece would certainly offer him opportunities for sounding the extent of sympathy Ireland could be sure of abroad.

"I accept, father," he said at length, not with the hope you have in view—that of modifying my intentions or aspirations, but because I might learn some amusement by carrying my cause in other lands. There is the question of the Greek war. I should like to thoroughly understand it from a Hellenic point of view."

"Well, go to Greece and see for yourself. If the Modern Hellenes, conducting themselves like peaceable children, will convince you that a small nation can never hope to struggle, unaided, against a great, you will have reaped immeasurable benefit from your journey.

"But, father, is your way of thinking generous or just? you clearly say that intolerance and the intolerant makes it wrong. The relative attitudes of Greece and Turkey and of Ireland and England are analogous. All nations honor Greece for taking against her oppressor. Why are we to be despised and talked of as low criminals or malefactors for wanting to do the same?

"Because Europe hates Turkey, while she fears and wishes to conciliate England. Because Turkey has no influence and England can buy everything with—her gold. The nations never was that was impervious to the insidious and deadly poison of bribery. Read any of the French papers that are not stalled, and mark how boldly about they hold from Ireland. Read the "Revue des Deux Mondes." What has brought about the revolution in French opinion—they, the greatest champions of freedom and the old recognized enemies of England, they for whom our forefathers so gallantly fought for over one hundred years? English gold, boy, English gold! France would not lift her little finger for you.

"It would be intolerable to believe it," Donagh cried impetuously. "We are as much worth as Greeks. Why should the European Powers not recognize us in her cause, and leave us to a fate as hard as theirs? Why should we be left to our fate? Why should we be left to our fate?

"Ah, Donagh, this is the old delusion, the old chivalry of Europe has died out through the glitter of British gold. In the past men were proud to fight for alien freedom and our Catholic chivalry has recognized duty to send help to another.

"Wolf and mouton! We have hungry grown more peasable and more practical.

"Don't say a good Home Rule measure might not benefit Ireland, or that the landlords did not deserve what they get, but your good-humored Paddy would never be able to get along without the comfortable grasp of John Bull's hand. It is just a set of conciliating hand, I know, and it has brought Bill's damage fingers very nicely, too, and yes, if John Bull will only let himself be cuffed down the right way he is not such a bad fellow."

Donagh smiled to hear his father thus expound the fundamental faith of the Land League in sensible unconsciousness.

Mr. Fitzgerald had no doubts of Donagh's honor, but he thought it would be a wise precaution to see him safely off to Marseilles with a ticket to the Piraeus in his pocket.

This it happened that early on March evening, Donagh found himself curiously surveying an English torpedo in French waters and facing blockaded shores. Athens shone before him, and the thought filled him with solemn wonder and thrilled his pulses pleasurably. He stared across the dark sea, and at the lights of the Greek glass brightly through the outlines of mighty vessels covering the harbor, and then he was startled out of his vague dreaming to feel himself touched about, shouldered by dirty and noisy porters, all surrounding him and quarrelling vociferously with each other about him. Somebody addressed him in intelligible French, and at once he was carried off and thrust into a tiny train which conducted him with moderate speed to the wide-avenued city which a Frenchman might to day more justly designate less positively.

As they drove into the town the people, scattered about in groups, gave Donagh the impression that they were all gathered back between the idea of an earthquake and a festival. They wore no stamp of dignity nor earnestness. Everyone was chattering or gesticulating. Will-nominated peripatetic and the guide informed him that the English at that moment were held in special abhorrence in Athens. Diadochus had failed them in their need; the Duke of Edinburgh had trembled shamefully; the English ambassador had grossly insulted the chosen minister of the people, by their gaols, and only the courteous sympathy of France had soothed their wounded susceptibilities.

"A," Donagh breathed, with significant fervor.

The generous blood of chivalry still thrilled through old France's veins. There was hope yet for Ireland. Man like Lafayette and Hoche might rise up again, and, thank Heaven, the Wolfe-Tones and Robert Emmetts would be there to greet and welcome them.

Such day the atmosphere in Athens grew more tense. Donagh made acquaintance with an attaché of the French Embassy, and from him learnt much of French opinion. He could only feeling bitter when he contrasted the condition of the country he was in and that of his own—Ireland, settled at and looked for saking the bread of national life, and Greece piled for wanting a little more pudding.

"Mave has everything she wants—as much as she can hope to manage. Nobody interferes with her. All Europe is there to protect her, and see that she is not ill used. And we are starving, and Europe looks on and says nothing," he said to the French attaché.

"It is hard and strange, monsieur. We French like and admire the Irish—oh, so much. They are a generous and sympathetic race, lively, and in fact, very like ourselves. I have always heard that your women are beautiful and poor, and your men brave and generous. Was it not our King Louis XV. who remarked, when somebody complained that his Irish soldiers took too much upon themselves, that his menus told him so? As for the tone of the public press—my friend, one can never explain the tone of the public press."

"But why don't you show us the active sympathy you show this people? What are they that we are not—that we cannot be if we strive stronger hand than ours, weakened by famine, and desolation, and ineffectual struggle? Ireland has as much on our face. Hymn sang of Greece, and it was considered an antiquarian thing to fly to her assistance at the bidding of his inspiration. But we have produced men that even England has had to reverence, and has been proud to count among her noblest and her best. And were Botsaris and Kanaris any greater, or as great? Give us only a chance, and see what we shall do; see whether we may not earn the respect we claim, and turn out something more dignified and more earnest than this people can do. Go to Ireland, and you will see in any of her desolated and half-empty cities a fewer race of inhabitants than these puny petticoated fellows with the energy of degeneration indelibly printed on their brow."

The Frenchman thought it quite possible, and also quite probable that all Greece could show nothing like the refined and spiritual type of beauty of this infatuated young patriot who wore the halo of manifest sorrow and walked the earth like one consumed with the flame of a deep and unextinguishable passion.

There was the rumor of battle from Lacian, and Donagh started off for Thessaly, having appraised his friends of his movements.

In the meantime, a pretty merry face in Kildare street was growing grave and thoughtful. The head best ever some girl's work in the lamplight made a witching picture, with locks of fair hair curling in every direction, and gleaming as if gold-dust had been sprinkled over it, but smoothly, but in meshes of inextricable grace, half curl, half curl. The then, pointed face looked like a dainty shell, with pink color softly suggested through the white, and the lips were a little parted as if some words were often lifted now with a sudden, alert expression, as if they were waiting for some one whose continued absence troubled their owner sorely.

"Papa, why doesn't that bad, bad boy write?" the musical voice at last murmured, as the musical voice at last murmured, as the musical voice at last murmured.

Then a letter from Marseilles came. It contained a pretty postscript, which shed a red flush over her face:

"Tell your mamma I send her my most charming Mave, and tell her I miss her sorely, papa, very sorely."

Another letter followed quickly with its mysterious message for her, and Mave saw the news that there was going to be some fighting at Thessaly, and Donagh was starting off to catch a glimpse of battle for himself.

"Suppose anything should happen to him, papa. Mave cried, with face white and whitened in a flutter. "I'm going to make me abroad in the summer. Couldn't we go to Athens? Mave is somewhere near that poor foolish boy!"

"Really, child, I cannot see any reason why we should not. But I am too old for travelling at this time of the year. I dread the cold and damp." and her father.

"Then I'll go alone, papa. I am not at all nervous, and I know I should make a first-rate traveller."

"Nonsense, Mave! As if a girl, a child, could storm a blockaded country, and an oriental one, too. Why, the Greeks would not even put you up if the Turks didn't," laughed her father, and then she thought the impossibility and sadly.

But Mave could not sleep that night for thinking of her cousin, romantic Donagh. She was a girl as artless and candid as Miranda, and as generously indifferent to social laws and restrictions as Juliet!

A breathlessly attractive plan formed in her mind. Donagh was a Catholic, and her affection for Donagh to be that of mercy and pretty friendship—for of love she understood nothing. Then why should not a timidly anxious sister set out into strange lands in search of a brother who might be in danger? No logical answer made itself heard in argument against the proposal, so she examined her purse, which so oddlying kept her more generously supplied than girls' purses usually are, understood the cost of the economy of travelling to know that a reasonable part of the earth's surface may be covered on limited funds; wrote a pretty pleading and loving little note of explanation to her father, and started off for London.

Her conscience did occasionally smite her on the way when she thought of her father, but she seemed to hold no fears of an unfavorable reception from Donagh, because she never measured the momentous meaning of the step she had taken. That Donagh would read her coming in the light of a lover, and feel honestly bound to accept the responsibilities she would, unconsciously and unsought, thrust upon him was a reflection it would be impossible for her to entain.

Mave made her way in perfect safety to Marseilles, whence she sent telegrams to her father and to Donagh's address at Athens. The Captain of the French liner which carried her to the Piraeus befriended her in the most paternal manner. She had been brought up in Paris in her childhood and knew the ways of the world, and had no gelatic difficulties in the way of their friendship. He was interested in this pretty search for a kind of a young brother who had gone to the Greek country to fight against the Apologos of Germany, it may be remarked, that the leading Italian families have, to a large extent, lately given up French for their language, and that the Catholic cross, Sig nor Crispi, himself, has his daughter trained under the supervision of a Catholic lady from Munich. This penchant is due to the respect which has grown up in the promotion of late years, for the Vatican, which has become the close ally of young Italy. Servility of this kind is characteristic of Italy's subjects.

On the 19th prox. Bishop Loughlin of Brooklyn is to bless a bell for the Italian Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, that city.

Sig. Cecchi, the Italian Fitzgerald—the noblest and saddest young fellow God ever set on the face of this earth to plague his relations.

"I am come for him, too," said Mave, sadly.

"Oh," was all Dick said, and he looked very grave.

"Did you say you wanted a young Irish-man? Well, I know a fellow who is in outrage down the road. He got wounded—I don't exactly know how; but everybody is sharpened in his direction. "You promised pockets is like a fisher to him."

"Oh! Mave, Mave! ran down the road. Mave was first at the cottage, breathless and white.

"Where is the wounded man!" she cried.

"The young man in question was young, but guessed their inquiry, and opened the door of her solitary bedroom. Mave saw the face, and knew that she had seen it before, saw, too, that his was quickly shining from her. The dark, sunken eyes saw, too, and flashed with tender recognition.

"Oh! Mave, child—my love!" he murmured, only dimly understanding that love had come to him upon the threshold of death—"this is Dick's sister, Mave, I adored by those who love our Blessed Mother. Dick, Dick, Mave, I thought I was alone dover, but it is not my own Irish people, I only is bad been for Ireland!"

"And I, Donagh! Is I not bad for you?" she cried, laying her hand in his.

"Pretty, pretty Mave! Think of me—not especially, for—I—Dick!

O Mave adressed, with head bowed in speechless grief.

"Take care of her, Dick."

Mave placed his hand on Mave's shoulder.

"I had hoped to die for Ireland. Good-bye, Dick. Kiss me, Mave—your face is fading from me. I would it could hold me yet a little.

"Their lips met, and for a moment the eyes of both answered that the lips had been conscious of until it was too late.

Donagh's head fell back, and his pain and delight of this world was no more for him.

The tinsels paid him every honor they could, and again his bread lay O'Mara's bunch of shamrocks—a faded memory of the land he adored.

[THE END.]

—Some highly important and edifying communions took place in Rome during the celebration of the jubilee. Among those who have embraced the Catholic Faith were eminent scholars, several English parsons, and Russian officers, who had lost wealth and distinction. The latest proselyte was a Russian Jew—the wife of an officer in the Italian army. This lady was a governess in the family of the Italian Minister in Moscow, and married an aide de camp of the General attached to the Embassy. The religious ceremonies which she witnessed in several of the Roman Churches had such a salutary effect on her imagination that she finally abjured Protestantism, and was received, a month ago, into the Catholic Church. Apropos of Germans, it may be remarked, that the leading Italian families have, to a large extent, lately given up French for their language, and that the Catholic cross, Sig nor Crispi, himself, has his daughter trained under the supervision of a Catholic lady from Munich. This penchant is due to the respect which has grown up in the promotion of late years, for the Vatican, which has become the close ally of young Italy. Servility of this kind is characteristic of Italy's subjects.

CATHOLIC NEWS NOTES.

Church Concerns in Many Countries.

—Catholicity is said to be making wonderful progress in Colorado.

—Within the limits of Gotham one authority states there are 900 000 Catholics.

—Bishop Loughlin of Brooklyn took possession of his new house last Sunday.

—It is said that the latest composition attributed to the Prince of Wales is a transporting of baled hay from the United States.

—The death is announced of Rev. Jas. J. Cook, pastor of St. James' Church, Elizabethtown, Ky.

—Miss Elizabeth McGinnis, of Baltimore, recently received the white veil at the Visitation Convent, Frederick, Md.

—Rev. T. P. Walsh, pastor of St. Mary's Cozzens, N. Y., who was seriously ill of late, is reported recovered.

—Very Rev. Father Arguespere, P. S. M., Superior General of the Marists, is visiting the houses of his order in Wisconsin.

—The Catholic Orphan Asylum of New York City will undergo alterations entailing a cost of about $100,000.

—Don Michael Ita has succeeded the late venerated Don Bosco, as Superior General of the Salesians.

—The Marquis of Bute will, during the remainder of his life, give $500 annually to the authorities of the Convent de Paul.

—On the Feast of the Sacred Heart over 800 persons were sanctified in the Tongue at Church of St. John the Baptist, Hopkinton, Mass.

—The Bishops of the Catholic Truth Society will take place in Southwark, Eng, from Sunday, October 29.h, to Tuesday, October 31.t, for more.

—Rev. Andrea Hintenach, O. S. B., who was so much spoken and praised about of St. Vincent's Abbey, Penn., was consecrated on Tuesday last. Bishop Phelan officiated.

—The great annual pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Anna de Beaupre, Canada, where countless miracles have been wrought, took place on the 7th inst.

—Brother Stanislaus, a Hebrew merchant in New York, baptized among his charitable bequests $1 000 to St. Francis Catholic Hospital in that city.

—It is now pretty authoritatively stated that Bishop Dwining, the twelfth Bishop of Peterboro, Ontario, will succeed the late lamented Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto.

—The eighteenth general convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America will be held in Boston on August 21. The Union reports now a membership of 500,000.

—Some Interesting Pictures or Prints of the Consecration of the Vicarate as they are more properly designed, have been placed in charge of a person in Kansas City, Mo (sous).

—The Archbishop of Paris refused to allow Verdi's "Requiem" Mass to be sung in Notre Dame, as it is interpreted partly by Protestant artists. It has been sung in cathedrals in Italy.

—A spot is on foot to present Christ' mas Morning with his Cathedral free from Cabs on the 8th of June, 1890 the day on which he was ordained. It is also the Bishop Ecclesiastical consecration. We heartily wish the undertaking success.

—Sister S. Joseph, in the world Miss Mary Ann Ryan, died recently at the Sisters of St. Boniface, Manitoba, recently kept the 50th anniversary of her religious profession. Twenty years ago, Sister Ryan, Mother Superior, Archbishop Taché presiding.

—The Pope is said to have expressed that the first American pilgrimage to the Holy Land will leave New York on the 29.h of February, 1889, and return to Marseilles, on the 29.h of March, 1889, the Holy Land.

—Sig. Cecchi, the Italian Fitzgerald—the noblest and saddest young fellow God ever set on the face of this earth to plague his relations.

"I am come for him, too," said Mave, sadly.

"Oh," was all Dick said, and he looked very grave.

"Did you say you wanted a young Irish-man? Well, I know a fellow who is in outrage down the road. He got wounded—I don't exactly know how; but everybody is sharpened in his direction. "You promised pockets is like a fisher to him.

"Oh! Mave, Mave! ran down the road. Mave was first at the cottage, breathless and white.

"Where is the wounded man!" she cried.

"The young man in question was young, but guessed their inquiry, and opened the door of her solitary bedroom. Mave saw the face, and knew that she had seen it before, saw, too, that his was quickly shining from her. The dark, sunken eyes saw, too, and flashed with tender recognition.

"Oh! Mave, child—my love!" he murmured, only dimly understanding that love had come to him upon the threshold of death—"this is Dick's sister, Mave, I adored by those who love our Blessed Mother. Dick, Dick, Mave, I thought I was alone dover, but it is not my own Irish people, I only is bad been for Ireland!"

"And I, Donagh! Is I not bad for you?" she cried, laying her hand in his.

"Pretty, pretty Mave! Think of me—not especially, for—I—Dick!

O'Mara adressed, with head bowed in speechless grief.

"Take care of her, Dick."

Mave placed his hand on Mave's shoulder.

"I had hoped to die for Ireland. Good-bye, Dick. Kiss me, Mave—your face is fading from me. I would it could hold me yet a little.

"Their lips met, and for a moment the eyes of both answered that the lips had been conscious of until it was too late.

Donagh's head fell back, and his pain and delight of this world was no more for him.

The tinsels paid him every honor they could, and again his bread lay O'Mara's bunch of shamrocks—a faded memory of the land he adored.

[THE END.]

—Some highly important and edifying communions took place in Rome during the celebration of the jubilee. Among those who have embraced the Catholic Faith were eminent scholars, several English parsons, and Russian officers, who had lost wealth and distinction. The latest proselyte was a Russian Jew—the wife of an officer in the Italian army. This lady was a governess in the family of the Italian Minister in Moscow, and married an aide de camp of the General attached to the Embassy. The religious ceremonies which she witnessed in several of the Roman Churches had such a salutary effect on her imagination that she finally abjured Protestantism, and was received, a month ago, into the Catholic Church. Apropos of Germans, it may be remarked, that the leading Italian families have, to a large extent, lately given up French for their language, and that the Catholic cross, Sig nor Crispi, himself, has his daughter trained under the supervision of a Catholic lady from Munich. This penchant is due to the respect which has grown up in the promotion of late years, for the Vatican, which has become the close ally of young Italy. Servility of this kind is characteristic of Italy's subjects.

—On the 19th prox. Bishop Loughlin of Brooklyn is to bless a bell for the Italian Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, that city.

—Sig. Cecchi, the Italian Fitzgerald—the noblest and saddest young fellow God ever set on the face of this earth to plague his relations.

"I am come for him, too," said Mave, sadly.

"Oh," was all Dick said, and he looked very grave.

"Did you say you wanted a young Irish-man? Well, I know a fellow who is in outrage down the road. He got wounded—I don't exactly know how; but everybody is sharpened in his direction. "You promised pockets is like a fisher to him.

"Oh! Mave, Mave! ran down the road. Mave was first at the cottage, breathless and white.

"Where is the wounded man!" she cried.

"The young man in question was young, but guessed their inquiry, and opened the door of her solitary bedroom. Mave saw the face, and knew that she had seen it before, saw, too, that his was quickly shining from her. The dark, sunken eyes saw, too, and flashed with tender recognition.

"Oh! Mave, child—my love!" he murmured, only dimly understanding that love had come to him upon the threshold of death—"this is Dick's sister, Mave, I adored by those who love our Blessed Mother. Dick, Dick, Mave, I thought I was alone dover, but it is not my own Irish people, I only is bad been for Ireland!"

"And I, Donagh! Is I not bad for you?" she cried, laying her hand in his.

"Pretty, pretty Mave! Think of me—not especially, for—I—Dick!

O'Mara adressed, with head bowed in speechless grief.

"Take care of her, Dick."

Mave placed his hand on Mave's shoulder.

"I had hoped to die for Ireland. Good-bye, Dick. Kiss me, Mave—your face is fading from me. I would it could hold me yet a little.

"Their lips met, and for a moment the eyes of both answered that the lips had been conscious of until it was too late.

Donagh's head fell back, and his pain and delight of this world was no more for him.

The tinsels paid him every honor they could, and again his bread lay O'Mara's bunch of shamrocks—a faded memory of the land he adored.

[THE END.]

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The Week's Happenings in the World.

—The White House is overrun with rats and has been for four years or more.

—Emperor Frederick died within thirty fact of where he was born and at exactly the same hour of the day.

—A 6 ton ash, carrying an electric battery strong enough to run it forty miles, reaches London.

—A statue of Shakespeare is soon to be erected in Paris. Ignatius Donnelly naturally considers this a remarkable exhibition of taste.

—Great pearl discoveries are reported in the Gulf of Mexico. One was sold for 140,000 francs.

—The Philadelphia and Erie Railroad will put up twenty-two iron bridges in the place of wooden structures.

—There were 811 deaths in New York during the week ending June 23d, of which 532 occurred in tenement houses.

—A Boston man has $67,000 left him by relatives who you would wager on them on empty ones. His eyes opened very wide when he saw that it did not weigh as much.

—An immense vein of lime has been opened on Samuel S. Brown's house, in Northpoint, L. I. The family were driven out, and the boss had to be smoked out.

—The London and Northastern Railway has issued a circular to the principal judges of its American customers, "to institute no operations of importance."

—The Ohio cannery has 200 persons employed and it is unable to fill one-half of the orders it has received. Fifty thousand cans will be put up this season. Another cannery is to be established in a few days to secure the fruit that is going to waste in the country.

—Mr. Gladstone says that he really should like to live a while for two great subjects. The Reform Bill of Melanion Bill, and to convince my countrymen of the substantial identity between the theology of 18 cent and that of the third Tatanasus.

—Dr. Hunter said, by the doctors on the diseases with brought by his wife in England, is liable to penal servitude should he ever go back th re, and is to be indicted as a bigamist by the Public Prosecutor.

—The wholesale desertion in New York say that the influx of California fruits has not had any appreciable effect on either Eastern fruits or the foreign fruit. The reason is thought to be that the Americans are becoming more and more fond of eating fruit.

—The Savannah News, in announcing the completion of the Cocoa Mountain Hotel near Tuscini, refers to the construction as "one of the most marvelous pieces of civil engineering ever performed south of the South. The tunnel is 2 145 feet long, 16 feet wide, 14 feet 4 inches and 12 feet high.

—The Grecian and Italian navies have adopted a system of night signals by means down electric lights and it has been suggested by the Electrical Review that the system might usefully be used on some passenger steamships, especially in view of the fact that many of these vessels carry an incandescent electric lighting plant.

—Count Maurice Esterhazy has been put under guardianship to check his mad extravagances. He owns, free and clear, nine million acres, more than two thirds of the twenty-three acres of land in Hungary and has the title of Prince. He has spent thirty million without quitting his estate.

—The Archduke Leopold, the eldest member of the Hapsburg family, has been restored to imperial favor. He has been living about 12 years in a lunatic asylum, in the strait-jacket. He awakened Emperor Francis Joseph, his uncle, from his lethargy, by entering the Austrian Emperor's bedroom and shouting "Fire!"

—A box of firecrackers, cale 45 cents in Canada, has recently been imported, carefully packed and subdivided, all ready for the retail trade. A million of these boxes are now imported in this city for sale, and all sold. No doubt the same amount—say, 45 cents a million—Canadian—were packed away this year.

—The Czar's Government has determined to build a transcontinental road across Siberia, with a terminus on the Pacific Ocean. The whole length of the road is 5 000 five thousand miles, and it is estimated that it will cost 400 000 rubles. The first section will be 2 800 miles long, and will probably be begun before long.

—Near the Chicken Broth spring, in the San Jacinto Valley, the existence of which is known only to a few Indians, a prospector goodnatedly who say they never told a lie, a Riverside Enterprise reporter saw a deposit of excellent glass sand and a factory is to be built which will make its own bottles and bottle-and market the beach from the spring. The latest witness declares that all the people who drink even to be at the battle of broth in a steepan, bring it in a pail, and pepper and salt it and serve with crackers.

Curious Changes of Flowers.

Many persons, though well acquainted with flowers, are unaware of the changes through which the plants pass from the time in four or five years before blooms, then it takes on the self colored or bicolor form, or, in some cases, it may change to clear or catalogue it with the harmless, rose-colored flowers, scrolling it in some cases either of those divisions. Then, at the second, or sometimes the next year, or to use or even years, it breaks into its true colors, and because what is termed "rectified."

Why the lilly should be an exception to the rule, is a question to be answered by those, and to have an almost exceptionally interesting and instructive. Perhaps, the practical floral sake of the botanist the sly and therefore of this, and no regret. The cosmog. It is said that in the whole range and history of the plants there is no analogy to this phenomenon.

The Immaculate Heart of Mary.

The fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the Archconfraternity of the Immaculate Heart of Mary was recently celebrated in the Church of Notre Dame of Victoires, Paris. There it was founded by Father Dumas, a Lazarist, fifteen years ago, and year it has extended itself further and further, and now it has over 2 000 branches, and counts more than 25,000,000 members. The annals of the association record innumerable instances of the Blessed Virgin under the intercession of the Blessed Virgin under the title of Our Lady of Victory, the first of which is perhaps the most wondrous—viz., the miraculous preservation of Notre Dame of Victory, as the Abbe Desgenettes said to the Pope, when he was about to leave Paris to meet to repair, and which draws pilgrims from every part of Christendom.

FILIPPE'S ACADEMY OF LANGUAGES
320 POST ST.
PROF. De FILIPPE, graduate of the Academies of Paris and Madrid, recommends his institution for the study of languages, by the easy, natural, and rational method, using no books, translations, nor tedious grammatical rules. Pupils can begin to speak the language they study from the first lesson, the opportunity to practice Five Hours and Twenty Lessons for Ten Dollars. Classes for beginners, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings. Private lessons at any hour. Prof. De Filippe's method of the system of teaching the Spanish Language, combining rapidity with thoroughness, has gained numerous testimonials from the most distinguished professors of the Universities of Paris, Madrid, Salamanca, Heidelberg, Berlin, Vienna, etc. Terms: $5 Per month. Address, PROF. DE FILIPPE, 320 Post St., San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA'S CLARION CRY!
"Live and Let Live."
FRESH AND PALATABLE
GROCERIES
CONTRIBUTE MUCH TO THE
HEALTH AND HAPPINESS
Of Every Home.
Therefore Everybody Ought to know that
SBARBORO & CO.,
AT 531 OLD established place of Business,
531 Washington St.,
IS DECIDEDLY THE CHEAPEST PLACE
IN SAN FRANCISCO
Where residents of the MONITOR can purchase the Best
FAMILY GROCERIES
AT THE CHEAPEST PRICES.
The Old House Still Stands
Where—for more than a quarter of a Century—Tens of Thousands of Saving, Prudent and
ECONOMICAL HOUSEKEEPERS
HAVE SAVED
Hundreds of Dollars Yearly
BY JUST KNOWING
Where to Buy their Groceries.
Remember—therefore—that if you want
GENUINE GOOD GROCERIES,
The proper place to purchase them is at
SBARBORO & CO'S.,
531 WASHINGTON STREET
[Between Montgomery and Sansome.]
Compare these Prices
With any other House in the city, THEN CALL AND EXAMINE
OUR GOODS.
SUGARS
—AND—
COFFEE
Greatly Reduced.
FRESH MEALS & MILL RATES.
16 pounds Tapioca, $1
16 pounds Sago, $1
20 pounds Codfish, $1
14 pounds German Prunes, $1
10 pounds Dried Pears, $1
Star Ground Coffee, 20-25c. per lb
Fine Tea, (No Humbug) 50c per lb
Fine Jar Tea, 40 and 50c per lb
Family Mixed Tea, - 25c per lb
5-gallon can Benner Coal Oil, $1.00
50 lb. sack Salt 35c
Golden Syrup, 5 gall. kegs, - $1.75
20 pounds Canary Seed, $1
Flour from Old Wheat at Very Low Price.
And all other Goods Equal ly Cheap.
WINES AND LIQUORS
Claret, Zinfandel, gallon, from..... $ 75
Port, Sherry, Angelica, gallon..... $1 00
Sherry, Old, gallon..... $1 00
Port, Old, gallon..... $1 00
Old Tunic Bourbon, gallon..... $2 00
Old Dust Bourbon, gallon..... $4 00
Old Rye, gallon..... $2 00
Sweet Rye, gallon..... $2 00
Jamaica Rum, gallon..... $2 00
All orders promptly and on a fully filled and delivered to any part of the city, Oakland or Alameda free of charge
Country orders solicited and made a specialty and shipped free of charge.
Country Produce Exchanged!
SEND FOR OUR PRICE LIST
SBARBORO & CO.
R. SBARBORO, Manager.

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1888.

THOUGHTS FOR THINKERS

BY PHILIP SCHELL.

The Church.

The institution of the Church, like creation, was a free act of God's benevolence. It was an extraordinary, and for a time, a many work of mercy. The Church is the lig one of that city with gates of pearl, the crystal fountains, the unimagined splendors and ivory palaces, named the City of God, the New Jerusalem.

THE PARISH CHURCH.

The church, in the narrower sense of a place of worship, is the house of God, Who fills it with the visible glory of His presence. It is consecrated alone to His worship. We should enter the temple of God with mingled awe and veneration, for the place is indeed holy. We should pause at the very threshold and reverently bow, as we enter the sacred precincts for before us is a marvellous scene, which, if unveiled to our dull eyes, would cause us to fall down as did the Apostles on the Transfiguration Mount, and the boss had to be smoked out.

—The London and Northastern Railway has issued a circular to the principal judges of its American customers, "to institute no operations of importance."

—The Ohio cannery has 200 persons employed and it is unable to fill one-half of the orders it has received. Fifty thousand cans will be put up this season. Another cannery is to be established in a few days to secure the fruit that is going to waste in the country.

—Mr. Gladstone says that he really should like to live a while for two great subjects. The Reform Bill of Melanion Bill, and to convince my countrymen of the substantial identity between the theology of 18 cent and that of the third Tatanasus.

—Dr. Hunter said, by the doctors on the diseases with brought by his wife in England, is liable to penal servitude should he ever go back th re, and is to be indicted as a bigamist by the Public Prosecutor.

—The wholesale desertion in New York say that the influx of California fruits has not had any appreciable effect on either Eastern fruits or the foreign fruit. The reason is thought to be that the Americans are becoming more and more fond of eating fruit.

—The Savannah News, in announcing the completion of the Cocoa Mountain Hotel near Tuscini, refers to the construction as "one of the most marvelous pieces of civil engineering ever performed south of the South. The tunnel is 2 145 feet long, 16 feet wide, 14 feet 4 inches and 12 feet high.

—The Grecian and Italian navies have adopted a system of night signals by means down electric lights and it has been suggested by the Electrical Review that the system might usefully be used on some passenger steamships, especially in view of the fact that many of these vessels carry an incandescent electric lighting plant.

—Count Maurice Esterhazy has been put under guardianship to check his mad extravagances. He owns, free and clear, nine million acres, more than two thirds of the twenty-three acres of land in Hungary and has the title of Prince. He has spent thirty million without quitting his estate.

—The Archduke Leopold, the eldest member of the Hapsburg family, has been restored to imperial favor. He has been living about 12 years in a lunatic asylum, in the strait-jacket. He awakened Emperor Francis Joseph, his uncle, from his lethargy, by entering the Austrian Emperor's bedroom and shouting "Fire!"

—A box of firecrackers, cale 45 cents in Canada, has recently been imported, carefully packed and subdivided, all ready for the retail trade. A million of these boxes are now imported in this city for sale, and all sold. No doubt the same amount—say, 45 cents a million—Canadian—were packed away this year.

—The Czar's Government has determined to build a transcontinental road across Siberia, with a terminus on the Pacific Ocean. The whole length of the road is 5 000 five thousand miles, and it is estimated that it will cost 400 000 rubles

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY FOURTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1888.

JUDGE MAGUIRE'S MANY MISTAKES.

THIRD ARTICLE.

The fraudulent mixture which prompted the hireling Giraldus Cambrensis to accede to the request of King Henry II. of England, which the Abbé MacGeoghagan so fondly exposes, have also drawn down upon the head of that disreputable Welshman the just indignation of numerous other Irish historical writers.

Assuredly Judge Maguire could not have known the true character of Giraldus Cambrensis, or he would never have cited that pensioned libeller of the Irish people as a witness to the authenticity of the bogus Bull of Pope Adrian IV. Already we have shown the diabolical mendacity of Judge Maguire's principal witness against the Popes, upon the evidence of such inevitable testimony as that given by the Abbés MacGeoghagan, and now let us place on the witness stand of the Superior Court of San Francisco other trustworthy witnesses whose evidence will not only fully corroborate the truth told by Abbé MacGeoghagan, but some of whom go even to further extremes in their just condemnation of the brebis-taking calumniator of both the Pope and the Irish people, the stool pigeon of Henry the Second—Giraldus Cambrensis.

Speaking of the inhuman brood of bloodthirsty Welshmen whom the impulsive Irish traitor MacMurrough gathered around him in Wales, when he applied to King Henry II. of England for help to avert the threatened vengeance of the Irish people, Professor Martin A. O'Brennan, in the first volume of his Irish Antiquities, draws the following brief but graphic picture of the penitentiaries which adorned their character:

"Almost every history on Irish matters, even Wright's, (brought out by Talbot), has agreed that the cause of religion in Ireland, at that very time, [the time of Henry's invasion] did not require any reformation—and could not expect it from the allies of the adulterous, perjured Mac Murrough. Who were his first adherents in Wales? The Fitz Henrys, illegitimate sons of Henry I., and other children of Nesta, the concubine of the said Henry, viz. De Gros, Fitz-Gerald, Fitz-Stephen, the three De Barrys, the presence of his Honor James G. Maguire. Have is Thomas Mooney's testimony, as recorded on page 107-9-11 of his "History of Ireland":

"The man who stands conspicuous on the page of time, as the historian and traducer of Ireland, is Gerald Barry, commonly called Giraldus Cambrensis; he was the first stranger who undertook to write a history of Ireland. Giraldus was a Welsh priest, who followed the fortunes of his relatives and friends, in their invasion of Ireland, from 1185 to 1189. He was a bitter foe to the Irish, and a bitter libeller of them. He was the author of the celebrated Topographia Hibernia, or Irish geography, which was translated into English by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart. Giraldus was English, and a bitter enemy to the Irish, in church or government; and to support this representation, with a view to induce his Pope to join his cause, he employed Giraldus to write his book. The Pope of that epoch had much temporal power awarded to him by the nations of Europe. They were, by a kind of mutual consent, referred to as arbiters in all national or princely disputes. Their decisions were bowed to with implicit obedience by the whole Christian world. Hence the anxiety of Henry to procure a corrupt witness against Ireland, which Giraldus proved himself to be. It appeared that Henry obtained a clandestine bull from Pope Adrian, which (though the genuine one of this document has been reputed by O'Connell and others) conferred authority on Henry to invade Ireland, and force it into subjection to England, and, through the English monarch, more immediately than it had been, to the Pope. To sustain his (sic) Cambrensis wrote his "History of Ireland." He was only twice in Ireland, once with the adventurers under Strongbow, and the second time, with John, the son of Henry the Second, both visits not occupying more than eighteen months; he only saw about one third of the country; he, or his, direct proceed no further; he understood not the language of the people, to whom he was a sworn stranger, and could not, therefore, consult the records of their ancient archives; he was obliged to substitute invention, and tales, picked up after the manner of our modern travellers, for historical facts; he mixed only with the most common and illiterate, and took what he obtained from the lowest, he distorted and mixed up with the most rehearsed inventions of his own, representing the people as little better than barbarous, and little civilization by conquest a meritorious act. * * * * The "History of Ireland," written by this half-witted calumniator, represents the river Shannon as discharging itself into the North Sea, whereas it discharges itself into the South or Atlantic. He scarcely mentions who were the inhabitants of Ireland; as to the Sociolo Milesian, who were the peaceful possessors of it for two thousand years, he gives no account whatever, either of their government, laws, battles or invasions. It only indeed, there had been one hundred and eighty-one monarchs of this race before his time, but does not give us so much as their names.

Such was the authority on which the security of successive English monarchs was deprived Ireland of her two thousand years of literature and glory. The learned Abbé Mac Geoghagan, whom, in O'Reilly's translation, I have condensed some of the foregoing, adds, with great force, "Here not the Irish an equal right to complain of him, as Josephus (in his first book against Appion) complains of some Greek authors, who undertook to compose the history of the Jewish war, the destruction of Jerusalem, and captivity of the Jews, from hearsay, without having ever been in the country, or seen the things of which they wrote, and who, he said, improperly assumed to themselves the title of historians." * * * *

Men "grave and learned" have adopted, age after age, the false books of Cambrensis, have added to these falsehoods, and have piled them up with unblushing effrontery, as if they have been said research and fact places and easy charts by the British government; and the worst of it is, there are plenty of "grave and learned men," in our day, who prefer the self-same course in reference to unhappy Ireland, and who are rewarded by the self-same power that inspired, rewarded Cambrensis. The works of this false witness lay buried in obscurity for four hundred years, until republished by Hanmer, at Hartford, in 1607; and then was the same generation amazed at the impudence of Giraldus, confounded, and discredited falsehoods were reproduced by the host of calumnious liars, who grew up after the Reformation, and who methodically and unblushingly followed Cambrensis, building up their histories on his fictions; for the same motives that actuated Cambrensis, in the twelfth century, have impelled the pens of most of the English historians of Ireland since the Reformation. Hanmer, Campion, Spenser, Leland, Hume, are amongst the most conspicuous of the English defamers of Ireland; whilst it must be confessed, with deep humility, that Ireland has vomited forth traitors, who have undertaken, for English pay, to disparage and vilify the glorious, though oppressed, land that bore them.

We have other witnesses by whom we might also prove the contemptible, corrupt and untrustworthy character of Judge Maguire's chief witness, but we think it entirely unnecessary to call them into Court, as the evidence we have already adduced is sufficient to satisfy every unprejudiced person that neither Popes Adrian IV., Alexander III., nor the Irish people, were guilty of the crimes he charged against them. That Adrian never sent a Bull to King Henry II., bestowing Ireland upon him; Alexander III. never sent a Bull sanctioning it; nor were the Irish people the savages which this libellous hireling depicted them.

And now that we have torn the mask away from Judge Maguire's most treasured witness, and shown him up in all his naked deformity, we will turn our attention to the Bull itself, and unit week we will introduce to our first witness in defence of Popes Adrian and Alexander, his Eminence Cardinal Moran, whose learned essay upon that interesting historical question is purposely depreciated by the prejudiced author of "Ireland and the Pope," for the sole purpose of undermining its influence and predisposing Irish Catholic readers to reject its truthful statements.

The name of Cardinal Moran carries with it great weight. He is among the most ardent Irish patriots that ever wore a mitre. As an Irish annalist and student of Irish ecclesiastical history he has no equal in our day. He has made the question of the genuineness or the fraudulency of the suppose Bull of Pope Adrian to Henry II., the subject of close study for a number of years. His Eminence visited Rome frequently in order to search among the Vatican Archives for documents bearing on this great Irish Catholic question, and he spent much valuable time in compiling authorities which add great weight to his able argument, which, by the way, Judge Maguire superficially throws aside with the cut and caustic criticism that it is "a very ingenious but radically defective essay."

Notwithstanding Judge Maguire's opinion, however, our Catholic readers have sufficient intelligence to pursue, digest, and decide for themselves whether Cardinal Moran's able contribution in defence of the supposed criminals whom Judge Maguire has prejudged and condemned, is "defective essay" the author of "Ireland and the Pope" designates it, or an unanswerable argument in proof of the fact that Henry II. of England, and some of his courtiers, forged the so-called Bull of Pope Adrian IV. in order to frame for him and them an excuse for invading Ireland.

Judge Maguire's most prominent witness against the Popes:

"Gerald Barry (Cambrensis), Welshman by birth, monk by profession, Averse and apostate by nature, was the first British historian to deal with Anglo-Irish affairs. James A. Froude, Englishman by birth, Protestant by profession, bigot by nature by temperament and education, is the latest adventurer who has donned the cap of Cambrensis.

Such may be accurately described as the historian Inventor of England, bound to earn his prestige by praising his master through thick and thin, and baiting at no obstacle of rude face while doing so. The Welshman was commissioned by Henry II. to paint the Irish as a lawless, graceless, godless crew; so Gerald promptly reported that "their chief characteristic was treachery, thirst for blood, unbridled licentiousness, and inveterate detestation of order and rule"! Of the scribe who penned these words it has been said that he never spoke the truth, unless by accident."

A man whose moral character is so bad that "he never spoke the truth except by accident," is hardly up to the standard of historians who are worthy of belief. Cambrensis may be good enough authority for Judge Maguire, but we feel assured that Catholics must have more credible and respectable testimony before they will accept Judge Popes Adrian and Alexander guilty of having made over Ireland to the murderer of Thomas à Becket, on the testimony of a witness who has the reputation of "never having told the truth except by accident."

The next witness we will call in order to enlighten Judge Maguire upon the character of Cambrensis, is the celebrated Irish poet and historian Thomas Moore, who thus outlines the reasons which should impel all impartial-minded people in refusing to give credence to a single statement made by this mercenary maligner of both the Popes and the Irish people. "In estimating the value of Cambrensis' testimony," says Moore, on page 342 of the second volume of his "History of Ireland," "the character of the man himself ought to be taken into account; and, finding him so ready a believer and reporter of all sorts of physical marvels and monsters, we should consider whether a taste for the morally monstrous may not also have inspired his pen, and induced him in a similar manner, to suspect as well upon himself, perhaps, as his readers."

Such is the estimate which Thomas Moore places upon Judge Maguire's staunch witness. And now, let us introduce into the Superior Court of San Francisco the well-known history of Thomas Mooney, and liken the corrupt character of the Popes Giraldus Cambrensis, as described by him in the presence of his Honor James G. Maguire. Have is Thomas Mooney's testimony, as recorded on pages 107-9-11 of his "History of Ireland":

"The man who stands conspicuous on the page of time, as the historian and traducer of Ireland, is Gerald Barry, commonly called Giraldus Cambrensis; he was the first stranger who undertook to write a history of Ireland. Giraldus was a Welsh priest, who followed the fortunes of his relatives and friends, in their invasion of Ireland, from 1185 to 1189. He was a bitter foe to the Irish, and a bitter libeller of them. He was the author of the celebrated Topographia Hibernia, or Irish geography, which was translated into English by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart. Giraldus was English, and a bitter enemy to the Irish, in church or government; and to support this representation, with a view to induce his Pope to join his cause, he employed Giraldus to write his book. The Pope of that epoch had much temporal power awarded to him by the nations of Europe. They were, by a kind of mutual consent, referred to as arbiters in all national or princely disputes. Their decisions were bowed to with implicit obedience by the whole Christian world. Hence the anxiety of Henry to procure a corrupt witness against Ireland, which Giraldus proved himself to be. It appeared that Henry obtained a clandestine bull from Pope Adrian, which (though the genuine one of this document has been reputed by O'Connell and others) conferred authority on Henry to invade Ireland, and force it into subjection to England, and, through the English monarch, more immediately than it had been, to the Pope. To sustain his (sic) Cambrensis wrote his "History of Ireland." He was only twice in Ireland, once with the adventurers under Strongbow, and the second time, with John, the son of Henry the Second, both visits not occupying more than eighteen months; he only saw about one third of the country; he, or his, direct proceed no further; he understood not the language of the people, to whom he was a sworn stranger, and could not, therefore, consult the records of their ancient archives; he was obliged to substitute invention, and tales, picked up after the manner of our modern travellers, for historical facts; he mixed only with the most common and illiterate, and took what he obtained from the lowest, he distorted and mixed up with the most rehearsed inventions of his own, representing the people as little better than barbarous, and little civilization by conquest a meritorious act. * * * * The "History of Ireland," written by this half-witted calumniator, represents the river Shannon as discharging itself into the North Sea, whereas it discharges itself into the South or Atlantic. He scarcely mentions who were the inhabitants of Ireland; as to the Sociolo Milesian, who were the peaceful possessors of it for two thousand years, he gives no account whatever, either of their government, laws, battles or invasions. It only indeed, there had been one hundred and eighty-one monarchs of this race before his time, but does not give us so much as their names.

Such was the authority on which the security of successive English monarchs was deprived Ireland of her two thousand years of literature and glory. The learned Abbé Mac Geoghagan, whom, in O'Reilly's translation, I have condensed some of the foregoing, adds, with great force, "Here not the Irish an equal right to complain of him, as Josephus (in his first book against Appion) complains of some Greek authors, who undertook to compose the history of the Jewish war, the destruction of Jerusalem, and captivity of the Jews, from hearsay, without having ever been in the country, or seen the things of which they wrote, and who, he said, improperly assumed to themselves the title of historians." * * * *

The next witness whom we shall produce in order to further illustrate the infamous character of Giraldus Cambrensis, is Mr. John J. Clancy, whose work, "Ireland: As She Is, As She Has Been, and as She Ought to Be," Judge Maguire no doubt is familiar with. In the opening of the second chapter of that work, the author alludes to Giraldus Cambrensis as "the lying Welshman," and, in another portion of the volume, he thus portrays the vile character of Judge Maguire's most prominent witness against the Popes:

"Gerald Barry (Cambrensis), Welshman by birth, monk by profession, Averse and apostate by nature, was the first British historian to deal with Anglo-Irish affairs. James A. Froude, Englishman by birth, Protestant by profession, bigot by nature by temperament and education, is the latest adventurer who has donned the cap of Cambrensis.

Such may be accurately described as the historian Inventor of England, bound to earn his prestige by praising his master through thick and thin, and baiting at no obstacle of rude face while doing so. The Welshman was commissioned by Henry II. to paint the Irish as a lawless, graceless, godless crew; so Gerald promptly reported that "their chief characteristic was treachery, thirst for blood, unbridled licentiousness, and inveterate detestation of order and rule"! Of the scribe who penned these words it has been said that he never spoke the truth, unless by accident."

A man whose moral character is so bad that "he never spoke the truth except by accident," is hardly up to the standard of historians who are worthy of belief. Cambrensis may be good enough authority for Judge Maguire, but we feel assured that Catholics must have more credible and respectable testimony before they will accept Popes Adrian and Alexander guilty of having made over Ireland to the murderer of Thomas à Becket, on the testimony of a witness who has the reputation of "never having told the truth except by accident."

The next witness we will call in order to enlighten Judge Maguire upon the character of Cambrensis, is the celebrated Irish poet and historian Thomas Moore, who thus outlines the reasons which should impel all impartial-minded people in refusing to give credence to a single statement made by this mercenary maligner of both the Popes and the Irish people. "In estimating the value of Cambrensis' testimony," says Moore, on page 342 of the second volume of his "History of Ireland," "the character of the man himself ought to be taken into account; and, finding him so ready a believer and reporter of all sorts of physical marvels and monsters, we should consider whether a taste for the morally monstrous may not also have inspired his pen, and induced him in a similar manner, to suspect as well upon himself, perhaps, as his readers."

Such is the estimate which Thomas Moore places upon Judge Maguire's staunch witness. And now, let us introduce into the Superior Court of San Francisco the well-known history of Thomas Mooney, and liken the corrupt character of the Popes Giraldus Cambrensis, as described by him in the presence of his Honor James G. Maguire. Have is Thomas Mooney's testimony, as recorded on pages 107-9-11 of his "History of Ireland":

"The man who stands conspicuous on the page of time, as the historian and traducer of Ireland, is Gerald Barry, commonly called Giraldus Cambrensis; he was the first stranger who undertook to write a history of Ireland. Giraldus was a Welsh priest, who followed the fortunes of his relatives and friends, in their invasion of Ireland, from 1185 to 1189. He was a bitter foe to the Irish, and a bitter libeller of them. He was the author of the celebrated Topographia Hibernia, or Irish geography, which was translated into English by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart. Giraldus was English, and a bitter enemy to the Irish, in church or government; and to support this representation, with a view to induce his Pope to join his cause, he employed Giraldus to write his book. The Pope of that epoch had much temporal power awarded to him by the nations of Europe. They were, by a kind of mutual consent, referred to as arbiters in all national or princely disputes. Their decisions were bowed to with implicit obedience by the whole Christian world. Hence the anxiety of Henry to procure a corrupt witness against Ireland, which Giraldus proved himself to be. It appeared that Henry obtained a clandestine bull from Pope Adrian, which (though the genuine one of this document has been reputed by O'Connell and others) conferred authority on Henry to invade Ireland, and force it into subjection to England, and, through the English monarch, more immediately than it had been, to the Pope. To sustain his (sic) Cambrensis wrote his "History of Ireland." He was only twice in Ireland, once with the adventurers under Strongbow, and the second time, with John, the son of Henry the Second, both visits not occupying more than eighteen months; he only saw about one third of the country; he, or his, direct proceed no further; he understood not the language of the people, to whom he was a sworn stranger, and could not, therefore, consult the records of their ancient archives; he was obliged to substitute invention, and tales, picked up after the manner of our modern travellers, for historical facts; he mixed only with the most common and illiterate, and took what he obtained from the lowest, he distorted and mixed up with the most rehearsed inventions of his own, representing the people as little better than barbarous, and little civilization by conquest a meritorious act. * * * * The "History of Ireland," written by this half-witted calumniator, represents the river Shannon as discharging itself into the North Sea, whereas it discharges itself into the South or Atlantic. He scarcely mentions who were the inhabitants of Ireland; as to the Sociolo Milesian, who were the peaceful possessors of it for two thousand years, he gives no account whatever, either of their government, laws, battles or invasions. It only indeed, there had been one hundred and eighty-one monarchs of this race before his time, but does not give us so much as their names.

Such was the authority on which the security of successive English monarchs was deprived Ireland of her two thousand years of literature and glory. The learned Abbé Mac Geoghagan, whom, in O'Reilly's translation, I have condensed some of the foregoing, adds, with great force, "Here not the Irish an equal right to complain of him, as Josephus (in his first book against Appion) complains of some Greek authors, who undertook to compose the history of the Jewish war, the destruction of Jerusalem, and captivity of the Jews, from hearsay, without having ever been in the country, or seen the things of which they wrote, and who, he said, improperly assumed to themselves the title of historians." * * * *

Men "grave and learned" have adopted, age after age, the falsehoods of Cambrensis, have added to these falsehoods, and have piled them up with unblushing effrontery, as if they have been said research and fact places and easy charts by the British government; and the worst of it is, there are plenty of "grave and learned men," in our day, who prefer the self-same course in reference to unhappy Ireland, and who are rewarded by the self-same power that inspired, rewarded Cambrensis. The works of this false witness lay buried in obscurity for four hundred years, until republished by Hanmer, at Hartford, in 1607; and then was the same generation amazed at the impudence of Giraldus, confounded, and discredited falsehoods were reproduced by the host of calumnious liars, who grew up after the Reformation,

A Great Jesuit Missionary Dead.

Among the multitude of remarkable Missionary Priests who formed the grand army of third in spreading the Faith all over the United States, in converting the unenlightened, winning back wayward, straying sheep, and building up the fire of faith in souls where it had grown cold, there is no name more familiar to Catholics all over America than that of Rev. FRANCIS NAVIER WEYNZEN, D. D., who died on the 29th ult. at the House of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus in Cincinnati, in the 82nd year of his age.

This illustrious son of St. Ignatius was born of a highly influential family, in the city of Marburg, Austria, in the year 1805. When but a boy his parents removed to Vienna, where young WEYNZEN became quite a favorite with the royal family. After receiving his education at private schools, he entered the University of Vienna, where he made his Divinity course, and could not, therefore, consult the records of their ancient archives; he was obliged to substitute invention, and tales, picked up after the manner of our modern travellers, for historical facts; he mixed only with the most common and illiterate, and took what he obtained from the lowest, he distorted and mixed up with the most rehearsed inventions of his own, representing the people as little better than barbarous, and little civilization by conquest a meritorious act. * * * * The "History of Ireland," written by this half-witted calumniator, represents the river Shannon as discharging itself into the North Sea, whereas it discharges itself into the South or Atlantic. He scarcely mentions who were the inhabitants of Ireland; as to the Sociolo Milesian, who were the peaceful possessors of it for two thousand years, he gives no account whatever, either of their government, laws, battles or invasions. It only indeed, there had been one hundred and eighty-one monarchs of this race before his time, but does not give us so much as their names.

Such was the authority on which the security of successive English monarchs was deprived Ireland of her two thousand years of literature and glory. The learned Abbé Mac Geoghagan, whom, in O'Reilly's translation, I have condensed some of the foregoing, adds, with great force, "Here not the Irish an equal right to complain of him, as Josephus (in his first book against Appion) complains of some Greek authors, who undertook to compose the history of the Jewish war, the destruction of Jerusalem, and captivity of the Jews, from hearsay, without having ever been in the country, or seen the things of which they wrote, and who, he said, improperly assumed to themselves the title of historians." * * * *

Men "grave and learned" have adopted, age after age, the falsehoods of Cambrensis, have added to these falsehoods, and have piled them up with unblushing effrontery, as if they have been said research and fact places and easy charts by the British government; and the worst of it is, there are plenty of "grave and learned men," in our day, who prefer the self-same course in reference to unhappy Ireland, and who are rewarded by the self-same power that inspired, rewarded Cambrensis. The works of this false witness lay buried in obscurity for four hundred years, until republished by Hanmer, at Hartford, in 1607; and then was the same generation amazed at the impudence of Giraldus, confounded, and discredited falsehoods were reproduced by the host of calumnious liars, who grew up after the Reformation,

Divorces in California.

Among the new duties imposed upon the Bureau of Labor in Washington City, by the "progress" of this "enlightened" age, is the collection of statistics from every State in the Union showing the number of Divorces granted in each county in the United States during the twenty years that intervened between 1867 and 1887. This new feature in census reports is evidence of complication at present, and, when completed, promises to present an array of Divorce figures that will astonish—if not alarm—Protestants themselves, as it is to Protestantism we owe this Christian sheughlessness, invention of his Satanic Majesty. Destruction of the family is one of Satan's most diabolical forces in destroying Christian faith, and, at the rate which Divorces are being granted in every section of the United States, it will be but a short time are Christian marriage will be a lost virtue among the non-Catholic element of society.

Sufficient facts concerning Divorce have been collected to show that in twenty years 8,765 Divorces were granted in Chicago; 4,717 in New York; 4,867 in San Francisco and 1,692 in Philadelphia. These figures demonstrate the appalling fact that in these four cities alone 19,981 Divorces were granted in twenty years. Nearly forty thousand men and women were thus separated in order to form fresh alliances which they broke in the same way, and thus increased the legalized Polygamy which is the prominent leprosy of society in this age and in this country.

To the credit of California be it said that it is not by any means the worst State in the Union as far as the corrupting vice of Divorce is concerned. From the returns it appears that the several counties in the golden State present the following Divorce record for the twenty years ending last December:

Alameda 153, Alpine 142, Amador 82, Contra Costa 1, Colusa 128, Eldorado 127, Kern 66, Lake 40, Lassen 61, Los Angeles 569, Mendocino 133, Marin 162, Mariposa 41, Merced 89, Monterey 13, Mono 51, Napa 95, Nevada 148, Placer 127, Sacramento 941, Santa Barbara 71, Santa Clara 410, Santa Cruz 157, San Diego 76, San Joaquin 1,207, San Luis Obispo 324, San Mateo 86, Shasta 77, Solano 145, Sutter 27, Tehama 15, Tulare 137, Tuolumne 62, Ventura 57, Yolo 121, Yuba 180.

These figures demonstrate the fact that 9,566 Divorces occurred in this State during the past twenty years, and that 19,132 men and women were contributed by the Courts of California to swells swelling the Filthy stream of immorality which goes rushing through the vicious influence of Divorce laws.

There is much food for thought in these figures, and unless something is done to check the Divorce Evil, Christianity will suffer much through the sins of its Protestant professors.

The Pope and Columbus.

Some time ago a Protestant Boston journal, in a very tender pull that would tickle a Catholic, the following was forwarded by his Holiness Pope Leo XIII: "So far as Columbus is concerned, writes the Holy Father, "the excellence of his virtue and the abundance of benefits conferred by him upon the human race, will ever be held such a high and honored place in the annals of history that very few of humanity's benefactors can be placed before him. To us his memory is particular; dear, because he undertook perilous voyages, subjected himself to herculean labors, and exposed himself to the risk of perils, in order that they might spread the knowledge of the true God among the innumerable children of men living in darkness and in the shadow of death. Inserting in justice to the character of this wonderful man, and, owing to see the present generation emulate his zeal and many virtues, we heartily endorse the request of our venerable brother, the Archbishop of Baltimore, in his letter to us, that a statue be erected in our Capitol, and that the United States according to the Baltimore Catechism, be placed under the patronage of the Immaculate Conception." By Rev. S. Smith, Redemptorist, New York. Cardinal and Chicago Rev. Rev. Rev.

After fifteen years of literary labor, great research and unremitting study, Rev. S. B. Smith has the satisfaction of labelling the Catholic world with a work which will enable the Catholic to all portions of the civilized universe. Approbation and encouragement by the Supreme Pontiff has enabled the Barcelona committee to bring their praise and patriotic undertaking to a successful close.

—Alluding to the condition of the Tory party in England, the Cork Examiner says: "The political condition in England is present in peculiar enough. The Tories are in office but they are simply without power; they depend on the Liberal Unionists for their support in order to remain in office. On a division on any portion of the Government England never favors Coalitions, and the common people hate those who parade and leaders who profess clearly-defined principles. Black and White, ignoring or sinking their principles to preserve Power, do not command enthusiastic support from the ordinary supporters of the Black and White party. A Government of expediency has ever been a weak government. Whether what number of votes it was able to secure in the House of Commons. It might drag along for a number of years—such things have occurred in the past, if a capable and energetic Opposition were not to be faced; but when opportunity offers, it will be a powerful following determinedly assault the combination it cannot last for long.

—The Irish correspondent of an English paper thus alludes to Archbishop Ireland's visit to the great patriotic Prelate of Dublin: "The Archbishop of San Francisco is very here at present. He is the guest of the Archbishop of Dublin, and he is delighted to understand the question fully to study the Irish question. The Archbishop of Dublin has spoken to the anti Irish newspapers, and it was officially sent, he said us, that the Irish people are not the savages they are said to be, and that the matter was under investigation by the Pope. The Irish people have been concerned—one in direct contradiction with the newspaper, the other an official which proves that it is difficult to believe the Irish people, but it difficult to believe the Irish people, but it difficult to believe the Irish people, but it seek to know what was and is Christianity before and outside of the sacred books; and we have the same evidence for the oral tradition of the Faith as we have for the New Testament itself. Both alike were in the custody of the Church; both are delivered to us by the same witness and on the same evidence. To reject either, is logically to reject both. Happily men are not saved by logic, but by faith. The millions of souls in all ages have believed by inheritance of truth Divinely guarded and delivered to them. They have no need of lay oral analysis. They have believed from their childhood. Neither children nor those who infectious aspergunt are logicians. It is the penance of the doubter and the sceptic to begin by doubt and inheritance. It is a hard penance! his the suffering of those who eternal sin, like the suffering of those who eternal, by debate on "predestination, free will, fate."

CARDINAL MANNING.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

BETWEEN THE DEATH OF ST. JOHN and the mature lifetime of St. Irenæus fifty years elapsed. St. Polycarp was disciple of St. John, St. Irenæus was a disciple of St. Polycarp. The Gospel of St. John and the mind of St. Irenæus had only one intermediate intelligence, in contact with each. It would be an affectation of minute criticism to trace the doctrine of St. Irenæus as a deduction from the doctrine of St. Polycarp, or the doctrine of St. Polycarp as a deduction from the doctrine of St. John. Moreover, St. John ruled the Church at Ephesus, St. Polycarp was born in Asia Minor about the year a. 120—that, twenty years after St. John's death, when the Church in Asia Minor was still full of the light of his living, and of the memory of his voice. Let us have known the way of our mother-faith, those through whom the Gospel came to us which, indeed, they then preached, but, afterwards, by the will of God, delivered to us in Scriptures, the future foundation and pillar of our Faith. It is not lawful to say that they preached before they had perfect knowledge, as some dare to affirm, boasting themselves to be correctors of the Apostles. For after our Lord rose from the dead, and when they had been clothed with the power of the Holy Ghost, who came upon them from on high, they were filled with all truths, and had knowledge that was perfect. In chapter 8, he adds that, "When they are referred out of Scripture, they turn and accuse the Scriptures as erroneous, unauthoritative, and of various readings, so that the truth cannot be known by those who do not know tradition"—that is, that—"that tradition which we challenge them to come to the tradition of the Apostles, which is in custody of the succession of Presbyters in the Church; they turn against tradition, saying that they are not only wiser than the Presbyters, but even the Apostles, and have found the truth. It therefore comes to pass that they will not agree either with the Scriptures or with tradition." (Ibid. c. 10) "Therefore, all who desire to know the truth should look to the tradition of the Apostles, which is manifest in all the world and in all the Church. We are able to count up the Bishops who were instituted in the Church by the Apostles and their successors to our day. They never taught nor knew such things as these men really assert." "But as it would be too long to reckon up such as this in successors the successions of all the Churches, we point to the tradition of the greatest, most ancient Church, known to all, founded and constituted in Rome by the two glorious Apostles Peter and Paul, and to the faith preached to all men, coming down to us by the succession of Bishops, thereby confounding all those who, in any way, by self pleasing, or vain glory, or blindness, or an evil mind, teach as they ought not. For with this Church, by reason of its greater principality, it is necessary that all churches should agree; that is, the faithful, wheresoever they be, for in that Church the tradition of the Apostles has been preserved."

NO CONSENT NEED BE MADE on the words the "greater principality," which have been perverted by every anti-Catholic writer from the time they were written to this day. But if anyone will compare them with the words of St. Peter to Columbanus (chap. 1. 18), describing the primacy of the Head of the Church to herein it will appear almost certain that the original Greek of S. Irenæus, which is unfortunately lost, contained some word which signifies primacy. However this may be, St. Irenæus goes on: "The blessed Apostles, having founded and instructed the Church, gave in charge the Episcopate, for the administration of the same, to Linus. (Of this Linus, Paul, in his Epistle to Timothy, makes mention. To him succeeded Anacletus, and after him, the third place from the Apostles, Clement succeeded the Episcopate, he who saw the Apostles themselves and conferred with them, while as yet he had the preaching of the Apostles in his ears and the tradition before his eyes; and not he only, but many who had been taught by the Apostles also survived. In the time of this Clement, when no little dissension had arisen among the brethren in Corinth, the Church in Rome wrote very powerful letters potentiores litteras to the Corinthians, recalling them to union, renewing their faith, and declaring the tradition which it had so short a time ago received from the Apostles." These letters of St. Clement are well known, but have lately become more valuable and complete by the discovery of fragments published in a new edition by Lightfoot. In these fragments there is a form of authority fully explaining the words of St. Irenæus. He then traces the succession of the Bishops of Rome to his own day, and adds: "This demonstration is complete to show that it is one and the same life giving faith which has been preserved in the Church from the Apostles until now, and is handed down in truth." "Polycarp was not only taught by the Apostles and conversed with many of those who had seen our Lord, but he was also constituted by the Apostles in Asia to be Bishop in the Church of Smyrna. We also saw him in our early youth, for he lived long, and when very old departed from this life most gloriously and nobly by martyrdom. He ever taught that what he had learned from the Apostles, and what the Church had delivered, those things only are true." In the fourth chapter,

OF FAITH ALL ONES OUGHT TO SAY, "Since, then, there are such proofs (of the faith), the truth is no longer to be sought in among others, which it is easy to receive from the Church, inasmuch as the Apostles laid up all truth in fullness in a rich depository, that all who will may receive from it the water of life." "Hot what the Apostles had not left in the Scriptures: ought we not to follow the order of tradition, which they gave in charge to them to whom they intrusted the Churches? To which order (of tradition) many barbarous nations yield assent, who believe in Christ without paper or ink, having salvation written by the Spirit in their hearts, and diligently holding the ancient tradition." In the twenty-sixth chapter of the same book he says: "Therefore, it is our duty to obey the Presbyters who are in the Church, who have succession from the Apostles, as we have already shown; who along with the succession of the episcopate have the charisma veritatis certum, according to the Father's good pleasure." I have quoted these passages at length, not so much as proofs of the Catholic Faith as to show the identity of the Church at its outset with the Church before our eyes at 1 is hour, proving that the acorn has grown into its oak, or, if you will, the identity of the Church at this hour with the Church of the Apostolic mission. These passages show the episcopate, its second principality, its succession, its custody of the faith, its subsequent receiver and guardianship of the Scriptures, its Divine traditions, its charisma or Divine assistance by which its perpetuity is assured, its succession of the Apostles. This is almost verbally, after eighteen hundred years, the decree of the Vatican Council: Perfectio et fides scriptorum, depositorum charisma

BUT ST. IRENÆUS DRAWS OUT IN FULL the Church of this day. He shows the parallel of the first creation, and the second, of the first Adam and the second, of the analogy between the Incarnation or Spiritual body, and the Church or mystical body of Christ. He says:

"Our faith we received from the Church, and guard it . . . as an excellent gift in a noble vessel, always full of youth, and making youthful the vessel itself in which it is. For this gift of God is intrusted to the Church, as the breath of life (vivificatio) to the First man, so this end, that all the members partaking of it might be quickened with life. And thus the communication of Christ is imparted; that is, the Holy Ghost, the earnest of incorruption, the confirmation of the faith, the way of ascent to God. For in the Church (St. Paul says) God placed Apostles, Prophets, Doctors, and all other operations of the Spirit, of which none participate who do not come to the Church, thereby depriving themselves of life by a perverse mind and worse deeds. For where the Church is, there is the Spirit of God, and where the Spirit of God is, there is the Church, and all grace. But the Spirit is truth. Wherefore, they who do not partake of Him (the Spirit), and are not nourished from life at the breast of the mother (the Church), do not receive of the most pure fountain which proceeds from the Body of Christ, but dig out for themselves broken goods from the foulest pits of the earth, and drink putrid water mixed with mire, because they flee from the faith of the Church, lest they be made to know nothing."

Again he says

"The Church, scattered throughout all the world, even unto the ends of the earth, received from the Apostles and their disciples the faith in one God the Father Almighty, that made the heaven and the earth and the seas, and all things that are in them," &c.

BE THEN SAVED BEFORE THE DOCTRINE of the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation, the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, and His coming again to raise all men, to judge men and angels, and to give sentence of condemnation or of life everlasting. How much soever the language may vary from other forms, such is the substance of the Baptismal Creed. He then adds.

"The Church having received this preaching and this faith, as we have said before, although in be scattered throughout the whole world, carefully preserves it, dwelling as in one habitation, and believes alike in these (doctrines) as though she had one soul and the same heart; and in strict accord, as through she had one mouth, proclaims and teaches, and delivers onward these things. And although there be many diverse languages in the world, yet the power of the tradition is one and the same. And neither do the churches planted in Germany believe otherwise, or otherwise deliver (the faith) nor those in Iberia, nor among the Celtic, nor in the East, nor in Egypt, nor in Libya, nor those that are planted in the middle. But as the sun, which is God's creature, in all the world is one and the same, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and lightened all men that are willing to come to the knowledge of the truth. And neither will any ruler of the Church though be he mighty in the utterance of truth, teach otherwise than this (for no man is above the master, nor will he that is weak in the same diminish from the tradition; for the faith being one and the same, he that is able to say most of it hath nothing over, and he that is able to say least hath no lack."

BUT, IRENÆUS, THEN, the Church was "the irrefragable witness of its own legation." When did it cease so to be? It would be easy to multiply quotations from Tertullian (a. c. 200, from St. Cyprian a. c. 250, from St. Augustine and Optatus in a. c. 350, from St. Leo in a. c. 450, all of which are on the same tradition of the faith in the Church, the custody of Scripture, the Divine assistance in its discharge. But I refrain from doing so because I should have to write not an article but a book. Any Catholic theology will give the passages which are now before me; or one may look as the Lex Orandi of Prosper of Aquitaine will suffice to show the continuity and identity of the tradition of St. Irenæus and the tradition of the Church, as it is, which the universal church last declared the immutable faith and its own legation to mankind. The world wide testimony of the Catholic Church is a sufficient witness to prove the coming of the Incarnate Son to redeem mankind, and return to His Father; it is also sufficient to prove the advent of the Holy Ghost to abide with the Church. The work of the Son in this world was accomplished by His Divine acts and facts of His three and thirty years of life, death, Resurrection, and Ascension. The office of the Holy Ghost is perpetual, not only as fulfilmentator and Sanctifier of all who be holy, but also as the Life and Guide of the Catholic Church. I may quote now the words of the Founder of the Church: "It is expedient for you that I go: for if I go, the Paraclete will not come to you; but if I go, I will send Him to you." "I will ask the Father, and He shall give you another Paraclete, that He may abide with you forever. . . . The Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it sees Him not nor knoweth Him; but you shall know Him, because He shall abide with you and shall be in you."

IT CAN'T BE THAT APOSTLE TO THE GENTILES describes the Church as a body of which the Head is in heaven, and the Author of life is the defectible life abiding in it as His temple. Therefore the words, "He that heareth you heareth Me." This could not be if the Church of the Apostles had been only human. Or Divine guidance was attached to the office they born. They were, therefore also judges of right and wrong, and teachers by Divine guidance of the truth. But the presence and guidance of the Spirit of Truth is as full at this day as when St. Irenæus wrote. As the Churches then were witnesses, judges, and teachers, so is the Church at this hour a world-wide witness, an unerring judge and teacher, divinely guided and guarded in the truth. It is therefore not only a human and historical, but a Divine witness. This is the chief Divine truth which the last three hundred years have disassembled. Modern Christianity believes in the one advent of the Redeemer, but rejects the full and personal advent of the Holy Ghost. And yet the same evidence proves both. The Christianity of reformers always rejected the Church, because they reject the fulfil, or the personal advent of the Holy Ghost. They deny that there is any infallible teacher among men, and disbelieve the return to the types and shadows of the Law before the Incarnation, when the Head was not yet manifested, and the Holy Ghost did not as yet exist

BUT IRENÆUS GOES ONE STEP FAR, "I admit your description of the Church as it is now and as it was in the days of St. Irenæus; but the religious institutions of which you have said nothing were signs of decline, disorder, superstition, formalization." I will answer by a question—was not this foretold? Was not the Church to be a field of wheat and tares growing together till the harvest at the end of the world? There were Cathari of old, and Puritans since, impatient at the patience of God in bearing with the perversities and corruptions of the human intellect and will. The Church, like its Head in heaven, is both human and divine. "He was crucified in weakness," the Church was "the irrefragable witness of its own legation." When did it cease so to be? It would be easy to multiply quotations from Tertullian (a. c. 200, from St. Cyprian a. c. 250, from St. Augustine and Optatus in a. c. 350, from St. Leo in a. c. 450, all of which are on the same tradition of the faith in the Church, the custody of Scripture, the Divine assistance in its discharge. But I refrain from doing so because I should have to write not an article but a book. Any Catholic theology will give the passages which are now before me; or one may look as the Lex Orandi of Prosper of Aquitaine will suffice to show the continuity and identity of the tradition of St. Irenæus and the tradition of the Church, as it is, which the universal church last declared the immutable faith and its own legation to mankind. The world wide testimony of the Catholic Church is a sufficient witness to prove the coming of the Incarnate Son to redeem mankind, and return to His Father; it is also sufficient to prove the advent of the Holy Ghost to abide with the Church. The work of the Son in this world was accomplished by His Divine acts and facts of His three and thirty years of life, death, Resurrection, and Ascension. The office of the Holy Ghost is perpetual, not only as fulfilmentator and Sanctifier of all who be holy, but also as the Life and Guide of the Catholic Church. I may quote now the words of the Founder of the Church: "It is expedient for you that I go: for if I go, the Paraclete will not come to you; but if I go, I will send Him to you." "I will ask the Father, and He shall give you another Paraclete, that He may abide with you forever. . . . The Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it sees Him not nor knoweth Him; but you shall know Him, because He shall abide with you and shall be in you."

IT CAN'T BE THAT APOSTLE TO THE GENTILES describes the Church as a body of which the Head is in heaven, and the Author of life is the defectible life abiding in it as His temple. Therefore the words, "He that heareth you heareth Me." This could not be if the Church of the Apostles had been only human. or Divine guidance was attached to the office they born. They were, therefore also judges of right and wrong, and teachers by Divine guidance of the truth. But the presence and guidance of the Spirit of Truth is as full at this day as when St. Irenæus wrote. As the Churches then were witnesses, judges, and teachers, so is the Church at this hour a world-wide witness, an unerring judge and teacher, divinely guided and guarded in the truth. It is therefore not only a human and historical, but a Divine witness. This is the chief Divine truth which the last three hundred years have disassembled. Modern Christianity believes in the one advent of the Redeemer, but rejects the full and personal advent of the Holy Ghost. And yet the same evidence proves both. The Christianity of reformers always rejected the Church, because they reject the fulfil, or the personal advent of the Holy Ghost. They deny that there is any infallible teacher among men, and disbelieve the return to the types and shadows of the Law before the Incarnation, when the Head was not yet manifested, and the Holy Ghost did not as yet exist

BUT IRENÆUS GOES ONE STEP FAR, "I admit your description of the Church as it is now and as it was in the days of St. Irenæus; but the religious institutions of which you have said nothing were signs of declension, disorder, superstition, formalization." I will answer by a question—was not this foretold? Was not the Church to be a field of wheat and tares growing together till the harvest at the end of the world? There were Cathari of old, and Puritans since, impatient at the patience of God in bearing with the perversities and corruptions of the human intellect and will. The Church, like its Head in heaven, is both human and divine. "He was crucified in weakness,"

THE WEEK'S NEWS
FROM IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.

On the 25th ult. the Cushendall branch of the Antrim railway was opened for passenger traffic as far as Parkmore, about 14 miles from Ballymena. Hitherto nothing but mineral trains have been running between Ballymena and Parkmore, the remainder of Glenariff through which the line passes, all walking in fine weather. This extension of the railway will be a great boon to the people of Glenariff, which is a highly romantic part of the country, and is visited yearly by hundreds to hunting visiting the glens and waterfalls of Glenariff at Cushendall, which is the terminus of the railway. The extension of the line has been long delayed, and will meet with general approval.

Clare.

Such a destructive deluge of rain has not been witnessed in West Clare for a quarter of a century as was experienced on the night of the 25th ult. All the streams have been bankfull for several second, and large quantities of hay in meadow cocks have been carried away. In Ennis the principal streets were for some hours flooded, and many were in danger of drowning. The meadows and crops have been held in vast tracts. The amount of damage done to the fodder and crops is incalculable in this country, as testified by the various reports.

Cork.

An election scene very unusual circumstances occurred in Mallow on Saturday. A woman, Mrs. Hayes, was elected a town commissioner. The election was contested by Mr. Hayes, who, in the interest of his wife, canvassed the town, and, after the poll had closed in the school-house, called on the people to cheer for Mrs. Hayes, which they did with a will. The result was that the Nationalists, who had expected a walkover, were defeated by a majority of 29 votes. Mr. Hayes, who is a Nationalist, and who was defeated at the last election by a majority of 12, was the chairman of the Mallow Commissioners for the last year.

Limerick.

On the 21st ult., at the Croghan Court, Ballyhoura, Mr. Hickey held a farm of 26 acres from Mrs. Thomas, who is being sued with a decree of the land court, with the exception of two small fields, which he had let to a Mr. Michael Ryan, who, when coming to the farm, was met by Mr. Hickey, John Thomas, and three demoralized men from Mrs. Thomas's farm, who had taken the field, Mr. Hickey, and he brought an eyewitness, who swore that Mr. Ryan was knocked down, and, after a fierce struggle, Mr. Hickey was forced to leave the field, and Mr. Ryan was left in possession. Mr. Hickey had to be carried home, and was disabled for some time. Mr. Hickey has been twice very badly used by the Croghan Court, and the cause of hell shall not prevail against it." "As the Father hath sent Me, I also send you." "I dwell in you, as My Father hath disposed to Me, a kingdom." "All power in heaven and earth is given unto Me. Go, therefore, and teach all nations." "He that heareth you heareth Me." "I will be with you always, even until the end of the world."

THAT THE PLAN OF PENTECOST were accomplished they were all together in one place, and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a mighty wind coming, and there appeared to them parted tongues, as of fire." "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us" "Lo, I am with you for ever." But who denies that the Apostles claimed a Divine mission? and who denies that the Catholic and Roman Church from St. Irenæus to Leo XIII. has alone and openly claimed the same, invoking in all its supreme acts as witness, teacher, and legislator the Holy Ghost? Leaving aside some of the Holy Ghost, the consecration of all created things by the same creative power produced in perpetual and universal unity, the Church claims the Holy Ghost, and of the faith: is by the perpetuity of the presence and office of the Third Person of the Holy Trinity. Therefore, St. Augustine calls the day of Pentecost, Natalis Spiritus Sancti.

It is more than time that I should make an end, and to do so it will be well to rest on the heads of our argument. The Vatican Council declares that the world was then "the irrefragable witness of its own legation or mission to mankind.

1. That the apostolic existence of the Church at this hour is a world-wide revolution that it has wrought in men and nations, in the moral direction of mankind and of humanity, and in the domestic, social and political life of the Christian world, cannot be accounted for by any natural causes, or by any forces that are, as philosophy and history demonstrate, adverse, with in the limits of what is possible to man.

2. That this world-wide and supreme elevation of the Christian world, in compassion with both the Jewish and the modern world outside of Christianity, demands a cause higher than the possibility of nature.

3. That the Church has always claimed a Divine origin and a Divine office and authority in virtue of a Supernatural Divine assistance. To this even the Christian world, in its fragmentary state, bears, in its fidelity, bears witness. It is turned to our reproach. They refuse to be bound by the teaching of the Church to be infallible. We take the rebuke as an honour and a witnessing for our faith. It is not enough for men to say that they refuse to believe this account of the Church and its office. It is not enough that the Church, in the nature and authority of its teaching, is the witness of light and of unction, and of the Spirit of Truth, and of the faithful, in the sphere of the spiritual, and of the Church. It is the witness of the world, and of the world, in its fidelity, bears witness, and, in spite of itself, to the Divine office of the Church. It is the witness

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1888.

Poetry.

DOES THE MORNING,
AM FIRST REMEMBER.

It lay on the breast of our Motherland,
When the golden light of the Morning shone
O'er the cities gray, and the mountains grand,
Where shorten the valles' hearts still sore;
Then the tender stone of this shamrock pressed
The moral and where our dear ones rest.

It has basked in the smiles of her mild sky,
It has quaffed the tear-like dews of dew,
Where the martyred children of Erin lie—
Her pulses heave, her hearts, her true.
We fell when her valleys grew red with blood,
Where our hardy his 'gainst the foemen stood.

I look on my shamrock—a token dear;
And, lo! here its spotted leaves untold
Loved memories bright of the Isle so dear,
Fond dreams of her vanished age of gold,
Blest with hope for a dawning yet to be
When the land of our sires will be great and free

O beautiful emblem of deathless love!
Then symbol of the Trinity, dear God,
Shining immortal in the heart so more,
Thy magic is thine the heart's Lord's rod,
Where tomb from the desert rock could bring
The gladdening waves of a hidden spring.

Shamrock of Erin, oh! green and fair
In the heart of the exile thy memory dwells;
And a thought akin to a moaned prayer
At the sight of thy green leaves mingles swells
Thy memory, O Erin! high seats in sport.

Fond and fond still, thy million in this West,
And like our Mother, mark the old spirit
Trampling to our hearts and the Gospel Truth,
Bearing works of God and teaching youth;
Reverence for Holy Mother
O hearth within our hearts, and lovelier each other,
Is kind in that of dear ones at home.

We love as dear as life thy noble name,
It accompanies our exiled Erin, and point the way
O a thy delightful home, the golden ray
O! Paradise, that gives eternal years
It sweet to all but bright the life of tears.
O delightful are the thoughts, the Heavenly
Amen.

A son, that rise and flow like crystal streams
Near the souls wherein thy soothing brightly phrase.

A, noble praise, young and gifted Erin,
Bright and deeply in the love of Mighty Fire,
O! communes with Heaven, our petitions bear
O come to the Father, and call on God to share
Thy sorrows, and fallen man below,
Thy sorrows, lovely truth and souls of love still sow,
Seem our little sons, beloved of God,
If ely is day children's coming out;
O, hatch ye with thy voice of Heavenly love,
O rest thy Hallows 'Ill life's brief day is over.

Erin's day of life, is still thy fervent theme,
O! Heaven alone should be our eternal home.

O souls, thou art of, from earth's sorrows blight,
A, ever the O! earth's dreams blight,
O ever again to leave the paths of light.

O! or thou can prepare to Heaven's bright Throne shall be
Ah! upside from all die to yonder skies,
And ask we that thine be preserved to Erin,
O sons, noble Bishop, Ireland's gifted one,
O! Heaven our prayer! all our fervent sons;
O comfort our homes and land the young gray
O be the cast upon our "Heaven's Blessed Day."

JOHN F. MCDONNELL.
Virginia City, Nev., Sept. 26, 1888.

Literary Miscellany.

Three Mysteries of the Sea.

"God's ways are full of mystery, and we one realize the truth of the question more than this man who go down to sea in ships. My fifteenth birthday found me an orphan and a waif in the streets of New Orleans. I had run away from a farmer in Illinois, to whom I was bound, and by hook and crook had reached the great town on the Father of Waters. I had been living a precarious life for a month when the proprietor of an oyster house gave me a job. It was part of my work to open the oysters consumed in the place, and this portion was done in a little room just in the rear of some private stalls or compartments. The stalls fronted the public room, of course, and were in one of these that a gentleman who desired privacy while eating a stew or drinking a glass of wine. I could hear all that was said in two of them, as the partitions were only cloth; but I had been in the place two weeks before anything of particular interest was dropped from either. One evening, while I was at my work, two men entered one of the stalls, ordered a stew, and drank some grog, and, after lighting cigars, entered upon a conversation which at once attracted my attention.

"Well, have you got it all fixed?" asked one.

"Everything ship-shape and understood," replied the other.

"Shi is insured?"

"Way up."

"And no suspicions?"

"Not a one."

"We take machinery to Rio Janeiro!"

"Yes. That and other stuff."

"And bring back sugar and coffee?"

"Yes, if we return."

"What do we get?"

"Three thousand a piece."

"Well, I don't like it, but I'm in with you. She's to go down off the Guinea coast, eh?"

"Yes, down that way."

"Spring a leak and founder, and all hands take to the boats, I suppose?"

"That's the plan."

"Well, here's success to it. The idea is a good old craft, and I hate to see her go, but one must look out for himself."

"Aye, mate, that's Gospel truth. What's that you and me are going to do now. I'll come from the rich insurance companies, and no one will be the poorer."

"And we can treat Williams to hand over our divvy!"

"He's square. He's got to be square. I was a green country boy, but I caught on to their tricks. They were sailors, and they were planning the fun of a ship to get the insurance. I rose up and found a hole in the cloth through which I could get a little curiosity as to the contents, and the idea that they contained treasure never crossed my mind. I got out four before the rats turned, and there were several more in sight. After I had been altogether shortly after, I began to consider whether they contained nuts or bullets, and set about breaking one open. Oh, it rose upon rows of silver coins greeted my sight. I was stunned—was lost, going steadily forward, and reports here come another, of premature M. comes familiar to take up settlement in the new region. In a chat here received with S. B. Aldrich, a business man of Salt Lake, who has been in New York purchasing goods, he said, among other things:

"The law of Mormon persecution and conspiracy is also gather dying out in Utah. The wealth of the land has indeed a tendency to cool enthusiasm. It seems strange to the Saints, but it is true, that the Middle State sons of New England and the Middle States farmers have come among us in large numbers, and they have a tendency to keep down the Mormons are being pushed to the wall in every direction. There is no question whatever about this movement to and fro. The Mormons have attempted to keep it in the profound secret. The Brigham Young, who is considered the prophet of the Lord, is a son of Brigham Young, and Brigham Young's father was formerly a Deacon of Cincinnati, is an elder of the church, and who is well known in the Ancient Order of Antient Free and Accepted Masons. John W. Young makes his home in New York City. He is a member of the Masonic Order, and is well known in the Masonic circles of New York City. They have been spending enormous sums of money in Utah, and have established a banking and commercial agency in New York city under the name of Amicus or Friends. Amicus is composed of the Mormon church as well as of Gentiles, and is in the employment of the Mormon church as well as in other directions. The organization of the Amicus was completed on the 15th of September day Saints in the land of the Lord." Amicus has purchased outright about one million a year land, and has secured a 15 year lease of 100,000 acres of land, and working of about ten million feet of timber annually land. Cause of the Mormons, and from justice, and just as they are. Mormons are not to be Sent Forth Into Salt Lake. Mormons are not to be sent forth to the Pressed to a home. The mission of the Mormons is to gather together in a box and this dream cut Kirby tooth is gone, and the Mormons are not afraid of the drawing has taken place. Mormons are to be required to pay a very tough name in a tough time to which dispute the Mormons are not afraid. It has wholly passession and will remain in the hands of the Mormons. Mormons are to be required to pay for the land to sell it out at once. There is a prophecy that Mormons are to be sent forth to the coming Gentile tide, sir!, are ready to be persecuted with

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1888

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

AN IRISH SHAMROCK.

It lay on the breast of our Motherland,
When the golden light of the Maytime shone
On the rains gray, and the mountains grand,
Whose charms the exiles' hearts still owned;
Then the tender stems of this shamrock pressed
The sacred soil where our dear one rest.

It has basked in the smiles of her sunlit sky,
It has quaffed the tear-like drops of dew,
When the martyred children of Erin lie—
Her gallant heroes, her brave, her true.
He fell when her valleys grew red with blood,
When our hardy kin 'gainst the foemen stood.

I lost on my shamrock—a token dear;
And, lo! how its spiritual leaves unfold
Lovely memories bright of the fair so dear,
Fond dreams of her vanished age of gold,
Hopes with hope for a dawning yet to be,
When the land of our sires will be great and free.

O beautiful emblem of deathless love!
Then symbol fair of the Tri-one God;
What magic is thine the heart to move,
Stirring lonesome fancie like that Leader's rod,
Whose touch from the desert rock could bring
The gladdening waves of a bibbles spring.

Shamrock of Erin, ah! green and fair
In the heart of the exile thy memory dwells;
And a thought akin to a murmured prayer,
At the sight of thy green leaves mingle swells
From heart to lip, for the Old Land fair
Revealed by thy touch to his spirit's eyes.

Thou, unwilting result of the Irish earth,
From "a land of rains" sent unto me,
All the consolation thoughts thou hast called to birth
Of the beautiful emerald of the sea,
Morgs into blessings upon his cause,
From whose kindly hand my shamrock came.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.

FOR THE MONITOR.

A WOODLAND RETREAT.

A SPRING SONG.

At sunset hour I roll the wood
With eyes, where rolled the dewy tears—
My boyhood out of solitude—
Where racked with awful departing fears,
Where yet unconscious of the joy
And sorrows deep—oh, base alloy—
That mingled with life on earth,
With silver tones of laughing mirth,
I romped the wood with sinless feet
To plunge bright dreams I chanced to meet.

When crowned the sugar of the gale,
I crouched beneath a hoary tree;
And breathless heard the embryonic tale,
Its weird voice murmured were me;
A ghostly tale it hoarsely told—
A mystic tale of the glints of old—
When armed with fierce revenge and might,
With wiles invincible as night,
They stove to hurl with flaming war
The rightful Lord from Heaven star.

When Eve with her attendant train
As slowly descend the aps of day—
Maybe swept the hills and dales,
And linned each scene with pulse gay;
Then, weight I down my heart's thought,
Tow'rd Heaven, with bright joy, I sight
The parables of boyhood days,
Sped when knew thought devious, ways,
Ahead of Phoebus's pathway
To night shades fell my prey.

Ah! oft I roved at wintry morn,
While gloomy silence held the scene,
When every plant and tree was shorn
Of its bright verdure of summer;
Walking I drew on a tale of woe;
The streamlet's song like distant bells
Echoed among the hills and dale,
I rambled thus with boyish zest,
With soul softened, mind at rest.

Though age sits heavily on my brow,
And sorrow reveals in my brain;
Yet still I troll the soft mass plane,
Where oft the old sweet ones, or again,
Departed days of heavenly bliss!
Aglow with joys, with sorrows few;
Will re-enter; will re-come more
Upon my soul the gladdened glow,
Ah, to! the bliss to Heaven.
Is only found again in Heaven.

And Time shall sorrow grey
In hours of peace and praise
As blind my childhood's day;
The world has gone home
Though wine it has grown—
Such joys as were mine aw.

J. J. CORTISSOZ.

ACROSTIC.

To His Grace, The Most Rev. P. N. Riordan, Arch-bishop of San Francisco

M ost reverend, honored prelate of our land,
O ccle st ial! God's mantle great command,
P ower in obedient opposite to man,
T each him Heaven's supreme and unlikely plan.

R adiant bore, thy mission from above
E ternity name to realms of endless love;
V ast been the good Apostolic flow,
E ar alluring man from sin to for;
R ecently in all the love the super touch,
N ow adorned with golden tongue and carnet speech;
E ver varying by sign, word or deed,
D ivinely commanded—help souls in need.

P ace and good will, thy mission in the West,
A ad idle ver Master, raise the standard
E ndeavor to our wants and the Gospel Truth,
R ariving works of God and teaching youth;
I nculcating love of Holy Mother,
C hastity within our hearts, and lovefor each other,
E lid as that of sister or of brother.

W e love so dear on life thy noble name,
R ecounted our shield lives, and point the way
E ternity thy delightful home, the golden ray
O f Paradise, that gives eternal years
R ewards to all lovers of the life of tears.
D elightful are the thoughts, the Heavenly dreams.

A now, that rise and flow like crystal streams
N ear the seats wherein thy teaching brightly gleams.

A h, noble prelate, young and gifted fire,
R ed deeply in the Lea of Mystic Fire,
C ommune with Heaven; our petitions bear
H ence to the skies, and call on God to share
I nsulings gift upon us fallen man below,
S ugest words fresh and seeds of love still sow,
R ecent our Heels, oem, Sabbrest of Lord,
H elp to allay effulgent cutting rod;
O h, teach us with thy voice of Heavenly love
P ave and blessings ulilike's brief day's star.

D ear lord of all's law, is still thy fervent theme,
F or Heaven above should be our constant dream.

A s day, thou art from the shadows night,
A nd our rise, the soil's darkness light,
F or ever again to leave the paths of light.

F or those one prayers to Heaven's height Throne
shall be—

R ecognize from all life to yonder skies,
A nd ask we that thou be preserved to live
E arly concluded, thou's words of truth to give.
C omin, noble Bishop, Ireland's gifted son,
I llume our paths with all our deeds done.
H ymnous Divine Bride with true Religion's sway,
O ccurred our homes and lead the rejoicing
O ut the vast upward to "Heaven's Eternal Day."

JOHN F. MCDONOUGH.

Virginia City, Nev. Sept. 29, 1888.

Literary Miscellany.

Three Mysteries of the Sea.

"God's ways are full of mystery," and no one realizes the truth of the quotation more than the man who go down to sea in ships. My fifteenth birthday found me an orphan and a waif in the streets of New Orleans. I had run away from a farmer in Illinois, to whom I was bound, and by luck and crook I had reached the great town on the Father of Waters. I had been living a precarious life for a month when the proprietor of an oyster house gave me a job. It was part of my work to open the oysters consumed in the place, and this portion was done in a little room just in the rear of some private stalls or compartments. The stalls fronted the public room, of course, and were intended for parties who desired privacy while eating a stew or drinking a glass of wine. I could hear all that pass and in two of them, as the partitions were only cloth, but I had been in the place two weeks before anything of particular interest was forthcoming. One evening, while I was at my work, two men entered one of the stalls, ordered a stew, and drank a bottle of claret, after fighting, eagerness, and grog, and, after talking earnestly, entered upon a conversation which at once attracted my attention.

"Well, have you got it all fixed?" asked one.

"Everything ship-shape and understood," replied the other.

"Is insured?"

"Way up."

"And no suspicions?"

"Not a one."

"We take machinery to Rio Janeiro?"

"Yes. That and other stuff."

"And bring back sugar and coffee?"

"Yes, if we return."

"What do we get?"

"Three thousand a piece."

"Well, I don't like it, but I'm in with you. She's to go down off the Gulian coast, eh?"

"Yes, down that way."

"Spring a leak and founder, and all hands take to the boats, I suppose?"

"That's the plan."

"Well, here's success to it. The ship is a good old craft, and I hate to see her go, but one must look out for himself."

"Aye, mate, that's the sort talk. What you and me are going to do now fill some from the rich insurance companies, and no one will be the poorer."

"And we can trust Williams to hand over our divvy?"

"He's square. He's got to be square with us, or we'll blow on him."

"I was a green country boy, but I caught on to their tricks. They were sailors, and they were planning the loss of a ship; I was the farmer in Illinois, and I was the cloth thrown up which I could get a little curiosity as to the contents, and the idea that they contained treasure never cased my mind. I got out four fathoms the tide turned, and there were several more in sight. After I had them altogether all so bright, I began to wonder how in the they contained nuts or bullets, and set about breaking one open. My surprise upon finding rows of silver coins greeted my eyes. I was near losing what I had found, for, as I was in the act of opening the fourth one, I heard a footstep, and, as I had never seen any before, I was at a loss to determine the value.

Before the discovery of that money, I had wanted nothing but a pair of shoes and the right of a cent would not have all cited me. Now I was wild to get at the other boxes, and up eyes were constantly searching the sea for sight of relief. I dragged the boxes to my house, and most of each day for the next week was spent on the beach in hopes of getting at more treasure. The water continued high, however, and I got nothing more. On the eighth day dawn after my discovery, and about thirty days after my landing, the third mystery was revealed. At about 9 o'clock in the morning, while the tide was setting in strong, I observed a box of sugar-machine, fish, etc, and several books, and a large pocket knife. He handed them to me and said:

"Take this, take these and stow them away in your pocket, and on your life say nothing to any one." He sure to keep them about you."

He turned from me as if he did not want to be questioned, and I obeyed the strictly and ran to a pool. I was in a state of wonder, however, and nothing was made plain until the next day. At 10 o'clock in the forenoon the ship was blown to about a mile from a small island, a boat ordered lower and, and then all hands were called aft. When they had assembled the captain said:

"Men, I discovered two days ago that this boy was a leper. He has got it bad, and he is to be pitied. My duty in the case is plain. He must be marooned.

"Aye, aye, sir!" chorused the crew.

"I shall let him out and set him ashore here," he continued, "and you are my witnesses that it is a step necessary for the safety of all.

There was a ready assent, and before fully understood what was going on I was in the boat with McCoy and being pulled toward the island by two sailors. Even then I knew that I was to be left I did not raise an objection. I supposed the island to be inhabited, perhaps there was a city near by, and it was not a very far the change. We (as in as those that I could walk ashore, and the mate hand due seven hoed, of thing and convenience. As soon as I had every thing out of the boat I was pushed ashore, a rant good-bye, and I sat down on the sand and watched them return. The boat was hoisted up, the crew were made aft, and I was marooned upon an uninhabited island. Two days was the time I fully realized my situation. Two days was the time I was overcome by the conviction that I had figured it out wrong! I had begun to see the way, and I had begun to see the way, and I had begun to see the way, and

A SAD CALAMITY.

The Corpse of a Priest Burned in Its Cells.

The profound grief into which the sad news of the sudden demise of Father John Hawkworth plunged the inhabitants of Chorley, where he was greatly esteemed and beloved, was intensified tenfold on Wednesday when the appalling fact that his dead body had been burned to a cinder on the previous night or during the small hours of the morning was made known.

The news seemed incredible or greatly exaggerated, but on examination it proved to be literally too true; and when the terrible reality of the shocking occurrence was fully realized by the astounded people, it seemed a thrill of horror throughout the entire community. Only a few hours before, as it seemed, they had gazed into the calm, placid features of the dead, one who so lately as Saturday lived, and moved amongst them, if not in health, at least in the full possession of his faculties; on Tuesday night the vast morning multitude who crowded the church where he lay during the recitation of the Office, thronged around his coffin and now, as the mourner has, he was nothing but a charred and blackened skeleton. It is stated that the church doors were locked, the gas shut off, and the candles extinguished at ten o'clock on Tuesday night. The coffin then lay on trestles in the middle of the chancel facing the sanctuary; over the trestles was thrown a pall, and at either side were four tall candles. It would appear that the candles were not completely extinguished, and the folds of the drapery bulging out some have caught fire from one of the lights flickering low in the socket of the candlestick. A lamplighter, going his rounds putting out the gaslights at daybreak, caught a smell of burning wood, but, owing not being able to ascertain from whence it proceeded, or not thinking much of it, gave the matter no further attention; but the fire was the Priests' housekeeper, Jemima Turner, as she was going to the rectory about a quarter past six to get out the vestments ready for Mass. She immediately went a-hot to the Fire Brigade station, where the alarm was received at half past six. The superintendent (Mr. Cundliff) and firemen men at once turned out and drove to the church, and in the course of a few minutes were able to play upon the building. One side of the aisle door had to be forced in, when it was found that the church was filled with such a quantity of suffocating smoke that it was almost half an hour before they could get to where the coffin had been deposited the evening before. A horrifying sight met their eyes. They found the corpse nearly burnt to a cinder and almost entirely consumed, on the floor, along with the debris of the coffin or coffins, for the body had been placed in a lead coffin, inclosed in a leaden case, within an oak coffin. All that remained of the corpse was the trunk, the limbs and arms having been entirely consumed. A considerable portion of the flooring of the chancel, the communion rails, and the rood screen at the side were burnt. The fire traversed the chancel floor about four or five yards on either side of the coffin and shot upwards and forward towards the sanctuary, going yards forward towards the nave and right up a little more to the left than to the right and not much, about six feet, to the rear. The organ-chamber, which stands at some distance to the right, was considerably blistered and the pitch on the pitchpipe seats melted. It is the dishonest opinion of the superintendent of the Fire Brigade that the fire must have been caused by the coffin or coffins being so much as that it might have been traceable to the negligence of the plumbers, who soldered the leaden coffin before placing it in the oak one, having been suggested, and that it may have been going on for three or four hours before it was extinguished. It nearly fell in his anxiety to get to the coffin and save the body, and Father Moore on his considerable risk rescued from the Blessed Sacrament to the Church of the Sacred Heart, Brook street. Some of the vestments, which, after the fire had burned out, were found to be not much injured, were taken to the Sacred Heart Convent, and the remainder, including the chasuble, which was almost destroyed, were taken to the rectory, and Mrs. Turner, the housekeeper, and her daughter, who had charge of the vestments, set to work to repair the damage done as far as possible. It is stated that the damage done has been estimated at £1000. It is generally conceded that it was an error in judgment not to have had some person sleep in the rectory the remainder, and had such been the case, the awful calamity would not have occurred. The remains were gathered up, placed in a sheet, put upon a board and conveyed to one of the school rooms where they remained until a new coffin was procured. Our representative saw them there. When the sheet was removed which shrouded the smouldering fire was still smoking, the smoke issuing upward like steam, the remains, a ghastly spectacle was disclosed. The body, or rather what remained of it, was charred and dehydrated mass, scarcely any portion but the skull and part of the trunk remaining in human shape. The flesh was entirely melted away, and the greatest exposition had to be resorted to in combining the mutilated corpse.

Father Hawkworth, who was a member of an old Catholic family of Yorkshire, was born in Liverpool on May 10, 1829; and ordained priest.

SANTA CRUZ CATHOLIC FAIR.

Successful Effort for the Sisters of Charity.

The fair recently held in Santa Cruz for the purpose of enabling the Sisters of Charity to erect an additional building, was a decided success. The following was the result:

Dwyer, N. Rosario	$ 220 00
Rodgers Table, Mrs. T. Leonard and Miss Doherty	2 00
Mrs. Dr. Wm. T. A. Sweeney and the Misses Nancy	2,005 00
Fancy Table, Miss Peyton and the Children of Mary	1,400 00
Grab Bag, Mrs. Peters	145 00
Candy table, Misses Darcy and Conroy	145 00
Mrs. P. Kelly	31 00
Flower booth, Mrs. Thompson	12 00
Miss C. Lewelling	1 00
Total receipts	$6,000 00
Expenses for the Fair	600 00
Net proceeds	$5,400 00

The above receipts are gratefully acknowledged, and we cannot express our thanks to the zealous ladies who so generously made the success of the fair a matter of pride to those who aided them in the good work. Special thanks are due to those members of parishes for their services, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians for their assistance in a body.

The donations received by Thomas Leonard and daughter are included in the return of the refreshment table. There are several donations of a kind nature, which could be received only at the time received by Mrs. Sweeney, the Misses Darcy, and Miss P. H. Kelly, and which they have returned. Two hundred and eighty-five from Mrs. J. H. Rosenberg, and the sum realized by the Children of Mary.

May our Lord reward all for their kindness and generosity.

BETTER OF CHARITY

SIDEWIN EXHIBITS OF PRIZES.

Gold watch, $57, gold-headed cane 104, bed room set 92, saddle 103, silver watch 95, twenty free gold pieces 94, silver watch 95, twenty free 14, 40 pieces 61, silver watch 95, twenty free 14, 40 pieces 61, silver watch 95, twenty free 14, 40 pieces 61

A SAD CALAMITY.

The Corpse of a Priest Burned in the Church.

The profound grief into which the sad news of the sudden decease of Father John Hawksworth plunged the inhabitants of Chesley, where he was greatly esteemed and beloved, was intensified tenfold on Wednesday when the appalling fact that his dead body had been burned to a cinder on the previous night came to be known. So fast did the sinister rumors spread, so fast did the news seemed incredible or greatly exaggerated that it became necessary to publish it abroad, but on examination it proved to be but too true; and when the terrible reality of the shocking occurrence was fully realized by the astounded people, it sent a thrill of horror through the entire community. Only a few hours before, as it seemed, they had gazed into the calm, placid features of the dead, one who so lately as Saturday lived and moved amongst them, if not in health, at least in the full possession of his faculties; on Tuesday night the vast mourning multitude who crowded the church where he lay during the recitation of the Office, thronged around his coffin and, as the rumor ran, he was nothing but a charred and blackened skeleton. It is stated that the church doors were locked, the gas shut off, and the candles extinguished at ten o'clock on Tuesday night. The coffin then lay on trestles in the middle of the chancel facing the sanctuary; over the trestles was thrown a pall, and at either side were four tall candles. It would appear that the candles were not completely extinguished, and the folds of the drapery hanging on them must have caught fire from one of the lights flickering low in the socket of the candlestick. A haughtier, going his rounds putting out the public lights at daybreak, caught a smell of burning wool, but either not being able to ascertain from whence it proceeded, or his thinking much of it, gave no alarm. The first person to detect the fire was the Priests' housekeeper, Jasmine Turner, as she was going to the vestry about a quarter past six to get out the vestments ready for Mass. She immediately ran to ask the Fire Brigade station, where sent a hand to the Fire Brigade station, where the alarm was received at Hall and Fourteenth streets, Mr. Caudell and fourteen men were turned out and drove to the church, and in the course of a few minutes were able to play upon the building. One of the aisles doors had to be forced in, when it was found that the church was filled with such a quantity of suffocating smoke that it was about half an hour before they could get to where the coffin had been lying during evening before. A horrifying sight met their eyes. They found the corpse nearly burnt to a cinder and almost entirely consumed, on the floor, along with the debris of the coffin and pall, the body had been placed in a shell, enclosed in a leaden case, within an oak coffin. All that remained of the corpse was the trunk, the limbs and arms having been entirely consumed. The remaining portion of the flooring of the chancel, the communion rails, and the nod screen at the side were burned. The fire traversed the chancel floor about four or five yards on either side of the coffin and about three yards forward towards the sanctuary, going a little more to the left than to the right and not much, about six feet, to the rear of the organ-chamber, which stands at some distance from the sanctuary, was considerably blistered and the pitch on the pitchpine seats melted. It is the deliberate opinion of the superintendent of the Fire Brigade that the fire must have been caused by the candles being set aborting, such as that it might have been traceable to the negligence of the plumbers, who soldered the leaden coffin before placing it in the oak one, having been going on for and that it had been burning for two or three hours before it was extinguished. In the morning fell in his anxiety to get to the coffin and save the body, and Father Morrow was considerable risk in removing the Blessed Sacrament to the Church of the Sacred Heart, Hence, it is the general opinion that the fire had been turned off or the entire church and everything in it would have been consumed. As it, the damage done has been estimated at $2500. It is universally conceded that it was an error in judgment not to have had some person left to keep the remains, as, had such been done, the awful calamity would not have occurred. The remains were gathered up, placed in a chest, put upon a hand and conveyed to one of the school rooms where they remained until a new coffin was procured. Our representative saw them there. When the sheet, from beneath which the smouldering fire was still smoking, the smoke issuing upward like steam, was removed, a ghastly spectacle was disclosed. The body, or rather what remained of it, was charred and disjointed mass, scarcely any portion but the skull and part of the trunk remaining in human shape. The flesh was entirely melted away, and the greatest exertion had to be used in reconfining the mishaps occurred.

Father Hawksworth, who was a member of an old Catholic family of Yorkshire, was born in Liverpool on May 10, 1822.—London Catholic Times.

SANTA CRUZ CATHOLIC FAIR.

Successful Effort for the Sisters of Charity.

The Fair recently held in Santa Cruz for the purpose of enabling the Sisters of Charity to erect an additional building, was a magnificent success. Following is the result:

Door, N. Rosario	$ 220 00
Lottery Table, Mrs. T. Leonard	100 00
Door and Mine Lottery	240 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. J. Downey and the Misses Vasey	2,015 00
Fancy Table, Mrs. Parker and the Misses Stanfield	1,000 00
Children of Mary	245 00
Grab Bag, Miss Peters	145 00
Candy table, Misses Darcy and Conway	145 00
Mrs. J. Kelly	40 00
Flower booth, Mrs. Thompson	15 00
Misses C. Leonard	15 00
Total receipts	$6,025 00
Expenses, Lotto Fair	25 00
Net proceeds	$ 6,000 00

The above receipts are gratefully acknowledged, and we cordially return our thanks to the various ladies and gentlemen generously took the trouble to get up the different tables, as well as to those who added much by their presence and purchases. Special thanks are due to the committee of gentlemen for their services, and the Ancient Order of Hibernians for their assistance in a body.

The donations received by Thomas Leonard and daughter are included in the returns of the refreshment table. There are several donations yet to be heard from, which will be added to the Also those received by Mrs. Downey and Misses Vasey and Mine, a number included in their returns, but the amount not yet definite. Mrs. H. Hennessy is included in the same realized under the Children of Mary. May our Lord reward all for their kindness and generosity.

SISTERS OF CHARITY.

SUPERIOR SYNODS OF IRELAND.

Gold watch £17, gold-headed cane £04, bed-room set £2, mahogany £85, silver watch £6, twenty-two set £2, mahogany £82, organ of Father Hayes £4, old pistols £1, ladies'-hat gold brooch £1, gentlemen's gold studs and brooch £12, gentlemen's gold watch £8, bookcase £29, table and £2, gold brooch £6 17.

FAIR AT BENICIA.

The Catholic ladies of Benicia are holding a grand bazaar in the Catholic church for the aid of the Loretto-house church. Rev. J. K. Neville, O. P., has recently displayed a great variety of valuable articles, including horses, cattle, ladies' fancy work, ladies' watches, jewelry and oil paintings, all of which will be distributed among the Benicia people who prepare a to participate in this charitable enterprise, which will take place during the last week in the present month.

For the Bridge

Is required a good cooking and baking range; such is the 15-range Wilthrop range. For sale by I. Brown & Son, 35 Grant street.

Brooklyn's late show next February probably.

OUR SISTER CITIES.

The Catholic Chronicle in Alameda County

— The concert recently given in St. Anthony's parish, East Oakland, was very successful. The proceeds will be devoted to improvements in the Boys' parochial school.

— The Catholic Ladies' Home in Oakland, has at present fifteen inmates. The institution is doing a very good work and deserves the practical encouragement of Oakland Catholics.

— The young St. Mary's College on the Peralta road, will be ready for the reception of students early in January. The institution is supplied with a very large number of beds, and a large number of beds placed in position.

— We understand that the energetic Catholics of Oakland, are endeavoring to secure money and a lot for the erection of a hospital. As yet no active steps have been taken in the matter, but the worthy enterprise will soon be thoroughly agitated. In such a large city as Oakland a Catholic hospital must sooner or later be opened. We hope that our readers across the bay will take an active interest in helping along when the project is established for their support and support.

— Father King's parish night will be called the "parish of resident." The Indians in these stations have through his wise direction and energy been formed into a Catholic Benevolent Society, Immaculate Conception Altar Society, U. K. of A. Society, Confraternity of the Children of Mary, Confraternity of the Most Sacred Heart, Confraternity of the Holy Name, Confraternity of the Angelic Warfare, and Catholic Ladies' Aid Society. Yet, amongst religious organizations in one parish. What insistence is there; what is the Pastor promotion of faith and fervor?

— Next Sunday, the 1st inst., will be a red letter day in Immaculate Conception parish, Oakland. Solemn Mass will be celebrated at 10 a. m., and a sermon on the Rosary will be preached by Rev. M. King, assist. Immediately after Mass a grand procession of the Rosary Confraternity will proceed around the church and the place, just opposite. On the way, the Rosary will be recited, and hymns sung, being made by the confraternity. The beautiful procession will be joined by the one thousand members of this great Confraternity in Oakland, and many other religious societies of Oakland, and will have the business and professional men in order to join in the procession. It is expected that many will cross the bay next Sunday to witness the imposing ceremonies.

YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE.

Latest Doings. Coming Glantzes. New Institutes—Miscellaneous Notes of Interest.

— Agitation in the interest of the new ball in Lyceum will soon be actively commenced.

— Grand Master Lynch is now visiting Oakland.

— Reports for the quarter ending Sept. 30th, are now due at the office of the Grand Secretary.

— Death Benefit Association No. 11 is now in a healthy condition.

— Rev. Fitzsimmons, will give an entertainment to-morrow (Thursday) evening.

— The first annual ball of St. Mary's, will take place on next Wednesday evening.

— Grand President Fleming is preparing a list of District Deputies.

— J. V. Spinetti, as district deputy, has returned to Los Angeles.

— J. Henry Hockweiler, the eloquent district deputy of Los Angeles, will make a short an oratorical tour.

— The Board of Directors met last evening, D. W. Erwin, presiding, and transacted routine business.

— Grand Lecturer Insanio Geary is planning a number of variations in the lectures of the Institute.

— The report of the late Grand Council together with the revised Constitution will be printed and ready for distribution in about three weeks. The proceedings of the Council will be issued in pamphlet form, in about 100 pages.

— Rev. S. West Oakland, gave a very enjoyable entertainment at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. It is learned that he will shortly exhibit his stereopticon views, and Physical Science lectures, and a variety of vocal solos, recitations and a variety of social solos.

— Nearly 50 hundred a reception to Grand President Fleming last Wednesday evening. Unfortunately the weather was so unpleasant that the attendance was not as great. The occasion is one of great interest at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. Tuck Mr. Kirk, a Hibernian, gave a glorious address, Grand President Fleming also addressed the assembly in a very interesting and instructive address. Music and recitations were interspersed.

— Nearly 50 hundred a reception to Grand President Fleming last Wednesday evening. Unfortunately the weather was so unpleasant that the attendance was not as great. The occasion is one of great interest at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. Tuck Mr. Kirk, a Hibernian, gave a glorious address, Grand President Fleming also addressed the assembly in a very interesting and instructive address. Music and recitations were interspersed.

— Rev. Fitzsimmons, will give an entertainment to-morrow (Thursday) evening.

— The first annual ball of St. Mary's, will take place on next Wednesday evening.

— Grand President Fleming is preparing a list of District Deputies.

— J. V. Spinetti, as district deputy, has returned to Los Angeles.

— J. Henry Hockweiler, the eloquent district deputy of Los Angeles, will make a short an oratorical tour.

— The Board of Directors met last evening, D. W. Erwin, presiding, and transacted routine business.

— Grand Lecturer Insanio Geary is planning a number of variations in the lectures of the Institute.

— The report of the late Grand Council together with the revised Constitution will be printed and ready for distribution in about three weeks. The proceedings of the Council will be issued in pamphlet form, in about 100 pages.

— Rev. S. West Oakland, gave a very enjoyable entertainment at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. It is learned that he will shortly exhibit his stereopticon views, and Physical Science lectures, and a variety of vocal solos, recitations and instrumental solos.

— Nearly 50 hundred a reception to Grand President Fleming last Wednesday evening. Unfortunately the weather was so unpleasant that the attendance was not as great. The occasion is one of great interest at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. Tuck Mr. Kirk, a Hibernian, gave a glorious address, Grand President Fleming also addressed the assembly in a very interesting and instructive address. Music and recitations were interspersed.

— Nearly 50 hundred a reception to Grand President Fleming last Wednesday evening. Unfortunately the weather was so unpleasant that the attendance was not as great. The occasion is one of great interest at Germania Hall, last Tuesday evening. Tuck Mr. Kirk, a Hibernian, gave a glorious address, Grand President Fleming also addressed the assembly in a very interesting and instructive address. Music and recitations were interspersed.

PARSELL DEFENCE FUND.

Circular from the Ministerial Council of the Irish National League of America.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 28th, 1888.

Dear Sir—In response to a call issued by John Fitzgerald, President of the Irish National League of America, the San Francisco Municipal Council of this organization has appointed the undersigned as a committee to collect funds to aid the leader of the Irish Home Rule Party, Charles Stewart Parnell, in the efforts which he now is compelled to make before the Parliamentary Commission, and in the Scottish Courts, for the vindication of his character.

In submitting this matter for your consideration we deem it unnecessary to give a synopsis of the case, as the Irish Nation has given the subject so much space, and the Irish World has devoted the attachment to the Irish Parliamentary Party, and the Irish people have been open, honorable and fearless, and has now every reason to be the present movement on behalf of the English people. His enemies, grown desperate at his success, now resort to lying and forgery; the most unscrupulous kind, trying to check his career by loading his name with enormous expenses.

If Englishmen and Scotchmen, knowing the forgery and falsehoods of the attacks made upon him, and impressed by the fairness of his character, are subscribing liberally to the fund to defend him, shall Irishmen, equally or refuse to aid him?

The Irish race is on trial as well as the leader. If the members of that race now with hold the assistance of which he is in need, the world will say, "They are not worthy of the cause which, they are fitting for slavery." It is, therefore, to show that we are worthy of our great friend Ireland's hopes.

We believe that our efforts will be very great, and as the exchequer of the Irish Home Rule Party is exhausted, the friends of Ireland should stand his hand to help in the emergency.

Some members of the Committee will take the liberty to solicit from you in a few days, and hope to receive an encouraging response.

Contributions to the fund may be sent to the undersigned, with the amount of subscription, and will be acknowledged in the Monitor. Money should be forwarded by Postal Money Order, or Express Money Order, or by Express, or by Express, or by Express

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1888.

Poetry.

[For the Monitor.]

THE VICTORY OF THE ROSARY.

Our Lady of the Rosary!
Hail Mary full of grace!
Our Lady, Holy of Christians! o'er
October's embossed brace
In gems o'er Lepanto's waves thy prayer;
Hail Mary in thy name,
Our Lady Queen of Victory!
Lepanto doth remain
A monument naught can deface,
Enduring as the main.

Since brave Don Juan, Spain's valiant knight,
Heard Heaven to him say;
Shall Moslem arrogance and might
Hold Christendom at bay?
The Crescent sons the blighting glare
Of Europe's plains and vales—
Can now from Eden Cypress bear
Afire vow's direst wails!
Vhere Turk and Moor in myriads pour,
Desolation in their might;
Their canons and mulvrine death roar,
Thousands—hundreds—shall
The Moslem mieux stooped in gore—
In Sensible hatred swell
From Christian hearts—shall there yet more
Stream Moslem blade and blis!

While Mary Mary and angels write
The fearless Don Juan's vow,
The star of victory poses its light
Full o'er the chieftain's brow.
Its brilliance—death to Moslem might—
Kaymas the Bey's power;
Proud Naples' plaid's boom bearer,
For ne'er did ocean wave
Bear nobler chief than he who leaves
Mar port—Don Juan the brave,
To lead the armies of the age
Against the Infidel
Where triumph, might and rage,
Commissioned hell!

To Mary for the hosts of Juan,
All Europe's prayers arise,
For victory they pleas as one,
October's calm clear skies!
And as Lepanto's azure wave
Reflects the Sunday's morn,
Two fleets, her trembling waters lave,
For battle lines are drawn;
Two fleets that each bears mytada brave,
Ta'ardst one Mahomet,
The Cross and Crescent banner gave
Unto the surging deep.

The Bey's holy banner stream
High o'er his deadly dirk,
The sun again is longer seen,
Two hundred thousand souls
In fervent struggle to behold!
The fate of Christendom
Lepanto's conflict dread doth hold—
The victory for whom?
The victory for Christian host,
Lepanto's waves retain,
The tone of Moslem lost,
And Ali Pasha slain;
The power, the pride, the Crescent's boast,
Its cresents to regain!

Our Lady of the Rosary!
Lepanto's day is shine;
Our Lady (queen of Victory!
Thy power and glory shine
Forth in Lepanto's history—
Our Lady Help of Christians! o'er
Thy World that
For aid, resolve strength through thy prayer
To vanquish foreant sway.

MARY J. CORNEAL.

Livermore, Cal., Sept. 24th, 1888.

[For the Monitor.]

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND OF PARADISE.

There is in the beautiful land above,
A crown in abundance for all crowns bane—
Where converse in realms of deathless love, Great heavenly joys awaits the souls that move.

Then, weary man shall lay life's burden down
Thy Father's mansions in the peaceful above!
There, who the glory of a deathless crown,
And reign with happy spirits evermore.

In this beautiful land there is in store
A calm retreat for weary-laden souls;
Where pure and bright expands the fadeless
shore,
Where the spirits that 'round our planet
rolls.

A few brief seasons and Earth's days of strife,
And all Time's golden links before our eyes;
Oh, may we wake to God's Eternal Life,
To the beautiful land of Paradise.

JOHN F. MCDONELL.

Virginia City, Nev., Oct. 1, 1888.

THE RIVER OF TEARS.

Silently, swiftly, onward it flows
On in the great, great sea;
Pleasure and joyous delighting around,
Dwelling in shadow
They are only symbols of joys that were,
Of many hopes and fears,
The words of those that were washed away
In the river of years.

There by the shore on the tide flows by Grief, the all day long;
And a melody breaks from the surge
Like a requiem song.
That sense for her alone, for there is laid,
Laid in a shrouded bier,
The love that melted for ever away
On the river of years.

And Hope with her own bright smile stands
there,
They heard her tenderest strings,
Hope is powerless! Hope! Hope! Madness
Lost in many a dream,
And her eyes are gazing, gazing
Where the shadows have been
That bear her all to the golden land
Down the river of years!

And we, too, you and I have cherished
By that calm, calm river,
Some dreams that like autumn leaves were lost
In its tide for ever.
What matters it all—the tide flows ever
And no rifle is seen,
To tell where all we loved has perished
Down the tide of time.

River of years, O river of years,
On thy bosom to glide
Each thwarted wish of blighting years now
To case of meeting's pride!
Back! for thy current we twill has run,
And thy waters are bright
With calling about where lamparts have blown
Fresh skies to dark and dreary.

E. H. M.

THE FLOWER MIRACLE.

Such pre a miracle! Behold these seeds,
These tiny, dusky spheres, mention and dull,
I drop them in the sombre soil, they lie
A roll of earth shut from the light and dew,
And water the dry kernels, then these grounds
Its kind of blossom—a fair flower, all in full
And sometimes one from many, sometimes made
Not blossoms but a tree. Behold, God's chemistry
Takes dusty from dusky gust and colless clay
Blushes of Eastern, sweets of Araby—
A fragrant vision fairer than the day
Sun-lit, pearl-hued, and blue the precious
Tyre
Which works a miracle in every flower!

FLORTON C. THORNELY.

Literary Miscellany.

Frank Harris' First Suit.

A Catholic Story in Four Chapters.

CHAPTER I.

The little town of Melville lies on the line of the New York and Lake Erie Railroad, and comprises within its precincts over thousand inhabitants. During the summer months this number is much increased by the influx of city visitors. The Prospect House, which has a fine site on the crest of a large hill, monopolizes the hotel patronage, its only competitors being a few cottages opened as boarding-houses by some enterprising M-lvillies.

One morning early in July there entered the telegraph office, which was situated in a side street, a well attired, athletic looking personage of twenty four or twenty-five, with regular features and sharp but pleasant eyes, Stepping up to the sealed enclosure, he addressed the lady operator, "I wish to send a message to New York." "Very well, sir. Please fill out a blank." He was most unnecessarily slow in compiling that message. After almost every word, he brought his pen to a stand still and threw a quick glance at the operator.

Now, it was in the innate fitness of things that, when he looked at her, she should be examining papers or otherwise engaged; and that, when he was writing between glances she should be making a rapid survey of his countenance. One of the two must have made a mistakeulation in regard to the proper moment for inspection; for as he, for the tenth time, transferred his line of vision from the perpendicular to the horizontal, he found her gaze bent full upon him. Both confused at being caught, she blushed and hastily ran her fingers through a heap of papers as if in search of some particular one, and he with embarrassed face and unsteady hand finished his writing.

"How much will it cost?"

"Seventy five cents," after examining it.

Would he have it repeated at the additional expense of twenty-five cents?

He would; and handed in a dollar in support of his assertion.

In a moment her nimble fingers were busy with the button, and the writer's words were flying to their destination. This girl seemed to him to be about nineteen years old. The ruy has of health, despite, and perhaps by the consciousness that she was being intently watched, bloomed in her cheeks, and her brown hair clustered in varying ringlets about her forehead and temples. Her eyes, when she turned them full upon him at the conclusion of her task, proved to be those large melting ones that seem to encompass a world of space within their narrow limits.

"How long before I shall get the ripeition?" he asked.

"Answer back. Shall I transmit it, or wait for it?"

"I would sooner you would repeat it," he replied, with a peculiar emphasis, that plainly declared his preference for her accents to her written characters.

The quick, uneven tick-tick soon engaged her attention, and she repeated the message as it came off.

When she reached the end, he lifted his hat, and politely bidding her good morning, left the office.

It was simply astonishing the number of telegrams Mr. Frank Harris sent to New York after that. Two or three times a day he would appear with a message written in cipher; which ciphers, it were but fair to say, admitted of no translation whatever, and were as impenetrable mysteries to the sender as to the recipients.

The ice gradually broke. From talking of the weather they, after the usual gradations, began to talk of themselves.

Her name was Mary Lonnon, she said. She had been left an orphan at fourteen, and since had lived with the venerable pastor of the Catholic church as his adopted child.

She had learned telegraphy at her own request as she did not wish to remain an incumbrance on the aged clergyman, whose means were scarcely adequate to the supplying of his own necessities.

Mr. Harris was glad to hear she was a Catholic. It cemented their friendship. He was a lawyer, with a fair practice—and had a partner who took care of it in his absence. He had no relatives, and was boarding at the Prospect House.

"You seem to have a great deal of business in New York, Mr. Harris," remarked Mary, one day after the transmission of one of those dangerous-looking ciphers.

"Well, so I can't say that I have, Miss Lonnon. Those despatches have a more direct bearing on my business in Melville," and she could not understand why he smiled.

"I did not know you had clients in Melville," replied Mary, in surprise.

"I have one—one in whose interest I am working as I never worked before."

"All these messages about a single client?"

"Yes, and as many more, if necessary. Ah, good morning, Miss Robbins."

This to a young lady of very jaunty appearance, who had just entered in time to catch the last of the remark. She bowed very politely to Mr. Harris, and tossing a slip of paper on the little counter, commanded Mary in a supercilious tone to send the message to New York.

"Please make out a blank," said Mary.

"I believe that is your duty," replied Miss Robbins.

Mortified, Mary took up the paper.

"Allow me, Miss Lonnon," said Mr. Harris. With a few strokes of the pen he transcribed the message to one of the company's blanks.

"Mr. Harris, you are altogether too obliging to these public servants," blurted out Miss Robbins, her face suffused with rage at this gentlemanly reproach of her maladroitness.

"Excuse me, I think not. Politeness is never thrown away."

"Permit me to ask the name of the client, I heard mentioned as I entered?" with a slight sneer and a rimdotive look in Mary's direction.

"Business affairs are written in a sealed book, miss."

"Is this strictly of a business character?" "Strictly."

"I wish you the utmost success. No, thank you. I am not going to the direction of the hotel."

With a scowl disfiguring an ordinarily pretty face, she flounced out of the office, after declining his escort.

"That Miss Lonnon, is a city belle, whose temper terrorizes an indolent father. Thus stands forth as a sign of aristocracy in the eyes of an ignorant mother. Good morning."

CHAPTER II.

So things ran on for about three weeks. As Father Nevin and Mary sat down to breakfast, one morning, she said, "Father, a gentleman asked permission to call on me this evening, and I granted it."

The old Priest looked at her in surprise.

"This is something new for you, Mary!"

"Yes, but I trust there is nothing wrong in it. You shall hear all about it."

She recounted her first and subsequent interview with Mr. Harris, and added to herself a most rankled opinion of his character. Father Nevin listened in silence. When she had concluded, he said:

"From your story of this person he appears to have acted like a gentleman. But, be careful, child. One so insinuating and so yon in the ways of the world can form no idea of the amount of wickedness stored up in some men's hearts, especially in the hearts of those young fellows from the city. I do not wish to be unsympathetic, Mary. Don't think that. I may by wish to caution you against dangerous acquaintances. I have no doubt that he is a very excellent person, indeed. His desire to visit you more than half proves it. Had he learned you to visit him I should be rather likely to condemn him. If he turns out to be what you say, then by all means retain his friendship, for good companions are so beneficial as evil ones are harmful. There, child, I do not wish to spoil your digestion by a lengthy lecture. I can very soon determine the character of Mr. Harris. Rest assured all will come out right.

[To be continued.]

No cipher despatches were sent that day and when Mary gave place to her relief in the evening, she thought Mr. Harris' positive visit must have had a detrimental effect, seeing he was late in the interests of his client.

At 8 o'clock precisely, three distinct raps at the front door announced the presence of the visitor, and in a moment he entered, clad in a suit of black. His appearance seemed to proposess the Priest in his favor, for a very cordial greeting passed between them. After shaking hands with Mary, he sat down.

Gradually, Father Nevin led him out; probed him on points indicative of good character or the reverse. To all those questions highly satisfactory answers were given, and the Priest cast Mr. Harris up in his mind as a very desirable acquaintance.

"Mr. Harris, how is your case in Melville progressing?" asked Mary.

"Very well, thank you; very well.

"It's a range I have not heard or read of in your Melville lately," she continued.

"This case can hardly be adduced as a test of my professional ability," he said, with a smile. "What may be still more surprising, I am going to take it into court to-night!"

"To-night!" echoed both Mary and Father Nevin.

"Yes, to-night. It involves the tender question of matrimony."

"Is it a divorce suit?" asked the Priest.

"No, Father, it is not. It is a suit for marriage, all quibbling aside. Let us be understood. For about a month, I have known your adopted child, and for a month I have loved her. I wish to ask your permission to second her feelings. I have reason to believe they coincide with mine. Should I discover that such is really the case I shall offer her a place by my side through life."

"This is rather sudden," said Father Nevin.

"Sha shall have all the time necessary for reflection, months if need be."

"Mary, what do you say?" the old Priest asked, turning to the girl. She was pale and trembling and her voice refused to perform its function.

"Miss Lonnon, Mary," exclaimed the suitor, taking her by the hand "may I assume the position of a favored one?"

She managed to articulate "Yes."

"Pressing her hand, and parting warmly with Father Nevin, he left for the hotel. Frank's visits to the telegraph office were made without the slightest disguise now. Presence was laid aside. Mary was the sole attraction there for him. In the evening he visited her at home and took her for a drive or a walk, Father Nevin according his half consent to their trips. It was a happy period for both; but that happiness was ere long to suffer a shock that threatened to ruin it forever.

Frank was seated in the parlor of the Prospect House after dinner, smoking cigars with a pal well some Hawaiian inscribed in a note-book, when Miss Robbins approached him. He greeted her coldly, but laid aside his book to hear what she had to say.

"Mr. Harris," she began, taking a seat beside him, "I am going to tell you something which may prove very disagreeable to you."

"Pray spare me," he replied, lightly.

"Mr. Harris, that woman, Mary Lonnon, good and pure and devoted as you think her, is the essence of deceit."

Frank's face grew almost livid, and in a hoarse voice he replied, "Miss Robbins, if you were a man, I should set differently. Now I must cut our conversation short by telling you it's a vile fabrication."

"Keep your seat, Mr. Harris," she answered, viewing his evident pain with satisfaction, "I am prove this."

"Prove it! Have a care, this is a matter on which I will allow no trifling. You can't prove what is not true."

"But it is true and I can prove it. Listen to me. At the sea-bleep I graduated from, three of the pupils who dwelt in it, were taught telegraphy. I was one of that number. By the aid of this fortunate accomplishment, I was able to get the proof I now offer you of the woman's perfidy. To-day I went to the office with a message for New York. While waiting for its reputation, I distinctly heard the instrument tick off these words: 'Mary Lonnon—May meet me at the ceremony. Have the ring ready. Will bring a witness. Will be there on my arrival.—Ned.' Mr. Harris, that is what I heard and that is the proof I now offer you."

"Under some mysterious mistake here," groaned Frank, whose face was now apparently bloodless.

"Mistake? No. If you think there is, you can soon solve your doubt. Melville cross-roads is a mile and a half from here. You can be there as soon as possible. It is only half-past eight now. Go and see for yourself." Rising, with a sweeping courtesy, she left the parlor.

"Can this be true?" moaned Frank, holding his head between his hands. "Can she be deceiving me and her adopted father? I can't believe it; I won't. And yet this message. What shall I do? I'll trust her. No. I'll be there at nine, and if I find her perfidious I'll throw her over altogether.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

The Patronage of Good Saint Anne.

One sultry afternoon, not very long ago, a spark from a locomotive of the Illinois Central Railroad set fire to a field in the neighborhood of the village of Sainte Anne, in Kankakee. The fire spread rapidly and consumed in its course a large patch of stubble belonging to Mr. Hebert, a French farmer who lay along the railway track, while another field belonging to Mr. L—— was also equally visited by the fire and equally in danger, but nothing but smoke and flames. But now, in this terrible pinch, aid came in various countries various pictures, and in the same, good Mr. Hebert—has that counsel one another, so the old Canadian—has for the same, free to the end. Then, the better way might be to preserve his wheat and to let the rest go. Hebert knew Saint Anne's Image, and perhaps other objects associated with the Holy Mots, and he able to present it on occasion, so more time to lose, he knelt down and prayed with a fervor approximate, the fate and his anxiety and hopes, even, will be very decisive, and that of anger, or defiance, or indifference, or even of ridicule, or of the humane, divine, course. It decided.

THE MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Why We Should All Unite to Sing Her Praises in Various Outings.

Not a day passes that we do not find in the columns of our exchanges many accounts of the deeds of the mother-in-law. It always been an occasion of surprise and of sorrow to us that so many good people should so dishonor this most worthy and most worthiest classes of womankind. We can see no good reason why she should be so maligned and we are not sure that within the sacred precincts of home, there is not more intelligence and of delicacy the negro minstrel should utter the mother-in-law. Nor is there any reason why the mother-in-law should not be the equal of her son

THE MONITOR.

WEEKLY CHURCH TRUT OF PITTSBURGH.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1888.

The Wholesale Method of Manufacturing Malignant Falsehoods.

"The Romanist Method of Killing our Public Schools," was the caption of an anti-Catholic article which Preacher McCrary inserted in last week's Advocate, in order that his brethren might not begin to imagine he had grown cold in his bigotry. Now he proposes to turn the tables on our Methodist brethren, by exposing the malignant falsehoods which he purposely manufactured in order to demonstrate his diabolical tact for detraction. The charges brought against Catholics, in the article before us, are as follows:

1. They declared them (public schools) to be infidelic, which was always a purpose and a boast of Romanism.

2. They declared that they could by hook or crook, by fair means and foul, and with artifices and lies to do this, and to purge from our land, honest all matter that could by any means be declared religious.

3. Then they charged our schools with being godless, having diligently order'd out to make them so.

In reply to these charges it is only necessary to point out the fact that the Catholics were right when they charged that "our Public Schools" were sectarian, as the Protestant bible was read therein! And then, when the bible was omitted from the list of studies, and every iota of Christian literature dropped from the curriculum, did not the schools become godless? Nor is it true—as Bro. McCrary says—that Catholics helped to make them so, for the excellent reason that those who transformed the Christian system of American educational schools into the present infidel making machine, never intended the Public Schools of America to be anything else than anti-Christian in their influence.

Nor is it by any means true that Catholics ever purged any Public School textbooks of "all matter that could by any means be declared religious." The complaints and petitions of all such text books have been left entirely to Protestant preachers and pedagogues of the same persuasion, and while those gentlemen were busying their brains to find out how they could keep God out of their text-books, Catholics were busy building school houses wherein to teach the knowledge of God to every child that entered their portals!

4. Now they do all they can to demoralize our school system, by getting control thereof, and appointing, by fair or foul means, to fill our Boards of Education, by putting control thereof into our hands, by filling fools with our best and most experienced teachers, by whole fist and intrigue, to get our schools, by manning their employ, Protestant teachers of common sense and ability, whose literary men, by their ability, would be able to occupy a position in any public school, and finally, by getting possession of a school house for their own use.

When a Methodist preacher sets out to "make Rome howl," he can falsify faster than a cat can wink! And so Catholics themselves "our Public Schools" by electing enemies to the system on Boards of Education! Bro. McCrary is mad! When in the law that prevents Catholics from being eligible to any office in the land! Catholics pay their proportion of Public School tax, and Brother McCrary will have to revive the Puritanical Blue Laws before he can keep Catholics from off Boards of Education.

If the "best and most experienced teachers" in "our Public Schools" are found to be teaching falsehood concerning Catholics, dupes to the pupils, or if they are proved to be incompetent or immoral, it is only right that they should be discharged, and Catholic Directors should be commended for casting them out. It is also just as untrue on the part of Dr. McCrary to assert that Catholics have anything to do with text-books, teachers or public schools, inasmuch as a large majority of those who manage these institutions are generally found on Catholics and consequently anti-Catholic.

No Catholic Bishop, Priest or layman ever used his influence to keep any non-Catholic child from going to a Public School. The Prelates of the American Church all declare the Public Schools to be "good enough as far as they go," for those non-Catholics who desire to patronize them, but if Brother McCrary, as the Church of God, must teach her children the truths of Christianity, home Catholics build their own schools, support them out of their own private means, and then patiently accept the lies flung at them by Methodist preachers!

5. The demands of the Roman Catholic Church is a pro rata appropriation of the school fund to the sectarian schools!

It is false to assert that the Catholic Church has ever demanded a pro rata appropriation of the Public School Fund, and Bro. McCrary here false witness against his neighbor when he said so.

6. The Roman Catholic foreign Priest is expressly whatever with the American idea of education. His plan is to make as exclusive, hundred fold of such child under his charge. He would not have a school where foreign children should be brought together, for good, well qualified American teachers.

"The Roman Catholic foreign Priest" is a great sycoree to all gospel sharps of the Methodist stripe. But the best evidence that the "foreign Priest" is fully in sympathy with American education, is found in the fact that the schools founded by such Priests are crowded with pupils! It is true that those "Roman Catholic foreign Priests" will not have boys and girls taught together, as they have too great a knowledge of their evil as it relates to "our Public Schools," to risk the destruction of the manliedly modesty and virtue of the daughters of honestly-reared parents, for the sake of trying an experiment already condemned in nearly every country in Europe. These "Roman Catholic foreign Priests" believe strongly in preserving the innocence of the youth of both sexes, hence thousands of Protestant parents send their female children to schools established by them, rather than risk their children among a promiscuous crowd of teachers and pupils who think that a knowledge of bad is altogether unnecessary as the ministry of morality in the human mind. All good citizens, therefore will say "Heaven bless the Roman Catholic foreign Priests!"

7. The deliberate intent of the Roman Catholic Church is to seize upon our school fund at as soon as possible, and to divide it, if it is which it hopes to accomplish, with the intent of breaking up our Republican American national system of public schools.

False again! The Catholic Church has no intention of seizing upon a single cent of any school fund, either in the present or in the remote future. On the contrary, Intendants, Directors, teachers, and the hundred-and-one hangers-on to the Public School pack, are such blood-suckers and spendthrifts that there is not one dollar left out of every million for anybody else to seize upon! And it is this very self-same extravagance—the peculation of Public School managers—that will ultimately undermine the whole system and leave the larger public school houses as empty of scholars as Bro. McCrary's Methodist mind was void of truth when it was manufacturing these malicious falsehoods against the Catholic Church.

"Our magnificent American National System of Public Schools" is in no danger from the Catholic Church, but the danger comes entirely from the men who finger the finances, who give contracts to favorites for commissions, who procure positions for pay, who introduce text-books for a percentage, and who keep shouting all the time—with the leathern lungs of a Methodist preacher at a camp-meeting—"Catholics stand back! Do not dare to lay a finger on our Public Schools," whilst the pockets of the same individuals are filled with public plunder! These are the Samsons who will pull down "our magnificent American National Public Schools," unless the tax-payers stop their extravagance and stealing.

New Home for Jesuit Novices.

The extraordinary progress which the Catholic Church is making in every portion of the United States, calls for more prosse to labor in all sections of the country where our Prelates are able to procure. In the older Dioceses, wherein are thickly-populated cities, the number of seminaries in such parish has to be doubled, trebled, and even quadrupled, in order to meet the increased demands upon the Clergy for their spiritual ministrations. The opening of new Dioceses also develops new fields for missionary labor, and thus it may be said in this year of our Lord, 1888, with as much truth as it was proclaimed by our Divine Saviour Himself, during His sojourn on earth—"The harvest, indeed, is great, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

America is going to be the greatest Catholic country in the world in course of time, and, as years roll on, the need of priests will become more urgent in order to carry the Bread of Life to those Catholics who enter upon the newly-developed sections of this expanding Republic, which still has millions of acres of arable land awaiting industrious thousands of settlers to make happy homes within its borders.

Hitherto the American Hierarchy have looked to Europe to supply them with subjects for the priesthood, but the demands made upon the Ecclesiastical Seminaries there for missionaries to convert the savages of Africa, Australia and other distant regions of the earth, as well as to keep pace with the urgent request for priests for every other portion of the world, renders it very difficult for American Bishops to procure priests in sufficient numbers to feed and care for the flocks entrusted to the American Episcopate.

For these reasons Ecclesiastical Seminaries and Novitiates are increasing in this country, the latest enterprise of that religious character being the Novitiate of the Sacred Heart, erected at San Carlos, Santa Clara County, by the Jesuit Fathers, who hitherto have provided accommodations for their educational students in their College at Santa Clara. But finding such a plan not any longer feasible, the Fathers very wisely concluded to purchase seventy acres of land at Los Gatos, and to erect thereon a building specially designed for a Novitiate that would accommodate the entire ecclesiastical students, who thus would form a community of themselves, and be constantly in the atmosphere of retirement so necessary for those who desire to serve God in the spirit of obedience, poverty and chastity.

The Novitiate of the Sacred Heart is most picturesquely situated on the side of a hill which rises covered with vines and fruit trees behind it. The view from the building is superb. The valley of Santa Clara with its orchards, farms and villages, and the bay of San Francisco beyond, are stretched out as on a map, flanked by hills on either side and bounded in the distance by the high mountains of the Contra Costa Range. The view reaches from Mount Hamilton to Tamalpais, and on a clear day the steamers can be seen plying between San Francisco and Alameda, while San Jose and Santa Clara are apparently under the eye—though ten miles away.

The building, which was erected after plans drawn by Mr. H. J. Church of this city, is of brick, and with its nine surmounted by the Cross, is a conspicuous object for many miles around. It consists of a central block with two wings running further back than the main building, and a steep tower which gives an appearance of dignity to the whole. The kitchen is detached from the main building and only one story in height above the basement, but is connected with the house by a wide passage. The center building is sixty four feet in front and fifty five in depth. The wings are each seventy eight feet in depth and twenty five in front. The center tower, fourteen feet square, projected half its width from the centre of the main front, and marks the chief entrance distinctly from the general mass. Above the basement the central building rises three stories in brick, and a fourth story is included in the Mansard roof, which is provided with dormitories for the Novitiates belonging to the house. Below the sides the wings are only two stories in height above the basement, and are finished with plain sloping roofs. The tower rises pyramidally above the front and crowns the whole building.

Internally, the first and second floors are divided by wide halls running through the whole length and width of the building in the form of a Cross, with doorways at each end and sash doors to give greater light. On the first floor the front is occupied by the parlors on each side of the entrance hall, beyond which are class rooms for the Novices and junior Scholastics. In the rear of the building facing the south are the recreation rooms and library. The refectory, situated on the ground floor, is about four feet, is in the south-west wing. The second floor is divided into chambers for the Novices and for the Father Superior and his assistants. The east wing on this floor is occupied by the Chapel. The third floor, which only extends through the central building, is divided by the stair hall into two large dormitories, each having window on three sides, and measuring fifty three feet by twenty-five in width. One of these is for the Novices, the other for the young Scholastics who also reside in the Novitiate during a part of their term of studies. Above these are similar dormitories for the lay Brothers, in the Mansard roof which forms the upper part of the central building.

The water supply is obtained from an abundant spring about a mile from the house, from which it is conveyed by pipes, with a pressure sufficient to carry it over the highest part of the roof. The gas is supplied from Los Gatos, and the whole building is supplied with steam heaters of the latest pattern, which can be used in case of cold weather. The latter is, however, a very rare occurrence in Los Gatos, which enjoys a much warmer climate in winter than the low grounds around San Jose. Taking it altogether, it would be difficult to find anywhere a more beautiful spot than the grounds of the Novitiate which we have just described. But beautiful as they are at present, they will form a still more picturesque scene when the improvements contemplated by Rev. P. Mana, S. J., Superior in charge, have been completed, and among the most prominent of which are a specious grotto in which will be placed a magnificent life-size statue of Our Lady of Lourdes, modeled after the famous shrine of Our Blessed Lady in France. This grotto will be erected on the brow of one of the adjacent hills, and will be quite visible to spectators in the valley beneath. A Calvary consisting of the fourteen Stations of the Cross will be erected on another eminence contiguous to the Novitiate, so that students can perform the pious exercise of the Way of the Cross in the open air. In course of time other improvements will be added, so that this lovely spot, dedicated to the cause of Religion, may attract many souls to serve God in its sweet solitude.

Already there are a number of Novices attached by the Priesthood in the beautiful building consecrated to the Sacred Heart, but there may be many more Jesuit Fathers scattered throughout the country who would be glad to come down to some Sons of St. Ignatius, by joining the great Order he founded, and thereby find a home where they can devote their time to saving the souls of hundreds of others, and for the performance of such an Apostolic work they will be made to shine as stars for all eternity!

The building is erected, a Faculty of competent teachers are ready to receive postulants who desire to become perfect in God's service and also in the all important work of saving souls. All that is needed now is that several young men should "enter into the joy of their Lord" by commencing a few years within the hallowed pale of this beautiful Novitiate sanctified by and dedicated to the Sacred Heart. Who will hearken to the cry!

Mighty are some young men may deem themselves not sufficiently educated or sufficiently advanced in Christian perfection to become members of the Society of Jesus, but in all such we say Demosthenes devotion to God's holy will, place himself within the Sacred Heart, and who chooses the few out of the many that are called, will accomplish the rest.

Other young men may deem the rules or the vows of the Jesuit Order too strict to observe or too difficult to keep. But when tied is with all things are possible. He who knows our weakness, who knows that Heavenly Father who "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," will most assuredly manifest His greatness love to those who become His humble servants, by making the way of the Cross which they must follow, as smooth as may be consistent with the work by salvary every true Follower of Christ must travel in this vale of tears! The servant is not greater than the Master; and as the Son of God—after whom the Society of Jesus is called—suffered and died for the salvation of mankind, so must every son of St. Ignatius be prepared to "go and do likewise," as far as a creature in this ever-commercified sphere can imitate the unlimited charity and the limitless mercy of the Creator.

We hope those lines may fall beneath the vision of many a generous young man who will give a practical answer to the request of our Blessed Redeemer. "Take up thy Cross and follow Me." His Church needs servants in her sanctuaries, and blessed indeed are those who give their youth to God, so that they can serve Him in old age and earn the crown of eternal glory by persevering in the path which He has marked out for those who would be crowned in our earth in order to enjoy an eternal Easter in heaven.

If there are any such young men among the readers of the Monitor, we feel sure that there are many such, to them we say:

"Fear not! Spurn the worldling's laughter,
Thine shall be a long hereafter
To be more than temple thou saw."

It is stated that the principal witness against Mr. Parnell at the Special Commission will be Mr. P. J. Sheridan.

Mr Michael Davitt is engaged on a History of the Land Leagues in Ireland and America. Mr. Davitt expects the work to occupy him during the winter.

—Amongst the subscriptions announced at a meeting of the Parnell Indemnity Fund Committee in the Reform Club, Liverpool, was one of £20 from the Marchioness of Ripon.

THE ADRIAN AND ALEXANDER BULLS.

Pope of Salisbury Discussed.—How King Henry II. Connected the "Adrian" Bull.—Salisbury's "Metalophrasis."—Who Wrote the 42nd Chapter?—Proof that it was not the Work of Pope of Salisbury.

It was impossible that any false Bull attributed to Pope Adrian IV., and contemporary Popes, could have been so long and fully promulgated during the lifetime of King Louis VII. of France, for the cogent reason that the fraud would at once have been discovered in consequence of the King of France having in his possession the Letter which Pope Adrian IV. sent to him, in which that Pontiff flatly refused to give his sanction to any attempt at invading Ireland, which that Prince in conjunction with King Henry II. had planned, and which Louis VII. had presented to Adrian IV. for his approval.

It is for this potent reason, therefore, that not a single trace of the bogus Adrian bull is to be found in any document issued in England prior to the year 1160, which was the year in which King Louis VII. died. This incident will appear all the more singular when we bring to mind the fact that a number of occasions occurred when King Henry could have made good use of a genuine Bull of Pope Adrian, to quell the many riots which transpired between the spurious date of the fictitious Adrian Bull, and the year when it first appeared in print by means of the instrumentality of that champion historical falsifier of the twelfth century—Giraldus Cambrensis.

If the Bull of Pope Adrian was genuine, why is it that such a document was secretly concealed for upwards of twenty years after the death of Pope Adrian? Nor was it until King Louis of France had been for a long time in his tomb, that Cambrensis injected into his "Topographia Hibernica," for the first time, the dubious document falsely supposed to have been issued by that Pontiff.

The answer to this question is very simple. When Pope Adrian was dead, and King Louis was entombed also, the certain witnesses who had the power and knowledge which would enable them to discover and expose the fraud, could no longer offer any opposition; hence there was no risk to run by the injecting the forged document into the "Conquest of Ireland," by Cambrensis, so as to prepare the minds of those who peopled the world of Giraldius, for the belief that such a Bull actually existed in the archives of England. Cambrensis says that the Adrian Bull was procured by John of Salisbury, and that pre-mages says so himself. We have already expressed our admiration and the false levels with which Cambrensis filled his pages displeasure at the same time.

Although Cambrensis says that John of Salisbury procured the Adrian Bull, he does not say that John of Salisbury was the author, or forger, of the document. He declared, both publicly and privately, that he loved not better than he did any one else in the whole world. He had such an opinion of one that he felt pleasure in repeating his heart and his conscience to me whenever an opportunity presented itself. Though Roman Pontiff, he was pleased to have me as his guest at his table, and, notwithstanding my opposition, he would have it that we should eat together out of one plate. At the present moment he is conceded and gave to the illustrious king of England, Henry II., Ireland, to be possessed by him, by hereditary right, as Adrian's Letter, which are preserved to this day, plainly show. For all the islands, by virtue of an ancient right, are regarded as belonging to the Roman Church. Besides, Pope Adrian sent me a ring decorated with a ruby of great value, for the king's right of sovereignty in Ireland, and that this is according to order, preserved in the public archives of the Court.

I would marvel yet though if I attempted to mention all the virtues of the illustrious Pontiff that which deeply pierced my soul, a man whom, which, in punishment of our sins, desolation, just after the death of the Pope, the

THE MONITOR.

THIRTY-SECOND YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7 1888

THE "Christmas Monitor."

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All prose and poetical contributions intended for the Christmas Issue of THE CHRISTMAS MONITOR must reach the office by December 6th, so as to leave their appearance in our Christmas Issue, which will be published December 15th next.

THE CHRISTMAS "MONITOR."

SEND FOR COPIES AT ONCE.

Subscribers and others who desire to present extra copies of the Christmas Monitor to send to Friends throughout the United States, to Ireland, or any other portion of the globe, should send in their orders at once, so as not to be disappointed, as there is always a great demand for the Christmas Monitor. Ten Cents a copy is all we charge for the twelve-page Illustrated Christmas Monitor, filled with the finest Catholic prose and poetry we can procure in California, the Eastern States and in Ireland. Send it to your friends and show them what the Catholic Press can accomplish in the way of Catholic literary enterprise.

Orders in the name and address, accompanying each order, and the copies ordered will be sent by mail direct from this office, postage free.

Badly Baffled Malicious Methodist Preachers.

At the regular gathering of Methodist preachers which took place in this city last week, a more than ordinary amount of anti-Catholic malice was manifested. The Christian commands: "Love your neighbor as yourself," and "Thou shalt not bear false witness against your neighbor," have no place in the anti-Catholic creed from which Methodist preachers procure that Christian, crucifixion and uncharitable mixture which they call Methodism, hence at their Monday meetings the very atmosphere becomes impregnated with an admixture of bad manners and bigotry combined, which must be most pleasing to Beelzebub, but which must be equally hateful in the sight of God.

Friends and others who attended the additional doses of anti Catholic calumny at last week's Methodist meeting was a paper on "The Pope and the Gospels," prepared by Dr. Anthony, who presented the case in about as correct language, and in as truthful a manner, as a man born and bred believer on the sun, moon and stars of the heavenly constellation.

According to the account of the meeting of malicious Methodist malignancy against the Pope and the Catholic Church, Dr. Anthony [illegible] with expressions in Henri Lasserre's book which they did not approve, and so those restless Jesuits placed the work "in the latter list, from which" said Dr. Anthony, "there is little probability it would ever be taken, so that it was virtually suppressed."

Now, if this be a Methodist preacher who told this "yarn," our readers, no doubt would be astonished to learn that there is not a single word of truth in the whole story! Those people have become so accustomed to receiving the anti Catholic romances of ranting Methodist preachers at their real rales, that readers in general are astonished only when men of Dr. Anthony's tribe tell the truth even by accident!

The Congregation of the Index of Prohibited Books is comprised of a certain number of Cardinals, and the Jesuits have just about as much to do with putting books on that list as Dr. Anthony has in sending people to heaven!

Not was it the Jesuits—as asserted by the sanctified imagination of Dr. Anthony—who first discovered the errors in Henri Lasserre's book. This discovery was made by a French Bishop, and when his pamphlet criticising the work came to the notice of the Congregation of the Index Henri Lasserre's work on the Gospels was forthwith condemned. Henri Lasserre—like the good Catholic he is—not only assented to the condemnation of his book, but he also called in every copy known to be for sale.

Were Henry Lasserre a Methodist preacher, he would have approved all ecclesiastical orders and continued to circulate a corrupt, inaccurate and mistranslated version of the Holy Gospels—and gloried in the ill-gotten gold he derived from the deception! But Henri Lasserre is a Christian, and therein lies the difference between him and a fellow-of-his-pedaled Wesley.

Dr. Anthony told his assembled brethren that he thought the Pope "studied himself by first supporting the book and then issuing the act of the Jesuits forbidding its circulation," but as neither the Pope nor the Jesuits committed the acts charged against them, it is Dr. Anthony's "supposition" (he argued) the book was merely planned and the Archbishop's Imprimatur was procured.

When the page containing the necessary ecclesiastical authorization of the work was printed, copies of the book were sent to Rome, one of which was presented to the Pope, who, upon receipt thereof, instructed Cardinal Jacobini to acknowledge the receipt of the volume, which his Eminence did in the following letter:

TO H. GERMI LAMBERTI, OF PARIS.

Most Illustrious Seigneur:—

The Holy Father has received in regular course the French translation of the Holy Gospels which you have undertaken and accomplished, to the delight, and with the approval, of the Archiepiscopal authority.

His Holiness instructed me to express to you his approval of the object with which you have been inspired in the execution and the publication of that work, as full of interest. He thanks you for the homage of filial devotion which accompanies the volume you offer to him; and he charges me to make known to you his earnest desire that the object which occasioned your work, and which you believe in the preface of your book, may be fully attained.

Yielding most willingly to your desire, his Holiness sends you, from the bottom of his heart, his Apostolic Benediction.

And I myself profit by this opportunity to declare myself, with much esteem,

Your very affectionate servant,

L. CARDINAL JACOBINI.

Rome, 4th December, 1888.

Now let us examine this document and discover if we can—a matter of surprise which could be tortured into an approval on the part of Pope Leo XIII., of M. Henri Lasserre's French translation of the Holy Gospels.

In the first paragraph the Holy Father merely acknowledges the receipt of the book which has been approved by Archiepiscopal authority. In all probability the Holy Father knew nothing of the work was such an idea as is formed from a perusal of the title page, and then, seeing the Imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris, his Holiness very naturally concluded that the work had undergone the customary scrutiny of French the logical censors, whose learnedness deems caused for it the approval of Archbishop Richard.

In the second paragraph the Sovereign Pontiff approves of the object with which Henri Lasserre has filled when his undertook the publication of this work so full of interest. A Catholic may have a good object in view when he undertakes to write a "Life of Christ," a "History of the Church," or "The Four Gospels," and any Pope entirely their Superiors in everything or disinterested by them for the good government of the local organizations, provided that such local legislation does not openly conflict with the Decrees of the Holy See or those of the Supreme Moderators.

It is our will that in all books, leaflets and opuscules whatsoever hereafter to be published on the devotion of the Living Rosary, whether by the Religious of our Order or by persons outside of it, the Decrees of Supreme Authority, viz., those published in the little book, which now bears for all Sodalists of the Living Rosary legislative force, be carefully distinguished from all regulations that are only local, viz, those made by the authority of Directors, and which have only directive weight; these things we say, because we desire every Sodalist to be well instructed on every point as to his obligations.

If, then, there should be found, in books hereafter published on the aforesaid association of the Living Rosary, any obscurity, it must be interpreted according to the light given by the Authentic Documents; but if anything contrary to these documents be found in such books, it must be rejected.

As we are well aware that quite recently certain doubts have risen among the faithful in regard to this devotion, we expressly declare that there is but one Living Rosary, that it is exclusively under the care of our Order, and that we do not permit it to be united to any other association of whatsoever name, as, the Rosary of the Apostleship of Prayer, the Rosary of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, or any other similar association, but it (the Living Rosary) should be spread to the world as it came into our indulgences.

And in order that in this matter we will [illegible] known to all, we deprive by these presents, Zealotizer, Zelatrices, Consulters, Presidents and even Directors, in a word, all persons who propagate the Living Rosary so joined to any other association, of all faculties in the case, and we declare them to be so deprived, and we hereby take from them all power to modify in the preparation or government of the Living Rosary. However, the members of any association may belong to the Living Rosary, and, in the manner, the association of the Living Rosary may join any other association, but on this express condition that they fulfil the obligations pertaining to each association separately, and in such a manner that Sodalities may not be joined together.

Furthermore, we hope that this devotion now established on its own basis, and circumscribed within its own limits, will be more and more propagated, to the honor, of the great Dominican Rose-bush, and we earnestly exhort all associates, the more so, because just now our Most Illustrious and our holy Mother the Church, to implore piously with their whole heart the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary, the Help of Christians, and not to cease their fervent supplications to her, "to that by means of this prayer, as of a most powerful war weapon, the enemies of the Christian name, being all at vanquished and routed, may be compelled to abandon the criminal audacity of their impiety."

GIVEN at Rome, from our Residence, 22d of April, 1867.

Br. Joseph Maria Larroca, Master General of the Order of Preachers.

+ Leo P. P. XIII. Supremi Apostolatus, September, 1883.

The following duly certified letter, an exact transcript of the original letter written by Pauline-Marie Jaricot, about a month before she died, to the Director General of the Apostleship of Prayer, is one of the many reasons why the Dominican General was compelled to issue the instructions above given in reference to the Living Rosary:

Rue Sainte Hélène, Lyons, December, 1861.

Mon Bon Pere: En me rétablissant de la maladie dont j'ai failli mourir, j'ai cru que Dieu demandait de moi que je fasse connaître à Lyon, il est de mon devoir de vous faire savoir ce qu'on m'avait allier a la vie de la Volante de Dieu de prendre [illegible] Rosaire Vivant dans l'intention de l'Apostolat. L'ouvrage du Rosaire Vivant, tel, notamment que nous ont que Dieu gates XIX. la reconnu et l'a bénit, il a reen [illegible] Rosaire [illegible] Rosaire [illegible] Rosaire

Farm and Home.

The Origin of Tea.

The tea-plant grew for endless centuries in Central Asia, and the goddess Celestial Sung-ni-ang-ma, one thousand years ago, planted the first tea-plant. It ascended hundred years ago, and gives the following account of its earliest appearance: "In the reign of Yuen Ty in the dynasty of Tsin, an old woman was commanded to proceed every morning at daybreak to the market place, carrying a cup of tea in her hand. The first cup of tea she sold, and put from the house of day to the close of evening the cup was never exhausted. The money received was distributed among orphans and beggars. The people seized and confined her in prison. At midnight she flew through her prison window with her little tea in her hand. If you care to do so you can read this story and enjoy it in the original Chinese of the "Cha Pa," or "Ancient History of Tea," and will no doubt feel the translation secret.

Tea was not heard of in China again for three centuries and a half, when a "Fo-hi" priest is said to have advised its use as a medicine. In the ninth century an old beggar in Japan took a me of the seeds and "bore back with him to his native land. The Japanese relished the new drink, and built at Gaka a temple to the memory of the man who introduced it. This temple is still standing, though now almost seven hundred years old. Gradually the people of Tartary and Persia all learned to love the drink, and serve it at all hours of the day.

The honor of introducing the herb into Europe may be considered due equally to the Dutch and Portuguese. Early in the 17th century tea became known among "persons of quality" in Europe, and in 1662 some Dutch orders carried a quantity of sage, which was then used to make a drink popular in Europe, to China, and by some ingenious device succeeded in making the astonished priest believe they think it a fair exchange for an equal quantity of very good tea, which was brought home in safety and without the loss of a single Dutchman.

Fruit as Medicine.

Grapes come first, especially black grapes, which are most nutritious and at the same time are purifying to the blood. Grape cures are quite the fashion in some parts of the continent, and are said to work miracles at times. Peaches also are most hygienic to the human system, as well as being one of the most exquisite fruits in nature. Being defined in more palatable, wholesome and medicinal than a good ripe peach. Peaches should not be eaten over-ripe, however. They may be eaten at meals or between meals; they are particularly hygienic when eaten at breakfast. An orange, a peach or two, and a cup of tea, and one is as sweet as a nut. Oranges are also very hygienic, especially when baked or stewed. They are excellent in many cases of illness and are far better than salts, oil pills to cure constipation or liver complaints.

When oranges are taken only the juice should be swallowed; the juice of oranges, use of lemons, is most valuable to make drinks in case of fever. Tomatoes are also excellent remedies in liver and bowel complaints, and are certainly more pleasant than medicines; only the juice, however, should be taken. Figs, raspberries, strawberries, currants and cherries are all cooling and purifying to the system, while being nutritious at the same time. If we but knew the health, that is stored up by nature in our gardens and orchards, we would rarely have need to call the chemist. Health, for instance, is in the watermelon and cucumber. It may be taken in excess and in health, and almost in unlimited quantities, except when cholera is raging, when it must be avoided like most other fruit. This alone will tell how beneficial fruit in general is in all ordinary times.

It is claimed that the juice of a lemon squeezed into a cup of strong coffee will afford immediate relief to neuralgic headache.

A tea made of ripe or dried whortleberries and drank in place of water is a sovereign cure for many forms of scrofulous disease.—Dom Gardeen.

Culinary Axioms.

Mirth becomes a feast.
After cheese comes nothing.
Dwell never more than the labor.
Give a loaf and beg a shiva.
Many cooks make good kale.
Hunger makes raw beans relish well.
Sweet meat must have sour sauce.
It is good to be merry at meat.
A hungry man is an angry man.
New meat begets a new appetite.
The table rots more than the thief.
An empty stomach listens to nobody.
Great plenty breeds much delicacy.
Tripe broth is better than no porridge.
Where content is, there is a feast.
Meat is much but manners are more.
Of soup and love, the first is best.
He lirech long that lirech well.
Enough is a feast; too much a vanity.
Black plums may eat as sweet as white.
Hope is a good breakfast, but a bad supper.
Steal a goose and give the giblets in alms.
Salmon and sermon have their season in Lent.
The taste of the kitchen is better than the smell.
Better to go to bed supperless than to get up in debt.
Who gives thee a capon, give him the leg and the wing.
Twice in weeks bet there is the like of the same make.
Every one loveth the fat hog, while the lean one bemoth.
Who hath spice enough may season his meat as he pleaseth.
He that wants on another man's trencher makes a late dinner.
The best physicians are Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman.
Who boils his pot with chips makes his broth smell of sm-ke.

A Problem of Domestic Service.

The problem of domestic service in America would be solved if the women of America would treat their hired girls in the same manner that most treat their hired help. If very frequently happens that a mechanic retains his employer in his employ for a long term of years.

A banker is not changing his book-keeper or cashier every three months. The lady of the middle class thinks nothing of entertaining her husband's book keeper to dinner and, if the young man is gentle and worthy, she would not seriously object to him as an escort to her daughter on the opera. But she would not think of thus entertaining the young woman who does her housework faithfully, and the world feel outraged beyond measure if her son should pay her social attentions.

How with a social distinction is thus drawn between the hired woman and the hired man!

Is it to be wondered at that refined and sensitive gentlewomen, who by birth and the accustomed use of life possesses the very accomplishments so desirable in a good housekeeper, and whose competent and intelligent service would be the joy of her employer, shrinks from an occupation which bars the doors of society against her and represses every worthy ambition.

Family Fun.

A Sad, Sad Tale.

A stranger walk a sad, tired look and a manner indicating that he wished to escape general observation, came wearily into a little Western town the other day. He stopped at the town well to shake his thirst and bathe his flushed face and hands, and while he drank a denizen of the town drew near to quaff of the cooling water. He, too, had a sunken face and an air of great discouragement.

"Stranger here, ain't you?" he asked of the newcomer.

"Yep—stranger now, but I used to live round here.

"No—did you? Lately?

"Yes—it's nigh on to ten year since I left.

"And you ain't been back since?

"No; there's been a good many changes I see since then, and I don't reckon there's many left I meet know.

"Maybe not; who'd you know?

"Well, lemme see—there was a woman named Waits I used to know—Sally Waits.

"Did you know Sally Waits?" asked the inquirer of the town.

"Knowed her well. I—I—did you ever hear of Sallie?

"Yes, I—

"Do you know Sallie Waits?

"Yes, I—I—

The wayfarer looked carefully around, lowered his voice and said mysteriously:

"Sh-here, Mister; I've a favor to ask. It ain't much. Would you mach send not mentioned to Sallie Waits that a stranger was 'round askin' for her? She'd know it was me, and I'd rather have a hyperer say my trail than Sallie Waits. She's an liee I'm dead, an' I want her to cling to that idee. If you know Sally Waits, Mister, maybe you know how she took the news in regard to the devil. If she ain't was Zion-tippy I narrer on her. Look-a-here, stranger, you've got a sympathetic kind of a face an' I kivers you'd know how to feel for a feller than's went through what I have, an' throuh with, an' I feel as if I'd like to confide in you. Stranger, I used to marry Sallie Waits!"

The recipient of this confidence gave a little gasp and wrung the hand of the poor wayfarer, saying with deep fervor:

"Pry me, man; I'm married to her now."

They Got Their Reals.

Two young Wall street men boarded a crowded uptown elevated railroad car at Franklin street, New York, the other day.

"Pretty crowded," said the taller.

"Yes!—and it's a devoted shame, too, I'm nearly worn out with running. Been an awful busy day for me."

"No sonin here unless w—"

"Unless what?

And then the taller man bent down and whispered softly in his companions ear.

"All right," quoth the other as the gate was picked his head in at the open door and remarked:

"Fir-rooms str-ee-t"

The short young man smiled, the gateman further remarked:

"Hackensack-street."

And the tall youth from Wall street inquired in a loud and clear voice:

"He's things at the hospital?"

The passengers looked around at the speaker but said nothing.

"Pretty good," said the short young man. "Got a real case of Asiatic cholera in today."

Nervous movement on the part of old lady occupying two seats was made.

"Asiatic cholera, sh! That is interesting. Likely to die?"

"Shouldn't wonder."

Old lady and three marchioness leave the car.

"Rather discouraging, sh!"

"Yes, he's the third small-pox we've had in week. If it wasn't for our typhoid fever patients doing well we'd be awfully down.

Two countrymen leave precipitately, followed by a woman and a boy.

"By the way, did your diphtheria man get well?"

"No. He is there yet. Fearful case. Wonder we have not got the three men from the yellow fever district."

"Hackensack-street," cried the gateman.

"My station," yelled seven men, three women and a screaming boy simultaneously.

"Ah," said the shorter young man from Wall street, taking possession of one of the vacant seats and putting his feet on another, "I don't know what we would have done but for our poor afflicted patients."

And the rest of the passengers who had been meditating a mild break for the Eighth street station, listening to his remarks, realized that they had been fooled, but derived consolation from the thought that they had not been so badly fooled as those who started for Central Park and got off at "Bertookeeness."

A Sad Flatterer

Husband (tiper, late home; wife fasing up her hat before a big looking glass) Ah, dear! full of rancor, ready to give him a dreadful scolding) Why, my dear, what are you doing?

Wife (scagelishly)—Don't you see what I am doing. Fixing up my hair.

H.—Well—he—I m glad to see you doing that.

W.—And where have—

H.—I say I'm glad to see you doing that. For you—hic—have the most beautiful hair I ever saw.

W.—Where have you—

H.—I say you have the most beautiful hair I ever saw. And it just matches your face. For you have the most beautiful face—hic—I ever—hic—saw—hic—hic.

W. (smiling)—Do you think my face beautiful!

H (untinging hoots under the pillow)—You are the most beautiful woman in the world.

W. (in vinyl)—You darling John, you are a sad flatterer. Let me unbutton your collar for you.

He Helped Him.

Boy, pard, I'm starving. Gimme a dime for a meal won't yer?

The speaker was a sad-eyed tramp. The man addressed might have been one of the Mediterr 400. The venom of aristocracy glowed scorefully at the salon of poverty, allowing the eye to rest indifferently on the shaven cheek and chin of the hungering soul.

"Hush," he said, "hush a quarter. I don't give a dim fish yonah because I had fah the sake of economy grand get shaved."

What is Life Without Love?

Justice—Madam, your husband charges you with assault.

Madam—Yes, your honor; I asked him if he would ever cease to love me, and he was so slow in answering that I hit him with a rock. Im only a woman, your honor (tears) and a woman's life without love is a mere blight.

How Explained.

(Our Maid—My mistress found two fishes in the milk this morning, and she's terribly put out with you.

Our Milkman—That comes from trying to be generous. Why, gel alive, there was frost! put in out's compliment. They're with a dollar a pound.

Our Young Folks.

Best, original contributions of merit will be accepted for this department.

The young folks will address all communications intended for this department, plainly and neat, with pen and ink, and in a legible manner.

Boys Who Succeed.

Of the boys with the same advantages and equally good training, one will succeed in life, while the other will spend his best, "never amounts to anything," as the say has gone. Perhaps the following anecdote will explain something of the disparity to results.

A nurseryman left home for a few days on a business trip. He was rainy weather and call a season for sales, but a customer did arrive from a distance, tied up his horses and came into the nurseries where the boys were cracking nuts.

"Is Mr. Hoverdash home?" he asked.

"No," said Jim, the eldest, hammering at a nut.

"When will he be back?"

"Dunno. Mebbe not for a week.

The younger boy, Jim, promptly jumped up and followed the irritable stranger out of doors.

"The man are not here," he said, in a bright and civil manner, "but I can show you the stock."

The strangers was comfortable, and he and Jim strolled to the nursery, examined the trees and talked trees.

"You have said the largest lot of the season, I am, said his father greatly pleased, on his return.

A few years afterwards, these boys were left by their father deeply in debt, with a hundred dollars spare, Jim bought an acre of the nursery stock, and set out to work and he is still a poor farmer.

Jack went to sea, shipped a river for colonies, hard out as a cattle driver for a couple of years, and with his wages, bought a team of horses, and started a livery and market. Today, his herds are numbered by the thousands, his land has been up up to two hots, and he is one of the wealthy men of the Centennial State.

"I might have done like Jim," said Jim, remarkably, "if I had shipped to Jack."

"There's no good stiffs in sea as in him."

"Jim was lazy. He had the same stuff in him, but it was not developed. Jim's good side was also energy, which causes a boy to act promptly and fully in an emergency, or partly natural, but it can be modulated by genuts, and it is a earth more than any gift of nature.

Wanted to be Old.

James went out to the library one morning and found it empty. His grandfather's big chair, in the easy-chair, was drawn out near the table. James lifted offcorner of the chair and climbed into the chair. Then he took his grandfather's long Dutch pipe in one hand and, holding a large book open with the other, began to read aloud to pretend to read, for James could not read. He did not know how. He was only in the rudiments of his education, for he found that it taxed many. After a while he laid down the pipe and fathers among, awakened him.

"Oh, grandfather," he said, "I dreamed that I was you. How nice it must be to be old! You can read every word in this big book and do no pies."

"I don't very often read Hotten's Dictionary of Mechanics," said the old man, with a smile. "Now, you can use my spectacles. Now, you can see everything without pain, and do what you are asking you have."

"Why, but grandfather, you can do anything you please. You can ride a pony, can't you? I have the rheumatism, and I can't ride.

"Yes, I can ride a pony, so that indeed. Now I am too old to do anything useful. I have to depend on others to wait on me.

"Then it is better fun to be young and be after all!

Grandfather smiled. "Most people think so.

"Would you like to be young, like me?

"No, I wouldn't wave old, grandfather, I wouldn't have to mind anybody.

"Yes, you would. Don't you so that independent. Now I am too old to do anything useful. I have to depend on others to wait on me.

"Then it is better fun to be young and be after all.

POPE AND EMPEROR.

Correct Account of the Emperor William's Visit to the Sovereign Pontiff.

The accounts published by the daily press regarding the visit of Emperor William II. of Germany to the Holy Father, were partlaied to and the enemies of the Church, and contained allusions to conversations between the Pope and the Emperor which never occurred. The following correct account, sent by a special correspondent:

ROME, October 19, 1888.—On last Friday, the 12th inst., the principal avenue of this Leonine City were all en fete and adorned with flags on the occasion of Germany's visit to the Holy Father, and the streets were lined with troops and mounted gendarmes surrounded the vast Piazza of St. Peter's. Precisely at 1 100 the carriage of the Emperor entered the Court of St. Damasus, in which is the grand white marble staircase leading to the Pope's state apartment. The Prince Rampoli, in the beautiful costume of the Chamberlain's di cappa e spada (of the cloak and sword) was awaiting the Emperor's coming.

THE FINE SUIT OF PAPAL GENDARMES, in full uniform, were on duty, and on the lofty Palatine Corridor were a hundred lovely Palatine Guards with their drums. At the entrance to the great staircase the Corps of Swiss, with their most quaint costume, as designed by Raphael, in yellow, red and blue, and the Papal servants, in magnificent livery of crimson satin, with raised velvet patterns, and eight chamberlains in their fifteenth century costumes of black and white and gold, and with chains of office and velvet caps and feathers; also four chamberlains present in scarlet. In the midst of this group, so splendid in color and so quaint in costume, were the Prince Rampoli and the Marquis Sacchetti, Marquis Serlupi Master of Ceremonies, and many other dignitaries of the Papal Court, including the Prince Altieri, commanding the Noble Guard (dressed in the same fetes of the Swiss Guards and Monsignor Marini, majordomo.

SALUTING THE EMPEROR, led the way up the marble staircase to the Sala Ducale, which called the "Sala Clementina," where were in waiting Monsignor de la Volpe, Maestro di Camera, Noble Guards, more chamberlains, the colonels of the Palatine Guards, gendarmes, and others. Passing through the second state rooms there were more a row of picked men of the gendarmes in the third room was more Palatine Guards. In the fourth were the Noble Guards; then follow the Cabaret where the Holy Father says his daily Mass, and here were the officials called "Camerieri," or doorkeepers, Masters of the Ceremonies, and others. The hall is hung with green damask. The Tyrone mounts the Throne Pontifical, and the velvet and on four steps is covered with red velvet, gold embroidered, and is surmounted by a sapphire canopy in red velvet, and in the centre of which is embroidered the descending Dove, which rays, symbolical of the Holy Spirit. It was 1 50 p. m. when the Emperor reached the throne room.

THE POPE RECEIVED HIM STANDING at the foot of the grand Pontifical Throne, surrounded by his Court, and his nephew, Count Gioacchino Pecci, in the uniform of the Noble Guards. There was no Cardinal present. At the door of the Throne room the Emperor halted a moment and made two profound reverences, his head uncovered and his plumed hat in his hand, and then advanced towards the Holy Father, who advanced some steps to meet him. At this moment the helmet fell from the hands of the Emperor, and he quickly recovered it. Leaving the Pope, the Pope and Emperor then entered the private apartment, being alone, and remained 1 and in which, with jubilee and tears, and among many interesting works of art, was lying of the two last Emperors of Germany. The private interview, which occupied thirty minutes, concluded with the presentation to the Pope of the Emperor's presents, from which, with yellow satin damask, and in which, among many interesting works of art, are the two last Emperors of Germany. The private interview, which occupied thirty minutes, concluded, the Emperor presented his suite, and the presentation to the Pope presented his Majesty, with a magnificent framed mosaic representing the Blessed Virgin, and surrounded by a garland of flowers, executed by the first artist of the Mosaic manufactory, and for which the Pope had paid 24,000 francs. Then advancing with the Emperor as far as the door of the throne room.

THE POPE TOOK LEAVE OF HIS GUEST, and the Emperor went to visit the Cardinal Secretary of State, and he has been accordant I by him and by Mgr. Mocenni to visit the famous Logge and Stanze of Raphael, the museum, picture gallery, corridors, and Sistine Chapel, as, and ultimately descended by the private way into St. Peter's. It was half past three when the Emperor entered his carriage, and returned to the Palazzo Caprinica. In returning, several cards with inscriptions, Viva lo Prussia, viva Prussia Tedesca, viva l' Alemania e Germania, etc., were thrown into the Emperor's carriage and those of his suite. With this single exception, nothing the least disagreeable occurred, and no arrests were made.

THE PAPAL DEFENSE FUND.

The following subscriptions to the Parnell Defense Fund have been made during the week ending Saturday: Thomas Donnelly, Mobile, $1; Collegian, 8th Juvenile Mobeer, $25; T. Dunlap, 5th Ward, Mobile, $5; Mobile, 5th; Lazenaur Fairer, 8th Ward, $5; Mobile, 5th; Lazenaur Fairer, 8th Ward, $5; D. B. Murphy, 8th; J. Mahoney, 8th; Fury, 8th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; John Dunne, 8th; Cash, 8th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; Mobile, 5th; James Ryan, $2 50; Michael Kenny, $2 50; John Ryan, $2 50; Michael Kenny, $2 50; John Ryan, $2 50; Michael Kenny, $2 50; Michael Kenny, $2 50; Michael Kenny

POPE AND EMPEROR.

Correct Account of the Emperor William's Visit to the Sovereign Pontiff.

The accounts published by the daily press regarding the visit of Emperor William II. of Germany to the Holy Father are, very, jumbled to suit the enemies of the Church, and contained absurdities to convrentions but weed the Pope and the Emperor Malvin were entirely misleading. The following correct account was sent by a special correspondent:

ROME, October 19, 1888.—On last Friday, the 12th inst., the principal avenues of this Leonine City were all en fete and adorned with flags on the occasion of William II.'s visit to the Holy Father, and the streets were lined with soldiers, and crowds of people surrounded the vast Piazza of St. Peter's. Precisely at 1 40 the carriage of the Emperor entered the Court of St. Damaso, in which is the grand white marble staircase leading to the Pope's state apartment. The Prince Rampoli, in the beautiful costume of the Chamberlain's of honor « spada e cappa (of the cloak and sword) was awaiting the Emperor's coming.

THE FIRE BODY OF PAPAL GENDARMES, in full uniform, were on duty, and on the left of the Cortile were a hundred men of the Palatine Guards with their drums. At the entrance to the great staircase the Corps of Swiss, with their most quaint costume, designed by Michael Angelo, were on guard, and the Papal servants, in magnificent livery of crimson satin, with raised velvet patterns, and eight chamberlains in their fifteenth century costumes of black and violet and cloth, and with chains of office and velvet caps and feathers; also four chamberlain prelates in scarlet. In the midst of this group, so splendid in color, and so quaint in costume, were the Prince Rampoli and the Marquis Sacchetti. Marquis Bartolo Master of the Horse, and many other dignitaries of the Papal Court, including the Prince Altieri, commanding the Noble Guard, the Colonel de Courten, the Swiss Guards and Monsignor Machi, majordomo.

SALUTING THE EMPEROR, led the way up the marble staircase to the great hall called the "Sala Clementina," where were in waiting Monsigner de la Volpe, Canons di Cassera, Nobili Cameriere, chamberlains, the colonels of the Palatine Guards, gendarmes, and other Papal officers, and the second state room there was seen a row of picked men of the gendarmes. In the third room we were Palatine Guards. In the fourth were the Noble Guards; then follows the chapel, where the Holy Father says his daily Mass, and here were the officials called "Ussarabali," or doorkeepers, Masters of the Ceremonies, and others. This hall is hung with green and crimson damask, and in the Throne room. The Throne mounted on the Throne is covered with red velvet, and embroidered gold, and is surmounted by a baldachino of red velvet, and in the centre of which is embroidered in Silence and Dove, which rays, symbolical of the Holy Spirit. It was 1 50 p. m. when the Emperor reached the throne ROOM.

THE POPE RECEIVED HIM STANDING at the foot of a grand Pontifical Throne, surrounded by his Court, and his nephew, Count Camillo Pecci, in the uniform of the Noble Guards. There was no Cardinal present. At the foot of the Throne there were two Prelates habited a moment and made two profound reverences, and then one and one and his Majesty, on his right hand, and then advanced towards the Holy Father, who advanced some steps to meet him. At this moment the Emperor fell from the hands of the Emperor a purple biretta, and immediately descended by the private way into St. Peter's. It was half past three when the Emperor entered his carriage, and returned to the Palazzo Caprarola. In returning, several cards with inscriptions, Viva in France, mon Frede-Tricke, sans L'Alsace e Lorrea, etc., were thrown into the Emperor's carriage and those of his suite. With this single exception, nothing the least disagreeable occurred, and no arrests were made.

THE PAPAL DEFENSE FUND.

The following subscription to the Parnell Defense Fund have been made during the week ending December 1: Donal Drummond, $20; Bell Gallagher, 50c; Jeremiah Mahoney, $2; P. J. Sheehy, $5; Jeremiah Mahoney, $2; Jas. Sullivan, $1; Lawrence Fahey, $50; Jas. Fahey, $5; Jas. Fahey, $5; Jas. Fahey, $5; Jas. Fahey, $5; D. B. Murphy, $5; Michael Hennessy, $5; H. Mooney, $5; Jas. Mooney, $5; James Kelly, $5; Mooney Brothers, $5; Michael Mahoney, $5; Mooney Brothers, $5; John Dowse, $5; Carl Madison, $1; Mr. P. Madison, $2; Mr. John Carr, $5; Mr. Jas. Sullivan, $2; Mr. Michael Kane, $2; Mr. Jas. Weaver, $1; Mr. Jas. Weaver, $2; Mr. William McGlinnon, $2; Mr. Jeremiah Barry, $1; Mr. Wm. Revere, $2; Mr. Pat Grimes, $2; Mr. Michael O'Mahoney, $2; Mr. Tim Garvey, $1; Mr. and Jasper Connell, $5; Michael Dooley, $1; John Cross, Pat O'Brien, W. Roth, Peter Lawlor, M. McGrath, Michael Dunn, Jas. Lynch, Wm. Jones, Thos. Dunne, Patrick Dunne, $1 50 each. Previously acknowledged, $1,119; total, $1,235 50.

FAIR AT BOLINAS.

The fair held at Bolinas, Marin County, on the 19th and 20th of last month in aid of the Catholic church in that place was most successful. The wheel of fortune and lucky table were under the management of Mrs. John Lunes, who threw open her commodious home, "Bird Cottage," for the entertainment of her friends. She was assisted by a number of young ladies, who contributed the handsome fancy table, and were under the management of Miss McKee and Miss Lunes. The wheel of fortune, chances and tickets are valued at $1 in addition to the regular price of admission, $2 25; Miss Geary, $2 25; Mr. Mrs. Peters, $14; which proceeds amounted $753 50, which sum was turned over to the pastor of the church, Rev. Father Valentini.

CATHOLIC CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS.

—The concert in aid of the new parish of St. Joseph, will take place in the Mission Opera House on the 22nd inst.

—The grand concert in aid of the addition to St. Rose's Academy, Guide Gate Avenue, will take place this evening and the 7 inst. in the Metropolitan Hall.

—The entertainment and ball in behalf of St. Bridget's Parochial Schools, will be held at Golden Eagle Hall, on Monday, 26th November, the 17th inst.

—The Sterling Day entertainment by the members of the St. Ann Library and Literary Society of the Sacred Heart College will be given at the College Hall on Wednesday, the 28th inst., at 2 p. m.

St. Rose's Concert.

Among the many eminent artists that have volunteered to assist at St. Rose's Concert at Metropolitan Hall, on Friday evening next, are the following: Miss Lillian Blauvelt, Madame Louis C. Knell, Signor Campanari, Madame Fursch-Madi, Signor Campanari and Mme. Pinelli-Lewis. Tickets including reserved seats at

Poetry.

THREE NEW FLOWERS FROM THE GARDEN OF ST. MARGARET.

I.—ST. JOHN BERCHMANS—THE LILY OF PURITY.

Hail! Beleiam's brilsht, unsullied blossom!
Pale Flossish lily! hail to thee!
For Birth is filled with sweet perfume
Of thy celestial purity.

Namesake of one who, on the breast
Of Jesus leaned—thy resting place!—
Thy beddine bloom, in loss Dust
Unsoiled, " wased in sacr and grace"

As once, in lowly Nazareth,
Thy hidden Saviour's Childhood grew—
All fragrant as the lily's breath,
All standing with its stainless hue.

Transplanted to that bright parterre
Where Lora Divine "—'mid lilies feeds,
Whose whiteness like the path of prayer
And shores the pensaen-road that leads

To blest Perfection's exalt height—
How swiftly, on that Heavenly way
O, wilnest, 'mid His lilies white!
Thy charms unfolded, day by day.

Till rose thine incense breath so sicly
His heavenly gate, the King looked down
Where two dif'ent blooms on summit high,
And plucked thee for His fairest crown.

Then bade His blest Vicegerent show
Thy brightness to our mourning earth,
That ye lar sense sadly smile to see
They pure His chosen blossom birth.

Pale Flossish lily! meet to twine—
As gifts from heat Lent to a saint—
With proud Gonzaga's bloom divine,
And martyred Palmer's crimson wave.

For prudial soul-Ds's growing where
Thy radiance cheered our sanity wild,
O, win thou rich, celestial sphere
Of thy own wilissme sod-bled.

That Love Immortal, easing down,
May find each blossom meet to be Placed lonely in His fairest crown,
His lily-wreath of Purity.

HARRIET M. SAUNDERS (Marie).

San Francisco.

"St. Aloysius Gonzaga,
"St. Stanislaus Kostka.

NOTRE DAME COLLEGE.

SAN JOSE.

Gratuitly Distribution of Medals.

The usual quarterly examinations and distribution of medals, will take place at the close of October, in Notre Dame College, San Jose, under the patronage of the Most Rev. Father Colton, Address prepared for the occasion, music by professional persons, and regal thanks to the public for their laudable encouragement in Science, polishing and Docility, that beautiful feeling of obedience and humility, and Prayer to two angel guides that manual fail to direct the course to Wisdom and Success.

PROGRAMME—Chorus de Cavatada, as ex-phonic, Mi ne K (Pinsi, F.) Cantata Sacra (L. Amy); Salutatory, Miss A. Vosh; Chorus—Ave Maria (Gounod); Valedictory, Miss Good Conduct; Chorus—Ave Verum (Mozart); Chorus—Hymn to Christian Doctrine; The Sacre Lacre, Miss M. Mullen; Miss M. Molloy; Elocution—Miss S. McCoss, B. Lemmon; Chorus—Hymn of Thanksgiving; Chorus—Hymn Excellence, Apposition, Overture on Pinsi; Chorus—Hymn to Christian Doctrine; Chorus—Hymn to Christian Doctrine; Chorus—Hymn to Christian Doctrine

"THE JOLLY THREE."

Beautiful Women Carried Across the Atlantic.

NEW YORK, November 27.—Nora Fitzgerald, Kettia Donovan and Mary Cummings, three bright-eyed Irish lassies, conduct a boarding house in Queenstown harbor, Ireland. They sell apples, cakes and other things to passengers of vessels that enter the harbor. Their wincome ways made them very popular with the old tars in Queenstown and ever to them the sobriquet of "The Jolly Three." When the Union steamer Arizona sailed into Queenstown last Sunday morning the three beautiful women made ready to go out to meet her; each armed with a big basket filled with oranges, apples, etc.

Bumboat women are not allowed to board the Union liners, but "The Jolly Three" succeeded in stealing aboard. While they were selling their wares to the steerage passengers, Danny O'Brien's boat, which brought them out, got adrift. Before he could tell the officers about the women the Arizona's lines were let go, and, amid the weeping and wailing of the three women, the steamer sailed away from Queenstown and "The Jolly Three," with their baskets, were compelled to take a sail across the Atlantic. The women became quite contented after two days out, but poor Danny, the boatman, longed to be back among his rosy cheeks. Captain Brooks treated them kindly and said he would get them here in time to sail to-day on the Wyoming, but owing to the gales which the Arizona met she did not arrive until after the Wyoming had sailed. All of them are still on the Arizona, and Captain Brooks will not permit the young lassies to leave the steamer for fear that they have might come to them.

The Celtic, which arrived the other day, also brought a young lad who is "Danny's boatman" in Queenstown. His name is Johnny O'Neil, and he is 14 years old. He returns home to-morrow.

A PRUDENT PRIEST.

He Disagrees with his Bishop but Goes to Rome with Them.

The trouble which has culminated in Father Lambert of Waterloo, N. Y., having sailed for Rome, is said, on pretty good authority, to be simply a matter of jurisdiction. Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, has honestly believed that Father Lambert was still a Priest of the diocese of Alton, from which he came after the close of the war. Having so informed Rome, the Propaganda authorized Bishop McQuaid to interrupt the exercise of the ministry of Father Lambert in the Rochester diocese, and the matter of his legal residence was adjusted.

Father Lambert claims that he has been released from his oath to Alton, has been furnished with his "exeat" and has been a hunting long enough, under the Celtic canon, in the diocese of his adoption, to acquire a residence. He sailed with Bishop McQuaid for Rome to bring the matter formally before the Propaganda and await judgment.

Russia and the Vatican.

ROME, November 29.—After conference with Cardinal Rampolli and the Russian Envoy the Pope has proposed to establish diplomatic relations with Russia the same as with Germany, a Russian Minister to be sent to the Vatican, but no Nuncio to St. Petersburg.

The Parnell Fund.

NEW YORK, December 1.—Banker Eugene Kelly, president and treasurer of the Irish Parliamentary Fund Committee, said to-day: "None of the money which we sent to Mr. Parnell has been used by him in law suits. The money is his, though, to do what he sees fit with it for the cause of Ireland. We sent our last contribution, $10,000, by Sir Thomas Henry Grattan Esmond when he left here some months ago. We have now very little on hand, less than $500. We haven't attempted to raise any money within the past few months, because we do not consider the time fitting. We will have a meeting of the committee in a few days to decide what we had best do.

Portland's New Hospital.

PORTLAND, Dec. 3.—Archbishop Gross has bought five acres of land in a beautiful situation on the slope of the hills west of this city as a site for a new building for the Vincent's Hospital, paying $20,000 therefor. The site of the present hospital is near the grounds of the Northern Pacific Terminal Company, and property all around it has been built up and the situation has become undesirable for hospital purposes, and a more handsome and commodious building will be erected on the new site.

The Monument to Sheridan.

WASHINGTON, November 27.—Samuel Kitson the sculptor, is engaged upon a monument for the tomb of General Sheridan in the Arlington Cemetery. This monument is to be a monolith of granite, with three sides entirely plain. Upon the fourth side, looking towards the city, is to be a portrait bust of General Sheridan in bas-relief of bronze. The bust is to be surrounded by a wreath of laurel on one side representing victory, and of palm on the other side representing peace. Back of the bust is to be the General's breastplate.

A Catholic Church Burned.

St. Raphael's Catholic Church, one of the oldest at Saspatchin Bridge, was burned to the ground on Wednesday. The structure was built in 1854 and has been enlarged at considerable expense since. The fire caught near the furnace room, evidently from a defective chimney. Nothing was saved, the building being completely gutted. The loss is between $12,000 and $15,000. The parsonage adjoining the church on the west, caught fire but all except the kitchen part was saved. The Indian's private residence, a frame structure on the east, was partially consumed. The Catholic school-house close by was saved, although somewhat scorched. The buildings were partially insured.

Lobenstein's Invective.

For scorching invective, no one believes than anyone, we have seldom seen anything to equal Mr. Henry Lobenstein's comments on Chamberlain. Speaking of Blanford recently the editor of Truth said: "Chamberlain has been called a Judas. I do not approve of historical comparisons for they are seldom exact, Judas had some good about him. True he betrayed his Master, but he did not afterwards attempt Judas, dine with Herod, sup with Caiphas, sing the praises of Pilate, appear on platforms surrounded by Scribes and Pharisees and declare that he alone of the Apostles was a true Christian. Judas, I repeat, betrayed and Judas, No, he repented and hanged himself."

Cheap Fruit in California.

Fine Cal. Prunes, 20 lbs. for $1, at the old place—Sign of Shoshoes & Co., 537 Washington street.

Prescriptions.

Take your prescriptions to Frank S. Kelly, Prescription chemist and family druggist, Ist and Kearny, cor. 19 Eddy street, opposite Parrott Building.

—If you require genuine pure wines, brandy or liquor of any kind for use in sickness or holidays, Fulton St. Market of 908 and 910 Fulton street, can furnish your orders with full satisfaction guaranteed.

—Chas. Brown & Son, No. 38 Geary street, have just received a large lot of the best Imported Worcester Sauce, Pickles and Olives which they offer at reduced prices.

Correspondence.

We gratefully solicit correspondence from all parts of the Pacific Coast on matters pertaining to the interests of the Church or the welfare of the Faith.

All communications should reach this office by Tuesday morning of each week at the latest.

All communications should be addressed to the Editor of THE MONITOR, and not to any other person connected with the paper.

NEVADA CATHOLICS.

Our Gonzaloe Correspondent Tells of Mass Twice—Sermon in Spanish—Grand Lecture—$1,985 65 Result of the Fair—Those Who Labored for the Grand Success—St. Mary's School—Easter in Dublin—A Record of a Young Lady Pupil for One Month—Its Superiority over Public Schools—Concert by the Pupils—The "Enterprise" Makes a Statement—St. Aloysius' Sodality—A Newsy Letter Ably Written by Our Female Correspondent.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., Dec. 2, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—It is not often that the people of Virginia City are favored with a letter by Rev. Father Bouchard, S. J. It is rarely we are privileged to be present when the Grand Vicar of the Illustrious Loyola preaches in his own language the Sacrificial Mass of the Ordinariate. But when such an opportunity is afforded, then could not all these people who speak the language of Castile, Leon and Aragon, and feel intensely the pulse of Holy Church to the inclosure of the world. Such was the case last week when the veteran Catholic Hebe preached twice and gave a grand lecture—"Universal Salvation." Though on this question there seem to be many opinions among learned orators and profound thinkers, Father Bouchard gave a clear explanation of the teaching and Doctrine of the Church of Christ and the means of salvation ordained by a just and merciful God and left in the world as the medium through which men are to work out their salvation. I wish I could understand sufficiently the Castilian tongue to enable me to describe the Catholic Church there was in attendance. He then proceeded to explain that the dict not by any means strictly that all who were not in visible or corporate union with the only religious society on earth, organized and authorized by Jesus to preach His Life-giving Gospel to every creature under the sun, and that, and be eternally lost, for there are good souls who are not in visible union with the Catholic Church, and yet are united in an invisible manner to the soul of the Church, who will be saved, provided that their souls become them in the state of grace. Four months ago I wrote you that the statistics of the Sunday Sodality of Holy Church, and respectfully request the learned disputants, Father Young and Miller, who are now each at close over this matter, to adopt it as the result of their strange discussion in the New York Freeman's Journal. Rev. Father Bouchard had in his audience representatives of every belief in the Comstock, and they all agreed that the lecture so eloquently expressed was very fair. He left for San Francisco after the feature, but he will return to the Comstock next June, when he will give us a two weeks Mission.

Our Gonzaloe correspondent is able to announce through your Comstock news department the result of the Orphan's Fair, and as he does so he will respectfully call the attention of Catholics elsewhere to what their brethren here accomplished for sweet charity, expressed to them by our loved Mother Church. It is a grand showing. $1,985 65 represents the receipts of the Fair. Truly, the kind and generous people of the Comstock, the fair ladies who worked with untiring zeal and self-sacrifice, and all who in any way contributed toward the result, are entitled to great praise. Your correspondent, though a Catholic, is a stranger and a poor person, but is totally unable to even commend. Elsewhere in your columns the reader can see the individual work of the ladies. It is but right to state that the evareseers for the Angel Gabriel project, They were Mrs. Arthur Kelly, Mrs. John J. Sullivan, Mrs. C. A. Kelly, Miss Kate Street, Mrs. T. C. McCarthy, Miss Maggie Cullen, 640 Eighteenth street, San Francisco, Miss H. Harte and Mrs. D. C. Carson, Gold Hill, Miss Teresa Dockery, Carson, Mrs. Louis Morris, Empire city, Mrs. Hassman, Mrs. Hurley and Mrs. W. English Gold Hillers, Mrs. Mahoney, Mrs. Mullen, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Kelly, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. E. B. Boyle, and Miss Sumner. Mrs. Geo. R. F. Keating and Mrs. McGuire entered the quantity sum of $1500 00; Miss Dolly McCoss was the select lottery ticket holder, Miss Lizzie Kelly and Mrs. Delaherty are justly proud of their success; Miss Mamie Tobin, graduate of the nun home of Protestantism on the suffering world. But perhaps the Sixteenth Century was a bad bade age. The paper also stated they received but an indifferent support on the Comstock during the year. Well, Mr. Enterprise, you were more correct than you knew.

Yours truly, ALBERT M.

OUR SAN DIEGO LETTER.

Result of the Fair to Build a New Church.

SAN DIEGO, Nov. 29th, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—It is the duty of the Aid Society here asked me to send a short account of their Fair just closed here for the benefit of the Building Fund of the new Catholic Church. They cleared about $2 400 00, with which Father Chrisp proposes to start on the foundation. Following is a list of books and those in charge of same:

Candy and lemonade—Misses Dwyer and Gilmore, Mesdames Dolan, Wade, Wolfe, Ben Flower, Hall—table, Misses McCarty and Mrs. Hall—table, Misses Tracy table. Misses McQuaid, Gipsy tent—Misses Haddigan, Holbrook—Misses M. Mulvey, Sheary, Nesbitt and Mrs. Bell. Ice cream—Mrs. Alvarado, assisted by the Misses Altimirano and Alvarado. Postoffice—In charge of Mrs. Gillmartin and Miss Dohmey. Bazaar table—Misses Daily, Joy and Murphy. Trumpet—Miss Dwyer and Mrs. Brooks. Refreshment table—Mesdames McKenzie, Coleman and Woods. Shooting Gallery—F. J. Hinch. Fish pond—Mrs. Scott. The diamond ring donated by Mesdames Sullivan and Mesdames Altimirano.

Yours respectfully, MARCUS C. NEWBY.

A SUCCESSFUL FAIR.

Proceeds of St. Mary's Orphan Fair at Virginia City, Nevada.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., Nov. 27, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Following are the very handsome returns made by the ladies in charge of the fair held in this city for the benefit of the orphans in charge of St. Mary's:

Fancy table No. 1—Mrs. R. P. Keating and Mrs. J. McCoss, assistants, Mrs. Hanahoe and Mrs. Martin, $7,500.

Lemonade table—Mrs. Lennon, Mrs. Dolan and Mrs. Tracy, $4,000.

Refreshment table—Mrs. Rodgers, Mrs. Ashe and Mrs Dempsey, $[illegible]

Candy table—Mrs. J. Moore, Miss Walsh and M. Moore, Mrs. K. Kelly, $[illegible].

Shooting gallery—Mesdames J. Wheeler, J. Hinch, N Shannahan and M. Kennedy, $[illegible].

Wheel of fortune—Mrs. M. F. Jordan and Misses K. Ford and M. Dyas, $[illegible].

Fishing pool—Misses K. Leonard, H. Burke and A. Little, $96.

Ice cream—Misses K. Nevin, M. Kane and A. P. Kennedy, $377 15.

Orphans' Aprons—Misses N. Quinlan, K. Nevin, K. Ford, Mrs. Curran and Miss Harris, $[illegible].

Total, $3,972 15; expenses, $637 65; net proceeds, $3,337 25.

The Sisters beg to thank most sincerely the ladies who so kindly took charge of the various tables, and who, with their assistants, labored so indefatigably in the interests of the fair; the gentlemen who so generously gave of their time and their money to the cause, and without whom all the efforts of the ladies would have been invalid; the military companies, for their attendance and drills; the dolores of money and costly articles of fancy work and refreshments; the generous people who donated the $1,000 in cash, and many, many others, whose generosity and a comfortable home for the sisters have been built, owing to the successful exertion, and now there is but a little more to be paid on the remaining part of debt, to be accomplished by the end of next year. We have also to thank the Sisters and children of St. Mary's return most earnest thanks.

Sisters of Charity.

A SAD SEPARATION.

The Faithful Shepherd Parts from His Sorrowing Flock.

ANTIOCH, Nov. 30th, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—Sunday the 25th ult. Rev. Father Caron, O. M. I., of the French Catholic Mission, Antioch, delivered his farewell sermon to his parishioners, who were numerous, and the echo of the vast crowd who had collected to witness the last sad ceremony of their beloved pastor, Father and friend. It can be truly said that Antioch is in tears over him. For the last eighteen years Father Callahan has lived in our midst, doing which time he has shed the sunshine of his congregation at least, and the good people of Antioch, Oakley and Brentwood, have erected churches and a comfortable home for the clergy have been built, owing to his successful exertion, and now there is but a little more to be done to complete the work of debt, to be accomplished by the end of next year, and this will be done, if the principal need being met, Where shall we find a pastor to take advantage of it, and all were sorrowful at the thought of his leaving us. Yet it was, beyond the sorrow, a joyful one, for it was a well-earned holiday for a man who has spent his life in the cause of his Master. Every Catholic in Antioch, and many others, wish him the heartfelt prayers and best wishes of a grateful congregation, for the good he has done for them during the time they were under his jurisdiction and Catholics in San Francisco, as he has left a country home. At the last Gospel the whole congregation sang "Adieu, Adieu."

Ah! many an eye was bedewed with tears, Our guide, our pastor and our friend, Our soul adieu, our heart, our home, Must joys no more now come to end! Farewell, Father Caron, farewell dear friend, With aching hearts we now you greet, But yet we have fled these happy lines, Our cracks will leave at Father's feet, Farewell! Farewell! Farewell!

N. W.

REMEMBERING THE DEAD.

In accordance with the Scriptural injunction "It is a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead," the Catholic Young Men's Institute of this city, in connection with the Catholic Ladies' Sodality, assembled in their handsome rooms on last Sunday evening, for the purpose of being in order to assist at the annual solemn Requiem Mass for the deceased members of the religious organization. The chapel was tastefully draped in the sombre emblems of mourning and presented a very handsome appearance in its ornamental silver and black. A catafalque was also erected and suitably draped. Solemn High Mass was celebrated by Rev. J. A. Neri, S.J. Spiritual Director of the Sodality, the music of the occasion being very fine, and the sermon was delivered by Father Crochet. A large number of relatives and friends of the deceased members of the Sodality were present on the occasion and all were highly edified as the impressive ceremony is commemorative of the dearly loved dead.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for Consumption. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been cured. I shall send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and Post Office address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., N. Y.

—John J. Clark, Architect, 6 Eddy St., room 79 (St. Ann's Building), San Francisco; office hours, 12 to 2 p. m. (Oakland Office, Rooms 26 and 27, Dalziger Block, Broadway, bet. 9th & 10th.)

—J. S. LITTLE, Dentist, 116 Geary street; formerly of 1008 Market, Dr. Stevenson's old stand.

—Dry goods on installments without interest; jewelry, pictures, mirrors, hanging lamps, clocks, etc., etc., organs from $5 cents upward. J. Noonan & Co., 1027 and 1029 Mission Street, between 8th and 7th; open evenings.

"If at your case the girls you'd please
And win them, like Kate Kearney,
Take care to say, I've heard them say,
Go get a suit of Hearney."

The simple rule to get the Hearney, also the goods of the Irish Woolen Company, Dublin, is at Tobin's High Class Tailoring Establishment, Montgomery street, under Occidental Hotel.

—I receive twice a month a lot of imported cassocks. Suits to order, finest trimmings and workmanship. Clergymen's underwear made to measure, balance $2 50 a week; T. Allen, 1326 Market street, opposite 101 Fulsom Building.

—The Oriental's much-talked-of perfect fitting glasses, from C. Muller, optician, 135 Montgomery street.

OUR CATHOLIC SOCIETY COLUMN.

Contributions for this Department solicited from Catholic societies all over the Pacific Coast. All communications should reach this office not later than Tuesday morning of each week.

YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE.

—No. 55 is rapidly increasing in membership.

—Frank T. Shea will lecture before No. 86 next Wednesday evening.

—No. 7 will give a party at Odd Fellows' Hall on the 19th inst.

—No. 31's entertainment at East Oakland was very good and drew quite a large audience.

—No. 105 acted at the Mission Opera House was well attended on last Wednesday evening.

—Lecture No. 67 gave an entertainment and social at Chamberlain Hall last night.

—No. 5 of Stockton is gaining members at every meeting. They will shortly occupy a new hall which Rev. Father O'Connor is erecting.

—Institute No. 99 of Cloverdale, gives a social and entertainment on Thanksgiving evening at the Union.

—The Y. M. I. of New York has received the approval of Archbishop Corrigan and Monsignor Preston, Vicar General.

—District Deputy Richard Lannon will organize another Institute in Stockton during the coming week.

—E. W. Kirk has been elected Second Vice President of Institute No. 39, vice L. B. Lennon, resigned.

—An application for an Institute signed by 40 young men of Little City, Montana, has been received, and Special Deputy D. W. O'Neill will organize that district during the week.

—Rev. J. M. Bouchard, S. J., delivered a lecture at Virginia, on Sunday evening, the 25th ult., in aid of the Y. M. I., and the members are well pleased with the financial results. The large audience thoroughly enjoyed the excellent lecture.

—No. 36 gave an entertainment at Union Square Hall on Wednesday evening. The attendance was very large and an excellent programme was rendered. The farce by the "Athenians" was very creditably produced and greatly amused the audience. The "Athenians" are quite an assistance at Institute entertainments.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

—The branch at Benicia is rapidly growing.

—No. 7 will elect officers on Friday evening.

—No. 7 will give an entertainment in the near future.

—The Grand Board of Directors met last evening.

—Branch 1 nominated officers at the last meeting. This branch is doing excellently.

—No. 7 naturally feels elated over the success of their recent donation party.

—No. 1 will hold their first party at Odd Fellows' Hall on Thursday evening, the 20 inst.

—No. 3 gave a reception on the 23rd ult. The attendance was very large. Most of the members were in evening dress.

CATHOLIC LADIES' AID SOCIETY.

—No. 7 is rapidly increasing in membership.

—A branch was organized at Martinez recently.

—Father Montgomery's lectures realized quite a sum for the Sheltering Home.

—A basket social was given by No. 1 recently. A large crowd was present, and quite a sum was realized from the sale of the baskets.

—Branch No. 12 was organized at Concord lately. The officers were installed by Mrs. McCarthy, Rev. Father Anthes afterwards addressed the ladies.

OUR STOCKTON LETTER.

Successful Entertainment by the Catholic Ladies' Aid Society.

STOCKTON, Cal., Dec. 1, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—The concert and social given by C. L. A. S. Nov. 7, at Weber hall, last Tuesday night, was a complete success. The spacious hall was packed to standing room and many had to go away for want of room. The concert was entirely spiritual question. At the hour appointed the vast audience was seated and the curtain to rain admittance the crowd was so large. The following programme was rendered:

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

Armagh.

A young man named Henry Hoing at Aughnacloy, about four miles from Armagh, died from hydrophobia. He was bitten by a mad dog three months ago by a rabid dog, and afterwards was taken to the Pasteur Institute, Paris, and treatment lately treated by Mr. McIlroy. He returned some weeks ago apparently all right, and seemed his usual occupation. A few days after symptoms of hydrophobia were manifest, and he died on the 27, instant, after intense suffering.

Cavan.

The Rev. John Boylan, the eloquent and popular parish priest of Drumreagh, has had the gratification of seeing a work to which he has devoted the past eight or nine years of his life crowned with success. About ten years ago the church was partially raised, in a manner, and since that period the good priest has been laboring to procure means to repair the calamity. The task is ended, and on Sunday, the 25th of November, he will have the supreme satisfaction of beholding a the curious edifice solemnly consecrated. The cost of the work, including many other improvements, has exceeded their intention of being completed at the ceremony.

Cork.

A public meeting of the inhabitants of Kanturk was held last week in the Parliament of the Queen's Hotel, when a vote was passed to the Mayor, Mr. Lane, who presided, on the spot. A number of gentlemen who visited the neighborhood on behalf of the Flower Workingmen's Industrial Association, addressed the meeting, and delivered speeches which were warmly applauded by the crowd.

Down.

A grand bazaar for aid of the fund for the completion of the Cathedral of Down, which is dedicated to the Nativity (Assumption) was opened on Monday, Nov. 19. The affairs of the Most Rev. Dr. McIlvern, and his Administrator, Rev. Dr. McCoulle, have of late been a great source of pride to the Catholics of Newry, but by million dollars they have succeeded in completing the Cathedral, which is the finest in Ulster. The cost exceeded of the two transepts now in course of erection and the tower, which is to be left for the liquidation of the heavy debt that the present appeal is being made.

Galway.

On Wednesday, October 31st, the anniversary of the death of the late Archbishop Mac Hale, which was the occasion of a great gathering of the clergy of the province of the west, in Galway, the Most Rev. Dr. McCabe, presiding.

Donegal.

It is announced that Father Mc Fadden, of Gweedore, in response to repeated detections has arranged to attend a series of liberal meetings in Donegal and Derry, at which he will be joined by Mr. Dillon, who will also address the people on the Plan of Campaign. Gweedore has a splendid parish church, which is the most imposing edifice of its kind in Donegal. The place select, near Loughros Beg Bay, is a very picturesque one, Gweedore, and Greenock. The meetings will take place during the present month.

Kildare.

Religious exercises after an impressive character, commencing at Solemn High Mass, were and Benediction, were celebrated at Kildare Church on Sunday, Nov. 11, the occasion being the opening of a spacious, by the people for the construction of their beautiful church, on the foundation of which was laid by the late lamented parish priest of Kildare, Rev. Very Rev. P. Kavanagh. Solemn High Mass was begun at half past eleven o'clock by the pastor of the large and devout congregation, the Celebrant being Rev. Father Fitzgerald, P. P. of Maynooth, assisted by Rev. Father Ryan, V. F. Morris, P. P. Naas, Rev. Father Delaney, C.C. Athlone, and Rev. Father Hanrahan, P.P. Suncroft. The Rev. President of Thurles College preached a most interesting and eloquent sermon in which he referred to touching words to the late Dr. Kavanagh, whose memory he had enjoyed, and by whose wisdom he was now called and said Mass. Rev. Father Ryan, the previous evening, the Archbishop of Dublin had confirmed a large number of children that day at Kildare to save a few words to the people in memory of their beloved pastor.

Kerry.

It would be difficult to appreciate the services which have been performed in the Kingdom of Kerry by the Rev. Father Kennedy, of Ballyheigue, Tanner and Moore, Ballybunion and Tiffrin, M. P. for the Division, and Mr. Sheehy, M. P. and means for the success of the movement on the occasion of the Rev. Father Kennedy's jubilee, which took place on the 11 inst., was but for the stupidity of the police and the Government. The people were determined to show their beloved pastor the honor they owed him, and they had prepared a magnificent reception, but the Government, in the interests of the landlords, prohibited their carrying it out. Nothing daunted the people of Ballyheigue, Moyvane, Ballybunion, Tiffrin, Listowel, Ballyduff, Lixnaw, Ballyroe, Ballyseanna, Ballyguiney, Ballyduff

A FATHER'S FINAL CONVERSION.

A Happy Reminiscence of One Christmas Eve.

FIRST PRIZE STORY.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "R. M."]

CHAPTER I.

It was Christmas Eve, in a by-gone year, and Edna Gray was standing before a mirror arranging her simple, white dress. For months she had looked forward to this night with a feeling of intense pleasure. Throughout many years she had been attending a Sabbath School, and, no one could remember ever having heard of an absent mark against her for eleven years, she was often laughingly alluded to as "the immovable Fixture." This year, for her attendance and exemplary zeal, she had been promised a recompense more costly than that usually given to the ordinary Protestant Sabbath School scholar, and tonight that reward was to be here.

A change had come over the girl in the last few days; no one knew why, and, what may seem strange, no one cared to analyze. She stood, gazing at the reflection of herself in the glass, dreaming strange dreams. At length she said:

"I know I am not beautiful, but when I set my heart on anything I always attain my object. Every one likes me; it seems I possess the power to make others love me. I wonder what papa would say if I told him what is troubling me now, and before I go I must tell him, for I could not enter that festival hall with my mind burdened with this secret."

Just then Mr. Grey entered, and he looked pleased as his eye rested on his favorite daughter. "Ah! little one," he said, "you are growing beautiful, and sometime I shall be losing you too. What is it to be—a minister's wife, eh?

"Oh, pshaw, papa; nothing like that. Something you least expect. Let me tell you what happened on Sabbath last."

The child's arms were around his neck, and her head nestled on his bosom. She was so beautiful, and, in fact, until lately she had been considered quite plain, but she possessed that magic power of drawing others to her. The father gazed fondly upon his little one, and wondered how he could ever part with his "sunshine," as he called her.

"Papa," she said did you ever hear of Protestant Sisters?"

"No."

"Well, on last Sabbath, at the afternoon services, we were all startled by the appearance of two ladies dressed exactly like the Roman Catholic Sisters of Mercy here. They wore large black cloaks over their dresses, poke bonnets, and long veils thrown over the bonnets. Some say they had beads and crucifixes at their sides, but I did not notice that. Of course we were all very curious to know about them, and asked a great many questions of our Sabbath School Superintendent and Rev. Mr. E——, our pastor. They concluded that these were two Indian women from Free Masons, and that his brother Masons were bound to take care of him. "Who never read any Romish books, how, then, has this desire come upon her? I will watch her more closely hereafter. Oh! the little knows the depth of her father's bitterness. God grant that no evil may befall my poor, wayward child."

Morning dawned and found Edna busy kneeling in the old Catholic Cathedral, praying with all the fervor of her soul for Faith. What a strange feeling pervaded her heart as she listened, for the first time, to the grand, harmonious Catholic hymns! How her soul was stirred when she heard the "Gloria in Excelsis Deo!"—that thrilling anthem sung by the Angels so many years ago. And as she listens she prays that the peace announced to the men of old might find an entrance to her heart. Ah! well she knew, if she aspired to follow the steps of her Divine Saviour, she must take up her cross and follow Him. She must taste of His bitter passion, and, perhaps, her sacrifice would lead her on to death for His sake. How fervently she prayed, for strength to do His will in all things. Ah! well, we do not know what is before us. How happy is God Who rolls from us the bitterness of the sacrifices He demands until we have the strength to make them.

CHAPTER II.

Six years have passed and again the joyous Christmas time has come. The midnight bells are filling the air with their welcome music, and the faithful are wending their way through the silent streets to adore the God Who was once cradled in a manger. Again the clear notes of the Gloria in Excelsis breaks through the stillness of the midnight hour. Not now in the grand Church choir, but in the Hospital Chapel of the Sisters of Mercy. The gentle Nuns, who have offered their lives to Him for the service of His destitute poor, are singing His praises. The door of one of the wards is partially open, and the sweet strains of the sacred music finds an entrance there.

In the distant corner of the room lies a man whose form is wasted by sickness and sorrow, which, in a measure, he had brought upon himself. He had been lying awake for several hours, ever since the gentle Sister had gone her last round. A few days before he had been brought to the hospital in an unconscious condition, and it was feared, by a sister, that he would pass away while in that state; but to-night he had rallied, and the doctors had said that with care he might recover at least for a time.

His first impulse on coming out of his unconscious state had been to order a carriage. Indeed he could not understand why he had been brought to this place when all others. Expostulating with the gentle Sister he had told her that he was not Sisters of Mercy. Their Mother House was in London, England, and they were in Canada. Upon this the Sister had replied: "Why, dear sir, that question I can not answer, nor can I tell you why you were brought to this place. Our Mother House is in London, England, and they were sent from there. We are in Canada, and we have no control over our patients. We are under the Mother House in London

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-SEVENTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—A MERRY CHRISTMAS and a HAPPY NEW YEAR to all MONITOR friends, both far and near!

—A subjugum from Rome says that Archbishop Riordan left Rome on last Thursday.

—The Parnell Investigation still drags its slow course before the Commission, but nothing courted last week worth noting.

—Italian Catholics are arranging for a special Peter Pence collection at the end of the year as a thank-offering wherewith to clothe the Jubilee year.

—News has just arrived in Rome of the death of Mgr. Bouegard, Bishop of Laval, who had only been consecrated to the episcopate on February 2nd. His death is bewailed with much sincerity of sorrow there, as he had many friends among ecclesiastical circles in all parts of the world. R. I. P.

—Do not forget the poor in your list of those worthy of presents during the coming Holiday season. "The poor ye have always with you," says our Divine Redeemer, and extremely blessed is that Catholic who helps the poor for God's sake. There is a poor bar in every church, yet some Catholics never seem to find that out.

—London Punch proposes that a Christmas present of £500 be sent to Father Damien, the heroic apostle of the leper settlement of Molokai, Sandwich Islands, in order to enable that great servant of the lepers to provide a suitable church for his afflicted flock. We hope the proposition may be successfully consummated.

—The present issue of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR is memorable for many reasons, not the least interesting of which is the fact that this issue is the largest the MONITOR ever printed. We heartily thank our thousands of Catholic friends all over this coast and the whole country for this extremely gratifying success.

—A rapid and wonderful increase of the population of the United States was maintained in the late Presidential vote. The total Presidential vote was 392,000 in 1844, 1,410,772 in 1860; 4,676,853 in 1870; 7,219,947 in 1880 and 10,056,447 in 1884. It is altogether probable that the total vote this year has increased to nearly 11,000,000. These figures, indicating the growth of the country, are almost bewildering. Since 1860 the population has more than doubled.

—Every Catholic family should possess a Crucifix, a Statue of the Sacred Heart, a Statue of the Blessed Virgin, and also one of St. Joseph; so we hope that children who may design purchasing Christmas presents for their parents will bear this "fact in mind" and then provide each Catholic home with emblems of that faith and union with God which brings a perpetual blessing of peace, purity, and prosperity, through the prayers which statues and pious pictures suggest at all hours of the day and night.

—A New York paper relates the following sad event, which is only another example of the uncertainties of life: "On Tuesday George H. Forster was elected President of the Board of Aldermen by some thirty thousand majority; but on Wednesday he died without ever hearing of his success. He had been ill for some time. It was one of the most striking cases that can be imagined." It is one other illustration of the instability of human ambitions, human struggles or even human successes, and that the ways of Providence are beyond man's ken."

—That bigoted bye-word which has been a favorite phrase with all Irish haters in the past, when alluding to the natives of Erin as "the Papist Irish," will hereafter have to be buried in the turgid waters of oblivion, as Father Edward Brady says in an article on Ireland in the December number of the Catholic World, that during his recent visit to that country "he did not come across a single young person who could not read and write." Knowledge is a great power, and, in the hands of the Irish people, it will help them to attain Home Rule in the near future.

—The Belgian Government is again to be congratulated on the signal success of the "ballotage," or second election of October 29th, for the vacant seat in the parliamentary representation of Brussels. The candidates of the united Catholics and independents, M. Previn de van Brussels, was accounted over the Liberal, M. Orban, former Minister of Finance, by 8,049 to 7,637. This defeat in the capital itself is a bitter pill for the Liberal or anti-Clerical party, discomfited and disorganized as it is. "The result," declared M. Berge, the head of the Liberal League, at the stormy meeting held after the proclamation of the result, "is a veritable defeat of the Liberal party." The poll was an unusually heavy one.

—Father E. J. McCabe, who edits the Catholic Youth, the best paper for juveniles in America, says with forcible truth that "it should be regarded as a first and sacred duty to have a Catholic paper in every Catholic household; for it will always be a guide and a counsellor, and a teacher of morality for young and old. The Catholic paper is a reflection of the daily life of the Catholic Church, and from it Catholics can learn how to regulate their daily lives. The Catholic paper is also a defender of the Church, and as such is recommended for support by the leaders of the Church. This is precisely the mission of the MONITOR, and we ask our friends everywhere to send so much a new subscriber for 1889, as a New Year's gift for which they will receive our most generous thanks.

THE CHURCH ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Inasmuch as this number of the MONITOR will be read by many persons in distant lands, who have but a meagre idea of the progress which God's Church is making on the Pacific Coast, we deem it interesting to present a brief synopsis of the present condition of the Church in the several Dioceses forming the two principal Ecclesiastical Provinces on the western slope of North America.

Readers at a distance, when scanning the following figures, will do well to bear in mind that it is only about forty years since emigration to this coast commenced, prior to which time there were not a dozen Catholic Churches north or south of San Francisco, except the adobe edifices erected by the early Spanish missionaries for the use of their Indian converts.

Since 1848 the Catholic Church has kept well on a parallel line with the growth and development of the whole coast, and her progress, although slow at first, has become greatly accelerated during the past eight years, since the superb climate, prolific soil, and commercial advantages of this section of the New World have become more familiar to the denizens of the Atlantic slope, who have annually migrated westward in hundreds of thousands in order to participate in the prosperity and growth of the Golden West.

The consequence has been that new churches and schools have been erected during the past few years in every place on this coast where the Catholic population was of such numerical magnitude as to call for them, and when the number of priests and Teaching Orders in this Diocese would justify their erection.

It is also gratifying to notice that Catholic zeal has well increased in the hearts of the flock of Christ on this coast. This is manifested by the large attendance of children at the parochial schools and Catholic Colleges, by the increased attendance at churches, and by the liberality with which contributions are made to every object wherein Faith or Charity is the moving spirit in the appeal.

In fine, we can send to our co-religionists in all portions of the Christian world, the "glad tidings of great joy," at this holy Christmas time, that in no section of the Universe is there a better present or a more prosperous future for the Catholic Church, than in that section of the Pacific Coast bounded by the northern line of British Columbia on the south, and by the northern line of Mexico on the south.

"Westward the star of Empire takes its way," and each succeeding year will find the population increasing over every foot of land within these geographical limits. In this region can be found the climate of every section in Europe. Portions of it are as cold as Norway; another section of it partakes of the pleasingly variable climate of Great Britain, while in the southern portion—the land of the grape, the fig and the olive—a climate will be found precisely of a character akin to that of southern France and Italy.

On this coast, therefore, the Scandinavian of the north, or the Sicilian of the south of Europe, can find congenial employment for their industry in this great land where Freedom smiles upon all, and where Religion blesses every man's honest labor.

On the Pacific Coast there are two Ecclesiastical Provinces, viz. the Province of Oregon in the North, comprising the Archdiocese of Oregon, the Diocese of Nesqually (Washington Territory), Helena (Montana), the Vicariate Apostolic of Idaho, and the Diocese of Vancouver's Island, on British Columbia territory.

This Ecclesiastical Province extends from Northern California into a portion of the British possessions, and also takes in Idaho, which is under the supervision of the Ordinary of Victoria, B. C. The latest census of that growing portion of the Northwest gives statistics concerning the Religious affairs of that region in the following order:

Archbishop, 1; Bishops, 4; Priests, 120; Churches, 131; Chapels and Stations, 75; Colleges, 6; Academies, 30; Parochial schools, 29; Hospitals and other charitable Institutions, 10; Catholic population about 100,000.

The Ecclesiastical Province of San Francisco comprises this Archdiocese and the Dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles, Sacramento and Utah. The Religious statistics of this section of the Lord's vineyard aggregate about as follows:

Archbishop 1; Bishops, 3; Priests 275; Churches, 197; Chapels and Stations, 224; Colleges, 10; Academies, 35; Parochial schools, 31; Charitable Institutions, 24. Total Catholic population estimated at 225,000.

Besides these two Ecclesiastical Provinces on this coast, there are in the far North two Vicariate-Apostolic, viz. the Vicariate Apostolic of Athabaska-Mackenzie, under the jurisdiction of Rt. Rev. H. J. Faraud, O. M. I., and a number of priests of the Oblates of Mary.

These missionary Fathers have planted the Cross along the banks of the Peace, the Mackenzie, and the Lards Rivers, and around the shores of the Great Slave Lake, Athabasca Lake and Lake La Biche. They are assisted in their labors by the Sisters of Charity, who have opened academies on the banks of the Mackenzie River and on the shores of Lakes La Biche and Athabaska—thus being the most northern Christian schools on the American continent. The religious statistics of this region are as follows:

Bishops, 2; Priests, 24; Lay Brothers, 29; Mission Female Institutions, 6; Orphan Asylums and Hospitals, 2; Sisters on mission, 23.

South of this region is located the Vicariate-Apostolic of British Columbia, having for the northern boundary the 60th parallel of north latitude, and for its southern boundary the 49th decree of north latitude.

This Vicariate is also in charge of Priests and priests belonging to the Order of Fathers of Mary Immaculate, who have about 20,000 baptized Indians and a few thousand Catholic settlers and traders under their spiritual care. The following resume of information represents the Ecclesiastical condition of the Vicariate:

Bishops, 2; Priests, 24; Churches, 16; Chapels, 54; Schools, 10; Convents, 4; Indian Boarding schools, 3. The Sisters of St. Anne have an Academy for young ladies at New Westminster and also at Williams' Lake and Kamloops City. The Sisters also manage a boarding school for Indian girls at St. Mary's. The Oblate Fathers have charge of St. Louis College, New Westminster, also Industrial boarding schools for Indian boys, at St. Mary's, at Williams' Lake and at Kamloops City.

Christian education and charity go hand-in-hand in every Diocese on this coast, and readers of the MONITOR can realize the extent to which both these Divine ends are propagating the true Faith exercise their influence upon the people at large, from the following digest of the different institutions in the Dioceses named:

PROVINCE OF OREGON.

ARCHDIOCESE OF OREGON CITY.—This Archdiocese was established in 1846 and comprises the entire Territory. Its episcopal institutions are Mount Angel Colleges in Marion county, conducted by the Benedictine Fathers of St. Benedict's Priory at Mount Angel; St. Michael's College, Portland, under charge of the Christian Brothers. The female Religious Orders engaged in works of Charity and Mercy are the Sisters of the Most Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, who have very flourishing Academies, boarding and day schools in Portland, East Portland, Jacksonville, St. Paul's, Salem, the Dalles, and other places. The Benedictine Sisters have academies and schools at Gervais, Oregon City, Albany and Grand Ronde. The Sisters of Charity, from the Mother House of Providence, Montreal, Canada, have very commodious hospitals in Portland and also at Astoria.

DIOCESE OF NESQUALY.—This Diocese embraces Washington Territory, and among its institutions are Holy Angels' College at Tacoma; St. Patrick's College, Walla Walla, both under charge of secular priests with lay professors; Gonzaga College, located at Spokane Falls, is under charge of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus. The Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence have flourishing academies and schools at Vancouver, Olympia, Walla Walla, Cheney, North Yakima, Fort Colville, Tulalip and Sprague. The same Order has charge of Hospitals and Orphan Asylums at Vancouver, Walla Walla, Olympia, Seattle and Spokane Falls. The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary have a very flourishing academy at Seattle; the Sisters of St. Benedict have boarding and day schools at Tacoma and also at Cainstown. Father Chemers has a day school for boys at Olympia, and there are a number of schools for Indians in the Diocese.

DIOCESE OF HELENA.—This Diocese comprises the Territory of Montana, and although it was not erected until 1884, it has made wonderful progress in that brief period. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Vincent's Academy and St. John's Hospital in Helena, both conducted by the Sisters of Charity, of Leavenworth, Kansas, who also have useful schools at several of the Indian Reservations, where the Fathers of the Society of Jesus have schools for both white and Indian children. The Ursuline Sisters have schools at Miles City, also on the Crow Indian Reservation, and they also conduct Indian schools among the Cheyennes, at Ashland, and among the Blackfeet Indians. The Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence conduct schools on the Flathead Indian Reservation, they also have charge of St. Clare's Hospital at Helena, and St. Patrick's Hospital at Missoula City. St. James' Hospital, at Butte City, is in charge of the Sisters of Charity from Leavenworth. St. Aloysius' College at Helena, is conducted by Mr. M. Kenny and assistants.

DIOCESE OF VANCOUVER ISLAND.—This Diocese embraces Vancouver Island and Mainland Territory, being one of the largest Dioceses in the world. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Louis College, Victoria, V. I., Principal, Rev. J. A. Van Neevel, and a Boarding school for young ladies, and a Kindergarten school are conducted in Victoria by the Sisters of St. Anne, who also have schools at Nanaimo and Cowichan, as well as hospitals and schools at Juneau City.

VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF TYNDALL.—This vicariate comprises the Territory of Idaho, and although established in 1868, its progress has been somewhat slow in consequence of the sparsity of population. The educational institutions are St. Joseph's Academy, in Boise City, conducted by the Sisters of Providence; St. Aloysius' Academy at Lewiston, conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis; a boy's school at the Desert Mission and a day school at Nez Perces Mission, both under the supervision of the Society of Jesus.

PROVINCE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

ARCHDIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The educational and charitable institutions of this Archdiocese are both numerous and influential. The leading educational institutions are Santa Clara College, at Santa Clara, under the direction of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, and staff of Professors. This institution is said, even by non-Catholics, to be the most prominent in educational facilities in California. St. Mary's College is this city, is under charge of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who are at present in possession of magnificent structures in Oakland, to which they expect to remove some time next spring. St. Ignatius College is this city, is under charge of the members of the Society of Jesus. Sacred Heart College is under the supervision of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who also have charge of parochial schools in this city, as well as educational institutions at Oakland, Martinez, West Oakland, and Brooklyn. The Brothers of Mary have charge of St. Patrick's College, Brooklyn, and St. Joseph's parochial school for boys, in this city. The Sisters of Notre Dame have College, Academies and schools at San Jose, Santa Clara, San Francisco, Alameda, Redwood City, and Petaluma. The Sisters of the Most Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, conduct Academies, select and parochial schools, in San Francisco, Oakland, and Tuscanos. The Sisters of Mercy conduct schools in San Francisco, Oakland, Brooklyn, and Rio Vista. The Sisters of the Presentation conduct schools in San Francisco, Berkeley, and Sonoma. The Sisters of St. Joseph conduct schools in West Oakland. The Dominican Sisters conduct schools in Stockton, San Francisco, Vallejo and San Leandro. The Ladies of the Sacred Heart conduct a Young Ladies Academy in this city. The Ursuline Sisters conduct an Academy at Santa Rosa, and the Sisters of Charity conduct an Academy, in this city, and also have charge of the Male and Female Orphan Asylums, the Foundling Hospital and the Lying In Hospital in this city. The Sisters of Mercy have charge of St. Mary's Hospital, the Magdalen Asylum, the Home of Mercy, and Our Lady's Home for Aged and Infirm Females, in this city. The Sisters of Charity have charge of St. Mary's Hospital, the Magdalen Asylum, the Foundling Hospital and the Lying In Hospital in this city. The Sisters of Mercy have charge of St. Mary's Hospital, the Magdalen Asylum, the Home of Mercy, and Our Lady's Home for Aged and Infirm Females, in this city. The Sisters of Charity have charge of the Male and Female Orphan Asylums

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1888.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

—A MERRY CHRISTMAS and a HAPPY NEW YEAR to all MONITOR friends, both far and near!

—A sahlagram from Rome says that Archbishop Riordan left Rome on last Thursday.

—The Parnell Investigation still drags its slow course before the Commission, but nothing courted last week worth noting.

—Italian Catholics are arranging for a special Peter Pence collection at the end of the year as a thank-offering wherewith to close the Jubilee year.

—News has just arrived in Rome of the death of Mgr. Bougard, Bishop of Laval, who had only been consecrated to the episcopate on February 2nd. His death is bewailed with much sincerity of sorrow there, as he had many friends among ecclesiastical circles in all parts of the world. R. I. P.

—Do not forget the poor in your list of those worthy of presents during the coming Holiday season. "The poor ye have always with you," says our Divine Redeemer, and extremely blessed is that Catholic who helps the poor for God's sake. There is a poor boy in every church, yet some Catholics never seem to find that out.

—London Punch proposes that a Christmas present of £500 be sent to Father Damien, the heroic apostle of the leper settlement of Molokai, Sandwich Islands, in order to enable that great servant of the lepers to provide a suitable church for his afflicted flock. We hope the proposition may be successfully consummated.

—The present issue of the CHRISTMAS MONITOR is memorable for many reasons, not the least interesting of which is the fact that this issue is the largest the MONITOR ever presented. We heartily thank our thousands of Catholic friends all over the coast and the whole country for this extremely gratifying success.

—A rapid and wonderful increase in the population of the United States was manifested in the late Presidential vote. The total Presidential vote was 302,069 in 1824, 1,410,772 in 1860, 4,076,853 in 1870, 7,219,947 in 1880 and 10,056,447 in 1884. It is altogether probable that the total vote this year has increased to nearly 11,000,000. These figures, indicating the growth of the country, are almost bewildering. Since 1860 the population has more than doubled.

—Every Catholic family should possess a Crucifix, a Statue of the Sacred Heart, a Statue of the Blessed Virgin, and also one of St. Joseph; so we hope that children who may design purchasing Christmas presents for their parents will bear the "fact in mind and thus provide each Catholic home with emblems of that faith and union with God which brings a perpetual blessing of peace, purity, and prosperity, through the prayers which statues and pious pictures suggest at all hours of the day and night.

—A New York paper relates the following and event, which is only another example of the uncertainties of life: "On Tuesday George H. Forster was elected President of the Board of Aldermen by seven thirty-thousand majority; but on Wednesday he died without ever hearing of his success. He had been ill for some time. It was one of the most touching cases that can be imagined. It is one other illustration of the instability of human ambitions, human strugles or even human successes, and that the ways of Providence are beyond man's ken."

—That bigotial bye-word which has been a favorite phrase with all Irish haters in the past, when alluding to the natives of Erin as "the ignorant Irish," will hereafter have to be buried in the turgid waters of oblivion, as Father Edward Brady says in an article on Ireland in the December number of the Catholic World, that during his recent visit to that country "he did not come across a single young person who could not read and write." Knowledge is a great power, and, in the hands of the Irish people, it will help them to attain Home Rule in the near future.

—The Belgian Government is again to be congratulated on the signal success of the "ballotage," or second election of October 29th, for the vacant seat in the parliamentary representation of Brussels. The candidate of the united Catholics and independents, M. Fuvis de ten Bossche, was accounted over the Liberal, M. Graux, former Minister of Finance, by 8,049 to 7,837. This defeat in the'capital itself is a bitter pill for the Liberal or anti-Clerical party, dismisted and disorganized as it is. "The result," declared M. Borge, the head of the Liberal League, at the stormy meeting held after the proclamation of the result, 'is a veritable defeat of the Liberal party." The poll was an unusually heavy one.

—Father E. J. McGuire, who edits the Catholic Youth, the best paper for juveniles in America, says with forcible truth that "it should be regarded as a first and sacred duty to have a Catholic paper in every Catholic household; for it will always be a guide and a counsellor, and a teacher of morality for young and old. The Catholic paper is a reflection of the daily life of the Catholic Church, and from it Catholics can learn how to regulate their daily lives. The Catholic paper is also a defender of the Church, and as such is recommended for support by the leaders of the Church. This is precisely the mission of the MONITOR, and we ask our friends everywhere to send in such a new subscriber for 1889, as a New Year's gift for which they will receive our most generous thanks.

THE CHURCH ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

INASMUCH as this number of the MONITOR will be read by many persons in distant lands, who have but a meagre idea of the progress which God's Church is making on the Pacific Coast, we deem it interesting to present a brief synopsis of the present condition of the Church in the several Dioceses forming the two principal Ecclesiastical Provinces on the western slope of North America.

Beneath at a distance, when scanning the following figures, will do well to bear in mind that it is only about forty years since magnitude to the coast commenced, prior to which time there were not a dozen Catholic Churches north or south of San Francisco, except the adobe edifices erected by the early Spanish missionaries for the use of their Indian converts.

Since 1848 the Catholic Church has kept well on a parallel line with the growth and development of the whole coast, and her progress, although slow at first, has become greatly accelerated during the past eight years, since the superb climate, prolific soil, and commercial advantages of this section of the New World have become more familiar to the denizens of the Atlantic slope, who have annually migrated westward in hundreds of thousands in order to participate in the prosperity and growth of the Golden West.

The consequence has been that new churches and schools have been erected during the past few years in every place on this coast where the Catholic population was of such numerical magnitude as to call for them, and when the number of priests and Teaching Orders in the Diocese would justify their erection.

It is also gratifying to notice that Catholic zeal has will increased in the hearts of the flock of Christ on this coast. This is manifested by the large attendance of children at the parochial schools and Catholic Colleges, by the increased attendance at churches, and by the liberality with which contributions are made to every object wherein Faith or Charity is the moving spirit in the appeal.

In fine, we can send to our co-religionists in all portions of the Christian world, the joyful tidings of great joy," at this holy Christmas time, that in no section of the Universe is there a better present or a more prosperous future for the Catholic Church, than in that section of the Pacific Coast bounded by the northern line of British Columbia on the north, down to the northern line of Mexico on the south.

"Westward the star of Empire takes its way," and each succeeding year will find the population increasing over every foot of land within these geographical limits. In this region can be found the climate of every season in Europe. Portions of it are as cold as Norway; another section of it partakes of the pleasingly variable climate of Great Britain, while in the southern portion—the land of the grape, the fig and the olive—a climate will be found precisely of a character akin to that of southern France and Italy.

On this coast, therefore, the Scandinavian of the north, or the Sicilian of the south of Europe, can find congenial employment for their industry in this great land where Freedom smiles upon all, and where Religion blesses every man's honest labor.

On the Pacific Coast there are two Ecclesiastical Provinces, viz. the Province of Oregon in the North, comprising the Archdiocese of Oregon, the Diocese of Nesqualy (Washington Territory), Helena (Montana), the Vicariate Apostolic of Idaho, and the Diocese of Vancouver's Island, on British Columbia territory.

This Ecclesiastical Province extends from Northern California into a portion of the British possessions, and also takes in Idaho, which is under the supervision of the Ordinary of Victoria, B. C. The latest census of this growing portion of the Northwest gives statistics concerning the Religious affairs of that region in the following order:

Archbishop, 1; Bishops, 6; Priests, 120; Churches, 131; Chapels and Stations, 75; Missions, 6; Academies, 30; Parochial schools, 29; Hospitals and other charitable institutions, 20; Catholic population about 100,000.

The Ecclesiastical Province of San Francisco comprises this Archdiocese and the Dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles, Sacramento and Utah. The Religious statistics of this section of the Lord's vineyard aggregate about as follows:

Archbishop 1; Bishops, 3; Priests 275; Churches, 197; Chapels and Stations, 234; Colleges, 10; Academies, 35; Parochial schools, 31; Charitable Institutions, 24. Total Catholic population estimated at 325,000.

Besides these two Ecclesiastical Provinces on this coast, there are in the far North two Vicariate-Apostolic, viz. the Vicariate-Apostolic of Athabaska Mackenzie, under the jurisdiction of Rt. Rev. H. J. Faraud, O. M. I., and a number of priests of the Oblates of Mary.

These missionary Fathers have planted the Cross along the banks of the Peace, the Mackenzie, and the Lards Rivers, and around the shores of the great Slave Lake, Athabasca Lake and Lake La Biche. They are assisted in their labors by the Sisters of Charity, who have opened academies on the banks of the Mackenzie River and on the borders of Lakes La Biche and Athabaska—these being the most northern Christian schools on the American continent. The religious statistics of this region are as follows:

Bishops, 2; Priests, 24; Lay Brothers, 26; Male and Female Institutions, 6; Orphan Asylums and Hospitals, 6; Sisters on mission, 23.

South of this region is the Vicariate-Apostolic of British Columbia, having for its northern boundary the 60th parallel of north latitude, and for its southern boundary the 49th decree of north latitude.

This Vicariate is also in charge of Priests and priests belonging to the Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, who have about 20,000 baptized Indians and a few thousand Catholic settlers and traders under their spiritual care. The following ecclesiastical statistics are the Ecclesiastical condition of the Vicariate:

Bishops, 2; Priests, 22; Churches, 16; Chapels, 64; Schools, 10; Convents, 4; Indian Boarding schools, 3. The Sisters of St. Anne have academies for young ladies at New Westminster and also at Williams' Lake and Kamloops City.

The Sisters also manage a boarding school for Indian girls at St. Mary's. The Oblate Fathers have charge of St. Louis College, New Westminster, also Industrial boarding schools for Indian boys, at St. Mary's, at Williams' Lake and at Kamloops City.

Christian education and charity go hand-in-hand in every Diocese on the coast, and readers of the MONITOR can realize the extent to which both those Divine factors in propagating the true Faith exercise their influence upon the people at large, from the following figures of the different institutions in the Dioceses named:

PROVINCE OF OREGON.

ARCHDIOCESE OF OREGON CITY.—This Archdiocese was established in 1846 and comprises the State of Oregon. Its episcopal institutions are Mount Angel College in Marion county, conducted by the Benedictine Fathers of St. Benedict's Priory at Mount Angel; St. Michael's College, Portland, under charge of the Christian Brothers. The Female Religious Orders engaged in works of Charity and Mercy are the Sisters of the Most Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, who have very flourishing academies, boarding and day schools in Portland, East Portland, Jacksonville, St. Paul's, Salem, the Dalles, and other places. The Benedictine Sisters have academies and schools at Gervais, Oregon City, Albany and Upper Scotts. The Sisters of Charity, from the Mother House of Providence, Montreal, Canada, have very commodious academies in Portland and also at Gervais.

DIOCESE OF NESQUALLY.—This Diocese embraces Washington Territory, and among its institutions are Holy Angels' College at Tacoma; St. Patrick's College, Walla Walla, both under charge of secular priests with lay assistants. Gonzaga College, located at Spokane Falls, is under charge of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus. The Sisters of Charity of the Province of Providence have flourishing academies and schools at Vancouver, Olympia, Walla Walla, Cheney, North Yakima, Fort Colville, Tulalip and Sprague. The same Order has charge of Hospitals and Orphan Asylums at Vancouver, Walla Walla, Olympia, Seattle and Spokane Falls. The Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary have very flourishing academy at Seattle; the Sisters of St. Benedict have boarding and day schools at Fairvey and also at Cathlamet. Father Claessens has a day school for boys at Olympia, and there are numbers of schools for Indians in the Diocese.

DIOCESE OF HELENA.—This Diocese comprises the Territory of Montana, and although it was not erected until 1883, it has made wonderful progress in that brief period. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Vincent's Academy and St. John's Hospital in Helena, both conducted by the Sisters of Charity, of Leavenworth, Kansas, who also have useful schools at several of the Indian Reservations, where the Fathers of the Society of Jesus have schools for both white and Indian children. The Ursuline Sisters have schools at Ursuline City, also on the Crow Indian Reservation, and they also conduct Indian schools among the Cheyennes, at Ashland, and among the Blackfeet Indians. The Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence conduct schools on the Flathead Indian Reservation, they also have charge of St. Chase's Hospital at Helena, and St. Patrick's Hospital at Missoula City. St. James' Hospital, at Butte City, is in charge of the Sisters of Charity from Leavenworth. St. Mary's Hospital, at Helena, is conducted by Mr. M. Kenny and assistants.

DIOCESE OF VANCOUVER ISLAND.—This Diocese embraces Vancouver Island and Alaska Territory, being one of the largest Dioceses in the world. Among its educational and charitable institutions are St. Louis College, Victoria, V. I., Principal, Rev. J. A. Van Neevel; Nanaimo Indian Academy, at Orphan Asylum, and a Kindergarten school are conducted in Victoria by the Sisters of St. Anne, who also have schools at Nanaimo and Cowichan, as well as hospitals and schools at Juneau City.

VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF IDAHO.—The Vicariate was erected in 1868, and comprises the Territory of Idaho and several of the counties of Nevada. Its principal educational and charitable institutions comprise All Hallows College in Salt Lake City, a first-class College for boys and young men, and also an Academy and large Family comprising the Rev. Clergy and a number of students preparing for the priesthood. The Sisters of Holy Cross have a number of educational and charitable institutions scattered throughout Utah, among which are the boarding Mary's Academy, St. Joseph's School, Holy Cross School and Holy Cross Hospital, all located in Salt Lake City. The same Order also direct Sacred Heart Academy and St. Joseph's School at Ogden; St. Mary's of the Assumption School at Park City, and also St. John's School and St. John's Hospital at Silver Reef.

The foregoing succinct synopsis of the educational advantages presented by Catholic institutions on this coast, will give readers abroad, who may contemplate making their future home on this Western shore, a clear idea of the facilities which always exist for educating their children. The brief statistics we furnish will also tend to enlarge the minds of many at a distance, who may be impressed with the idea that the Pacific slope is yet in a state of chaos so far as religious education is concerned, and such fears should be set aside at once, as there are just as many social, spiritual and intellectual advantages to be found on this coast as there exist in any other portion of the American Continent.

San Francisco's Progress.

In the December issue of Modern Times, Edith Cavalier we find the following remarks concerning the present and prospective progress of San Francisco, which will interest all readers of the Monitor both here and abroad:

There were 425 real estate sales recorded in November, of the total value of $2,918,566. This record last family records the active state of the market for the month, which, indeed, was the most active that has occurred for many years. Four or five of the sales alone made last month, and some of them as yield record, amounted to as much as the total value of the November sales. It would be hard to say, too, where the money came from for all these sales, or state in fine demand and prices nearly every where are going up. On the whole, the definitive sales of business have set still in excess of all other buyers, and that is the most cheerful feature of the market. Never was money in better supply in the hands of mechanics, laborers and people of small means generally. They are going on debt some to buy, but not heavily, and therefore not dangerously. The record of last month shows that more money was paid off on account of mortgages than the total real estate indebtedness amounted to. The growth of the city and its rapid increase in population justify fair real estate advances. Now, if we can stop here, real estate inflation, speculation and gambling lies, and Peter Pankiry, by which leaves are robbed, we will have a good real estate market, without wild advances in prices and subsequent deep depression and general fall of prices and almost universal loss. Let all persons have a share in the profits, and not a few non-productive speculators made rich at the expense of nearly the whole people. This is what business always result."

—The English newspaper caricatures of the Pope have now discovered a refuge for the Holy Father when France and Italy go to war. Valtos is the name of the haven of safety. It is the capital of the principality of Liechtenstein, in the valley of the Rhine, on the frontier of the Swiss Canton of Grau Bunden, and about a mile north-east of Sargans, and contains "an old castle which overlooks the town. How thankful Catholics should be for the foresight of these thoughtful news makers. But at the same time we cannot help saying "May the Lord forgive them for the lies they tell!"

—The Emperor of Germany, in his reply to the address presented to him by the Catholic Bishops, says "I trust that freedom of worship is assured by the laws to my Catholic subjects, and this strength my confidence in the lasting preserve tion of religious peace."

—It is stated on good authority that the whole expense incurred by the London Times in the Parnell Investigation case, will be paid out of the British Treasury.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

Winter had thrown its robe of spotless white over the fair face of Nature; the strife of contending hosts and the din of arms had for the first time in centuries ceased to disturb the tranquillity of the Imperial Cæsar had taken their leftest flight and spread their wings over a conquered world.

When, on a cold, bleak December night, the stars drifting unconsciously across the sky and shining serenely through their azure home, cast upon the silent, sleeping earth, and silence enveloping a slumbering world. Behold He was born whose Word pierced the silence and darkness night. He whom myriads of Angels adore, born in a poor stable, holding court with the Shepherds. He who could turn legions into ashes, and scatter those who hurls the thunderbolt, was wrapped in swaddling clothes. He whom the Heavens cannot contain, was peacefully slumbering in the arms of the Virgin of Nazareth. How feeble the effort when man attempts to describe this solemn yet lovingly tender Mystery!

The angels appearing in the solemn stillness of midnight, chanted their heaven-born canticle, which were heard by the ravished ears of the listening shepherds. Suddenly the vision disappears. The mystic symphony is hushed into silence. The midnight watchers hear naught but the sighing of the wind or the bark of the watching—which ever and anon disturbed the solitude of slumbering Bethlehem. Wrapped in wonder and amazement, the Shepherds go over to Bethlehem to adore the Divine Redeemer.

Looking into the cave in order to assure themselves that they had reached the place of their search, they discovered Him—Man of Good Will, discovered Him who came to preach the Gospel to the poor and to abolish the curse of slavery, there reposing under the form of a little babe peacefully resting in his humble crib.

The infant God was next visited by the Magi, who had followed the guiding star from the far Orient to the "hallowed haunt of Bethlehem." They found Him not wrapped in silk garments, but reposing in the cradle of luxury surrounded by numberless worldly attachments, but they found Him occupying His throne of perpetual poverty, protected from the chilling, cold blast, by the breathings of the humblest of beasts. Who might not have been the sage of the Magi skilled in ancient lore? The feeble light of the lowly manger enabled them to perceive an equal footing with, a under Virgin and a helpless Infant whom they recognize as God.

What a spectacle! The King of Eternal Ages born in time, adored by the Wise of the earth. The Cradle of Hope who came to abolish sacrifice was not to be entered by a lamb—the emblem of purity—but by Him either spotless lambs or white-haired. They offered Him gold as an earthly palace, fit for a king.

"Gold," exclaims Chateaubriand, "thou authority would have contributed in grace of this world! What a picture a Homer or a Virgil would have left us of the Sacrifice of the Magi, of the Kings and the shepherds, of the Magi conducted by a star, of the Angels descending to the chorus! A Virgin Mother adoring her Son! Babe, and of all this scene of innocence, enchantment and grandeur!

What pleasing recollections the time of Christmas brings with it. Again the family gathers round the domestic hearth and recalls the memories of bygone days. The absent dear ones are present in spirit. We old relate the many well stirring events that time, in its hurried march, has wrought upon their charmed ears. The aged and venerable sisters, whose locks have been whitened by the winters of many years, again feel that the ties of nature are fit up with all the joys of youth. The weather beaten sailor, far away on the smelting sea, whose heart has become inured to the blasts of perpetual winter, has joyful visions of his far off happy home on Christmas Day. Even the rural sailor, who wears the badge of his adopted country, thinks tenderly of the rocky rocks and sparkling streams of his native hills and the heart warms, the heart beats quicker, as he hears the bonds of memory and the chimes of a thousand bells resounding in his ear. Christmas Day! Joy seems to permeate all classes, the young are doubly cheerful, and their joy seeks expression in the exchange of presents, and up their innocent faces. What does all this joy, this universal gladness show, but that the God-Man by his coming brought "peace and joy to man of good will."

It does but recalls the strain heard centuries ago on the plains of Palestine, when the angelic hosts sang in clear, lyrical resonance, to the astonished shepherds "Glory be to God in the highest and peace on earth to men of good will." Oh, Christians, from the depths of your ransomed souls pour forth your sincerest hymns of love and praise, and with hearts filled with gratitude offer to your new born King the gold of Charity and the incense of Prayer. Yes heavenly powers chant your glorious harmonious Hosannahs before the throne of the Omnipotent—for this is Christmas Day!

The Worst Life Yet.

Rome December 11. A sensation has been caused by the Popes refusal to bless the medals and crucifixes sent to Rome by a Jew, who intended them for distribution in Ireland. The Pope says he will not accept them from the people of Ireland are Christians, and he will not have the Jews Christ and Christ to the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

—The following sahlagram appeared in the daily papers this (Wednesday) morning, and we stop the press in order to demonstrate the interest and the most sympathetic interest that ever emanated from that faithful son of the Father of Love—the English souls who has taken up the cable dispatch which it contained. These paragraphs

ROLL NO. 3

THE MONITOR

CAMERA NO 34 R R 24.2

HEIGHT 51 ½ FOCUS 197

FIRST OCT 15 1884

LAST DEC 26 1888

DATE 5 19 45 OPERATOR WRH

MICROSTAT COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA